Pag. He ſaid ſir, you ſhould procure him better Aſſurance, then Bardolfe: he would not take his Bond & yours, he lik'd not the Security.

Fal. Let him bee damn'd like the Glutton, may his Tongue bee hotter, a horſon Architophel, a Raſcally-yea-forſooth-knave, to beare a Gentleman in hand, and then ſtand upon Security? The horſon ſmooth-pates do now weare nothing but high ſhooes, and bunches of Keyes at their girdles: and if a man is through with them in honeſt Taking-up, then they muſt ſtand upon Security: I had as liefe they would put Rats-bane in my mouth, as offer to ſtoppe it with Security. I look'd he ſhould have ſent me two and twenty yards of Satten (as I am true Knight) and he ſends me Security. Well, he may ſleep in Security, for he hath the horne of Abundance: and the lightneſſe of his Wife ſhines through it, and yet cannot he ſee, though he have his owne Lanthorne to light him. Where's Bardolfe?

Pag. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worſhip a horſe.

Fal. I bought him in Paules, and hee'l buy mee a horſe in Smithfield. If I could get mee a wife in the Stewes, I were Mann'd, Hors'd, and Wiv'd.

Enter Chiefe Iuſtice, and Servant.

Pag. Sir, heere comes the Nobleman that committed the Prince for ſtriking him, about Bardolfe.

Fal. Wait cloſe, I will not ſee him.

Ch. Iuſt. What's he that goes there?

Ser. Falſtaffe, and't pleaſe your Lordſhip.

Iuſt. He that was in queſtion for the Robbery?

Ser. He my Lord, but he hath ſince done good ſervice at Shrewsbury: and (as I heare) is now going with ſome Charge, to the Lord Iohn of Lancaſter.

Iuſt. What to Yorke? Call him backe againe.

Ser. Sir Iohn Falſtaffe.

Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deafe.

Pag. You muſt ſpeake lowder, my Maiſter is deafe.

Iuſt. I am ſure he is, to the hearing of any thing good. Go plucke him by the Elbow, I muſt ſpeake with him.

Ser. Sir Iohn.

Fal. What? a yong knave and beg? Is there not wars? Is there not imployment? Doth not the K. lack ſubjects? do not the Rebels want Soldiers? Though it be a ſhame to be on any ſide but one, it is worſe ſhame to begge, then to be on the worſt ſide, were it worſe then the name of Rebellion can tell how to make it.

Ser. You miſtake me Sir.

Fal. Why ſir? Did I ſay you were an honeſt man? Setting my Knight-hood, and my Souldierſhip aſide, I had lyed in my throat, If had ſaid ſo.

Ser. I pray you (Sir) then ſet your Knighthood and your Souldier-ſhip aſide, and give mee leave to tell you, you lye in your throat, if you ſay I am any other then an honeſt man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me ſo? I lay a-ſide that which grows to me? If thou get'ſt any leave of me, hang me: if thou tak'ſt leave, thou wer't better be hang'd: you Hunt-counter, hence: Avant.

Ser. Sir, my Lord would ſpeake with you.

Iuſt. Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, a word with you.

Fal. My good Lord: give your Lordſhip good time of the day. I am glad to ſee your Lordſhip abroad: I heard ſay your Lordſhip was ſicke. I hope your Lordſhip goes abroad by adviſe. Your Lordſhip (though not clean paſt your youth) hath yet ſome ſmack of age in you: ſome relliſh of the ſaltneſſe of Time, and I moſt humbly beſeech your Lordſhip, to have a reverend care of your health.

Iuſt. Sir Iohn, I ſent for you before your Expedition, to Shrewsbury.

Fal. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I heare his Majeſty is return'd with ſome diſcomfort from Wales.

Iuſt. I talke not of his Majeſty: you would not come when I ſent for you?

Fal. And I heare moreover, his Highneſſe is falne into this ſame whorſon Apoplexie.

Iuſt. Well, heaven mend him. I pray let me ſpeak with (you.

Fal. This Apoplexie is (as I take it) a kind of Lethargy, a ſleeping of the blood, a horſon Tingling.

Iuſt. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath it originall from much greefe; from ſtudy and perturbation of the braine. I have read the cauſe of his effects in Galen. It is a kinde of deafeneſſe.

Iuſt. I thinke you are falne into the diſeaſe: For you heare not what I ſay to you.

Fal. Very well (my Lord) very well: rather an't pleaſe you) it is the diſeaſe of not Liſtning, the malady of not Marking, that I am troubled withall.

Iuſt. To puniſh you by the heeles, would amend the attentiō of your eares, & I care no tif I be yonr Phyſitian.

Fal. I am as poore as Iob, my Lord; but not ſo Patient: your Lordſhip may miniſter the Potion of impriſonment to me, in reſpect of Poverty: but how I ſhould bee your Patient, to follow your preſcriptions, the wiſe may make ſome dram of a ſcruple, or indeed, a ſcruple it ſelfe.

Iuſt. I ſent for you (when there were matters againſt you for your life) to ſpeake with me.

Fal. As I was then adviſed by my learned Councell, in the lawes of this Land-ſervice, I did not come.

Iuſt. Wel, the truth is (ſir Iohn) you live in great infamy

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt, cānot live in leſſe.

Iuſt. Your Meanes is very ſlender, and your waſt great.

Fal. I would it were otherwiſe: I would my Meanes were greater, and my waſte ſlenderer.

Iuſt. You have miſled the youthfull Prince.

Fal. The yong Prince hath miſled mee. I am the Fellow with the great belly, and he my Dogge.

Iuſt. Well, I am loth to gall a new-heal'd wound: your daies ſervice at Shrewsbury, hath a little gilded over your Nights exploit on Gads-hill. You may thanke the unquiet time, for your quiet o're poſting that Action.

Fal. My Lord?

Iuſt. But ſince all is wel, keep it ſo: wake not a ſleeping (Wolfe.

Fal. To wake a Wolfe, is as bad as to ſmell a Fox.

Iu. What? you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A Waſſell-Candle, my Lord; all Tallow: if I did ſay of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Iu. There is not a white haire on your face, but ſhould have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of grauy, grauy, grauy.

Iuſt. You follow the yong Prince up and downe, like his evill Angell.

Fal. Not ſo (my Lord) your ill Angell is light: but I hope, he that lookes upon mee, will take mee without, weighing: and yet, in ſome reſpects I grant, I cannot go: I cannot tell. Vertue is of ſo little regard in theſe Coſtormongers; that true valor is turn'd Beare-heard. Pregnancie is made a Tapſter, and hath his quicke wit waſted in giving Recknings: all the other gifts appertinent to man (as the malice of this Age ſhapes them) are not woorth a Gooſeberry. You that are old, conſider not the capacities of us that are yong: you meaſure the heat of our Livers, with the bitternes of your gals: and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I muſt confeſſe, are wagges too.

Iuſt. Do you ſet downe your name in the ſcrowle of youth, that are written downe old, with all the Characters of age? Have you not a moiſt eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheeke? a white beard? a decreaſing leg? an increſing belly? Is not your voice broken? your winde ſhort? your wit ſingle? and every part about you blaſted with Antiquity? and wil you cal your ſelfe yong? Fy, fy, fy, ſir Iohn.

Fal. My Lord, I was borne with a white head, & ſomthing a round belly. For my voice, I have loſt it with hallowing and ſinging of Anthemes. To approve my youth farther, I will not: the truth is, I am onely old in judgement and underſtanding, and he that will caper with mee for a thouſand Markes, let him lend me the mony, & have at him. For the boxe of th'eare that the Prince gave you, he gave it like a rude Prince, and you tooke it like a ſenſible Lord. I have checkt him for it, and the yong Lion repents: Marry not in aſhes and ſacke-cloath, but in new Silke, and old Sacke.

Iuſt. Wel, heaven ſend the Prince a better companion.

Fal. Heaven ſend the Companion a better Prince: I cānot rid my hands of him.

Iuſt. Well, the King hath ſever'd you and Prince Harry, I heare yon are going with Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, againſt the Archbiſhop, and the Earle of Northumberland

Fal. Yes, I thanke your pretty ſweet wit for it: but looke you pray, (all you that kiſſe my Ladie Peace, at home) that our Armies joyn not in a hot day: for if I take but two ſhirts out with me, and I meane not to ſweat extraordinarily: if it bee a hot day, if I brandiſh any thing but my Bottle, would I might never ſpit white againe: There is not a dangerous Action can peepe out his head, but I am thruſt upon it. Well, I cannot laſt ever.

Iuſt. Well, be honeſt, be honeſt, and heaven bleſſe your Expedition.

Fal. Will your Lordſhip lend mee a thouſand pound, to furniſh me forth?

Iuſt. Not a peny, not a peny: you are too impatient to beare croſſes. Fare you well. Commend mee to my Coſin Weſtmerland. Exit.

Fal. If I do, fillop me with a three-man-Beetle. A man can no more ſeparate Age and Covetouſneſſe, then he can part yong limbes and letchery: but the Gowt galles the one, and the pox pinches the other ; and ſo both the Degrees prevent my curſes. Boy?

Page. Sir.

Fal. What money is in my purſe?

Pag. Seven groats, and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy againſt this Conſumption of the purſe. Borrowing onely lingers, and lingers it out, but the diſeaſe is incureable. Go beare this letter to my Lord of Lancaſter, this to the Prince, this to the Earle of Weſtmerland, and this to old Miſtris Vrſula, whome I have weekly ſworne to marry, ſince I perceiv'd the firſt white haire on my chin. About it : you know where to finde me. A pox of this Gowt, or a Gowt of this Poxe: for the one or th'other playes the rogue with my great toe : It is no matter, if I do halt, I have the warres for my colour, and my Penſion ſhall ſeeme the more reaſonable: A good wit will make vſe of any thing : I will turne diſeaſes to commodity. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Archbiſhop, Haſtings, Mowbray, and Lord Bardolfe.

Ar. Thus have you heard our cau ſes and know our
And my moſt noble Friends, I pray you all (Means:
Speake plainly your opinions of our hopes,
And firſt (Lord Marſhall) what ſay you to it?

Mor. I well allow the occaſion of our Armes,
But gladly would be better ſatisfied,
How (in our Meanes) we ſhould advance our ſelves
To looke with forehead bold and big enough
Vpon the Power and puiſſance of the King.

Haſt. Our preſent Muſters grow upon the File
To five and twenty thouſand men of choice:
And our Supplies, live largely in the hope
Of great Northumberland, whoſe boſome burnes
With an incenſed Fire of Injuries.

L. Bar. The queſtion then (Lord Haſtings) ſtandeth thus
Whether our preſent five and twenty thouſand
May hold-up-head, without Northumberland:

Haſt. With him, we may.

L. Bar. I marry, there's the point:
But if without him we be thought too feeble,
My judgement is, we ſhould not ſtep too farre
Till we had his Aſſiſtance by the hand.
For in a Theame ſo bloody fac'd, as this,
Conjecture, Expectation, and Surmiſe
Of Aydes incertaine, ſhould not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true Lord Bardolfe, for indeed
It was yong Hotſpurres caſe, at Shrewsbury.

L. Bar. It was (my Lord) who lin'd himſelfe with hope,
Eating the ayre, on promiſe of Supply,
Flatt'ring himſelfe with Project of a power,
Much ſmaller, then the ſmalleſt of his Thoughts,
And ſo with great imagination
(Proper to mad men) led his Powers to death,
And (winking) leap'd into deſtruction.

Haſt. But (by your leave) it never yet did hurt,
To lay downe likely-hoods, and formes of hope.

L. Bar. Yes, if this preſent quality of warre,
Indeed the inſtant action: a cauſe on foot,
Lives ſo in hope: As in an early Spring,
We ſee th'appearing buds, which to prove fruite,
Hope gives not ſo much warrant, as Deſpaire
That Froſts will bite the n. When we meane to build,
We firſt ſurvey the Plot, then draw the Modell,
And when we ſee the figure of the houſe,
Then muſt we rate the coſt of the Erection,
Which if we finde out-weighes Ability,
What do we then, but draw a-new the Modell
In fewer offices? Or at leaſt, deſiſt
To builde at all? Much more, in this great worke,
(Which is (almoſt) to plucke a Kingdome downe,
And ſet another up) ſhould we ſurvey
The plot of Situation, and the Modell,
Conſent upon a ſure Foundation:
Queſtion Surveyors, know our owne eſtate,
How able ſuch a Worke to undergo,
To weigh againſt his Oppoſite? Or elſe,
We fortifie in Paper, and in Figures,
Vſing the Names of men, inſtead of men:
Like one, that drawes the Modell of a houſe
Beyond his power to builde it; who (halfe through)
Gives o're, and leaves his part-created Coſt
A naked ſubject to the Weeping Clouds,
And waſte, for churliſh Winters tyranny.

Haſt. Grant that our hopes (yet likely of faire birth)
Should be ſtill-borne : and that we now poſſeſt
The utmoſt man of expectation:
I thinke we are a Body ſtrong enough
(Even as we are) to equall with the King.

L. Bar. What is the King but five & twenty thouſand?

Haſt. To us no more: nay not ſo much Lord Bardolfe.
For his diviſions (as the Times do braul)
Are in three Heads: one Power againſt the French,
And one againſt Glendower : Perforce a third
Muſt take up us: So is the unfirme King
In three divided: and his Coffers ſound
With hollow Poverty, and Emptineſſe.

Ar. That he ſhould draw his ſeverall ſtrengths together
And come againſt us in full puiſſance,
Need not be dreaded.

Haſt. If he ſhould do ſo,
He leaves his backe unarm'd, the French, and Welch
Baying him at the heeles: never feare that.

L. Bar. Who is it like ſhould lead his Forces hither?

Haſt. The Duke of Lancaſter, and Weſtmerland:
Againſt the Welſh himſelfe, and Harry Monmouth.
But who is ſubſtituted 'gainſt the French,
I have no certaine notice.

Arch. Let us on:
And publiſh the occaſion of our Armes.
The Common wealth is ſicke of their owne Choice,
Their over-greedy love hath ſurfetted:
An habitation giddy, and unſure
Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond Many, with what loud applauſe
Did'ſt thou beate heaven with bleſſing Bullingbrooke,
Before he was, what thou would'ſt have him be?
And being now trimm'd up in thine owne deſires,
Thou (beaſtly Feeder) art ſo full of him,
That thou prouok'ſt thy ſelfe to caſt him up.
So, ſo, (thou common Dogge) did'ſt thou diſgorge
Thy glutton-boſome of the Royall Richard,
And now thou would'ſt eate thy dead vomit up,
And howl'ſt to finde it. What truſt is in theſe Times?
They, that when Richard liv'd, would have him dye,
Are now become enamour'd on his grave.
Thou that threw'ſt duſt upon his goodly head
When through proud London he came ſighing on,
After th'admired heeles of Bullingbrooke,
Cri'ſt now, O Earth, yeeld us that King againe,

And take thou this (O thoughts of men accurs'd)
"Paſt, and to come, ſeemes beſt; things Preſent, worſt.

Mow. Shall we go draw our numbers, and ſet on?

Haſt. We are Times ſubjects, and Time bids, be gon.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Hoſteſſe, with two Officers, Fang, and Snare.

Hoſteſſe. Mr. Fang, have you entred the Action?

Fang. It is enter'd.

Hoſt. Where's your Yeoman? Is it a luſtly yeoman? Will he ſtand to it?

Fang. Sirrha, where's Snare?

Hoſt. I, I, goood M. Snare.

Snare. Heere, heere.

Fang. Snare, we muſt Arreſt Sir Iohn Falſtaffe.

Hoſt. I good M. Snare, I have enter'd him, and all.

Sn. It may chance coſt ſome of us our lives: he wil ſtab

Hoſt. Alas the day: take heed of him: he ſtabd me in mine owne houſe, and that moſt beaſtly: he cares not what miſcheefe he doth, if his weapon be out. He will foyne like any divell, he will ſpare neither man, woman, nor childe.

Fan. If I can cloſe with him, I care not for his thruſt.

Hoſt. No, nor I neither: Ile be at your elbow.

Fang. If I but fiſt him once: if he come but within my Vice.

Hoſt. I am undone with his going: I warrant he is an infinitive thing upon my ſcore. Good M. Fang hold him ſure: good M. Snare let him not ſcape, he comes continuantly to PyCorner (ſaving your manhoods) to buy a ſaddle, and hee is indited to dinner to the Lubbars head in-Lombardſtreet to M. Smoothes the Silkman. I pra'ye ſince my Exion is enter'd, and my Caſe ſo openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his anſwer: A 100. Mark is a long one, for a poore lone woman to beare: & I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have bin fub'd off, and fub'd-off, from this day to that day, that it is a ſhame to be thought on. There is no honeſty in ſuch dealing, unles a woman ſhould be made an Aſſe and a Beaſt, to beare every Knaves wrong. Enter Falſtaffe and Bardolfe. Yonder he comes, and that arrant Malmeſey-Noſe Bardolfe with him, Do your Offices, do your offices: M. Fang, & M. Snare, do me, do me, do me your Offices.

Fa. How now? whoſe Mare's dead? what's the matter?

Fang. Sir Iohn, I arreſt you, at the ſuit of Miſt. Quickly.

Fal. Away Varlets, draw Bardolfe: Cut me off the Villaines head: throw the Queane in the Channel.

Hoſt. Throw me in the channell? Ile throw thee there. Wilt thou? wilt thou? thou baſtardly rogue. Murder, murder, O thou Hony-ſuckle villaine, wilt thou kill Gods officers and the Kings? O thou hony-ſeed Rogue, thou art a hony ſeed, a Man-queller, and a woman-queller.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolffe. Fang. A reſcu, a reſcu-

Hoſt. Good people bring a reſcu. Thou wilt not? thou wilt not? Doe, doe thou Rogue: Doe thou Hempſeed.

Fag. Away you Scullion you Rampallian, you Fuſtillirian: Ile tucke your Cataſtrophe. Enter, Ch. Iuſtice.

Iuſt. What's the matter? Keepe the Peace here, hoa.

Hoſt. Good my Lord be good to mee. I beſeech you ſtand to me.

Ch. Iu. How now ſir Iohn? What are you brauling here? Doth this become your place, your time, and buſineſſe? You ſhould have bene well on your way to Yorke. Stand from him Fellow, wherefore hang'ſt upon him?

Hoſt. Oh my moſt worſhipfull Lord, and't pleaſe your Grace, I am a poore widdow of Eaſtcheap, and he is arreſted at my ſuit. Ch. Iuſt. For what ſumme?

Hoſt. It is more then for ſome (my Lord) it is for al: al I have, he hath eaten me out of houſe and home? hee hath put all my ſubſtance into that fat belly of his: but I will have ſome of it out againe, or I will ride thee o' Nights, like the Mare.

Fal. I thinke I am as like to ride the Mare, if I have any vantage of ground, to get up.

Ch. Iuſt. How comes this, Sir Iohn? Fy, what a man of good temper would endure this tempeſt of exclamation? Are you not aſham'd to inforce a poore Widdowe to ſo rough a courſe, to come by her owne?

Fal. What is the groſſe ſumme that I owe thee?

Hoſt. Marry (if thou wer't an honeſt man) thy ſelfe, & the mony too. Thou didſt ſweare to mee upon a parcell gilt Goblet, ſitting in my Dolphin-chamber at the round table, by a ſea-cole fire, on Wedneſday in Whitſon week, when the Prince brok thy head for lik'ning him to a ſinging man of Windſor; thou didſt ſweare to me then (as I was waſhing thy wound) to marry me, and make me my Lady thy wife. Canſt yͧ deny it? Did not goodwife Keech the Butchers wife come in then, and cal me goſſip Quickly? comming in to borrow a meſſe of Vinegar: telling us, ſhe had a good diſh of Prawnes: whereby yͧ didſt deſire to eat ſome: whereby I told thee they were ill for a greene wound? And didſt not thou (when ſhe was gone downe ſtaires) deſire me to be no more familiar with ſuch poore people, ſaying, that ere long they ſhould call me Madam? And did'ſt yͧ not kiſſe me, and bid mee fetch thee 30. s? I put thee now to thy Book-oath, deny it if thou canſt?

Fal. My Lord, this is a poore mad ſoule: and ſhe ſayes up & downe the town, that her eldeſt ſon is like you. She hath bin in good caſe, & the truth is, poverty hath diſtracted her: but for theſe fooliſh Officers, I beſeech you, I may have redreſſe againſt them.

Iuſt. Sir Iohn, ſir Iohn, I am well acquainted with your maner of wrenching the true cauſe, the falſe way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of wordes, that come with ſuch (more then impudent) ſawcines from you, can thruſt me from a levell conſideration, I know you ha' practis'd upon the eaſie-yeelding ſpirit of this woman.

Hoſt. Yes in troth my Lord.

Iuſt. Prethee peace: pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villany you have done her: the one you may do with ſterling mony, & the other with currant repentance.

Fal. My Lord, I will not undergo this ſneape without reply. You call honorable Boldnes, impudent Sawcines: If a man will curt'ſie, and ſay nothing, he is vertuous: No, my Lord (your humble duty remẽbred) I wil not be your ſutor. I ſay to you, I deſire deliv'rance from theſe Officers being upon haſtly employment in the Kings Affaires.

Iuſt. You ſpeake, as having power to do wrong: But anſwer in the effect of your Reputation, and ſatisfie the poore woman.

Fal. Come hither Hoſteſſe. Enter M. Gower.

Ch. Iuſt. Now Maiſter Gower; What newes?

Gow. The King (my Lord) and Henry Prince of Wales
Are neere at hand: The reſt the Paper telles.

Fal. As I am a Gentleman.

Hoſt. Nay, you ſaid ſo before.

Fal. As I am a Gentleman. Come, no more words of it.

Hoſt. By this Heavenly ground I tread on, I muſt bee faine to pawne both my Plate, and the Tapiſtry of my dyning Chambers.

Fal. Glaſſes, glaſſes, is the onely drinking: and for thy walles a pretty ſlight Drollery, or the Story of the Prodigal, or the Germane hunting in Water worke, is worth a thouſand of theſe Bed-hangings, and theſe Flybitten Tapiſtries. Let it be ten pound (if thou canſt.) Come, if it were not for thy humors, there is not a better Wench in England. Go, waſh thy face, and draw thy Action: Come, thou muſt not be in this humour with me, come, I know thou was't ſet on to this.

Hoſt. Prethee (Sir Iohn) let it be but twenty Nobles, I am loath to pawne my Plate, in good earneſt la.

Fal. Let it alone, and make other ſhift: you'l be a fool ſtill.

Hoſt. Well, you ſhall have it although I pawne my Gowne. I hope you'l come to Supper: You'l pay me altogether?

Fal. Will I live? Go with her, with her: hooke-on, hooke-on.

Hoſt. Will you have Doll Teare-ſheet meet you at ſupper?

Fal. No more words. Let's have her.

Ch. Inſt. I have heard bitter newes.

Fal. What's the newes (my good Lord?)

Ch. Inſt. Where lay the King laſt night?

Meſ. At Baſingſtoke my Lord.

Fal. I hope (my Lord) all's well. What is the newes my Lord?

Ch. In. Come all his Forces backe?

Meſ. No: Fifteene hundred Foot, five hundred Horſe
Are march'd up to my Lord of of Lancaſter,
Againſt Northumberland, and the Archbiſhop.

Fal. Comes the King backe from Wales, my noble L?

Ch. In. You ſhall have Letters of me preſently.
Come go along with me, good M. Gowre.

Fal. My Lord.

Ch. In. What's the matter?

Fal. Maiſter Gowre, ſhall I entreate you with me to dinner?

Gow. I muſt waite upon my good Lord here.
I thanke you, good Sir Iohn.

Ch. In. Sir Iohn, you loyter heere too long, being you are to take Souldiers up, in Countries as you go.

Fal. Will you ſup with me, Maiſter Gowre?

Ch. Inſt. What fooliſh Maiſter taught you theſe manners, Sir Iohn?

Fal. Maiſter Gowre, if they become mee not, he was a Foole that taught them mee. This is the right Fencing grace (my Lord) tap for tap, and ſo part faire.

C. In. Now the Lord lighten thee, thou art a great Foole.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Prince Henry, Pointz, Bardolfe, and Page.

Prin. Truſt me, I am exceeding weary.

Poin. Is it come to that? I had thought wearines durſt not have attach'd one of ſo high blood.

Prin. It doth me:though it diſcolours the complexiou of my Greatneſſe to acknowledge it. Doth it not ſhew vildely in me, to deſire ſmall Beere?

Poin. Why, a Prince ſhould not be ſo looſely ſtudied, as to remember ſo weake a Compoſition.

Prince. Belike then, my Appetite was not Princely got: for (in troth) I do now remember the poore Creature, Small Beere. But indeede theſe humble conſiderations make me out of love with my greatneſſe. What a diſgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? Or to know thy face to morrow? Or to take note how many paire of Silk ſtockings thou haſt? (Viz. theſe, and thoſe that were thy peach-colour'd ones:) Or to beare the Inventory of thy ſhirts, as one for ſuperfluity, and one other, for uſe. But that the Tennis-Court-keeper knowes better then I, for it is a low ebbe of Linnen with thee, when thou keepeſt not Racket there, as thou haſt not dõe a great while, becauſe the reſt of thy Low Countries, have made a ſhift to eate up thy Holland.

Poin. How ill it followes, after you have labour'd ſo hard, you ſhould talke ſo idlely? Tell me how many good yong Princes would do ſo, their Fathers lying ſo ſicke, as yours is?

Prin. Shall I tell thee one thing, Pointz?

Poin. Yes: and let it be an excellent good thing.

Prin. It ſhall ſerve among wittes of no higher breeding then thine.

Poin. Go to: I ſtand the puſh of your one thing, that you'l tell.

Prin. Why, I tell thee, it is not meet, that I ſhould be ſad now my Father is ſicke: albeit I could tell to thee (as to one it pleaſes me, fot fault of a better, to cal my friend) I could be ſad, and ſad indeed too.

Poin. Very hardly, upon ſuch a ſubject.

Prin. Thou think'ſt me as farre in the Divels Book, as thou, and Falſtaffe, for obduracy and perſiſtency. Let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly, that my Father is ſo ſick: and keeping ſuch vild company as thou art, hath in reaſon taken from me, all oſtentation of ſorrow.

Poin. The reaſon?

Pr. What would'ſt thou think of me, if I ſhould weep?

Poin. I Would think thee a moſt Princely hypocrite.

Prin. It would be every mans thought: and thou art a bleſſed Fellow, to thinke as every man thinkes: never a mans thought in the world,; keepes the Rode-way better then thine: every man would think me an Hypocrite indeede. And what accites your moſt worſhipful thought to thinke ſo?

Poin. Why, becauſe you have beene ſo lewde, and ſo much ingraffed to Falſtaffe.

Prin. And to thee.

Pointz. Nay, I am well ſpoken of, I can heare it with mine own eares: the worſt that they can ſay of me is, that I am a ſecond Brother, and that I am a proper Fellowe of my hands: and thoſe two things I confeſſe I cannot helpe. Looke, looke, here comes Baldolfe.

Prince. And the Boy that I gave Falſtaffe, he had him from me Chriſtian, and ſee if the fat villain have not transform'd him Ape.

Enter Bardolfe.

Bar. Save your Grace.

Prin. And yours, moſt Noble Bardolfe.

Poin. Come you pernitious Aſſe, you baſhfull Foole, muſt you be bluſhing? Wherefore bluſh you now? what a Maidenly man at Armes are you become? Is it ſuch a matter to get a Pottle-pots Maiden-head?

Page. He call'd me even now (my Lord) through a red Lattice, and I could diſcerne no part of his face from the window: at laſt I ſpy'd his eyes, and me thought he had made two holes in the Ale-wives new Petticoat, and peeped through.

Prin. Hath not the boy profited?

Bar. Away, you horſon upright Rabbet, away.

Page. Away, you raſcally Altheas dreame, away.

Prin. Inſtruct us Boy: what dreame, Boy?

Pag. Mary (my Lord) Althea dream'd, ſhe was deliver'd of a Firebrand, and therefore I call him hir dream.

Prince. A Crownes-worth of good Interpretation: There it is, Boy.

Poin. O that this good Bloſſome could bee kept from Cankers: Well, there is ſix pence to preſerve thee.

Bard. If you do not make him be hang'd among you, the gallowes ſhall be wrong'd.

Prin. And how doth thy Maiſter, Bardolph?

Bar. Well, my good Lord: he heard of your Graces comming to Towne. There's a Letter for you.

Prin. Deliver'd with good reſpect: And how doth the Martlemas, your Maiſter?

Bard. In bodily health Sir.

Poin. Marry, the immortall part needes a Phyſitian: but that moves not him: though that bee ſicke, it dyes not.

Prin. I do allow this Wen to be as familiar with me, as my dogge. and he holds his place, for looke you he writes.

Poin. Letter. Iohn Falſtaffe Knight: (Every man muſt know that, as oft as he hath occaſion to name himſelfe:) Even like thoſe that are kinne to the King, for they never pricke their finger, but they ſay, there is ſom of the kings blood ſpilt. How comes that (ſayes he) that takes upon him not to conceive? the anſwer is as ready as a borrowed cap: I am the Kings poore Coſin, Sir.

Prin. Nay, they will be kin to us, but they will fetch it from Iaphet. But to the Letter: —— Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, Knight, to the Sonne of the King, neereſt his Father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting.

Poin. Why this is a Certificate.

Prin. Peace.

I will imitate the honourable Romaines in brevity.

Poin. Sure he meanes brevity in breath: ſhort-winded.

I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Bee not too familiar with Pointz, for hee miſuſes thy Favours ſo much, that he ſweares thou art to marry his Siſter Nell. Repent at idle times as thou maiſt, and ſo farewell.

Thine, by yea and no: which is as much as to ſay, as thou
uſeſt him. Iacke Falſtaffe with my Familiars:
Iohn with my Brothers and Siſter: & Sir
Iohn, with all Europe.

My Lord, I will ſteepe this Letter in Sack, and make him eate it.

Prin. That's to make him eate twenty of his Words. But do you uſe me thus Ned? Muſt I marry your Siſter?

Poin. May the Wench have no worſe Fortune. But I never ſaid ſo.

Prin. Well, thus we play the Foole with the time and the ſpirits of the wiſe, ſit in the clouds, and mocke us: Is your Maiſter heere in London?

Bard. Yes my Lord.

Prin. Where ſuppes he? Doth the old Bore, feede in the old Franke?

Bard. At the old place my Lord, in Eaſt-cheape.

Prin. What Company?

Prin. Sup any women with him?

Prin. What Pagan may that be?

Page. A proper Gentlewoman, Sir, and a Kinſwoman of my Maiſters.

Prin. Even ſuch Kin, as the Pariſh Heyfors are to the Towne-Bull?
Shall we ſteale upon them (Ned) at Supper?

Poin. I am your ſhadow, my Lord, Ile follow you.

Prin. Sirrha, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your Maiſter that I am yet in Towne.
There's for your ſilence.

Bar. I have no tongue, ſir.

Page. And for mine Sir, I will governe it.

Prin. Fare ye well: go.
This Doll Teare-ſheet ſhould be ſome Rode.

Poin. I warrant you, as common as the way betweene S. Albans, and London.

Prin. How might we ſee Falſtaffe beſtow himſelfe to night, in his true colours, and not our ſelves be ſeene?

Poin. Put on two Leather Ierkins, and Aprons, and waite upon him at his Table, like Drawers.

Prin. From a god, to a Bull? A heavy declenſion: It was Ioves caſe. From a Prince, to a Prentice, a low tranſformation, that ſhall be mine: for in every thing, the purpoſe muſt weigh with the folly. Follow me Ned. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Northumberland, his Lady, and Harry Percies Lady.

North. I prethee loving Wife, and gentle Daughter,
Give an even way vnto my rough Affaires:
Put not you on the viſage of the Times,
And be like them to Percie, troubleſome.

Wife. I have given over, I will ſpeake no more,
Do what you will: your Wiſedome, be your guide.

Nor. Alas (ſweet Wife) my Honor is at pawne,
And but my going, nothing can redeeme it.

La. Oh yet, for heavens ſake, go not to theſe Warrs;
The Time was (Father) when you broke your word,
When you were more endeer'd to it, then now,
When your owne Percie, when my heart-deere-Harry,
Threw many a Northward looke, to ſee his Father
Bring up his Powres: but he did long in vaine.
Who then perſwaded you to ſtay at home?
There were two Honors loſt; Yours, and your Sonnes.
For Yours, may heavenly glory brighten it:
For His, it ſtucke upon him, as the Sunne
In the gray vault of Heaven: and by his Light
Did all the Cheualry of England move
To do brave Acts. He was (indeed) the Glaſſe
Wherein the Noble-Youth did dreſſe themſelves.
He had no Legges, that practic'd not his Gate:
And ſpeaking thicke (which Nature made his blemiſh)
Became the Accents of the Valiant.
For thoſe that could ſpeake low, and tardily,
Would turne their owne Perfection, to Abuſe,
To ſeeme like him. So that in Speech, in Gate,
In Diet, in Affections of delight,
In Military Rules, Humors of Blood,

He was the Marke, and Glaſſe, Coppy, and Booke,
That faſhion'd others. And him, O wondrous him,
O Miracle of Men! Him did you leave,
(Second to none) un-ſeconded by you,
To looke upon the hideous god of Warre,
In diſ-advantage, to abide a field,
Where nothing but the ſound of Hotſpurs Name
Did ſeeme defenſible: ſo you left him.
Never, O never doe his Ghoſt the wrong,
To hold your Honor more preciſe and nice
With others, then with him. Let them alone:
The Marſhall and the Arch-biſhop are ſtrong.
Had my ſweet Harry had but halfe their Numbers,
To day might I (hanging on Hotſpurs Necke)
Have talk'd of Monmouth's Grave.

North. Beſhrew your heart,
(Faire Daughter) you doe draw my ſpirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient Over-ſights.
But I muſt goe, and meet with Danger there,
Or it will ſeeke me in another place,
And finde me worſe provided.

Wife. O flye to Scotland,
Till that the Nobles, and the armed Commons,
Have of their Puiſſance made a litle taſte.

Lady. If they get ground, and vantage of the King,
Then joyne you with them, like a Ribbe of Steele,
To make Strength ſtronger. But, for all our loves,
Firſt let them trye themſelves. So did your Sonne,
He was ſo ſuffer'd; ſo came I a Widow:
And never ſhall have length of Life enough,
To raine upon Remembrance with mine Eyes,
That it may grow, and ſprowt, as high as Heaven,
For Recordation to my Noble Husband.

Nor. Come, come, go in with me: 'tis with my Minde
As with the Tyde, ſwell'd up unto his height,
That makes a ſtill-ſtand, running neither way.
Faine would I goe to meet the Arch-biſhop,
But many thouſand Reaſons hold me backe.
I will reſolve for Scotland: there am I,
Till Time and Vantage crave my company. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter two Drawers.

1. Drawer. What haſt thou brought there? Apple-Iohns? Thou know'ſt Sir Iohn cannot endure an Apple-Iohn.

2. Draw. Thou ſay'ſt true: the Prince once ſet a Diſh of Apple-Iohns before him, and told him there were five more Sir Iohns: and, putting off his Hat, ſaid, I will now take my leave of theſe ſixe drie, round, old-wither'd Knights. It anger'd him to the heart: but hee hath forgot that.

1. Draw. Why then cover, and ſet them downe: and ſee if thou canſt finde out Sneakes Noyſe; Miſtris Teare-ſheet would faine have ſome Muſique.

2. Draw. Sirrha, heere will be the Prince, and Maiſter Points, anon: and they will put on two of our Ierkins, and Aprons, and Sir Iohn muſt not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

1. Draw. Then here will be old Vtis: it will be an excellent ſtratagem.

2. Draw. Ile ſee if I can finde out Sneake. Exit.

Enter Hoſteſſe, and Dol.

Hoſt. Sweet-heart, me thinkes now you are in an excellent good temperality: your Pulſidge beates as extraordinarily, as heart would deſire; and your Colour (I warrant you) is as red as any Roſe: But you have drunk too much Canaries, and that's a marvellous ſearching Wine; and it perfumes the blood, ere we can ſay what's this. How doe you now?

Dol. Better then I was: Hem.

Hoſt. Why that was well ſaid: A good heart's worth Gold. Looke, here comes Sir Iohn.

Enter Falſtaffe.

Falſt. When Arthur firſt in Court--(empty the Iordan) and was a worthy King: How now Miſtris Dol.

Hoſt. Sick of a Calme: yea, good-ſooth.

Fal. So is all her Sect: if they bee once in a Calme, they are ſick.

Dol. You muddy Raſcall, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat Raſcalls, Miſtris Dol.

Dol. I make them? Gluttony and Diſeaſes make them, I make them not.

Fal. If the Cooke make the Gluttony, you helpe to make the Diſeaſes (Dol) we catch of you (Dol) we catch of you: Grant that, my poore Vertue, grant that.

Dol. I marry, our Chaynes, and our Iewels.

Falſt. Your Brooches, Pearles, and Owches: For to ſerve bravely, is to come halting off: you know, to come off the Breach, with his Pike bent bravely, and to Surgery bravelie; to venture upon the charg'd-Chambers bravely.

Hoſt. Why this is the olde faſhion: you two never meete, but you fall to ſome diſcord: you are both (in good troth) as Rheumatike as two drie Toſtes, you cannot one beare with anothers Confirmities. What the good-yere? One muſt beare, and that muſt bee you: you are the weaker Veſſell, as they ſay, the emptier Veſſell.

Dol. Can a weake emptie Veſſell beare ſuch a huge full Hogs-head? There's a whole Marchants Venture of Burdeux-Stuffe in him: you have not ſeene a Hulke better ſtufft in the Hold. Come, Ile be friends with thee Iacke: Thou art going to the Warres, and whether I ſhall ever ſee thee againe, or no, there is no body cares.

Enter Drawer.

Draw. Sir, Ancient Piſtoll is below, and would ſpeake with you.

Dol. Hang him, ſwaggering Raſcall, let him not come hither: it is the foule-mouth'dſt Rogue in England.

Hoſt. If hee ſwagger, let him not come here: I muſt live amongſt my Neighbors, Ile no Swaggerers: I am in good name, and fame, with the very beſt: ſhut the doore, there comes no Swaggerers heere: I have not liv'd all this while, to have ſwaggering now: ſhut the doore, I pray you.

Fal. Do'ſt thou heare, Hoſteſſe?

Hoſt. 'Pray you pacifie your ſelf (Sir Iohn) there comes no Swaggerers heere.

Falſt. Do'ſt thou heare?it is mine Ancient.

Hoſt. Tilly-fally(Sir Iohn)never tell me, your ancient Swaggerer comes not in my doores. I was before Maſter Tiſick the Deputy, the other day:and as hee ſaid to mee, it was no longer agoe then Wedneſday laſt: Neighbour Quickly(ſayes hee;)Maiſter Dombe,our Miniſter, was by then: Neighbour Quickly(ſayes hee) receive thoſe that are Civill; for(ſayth hee) you are in an ill Name: now hee ſaid ſo, I can tell whereupon: for(ſayes hee)you are an honeſt Woman,and well thought on; therefore take heede what Gueſts you receive: Receive(ſayes hee)no ſwaggering Companions. There comes none heere. You would bleſſe you to heare what hee ſaid. No, Ile no Swaggerers.

Falſt.Hee's no Swaggerer (Hoſteſſe:)a tame Cheater, hee: you may ſtroake him as gently, as a Puppy Greyhound: hee will not ſwagger with a Barbary Henne, if her feathers turne backe in any ſhew of reſiſtance. Call him up(Drawer.)

Hoſt. Cheater, call you him? I will barre no honeſt man my hauſe, nor no Cheater: but I do not love ſwaggering; I am the worſe when one ſayes, ſwagger: Feele Maiſters, how I ſhake: looke you,I warrant you.

Dol. So you doe, Hoſteſſe.

Hoſt.Doe I? yea, in very truth doe I,if it were an Aſpen Leafe:I cannot abide Swaggerers.

Enter Piſtol, and Bardolph and his Boy.

Piſt. 'Save you,Sir Iohn.

Falſt. Welcome Ancient Piſtol. Here(Piſtol)I charge you with a Cup of Sacke: do you diſcharge upon mine Hoſteſſe.

Piſt.I will diſcharge upon her (Sir Iohn) with two Bullets.

Falſt. She is Piſtoll-proofe (Sir) you ſhall hardly offend her.

Hoſt. Come, Ile drinke no Proofes,nor no Bullets: I will drinke no more then will doe me good, for no mans pleaſure, I.

Piſt. Then to you (Miſtris Dorothie) I will charge you.

Dol. Charge me? I ſcorne you (ſcuruy Companion) what? you poore, baſe,raſcally, cheating, lacke-Linnen-Mate: away you mouldy Rogue, away, I am meat for your Maſter.

Piſt. I know you, Miſtris Dorothy.

Dol. Away you Cut-purſe Raſcall, you filthy Bung, away:By this Wine, Ile thruſt my Knife in your mouldy Chappes, if you play the ſawcy Cuttle with me. Away you Bottle-Ale Raſcall, you Basket-hilt ſtale Iugler, you. Since when, I pray you, Sir? what, with two Points on your ſhoulder? much.

Piſt. I will murther your Ruffe, for this.

Hoſt. No, good Captaine Piſtol: not heere, ſweete Captaine.

Dol. Captaine? thou abhominable damn'd Cheater, art thou not aſham'd to be call'd Captaine? If Captaines were of my minde,they would trunchion you out, for taking their Names upon you, before you have earn'd thẽ. You a Captaine?you ſlave, for what? for tearing a poore Whores Ruffe in a Bawdy-houſe?Hee a Captaine? hang him Rogue, hee lives upon mouldy ſtew'd-Pruines, and dry'de Cakes. A Captaine? Theſe Villaines will make the word Captaine odious: Therefore Captaines had neede looke to it.

Bard. Pray thee go downe,good Ancient.

Falſt. Hearke thee hither,Miſtris Dol.

Piſt. Not I: I tell thee what, Corporall Bardolph, I could teare her: Ile be reveng'd on her.

Piſt. Ile ſee her damn'd firſt: to Pluto's damn'd Lake, to the Infernall Deepe, where Erebus and Tortures vilde alſo. Hold Hooke and Line, ſay I: Downe: downe Dogges,downe Fates:have wee not Hiren here?

Hoſt. Good Captaine Peeſel be quiet, it is very late: I beſeeke you now, aggravate your Choler.

Piſt. Theſe be good Humors indeede. Shall Packe-Horſes, and hollow-pamper'd Iades of Aſia, which cannot goe but thirty miles a day, compare with Caeſar, and with Caniballs, and Troian Greekes?nay, rather damne them with King Cerberus, and let the Welkin roare:ſhal wee fall foule for Toyes?

Hoſt. By my troth Captaine, theſe are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good Ancient: this will grow to a Brawle anon.

Piſt.Die men,like Dogges;give Crownes like Pinnes: Have wee not Hiren here?

Hoſt. On my word(Captaine) there's none ſuch here. What the good-yere, doe you thinke I would denie her? I pray be quiet.

Piſt. Then feed,and be fat(my faire Calipolis.) Come, give me ſome Sack, Si fortune me tormente, ſperato me contente. Feare wee broad-ſides? No; let the Fiend give fire: Give me ſome Sacke: and Sweet-heart lye thou there: Come wee to full Points here; and are & cetera's nothing?

Fal. Piſtol, I would be quiet.

Piſt. Sweet Knight, kiſſe thy Neaffe: what? wee have ſeene the ſeven Starres.

Dol. Thruſt him downe ſtayres, I cannot endure ſuch a Fuſtian Raſcall.

Piſt. Thruſt him downe ſtayres? know we not Galloway Nagges?

Fal. Quoit him downe (Bardolph) like a ſhove-groat ſhilling: nay, if hee doe nothing but ſpeake nothing, hee ſhall be nothing here.

Baed. Come, get you downe ſtayres.

Piſt. What? ſhall wee have Inciſion? ſhall wee embrew? then Death rocke me aſleepe, abridge my doleful dayes: why then let grievous,gaſtly, gaping Wounds, untwind'd the Siſters three: Come Atropos, I ſay.

Hoſt. Heere's good ſtuffe toward.

Fal. Give me my Rapier, Boy.

Dol. I prethee Iacke, I prethee doe not draw.

Fal. Get you downe ſtaynes.

Hoſt. Here's a goodly tumult: Ile forſweare keeping houſe, before Ile be in theſe tirrits, and frights. So: Murther I warrant now. Alas, alas put up your naked Weapons, put up your naked Weapons.

Dol. I prethee Iack be quiet, the Raſcall is gone: ah, you whorſon little valiant Villaine, you.

Hoſt. Are you not hurt i'th'Groyne? me thought hee made a ſhrewd Thruſt at your Belly.

Fal. Have you turn'd him out of doores?

Bard. Yes Sir the Raſcall's drunke: you have hurt him (Sir) in the ſhoulder.

Fal. A Raſcall to brave me.

Dol. Ah, you ſweet little Rogue, you: alas, poore Ape, how thou ſweat'ſt? Come, let me wipe thy Face: Come on, you whorſon Chops: Ah Rogue, I love thee: Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon; and tenne times better then the nine Worthies: ah Villaine.

Fal. A raſcally Slave, I will toſſe the Rogue in a Blanket.

Dol. Doe, if thou dar'ſt for thy heart: if thou doo'ſt, Ile canvas thee betweene a paire of Sheetes.

Enter Muſique.

Pag. The Muſique is come, Sir.

Fal. Let them play; play Sirs. Sit on my Knee, Dol. A Raſcall, bragging Slave: the Rogue fled from me like Quick-ſilver.

Dol. And thou follow'd'ſt him like a Church: thou whorſon little tydie Bartholmew Bore-pigge, when wilt thou leave fighting on dayes, and foyning on nights, and begin to patch up thine old Body for Heaven?

Enter the Prince and Poines diſguis'd.

Fal. Peace (good Dol) doe not ſpeake like a Deaths-head: doe not bid me remember mine end.

Dol. Sirrha, what humor is the Prince of?

Fal. A good ſhallow young fellow: hee would have made a good Pantler, hee would have chipp'd Bread well.

Dol. They ſay Poines hath a good Wit.

Fal. Hee a good Wit? hang him Baboone, his Wit is as thicke as Tewksbury Muſtard: there is no more conceit in him, then is in a Mallet.

Dol. Why doth the Prince love him ſo then?

Fal. Becauſe their Legges are both of a bigneſſe: and hee playes at Quoits well, and eates Conger and Fennell, and drinkes off Candles ends for Flap-dragons, and rides the wild-Mare with the Boyes, and jumpes upon Ioyn'd-ſtooles, and ſweares with a good grace, and weares his Boot very ſmooth, like unto the Signe of the Legge; and breedes no bate with telling of diſcreete ſtories: and ſuch other Gamboll faculties hee hath, that ſhew a weake Minde, and an able Body, for the which the Prince admits him; for the Prince himſelfe is ſuch another: the weight of an hayre will turne the Scales betweene their Haber-de-pois.

Prince. Would not this Nave of a Wheele have his Eares cut off?

Poin. Let us beate him before his Whore.

Prin. Looke, if the wither'd Elder hath not his Poll claw'd like a Parrot.

Poin. Is it not ſtrange, that Deſire ſhould ſo many yeeres out-live performance?

Fal. Kiſſe me Dol.

Prince. Saturne and Venus this yeere in Conjunction? What ſayes the Almanack to that?

Poin. And looke whether the fiery Trigon, his Man, be not liſping to his Maiſters old Tables, his Note-Book, his Councell-keeper?

Fal. Thou do'ſt give me flatt'ring Buſſes.

Dol. Nay truely, I kiſſe thee with a moſt conſtant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Dol. I love thee better, then I love ere a ſcurvy young Boy of them all.

Fal. What Stuffe wilt thou have a Kirtle of? I ſhall receive Money on Thurſday: thou ſhalt have a Cappe to morrow. A merry Song, come: it growes late, wee will to to Bed. Thou wilt forget me, when I am gone.

Dol. Thou wilt ſet me a weeping, if thou ſay'ſt ſo: prove that ever I dreſſe my ſelfe handſome, till thy returne: well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some Sack, Francis.

Prin. Poin. Anon, anon, Sir.

Fal. Ha? a Baſtard Sonne of the Kings? And art not thou Poines, his Brother?

Prin. Why thou Globe of ſinfull Continents, what a Life do'ſt thou lead?

Fal. A better then thou: I am a Gentleman, thou art a Drawer.

Prin. Very true, Sir: and I come to draw you out by the Eares.

Hoſt. Oh, the Lord preſerve thy good Grace: Welcome to London. Now Heaven bleſſe that ſweet Face of thine: what, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whorſon made Compound of Majeſty: by this light Fleſh, and corrupt Blood, thou art welcome.

Dol. How? you fat Foole, I ſcorne you.

Poin. My Lord, hee will drive you out of your revenge, and turne all to a merryment, if you take not the heat.

Prin. You whorſon Candle-myne you, how vildly did you ſpeake of me even now, before this honeſt, vertuous civil Gentlewoman?

Hoſt. 'Bleſſing on your good heart, and ſo ſhee is by my troth.

Fal. Didſt thou heare me?

Prince. Yes; and you knew me, as you did when you ranne away by Gads-hill: you knew I was at your back, and ſpoke it on purpoſe, to try my patience.

Fal. No, no; no: not ſo: I did not thinke, thou waſt within hearing.

Prin. I ſhall drive you then to confeſſe the wilfull abuſe, and then I know how to handle you.

Fal No abuſe (Hall) on mine Honor, no abuſe,

Prince. Not to diſprayſe me? and call me Pantler, and Bread-chopper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuſe (Hal.)

Poin. No abuſe?

Fal. No abuſe (Ned) in the World: honeſt Ned none. I diſprays'd him before the Wicked, that the Wicked might not fall in love with him: In which doing, I have done the part of a carefull Friend, and a true Subject, and thy Father is to give me thankes for it. No abuſe (Hal) none (Ned) none; no Boyes, none.

Prince. See now whether pure Feare, and entire Cowardiſe, doth not make thee wrong this vertuous Gentlewoman, to cloſe with us? Is ſhee of the Wicked? Is thine Hoſteſſe heere, of the Wicked? Or is the Boy of the Wickd? Or honeſt Bardolph (whoſe Zeale burnes in his Noſe) of the Wicked?

Poin. Anſwere thou dead Elme, anſwere.

Fal. The Fiend hath prickt downe Bardolph irrecoverable, and his Face is Lucifers Privy-Kitchin, where hee doth nothing but roſt Mault-Wormes: for the Boy, there is a goood Angell about him, but the Devill out-bids him too.

Prin. For the Women?

Fal. For one of them, ſhee is in Hell already, and burnes poore Soules: for the other, I owe her Money; and whether ſhee bee damn'd for that, I know not.

Hoſt. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No. I thinke thou art not: I thinke thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another Indictement upon thee, for ſuffering fleſh to bee eaten in thy houſe, contrary to the Law, for the which I thinke thou wilt howle.

Hoſt. All Victuallers do ſo: What is a Ioynt of Mutton, or two, in a whole Lent?

Prince. You, Gentlewoman.

Dol. What ſayes your Grace?

Falſt. His Grace ſayes that, which his fleſh rebells againſt.

Hoſt. Who knocks ſo lowd at doore? Looke to the doore there, Francis?

Entar Peto.

Prin. Peto, how now? what newes?

Peto. The King, your Father, is at Weſtminſter,
And there are twenty weake and wearied Poſtes,
Come from the North: and as I came along,
I met, and over-tooke a dozen Captaines,
Bare-headed, ſweating, knocking at the Tavernes,
And asking every one for Sir Iohn Falſtaffe.

Prin. By Heaven (Poines) I feele me much to blame,
So idly to prophane the precious time,
When Tempeſt of Commotion, like the South,
Borne with black Vapour, doth begin to melt,
And drop upon our bare vnarmed heads.
Give me my Sword, and Cloake:
Falſtaffe, good night. Exit.

Falſt. Now comes in the ſweeteſt Morſell of the night, and wee muſt hence, and leave it unpickt. More knocking at the doore? How now? what's the matter?

Bard. You muſt away to Court, Sir, preſently,
A dozen Captaines ſtay at doore for you.

Falſt. Pay the Muſitians, Sirrha: farewell Hoſteſſe, farewell Dol. You ſee (my good Wenches) how men of Merit are ſought after: the undeſerver may ſleepe, when the man of Action is call'd on. Farewell good Wenches: if I be not ſent away poſte, I will ſee you againe, ere I goe.

Dol. I cannot ſpeake: if my heart bee not ready to burſt-Well (ſweete Iacke) have a care of thy ſelfe.

Falſt. Farewell, farewell. Exit.

Hoſt. Well, fare thee well: I have knowne thee theſe twenty nine yeeres, come Peſcod-time: but an honeſter, and truer-hearted man-Well, fare thee well.

Bard. Miſtris Teare-ſheet.

Hoſt. What's the matter?

Bard. Bid Miſtris Teare-ſheet come to my Maſter.

Hoſt. Oh runne Dol, runne: runne, good Dol.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter the King, with a Page.

King. Goe, call the Earles of Surrey, and of Warwick:
But ere they come, bid them ore-reade theſe Letters,
And well conſider of them: make good ſpeed. Exit.
How many thouſand of my pooreſt Subjects
Are at this howre aſleepe? O Sleepe, O gentle Sleepe,
Natures ſoft Nurſe, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eye-lids downe,
And ſteepe my Sences in Forgetfulneſſe?
Why rather (Sleepe) lyeſt thou in ſmoaky Cribs,
Vpon uneaſie Pallads ſtretching thee,
And huiſht with buſſing Night, flyes to thy ſlumber,
Then in the perfum'd Chambers of the Great?
Vnder the Canopies of coſtly State,
And lull'd with ſounds of ſweeteſt Melody?
O thou dull god, why lyeſt thou with the vilde,
In loathſome Beds, and leav'ſt the Kingly Couch,
A watch-caſe, or a common Larum-Bell?
Wilt thou, upon the high and giddy Maſt,
Seale up the Ship-boyes Eyes, and rock his Braines,
In Cradle of the rude imperious Surge,
And in the viſitation of the Windes,
Who take the Ruffian Billowes by the top,
Curling their monſtrous heads, and hanging them
With deaff'ning Clamors in the ſlipp'ry Clouds,
That with the hurley, Death it ſelfe awakes?
Canſt thou (O partiall Sleepe) give thy Repoſe
To the wet Sea-Boy, in an houre ſo rude:
And in the calmeſt, and moſt ſtilleſt Night,
With all appliances, and meanes to boote,
Deny it to a King? Then happy Lowe, lye downe,
Vneaſie lyes the Head, that weares a Crowne.

Enter Warwicke and Surrey.

War. Many good-morrowes to your Majeſty.

King. Is it good-morrow, Lords?

War. 'Tis One a Clock, and paſt.

King. Why then good-morrow to you all (my Lords:)
Have you read o're the Letters that I ſent you?

VVar. We have (my Liege.)

King. Then you perceive the Body of our Kingdome,
How foule it is: what ranke Diſeaſes grow,
And with what danger, neere the Heart of it?

VVar. It is but as a Body, yet diſtemper'd,
Which to his former ſtrength may be reſtor'd,
With good advice, and little Medicine:
My Lord Northumberland will ſoone be cool'd.

King. Oh Heauen, that one might read the Book of Fate,
And ſee the revolution of the Times
Make Mountaines levell, and the Continent
(Weary of ſolide firmeneſſe) melt it ſelfe
Into the Sea: and other Times, to ſee
The beachy Girdle of the Ocean
Too wide for Neptunes hippes; how Chances mocks
And Changes fill the Cuppe of Alteration
With divers Liquors. 'Tis not tenne yeeres gone,
Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends,
Did feaſt together; and in two yeeres after,
Were they at Warres. It is but eight yeeres ſince,
This Percie was the man, neereſt my Soule;
Who like a Brother, toyl'd in my Affaires,
And layd his Love and Life under my foot:
Yea, for my ſake, even to the eyes of Richard
Gave him defiance. But which of you was by
(You Couſin Nevil, as I may remember)
When Richard, with his Eye, brim-full of Teares,
(Then check'd, and rated by Northumberland)
Did ſpeake theſe words (now prov'd a Prophecie:)
Northumberland, thou Ladder, by the which

My Couſin Bullingbrooke aſcends my Throne:
(Though then, Heaven knowes, I had no ſuch intent,
But that neceſſity ſo bow'd the State,
That I and Greatneſſe were compell'd to kiſſe:)
The Time ſhall come (thus did hee follow it)
The Time will come, that foule Sinne gathering head,
Shall breake into Corruption : ſo went on,
Fore-telling this ſame Times Condition,
And the diviſion of our Amitie.

War. There is a Hiſtory in all mens Lives,
Figuring the nature of the Times deceas'd:
The which obſerv'd, a man may prophecie
With a neere aime, of the maine chance of things,
As yet not come to Life, which in their Seeds
And weake beginnings lye entreaſured:
Such things become the Hatch and Brood of Time;
And by the neceſſary forme of this,
King Richard might create a perfect gueſſe,
That great Northumberland, then falſe to him,
Would of that Seed, grow to a greater falſeneſſe,
Which ſhould not finde a ground to roote upon,
Vnleſſe on you.

King. Are theſe things then Neceſſities?
Then let us meete them like Neceſſities;
And that ſame word, even now cryes out on us:
They ſay, the Biſhop and Northumberland
Are fifty thouſand ſtrong.

War. It cannot be (my Lord:)
Rumor doth double, like the Voice, and Eccho,
The numbers of the feared. Pleaſe it your Grace
To goe to bed, upon my Life (my Lord)
The Pow'rs that you already have ſent forth,
Shall brings this Prize in very eaſily.
To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd
A certaine inſtance, that Glendowr is dead.
Your Majeſty hath beene this fort-night ill,
And theſe unſeaſon'd howres perforce muſt adde
Vnto your Sickneſſe.

King. I will take your counſaile:
And were theſe inward Warres once out of hand,
Wee would (deare Lords) unto the Holy-Land.

Exeunt

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Shallow and Silence: with Mouldy, Shadow, Wart, Feeble, Bull-calfe.

Shal. Come-on, come-on, come-on : give mee your Hand, Sir; give mee your Hand, Sir : an early ſtirrer, by the Rood. And how doth my good Couſin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good Couſin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my Couſin, your Bed-fellow? and your faireſt Daughter, and mine, my God-Daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a blacke Ouzell (Couſin Shallow.)

Shal. By yea and nay, Sir, I dare ſay my Couſin William is become a good Scholler? hee is at Oxford ſtill, is hee not?

Sil. Indeede Sir, to my coſt.

Shal. Hee muſt then to the Innes of Court ſhortly : I was once of Clements Inne; where (I thinke) they will talke of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were call'd luſty Shallow then (Couſin.)

Shal. I was call'd any thing : and I would have done any thing indeede too, and roundly too. There was I, and little Iohn Doit of Staffordſhire, and blacke George Bare, and Francis Pick-bone, and Will Squele a Cot-ſal-man, you had not foure ſuch Swindge-bucklers in all the Innes of Court againe : And I may ſay to you, wee knew where the Bona-Roba's were, and had the beſt of them all at commandement. Then was Iacke Falſtaffe (now Sir Iohn) a Boy, and Page to Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolke.

Sil. This Sir Iohn (Couſin) that comes hither anon about Souldiers?

Shal. The ſame Sir Iohn, the very ſame : I ſaw him breake Schoggan's Head at the Court-Gate, when he was a Crack, not thus high: and the very ſame day did I fight with one Sampſon Stock-fiſh, a Fruiterer, behinde Greyes-Inne. Oh the mad dayes that I have ſpent! and to ſee how many of mine olde Acquaintance are dead?

Sil. Wee ſhall all follow (Couſin.)

Shal. Certaine : 'tis certaine : very ſure, verie ſure: Death is certaine to all, all ſhall dye. How a good Yoke of Bullocks at Stamford Faire?

Sil. Truly Couſin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certaine. Is old Double of your Towne living yet?

Sil. Dead, Sir.

Shal. Dead? See, ſee: hee drew a good Bow: and dead? hee ſhot a fine ſhoote. Iohn of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much Money on his head. Dead? hee would have clapt in the Clowt at Twelve-ſcore, and carryed you a fore-hand Shaft at fourteene, and fourteene and a halfe, that it would have done a mans heart good to ſee. How a ſcore of Ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be : a ſcore of good Ewes may be worth tenne pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Enter Bardolph and his Boy.

Sil. Heere come two of Sir Iohn Falſtaffes Men (as I thinke.)

Shal. Good-morrow, honeſt Gentlemen.

Bard. I beſeech you, which is Iuſtice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow (Sir) a poore Eſquire of this County, and one of the Kings Iuſtices of the Peace: What is your good pleaſure with me?

Bard. My Captaine (Sir) commends him to you : my Captaine, Sir Iohn Falſtaffe : a tall Gentleman, and a moſt gallant Leader.

Shal. Hee greetes me well : (Sir) I knew him a good Back-Sword-man. How doth the good Knight? may I aske, how my Lady his Wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon : a Souldier is better accommodated, then with a Wife.

Shal. It is well ſaid, Sir; and it is well ſaid, indeede, too: Better accommodated? it is good, yea indeede is it: good phraſes are ſurely, and every where very commendable. Accommodated, it comes of Accommodo: very good, a good Phraſe.

Bard. Pardon, Sir, I have heard the word. Phraſe call you it? by this Day, I know not the Phraſe: but I will maintaine the Word with my Sword, to bee a Souldier-like Word, and a Word of exceeding good Command. Accommodated : that is, when a man is (as they ſay) accommodated : or, when a man is, being whereby he thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falſtaffe.

Shal. It is very iuſt: Looke, heere comes good Sir Iohn. Give me your hand, give me your Worſhips good hand: Truſt me, you looke well: and beare your yeeres very well. Welcome, good Sir Iohn.

Falſt. I am glad to ſee you well, good Maſter Robert Shallow: Maſter Sure-card as I thinke?

Shal. No ſir Iohn, it is my Coſin Silence: in Commiſſion with me.

Falſt. Good Maſter Silence, it well befits you ſhould be of the peace.

Sil. Your good Worſhip is welcome.

Falſt. Fye, this is hot weather (Gentlemen) have you provided me heere halfe a dozen of ſufficient men?

Shal. Marry have we ſir: Will you ſit?

Falſt. Let me ſee them, I beſeech you.

Shal. Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Let me ſee, let me ſee, let me ſee: ſo, ſo, ſo, ſo: yea marry Sir Raphe Mouldy: let them appeare as I call: let them doe ſo, let them doe ſo: Let me ſee, Where is Mouldy?

Moul. Heere, if it pleaſe you.

Shal. What thinke you (Sir Iohn) a good limb'd fellow: yong, ſtrong, and of good friends.

Falſt. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, if it pleaſe you.

Falſt. 'Tis the more time thou wert us'd.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, moſt excellent. Things that are mouldy, lacke uſe: very ſingular good. Well ſaid Sir Iohn, very well ſaid.

Falſt. Pricke him.

Moul. I was prickt well enough before, if you could have let me alone: my old Dame will be undone now, for one to doe her Husbandry, and her Drudgery; you need not to have prickt me, there are other men fitter to goe out then I.

Falſt. Goe too: peace Mouldy, you ſhall goe. Mouldy, it is time you were ſpent.

Moul. Spent?

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; ſtand aſide: Know you where you are? For the other ſir Iohn: Let me ſee: Simon Shadow.

Falſt. I marry, let me have him to ſit under: he's like to be a cold ſouldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow.

Shad. Heere ſir.

Falſt. Shadow, whoſe ſonne art thou?

Shad. My Mothers ſonne, Sir.

Falſt. Thy Mothers ſonne: like enough, and thy Fathers ſhadow: ſo the ſonne of the Female, is the ſhadow of the Male: it is often ſo indeed, but not of the fathers ſubſtance.

Shal. Doe you like him, ſir Iohn?

Falſt. Shadow will ſerve for Summer: pricke him: For we have a number of ſhadowes to fill up the Muſter-Booke.

Shal. Thomas Wart.

Falſt. Where's he?

Wart. Heere ſir.

Falſt. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea ſir.

Falſt. Thou art a very ragged Wart.

Shal. Shall I pricke him downe,
Sir Iohn?

Falſt. It were ſuperfluous: for his apparrell is built upon his backe, and the whole frame ſtands upon pinnes: pricke him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, you can doe it ſir: you can doe it: I commend you well.

Francis Feeble.

Feeble. Heere ſir.

Shal. What Trade art thou Feeble?

Feeble. A Womans Taylor ſir.

Shal. Shall I pricke him, ſir?

Falſt. You may:
But if he had beene a mans Taylor, he would have prick'd you. Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemies Battaile, as thou haſt done in a Womans petticote?

Feeble. I will doe my good will ſir, you can have no more.

Falſt. Well ſaid, good Womans Tailour: Well ſayde Couragious Feeble: thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathfull Dove, or moſt magnanimous Mouſe. Pricke the womans Taylour well Maſter Shallow, deepe Maſter Shallow.

Feeble. I would Wart might have gone ſir.

Falſt. I would thou wert a mans Tailor, that thou might'ſt mend him, and make him fit to goe. I cannot put him to a private ſouldier, that is the Leader of ſo many thouſands. Let that ſuffice, moſt Forcible Feeble.

Feeble. It ſhall ſuffice.

Falſt. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble. Who is the next?

Shal. Peter Bulcalfe of the Greene.

Falſt. Yea marry, let us ſee Bulcalfe.

Bul. Heere ſir.

Falſt. Truſt me, a likely Fellow. Come, pricke me Bulcalfe till he roare againe.

Bul. Oh, good my Lord Captaine.

Falſt. What? do'ſt thou roare before th'art prickt.

Bul. Oh ſir, I am a diſeaſed man.

Falſt. What diſeaſe haſt thou?

Bul. A whorſon cold ſir, a cough ſir, which I caught with Ringing in the Kings affayres, upon his Coronation day, ſir.

Falſt. Come, thou ſhalt goe to the Warres in a Gowne: we will have away thy Cold, and I will take ſuch order that thy friends ſhall ring for thee. Is heere all?

Shal. There is two more called then your number: you muſt have but foure heere ſir, and ſo I pray you goe in with me to dinner.

Falſt. Come, I will goe drinke with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to ſee you in good troth, Maſter Shallow.

Shal. O ſir Iohn, doe you remember ſince we lay all night in the Winde-mill, in Saint Georges Field?

Falſt. No more of that good Maſter Shallow: No more of that.

Shal. Ha? it was a merry night. And is Iane Nightworke alive?

Falſt. She lives, Maſter Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.

Falſt. Never, never: ſhe would alwayes ſay ſhe could not abide Maſter Shallow.

Shal. I could anger her to the heart: ſhe was then a Bona-Roba. Doth ſhe hold her owne well?

Falſt. Old, old, Maſter Shallow.

Shal. Nay, ſhe muſt be old, ſhe cannot chooſe but be old: certaine ſhe's old: and had Robin Night-worke, by old Night-worke, before I came to Clements Inne.

Sil. That's fifty five yeeres agoe.

Shal. Hah, Couſin Silence, that thou hadſt ſeene that, that this Knight and I have ſeene: hah, Sir Iohn, ſaid I well?

Falſt. We have heard the Chymes at mid-night, Maſter Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have; in faith, Sir Iohn, we have: our watch-world was, Hem-Boyes. Come, let's to Dinner; come, let's to Dinner: Oh the dayes that we have ſeene. Come, come.

Bul. Good Maſter Corporate Bardolph, ſtand my friend, and heere is foure Harry tenne ſhillings in French Crownes for you: in very truth, ſir, I had as lief be hang'd ſir, as goe? and yet, for mine owne part, ſir, I doe not care, but rather, becauſe I am unwilling, and for mine owne part, have a deſire to ſtay with my friends: elſe, ſir, I did not care, for mine owne part, ſo much.

Bar. Goe-too: ſtand aſide.

Moul. And good Maſter Corporall Captaine, for my old Dames ſake, ſtand my friend: ſhe hath no body to doe any thing about her, when I am gone: and ſhe is old and cannot helpe her ſelfe: you ſhall have forty, ſir.

Bard. Go-too: ſtand aſide.

Feeble. I care not, a man can dye but once: we owe a death. I will never beare a baſe mind: it it be my deſtiny, ſo: if it be not, ſo: no man is too good to ſerve his Prince: and let it goe which way it will, he that dies this yeere, is quit for the next.

Bard. Well ſaid, thou art a good fellow.

Feebl. Nay, I will beare no baſe mind.

Falſt. Come ſir, which men ſhall I have?

Shal. Foure of which you pleaſe.

Bard. Sir, a word with you: I have three pound, to free Mouldy and Bull-calſe.

Falſt. Go-too: well.

Shal. Come, ſir Iohn which foure will you have?

Falſt. Doe you chuſe for me.

Shal. Marry then, Mouldy, Bull-calſe, Feeble, and Shallow.

Falſt. Mouldy, and Bull-calfe: for you Mouldy, ſtay at home, till you are paſt ſervice: and for your part, Bull-calfe, grow till you come unto it: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir Iohn, Sir Iohn, doe not your ſelfe wrong, they are your likelyeſt men, and I would have you ſerv'd with the beſt.

Falſt. Will you tell me (Maſter Shallow) how to chuſe a man? Care I for the Limbe, the Thewes, the ſtature, bulke, and big aſſemblance of a man? give me the ſpirit (Maſter Shallow.) Where's Wart? you ſee what a ragged appearance it is: hee ſhall charge you, and diſcharge you, with the motion of a Pewterers Hammer: come off, and on, ſwifter then he that gibbets on the Brewers Bucket. And this ſame halfe-fac'd fellow, Shadow, give me this man, he preſents no marke to the Enemy, the foe-man may with as great ayme levell at the edge of a Pen-knife: and for a Retrait, how ſwiftly will this Feeble, the Womans Taylor, runne off. O, give me the ſpare men, and ſpare me the great ones. Put me a Calyver into Warts hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold Wart, Traverſe: thus, thus, thus.

Falſt. Come manage me your Calyver: ſo. very well, go-too, very good, exceeding good. O, give me alwayes a little, leane, old, chopt, bald Shot. Well ſaid Wart, thou art a good Scab: hold, there is a Teſter for thee.

Shal. He is not his Crafts-maſter, he doth not doe it right. I remember at Mile-end-Greene, when I lay at Clements Inne, I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthurs Show: there was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his Peece thus: and he would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: Rah, tah, tah, would he ſay, Bownce would he ſay, and away againe would he goe, and againe would he come: I ſhall never ſee ſuch a fellow.

Fal. Theſe fellowes will doe well, Maſter Shallow. Farewell Maſter Silence, I will not uſe many wordes with you: fare you well, Gentlemen both: I thanke you: I muſt a dozen mile to night. Bardolph, give the Souldiers Coates.

Shal. Sir Iohn, Heaven bleſſe you, and proſper your Affayres, and ſend us Peace. As you returne, viſit my houſe. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure I will with you to the Court.

Falſt. I would you would, Maſter Shallow.

Shal. Go-too: I have ſpoke at a word. Fare you well. Exit.

Falſt. Fare you well, gentle Gentlemen. On Bardolph, leade the men away. As I returne, I will fetch off theſe Iuſtices: I doe ſee the bottome of Iuſtice Shallow. How ſubject we old men are to this vice of Lying? This ſame ſtarv'd Iuſtice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildeneſſe of his Youth, and the Feates he hath done about Turnball-ſtreet, and every third word a Lye, duer pay'd to the hearer, then the Turkes Tribute. I doe remember him at Clements Inne, like a man made after ſupper, of a Cheeſe-paring. When he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forked Radiſh, with a Head fantaſtically carv'd upon it with a Knife. He was ſo forlorne, that his Dimenſions (to any thicke ſight) were invincible. He was the very Genius of Famine: he came ever in the rere-ward of the Faſhion: And now is this Vices Dagger become a Squire, and talkes as familarily of Iohn of Gaunt, as if he had beene ſworne Brother to him: and Ile be ſworne he never ſaw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and then he burſt his Head, for crowding among the Marſhals men. I ſaw it, and told Iohn of Gaunt, he beat his owne Name, for you might have truſs'd him and all his Apparrell into an Eele-skinne: the Caſe of a Treble Hoeboy was a Manſion for him: a Court: and now hath he Land, and Beeves. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I returne: and it ſhall goe hard, but I will make him a Philoſophers two Stones to me. If the young Dace be a Bayt for the old Pike, I ſee no reaſon, in the Law of Nature, but I may ſnap at him. Let time ſhape, and there an end. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus, Scæna Prima.

Enter the Arch-biſhop, Mowbray, Haſtings,
Weſtmerland, Colevile.

Biſh. What is this Forreſt call'd?

Haſt. 'Tis Gualtree Forreſt, and't ſhall pleaſe your Grace.

Biſh. Here ſtand (my Lords) and ſend diſcoverers forth
To know the numbers of our Enemies.

Haſt. We have ſent forth already.
Biſh. 'Tis well done.
My friends, and Brethren (in theſe great Affaires)
I muſt acquaint you, that I have receiv'd
New-dated Letters from Northumberland:
Their cold intent, tenure, and ſubſtance thus.
How doth he wiſh his Perſon, with ſuch Powers
As might hold ſortance with his Quality,
The which he could not levy: whereupon
He is retyr'd, to ripe his growing Fortunes,
To Scotland; and concludes in hearty prayers,
That your Attempts may over-live the hazard,
And fearefull meeting of their Oppoſite.
Mow. Thus do the hopes we have in him, touch ground,
And daſh themſelves to pieces.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Haſt. Now? what newes?
Meſſ. Weſt of this Forreſt, ſcarcely off a mile,
In goodly forme, comes on the Enemy:
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number
Vpon, or neere, the rate of thirty thouſand.
Mow. The juſt proportion that we gave them out.
Let us ſway-on, and face them in the field.

Enter Weſtmerland.

Biſh. What well appointed Leader fronts us here?
Mow. I thinke it is my Lord of Weſtmerland.
Weſt. Health, and faire greeting from our Generall,
The Prince, Lord Iohn, and Duke of Lancaſter.
Biſh. Say on (my Lord of Weſtmerland) in peace:
What doth concerne your comming?
Weſt. Then (my Lord)
Vnto your Grace doe I in cheife addreſſe
The ſubſtance of my Speech. If that Rebellion
Came like it ſelfe, in baſe and abject Routs,
Led on by bloody Youth. guarded with Rage,
And countenanc'd by Boyes, and Beggery:
I ſay if damn'd Commotion ſo appeare,
In his true, native, and moſt proper ſhape,
You (Reverend Father, and theſe Noble Lords)
Had not beene here, to dreſſe the ougly forme
Of baſe, and bloody inſurrection,
With your faire Honors. You, Lord Arch-biſhop,
Whoſe Sea is by a Civill Peace maintain'd,
Whoſe Beard, the Silver Hand of Peace hath touch'd,
Whoſe Learning, and good Letters, Peace hath tutor'd,
Whoſe white Inveſtments figure Innocence,
The Dove, and very bleſſed Spirit of Peace.
Wherefore doe you ſo ill tranſlate your ſelfe,
Out of the Speech of Peace, that beares ſuch grace,
Into the harſh and boyſtrous Tongue of Warre?
Turning you Bookes to Graves, your Inke to Blood,
Your Pennes to Launces, and your Tongue divine
To a low Trumpet, and a Point of Warre?
Biſh. Wherefore doe I this? ſo the queſtion ſtands.
Briefely to this end: We are all diſeas'd,
And with our ſurfetting, and wanton howres,
Have brought our ſelves into a burning Fever,
And we muſt bleede for it: of which Diſeaſe,
Our late King Richard (being infected) dy'd.
But (my moſt Noble Lord of Weſtmerland)
I take not on me here as a Phyſician,
Nor doe I, as an Enemy to Peace,
Troope in the Throngs of Military men:
But rather ſhew a while like fearefull Warre,
To dyet ranke Mindes, ſicke of happineſſe;
And purge th'obſtructions, which begin to ſtop
Our very Veines of Life: heare me more plainely.
I have in equall ballance juſtly weigh'd,
What wrongs our Armes may do, what wrongs we ſuffer
And find our Griefes heavier then our Offences.
We ſee which way the ſtreame of Time doth runne,
And are enforc'd from our moſt quiet there,
By the rough Torrent of Occaſion,
And have the ſummary of all our Griefes
(When time ſhall ſerve) to ſhew in Articles;
Which long ere this, we offer'd to the King,
And might, by no Suit, gayne our Audience:
When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our Griefes,
We are deny'd acceſſe unto his perſon,
Even by thoſe men, that moſt have done us wrong.
The dangers of the dayes but newly gone,
Whoſe memory is written on the Earth
With yet appearing blood; and the examples
Of every Minutes inſtance (preſent now)
Hath put us in theſe ill-beſeeming Armes:
Not to breake Peace, or any Branch of it,
But to eſtabliſh here a Peace indeed,
Concurring both in Name and Quality.
Weſt. When ever yet was your Appeale deny'd;
Wherein have you beene galled by the King?
What Peere hath beene ſuborn'd, to grate on you,
That you ſhould ſeale this lawleſſe bloody Booke
Of forg'd Rebellion, with a Seale divine?
Biſh. My brother generall, the Common-wealth,
I make my quarrell, in particular.
Weſt. There is no neede of any ſuch redreſſe;
Or if there were, it not belongs to you.
Mow. Why not to him in part, and to us all,
That feele the bruizes of the dayes before,
And ſuffer the Condition of theſe Times
To lay a heavy and unequall Hand upon our Honors?
Weſt. O my good Lord Mowbray,
Conſtrue the Times to their Neceſſities,
And you ſhall ſay (indeed) it is the Time,
And not the King, that doth you injuries.
Yet for your part, it not appeares to me,
Either from the King, or in the preſent Time,
That you ſhould have an inch of any ground
To build a Griefe on: Were you not reſtor'd
To all the Duke of Norfolkes Seignories,
Your Noble, and right well-remembred Fathers?
Mow. What thing, in Honor, had my father loſt,
That need to be reviu'd, and breath'd in me?
The King that lov'd him, as the State ſtood then,
Was forc'd, perforce compell'd to baniſh him:
And then, that Henry Bullingbrooke and he
Being mounted, and both rowſed in their Seates,
Their neighing Courſes daring of the Spurre,
Their armed Staves in charge, their Beavers downe,
Their eyes of fire, ſparling through ſights of Steele,
And the lowd Trumpet blowing them together:
Then, then, when there was nothing could have ſtay'd
My father from the Breaſt of Bullingbrooke;
O, when the King did throw his Warder downe.
(His owne Life hung upon the Staffe he threw)
Then threw he downe himſelfe, and all their Lives,
That by Indictment, and by dint of Sword,
Have ſince miſ-carried under Bullingbrooke.

Weſt. You ſpeake (Lord Mowbray) now you know not
The Earle of Hereford, was reputed then (what.
In England the moſt valiant Gentleman.
Who knowes, on whom Fortune would then have ſmil'd?
But if your Father had beene Victor there,
He ne're had borne it out of Coventry.
For all the Country, in a generall voyce,
Cry'd hate upon him: and all their prayers, and love,
Were ſet on Herefold, whom they doted on,
And bleſs'd, and grac'd, and did more then the King.
But this is meere digreſſion from my purpoſe.
Heere come I from our Princely Generall,
To know your Griefes; to tell you, from his Grace,
That he will give you Audience: and wherein
It ſhall appeare, that your demands are juſt,
You ſhall enjoy them, every thing ſet off,
That might ſo much as thinke you Enemies.
Mow. But he hath forc'd us to compell this Offer,
And it proceedes from Pollicy, not Love.
Weſt. Mowbray, you over-weene to take it ſo:
This Offer comes from Mercy, not from Feare.
For loe, within a Ken our Army lyes,
Vpon mine Honor, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of feare.
Our Battaile is more full of Names then yours,
Our Men more perfect in the uſe of Armes,
Our Armor all as ſtrong, our Cauſe the beſt;
Then Reaſon will, our hearts ſhould be as good.
Say you not then, our Offer is compell'd.
Mow. Well, by my will, we ſhall admit no Parley.
Weſt. That argues but the ſhame of your offence:
A rotten Caſe abides no handing.
Haſt. Hath the Prince Iohn a full Commiſſion,
In very ample vertue of his father,
To heare, and abſolutely to determine
Of what Conditions we ſhall ſtand upon?
Weſt. That is intended in the Generalls Name:
I muſe you make ſo ſlight a Queſtion.
Biſh. Then take (my Lord of Weſtmerland) this Sche-
For this containes our generall Grievances: (dule,
Each ſeverall Article herein redreſs'd,
All members of our Cauſe, both here, and hence,
That are inſinewed to this Action,
Acquitted by a true ſubſtantiall forme,
And preſent execution of our wills,
To us, and to our purpoſes confin'd,
We come within our awfull Banks againe
And knit our Powers to the Arme of Peace.
Weſt. This will I ſhew the Generall. Pleaſe you Lords
In ſight of both our Battailes, wee may meete
At either end in peace: which Heaven ſo frame,
Or to the place of difference call the Swords,
Which muſt decide it.
Biſh. My Lord, wee will doe ſo.
Mow. There is a thing within my Boſome tells me,
That no Conditions of our Peace can ſtand.
Haſt. Feare you not that, if we can make our Peace
Vpon ſuch large termes, and ſo abſolute,
As our Conditions ſhall conſiſt upon,
Our Peace ſhall ſtand as firme as Rocky Mountaines.
Mow. I, but our valuation ſhall be ſuch,
That evry ſlight, and falſe-derived Cauſe,
Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton Reaſon,
Shall, to the King, taſte of this Action:
That were our Royall faiths, Martyrs in Love,
We ſhall be winnowed with ſo rough a winde,
That even our Corne ſhall ſeeme as light as Chaffe,
And good from bad find no partition.
Biſh. No, no (my Lord) note this: the King is weary
Of dainty, and ſuch picking Grievances:
For he hath found, to end one doubt by Death,
Revives two greater in the Heires of Life.
And therefore will he wipe his Tables cleane,
And keepe no Tell-tale to his Memory,
That may repeat, and Hiſtory his loſſe,
To new remembrance. For full well he knowes,
He cannot ſo preciſely weede this Land,
As his miſdoubts preſent occaſion:
His foes are ſo enrooted with his friends,
That plucking to unfixe an Enemy,
He doth unfaſten ſo, and ſhake a friend.
So that this Land, like an offenſive wife,
That hath enrag'd him on, to offer ſtrokes,
As he is ſtriking, holds his infant up,
And hangs reſolu'd Correction in the Arme,
That was uprear'd to execution.
Haſt. Beſides, the King hath waſted all his Rods,
On late Offenders, that he now doth lacke
The very Inſtruments of Chaſticement:
So that his power, like to a Fangleſſe Lion
May offer, but not hold.
Biſh. 'Tis very true:
And therefore be aſſur'd (my good Lord Marſhall)
If we doe now make our attonement well,
Our Peace will (like a broken Limbe united)
Grow ſtronger, for the breaking.
Mow. Be it ſo:
Heere is return'd my Lord of Weſtmerland.

Enter Weſtmerland.

We. The Prince is here at hand: pleaſeth your Lordſhip
To meet his Grace, juſt diſtance 'tweene our Armies?
Mow. Your Grace of Yorke, in heaven's name then forward.
Biſh. Before, and greet his Grace (my Lord) we come.

Enter Prince Iohn.

Iohn. You are well encountred here (my coſin Mow-
Good day to you, gentle Lord Archbiſhop, (bray)
And ſo to you Lord Haſtings, and to all.
My Lord of Yorke, it better ſhew'd with you,
When that your Flocke (aſſembled by the Bell)
Encircled you, to heare with reverence
Your expoſition on the holy Text,
Then now to ſe you heere an Iron man
Chearing a rowt of Rebels with your Drumme,
Turning the Word, to Sword; and Life to death:
That man that ſits within a Monarches heart,
And ripens in the Sunne-ſhine of his favour,
Would he abuſe the Countenance of the King,
Alacke, what Miſcheifes might he ſet abroach,
In ſhadow of ſuch Greatneſſe? With you, Lord Biſhop,
It is even ſo. Who hath not heard it ſpoken,
How deepe you were within the Bookes of Heaven?
To us, the ſpeaker in his Parliament;
To us, the 'imagine voyce of Heaven it ſelfe:
The very Opener, and Intelligencer,
Betweene the Grace, the Sanctities of Heaven?
And our dull workings. O, who ſhall beleeve,
But you miſ-uſe the reverence of your Place,
Employ the Countenance, and Grace of Heaven,
As a falſe Favorite doth his Princes Name,
In deeds diſ-honorable? You have taken up,

Vnder the counterfeited Zeale of Heaven,
The Subjects of Heavens Subſtitute, my Father,
And both againſt the Peace of Heaven, and him,
Have here up-ſwarmed them.

Biſh. Good my Lord of Lancaſter,
I am not heere againſt your Fathers Peace:
But (as I told my Lord of Weſtmerland)
The Time (miſ-order'd) doth in common ſence
Crowd us, and cruſh us, to this monſtrous Forme,
To hold our ſafety up. I ſent your Grace
The parcels, and particulars of our Griefe,
The which hath ben with ſcorne ſhov'd from the Court:
Whereon this Hydra-Sonne of Warre is borne,
Whoſe dangerous eyes may well be charm'd aſleepe,
With grant of our moſt juſt and right deſires;
And true Obedience, of this Madneſſe cur'd,
Stoope tamely to the foot of Majeſty.

Mow. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes,
To the laſt man.

Haſt. And though we here fall downe,
We have Supplyes, to ſecond our Attempt:
If they miſ-carry, theirs ſhall ſecond them.
And ſo, ſucceſſe of Miſchiefe ſhall be borne,
And Heire from Heire ſhall hold this Quarrell up,
Whiles England ſhall have generation.

Iohn. You are too ſhallow (Haſtings)
Much too ſhallow,
To ſound the bottome of the after-Times.

Weſt. Pleaſeth your Grace, to anſwere them directly,
How farre-forth you doe like their Articles:

Iohn. I like them all, and doe allow them well:
And ſweare here, by the honor of my blood,
My fathers purpoſes have beene miſtooke,
And ſome, about him, have too laviſhly
Wreſted his meaning, and Authority.
My Lord, theſe Griefes ſhall be with ſpeed redreſt:
Vpon my life, they ſhall. If this may pleaſe you,
Diſcharge your powers unto their ſeverall Counties,
As we will ours: and here betweene the Armies,
Let's drinke together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may beare thoſe Tokens home,
Of our reſtored Love, and Amity.

Biſh. I take your Princely word, for theſe redreſſes.

Iohn. I give it you, and will maintaine my word;
And thereupon I drinke unto your Grace.

Haſt. Goe Captaine, and deliver to the Army
This newes of Peace: let them have pay, and part:
I know, it will well pleaſe them.
High thee Captaine. Exit.

Biſh. To you, my Noble Lord of Weſtmerland.

Weſt. I pledge your Grace:
And if you knew what paines I have beſtow'd,
To breed this preſent Peace,
You would drinke freely: but my love to ye,
Shall ſhew it ſelfe more openly hereafter.

Biſh. I doe not doubt you.

Weſt. I am glad of it.
Health to my Lord, and gentle Couſin Mowbray.

Mow. You wiſh me health in very happy ſeaſon,
For I am, on the ſodaine, ſomething ill.

Biſh. Againſt ill Chances, men are ever merry,
But heavineſſe fore-runnes the good event.

Weſt. Therefore be merry (Cooze) ſince ſodaine ſorrow
Serves to ſay thus: ſome good thing comes to morrow.

Biſh. Beleeve me, I am paſſing light in ſpirit.

Mow. So much the worſe, if your owne Rule be true.

Iohn. The word of Peace is render'd: hearke how they ſhowt.

Mow. This had beene cheareful, after Victory.

Biſh. A Peace is of the nature of a Conqueſt:
For then both parties nobly are ſubdu'd,
And neither party looſer.

Iohn. Goe (my Lord)
And let our Army be diſcharged too:
And good my Lord (ſo pleaſe you) let our Traines
March by us, that we may peruſe the men Exit.
We ſhould have coap'd withall.

Biſh. Goe, good Lord Haſtings:
And ere they be diſmiſs'd, let them march by. Exit.

Iohn. I truſt (Lords) we ſhall lye to night together.

Enter Weſtmerland.

Now Couſin, wherefore ſtands our Army ſtill?

Weſt. The Leaders having charge from you to ſtand,
Will not goe off, untill they heare you ſpeake.

Iohn. They know their duties. Enter Haſtings.

Haſt. Our Army is diſpers'd:
Like youthfull Steeres, unyoak'd, they tooke their courſ[illegible]
Eaſt, Weſt, North, South: or like a Schoole broke up,
Each hurryes towards his home, and ſporting place.

Weſt. Good tidings (my Lord Haſtings) for the which
I doe arreſt thee (Traytor) of high Treaſon:
And you Lord Arch-biſhop, and you Lord Mowbray,
Of Capitall Treaſon, I attach you both.

Mow. Is this proceeding juſt, and honorable?

Weſt. Is your Aſſembly ſo?

Biſh. Will you thus breake your faith?

Iohn. I pawn'd thee none:
I promiſ'd you redreſſe of theſe ſame Grievances
Whereof you did complaine; which by mine Honor,
I will performe, with a moſt Chriſtian care.
But for you (Rebels) looke to taſte the due
Meet for Rebellion, and ſuch Acts as yours.
Moſt ſhallowly did you theſe Armes commence,
Fondly brought here, and fooliſhly ſent hence.
Strike up our Drummes, purſue the ſcatter'd ſtray,
Heaven, and not we have ſafely fought to day.
Some guard theſe Traitors to the blocke of Death,
Treaſons true bed, and yeelder up of breath, Exeunt.

Enter Falſtaffe, and Collevile.

Falſt. What's your Name, Sir? of what Condition are you? and of what place, I pray?

Col. I am a Knight, Sir:
And my Name is Collevile of the Dale.

Falſt. Well then, Collevile is your Name, a Knight is your Degree, and your Place, the Dale. Collevile ſhall ſtill be your Name, a Traytor your Degree, and the Dungeon your Place, a place deepe enough: ſo ſhall you be ſtill Collevile of the Dale.

Col. Are not you Sir Iohn Falſtaffe?

Falſt. As good a man as he ſir, who ere I am: doe yee yeeld ſir, or ſhall I ſweate for you? if I doe ſweate, they are the drops of thy Lovers, and they weep for thy death, therefore rowze up Feare and Trembling, and doe obſervance to my mercy.

Col. I thinke you are Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, and in that thought yeeld me.

Fal. I have a whole Schoole of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a Tongue of them all, ſpeakes any other word but my name: and I had but a belly of any indifferency, I were ſimply the moſt active fellow in Europe: my wombe, my wombe, my wombe undoes me. Heere comes our Generall.

Enter Prince Iohn, and Weſtmerland.

Iohn. The heat is paſt, follow no farther now
Call in the Powers, good Couſin Weſtmerland.
Now Falſtaffe, where have you beene all this while?
When every thing is ended, thou you come.
Theſe tardy Trickes of yours will (on my life)
One time or other, breake ſome Gallowes backe.

Falſt. I would be ſorry (my Lord) but it ſhould be thus: I never knew yet, but rebuke and checke was the reward of Valour. Doe you thinke me a Swallow, an Arrow, or a Bullet? Have I, in my poore and old Motion, the expedition of Thought? I have ſpeeded hither with the very extremeſt inch of poſſibility. I have fowndred nine ſcore and odde Poſtes: and heere (travell-tainted as I am) have, in my pure and immaculate Valour, taken Sir Iohn Collevile of the Dale, a moſt furious Knight, and valorous Enemy: But what of that? he ſaw me, and yeelded: that I may juſtly ſay with the hooke-nos'd fellow of Rome, I came, ſaw, and over-came.

Iohn. It was more of his Courteſie, then your deſerving.

Falſt. I know not: heere he is, and heere I yeeld him: and I beſeech your Grace, let it be book'd with the reſt of this dayes deedes; or I ſweare, I will have it in a particular Ballad, with mine owne Picture on the top of it (Collevile) kiſſing my foot:) To the which courſe, if I be enforc'd, if you doe not all ſhew like gilt two-pences to me; and I, in the cleare Sky of Fame, o're-ſhine you as much as the full Moone doth the Cynders of the Element (which ſhew like Pinnes-heads to her) beleeve not the word of the Noble: therefore let me have right, and let deſert mount.

Iohn. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Falſt. Let it ſhine then.

Iohn. Thine's too thicke to ſhine.

Falſt. Let it doe ſomething (my good Lord) that may doe me good, and call it what you will.

Iohn. Is thy Name Collevile?

Col. It is (my Lord.)

Iohn. A famous Rebell art thou, Collevile.

Falſt. And a famous true Subject tooke him.

Col. I am (my Lord) but as my Betters are,
That led me hither: had they beene rul'd by me,
You ſhould have wonne them dearer then you have.

Falſt. I know not how they ſold themſelves, but thou like a kind fellow, gav'ſt thy ſelfe away; and I thanke thee, for thee.

Enter Weſtmerland.

Iohn. Have you left purſuit?

Weſt. Retreat is made, and Execution ſtay'd.

Iohn. Send Collevile, with his Confederates,
To Yorke, to preſent Execution.
Blunt, leade him hence, and ſee you guard him ſure.

Exit with Collevile.

And now diſpatch we toward the Court (my Lords)
I heare the King, my Father is ſore ſicke,
Our Newes ſhall goe before us, to his Majeſty,
Which (Couſin) you ſhall beare, to comfort him:
And we with ſober ſpeede will follow you.

Falſt. My Lord, I beſeech you, give me leave to goe through Glouceſterſhire; and when you come to Court, ſtand my good Lord, 'pray, in your good report.

Iohn. Fare you well, Falſtaffe: I, in my condition,
Shall better ſpeake of you, then you deſerve. Exit.

Falſt. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better then your Dukedome. Good faith, this ſame young ſober-blooded Boy doth not love me, nor a man cannot make him laugh; but thats no marvaile, he drinkes no Wine. There's never any of theſe demure Boyes come to any proofe: for thinne drinke doth ſo over-coole their blood, and making many Fiſh-Meales, that they fall into a kind of Male Greene-ſickneſſe: and then, when they marry, they get Wenches. They are generally Fooles, and Cowards; which ſome of us ſhould be too, but for inflamation. A good Sherris-Sacke hath a twofold operation in it: it aſcends me into the Braine, dryes me there all the fooliſh, and dull, and crudy Vapours, which environ it: makes it apprehenſive, quicke, forgetive, full of nimble, fiery, and delectable ſhapes; which deliver'd o're to the Voyce, the Tongue, which is the Birth, becomes excellent Wit. The ſecond property of your excellent Sherris, is, the warming of the Blood: which before (cold, and ſetled) left the Liver white, and pale: which is the Badge of Puſillanimity, and Cowardize: but the Sherris warmes it, and makes it courſe from the inwards, to the parts extremes: it illuminateth the Face, which (as a Beacon) gives warning to all the reſt of this little kingdome (man) to Arme: and then the Vitall Commoners, and in-land petty ſpirits, muſter me all to their Captaine, the Heart; who great, and pufft up with his retinue, doth any deed of Courage: and this Valour comes of Sherris. So, that skill in the Weapon is nothing, without Sacke (for that ſets it a-worke:) and Learning, a meere Hoord of Gold, kept by a Devill, till Sacke commences it, and ſets it in act, and uſe. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherite of his Father, he hath, like leane, ſterrill, and bare Land, manured, husbanded, and tyll'd, with excellent endeavour of drinking good, and good ſtore of fertile Sherris, that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thouſand ſonnes, the firſt Principle I would teach them, ſhould be to forſweare thinne Potations, and to addict themſelves to Sacke. Enter Bardolph.
How now Bardolph.

Bard. The Army is diſcharged all, and gone.

Falſt. Let them goe: Ile through Glouceſterſhire, and there will I viſit Maſter Robert Shallow, Eſquire: I have him already tempering betweene my finger and my thombe, and ſhortly will I ſeale with him. Come away.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter King, Warwicke, Clarence, Glouceſter.

King. Now Lords, if heaven doth give ſucceſſefull end
To this Debate that bleedeth at our doores,
We will our Youth leade on to higher Fields,
And draw no Swords, but what are ſanctify'd.
Our Navy is addreſſed, our Power collected,
Our Subſtitutes, in abſence, well inveſted,
And every thing lyes levell to our wiſh;
Onely we want a little perſonall ſtrength:
And pawſe us, till theſe Rebels, now a-foot,
Come underneath the yoake of Government.

War. Both which we doubt not, but your Majeſty
Shall ſoone enjoy.

King. Humphrey (my Sonne of Glouceſter) where is the Prince, your Brother?
Glo. I thinke he's gone to hunt (my Lord) at Windſor.
King. And how accompanied?
Glo. I doe not know (my Lord)
King. Is not his Brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?
Glo. No (my good Lord) he is in preſence heere.
Clar. What would my Lord, and Father?
King. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence,
How chance thou art not with the Prince, thy Brother?
He loves thee, and thou do'ſt neglect him (Thomas.)
Thou haſt a better place in his Affection,
Then all thy Brothers: cherriſh it (my Boy)
And Noble Offices thou may'ſt effect
Of Mediation (after I am dead)
Betweene his Greatneſſe, and thy other Brethren.
Therefore omit him not: blunt not his Love,
Nor looſe the good advantage of his Grace,
By ſeeming cold, or careleſſe of his will.
For he is gracious, if he be obſerv'd:
He hath a Teare for Pitty, and a Hand
Open (as Day) for melting Charity:
Yet notwithſtanding, being incens'd, he's Flint,
As humorous as Winter, and as ſudden,
As Flawes congealed in the Spring of day.
His temper therefore muſt be well obſerv'd:
Chide him for faults, and doe it reverently,
When you perceive his blood enclin'd to mirth:
But being moody, give him Line, and ſcope,
Till that his paſſions (like a Whale on ground)
Confound themſelves with working. Learne this Thomas,
And thou ſhalt prove a ſhelter to thy friends,
A Hoope of gold, to bind thy Brothers in:
That the vnited Veſſell of their Blood
(Mingled with Venome of Suggeſtion,
As force, perforce, the Age will powre it in)
Shall never leake, though it doe worke as ſtong
As Aconitum, or raſh Gun-powder.
Clar. I ſhall obſerve him with all care, and love.
King. Why art thou not at Windſor with him (Thomas?)
Clar. Hee is not there to day: hee dines in London.
King. And how accompanyed? Canſt thou tell that?
Clar. With Pointz, and other his continuall followers.
Kin. Moſt ſubject is the fatteſt Soyle to Weedes:
And he (the Noble Image of my Youth)
Is over-ſpread with them: therefore my griefe
Stretches it ſelfe beyond the howre of death.
The blood weepes from my heart, when I doe ſhape
(In formes imaginary) th'unguided Dayes,
And rotten Times, that you ſhall looke upon,
When I am ſleeping with my Anceſtors.
For when his head-ſtrong Riot hath no Curbe,
When Rage and hot-blood are his Counſailors,
When Meanes and laviſh Manners meete together,
Oh, with what Wings ſhall his Affections flye
Towards fronting Perill, and oppos'd Decay?
War. My gracious Lord, you looke beyond him quite:
The Prince but ſtudyes his Companions,
Like a ſtrange Tongue: wherein, to gaine the Language
'Tis needfull, that the moſt immodeſt word
Be look'd upon, and learn'd: which once attayn'd,
Your Highneſſe knowes, comes to no farther uſe,
But to be knowne, and hated. So, like groſſe termes,
The Prince will, in the perfectneſſe of time,
Caſt off his followers: and their memory
Shall as a Patterne, or a Meaſure live,
By which his Grace muſt mete the lives of others,
Turning paſt-evills to advantages.
Kin. 'Tis ſeldome, when the Bee doth leave her Combe
In the dead Carrion.

Enter Weſtmerland.

Who's heere? Weſtmerland?
Weſt. Health to my Soveraigne, and new happineſſe
Added to that, that I am to deliver.
Prince Iohn, your Sonne, doth kiſſe your Graces Hand:
Mowbray, the Biſhop, Scroope, Haſtings, and all,
Are brought to the Correction of your Law.
There is not now a Rebels Sword unſheath'd,
But Peace puts forth her Olive every where:
The manner how this Action hath beene borne,
Here (at more leyſure) may your Highneſſe reade,
With every courſe, in his particular.
King. O Weſtmerland, thou art a Summer Bird,
Which ever in the haunch of Winter ſings
The lifting up of day.

Enter Harcourt.

Looke, heere's more newes.
Har. From Enemies, Heaven keepe your Majeſty:
And when they ſtand againſt you, may they fall,
As thoſe that I am come to tell you of.
The Earle Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolfe,
With a great Power of Engliſh, and of Scots,
Are by the Sherife of Yorkeſhire overthrowne:
The manner, and true order of the fight,
This Packet (pleaſe it you) containes at large.
King. And wherefore ſhould theſe good newes
Make me ſicke?
Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her faire words ſtill in fouleſt Letters?
She either gives a Stomacke, and no food,
(Such are the poore, in health) or elſe a Feaſt,
And takes away the Stomacke (ſuch are the Rich,
That have aboundance, and enjoy it not.)
I ſhould rejoyce now, at this happy newes,
And now my Sight fayles, and my braine is giddy.
O me, come neere me, now I am much ill.
Glo. Comfort your Majeſty.
Cla. Oh, my Royall Father.
Weſt. My ſoveraigne Lord, cheare up your ſelfe, looke up.
War. Be patient (Princes) you doe know, theſe Fits
Are with his Highneſſe very ordinary.
Stand from him, give him ayre:
He'le ſtraight be well.
Clar. No, no, he cannot long hold out: theſe pangs,
Th'inceſſant care, and labour of his mind,
Hath wrought the Mure, that ſhould confine it in,
So thinne, that life lookes through, and will breake out.
Glo. The people feare me: for they doe obſerve
Vnfather'd Heires, and loathly Births of Nature:
The ſeaſons change their manners, as the yeere
Had found ſome moneths aſleepe, and leap'd them over.
Cla. The River hath thrice flow'd, no ebbe betweene:
And the old folke (Times doting Chronicles)
Say it did ſo, a little time before
That our great Grand-ſire Edward ſick'd, and dy'de.

War. Speake lower (Princes) for the King recovers.
Glo. This Apoplexy will (certaine) be his end.
King. I pray you take me up, and beare me hence
Into ſome other Chamber: ſoftly 'pray.
Let there be no noyſe made (my gentle friends)
Vnleſſe ſome dull and favourable hand
Will whiſper Muſicke to my weary Spirit.
War. Call for the Muſicke in the other Roome.
King. Set me the Crowne upon my Pillow here.
Clar. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.
War. Leſſe noyſe, leſſe noyſe.

Enter Prince Henry.

Pri. Hen. Who ſaw the Duke of Clarence?
Cla. I am here (Brother) full of heavineſſe.
Pri. Hen. How now? Raine within doores, and none abroad? How doth the King?
Glo. Exceeding ill.
Pri. Hen. Heard he the good newes yet?
Tell it him.
Glo. He alter'd much, upon the hearing it.
Pri. Hen. If he be ſicke with Ioy,
He'l recover without Phyſicke.
War. Not ſo much noyſe (my Lords)
Sweet Prince ſpeake low.
The King, your father, is diſpos'd to ſleepe.
Clar. Let us with-draw into the other Roome.
War. Wil't pleaſe your Grace to goe along with us?
Pri. Hen. No: I will ſit, and watch here, by the King.
Why doth the Crowne lye there, upon his Pillow,
Being ſo troubleſome a Bed-fellow?
O polliſh'd Perturbation! Golden Care!
That keep'ſt the Ports of ſlumber open wide,
To many a watchfull Night: ſleepe with it now,
Yet not ſo ſound, and halfe ſo deepely ſweet,
As he whoſe Brow (with homely Biggen bound)
Snores out the Watch of Night. O Majeſty!
When thou do'ſt pinch thy Bearer, thou do'ſt ſit
Like a rich Armor, worne in heat of day,
That ſcald'ſt with ſafety: by his Gates of breath,
There lyes a dowlney feather, which ſtirres not:
Did he ſuſpire, that light and weightleſſe dowlne
Perforce muſt move. My gracious Lord, my Father,
This ſleepe is ſound indeed: this is a ſleepe,
That from this Golden Rigoll hath divorc'd
So many Engliſh Kings. Thy due, from me,
Is Teares, and heavy Sorrowes of the Blood,
Which Nature, Love, and filiall tenderneſſe,
Shall (O deare father) pay thee plenteouſly.
My due, from thee, is this Imperiall Crowne,
Which (as immediate from thy place, and blood)
Derives it ſelfe to me. Loe, heere it ſits,
Which Heaven ſhall guard:
And put the worlds whole ſtrength into one gyant arme,
It ſhall not force this Lineall Honor from me.
This, from thee, will I to mine leave,
As 'tis left to me. Exit.

Enter Warwicke, Glouceſter, Clarence.

King. Warwicke, Glouceſter, Clarence.
Clar. Doth the King call?
War. What would your Majeſty? how fares your Grace?
King. Why did you leave me here alone (my Lords?)
Cla. We left the Prince (my Brother) here (my Liege)
Who undertooke to ſit and watch by you.
King. The Prince of Wales? where is he? let me ſee him.
War. This doore is open, he is gone this way.
Glo. He came not through the Chamber where wee ſtayd.
King. Where is the Crowne? who tooke it from my Pillow?
War. When we with-drew (my Liege) we left it heere.
King. The Prince hath ta'ne it hence:
Goe ſeeke him out.
Is he ſo haſty, that he doth ſuppoſe
My ſleepe, my death? Find him (my Lord of Warwick)
Chide him hither: this part of his conjoynes
With my diſeaſe, and helpes to end me.
See Sonnes, what things you are:
How quickely Nature falls into revolt,
When Gold becomes her Object?
For this, the fooliſh over-carefull fathers
Have broke their ſleepes with thoughts,
Their braines with care, their bones with induſtry.
For this, they have ingroſſed and pyl'd up
The canker'd heapes of ſtrange-atchieved Gold:
For this, they have beene thoughtfull, to inveſt
Their Sonnes with Arts, and Martiall Exerciſes:
When, like the Bee, culling from every flower
The vertuous Sweets, our Thighes packt with Wax,
Our Mouthes with Honey, we bring it to the Hive;
And like the Bees, are murthered for our paines.
This bitter taſte yeelds his engroſſements,
To the ending father.

Enter Warwicke.

Now where is he, that will not ſtay ſo long,
Till his friend ſickeneſſe hath determin'd me?
War. My Lord, I found the Prince in the next Roome,
Waſhing with kindly Teares his gentle Cheekes,
With ſuch a deepe demeanure, in great ſorrow,
That Tyranny, which never quafft but blood,
Would (by beholding him) have waſh'd his Knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is comming hither.
King. But wherefore did he take away the Crowne?

Enter Prince Henry.

Loe, where he comes. Come hither to me (Harry.)
Depart the Chamber, leave us heere alone. Exit.
Pri. Hen. I never thought to heare you ſpeake againe.
King. Thy wiſh was father (Harry) to that thought:
I ſtay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Do'ſt thou ſo hunger for my empty Chayre,
That thou wilt needes inveſt thee with mine Honors,
Before thy howre be ripe? O fooliſh youth!
Thou ſeek'ſt the Greatneſſe, that will over-whelme the Stay but a little: for my Cloud of Dignity
Is held from falling, with ſo weake a winde,
That it will quickly drop: my Day is dimme.
Thou haſt ſtolne that, which after ſome few howres
Were thine, without offence: and at my death
Thou haſt ſeal'd up my expectation.
Thy life did manifeſt, thou lov'dſt me not,
And thou wilt have me dye aſſur'd of it.
Thou hid'ſt a thouſand Daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou haſt whetted on thy ſtony heart,
To ſtabbe at halfe an howre of my life.
What? canſt thou not forbeare me halfe an howre?

Then get thee gone, and digge my grave thy ſelfe,
And bid the merry Bels ring to thy eare
That thou art Crowned, not that I am dead,
Let all the Teares, that ſhould bedew my Hearſe
Be drops of Balme, to ſanctifie thy head:
Onely compound me with forgotten duſt;
Give that, which gave thee life, unto the Wormes:
Plucke downe my Officers, breake my Decrees;
For now a time is come, to mocke at forme.
Henry the fift is Crown'd: Vp Vanity,
Downe Royall State: All you ſage Counſailors, hence:
And to the Engliſh Court, aſſemble now
From ev'ry Region, Apes of Idleneſſe.
Now neighbor-Confines, purge you of your Scum:
Have you a Ruffian that will ſweare? drinke? dance?
Revell the night? Rob? Murder? and commit
The oldeſt ſinnes, the neweſt kind of wayes?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more:
England, ſhall double gill'd, his trebble guilt.
England, ſhall give him Office, Honor, Might:
For the Fift Harry, from curb'd Licenſe pluckes
The muzzle of Reſtraint, and the wild Dogge
Shall fleſh his tooth in every Innocent.
O my poore Kingdome (ſicke, with civill blowes)
When that my Care could not with-hold thy Ryots,
What wilt thou doe, when Ryot is thy Care?
O, thou wilt be a Wilderneſſe againe,
Peopled with Wolves (thy old Inhabitants.

Prin. O pardon me (my Liege)
But for my Teares,
The moſt Impediments unto my Speech,
I had fore-ſtall'd this deere, and deepe Rebuke,
Ere you (with greefe) had ſpoke, and I had heard
The courſe of it ſo farre. There is your Crowne,
And he that weares the Crowne immortally,
Long guard it yours: If I affect it more,
Then as your Honour, and as your Renowne,
Let me no more from this Obedience riſe,
Which my moſt true, and inward duteous ſpirit
Teacheth this proſtrate, and exteriour bending.
Heaven witneſſe with me, when I heere came in,
And found no courſe of breath within your Majeſty,
How cold it ſtrooke my heart. If I doe faine,
O let me, in my preſent wildeneſſe, dye,
And never live, to ſhew th'incredulous World,
The Noble change that I have purpoſed.
Comming to looke on you, thinking you dead,
(And dead almoſt (my Liege) to thinke you were)
I ſpake unto the Crowne (as having ſenſe)
And thus upbraided it. The Care on thee depending,
Hath fed upon the body of my Father,
Therefore, thou beſt of Gold, art worſt of Gold.
Other, leſſe fine in Charract, is more precious,
Preſerving life, in Med'cine potable:
But thou, moſt Fine, moſt Honour'd, moſt Renown'd,
Haſt eate the Bearer up.
Thus (my Royall Liege)
Accuſing it, I put it on my Head,
To try with it (as with an Enemy,
That had before my face murdred my Father)
The Quarrell of a true inheritor,
But if it did infect my blood with Ioy,
Or ſwell my Thoughts, to any ſtraine of Pride,
If any Rebell, or vaine ſpirit of mine,
Did, with the leaſt Affection of a Welcome,
Give entertainment to the might of it,
Let heaven, for ever, keepe it from my head,
And make me, as the pooreſt Vaſſaile is,
That doth with awe, and terror kneele to it.

King. O my Sonne!
Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou might'ſt joyne the more, thy Fathers love,
Pleading ſo wiſely, in excuſe of it.
Come hither Harry, ſit thou by my bed,
And heare (I thinke, the very lateſt Counſell
That ever I ſhall breath: Heaven knowes, my Sonne)
By what by-pathes, and indirect crook'd-wayes
I met this Crowne: and I my ſelfe know well
How troubleſome it ſate upon my head.
To thee, it ſhall deſcend with better Quiet,
Better Opinion, better Confirmation:
For all the ſoyle of the Atchievement goes
With me, into the Earth. It ſeem'd in me,
But as an Honor ſnatch'd with boyſt'rous hand,
And I had many living, to upbraid
My gaine of it, by their Aſſiſtances,
Which dayly grew to a Quarrell, and to Blood-ſhed,
Wounding ſuppoſed Peace.
All theſe bold Feares,
Thou ſeeſt (with perrill) I have anſwered:
For all my Reigne, hath beene but as a Scæne
Acting that argument. And now my death
Changes the Moode: For what in me, was purchas'd,
Falles upon thee, in a more Fayrer ſort.
So thou, the Garland wear'ſt ſucceſſiuely,
Yet, though thou ſtand'ſt more ſure, then I could doe,
Thou art not firme enough, ſince griefes are greene:
And all thy Friends, which thou muſt make thy friends
Have but their ſtings, and teeth, newly taken out,
By whoſe fell working, I was firſt advanc'd,
And by whoſe power, I well might lodge a Feare
To be againe diſplac'd. Which to avoyd,
I cut them off: and had a purpoſe now
To leade out many to the Holy Land;
Leaſt reſt, and lying ſtill, might make them looke
Too neere unto my State.
Therefore (my Harry)
Be it thy courſe to buſie giddy Mindes
With Forraigne Quarrels: that Action hence borne out,
May waſte the memory of the former dayes.
More would I, but my Lungs are waſted ſo,
That ſtrength of Speech is utterly deni'd me.
How I came by the Crowne, O heaven forgive:
And grant it may, with thee, in true peace live.

Prin. My gracious Liege:
You wonne it, wore it, kept it, gave it me,
Then plaine and right muſt my poſſeſſion be;
Which I, with more, then with a Common paine,
'Gainſt all the World, will rightfully maintaine.

Enter Lord Iohn of Lancaſter, and Warwicke.

King. Looke, looke,
Heere comes my Iohn of Lancaſter:

Iohn. Health, Peace, and Happineſſe,
To my Royall Father:

King. Thou bring'ſt me happineſſe,
(Sonne Iohn,)
But health (alacke) with youthfull wings is flowne
From this bare, wither'd Trunke. Vpon thy ſight
My worldly buſineſſe makes a period.

Where is my Lord of Warwicke ?
Prin. My Lord of Warwicke.
King. Doth any name particular, belong
Vnto the Lodging, where I firſt did ſwoon'd ?
War. 'Tis call'd Ieruſalem, my Noble Lord.
Kin. Laud be to heaven :
Even there my life muſt end.
It hath beene propheſi'de to me many yeares,
I ſhould not dye, but in Ieruſalem :
Which (vainely) I ſuppos'd the Holy-Land.
But beare me to that Chamber, there Ile lye :
In that Ieruſalem, ſhall Harry dye. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Shallow, Silence, Falſtaffe, Bardolfe, Page, and Davy.

Shal. By Cocke and Pye, you ſhall not away to night. What Davy, I ſay.

Fal. You muſt excuſe me, Maſter Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuſe you : you ſhall not be excuſed. Excuſes ſhall not be admitted : there is no excuſe ſhall ſerve : you ſhall not be excus'd.
Why Davy.

Davy. Heere ſir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, let me ſee (Davy) let me ſee: William Cooke, bid him come hither. Sir Iohn, you ſhall not be excus'd.

Davy. Marry ſir, thus : thoſe Precepts cannot bee ſerv'd : and againe ſir, ſhall we ſowe the head-land with Wheate ?

Shal. With red Wheate Davy. But for William Cooke: are there no yong Pigeons ?

Davy. Yee Sir.
Heere is now the Smithes note, for Shooing,
And Plough-Irons.

Shal. Let it be caſt, and payde : Sir Iohn, you ſhall not be excuſ'd.

Davy. Sir, a new linke to the Bucket muſt needes be had : And Sir, doe you meane to ſtoppe any of Williams Wages, about the Sacke he loſt the other day, at Hinckley Fayre ?

Shal. He ſhall anſwer it :
Some Pigeons Davy, a couple of ſhort-legg'd Hennes : a joynt of Mutton, and any pretty little tine Kickſhawes, tell William Cooke.

Davy. Doth the man of Warre, ſtay all night ſir ?

Shal. Yes Davy :
I will uſe him well. A friend i'th Court, is better then a penny in purſe. Vſe his men well Davy, for they are arrant Knaves, and will backe-bite.

Davy. No worſe then they are bitten, ſir : For they have marvellous fowle linnen.

Shal. Well conceited Davy : about thy Buſineſſe, Davy.

Davy. I beſeech you ſir,
To countenance William Viſor of Woncot, againſt Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many Complaints (Davy,) againſt that Viſor, that Viſor is an arrant Knave, on my knowledge.

Davy. I graunt your Worſhip, that he is a knave Sir : But yet heaven forbid Sir, but a Knave ſhould have ſome Countenance, at his Friends requeſt. An honeſt man ſir, is able to ſpeake for himſelfe, when a Knave is not. I have ſerv'd your Worſhip truely ſir, theſe eight yeeres : and if I cannot once or twice in a Quarter beare out a knave, againſt an honeſt man, I have but a very little credite with your Worſhip. The Knave is mine honeſt Friend Sir, therefore I beſeech your Worſhip, let him be Countenanc'd.

Shal. Goe too,
I ſay he ſhall have no wrong : Looke about Davy.
Where are you Sir Iohn? Come, off with your Boots.
Give me your hand Maſter Bardolfe.

Bard. I am glad to ſee your Worſhip.

Shal. I thanke thee, with all my heart, kind Maſter Bardolfe : and welcome my tall Fellow :
Come Sir Iohn.

Falſt. Ile follow you, good Maſter Robert Shallow. Bardolfe, looke to our Horſes. If I were ſaw'de into Quantities, I ſhould make foure dozen of ſuch bearded Hermites ſtaves, as Maſter Shallow. It is a wonderfull thing to ſee the ſemblable Coherence of his mens ſpirits, and his : They, by obſerving of him, doe beare themſelves like fooliſh Iuſtices : He, by converſing with them, is turn'd into a Iuſtice-like Servingman. Their ſpirits are ſo married in Conjunction, with the participation of Society, that they flocke together in conſent, like ſo many-Wilde-Geeſe. If I had a ſuite to Maſter Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being neere their Maſter. If to his Men, I would curry with Maſter Shallow, that no man could better command his Servants. It is certaine, that either wiſe bearing, or ignorant Carriage is caught, as men take diſeaſes, one of another : therefore, let men take heede of their Company. I will deviſe matter enough out of this Shallow, to keepe Prince Harry in continuall Laughter, the wearing out of ſix Faſhions (which is foure Tearmes) or two Actions, and he ſhall laugh with Intervallums. O it is much that a Lye (with a ſlight Oath) and a jeſt (with a ſad brow) will doe, with a Fellow, that never had the Ache in his ſhoulders. O you ſhall ſee him laugh, till his Face be like a wet Cloake, ill laid up.

Shal. Sir Iohn.

Falſt. I come Maſter Shallow, I come Maſter Shallow. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter the Earle of Warwicke, and the Lord Chiefe Iuſtice.

War. How now, my Lord Chiefe Iuſtice, whither away ?

Chei. Iuſt. How doth the King ?

War. Exceeding well : his Cares
Are now, all ended.

Chei. Iuſt. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of Nature,
And to our purpoſes, he lives no more.

Chei. Iuſt. I would his Majeſty had call'd me with him,
The ſervice, that I truely did his life,
Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed I thinke the yong King loves you not.
Chei. Iuſt. I know he doth not, and doe arme my ſelfe
To welcome the condition of the Time,
Which cannot looke more hideouſly upon me,
Then I have drawne it in my fantaſie.

Enter Iohn of Lancaſter, Glouceſter, and Clarence.

War. Heere come the heavy iſſue of dead Harry:
O, that the living Harry had the temper
Of him, the worſt of theſe three Gentlemen:
How many Nobles then, ſhould hold their places,
That muſt ſtrike ſaile, to Spirits of vilde ſort?
Chei. Iuſt. Alas, I feare, all will be over-turn'd.
Iohn. Good morrow Coſin Warwicke, good morrow.
Glou. Clar. Good morrow, Coſin.
Iohn. We meet, like men, that had forgot to ſpeake.
War. We doe remember: but our Argument
Is all too heavy, to admit much talke.
Iohn. Well: Peace be with him, that hath made us (heavy.
Chei. Iuſt. Peace be with us, leaſt we be heavier.
Glou. O, good my Lord, you have loſt a friend indeed:
And I dare ſweare, you borrow not that face
Of ſeeming ſorrow, it is ſure your owne.
Iohn. Though no man be aſſur'd what grace to find,
You ſtand in coldeſt expectation.
I am the ſorrier, would 'twere otherwiſe.
Cla. Well, you muſt now ſpeake Sir Iohn Falſtaffe faire,
Which ſwimmes againſt your ſtreame of Quality.
Chei. Iuſt. Sweet Princes: what I did, I did in Honor,
Led by th'Imperiall Conduct of my Soule,
And never ſhall you ſee, that I will begge
A ragged, and fore-ſtall'd Remiſſion.
If Troth, and upright Innocency faile me,
Ile to the King (my Maſter) that is dead,
And tell him, who hath ſent me after him.
War. Heere comes the Prince.

Enter Prince Henry.

Ch. Iuſt. Good morrow: and heaven ſave your Majeſty
Prin. This new, and gorgeous Garment, Majeſty,
Sits not ſo eaſie on me, as you thinke.
Brothers, you mixe your Sadneſſe with ſome Feare:
This is the Engliſh, not the Turkiſh Court:
Not Amurah, an Amurah ſucceeds,
But Harry, Harry: Yet be ſad (good Brothers)
For (to ſpeake truth) it very well becomes you:
Sorrow, ſo Royally in you appeares,
That I will deepely put the faſhion on,
And weare it in my heart. Why then be ſad,
But entertaine no more of it (good brothers)
Then a joynt burthen, laid upon us all.
For me, by Heaven (I bid you be aſſur'd)
Ile be your Father, and your Brother too:
Let me but beare your Love, Ile beare your Cares;
But weepe that Harry's dead, and ſo will I.
But Harry lives, that ſhall convert thoſe Teares
By number, into houres of Happineſſe.
Iohn, &c. We hope no other from your Majeſty.
Prin. You all looke ſtrangely on me: and you moſt.
You are (I thinke aſſur'd, I love you not.
Chei. Iuſt. I am aſſur'd (if I be meaſur'd rightly)
Your Majeſty hath no juſt cauſe to hate me.
Pri. No? How might a Prince of my great hopes forget
So great Indignities you laid upon me?
What? Rate? Rebuke? and roughly ſend to Priſon
Th'immediate Heire of England? Was this eaſie?
May this be waſh'd in Lethe, and forgotten?
Chei. Iuſt. I then did uſe the Perſon of your Father;
The Image of his power, lay then in me,
And in th'adminiſtration of his Law,
Whiles I was buſie for the Commonwealth,
Your Highneſſe pleaſed to forget my place,
The Majeſty, and power of Law, and Iuſtice,
The Image of the King, whom I preſented,
And ſtrooke me in my very Seate of Iudgement:
Whereon (as an Offender to your Father)
I gave bold way to my Authority,
And did commit you. If the deed were ill.
Be you contented, wearing now the Garland,
To have a Sonne, ſet your Decrees at naught?
To plucke downe Iuſtice from your awefull Bench?
To trip the courſe of Law, and blunt the Sword
That guards the peace, and ſafety of your Perſon?
Nay more, to ſpurne at your moſt Royall Image,
And mocke your workings, in a Second body?
Queſtion your Royall Thoughts, make the caſe yours:
Be now the Father, and propoſe a Sonne:
Heare your owne dignity ſo much prophan'd,
See your moſt dreadfull Lawes, ſo looſely ſlighted;
Behold your ſelfe, ſo by a ſonne diſdained:
And then imagine me, taking you part,
And in your power, ſoft ſilencing your Sonne:
After this cold conſiderance, ſentence me;
And, as you are a King, ſpeake in your State,
What I have done, that miſbecame my place,
My perſon, or my Lieges Soveraignty.
Prin. You are right Iuſtice, and you weigh this well:
Therefore ſtill beare the Ballance, and the Sword:
And I doe wiſh your Honors may encreaſe,
Till you doe live, to ſee a Sonne of mine
Offend you, and obey you, as I did.
So ſhall I live, to ſpeake my Fathers words:
Happy am I, that have a man ſo bold,
That dares doe Iuſtice, on my proper ſonne;
And no leſſe happy, having ſuch a Sonne,
That would deliver up his Greatneſſe ſo,
Into the hands of Iuſtice. You did commit me:
For which, I doe commit into your hand,
Th'unſtained Sword that you have us'd to beare:
With this Remembrance; That you uſe the ſame
With the like bold, juſt, and impartiall ſpirit
As you have done 'gainſt me. There is my hand,
You ſhall be as a Father, to my Youth:
My voyce ſhall ſound, as you doe prompt mine eare,
And I will ſtoope, and humble my intents,
To your well-practis'd, wiſe Directions.
And Princes all, beleeve me, I beſeech you:
My father is gone wilde into his Grave,
(For in his Tombe, lye my Affections)
And with his Spirits, ſadly I ſurvive,
To mocke the expectation of the World:
To fruſtrate Propheſies, and to race out
Rotten opinion, who hath writ me downe
After my ſeeming. The Tide of Blood in me,
Hath prowdly flow'd in Vanity, till now.
Now doth it turne, and ebbe backe to the Sea,
Where it ſhall mingle with the ſtate of floods,
And flow henceforth in formall Majeſty.
Now call we our High Court of Parliament,
And let us chooſe ſuch Limbes of Noble Counſaile,

That the great Body of our State may goe
In equall ranke, with the beſt govern'd Nation,
That warre, or Peace, or both at once may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us,
In which you (father) ſhall have formoſt hand,
Our Coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remembred) all our State,
And heaven (conſigning to my good intents)
No Prince, nor Peere, ſhall have juſt cauſe to ſay,
Heaven ſhorten Harries happy life, one day. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Falſtaffe, Shallow, Silence, Bardolfe, Page, and Piſtoll.

Shal. Nay; you ſhall ſee mine Orchard where, in an Arbor we will eate a laſt yeres Pippin of my owne graffing, with a diſh of Carrawayes, and ſo forth: Come coſin Silence, and then to bed.

Falſt. You have heere a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren: Beggers all, beggers all Sir Iohn: Marry, good ayre. Spread Davy, ſpread Davy: Well ſaid Davy.

Falſt. This Davy ſerves you for good uſes: he is your Servingman, and your Husband.

Shal. A good Varlet, a good Varlet, a very good. Varlet, Sir Iohn: I have drunke too much Sacke at Supper. A good Varlet. Now ſit downe, now ſit downe: Come Coſin.

Sil. A ſirra (quoth-a) we ſhall doe nothing but eate, and make good cheere, and praiſe heaven for the merry yeere: when fleſh is cheape, and Females deere, and luſty Lads rome heere, and there: ſo merrily, and ever among ſo merrily.

Falſt. There's a merry heart, good Maſter Silence. Ile give you health for that anon.

Shal. Good Maſter Bardolfe: ſome wine, Davy.

Dav. Sweet ſir, ſit: Ile be with you anon: moſt ſweet ſir, ſit. Maſter Page, good Maſter Page, ſit: Proface. What you want in meate, we'll have in drinke: but you beare, the heart's all.

Shal. Be merry Maſter Bardolfe, and my little Souldior there, be merry.

Sile. Be merry, be merry, my wife ha's all.
For women are Shrewes, both ſhort: and tall:
'Tis merry in Hall, when Beards wagge all;
And welcome merry Shrovetide. Be merry, be merry.

Falſt. I did not thinke Maſter Silence had beene a man of this Mettle.

Sil. Who I? I have beene merry twice and once, ere now.

Davy, There is a diſh of Lether-coats for you.

Shal. Davy.

Dav. Your Worſhip: Ile be with you ſtraight. A cup of Wine, ſir?

Sil. A Cup of Wine, that's briske and fine, and drinke unto the Leman mine: and a merry heart lives long-a.

Falſt. Well ſaid, Maſter Silence.

Sile. If we ſhall be merry, now comes in the ſweet of the night.

Falſt. Health, and long life to you, Maſter Silence.

Sile. Fill the Cup, and let it come. Ile pledge you a mile to the bottome.

Shal. Honeſt Bardolfe, welcome: If thou want'ſt any thing, and wilt not call, beſhrew thy heart. Welcome my little tyne theefe, and welcome indeed too: Ile drinke to Maſter Bardolfe, and to all the Cavileroes about London.

Davy. I hope to ſee London, once ere I dye.

Bard. If I might ſee you there, Davy.

Shal. You'll cracke a quart together? Ha, will you not Maſter Bardolfe?

Bar. Yes Sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. I thanke thee: the knave will ſticke by thee, I can aſſure thee that. He will not out, he is true bred.

Bard. And Ile ſticke by him, ſir.

Shal. Why there ſpoke a King: lack nothing, be merry. Looke, who's at doore there, ho: who knockes?

Falſt. Why now you have done me right.

Sil. Doe me right, and dub me Knight, Samingo. Is't not ſo?

Fal. 'Tis ſo.

Sil. Is't? Why then ſay an old man can doe ſomewhat.

Dav. If it pleaſe your Worſhip, there's one Piſtoll come from the Court with newes.

Falſt. From the Court? Let him come in.

Enter Piſtoll.

How now Piſtoll?

Piſt. Sir Iohn, ſave you ſir.

Falſt. What winde blew you hither, Piſtoll?

Piſt. Not the ill winde which blowes none to good, ſweet Knight: Thou art now one of the greateſt men in the Realme.

Sil. Indeed, I thinke he be, but Goodman Puffe of Barſon.

Piſt. Puffe? puffe in thy teeth; moſt recreant Coward baſe. Sir Iohn, I am thy Piſtoll, and thy friend: helter skelter have I rode to thee, and tydings doe I bring, and lucky joyes, and golden Times, and happy Newes of price.

Fal. I prethee now deliver them, like a man of this World.

Piſt. A footra for the World, and Worlings baſe,
I ſpeake of Affrica, and Golden Ioyes.

Fal. O baſe Aſſyrian Knight, what is thy newes?
Let King Covitha know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin-hood, Scarlet, and Iohn.

Piſt. Shall dunghill Curres confront the Hellicons?
And ſhall good newes be baffel'd?
Then Piſtoll lay thy head in Furies lappe.

Shal. Honeſt Gentleman,
I know not your breeding.

Piſt. Why then Lament therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, Sir.
If ſir, you come with newes from the Court, I take it there is but two wayes, either to utter them, or to conceale them. I am Sir, under the King, in ſome Authority.

Piſt. Vnder which King?
Bezonian, ſpeake, or dye.

Shal. Vnder King Harry.

Piſt. Harry the Fourth? or Fift?

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Piſt. A footra for thine Office.
Sir Iohn, thy tender Lamb-kinne, now is King.
Harry the Fift's the man, I ſpeake the truth.
When Piſtoll lyes, doe this, and figge-me, like
The bragging Spaniard.

Fal. What, is the old King dead?

Piſt As naile in doore.
The things I ſpeake, are juſt

Fal. Away Bardolph, Saddle my Horſe,
Maſter Robert Shallow, chooſe what Office thou wilt
In the Land, 'tis thine. Piſtol, I will double charge thee
With Dignities.

Bard. O joyfull day:
I would not take a Knighthood for my Fortune.

Piſt. What? I do bring good newes.

Fal. Carrie Maſter Silence to bed: Maſter Shallow, my Lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am Fortunes Steward. Get on thy Bootes, wee'l ride all night. Oh ſweet Piſtoll: Away Bardolfe: Come Piſtoll, utter more to mee: and withall deviſe ſomething to doe thy ſelfe good. Boote, boote Maſter Shallow, I know the young King is ſicke for mee. Let us take any mans Horſſes: The Lawes of England are at my command'ment. Happie are they, which have beene my Friends: and woe unto my Lord Chiefe Iuſtice.

Piſt. Let Vultures vil'de ſeize on his Lungs alſo:
Where is the life that late I led, ſay they?
Why heere it is, welcome thoſe pleaſant dayes. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Hoſteſſe Quickly, Dol Teare-ſheete, and Beadles.

Hoſteſſe. No, thou arrant knave: I would I might dye, that I might have thee hang'd: Thou haſt drawne my ſhoulder out of joynt.

Off. The Conſtables have deliver'd her over to mee: and ſhee ſhall have Whipping cheere enough, I warrant her. There hath beene a man or two (lately) kill'd about her.

Dol. Nut-hooke, nut-hooke, you Lye: Come on, Ile tell thee what, thou damn'd Tripe-viſag'd Raſcall, if the Childe I now go with, do miſcarrie, thou had'ſt better thou had'ſt ſtrooke thy Mother, thou Paper-faç'd Villaine.

Hoſt. O that Sir Iohn were come, hee would make this a bloody day to ſome body. But I would the Fruite of her Wombe might miſcarry.

Officer. If it doe, you ſhall have a dozen of Cuſhions againe, you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both go with me: for the man is dead, that you and Piſtoll beate among you.

Dol. Ile tell thee what, thou thin man in a Cenſor; I will have you as ſoundly ſwindg'd for this, you blew-Bottel'd Rogue: you filthy famliſh'd Correctioner, if you be not ſwing'd Ile forſweare halfe Kirtles.

Off. Come, come, you ſhee-Knight-arrant, come.

Hoſt. O, that right ſhould thus o're come might. Well of ſufferance, comes eaſe.

Dol. Come you Rogue, come:
Bring me to a Iuſtice.

Hoſt. Yes, come you ſtarv'd Blood-hound.

Dol. Goodman death, goodman Bones.

Hoſt. Thou Anatomy, thou.

Dol. Come you thinne Thing:
Come you Raſcall.

Off. Very well. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter two Groomes.

1.Groo. More Ruſhes, more Ruſhes.

2.Groo. The Trumpets have ſounded twice.

1.Groo. It will be two of the Clocke, ere they come from the Coronation. Exit Groo.

Enter Falſtaffe, Shallow, Piſtoll, Bardolfe, and Page.

Falſtaffe. Stand heere by me, M. Robert Shallow, I will make the King do you Grace. I will leere upon him, as he comes by: and do but marke the countenance that he will give me.

Piſtol. Bleſſe thy Lungs, good Knight.

Falſt. Come heere Piſtol, ſtand behind me. O if I had had time to have made new Liveries, I would have beſtowed the thouſand pound I borrrwed of you. But it is no matter, this poore ſhew doth better: this doth inferre the zeale I had to ſee him.

Shal. It doth ſo.

Falſt. It ſhewes my earneſtneſſe in affection;

Piſt. It doth ſo.

Fal. My devotion.

Piſt. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night,
And not to deliberate, not to remember,
Not to have patience to ſhift me.

Shal. It is moſt certaine,

Fal. But to ſtand ſtained with Travaile, and ſweating with deſire to ſee him, thinking of nothing elſe, putting all affayres in oblivion, as if there were nothing elſe to be done, but to ſee him.

Piſt. 'Tis ſemper idem: for abſque hoc nihil eſt. 'Tis all in every part.

Shal. 'Tis ſo indeed.

Piſt. My Knight, I will enflame thy Noble Liver, and make thee rage. Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts is in baſe Durance, and contagious priſon: Hall'd thither by moſt Mechanicall and durty hand. Rowze uppe Revenge from Ebon den, with fell Alecto's Snake, for Dol is in. Piſtol, ſpeakes nought but troth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

Piſtol. There roard the Sea: and Trumpet Clangour ſounds.

The Trumpets ſound. Enter King Henrie the Fift, Brothers, Lord Chiefe Iuſtice.

Falſt. Save thy Grace, King Hall, my Royall Hall.

Piſt. The heavens thee guard, and keepe, moſt royall Impe of Fame.

Fal. 'Save thee my ſweet Boy.

King. My Lord Chiefe juſtice, ſpeake to that vaine man.

Ch.Iuſt. Have you your wits?
Know you what 'tis you ſpeake?

Falſt. My King, my Love; I ſpeake to thee, my heart.

King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy Prayers:
How ill white haires become a Foole, and Ieſter?

I have long dream'd of ſuch a kinde of man,
So ſurfeit-ſwell'd, ſo old, and ſo prophane:
But being awake, I do deſpiſe my dreame.
Make leſſe thy body (hence) and more thy Grace,
Leave gourmandizing; Know the Grave doth gape
For thee, thrice wider then for other men.
Reply not to me, with a Foole-borne Ieſt,
Preſume not, that I am the thing I was,
For heaven doth know (ſo ſhall the world perceive)
That I have turn'd away my former Selfe,
So will I thoſe that kept me Companie.
When thou doſt heare I am, as I have bin,
Approach me, and thou ſhalt be as thou was't
The Tutor aud the Feeder of my Riots:
Till then, I baniſh thee, on paine of death,
As I have done the reſt of my Miſleaders,
Not to come neere our Perſon, by ten mile.
For competence of life, I will allow you,
That lacke of meanes enforce you not to evill:
And as we heare you do redeeme your ſelves,
We will according to your ſtrength, and qualities,
Give you advancement. Be it your charge (my Lord)
To ſee perform'd the tenure of our word. Set on.

Exit King.

Fal. Maſter Shallow, I owe you a thouſand pound.

Shal. I marry Sir Iohn, which I beſeech you to let mee have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be. M. Shallow, do not you grieve at this: I ſhall be ſent for in private to him: Looke you, he muſt ſeeme thus to the world: feare not your advancement: I will be the man yet, that ſhall make you great.

Shal. I cannot well perceive how, unleſſe you ſhould give me your Dublet, aud ſtuffe mee out with Straw. I beſeech you, goood ſir Iohn, let me have five hundred of my thouſand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word. This that you heard, was but a colour.

Shall. A colour I feare, that you will dye in, Sir Iohn.

Fal. Feare no colours, go with me to dinner:
Come Lieutenant Piſtol, come Bardolfe,
I ſhall be ſent for ſoone at night.

Ch. Iuſt. Go carry Sir Iohn Falſtaffe to the Fleete,
Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My Lord, my Lord.

Ch. Iuſt. I cannot now ſpeake, I will heare you ſoone:
Take them away.

Piſt. Si fortuna me tormento, ſpera me contento.

Exit. Manet Lancaſter and Chiefe Iuſtice.

Iohn. I like this faire proceeding of the Kings,
He hath intent his wonted Followers
Shall be very well provided for:
But are baniſht, till their converſations
Apeare more wiſe, and modeſt in the world.

Ch. Iuſt. And ſo they are.

Iohn. The King hath call'd hs Parliament,
My Lord.

Ch. Iuſt. He hath.

Iohn. I will lay oddes, that ere this yeere expire,
We beare our Civil Swords, and Native fire
As farre as France. I heard a Bird ſo ſing,
Whoſe Muſicke (to my thinking) pleas'd the King.
Come, will you hence? Exeunt.

FINIS.

EPILOGVE.

FIRST, my Feare: then, my Curteſie: laſt, my Speech. My Feare, is your Diſpleaſure: My Curteſie, my Dutie: And my ſpeech, to Begge your Pardons. If you looke for a good ſpeech now, you undoe me: For what I have to ſay, is of mine owne making: and what (indeed) I ſhould ſay, will (I doubt) proove mine owne marring. But to the Purpoſe, and ſo to the Venture. Bee it knowne to you (as it is very well) I was lately heere in the end of a diſpleaſing Play, to pray your Patience for it, and to promiſe you a Better: I did meane (indeede) to pay you with this, which if (like an ill Venture) it come unluckily home, I breake; and you, my gentle Creditors loſe. Heere I promiſt you I would bee, and heere I commit my Bodie to your Mercies: Bate me ſome, and I will pay you ſome, and (as moſt Debtors doe) promiſe you infinitely.

If my Tongue cannot entreate you to acquit me: will you command mee to uſe my Legges? And yet that were but light payment, to Dance out of your debt: But a good Conſcience, will make any poſsible ſaciſfaction, and ſo will I. All the Gentlewomen heere, have forgotten me, if the Gentlewomen will not; then the Gentlemen doe not agree with the Gentlewomen, which was never ſeene before, in ſuch an Aſſembly.

One word more, I beſeech you: if you be not too much cloid with Fat Meate, our humble Author will continue the ſtory (with Sir Iohn in it) and make you merry with faire Katherine of France: where (for any thing I know) Falſtaffe ſhall dye of a ſweat, unleſſe already he bee kill'd with your hard Opinions: For Old-Caſtle dyed a martyr, and this is not the man. My Tongue is wearie, when my Legs are too, I will bid you good night; and ſo kneele downe before you: (But indeed) to pray for the Queene.

Epilogue.

The Life of King Henry the Fift.

Enter Prologue.

O For a Muſe of Fire, that would aſcend
The brighteſt Heaven of Invention
A Kingdome for a Stage, Princes to Act,
And Monarches to behold the ſwelling Scene.
Then ſhould the Warlike Harry*, like himſelfe,*
Aſſume the Port of Mars*, and at his heeles*
(Leaſht in, like hounds) ſhould Famine, Sword, and Fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, Gentles all:
The flat unraiſed Spirits, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy Scaffold, to bring forth
So great an Object. Can this Cock-Pit hold
The vaſtie field of France? Or may we cramme
Within this Woodden O, the very Caskes
That did affright the Ayre at Agincourt?
O pardon: ſince a crooked Figure may
Atteſt in little place a Million,
And let us, Cyphers to this great Accompt,
On your imaginarie Forces worke.
Suppoſe within the Girdle of theſe Walls
Are now confin'd two mightie Monarches,
Whoſe high, up-reared, and abutting Fronts,
The perillous narrow Ocean parts aſunder.
Peece out our imperfections with your thoughts:
Into a thouſand parts devide one Man,
And make imaginarie Puiſſance.
Thinke when we talke of Horſes, that you ſee them
Printing their prowd Hoofes i'th' receiving Earth:
For 'tis your thoughts that now muſt decke our Kings,
Carry them here and there: Iumping o're Times;
Turning th' accompliſhment of many yeeres
Into an Houre-glaſſe: for the which ſupplie,
Admit me Chorus to this Hiſtorie;
Who Prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to heare, kindly to judge our Play. Exit.

Actus primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the two Biſhops, of Canterbury and Ely.

Biſh. Cant.

MY Lord, Ile tell you, that ſelfe Bill is urg'd,
Which in th'eleveth yere of yͤ laſt Kings reigh
Was like, and had indeed againſt us paſt,
But that the ſcambling and unquiet time
Did puſh it out of farther queſtion.

Biſh. Ely. But how my Lord ſhall we reſiſt it now?

Biſh. Cant. It muſt be thought on: if it paſſe againſt us,
We loſe the better part of our Poſſeſſion:
For all the Temporall lands, which men devout
By Teſtament have given to the Church,
Would they ſtrip from us; being valu'd thus,
As much as would maintaine, to the Kings honor,
Full fifteene Earles, and fifteene hundred Knights,
Six thouſand and two hundred good Eſquires:
And to reliefe of Lazars, and weake age
Of indigent faint Soules, paſt corporall toyle,
A hundred Almes-houſes, right well ſupply'd:
And to the Coffers of the King beſide,
A thouſand pounds by th'yeere. Thus runs the Bill.

Biſh. Ely. This would drinke deepe.

Biſh. Cant. 'Twould drinke the Cup and all.

Biſh. Ely. But what prevention?

Biſh. Cant. The King is full of grace, and faire regard.

Biſh. Ely. And a true lover of the holy Church.

Biſh. Cant. The courſes of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no ſooner left his Fathers body,
But that his wildneſſe mortify'd in him,
Seem'd to dye too: yea at that very moment,
Conſideration like an Angell came,
And whipt th' offending Adam out of him;
Leaving his body as a Paradiſe,
T'invelop and containe Celeſtiall Spirits.
Never was ſuch a ſodaine Scholler made:
Never came Reformation in a Flood,
With ſuch a heady currant ſcowring faults:
Nor never Hidra-headed Wilfulneſſe
So ſoone did loſe his Seat; and all at once;
As in this King.

Biſh. Ely. We are bleſſed in the Change.

Biſh. Cant. Heare him but reaſon in Divinity:
And all-admiring, with au inward wiſh
You would deſire the King were made a Prelate:
Heare him debate of Common-wealth Affaires;
You would ſay, it hath been all in all his ſtudy:
Liſt his diſcourſe of Warre; and you ſhal heare
A fearefull Battaile rendred you in Muſique.

Turne him to any Cauſe of Pollicy,
The Gordian Knot of it he will unlooſe,
Familiar as his Garter: that when he ſpeakes,
The Ayre, a Charter'd Libertine, is ſtill,
And the mute Wonder lurketh in mens eares,
To ſteale his ſweet and honyed Sentences:
So that the Art and Practique part of Life,
Muſt be the Miſtreſſe to this Theorique.
Which is a wonder how his Grace ſhould gleane it,
Since his addiction was to Courſes vaine,
His companies unletter'd, rude, and ſhallow,
His Houres fill'd up with Ryots, Banquets, Sports;
And never noted in him any ſtudie,
Any retyrement, any ſequeſtration,
From open Haunts and Popularitie.

B. Ely. The Strawberry growes underneath the Nettle,
And holeſome Berryes thrive and ripen beſt,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baſer qualitie:
And ſo the Prince obſcur'd his Contemplation
Vnder the Veyle of Wildneſſe, which (no doubt)
Grew like the Summer Graſſe, faſteſt by Night,
Vnſeene, yet creſſiue in his facultie.

B. Cant. It muſt be ſo; for Miracles are ceaſt:
And therefore we muſt needes admit the meanes,
How things are perfected.

B. Ely. But my good Lord:
How now for mittigation of this Bill,
Vrg'd by the Commons? doth his Majeſtie
Incline to it, or no?

B. Cant. He ſeemes indifferent:
Or rather ſwaying more upon our part,
Then cheriſhing th'exhibiters againſt us:
For I have made an offer to his Majeſty,
Vpon our Spirituall Convocation,
And in regard of Cauſes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his Grace at large,
As touching France, to give a greater Summe,
Then ever at one time the Clergie yet
Did to his Predeceſſors part withall.

B. Ely. How did this offer ſeeme receiv'd, my Lord?

B. Cant. With good acceptance of his Majeſtie:
Save that there was not time enough to heare,
As I perceiv'd his Grace would faine have done,
The ſeveralls and unhidden paſſages
Of his true Titles to ſome certaine Dukedomes,
And generally, to the Crowne and ſeat of France,
Deriv'd from Edward, his great Grandfather.

B. Ely. What was th'impediment that broke this off?

B. Cant. The French Embaſſador upon that inſtant
Crav'd audience; and the howre I thinke is come,
To give him hearing: Is it foure a Clock?

B. Ely. It is.

B. Cant. Then goe we in, to know his Embaſſie:
Which I could with a ready gueſſe declare,
Before the Frenchman ſpeakes a word of it.

B. Ely. Ile wait upon you, and I long to heare it.

Exeunt.

Enter the King, Humfrey, Bedford, Clarence,
Warwicke, Weſtmerland, and Exeter.

King. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?

Exeter. Not here in preſence.

King. Send for him good Vnckle.

Weſtm. Shall we call in th' Ambaſſador, my Liege?

King. Not yet, my Couſin: we would be reſolu'd,
Before we heare him, of ſome things of weight,
That taske our thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter two Biſhops.

B. Cant. God and his Angels guard you ſacred Throne,
And make you long become it.

King. Sure we thanke you.
My learned Lord, we pray you to proceed,
And juſtly and religiouſly unfold,
Why the Law Salike, that they have in France,
Or ſhould or ſhould not barre us in our Clayme:
And God forbid, my deere and faithfull Lord,
That you ſhould faſhion, wreſt, or bow your reading,
Or nicely charge your underſtanding Soule,
With opening Titles miſcreate, whoſe right
Sutes not in native colours with the truth:
For God doth know, how many now in health,
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence ſhall incite us to.
Therefore take heed how you impawne our Perſon,
How you awake our ſleeping Sword of Warre;
We charge you in the name of God take heed:
For never two ſuch Kingdomes did contend,
Without much fall of blood, whoſe guitleſſe drops
Are every one, a Woe, a ſore Complaint,
'Gainſt him, whoſe wrong gives edge unto the Swords,
That makes ſuch waſte in briefe mortalitie.
Vnder this Conjuration, ſpeake my Lord:
For we will heare, note, and beleeve in heart,
That what you ſpeake, is in your Conſcience waſht,
As pure as ſinne with Baptiſme.

B. Can. Then heare me gracious Soveraign, & you Peers,
That owe your ſelves, your lives, and ſervices,
To this Imperiall Throne. There is no barre
To make againſt your Highneſſe Clayme to France,
But this which they produce from Pharamond,
In terram Salicam Mulieres ne ſuccedant,
No Woman ſhall ſucceed in Salike Land:
Which Salike Land, the French unjuſtly gloze
To be the realme of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this Law, and female Barre.
Yet their owne Authors faithfully affirme,
That the Land Salike is in Germanie,
Betweene the Flouds of Sala and of Elve:
Where Charles the Great having ſubdu'd the Saxons,
There left behind and ſettled certaine French:
Who holding in diſdaine the German Women,
For ſome diſhoneſt manners of their life,
Eſtabliſht then this Law; to wit, No Female
Should be Inheritrix in Salike Land:
Which Salike (as I ſaid) 'twixt Elve and Sala,
Is at this day in Germanie, call'd Meiſen.
Then doth it well appeare, the Salike Law
Was not deviſed for the Realme of France:
Nor did the French poſſeſſe the Salike Land,
Vntill foure hundred one and twentie yeeres
After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly ſuppoſ'd the founder of this Law,
Who died within the yeere of our Redemption,
Foure hundred twentie ſix: and Charles the Great
Subdu'd the Saxons, and did ſeat the French
Beyond the River Sala, in the yeere
Eight hundred fiue. Beſides, their writers ſay,
King Pepin, which depoſed Childerike,
Did as Heire generall, being deſcended
Of Blithild, which was Daughter to King Clothair,
Make Clayme and Title to the Crowne of France.
Hugh Capet alſo, who uſurpt the Crowne

Of Charles the Duke of Loraine, ſole Heire male
Of the true Line and Stocke of Charles the great:
To find his Title with ſome ſhewes of truth,
Though in pure truth it was corrupt and naught;
Convey'd himſelfe as th' Heire to th' Lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemaine, who was the Sonne
To Lewes the Emperour, and Lewes the Sonne
Of Charles the Great: alſo King Lewes the Tenth,
Who was ſole Heire to the Vſurper Capet,
Could not keepe quiet in his conſcience,
Wearing the Crowne of France, 'till ſatisfied,
That faire Queene Iſabel, his Grandmother,
Was Lineall of the Lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the fareſaid Duke of Loraine:
By the which Marriage, the Lyne of Charles the Great
Was re-united to the Crowne of France.
So, that as cleare as is the Summers Sunne,
King Pepins Title, and Hugh Capets Clayme,
King Lewes his ſatisfaction, all appeare
To hold in Right and Title of the Female:
So doe the Kings of France upon this day.
Howbeit, they would hold up this Salique Law,
To barre your Highneſſe clayming from the Female,
And rather chuſe to hide them in a Net,
Then amply to imbarre their crooked Titles,
Vſurpt from you and your Progenitors.
King May I with right and conſcience make this claim?
Biſh.Cant. The ſinne upon my head, dread Soveraigne:
For in the Booke of Numbers is it writ,
When the man dyes, let the Inheritance
Deſcend unto the Daughter. Gracious Lord,
Stand for your owne, unwind your bloody Flagge:
Looke backe into your mightie Anceſtors:
Goe my dread Lord, to your great Grandſires Tombe,
From whom you clayme; invoke his Warlike Spirit,
And your Great Vncles, Edward the Blacke Prince,
Who on the French ground play'd a Tragedie,
Making defeat on the full Power of France:
Whiles his moſt mighty Father on a Hill
Stood ſmiling, to behold his Lyons Whelpe
Forrage in blood of French Nobilitie.
O Noble Engliſh, that could entertaine
With halfe their Forces, the full pride of France,
And let another halfe ſtand laughing by,
All out of worke, and cold for action.
Biſh. Awake remembrance of theſe valiant dead,
And with your puiſſant Arme renew their Feats;
You are their Heire, you ſit upon their Throne:
The Blood and Courage that renowned them,
Runs in your Veines: and my thrice-puiſſant Liege
Is in the very May-Morne of his Youth,
Ripe for Exploites and mighty Enterpriſes.
Exe. Your brother Kings and Monarches of the Earth
Doe all expect, that you ſhould rowſe your ſelfe,
As did the former Lyons of your Blood. (might;
Weſt. They know your Grace hath cauſe, and means, and
So hath your Highneſſe: never King of England
Had Nobles richer, and more loyall Subjects,
Whoſe hearts have left their bodyes here in England,
And lye pavillion'd in the field of France.
Biſh.Cant. O let their bodyes follow my deare Liege
With Blouds, and Sword and Fire, to win your Right:
In ayde whereof, we of the Spiritualtie
Will rayſe your Highneſſe ſuch a mightie Summe,
As never did the Cleargie at one time
Bring in to any of your Anceſtors.
King. We muſt not onely arme t'invade the French,
But lay downe our proportions, to defend
Againſt the Scot, who will make roade upon us,
With all advantages.
Biſh.Can. They of thoſe Marches, gracious Soveraign,
Shall be a Wall ſufficient to defend
Our in-land from the pilfering Borderers.
King. We do not meane the courſing ſnatchers onely,
But feare the maine intendment of the Scot,
Who hath beene ſtill a giddy neighbour to us;
For you ſhall reade, that my great Grandfather
Never went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot, on his unfurniſht Kingdome,
Came pouring like the Tyde into a breach,
With ample and brim fulneſſe of his force,
Galling the gleaned Land with hot aſſayes,
Girding with grievous ſiege, Caſtles and Townes:
That England being emptie of defence,
Hath ſhooke and trembled at th' ill neighbourhood.
B.Can. She hath bin the more fear'd the harm'd, my Liege:
For heare her but exampl'd by her ſelfe,
When all her Chevalrie hath been in France,
And ſhe a mourning Widdow of her Nobles,
She hath her ſelfe not onely well defended,
But taken and impounded as a Stray,
The King of Scots: whom ſhe did ſend to France,
To fill King Edwards fame with priſoner Kings,
And make their Chronicle as rich with prayſe,
As is the Owſe and bottome of the Sea
With ſunken Wrack, and ſum-leſſe Treaſuries.
Biſh.Ely. But there's a ſaying very old and true,
If that you will France win, then with Scotland firſt begin.
For once the Eagle (England) being in prey,
To her unguarded Neſt, the Weazell (Scot)
Comes ſneaking, and ſo ſucks her Princely Egges,
Playing the Mouſe in abſence of the Cat,
To tame and havocke more then ſhe can eate.
Exet. It followes then, the Cat muſt ſtay at home,
Yet that is but a cruſh'd neceſſity,
Since we have lockes to ſafegard neceſſaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty theeves.
While that the Armed hand doth fight abroad,
Th'adviſed head defends it ſelfe at home:
For Government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keepe in one conſent,
Congreeing in a full and naturall cloze,
Like Muſicke.
Cant. Therefore doth heaven divide
The ſtate of man in divers functions,
Setting endevor in continuall motion:
To which is fixed as an ayme or butt,
Obedience: for ſo worke the Hony Bees,
Creatures that by a rule in Nature teach
The Act of Order to a peopled Kingdome.
They have a King, and Officers of ſorts,
Where ſome like Magiſtrats correct at home;
Others, like Merchants venture Trade abroad;
Others, like Souldiers armed in their ſtings,
Make boote upon the Summers Velvet buddes:
Which pillage, they with merry march bring home
To the Tent-royall of their Emperor:
Who buſied in his Majeſties ſurveyes
The ſinging Maſon building roofes of Gold,
The civill Citizens kneading up the hony;
The Poore Mechanicke Porters, crowding in
Their heavy burthens at his narrow gate:

The ſad-ey'd Iuſtice with his ſurly humme,
Delivering ore to Executors pale
The lazie yawning Drone: I this inferre,
That many things having full reference
To one conſent, may worke contrariouſly,
As many Arrowes looſed ſeverall wayes
Come to one marke: as many wayes meet in one towne,
As many freſh ſtreames meet in one ſalt ſea;
As many Lynes cloſe in the Dials center:
So may a thouſand actions once a foote,
And in one purpoſe, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my Liege,
Divide your happy England into foure,
Whereof, take you one quarter into France,
And you withall ſhall make all Gallia ſhake.
If we with thrice ſuch powers left at home,
Cannot defend our owne doores from the dogge,
Let us be worried, and our Nation loſe
The name of hardineſſe and policie.

King. Call in the Meſſengers ſent from the Dolphin.
Now are we well reſolv'd, and by Gods helpe
And yours, the noble ſinewes of our power;
France being ours, wee'l bend it to our Awe,
Or breake it all to peeces. Or there wee'l ſit, (Ruling in large and ample Emperie,
Ore France, and all her (almoſt) Kingly Dukedomes)
Or lay theſe bones in an unworthy Vrne,
Tombleſſe, with no remembrance over them:
Either our Hiſtory ſhall with full mouth
Speake freely of our Acts, or elſe our grave
Like Turkiſh mute, ſhall have a tongueleſſe mouth,
Not worſhipt with a waxen Epitaph.

Enter Ambaſſadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleaſure
Of our faire Coſin Dolphin: for we heare,
Your greeting is from him, not from the King.

Amb. May't pleaſe your Majeſtie to give us leave
Freely to render what we have in charge:
Or ſhall we ſparingly ſhew you farre off
The Dolphins meaning, and our Embaſſie.

King. We are no Tyrant, but a Chriſtian King,
Vnto whoſe grace our paſſion is as ſubject
As is our wretches fettred in our priſons:
Therefore with franke and with uncurbed plainneſſe,
Tell us the Dolphins minde.

Amb. Thus then in few:
Your Highneſſe lately ſending into France,
Did claime ſome certaine Dukedomes, in the right
Of your great Predeceſſor, King Edward the third.
In anſwer of which claime, the Prince our Maſter
Sayes, that you ſavour too much of your youth,
And bids you be advis'd: There's nought in France,
That can be with a nimble Galliard wonne:
You cannot revell into Dukedomes there.
He therefore ſends you meeter for your ſpirit
This Tun of Treaſure; and in lieu of this,
Deſires you let the Dukedomes that you claime
Heare no more of you. This the Dolphin ſpeakes.

King. What Treaſure Vncle?

Exe. Tennis balles, my Liege.

Kin. We are glad the Dolphin is ſo pleaſant with us,
His Preſent, and your paines we thanke you for:
When we have matcht our Rackets to theſe Balles,
We will in France (by Gods grace) play a ſet,
Shall ſtrike his fathers Crowne into the hazard.
Tell him, he hath made a match with ſuch a Wrangler,
That all the Courts of France will be diſturb'd
With Chaces. And we underſtand him well,
How he comes o're us with our wilder dayes,
Not meaſuring what uſe we made of them.
We never valew'd this poore ſeate of England,
And therefore living hence, did give our ſelfe
To barbarous licenſe: As 'tis ever common,
That men are merrieſt, when they are from home.
But tell the Dolphin, I will keepe my State,
Be like a King, and ſhew my ſayle of Greatneſſe,
When I do rowſe me in my Throne of France.
For that I have layd by my Majeſtie,
And plodded like a man for working dayes:
But I will riſe there with ſo full a glorie,
That I will dazle all the eyes of France,
Yea ſtrike the Dolphin blinde to looke on us.
And tell the pleaſant Prince, this Mocke of his
Hath turn'd his balls to Gun-ſtones, and his ſoule
Shall ſtand ſore charged, for the waſtefull vengeance
That ſhall flye with them: for many a thouſand widowes
Shall this his Mocke, mocke out of their deere husbands;
Mocke mothers from their ſonnes, mock Caſtles downe:
And ſome are it ungotten and unborne,
That ſhall have cauſe to curſe the Dolphins ſcorne.
But this lyes all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeale, and in whoſe name
Tell you the Dolphin, I am comming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightfull hand in a wel-hallow'd cauſe.
So get you hence in peace: and tell the Dolphin,
His Ieſt will ſavour but of ſhallow wit,
When thouſands weepe more then did laugh at it.
Convey them with ſafe conduct. Fare you well.

Exeunt Ambaſſadors.

Exe. This was a merry Meſſage.

King. We hope to make the Sender bluſh at it:
Therefore, my Lords, omit no happy howre,
That may give furth'rance to our Expedition;
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save thoſe to God, that runne before our buſineſſe.
Therefore let our proportions for theſe Warres
Be ſoone collected, and all things thought upon,
That may with reaſonable ſwiftneſſe adde
More feathers to our Wings: for God before,
Wee'le chide this Dolphin at his fathers doore.
Therefore let every man now taske his thought,
That this faire Action may on foot be brought. Exeunt.

Flouriſh. Enter Chorus.

Now all the Youth of England are on fire,
And ſilken Dalliance in the Wardrobe lyes:
Now thriue the Armorers, and Honors thought
Reignes ſolely in the breaſt of every man.
They ſell the Paſture now, to buy the Horſe;
Following the Mirror of all Chriſtian Kings,
With winged heeles, as Engliſh Mercuries.
For now ſits Expectation in the Ayre,
And hides a Sword, from Hilts unto the Point,
With Crownes Imperiall, Crownes and Coronets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French advis'd by good intelligence
Of this moſt dreadfull preparation,
Shake in their feare, and with pale Pollicy
Seeke to divert the Engliſh purpoſes.
O England: Modell to thy inward Greatneſſe,
Like little Body with a mightie Heart:

What mightſt thou do, that honour would thee doe,
Were all thy children kinde and naturall:
But ſee, thy fault France hath in thee found out,
A neſt of hollow boſomes, which he filles
With treacherous Crownes, and three corrupted men:
One Richard Earle of Cambridge, and the ſecond
Henry Lord Scroope of Maſham, and the third
Sir Thomas Grey Knight of Northumberland,
Have for the Gilt of France (O guilt indeed)
Confirm'd Conſpiracy with fearefull France,
And by their hands, this grace of Kings muſt dye,
If Hell and Treaſon hold their promiſes,
Ere he take ſhip for France; and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on, and wee'l digeſt
Th' abuſe of diſtance; force a play:
The ſumme is payde, the Traitors are agreed,
The King is ſet from London, and the Scene
Is now tranſported (Gentles) to Southampton,
There is the play-houſe now, there muſt you ſit,
And thence to France ſhall we convey you ſafe,
And bring you backe: Charming the narrow ſeas
To give you gentle Paſſe: for if we may,
Wee'l not offend one ſtomacke with our Play.
But till the King come forth, and not till then,
Vnto Southampton do we ſhift our Scene. Exit.

Enter Corporall Nym, and Lieutenant Bardolfe.

Bar. Well met Corporall Nym.

Nym. Good morrow Lieutenant Bardolfe.

Bar. What, are Ancient Piſtoll and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I ſay little: but when time ſhall ſerue, there ſhall be ſmiles, but that ſhall be as it may. I dare not fight, but I will winke and hold out mine yron: it is a ſimple one, but what though? It will toſte Cheeſe, and it will endure cold, as another mans ſword will: and there's an end.

Bar. I will beſtow a breakfaſt to make you friendes, and wee'l bee all three ſworne brothers to France: Let't be ſo good Corporall Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will live ſo long as I may, that's the certaine of it: and when I cannot live any longer, I will doe as I may: That is my reſt, that is the rendevous of it.

Bar. It is certaine Corporall, that hee is married to Nell Quickly, and certainly ſhe did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell, Things muſt be as they may: men may ſleepe, and they may have their throats about them at that time, and ſome ſay, knives have edges: It muſt be as it may, though patience bee a tyred name, yet ſhee will plodde, there muſt be Concluſions, well, I cannot tell.

Enter Piſtoll, & Quickly.

Bar. Heere comes Ancient Piſtoll and his wife: good Corporall be patient heere. How now mine Hoaſte Piſtoll?

Piſt. Baſe Tyke, call'ſt thou mee Hoſte, now by this hand I ſweare I ſcorne the terme: nor ſhall my Nel kepe Lodgers.

Hoſt. No by my troth, not long: For we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteene Gentlewomen that live honeſtly by the pricke of their Needles, but it will bee thought wee keepe a Bawdy-houſe ſtraight. O welliday Lady, if he be not hewne now, we ſhall ſee wilfull adultery and murther committed.

Bar. Good Lieutenant, good Corporall offer nothing heere.

Nym. Piſh.]

Piſt. Piſh for thee, Iſland dogge: thou prickeard cur of Iſland.

Hoſt. Good Corporall Nym ſhew thy valor, and put up your ſword.

Nym. Will you ſhogge off? I would have you ſolus.

Piſt. Solus, egregious dog? O Viper vile; The ſolus in thy moſt mervailous face, the ſolus in thy teeth, and in thy throate, and in thy hatefull Lungs, yea in thy Maw perdy; and which is worſe, within thy naſtie mouth. I do retort the ſolus in thy bowels, for I can take, and Piſtols cocke is up, and flaſhing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbaſon, you cannot conjure mee: I have an humor to knocke you indifferently well: If you grow fowle with me Piſtoll, I will ſcoure you with my Rapier, as I may, in fayre tearmes. If you would walke off, I would pricke your guts a little in good tearmes, as I may, and that's the humor of it.

Piſt. O Braggard vile, and damned furious wight,
The Grave doth gape, and doting death is neere,
Therefore exhale.

Bar. Heare me, heare me what I ſay: He that ſtrikes the firſt ſtroake, Ile run him up to the hilts, as I am a ſoldier.

Piſt. An oath of mickle might, and fury ſhall abate. Give me thy fiſt, thy fore-foote to me give: Thy ſpirits are moſt tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throate one time or other in faire termes, that is the humor of it.

Piſtoll. Couple a gorge, that is the word. I defie thee againe. O hound of Creet, think'ſt thou my ſpouſe to get? No, to the Spittle goe, and from the Poudring tub of infamy, fetch forth the Lazar Kite of Creſſids kinde, Doll Teare-ſheete, ſhe by name, and her eſpouſe. I have, and I will hold the Quandom Quickely for the onely ſhe: and Pauca, there's enough to go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine Hoaſt Piſtoll, you muſt come to my Mayſter, and your Hoſteſſe: He is very ſicke, & would to bed. Good Bardolfe, put thy face betweene his ſheetes, and do the Office of a Warming-pan: Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away you Rogue.

Hoſt. By my troth he'l yeeld the Crow a pudding one of theſe dayes: the King has kild his heart. Good Huſband come home preſently. Exit.

Bar. Come ſhall I make you two friends. Wee muſt to France together: why the divel ſhould we keepe knives to cut one anothers throats?

Piſt. Let floods ore-ſwell and fiends for food howle on.

Nym. You'l pay mee the eight ſhillings I won of you at Betting?

Piſt. Baſe is the ſlave that payes.

Nim. That now I will have: that's the humour of it.

Piſt. As manhood ſhall compound: puſh home. Draw

Bard. By this ſword, hee that makes the firſt thruſt, Ile kill him: By this ſword, I will.

Pi. Sword is an Oath, & Oaths muſt have their courſe

Bar. Coporall Nim, and thou wilt be friends be friends, and thou wilt not, why then bee enemies with mee too: prethee put up.

Piſt. A Noble ſhalt thou have, and preſent pay, and Liquor likewiſe will I give to thee, and friendſhippe ſhall combine, and brotherhood. Ile live by Nimme, & Nimme ſhall live by me, is not this juſt? For I ſhall Sutler be unto the Campe, and profits will accrue. Give me thy hand.

Nym. I ſhall have my Noble?
Piſt. In caſh, moſt juſtly payd.
Nym. Well, then that's the humor of't.

Enter Hoſteſſe.

Hoſt. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to ſir Iohn: A poore heart, he is ſo ſhak'd of a burning quotidian Tertian, that it is moſt lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The King hath run bad humors on the Knight, that's the even of it.

Piſt. Nym, thou haſt ſpoke the right, his heart is fracted and corroborate.

Nym. The King is a good King, but it muſt bee as it may: he paſſes ſome humors, and carreeres.

Piſt. Let us condole the Knight, for (Lambekins) we will live.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, & Weſtmerland.

Bed. Fore God his Grace is bold to truſt theſe traitors
Exe. They ſhall be apprehended by and by.
Weſt. How ſmooth and even they do beare themſelves,
As if allegeance in their boſomes ſate
Crowned with faith, and conſtant loyalty.
Bed. The King hath note of all that they intend,
By interception, which they dreame not of.
Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,
Whom he hath dull'd and cloy'd with gracious favours;
That he ſhould for a forraigne purſe, ſo ſell
His Soveraignes life to death and treachery.

Sound Trumpets.

Enter the King, Scroope, Cambridge, and Gray.

King. Now ſits the winde faire, and we will aboord.
My Lord of Cambridge, and my kinde Lord of Maſham,
And you my gentle Knight, give me your thoughts:
Thinke you not that the powres we beare with us
Will cut their paſſage through the force of France?
Doing the execution, and the acte,
For which we have in head aſſembled them.
Scro. No doubt my Liege, if each man do his beſt.
King. I doubt not that, ſince we are well perſwaded
We carry not a heart with us from hence,
That growes not in a faire conſent with ours:
Nor leave not one behinde, that doth not wiſh
Succeſſe and Conqueſt to attend on us.
Cam. Never was Monarch better fear'd and lov'd,
Then is your Majeſty; there's not I thinke a ſubject
That ſits in heart-greefe and uneaſineſſe
Vnder the ſweet ſhade of your government.
Kni. True: thoſe that were your Fathers enemies,
Have ſteep'd their gauls in honey, and do ſerve you
With hearts create of dutie, and of zeale.
King. We therefore have great cauſe of thankefulneſſe,
And ſhall forget the office of our hand
Sooner then quittance of deſert and merit,
According to the weight and worthineſſe.
Scro. So ſervice ſhall with ſteeled ſinewes toyle,
And labour ſhall refreſh it ſelfe with hope
To do your Grace inceſſant ſervices.
King. We Iudge no leſſe. Vnkle of Exeter,
Inlarge the man committed yeſterday,
That rayl'd againſt our perſon: We conſider
It was exceſſe of Wine that ſet him on,
And on his more advice, We pardon him.
Scro. That's mercy, but too much ſecurity:
Let him be puniſh'd Soveraigne, leaſt example
Breed (by his ſufferance) more of ſuch a kind.
King. O let us yet be mercifull.
Cam. So may your Highneſſe, and yet puniſh too.
Grey. Sir, you ſhew great mercy if you give him life,
After the taſte of much correction.
King. Alas, your too much love and care of me,
Are heavie Oriſons 'gainſt this poore wretch:
If little faults proceeding on diſtemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how ſhall we ſtretch our eye
When capitall crimes, chew'd, ſwallow'd, and diſgeſted,
Appeare before us? We'l yet inlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroope, and Gray, in their deere care
And tender preſervation of our perſon
Wold have him puniſh'd. And now to our French cauſes,
Who are the late Commiſſioners?
Cam. I one my Lord,
Your Highneſſe bad me aske for it to day.
Scro. So did you me my Liege.
Gray. And I my Royall Soveraigne.
King. Then Richard Earle of Cambridge, there is yours:
There yours Lord Scroope of Maſham, and Sir Knight:
Gray of Northumberland, this ſame is yours:
Reade them, and know I know your worthineſſe.
My Lord of Weſtmerland and Vnkle Exeter,
We will aboord to night. Why how now Gentlemen?
What ſee you in thoſe papers, that you loſe
So much complexion? Looke ye how they change:
Their cheekes are paper. Why, what reade you there,
That have ſo cowarded and chac'd your blood
Out of apparance.
Cam. I do confeſſe my fault,
And do ſubmit me to your Highneſſe mercy.
Gray. Scro. To which we all appeale.
King. The mercy that was quicke in us but late,
By your owne counſaile is ſuppreſt and kill'd:
You muſt not dare (for ſhame) to talke of mercy,
For your owne reaſons turne into your boſomes,
As dogs upon their Maiſters, worrying you:
See you my Princes, and my Noble Peeres,
Theſe Engliſh monſters: My Lord of Cambridge heere,
You know how apt our love was, to accord
To furniſh him with all appertinents
Belonging to his honour; and this man,
Hath for a few light Crownes, lightly conſpir'd
And ſworne unto the practiſes of France
To kill us heere in Hampton. To the which,
This Knight no leſſe for bounty bound to us
Then Cambridge is, hath likewiſe ſworne. But O,
What ſhall I ſay to thee Lord Scroope, thou cruell,
Ingratefull, ſavage, and inhumane Creature?
Thou that didſt beare the key of al my counſailes,
That knew'ſt the very bottome of my ſoule,
That (almoſt) might'ſt have coyn'd me into Golde,
Would'ſt thou have practis'd on me, for thy uſe?
May it be poſſible, that forraigne hyer
Could out of thee extract one ſparke of evill
That might annoy my finger? 'Tis ſo ſtrange,
That though the truth of it ſtand off as groſſe
As blacke and white, my eye will ſcarcely ſee it.
Treaſon, and murther, ever kept together,
As two yoake divels ſworne to eythers purpoſe,
Working ſo groſſely in a naturall cauſe,
That admiration did not hoope at them.
But thou ('gainſt all proportion) didſt bring in
Wonder to waite on treaſon, and on murther:
And whatſoever cunning fiend it was
That wrought upon thee ſo prepoſterouſly,
Hath got the voyce in hell for excellence:

And other divels that ſuggeſt by treaſons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with formes being fetcht
From gliſt'ring ſemblances of piety:
But he that temper'd thee, bad thee ſtand up,
Gave thee no inſtance why thou ſhouldſt do treaſon,
Vnleſſe to dub thee with the name of Traitor.
If that ſame Dæmon that hath gull'd thee thus,
Should with his Lyon-gate walke the whole world,
He might returne to vaſtie Tartar backe,
And tell the Legions, I can never win
A ſoule ſo eaſie as that Engliſhmans.
Oh, how haſt thou with jealouſie infected
The ſweetneſſe of affiance? Shew men dutifull?
Why ſo didſt thou: ſeeme they grave and learned?
Why ſo didſt thou. Come they of Noble Family?
Why ſo didſt thou. Seeme they religious?
Why ſo didſt thou. Or are they ſpare in diet,
Free from groſſe paſſion, or of mirth, or anger,
Conſtant in ſpirit, not ſwerving with the blood,
Garniſh'd and deck'd in modeſt complement,
Not working with the eye, without the eare,
And but in purged judgement truſting neither?
Such and ſo finely boulted didſt thou ſeeme:
And thus thy fall hath left a kinde of blot,
To make thee full fraught man, and beſt indued
With ſome ſuſpition, I will weepe for thee.
For this revolt of thine, me thinkes is like
Another fall of man. Their faults are open,
Arreſt them to the anſwer of the Law,
And God acquit them of their practiſes.

Exe. I arreſt thee of High Treaſon, by the name of Richard Earle of Cambridge.

I arreſt thee of High Treaſon, by the name of Thomas Lord Scroope of Marſham.

I arreſt thee of High Treaſon, by the name of Thomas Grey, Knight of Northumberland.

Scro. Our purpoſes, God juſtly hath diſcover'd,
And I repent my fault more then my death,
Which I beſeech your Highneſſe to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me, the Gold of France did not ſeduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The ſooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention,
Which I in ſufferance heartily will rejoyce
Beſeeching God, and you, to pardon me.

Gray. Never did faithfull ſubject more rejoyce
At the diſcoverie of moſt dangerons Treaſon,
Then I do at this houre joy ore my ſelfe,
Prevented from a damned enterprize;
My fault, but not my body, pardon Soveraigne.

King. God quit you in his mercy: Heare your ſentence
You have conſpir'd againſt Our Royall perſon.
Ioyn'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his Coffers,
Receyv'd the Golden Earneſt of Our death:
Wherein you would have ſold your King to ſlaughter,
His Princes, and his Peeres to ſervitude,
His Subjects to oppreſſion, and contempt,
And his whole Kingdome into deſolation:
Touching our perſon, ſeeke we no revenge,
But we our Kingdomes ſafety muſt ſo tender,
Whoſe ruine you three ſought, that to her Lawes
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
(Poore miſerable wretches) to your death:
The taſte whereof, God of his mercy give
You patience to indure, and true Repentance
Of all your deare offences. Beare them hence. Exeunt.
Now Lords for France: the enterpriſe whereof
Shall be to you as us, like glorious.
We doubt not of a faire and luckie Warre,
Since God ſo graciouſly hath brought to light
This dangerous Treaſon, lurking in our way.
To hinder our beginning. We doubt not now,
But every Rubbe is ſmoothed on our way,
Then forth, deare Countreymen: Let us deliver
Our Puiſſance into the hand of God,
Putting it ſtraight in expedition.
Chearely to Sea, the ſignes of Warre advance,
No King of England, if not King of France. Exeunt.

Enter Piſtoll, Nim, Bardolph, Boy, and Hoſteſſe.

Hoſteſſe. 'Prythee honey ſweete Husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Piſtoll. No: for my manly heart doth erne. Bardolph, be blythe: Nim, rowſe thy vaunting Veines: Boy, briſtle thy Courage up: for Falſtaffe hee is dead, and we muſt erne therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, whereſomere hee is, eyther in Heaven, or in Hell.

Hoſteſſe. Nay ſure, hee's not in Hell: hee's in Arthurs Boſome, if ever man went to Arthurs Boſome: a made a finer end, and went away and it had beene any Chriſtome Child: a parted ev'n juſt betweene Twelve and One, ev'n at the turning o'th' Tyde: for after I ſaw him fumble with the Sheets, and play with Flowers, and ſmile upon his fingers end, I knew there was but one way: for his Noſe was as ſharpe as a Pen, and a Table of greene fields. How now Sir Iohn (quoth I?) what man? bee a good cheere: ſo a cryed out, God, God, God, three or foure times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a ſhould not thinke of God; I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himſelfe with any ſuch thoughts yet: ſo a bad me lay more Cloathes on his feet: I put my hand into the Bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any ſtone: then I felt to his knees, and ſo up-war'd and upward, and all was as cold as any ſtone.

Nim. They ſay he cryed out of Sack.

Hoſteſſe. I, that a did.

Bard. And of Women.

Hoſteſſe. Nay, that a did not.

Boy. Yes that a did, and ſayd they were Devils incarnate.

Woman. A could never abide Carnation, 'twas a Colour he never lik'd.

Boy. A ſaid once, the Deule would have him about Women.

Hoſteſſe. A did in ſome ſort (indeed) handle Women: bnt then hee was rumatique, and talk'd of the Whore of Babylon.

Boy. Doe you not remember a ſaw a Flea ſticke upon Bardolphs Noſe, and a ſaid it was a blacke Soule burning in Hell.

Bard. Well, the fuell is gone that maintain'd that fire: that's all the Riches I got in his ſervice.

Nim. Shall wee ſhogg? the King will bee gone from Southampton.

Piſt. Come, let's away. My Love, give me thy Lippes: Looke to my Chattels, and my Moveables: Let Sences rule: The world is, Pitch and pay: truſt none: for Oathes are Strawes, mens Faiths are Wafer-Cakes, and hold-faſt is the onely Dogge: My Ducke, therefore Caveto bee thy Counſailor. Goe, cleare thy Chryſtalls. Yoke-fellowes in Armes, let us to France, like Horſeleeches my Boyes, to ſucke, to ſucke, the very blood to ſucke.

Boy. And that's but unwholeſome food, they ſay,
Piſt. Touch her ſoft mouth, and march.
Bard. Farewell Hoſteſſe.
Nim. I cannot kiſſe, that is the humour of it: but adieu.
Piſt. Let Huſwifrie appeare: keepe cloſe, I thee command.
Hoſteſſe. Farwell: adieu. Exeunt.

Enter the French King, the Dolphin, the Dukes of Berry and Britaine.

King. Thus comes the Engliſh with full power upon us,
And more then carefully it us concernes,
To anſwere Royally in our defences.
Therefore the Dukes of Berry and of Britaine,
Of Brabant and of Orleance ſhall make forth,
And you Prince Dolphin, with all ſwift diſpatch
To lyne and new repayre our townes of Warre
With men of courage, and with meanes defendant:
For England his approaches makes as fierce,
As Waters to the ſucking of a Gulfe.
It fits us then to be as provident,
As feare may teach us, out of late examples
Left by the fatall and neglected Engliſh,
Vpon our fields.
Dolphin. My moſt redoubted Father,
It is moſt meet we arme us 'gainſt the Foe:
For Peace it ſelfe ſhould not ſo dull a Kingdome,
(Though War nor no knowne Quarrel were in queſtion)
But that Defences, Muſters, Preparations,
Should be maintain'd, aſſembled, and collected,
As were a Warre in expectation.
Therefore I ſay, 'tis meet we all goe forth,
To view the ſicke and feeble parts of France:
And let us doe it with no ſhew of feare,
No, with no more, then if we heard that England
Were buſied with a Whitſon Morris-dance:
For, my good Liege, ſhe is ſo idly King'd,
Her Scepter ſo phantaſtically borne,
By a vaine giddie ſhallow humorous Youth,
That feare attends her not.
Conſt. O Peace, Prince Dolphin,
You are too much miſtaken in this King:
Queſtion your Grace the late Embaſſadors,
With what great State he heard their Embaſſie,
How well ſupply'd with Noble Councellors,
How modeſt in exception; and withall,
How terrible in conſtant reſolution:
And you ſhall find, his Vanities fore-ſpent,
Were but the out-ſide of the Roman Brutus,
Covering Diſcretion with a Coat of Folly;
As Gardeners doe with Ordure hide thoſe Roots
That ſhall firſt ſpring, and be moſt delicate.
Dolphin. Well, 'tis not ſo, my Lord High Conſtable.
But though we thinke it ſo, it is no matter:
In cauſes of defence, 'tis beſt to weigh
The enemie more mightie then he ſeemes,
So the proportions of defence are fill'd:
Which of a weake and niggardly projection,
Doth like a Miſer ſpoyle his Coat, with ſcanting
A little Cloth.
King. Thinke we King Harry ſtrong:
And Princes, looke you ſtrongly arme to meet him.
The Kindred of him hath beene fleſht upon us:
And he is bred out of that bloody ſtraine,
That haunted us in our familiar Pathes:
Witneſſe our too much memorable ſhame,
When Creſſy Battell fatally was ſtrucke,
And all our Princes captiv'd, by the hand
Of that blacke Name, Edward, black Prince of Wales:
Whiles that his Mountaine Sire, on Mountaine ſtanding
Vp in the Ayre, crown'd with the Golden Sunne,
Saw his Heroicall Seed, and ſmil'd to ſee him
Mangle the Worke of Nature, and deface
The Patternes, that by God and by French Fathers
Had twentie yeeres beene made. This is a Stem
Of that Victorious Stock: and let us feare
The Natiue mightineſſe and fate of him.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Embaſſadors from Harry King of England,
Doe crave admittance to your Majeſty.
King. Weele give them preſent audience.
Goe, and bring them.
You ſee this Chaſe is hotly followed, friends.
Dolphin. Turne head, & ſtop purſuit: for coward Dog
Moſt ſpend their mouths, whē what they ſeem to threaten Runs farre before them. Good my Soueraigne
Take up the Engliſh ſhort, and let them know
Of what a Monarchie you are the Head:
Selfe-love, my Liege, is not ſo vile a ſinne,
As ſelfe-neglecting.

Enter Exeter.

King. From our Brother of England?
Exe. From him, and thus he greets your Majeſtie:
He wills you in the Name of God Almightie,
That you deveſt your ſelfe, and lay apart
The borrowed Glories, that by gift of Heaven,
By Law of Nature, and of nations, longs
To him and to his Heires, namely, the Crowne;
And all wide-ſtretched Honors, that pertaine
By Cuſtome, and the Ordinance of Times,
Vnto the Crowne of France: that you may know
'Tis no ſiniſter, nor no awk-ward Clayme,
Pickt from the Worme-holes of long-vaniſht dayes,
Nor from the duſt of oſd Oblivion rakt,
He ſends you this moſt memorable Lyne,
In every Branch truly demonſtrative;
Willing you over-looke this Pedigree:
And when you find him evenly deriv'd
From his moſt fam'd, of famous Anceſtors,
Edward the third; he bids you then reſigne
Your Crowne and Kingdome indirectly held
From him the Native and true Challenger.
King. Or elſe what followes?
Exe. Bloody conſtraint: for if you hide the Crowne
Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it.
Therefore in fierce Tempeſt is he comming,
In Thunder and in Earth-quake, like a love:
That if requiring faile, he will compell.
And bids you, in the Bowels of the Lord,
Deliver up the Crowne, and to take mercie
On the poore Soules, for whom this hungry Warre
Opens his vaſtie Iawes: and on your head
Turning the Widdowes Teares, the Orphans Cryes,
The dead-mens Bloud, the priuy Maidens Groanes,
For Husbands Fathers and betrothed Lovers,
That ſhall be ſwallowed in this Controverſie.
This is his Clayme, his threatning, and my Meſſage:
Vnleſſe the Dolphin be in preſence here;
To whom expreſſely I bring greeting too.

King. For us, we will conſider of this further:
To morrow ſhall you beare our full intent
Back to our Brother of England.

Dolph. For the Dolphin,
I ſtand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorne and defiance, ſleight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not miſ-become
The mighty Sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus ſayes my King: and if your Fathers Highneſſe
Doe not, in graunt of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter Mock you ſent his Majeſty;
Hee'le call you to ſo hot an Anſwer of it,
That Caves and Womby Vaultages of France
Shall chide your Treſpas, and returne your Mock
In ſecond Accent of his Ordinance.

Dolph. Say: if my Father render faire returne,
It is againſt my will: for I deſire
Nothing but Oddes with England,
To that end, as matching to his Youth and Vanity,
I did preſent him with the Paris-Balls.

Ex. Hee'le make your Paris Loover ſhake for it,
Were it the Miſtreſſe Court of mighty Europe:
And be aſſur'd, you'le find a diff'rence,
As we his Subjects have in wonder found,
Betweene the promiſe of his greener dayes,
And theſe he maiſters now: now he weighes Time
Even to the utmoſt Graine: that you ſhall reade
In your owne Loſſes, if he ſtay in France.

King. To morrow ſhall you know our mind at full.

Flouriſh.

Exe. Diſpatch us with all ſpeed, leaſt that our King
Come here himſelfe to queſtion our delay;
For he is footed in this Land already.

King. You ſhall be ſoone diſpatcht, with faire conditions.
A Night is but ſmall breathe, and little pawſe,
To anſwer matters of this conſequence. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Chorus.

Thus with imagin'd wing our ſwift Sceene flyes,
In motion of no leſſe celerity then that of Thought.
Suppoſe, that you have ſeene
The well appointed King at Dover Peer,
Embarke his Royalty: and his brave Fleet,
With ſilken Streamers, the young Phebus fayning;
Play with your Fancies: and in them behold,
Vpon the Hempen Tackle, Ship-boyes climbing;
Heare the ſhrill Whiſtle, which doth order give
To ſounds confus'd: behold the threaden Sayles,
Borne with th'inviſible and creeping Wind,
Draw the huge Bottomes through the furrowed Sea,
Breſting the lofty Surge. O, doe but thinke
You ſtand upon the Rivage, and behold
A Citie on th'inconſtant Billowes dauncing:
For ſo appeares this Fleet Majeſticall,
Holding due courſe to Harflew. Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to ſternage of this Navy,
And leave your England as dead Mid-night, ſtill,
Guarded with Grandſires, Babyes, and old Women,
Either paſt, or not arriv'd to pyth and puiſſance:
For who is he, whoſe Chin is but enricht
With one appearing Hayre, that will not follow
Theſe cull'd and choyſe-drawne Cavaliers to France?
Worke, worke your Thoughts, and therein ſee a Siege:
Behold the Ordenance on their Carriages,
With fatall mouthes gaping on girded Harflew.
Suppoſe th'Embaſſador from the French comes back:
Tells Harry, That the King doth offer him
Katherine his Daughter, and with her to Dowrie,
Some petty and unprofitable Dukedomes.
The offer likes not: and the nimble Gunner
With Lynſtock now the divelliſh Cannon touches.

Alarum, and Chambers goe off.

And downe goes all before them. Still be kind,
And ech out our performance with your mind. Exit.

Enter the King, Exeter, Bedford, and Glouceſter.
Alarum: Scaling Ladders at Harflew.

King. Once more unto the Breach,
Deare friends, once more;
Or cloſe the Wall up with our Engliſh dead:
In Peace, there's nothing ſo becomes a man,
As modeſt ſtillneſſe, and humility:
But when the blaſt of Warre blowes in our eares,
Then imitate the action of the Tyger:
Stiffen the ſinewes, commune up the blood,
Diſguiſe faire Nature with hard-favour'd Rage:
Then lend the Eye a terrible aſpect:
Let it pry through the portage of the Head,
Like the Braſſe Cannon: let the Brow o'rewhelme it,
As fearefully, as doth a galled Rocke
O're-hang and jutty his confounded Baſe,
Swill'd with the wilde and waſtfull Ocean.
Now ſet the Teeth, and ſtretch the Noſthrill wide,
Hold hard the Breath, and bend up every Spirit
To his full height. On, you Nobleſt Engliſh,
Whoſe blood is fet from Fathers of Warre-proofe:
Fathers, that like ſo many Alexanders,
Have in theſe parts from Morne till Even fought,
And ſheath'd their Swords, for lack of argument.
Diſhonour not your Mothers: now atteſt,
That thoſe whom you call'd Fathers, did beget you.
Be Coppy now to me of groſſer blood,
And teach them how to Warre. And you good Yeomen,
Whoſe Lymbes were made in England; ſhew us here
The mettell of your Paſture: let us ſweare,
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt not:
For there is none of you ſo meane and baſe,
That hath not Noble luſter in your eyes.
I ſee you ſtand like Grey-hounds in the ſlips,
Straying upon the Start. The Game's afoot:
Follow your Spirit; and upon this Charge,
Cry, God for Harry, England, and S. George.

Alarum, and Chambers goe off.

Enter Nim, Bardolph, Piſtoll, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach.

Nim. 'Pray thee Corporall ſtay, the Knocks are too hot: and for mine owne part, I have not a Caſe of Lives: the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plaine-Song of it.

Piſt. The plaine-Song is moſt juſt: for humors doe abound: Knocks goe and come: Gods Vaſſals drop and dye: and Sword and Shield, in bloody Field, doth winne immortall fame.

Boy. Would I were in an Ale-houſe in London, I would give all my fame for a Pot of Ale, and ſafety.

Piſt. And I: If wiſhes would prevaile with me, my purpoſe ſhould not faile with me; but thither would I high.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as Bird doth ſing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Vp to the breach, you Dogges; avant you Cullions.

Piſt. Be mercifull great Duke to men of Mould: abate thy Rage, abate thy manly Rage; abate thy Rage, great Duke. Good Bawcocke bate thy Rage: uſe lenity ſweet Chucke.

Nim. Theſe be good humors: your Honor wins bad humors. Exit.

Boy. As young as I am, I have obſerv'd theſe three Swaſhers. I am Boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would ſerve me, could not be Man to me; for indeed three ſuch Antiques do not amount to a man: for Bardolph, hee is white-liver'd, and red-fac'd; by the meanes whereof, a faces it out, but fights not: for Piſtoll, hee hath a killing Tongue, and a quiet Sword; by the meanes whereof, a breakes Words, and keepes whole Weapons: for Nim, hee hath heard, that men of few Words are the beſt men, and therefore hee ſcornes to ſay his Prayers, leſt a ſhould be thought a Coward: but his few bad Words are matcht with as few good Deeds; for a never broke any mans Head but his owne, and that was againſt a Poſt, when he was drunke. They will ſteale any thing, and call it Purchaſe. Bardolph ſtole a Lute-caſe, bore it twelve Leagues, and ſold it for three halfepence. Nim and Bardolph are ſworne Brothers in filching: and in Callice they ſtole a fire-ſhovell. I knew by that peece of Service, the men would carry Coales. They would have me as familiar with mens Pockets, as their Gloves or their Hand-kerchers: which makes much againſt my Manhood, if I ſhould take from anothers Pocket, to put into mine; for it is plaine pocketting up of Wrongs. I muſt leave them, and ſeeke ſome better Service: their Villany goes againſt my weake ſtomacke, and therefore I muſt caſt it up. Exit.

Enter Gower.

Gower. Captaine Fluellen, you muſt come preſently to the Mynes; the Duke of Glouceſter would ſpeake with you.

Flu. To the Mynes? Tell you the Duke, it is not ſo good to come to the Mynes: for looke you, the Mynes are not according to the diſciplines of the Warre; the cōcavities of it is not ſufficient: for looke you, th'athverſary, you may diſcuſſe unto the Duke, looke you, is digt himſelfe foure yard under the Countermines: by Cheſhu, I thinke a will plowe up all, if there is not better directions.

Gower. The Duke of Glouceſter, to whom the Order of the Siege is given, is altogether directed by an Iriſh man, a very valiant Gentleman yfaith.

Welch. It is Captaine Makmorrice, is it not?

Gower. I thinke it be.

Welch. By Cheſhu he is an Aſſe, as in the World, I will verifie as much in his Beard: he ha's no more directions in the true diſciplines of the Warres, looke you, of the Roman diſciplines, then is a Puppy-dog.

Enter Makmorrice, and Captaine Iamy.

Gower. Here a comes, and the Scots Captaine, Captaine Iamy, with him.

Welch. Captaine Iamy is a mervellous falorous Gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition and knowledge in th'aunchiant Warres, upon my particularknowledge of his directions: by Cheſhu he will maintaine his Argument as well as any Militarie man in the World, in the diſciplines of the Priſtine Warres of the Romans.

Scot. I ſay gudday, Captaine Fluellen.

Welch. Godden to your Worſhip, good Captaine Iames.

Gower. How now Captaine Makmorrice, have you quit the Mynes? have the Pioners given o're?

Iriſh. By Chriſh Law tiſh ill done: the Worke iſh give over, the Trompet ſound the Retreat. By my Hand I ſweare, and my fathers Soule, the Worke iſh ill done: it iſh give over: I would have blowed up the Towne, ſo Chriſh ſave me law, in an houre. O tiſh ill done, tiſh ill done: by my Hand tiſh ill done.

Welch. Captaine Makmorrice, I beſeech you now, will you voutſafe me, looke you, a few diſputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the diſciplines of the Warre, the Roman Warres, in the way of Argument, looke you, and friendly communication: partly to ſatisfie my Opinion, and partly for the ſatisfaction, looke you, of my Mind: as touching the direction of the Military diſcipline, that is the Point.

Scot. It ſall be vary gud, gud feith, gud Captens bath, and I ſall quit you with gud leve, as I may pick occaſion: that ſall I mary:

Iriſh. It is no time to diſcourſe, ſo Chriſh ſave me: the day is hot, and the Weather, and the Warres, and the King, and the Dukes: it is no time to diſcourſe, the Town is beſeech'd: and the Trumpet call us to the breech, and we talke, and be Chriſh do nothing, tis ſhame for us all: ſo God ſa'me tis ſhame to ſtand ſtill, it is ſhame by my hand: and there is Throats to be cut, and Workes to be done, and there iſh nothing done, ſo Chriſt ſa'me law.

Scot. By the Mes, ere theiſe eyes of mine take themſelves to ſlomber, ayle de gud ſervice, or Ile ligge i'th' grund for it; ay, or goe to death: and Ile pay't as valorouſly as I may, that ſall I ſuerly do, that is the breff and the long: mary, I wad full faine heard ſome queſtion tween you tway.

VVelch. Captaine Mackmorrice, I thinke, looke you, under your correction, there is not many of your Nation.

Iriſh. Of my Nation? What iſh my Nation? Iſh a Villaine, and a Baſterd, and a Knave, and a Raſcall. What iſh my Nation? Who talkes of my Nation?

VVelch. Looke you, if you take the matter otherwiſe then is meant, Captaine Mackmorrice, peradventure I ſhal thinke you doe not uſe me with that affablility, as in diſcretion you ought to uſe me, looke you, being as good a man as your ſelfe both in the diſciplines of Warre, and in the derivation of my Birth, and in other particularities.

Iriſh. I do not know you ſo good a man as my ſelfe: ſo Criſh ſave me, I will cut off your Head.

Gower. Gentlemen both, you will miſtake each other.

Scot. A, that's a foule fault. A Parley.

Gower. The Towne ſounds a Parley.

VVelch. Captaine Mackmorrice, when there is more better opportunity to be required, looke you, I will be ſo bold as to tell you, I know the diſciplines of Warres: and there is an end. Exit.

Enter the King and all his Traine before the Gates.

King. How yet reſolves the Governour of the Towne?
This is the lateſt Parle we will admit:

There

Therefore to our beſt mercy give your ſelves,
Or like to men prowd of deſtruction,
Defie us to our worſt: for as I am a Souldier,
A Name that in my thoughts becomes me beſt;
If I begin the batt'rie once againe,
I will not leave the halfe-atchieved Harflew,
Till in her aſhes ſhe lye buryed.
The Gates of Mercy ſhall be all ſhut up,
And the fleſh'd Souldier, rough and hard of heart,
In liberty of bloody hand, ſhall raunge
With Conſcience wide as Hell, mowing like Graſſe
Your freſh faire Virgins, and your flowring Infants.
What is it then to me, if impious Warre,
Arrayed in games like to the Prince of Fiends,
Doe with his ſmyrcht complexion all fell feats,
Enlynckt to waſte and deſolation?
What is't to me, when you your ſelves are cauſe,
If your pure Maydens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing Violation?
What Reyne can hold licencious Wickedneſſe,
When downe the Hill he holds his fierce Carriere?
We may as bootleſſe ſpend our vaine Command
Vpon th'enraged Souldiers in their ſpoyle,
As ſend Precepts to the Leviathan to come aſhore.
Therefore, you men of Harflew,
Take pitty of your Towne and of your People,
Whiles yet my Souldiers are in my Command,
Whiles yet the coole and temperate Wind of Grace
O're-blowes the filthy and contagious Clouds
Of headdy Murther, Spoyle, and Villany.
If not: why in a moment looke to ſee
The blind and bloody Souldier, with foule hand
Deſire the Locks of your ſhrill-ſhriking Daughters:
Your Fathers taken by the ſilver Beards,
And their moſt reverend Heads daſht to the Walls:
Your naked Infants ſpitted upon Pykes,
Whiles the mad Mothers, with their howles confus'd,
Doe breake the Clouds; as did the Wives of Iewry,
At Herods bloody-hunting ſlaughter-men.
What ſay you? Will you yeeld, and this avoyd?
Or guilty in defence, be thus deſtroy'd.

Enter Governour.

Gover. Our expectation hath this day an end:
The Dolphin, whom of Succours we entreated,
Returnes us, that his Powers are yet not ready,
To rayſe ſo great a Siege: Therefore great King,
We yeeld our Towne and Lives to thy ſoft Mercy:
Enter our Gates, diſpoſe of us and ours,
For we no longer are defenſible.
King. Open your Gates: Come Vnckle Exeter,
Goe you and enter Harflew, there remaine,
And fortifie it ſtrongly 'gainſt the French:
Vſe mercy to them all for us, deare Vnckle.
The Winter comming on, and Sickneſſe growing
Vpon our Souldiers, we will retyre to Calis.
To night in Harflew will we be your Gueſt,
To morrow for the Martch are we addreſt.

Floriſh, and enter the Towne.

Enter Katherine and an old Gentlewoman.

Kath. Alice, tu as eſté en Angleterre, & tu parlois bien le Language.

Alice. En peu Madame.

Kath. Ie te prie m'enſeigner, il faut que j'apprenne a parler. Comment appellé vous la main en Anglois?

Alice. La main, il eſt appellé, de Hand.

Kath. De Hand.

Alice. Et le doyt.

Kat. Le doyt, ma foy ie oublie le doyt, mais ie me ſouviendray le doyt, ie penſe qu'ils ont appellé de fingers, ou de fingres.

Alice. La main, de Hand, le doyt, le Fingres, le penſe que ie ſuis le bon eſcholier.

Kath. I'ay gaigné deux mots d'Anglois viſtement, comment appellé vous les ongles?

Alice. Les ongles, les appellons de Nayles.

Kath. De Nayles eſcoutez: dites moy, ſi ie parle bien: de Hand, de Fingres, de Nayles.

Alice. C'eſt bien dit Madame, il eſt fort bon Anglois.

Kath. Dites moy en Anglois le bras.

Alice. De Arme, Madame.

Kath. Et le coude.

Alice. D'Elbow.

Kath. D'Elbow: Ie m'en faitz la repetition de tous les mots que vous m'avez apprins dés apreſent.

Alice. Il eſt trop difficile Madame, comme ie penſe.

Kath. Excuſe moy Alice, eſcoute, d'Hand, de Fingre, de Nayles, d'Arme, de Bilbow.

Alice. D'elbow, Madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu, ie men oublie d'Elbow, comment appellé vous le col.

Alice. De Neck, Madame.

Kath. De Neck, & le manton.

Alice. de Chin.

Kath. De Sin: le col, de Neck; le manton, de Sin.

Alice. Ouy. Sauf voſtre honneur en verité vous prononcies les mots auſſi droict, que le Natifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Ie ne doute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu, & en peu de temps.

Ali. N'avez vous pas deſia oublie ce que ie vous ay enſeigné.

Kath. Nomme, ie reciteray a vous promptement, d'Hand, de Fingre, de Nayles, Madame.

Alice. De Nayles, Madame.

Kath. De Nayles, de Arme, de Ilbow.

Alice. Sans voſtre honneur d'elbow.

Kath. Ainſi dis-ie d'elbow, de Neck, & de Sin: cõment appellé vous les pieds & de roba.

Alice. Le foot Madame, & le Count.

Kath. Le Foot, & le Count: O Seigneur Dieu, ce ſont des mots mauuais, corruptible & impudique, & non pour les Dames d'Honneur d'uſer: Ie ne voudrois prononcer ces mots devant les Seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde, il faut le Foot & le Count, neant moins, Ie reciteray vn autrefois ma lecon enſemble, d'Hand, de Fingre, de Nayles, d'Arme, d'Elbow, de Neck, de Sin, de Foot, le Count.

Alice. Excellent, Madame.

Kath. C'eſt aſſez pour vne fois, allons nous en diſner.

Exeunt.

Enter the King of France, the Dolphin, the Conſtable of France, and others.

King. 'Tis certaine he hath paſt the River Some.
Conſt. And if he be not fought withall, my Lord,
Let us not live in France: let us quit all,
And give our Vineyards to a barbarous People,
Dolph. O Dieu vivant: Shall a few Sprayes of us,
The emptying of our Fathers Luxury,
Our Syens, put in wilde and ſavage Stock,
Spirt up ſo ſuddenly into the Clouds,
And over-looke their Grafters?
Brit. Normans, but baſtard Normans, Norman baſtards:
Mort de ma vie, if they march along
Vnfought withall, but I will ſell my Dukedome,

To buy a ſlobbry and a durty Farme
In that nooke-ſhotten Ile of Albion.

Conſt. Dieu de Battailes, where have they this mettell?
Is not their Clymate foggy, raw, and dull?
On whom, as in diſpight, the Sunne lookes pale,
Killing their Fruit with frownes? Can ſodden Water,
A Drench for ſur-reyn'd Iades, their Barly broth,
Decoct their cold blood to ſuch valiant heat?
And ſhall our quick blood, ſpirited with Wine,
Seeme froſtie? O, for honor of our Land,
Let us not hang like roping Iſyckles
Vpon our Houſes Thatch, whiles a more froſty People
Sweat drops of gallant Youth in our rich fields:
Poore we may call them, in their Native Lords.

Dolph. By Faith and Honor,
Our Madames mock at us, and plainely ſay,
Our Mettell is bred out, and they will give
Their bodyes to the Luſt of Engliſh Youth,
To new-ſtore France with Baſtard Warriors.

Brit. They bid us to the Engliſh Dancing-Schooles,
And teach Lavolta's high, and ſwift Carranto's
Saying, our Grace is onely in our Heeles,
And that we are moſt lofty Run-awayes.

King. Where is Montioy the Herald? ſpeed him hence,
Let him greet England with our ſharpe defiance.
Vp Princes, and with ſpirit of Honor edged,
More ſharper then your Swords, high to the field:
Charles Delabreth, High Conſtable of France,
You Dukes of Orleance, Burbon, and of Berry,
Alanſon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgonie,
Iaques Chatillion, Rambures, Vandemont,
Beumont, Grand Pree, Rouſſi, and Faulconbridge,
Loys, Leſtrale, Bouciquall, and Charaloyes,
High Dukes, great Princes, Barons, Lords, and Kings;
For your great Seats, now quit you of great ſhames:
Barre Harry England, that ſweepes through our Land
With Penons painted in the blood of Harflew:
Ruſh on his Hoaſt, as doth the melted Snow
Vpon the Valleyes, whoſe low Vaſſall Seat,
The Alpes doth ſpit, and void his rhewme upon.
Goe downe upon him, you have Power enough,
And in a Captive Chariot, into Roan
Bring him our Priſoner.

Conſt. This becomes the Great.
Sorry am I his numbers are ſo few,
His Souldiers ſick, and famiſht in their Martch:
For I am ſure, when he ſhall ſee our Army,
Hee'le drop his heart into the ſinck of feare,
And for atchievement, offer us his Ranſome.

King. Therefore Lord Conſtable, haſte on Montioy,
And let him ſay to England, that we ſend,
To know what willing Ranſome he will give.
Prince Dolphin, you ſhall ſtay with us in Roan.

Dolph. Not ſo, I doe beſeech your Majeſty.

King. Be patient, for you ſhall remaine with us.
Now forth Lord Conſtable, and Princes all:
And quickly bring us word of Englands fall. Exeunt.

Enter Captaines, Engliſh and VVelch, Gower and Fluellen.

Gower. How now Captaine Fluellen, come you from the Bridge?

Flu. I aſſure you, there is very excellent Services committed at the Bridge.

Gow. Is the Duke of Exeter ſafe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon, and a man that I love and honour with my ſoule, and my heart, and my duty, and my live, and my living, and my uttermoſt power. He is not, God be prayſed and bleſſed, any hurt in the World, but keepes the Bridge moſt valiantly, with excellent diſcipline. There is an aunchient Lieutenant there at the Pridge, I thinke in my very conſcience hee is as valiant a man as Marke Anthony, and hee is a man of no eſtimation in the World, but I did ſee him doe as gallant ſervice.

Gow. What doe you call him?

Flu. He is call'd aunchient Piſtoll.

Gow. I know him not.

Enter Piſtoll.

Flu. Here is the man.

Piſt. Captaine, I thee beſeech to doe me favours: the Duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. I, I prayſe God, and I have merited ſome love at his hands.

Piſt. Bardolph, a Souldier firme and ſound of heart, and of buxome valour, hath by cruell Fate, and giddy Fortunes furious fickle Wheele, that goddeſſe blind, that ſtands upon the rolling reſtleſſe Stone.

Flu. By your patience, aunchient Piſtoll: Fortune is painted blinde, with a Muffler afore his eyes, to ſignifie to you, that Fortune is blinde; and ſhee is painted alſo with a Wheele, to ſignifie to you, which is the Morall of it, that ſhee is turning and inconſtant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, looke you, is fixed upon a Sphericall Stone, which rowles, and rowles, and rowles: in good truth, the Poet makes a moſt excellent deſcription of it: Fortune is an excellent Morall.

Piſt. Fortune is Bardolphs foe, and frownes on him: for he hath ſtolne a Pax, and hanged muſt a be: damned death: let Gallowes gape for Dogge, let Man goe free, and let not Hempe his Wind-pipe ſuffocate: but Exeter hath given the doome of death, for Pax of little price. Therefore goe ſpeake, the Duke will heare thy voyce; and let not Bardolphs vitall thred bee cut with edge of Penny-Cord, and vile reproach. Speake Captaine for his Life, and I will thee requite.

Flu. Aunchient Piſtoll, I doe partly underſtand your meaning.

Piſt. Why then rejoyce therefore.

Flu. Certainly Aunchient, it is not a thing to rejoyce at: for if, looke you, he were my Brother, I would deſire the Duke to uſe his good pleaſure, and put him to execution; for diſcipline ought to be uſed.

Piſt. Dye, and be damn'd, and Figo for thy friendſhip.

Flu. It is well.

Piſt. The Figge of Spaine. Exit.

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit Raſcall, I remember him now: a Bawd, a Cut-purſe.

Flu. Ile aſſure you, a utt'red as prave words at the Pridge, as you ſhall ſee in a Summers day: but it is very well: what he ha's ſpoke to me, that is well I warrant you, when time is ſerve.

Gow. Why 'tis a Gull, a Foole, a Rogue, that now and then goes to the Warres, to grace himſelfe at his returne into London, under the forme of a Souldier: and ſuch fellowes are perfit in the Great Commanders Names, & they will learne you by rote where Services were done; at ſuch and ſuch a Sconce, at ſuch a Breach, at ſuch a Convoy: who came off bravely, who was ſhot, who diſgrac'd, what termes the Enemy ſtood on: and this they conne perfitly in the phraſe of Warre; which they trick up with new-tuned Oathes: and what a Beard of the Generalls Cut, and a horride Sute of the Campe, will doe among foming Bottles, and Ale-waſht wits, is wonderfull to be thought on: but you muſt learne to know ſuch ſlanders of the age, or elſe you may be marvellouſly miſtooke.

Flu. I tell you what, Captaine Gower: I doe perceive hee is not the man that hee would gladly make ſhew to the World hee is; if I finde a hole in his Coat, I will tell him my minde: hearke you, the King is comming, and I muſt ſpeake with him from the Pridge.

Drum and Colours. Enter the King and his poore Souldiers.

Flu. God pleſſe your Majeſty.

Kin. How now Fluellen, cam'ſt thou from the Bridge?

Flu. I, ſo pleaſe your Majeſty: The Duke of Exeter ha's very gallantly maintain'd the Pridge; the French is gone off, looke you, and there is gallant and moſt prave paſſages: marry, th'athverſarie was have poſſeſſion of the Pridge, but he is enforced to retyre, and the Duke of Exeter is Maſter of the Pridge: I can tell your Majeſty, the Duke is a prave man.

King. What men have you loſt, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th'athverſary hath beene very great, reaſonable great: mary for my part, I thinke the Duke hath loſt never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a Church, one Bardolph, if your Majeſty know the man: his face is all bubukles and whelkes, and knobs, and flames a fire, and his lippes blowes at his noſe, and it is like a coale of fire, ſometimes plew, and ſometimes red, but his noſe is executed, and his fire's out.

King. Wee would have all ſuch offendors ſo cut off: & we give expreſſe charge, that in our Martches through the Countrey, there bee nothing compell'd from the Villages; nothing taken, but pay'd for: none of the French upbrayded or abuſed in diſdainefull Language; for when Levity and Cruelty play for a Kingdome, the gentler Gameſter is the ſooneſt winner.

Tucket. Enter Mountioy.

Mountoy. You know me by my habit.

King. Well then, I know thee: what ſhall I know of thee?

Moun. My Maiſters mind.

King. Vnfold it.

Mountoy. Thus ſayes my King: Say thou to Harry of England, Though we ſeem'd dead, we bid but ſleepe: Advantage is a better Souldier then raſhneſſe. Tell him, wee could have rebuk'd him at Harflewe, but that wee thought not good to bruiſe an injury, till it were full ripe. Now we ſpeake upon our Q. and our voyce is imperiall: England ſhall repent his folly, ſee his weakeneſſe, and admire our ſufferance. Bid him therefore conſider of his ranſome, which muſt proportion the loſſes we have borne, the ſubjects we have loſt, the diſgrace wee have diſgeſted; which in weight to re-anſwer, his pettineſſe would bow under. For our loſſes, his Exchequer is too poore; for th'effuſion of our bloud, the Muſter of his Kingdome too faint a number; and for our diſgrace, his owne perſon kneeling at our feet, but a weake and worthleſſe ſatisfaction. To this adde defiance: and tell him for concluſion, he hath betrayed his followers, whoſe condemnation is pronounc't: So farre my King and Maiſter; ſo much my Office.

King. What is thy name? I know thy quality.

Mount. Mountioy.

King. Thou doo'ſt thy Office fairely. Turne thee back,
And tell thy King, I doe not ſeeke him now;
But could be willing to martch on to Callice,
Without impeachment: for to ſay the ſooth,
Though 'tis no wiſdome to confeſſe ſo much
Vnto an enemie of Craft and Vantage,
My people are with ſickneſſe much enfeebled,
My numbers leſſen'd: and thoſe few I have,
Almoſt no better then ſo many French;
Who when they were in health, I tell thee Herald,
I thought, upon one payre of Engliſh Legges
Did martch three Frenchmen. Yet forgive me God,
That I doe bragge thus; this your ayre of France
Hath blowne that vice in me. I muſt repent:
Goe therefore tell thy Maiſter, here I am;
My Ranſome, is this frayle and worthleſſe Trunke;
My Army, but a weake and ſickly Guard:
Yet God before, tell him we will come on,
Though France himſelfe, and ſuch another Neighbor
Stand in our way. There's for thy labour Mountioy.
Goe bid thy Maiſter well adviſe himſelfe,
If we may paſſe, we will: if we be hindred,
We ſhall your tawny ground with your red blood
Diſcolour: and ſo Mountioy fare you well.
The ſumme of all our Anſwer is but this:
We would not ſeeke a Battaile as we are,
Nor as we are, we ſay wee will not ſhun it:
So tell your Maiſter.

Mount. I ſhall deliver ſo: Thankes to your Highneſſe.

Glouc. I hope they will not come upon us now.

King. We are in Gods hand, Brother, not in theirs:
Martch to the Bridge, it now drawes toward night,
Beyond the River wee'le encampe our ſelves,
And on to morrow bid them martch away. Exeunt.

Enter the Conſtable of France, the Lord Rambures, Orleance, Dolphin, with others.

Conſt. Tut, I have the beſt Armour of the World: would it were day.

Orl. You have an excellent Armour: but let my Horſe have his due.

Conſt. It is the beſt Horſe of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be Morning?

Dolph. My Lord of Orleance, and my Lord High Conſtable, you talke of Horſe and Armour?

Orl. You are as well provided of both, as any Prince in the World.

Dolph. What a long Night is this? I will not change my Horſe with any that treades but on foure paſternes: ch'ha: he bounds from the Earth, as if his entrayles were hayres: le Cheval volant, the Pegaſus, ckes les narines de feu. When I beſtryde him, I ſoare, I am a Hawke: he trots the ayre: the Earth ſings, when he touches it: the baſeſt horne of his hooſe, is more Muſicall then the Pipe of Hermes.

Orl. Hee's of the colour of the Nutmeg.

Dolph. And of the heat of the Ginger. It is a Beaſt for Perſeus: hee is pure Ayre and Fire; and the dull Elements of Earth and Water never appeare in him, but only in patient ſtilneſſe while his Rider mounts him: hee is indeede a Horſe, and all other Iades you may call Beaſts.

Conſt. Indeed my Lord, it is a moſt abſolute and excellent Horſe.

Dolph. It is the Prince of Palfrayes, his Neigh is like the bidding of a Monarch, and his countenance enforces Homage.

Orl. No more Couſin.

Dolph. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot from the riſing of the Larke to the lodging of the Lambe, vary deſerved prayſe on my Palfray: it is a Threame as fluent as the Sea: Turne the Sands into eloquent tongues, and my Horſe is argument for them all: 'tis a ſubject for a Soueraigne to reaſon on, and for a Soveraignes Soveraigne to ride on: And for the World, familiar to us, and unknowne, to lay apart their particular Functions, and wonder at him. I once writ a Sonnet in his prayſe, and began thus, Wonder of Nature.

Orleance. I have heard a Sonnet begin ſo to ones Miſtreſſe.

Dolph. Then did they imitate that which I compos'd to my Courſer, for my Horſe is my Miſtreſſe.

Orl. Your Miſtreſſe beares well.

Well. Me well, which is the preſcript prayſe and perfection of a good and particular Miſtreſſe.

Conſt. Nay, for me thought yeſterday your Miſtreſſe ſhrewdly ſhooke your back.

Dolph. So perhaps did yours.

Conſt. Mine was not bridled.

Dolph. O then belike ſhe was old and gentle, and you rode like a Kerne of Ireland, your French Hoſe off, and in your ſtrait Stroſſers.

Conſt. You have good judgement in Horſemanſhip.

Dolph. Be warn'd by me then: they that ride ſo, and ride not warily, fall into foule Boggs: I had rather have my Horſe to my Miſtreſſe.

Conſt. I had as live have my Miſtreſſe a Iade.

Dolph. I tell thee Conſtable, my Miſtreſſe weares his owne hayre.

Conſt. I could make as true a boaſt as that, if I had a Sow to my Miſtreſſe.

Dolph. Le chien eſt retourné a ſon propre vomiſſement, eſt la levye lavee au bourbier: thou mak'ſt uſe of any thing.

Conſt. Yet doe I not uſe my Horſe for my Miſtreſſe, or any ſuch Proverbe, ſo little kin to the purpoſe.

Ramb. My Lord Conſtable, the Armour that I ſaw in your Tent to night, are thoſe Starres or Sunnes upon it?

Conſt. Starres my Lord.

Dolph. Some of them will fall to morrow, I hope.

Conſt. And yet my Sky ſhall not want.

Dolph. That may be, for you beare a many ſuperfluouſly, and 'twere more honor ſome were away.

Conſt. Ev'n as your Horſe beares your prayſes, who would trot as wel, were ſome of your bragges diſmounted.

Dolph. Would I were able to loade him with his deſert. Will it never be day? I will trot to morrow a mile, and my way ſhal be paved with Engliſh Faces.

Conſt. I will not ſay ſo, for feare I ſhould be fac't out of my way: but I would it were morning, for I would faine be about the eares of the Engliſh.

Ramb. Who will goe to Hazard with me for twenty Priſoners?

Conſt. You muſt firſt goe your ſelfe to hazard, ere you have them.

Dolph. 'Tis Mid-night, Ile goe arme my ſelfe. Exit.

Orl. The Dolphin longs for morning.

Ramb. He longs to eate the Engliſh.

Conſt. I thinke he will eate all he kills.

Orl. By the white Hand of my Lady, hee's a gallant Prince.

Conſt. Sweare by her Foot, that ſhe may tread out the Oath.

Orleance. He is ſimply the moſt active Gentleman of France.

Conſt. Doing is activity, and he will ſtill be doing.

Orl. He never did harme, that I heard of.

Conſt. Nor will doe none to morrow: hee will keepe that good name ſtill.

Orl. I know him to be valiant.

Conſt. I was told that, by one that knowes him better then you

Orl. What's hee?

Conſt. Marry hee told me ſo himſelfe, and hee ſaid he car'd not who knew it.

Orleance. He needes not, it is no hidden vertue in him.

Conſt. By my faith Sir, but it is: never any body ſaw it, but his Lacquey: 'tis a hooded valour, and when it appeares, it will bate.

Orl. Ill will never ſayd well.

Conſt. I will cap that Proverbe with, There is flattery in friendſhip.

Orl. And I will take up that with, Give the Devill his due.

Conſt. Well plac't: there ſtands your friend for the Devill: have at the very eye of that Proverbe with, A Pox of the Devill.

Orl. You are the better at Proverbs, by how much a Fooles Bolt is ſoone ſhot.

Conſt. You have ſhot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the firſt time you were over-ſhot.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord high Conſtable, the Engliſh lye within fifteene hundred paces of your Tents.

Conſt. Who hath meaſur'd the ground?

Meſ. The Lord Grandpree.

Conſt. A valiant and moſt expert Gentleman. Would it were day? Alas poore Harry of England: hee longs not for the Dawning, as wee doe.

Orl. What a wretched and peeviſh fellow is this King of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd fellowers ſo farre out of his knowledge.

Conſt. If the Engliſh had any apprehenſion, they would runne away.

Orl. That they lack: for if their heads had any intellectual Armour, they could never weare ſuch heavy Head-pieces.

Ramb. That Iland of England breedes very valiant Creatures; their Maſtiffes are of vnmatchable courage.

Orleance. Fooliſh Curres, that runne winking into the mouth of a Ruſſian Beare, & have their heads cruſht like rotten Apples: you may as well ſay, that's a valiant Flea, that dare eate his breakefaſt on the Lippe of a Lyon.

Conſt. Iuſt, juſt: and the men doe ſympathize with the Maſtiffes, in robuſtious and rough comming on, leaving their Wits with their Wives: and then give them great Meales of Beefe, and Iron and Steele; they will eate like Wolves, and fight like Devils.

Orl. I, but theſe Engliſh are ſhrewdly out of Beeefe.

Conſt. Then ſhall we finde to morrow, they have only ſtomackes to eate, and none to fight. Now is it time to arme: come, ſhall we about it?

Orl. It is now two a Clock: but let me ſee, by ten
We ſhall have each a hundred Engliſh men. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Chorus.

Now entertaine conjecture of a time,
When creeping Murmure and the poring Darke
Fills the wide Veſſell of the Vniverſe.
From Camp to Camp, through the foule Wõb of Night
The Humme of either Army ſtilly ſounds,
That the fixt Centinels almoſt receive
The ſecret Whiſpers of each others Watch.
Fire anſwers fire, and through their paly flames
Each Battaile ſees the others umber'd face.
Steed threatens Steed, in high and boaſtfull Neighs
Piercing the Nights dull Eare: and from the Tents,
The Armourers accompliſhing the Knights,
With buſie Hammers cloſing Rivets up,
Give dreadfull note of preparation.
The Countrey Cocks doe crow, the Clocks doe towle:
And the third howre of drowſie Morning nam'd,
Prowd of their Numbers, and ſecure in Soule,
The confident and over-luſty French,
Doe the low-rated Engliſh play at Dice;
And chide the creepſe-tardy-gated Night,
Who like a foule and ougly Witch doth limpe
So tediouſly away. The poore condemned Engliſh,
Like Sacrifices, by their watchfull Fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The Mornings danger: and their geſture ſad,
Inveſting lanke-leane Cheeks, and Warre-worne Coats,
Preſented them unto the gazing Moone
So many horride Ghoſts. O now, who will behold
The Royall Captaine of this ruin'd Band
Walking from Watch to Watch, from Tent to Tent;
Let him cry, Prayſe and Glory on his head:
For forth he goes, and viſits all his Hoaſt,
Bids them good morrow with a modeſt Smyle,
And calls them Brothers, Friends, and Countreymen.
Vpon his Royall Face there is no note,
How dread an Army hath enrounded him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of Colour
Vnto the weary and all-watched Night:
But freſhly lookes, and over-beares Attaint,
With chearefull ſemblance, and ſweet Majeſty:
That every Wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his Lookes,
A Largeſſe univerſall, like the Sunne,
His liberall Eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold feare, that meane and gentle all
Behold, as may unworthineſſe define,
A little touch of Harry in the Night,
And ſo our Scene muſt to the Battaile flye:
Where, O for pitty, we ſhall much diſgrace,
With foure or five moſt vile and ragged foyles,
(Right ill diſpos'd, in brawle ridiculous)
The Name of Agincourt. Yet ſit and ſee,
Minding true things, by what their Mock'ries bee.
Exit.

Enter the King, Bedford, and Glouceſter.

King. Gloſter, 'tis true that we are in great danger,
The greater therefore ſhould our Courage be.
God morrow Brother Bedford: God Almighty,
There is ſome ſoule of goodneſſe in things evill,
Would men obſervingly diſtill it out.
For our bad Neighbour makes us early ſtirrers,
Which is both healthfull, and good husbandry.
Beſides, they are our outward Conſciences,
And Preachers to us all; admoniſhing,
That we ſhould dreſſe us fairely for our end.
Thus may we gather Honey from the Weed,
And make a Morall of the Divell himſelfe.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good ſoft Pillow for that good white Head,
Were better then a churliſh turfe of France.

Erpin. Not ſo my Liege, this Lodging likes me better,
Since I may ſay, now lye I like a King.

King. 'Tis good for men to love their preſent paine,
Vpon example, ſo the Spirit is eaſed:
And when the Mind is quickned, out of doubt
The Organs, though defunct and dead before,
Breake up their drowſie Grave, and newly move
With caſted ſlough, and freſh legerity.
Lend me thy Cloake Sir Thomas: Brothers both,
Commend me to the Princes in our Campe;
Doe my good morrow to them, and anon
Deſire them all to my Pavillion.

Gloſter. We ſhall, my Liege.

Erping. Shall I attend your Grace?

King. No my good Knight:
Goe with my Brothers to my Lords of England:
I and my Boſome muſt debate awhile,
And then I would no other company.

Erping. The Lord in Heauen bleſſe thee, Noble Harry.
Exeunt.

King. God a mercy old Heart, thou ſpeak'ſt chearefully.

Enter Piſtoll.

Piſt. Che vous la?

King. A friend.

Piſt. Diſcuſſe unto me, art thou Officer, or art thou baſe, common, and popular?

King. I am a Gentleman of a Company.

Piſt. Trayl'ſt thou the puiſſant Pyke?

King. Even ſo: what are you?

Piſt. As good a Gentleman as the Emperor.

King. Then you are a better then the King.

Piſt. The King's a Bawcocke, and a Heart of Gold, a Lad of Life, an Impe of Fame, of Parents good, of Fiſt moſt valiant: I kiſſe his durty ſhooe, and from heart-ſtring I love the lovely Bully. What is thy Name?

King. Harry le Roy.

Pi. Le Roy? a Corniſh Name: art thou of Corniſh Crew?

King. No, I am a Welchman.

Piſt. Know'ſt thou Fluellen?

King. Yes.

Piſt. Tell him Ile knock his Leeke about his Pate upon S. Davies day.

King. Doe not you weare your Dagger in your Cappe that day, leaſt he knock that about yours.

Piſt. Art thou his friend?

King. And his Kinſman too.

Piſt. The Figo for thee then.

King. I thanke you: God be with you.

Piſt. My name is Piſtol call'd. Exit.

King. It ſorts well with your fierceneſſe.

Manet King.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Captaine Fluellen.

Flu. 'So, in the Name of Ieſu Chriſt, ſpeake fewer: it is the greateſt admiration in the univerſall World, when the true and aunchient Prerogatifes and Lawes of the Warres is not kept: if you would take the paines but to examine the Warres of Pompey the Great, you ſhall finde, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle tadle nor pibble bable in Pompeyes Campe: I warrant you, you ſhall finde the Ceremonies of the Warres, and the Cares of it, and the Formes of it, and the Sobriety of it, and the Modeſty of it, to be otherwiſe.

Gower. Why the Enemie is lowd, you heare him all Night.

Flu. If the Enemie is an Aſſe and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe; is it meet, thinke you, that wee ſhould alſo, looke you, be an Aſſe and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe, in your owne conſcience now?

Gow. I will ſpeake lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beſeech you, that you will. Exit.

King. Though it appeare a little out of faſhion,
There is much care and valour in this Welchman.

Enter three Souldiers, Iohn Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother Iohn Bates, is not that the Morning which breakes yonder?

Bates. I thinke it be: but wee have no great cauſe to deſire the approach of day.

Williams. Wee ſee yonder the beginning of the day, but I thinke wee ſhall never ſee thee end of it. Who goes there?

King. A friend.

Will. Vnder what Captaine ſerve you?

King. Vnder Sir Iohn Erpingham.

Will. A good old Commander, and a moſt kinde Gentleman: I pray you, what thinkes he of our eſtate?

King. Even as men wrackt upon a Sand, that looke to be waſht off the next Tyde.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the King?

King. No: nor it is not meet he ſhould: for though I ſpeake it to you, I thinke the King is but a man, as I am: the Violet ſmells to him, as it doth to me; the Element ſhewes to him, as it doth to me; all his ſences have but humane Conditions: his Ceremonies layd by, in his Nakedneſſe he appeares but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted then ours, yet when they ſtoupe, they ſtoupe with the like wing: therefore, when he ſees reaſon of feares, as we doe; his feares, out of doubt, be of the ſame rellish as ours are: yet in reaſon, no man ſhould poſſeſſe him with any appearance of feare; leaſt hee, by ſhewing it, ſhould dis-hearten his Army.

Bates. He may ſhew what outward courage he will: but I beleeve as cold a Night as 'tis, hee could wiſh himſelfe in Thames up to the Neck; and ſo I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, ſo we were quit here.

King. By my troth, I will ſpeake my conſcience of the King: I thinke hee would not wiſh himſelfe any where, but where hee is.

Bates. Then would he were here alone; ſo ſhould he be ſure to be ranſomed, and a many poore mens lives ſaved.

King. I dare ſay, you love him not ſo ill, to wiſh him here alone: howſoever you ſpeake this to feele other mens minds, me thinks I could not dye any where ſo contented, as in the Kings company; his Cauſe being juſt, and his Quarrell honorable.

Will. That's more then we know.

Bates. I, or more then we ſhould ſeeke after; for wee know enough, if wee know wee are the Kings Subjects: if his Cauſe be wrong, our obedience to the King wipes the Cryme of it out of us.

Williams. But if the Cauſe be not good, the King himſelfe hath a heavy Reckoning to make, when all thoſe Legges, and Armes, and Heads, chopt off in a Battaile, ſhall joyne together at the latter day, and cry all, Wee dyed at ſuch a place, ſome ſwearing, ſome crying for a Surgeon; ſome upon their Wives left poore behind them; ſome upon the Debts they owe, ſome upon their Childrē rawly left: I am afear'd, there are few dye well, that dye in Battaile: for how can they charitably diſpoſe of any thing, when Blood is their argument? Now, if theſe men doe not dye well, it will be a black matter for the King, that led them to it; whom to diſobey, were againſt all proportion of ſubjection.

King. So, if a Sonne that is by his Father ſent about Merchandize, doe ſinfully miſcarry upon the Sea; the imputation of his wickedneſſe, by your rule, ſhould be impoſed upon his Father that ſent him: or if a Servant, under his Maiſters command, tranſporting a ſumme of Money, be aſſayled by Robbers, and die in many irreconcil'd Iniquities; you may call the buſineſſe of the Maiſter the author of the Servants damnation: but this is not ſo: The King is not bound to anſwer the particular endings of his Souldiers, the Father of his Sonne, nor the Maiſter of his Servant; for they purpoſe not their death, when they purpoſe their ſervices. Beſides, there is no King, be his Cauſe never ſo ſpotleſſe, if it come to the arbitrement of Swords, can trye it out with all unſpotted Souldiers: ſome (peradventure) have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived Murther; ſome, of beguiling Virgins with the broken Seales of Perjury; ſome, making the Warres their Bulwarke, that have before gored the gentle Boſome of Peace with Pillage and Robberie. Now, if theſe men have defeated the Law, and outrunne Native puniſhment; though they can out-ſtrip men, they have no wings to flye from God. Warre is his Beadle, Warre is his Vengeance: ſo that here men are puniſht, for before breach of the Kings Lawes, in now the Kings Quarrell: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would bee ſafe, they periſh. Then if they dye unprovided, no more is the King guilty of their damnation, then hee was before guilty of thoſe Impieties, for the which they are now viſited. Every Subjects Duty is the Kings, but every Subjects Soule is his owne. Therefore ſhould every Souldier in the Warres doe as every ſicke man in his Bed, waſh every Moth out of his Conſcience: and dying ſo, Death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was bleſſedly loſt, wherein ſuch preparation was gayned: and in him that eſcapes, it were not ſinne to thinke, that making God ſo free an offer, he let him outlive that day, to ſee his Greatneſſe, and to teach others how they ſhould prepare.

Will. 'Tis certaine, every man that dyes ill, the ill upon his owne head, the King is not to anſwer it.

Bates. I doe not deſire hee ſhould anſwer for me, and yet I determine to fight luſtily for him.

King. I my ſelfe heard the King ſay he would not be ranſom'd.

Will. I, hee ſaid ſo, to make us fight chearefully: but when our throats are cut, hee may be ranſom'd, and wee ne're the wiſer.

King. If I live to ſee it, I will never truſt his word after.

Will. You pay him then: that's a perillous ſhot out of an Elder Gunne, that a poore and a private diſpleaſure can doe againſt a Monarch: you may as well goe about to turne the Sunne to yce, with fanning in his face with a Peacockes feather: You'le never truſt his word after; come, 'tis a fooliſh ſaying.

King. Your reproofe is ſomething too round, I ſhould be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it bee a Quarrell betweene us, if you live.

King. I embrace it.

Will. How ſhall I know thee againe?

King. Give me any Gage of thine, and I will weare it in my Bonnet: Then if ever thou dar'ſt acknowledge it, I will make it my Quarrell.

Will. Heere's my Glove: Give mee another of thine.

King. There.

VVill. This will I alſo weare in my Cap: if ever thou come to me, and ſay, after to morrow, This is my Glove, by this Hand I will take thee a box on the eare.

King. If ever I live to ſee it, I will challenge it.

VVill. Thou dar'ſt as well be hang'd.

King. Well, I will doe it, though I take thee in the Kings company.

VVill. Keepe thy word: fare thee well.

Bates Be friends you Engliſh fooles, be friends, wee have French Quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

Exeunt Souldiers.

King. Indeede the French may lay twenty French Crownes to one, they will beat us, for they beare them on their ſhoulders: but it is no Engliſh Treaſon to cut French Crownes, and to morrow the King himſelfe will be a Clipper.
Vpon the King, let us our Lives, our Soules,
Our Debts, our carefull Wives,
Our Children, and our Sinnes, lay on the King:
We muſt beare all.
O hard Condition, Twin-borne with Greatneſſe,
Subject to the breath of every foole, whoſe ſence
No more can feele, but his owne wringing.
What infinite hearts-eaſe muſt Kings neglect,
That private men enjoy?
And what have Kings, that Privates have not too,
Saue Ceremonie, ſave generall Ceremonie?
And what art thou, thou Idoll Ceremony?
What kind of god art thou? that ſuffer'ſt more
Of mortall griefes, then doe thy worſhippers.
What are thy Rents? what are thy Commings in?
O Ceremony, ſhew me but thy worth.
What? is thy Soule of Adoration?
Art thou ought elſe but Place, Degree, and Forme,
Creating awe and feare in other men?
Wherein thou art leſſe happy, being fear'd,
Then they in fearing.
What drink'ſt thou oft, in ſtead of Homage ſweet,
But poyſon'd flatterie? O, be ſick, great Greatneſſe,
And bid thy Ceremony give thee cure.
Thinks thou the fiery Fever will goe out
With titles blowne from Adulation?
Wilt it give place to flexure and low bending?
Canſt thou, when thou command'ſt the beggers knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou prowd Dreame,
That play'ſt ſo ſubtilly with a Kings Repoſe,
I am a King that find thee: and I know,
'Tis not the Balme, the Scepter, and the Ball,
The Sword, the Mace, the Crowne Imperiall,
The enter-tiſſued Robe of Gold and Pearle,
The farſed Title running 'fore the King,
The Throne he ſits on: nor the Tyde of Pompe,
That beates upon the high ſhore of this World:
No, not all theſe, thrice-gorgeous Ceremonies,
Not all theſe, lay'd in bed Majeſticall,
Can ſleepe ſo ſoundly, as the wretched Slave:
Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to reſt, cram'd with diſtreſſefull bread,
Never ſees horride Night, the Child of Hell:
But like a Lacquey, from the Riſe to Set,
Sweates in the eye of Phebus; and all Night
Sleepes in Elizium: next day after dawne,
Doth riſe and helpe Hiperion to his Horſe,
And followes ſo the ever-running yeere
With profitable labour to his Grave:
And but for Ceremony, ſuch a Wretch,
Winding up Dayes with toyle, and Nights with ſleepe,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a King.
The Slave, a Member of the Countreyes peace,
Enjoyes it: but in groſſe braine little wots,
What watch the King keepes, to maintaine the peace;
Whoſe howres, the Peſant beſt advantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My Lord, your Nobles jealous of your abſence,
Seeke through your Campe to find you.

King. Good old Knight, collect them all together
At my Tent: Ile be before thee.

Erp. I ſhall doo't, my Lord. Exit.

King. O God of Battailes, ſteele my Souldiers hearts,
Poſſeſſe them not with feare: Take from them now
The ſence of reckning of th'oppoſed numbers:
Pluck their hearts from them. Not to day, O Lord,
O not to day, thinke not upon the fault
My Father made, in compaſſing the Crowne.
I Richards body have interred new,
And on it have beſtowed more contrite teares,
Then from it iſſued forced drops of blood.
Fiue hundred poore I have in yeerely pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up
Toward Heaven, to pardon blood:
And I have built two Chauntries,
Where the ſad and ſolemne Prieſts ſing ſtill
For Richards Soule. More will I doe:
Though all that I can doe, is nothing worth:
Since that my Penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Glouceſter.

Glouc. My Liege.

King. My Brother Glouceſters voyce? I:
I know thy errand, I will goe with thee:
The day, my friend, and all things ſtay for me. Exeunt.

Enter the Dolphin, Orleance, Ramburs, and Beaumont.

Orleance. The Sunne doth gild our Armour, up my Lords.

Dolph. Monte Cheual: My Horſe, Valet Lacquay: Ha.

Orl. Oh brave ſpirit.

Dolph. Via les ewes & terre.

Orl. Rien puis le air & feu.

Dolph. Cein, Couſin Orleance. Enter Conſtable.
Now my Lord Conſtable?

Conſt. Hearke how our Steedes, for preſent Service neigh.

Dolph. Mount them, and make inciſion in their Hides,
That their hot blood may ſpin in Engliſh eyes,
And doubt them with ſuperfluous courage: ha.

Ram. What, will you have them weep our Horſes blood?
How ſhall we then behold their naturall teares?

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſſenger. The Engliſh are embattail'd, you French Peeres.

Conſt. To Horſe you gallant Princes, ſtraight to Horſe.
Doe but behold yond poore and ſtarued Band,
And your faire ſhew ſhall ſuck away their Soules,
Leaving them but the ſhales and huskes of men.
There is not worke enough for all our hands,
Scarce blood enough in all their ſickly Veines,
To give each naked Curtleax a ſtayne,
That our French Gallants ſhall to day draw out,
And ſheath for lack of ſport. Let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our Valour will o're-turne them.
'Tis poſitive 'gainſt all exceptions, Lords,
That our ſuperfluous Lacquies, and our Peſants,
Who in unneceſſary action ſwarme
About our Squares of Battaile, were enow
To purge this field of ſuch a hilding Foe;
Though we upon this Mountaines Baſis by,
Tooke ſtand for idle ſpeculation:
But that our Honours muſt not. What's to ſay?
A very little little let us doe,
And all is done: then let the Trumpets ſound
The Tucket Sonuance, and the Note to mount:
For our approach ſhall ſo much dare the field,
That England ſhall couch downe in feare, and yeeld.

Enter Graundpree.

Grandpree. Why do you ſtay ſo long, my Lords of France?
Yond Iland Carrions, deſperate of their bones,
Ill-favouredly become the Morning field:
Their ragged Curtaines poorely are let looſe,
And our Ayre ſhakes them paſſing ſcornefully.
Bigge Mars ſeemes banqu'rout in their begger'd Hoaſt,
And faintly through a ruſty Bever peepes.
The Horſemen ſit like fixed Candleſticks,
With Torch-ſtaves in their hand: and their poore Iades
Lob downe their heads, drooping the hide and hips:
The gumme downe roping from their pale-dead eyes,
And in their pale dull mouthes the Iymold Bitt
Lyes foule with chaw'd graſſe, ſtill and motionleſſe,
And their executors, the knaviſh Crowes,
Flye o're them all, impatient for their howre.
Deſcription cannot ſute it ſelfe in words,
To demonſtrate the Life of ſuch a Battaile,
In life ſo liveleſſe, as it ſhewes it ſelfe.

Conſt. They have ſaid their prayers,
And they ſtay for death.

Dol. Shall we go ſend them Dinners, and freſh Sutes,
And give their faſting Horſes Provender,
And after fight with them?

Conſt. I ſtay but for my Guard: on
To the field, I will the Banner from a Trumpet take,
And uſe it for my haſte. Come, come away,
The Sunne is high, and we out-weare the day. Exeunt.

Enter Glouceſter, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham with all his Hoaſt: Salisbury, and Weſtmerland.

Glouc. Where is the King?

Bedf. The King himſelfe is rode to view their Battaile.

Weſt. Of fighting men they have full threeſcore thouſand.

Exe. There's five to one, beſides they all are freſh.

Saliſb. Gods Arme ſtrike with us, 'tis a fearefull odds.
God buy'you Princes all; Ile to my Charge:
If we no more meet, till we meet in Heaven;
Then joyfully, my Noble Lord of Bedford,
My deare Lord Glouceſter, and my good Lord Exeter,
And my kind Kinſman, Warriors all, adieu.

Bed. Farwell good Salisbury, & good luck go with thee:
And yet I doe thee wrong, to mind thee of it,
For thou art fam'd of the firme truth of valour.

Exe. Farewell kind Lord: fight valiantly to day.

Bed. He is as full of Valour as of Kindneſſe,
Princely in both.

Enter the King.

Weſt. O that we now had here
But one ten thouſand of thoſe men in England,
That doe no worke to day.

King. What's he that wiſhes ſo?
My Couſin Weſtmerland. No my faire Couſin:
If we are markt to dye, we are enow
To do our Countrey loſſe: and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater ſhare of honour.
Gods will, I pray thee wiſh not one man more.
By Iove, I am not covetous for Gold,
Nor care I who doth feed upon my coſt:
It yernes me not, if men my Garments weare;
Such outward things dwell not in my deſires.
But if it be a ſinne to covet Honor,
I am the moſt offending Soule alive.
No 'faith, my Couze, wiſh not a man from England:
Gods peace, I would not loſe ſo great an Honor,
As one man more me thinkes would ſhare from me,
For the beſt hope I have. O, doe not wiſh one more:
Rather proclaime it (Weſtmerland) through my Hoaſt,
That he which hath no ſtomack to this fight,
Let him depart, his Paſport ſhall be made,
And Crownes for Convoy put into his Purſe:
We would not dye in that mans company,
That feares his fellowſhip, to dye with us.
This day is call'd the Feaſt of Criſpian:
He that out-lives this day, and comes ſafe home,
Will ſtand a tip-toe when this day is named,
And rowſe him at the Name of Criſpian:
He that ſhall ſee this day, and live old age,
Will yeerely on the Vigill feaſt his neighbours,
And ſay, to morrow is Saint Criſpian:
Then will he ſtrip his ſleeve, and ſhew his skarres:
Old men forget; yet all ſhall not be forgot:
But hee'le remember, with advantages,
What feats he did that day. Then ſhall our Names,
Familiar in his mouth as houſehold words,

Harry the King, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Glouceſter,
Be in their flowing Cups freſhly remembred.
This ſtory ſhall the good man teach his ſonne:
And Criſpine Criſpian ſhall n'ere goe by,
From this day to the ending of the World,
But we in it ſhall be remembred;
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers:
For he to day that ſheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother: be he ne're ſo vile,
This day ſhall gentle his condition.
And Gentlemen in Englad, now a bed,
Shall thinke themſelves accurſt they were not here;
And hold their Manhoods cheape, whiles any ſpeakes,
That fought with us upon Saint Criſpines day.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My Soveraigne Lord, beſtow your ſelfe with ſpeed:
The French are bravely in their battailles ſet,
And will with all expedience charge on us.

King. All things are ready, if our minds be ſo.

Weſt. Periſh the man, whoſe mind is backward now.

King. Thou do'ſt not wiſh more helpe from England, Couze?

Weſt. Gods will, my Liege, would you and I alone,
Without more helpe, could fight this Royall battaile.

King. Why now thou haſt unwiſht five thouſand men:
Which likes me better, then to wiſh us one.
You know your places: God be with you all.

Tucket. Enter Montioy.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee King Harry,
If for thy Ranſome thou wilt now compound,
Before thy moſt aſſured Overthrow:
For certainly, thou art ſo neere the Gulfe,
Thou needs muſt be englutted. Beſides, in mercy
The Conſtable deſires thee, thou wilt mind
Thy followers of Repentance; that their Soules
May make a peacefull and a ſweet retyre
From off theſe fields: where (wretches) their poore bodies
Muſt lye and feſter.

King. Who hath ſent thee now?

Mont. The Conſtable of France.

King. I pray thee beare my former Anſwer back:
Bid them atchieve me, and then ſell my bones.
Good God, why ſhould they mock poore fellowes thus?
The man that once did ſell the Lyons skin
While the beaſt liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him.
A many of our bodyes ſhall no doubt
Find Native Graves: upon the which, I truſt
Shall witneſſe live in Braſſe of this dayes worke.
And thoſe that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buryed in your Dunghills,
They ſhall be fam'd: for there the Sun ſhall greet them,
And draw their honors reeking up to Heaven,
Leaving their earthly parts to choake your Clyme,
The ſmell whereof ſhall breed a Plague in France.
Marke then abounding valour in our Engliſh:
That being dead, like to the bullets graſing,
Breake out into a ſecond courſe of miſchiefe,
Killing in relapſe of Mortality.
Let me ſpeake prowdly: Tell the Conſtable,
We are but Warriors for the working day:
Our Gayneſſe and our Gilt are all beſmyrcht
With rayny Martching in the painefull field.
There's not a piece of feather in our Hoaſt:
Good argument (I hope) we will not flye:
And time hath worne us into ſlovenry.
But by the Maſſe, our hearts are in the trim:
And my poore Souldiers tell me, yet ere Night,
They'le be in freſher Robes, or they will pluck
The gay new Coats o're the French Souldiers heads,
And turne them out of ſervice. If they doe this,
As if God pleaſe, they ſhall; my Ranſome then
Will ſoone be levyed.
Herauld, ſave thou thy labour:
Come thou no more for Ranſome, gentle Herauld,
They ſhall have none, I ſweare, but theſe my joynts:
Which if they have, as I will leave um them,
Shall yeeld them little, tell the Conſtable.

Mont. I ſhall, King Harry. And ſo fare thee well:
Thou never ſhalt heare Herauld any more. Exit.

King. I feare thou wilt once more come againe for a Ranſome.

Enter York.

Yorke. My Lord, moſt humbly on my knee I begge
The leading of the Vaward.

King. Take it, brave Yorke.
Now Souldiers march away,
And how thou pleaſeſt God, diſpoſe the day. Exeunt.

Alarum. Excurſions.

Enter Piſtoll, French Souldier, Boy.

Piſtol. Yeeld Curre.

French. Ie penſe que vous eſtes le Gentil-home de bone qualité.

Piſt. Qualtity calmy cuſture me. Art thou a Gentleman? What is thy Name? diſcuſſe.

French. O Seigneur Dieu.

Piſt. O Signieur Dewe ſhould be a Gentleman: perpend my words O Signieur Dewe, and marke: O Signeur Dewe, thou dyeſt on point of Fox, except O Signieur thou doe give to me egregious Ranſome.

French. O prennez miſericorde ayez pitie de moy.

Piſt. Moy ſhall not ſerve, I will have forty Moyes: for I will fetch thy rymme out at thy Throat, in droppes of Crimſon blood.

French. Eſt-il impoſſible d'eſchapper la force de ton bras.

Piſt. Braſſe, Curre? thou damned and luxurious Mountaine Goat, offer'ſt me Braſſe?

French. O pardonne moy.

Piſt. Say'ſt thou me ſo? is that a Tonne of Moyes? Come hither boy, aske me this ſlave in French what is his Name.

Boy. Eſcoute comment eſtes vous appellé?

French. Monſieur le Fer.

Boy. He ſayes his Name is M. Fer.

Piſt. M. Fer: Ile fer him, and firke him, and ferret him: diſcuſſe the ſame in French unto him.

Boy. I doe not know the French for fer, and ferret, & firke.

Piſt. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

French. Que dit-il Monſieur?

Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous vous teniez preſt, car ce ſoldat icy eſt diſpoſee tout aſture de couper voſtre gorge.

Piſt. Owy, cuppele gorge parmafoy peſant, unleſſe thou give me Crownes, brave Crownes, or mangled ſhalt thou be by this my Sword.

French. O Ie vous ſupplie pour l'amour de Dieu: me pardonner, Ie ſuis Gentil-home de bonne maiſon, garde ma vie, & Ie vous donneray deux cents eſcus.

Piſt. What are his words?

Boy. He prayes you to ſave his life, he is a Gentleman of a good houſe, and for his ranſom he will give you two hundred Crownes.

Piſt. Tell him my fury ſhall abate, and I the Crownes wil take.

Fren. Petit Monſieur que dit-il?

Boy. Encore qu'il eſt contre ſon Iurement, de pardonner aucun priſonnier: neant-moins pour les eſcus que vous luy promettez, il eſt content de vous donner la liberté de franchiſe.

Fre. Sur mes genoux ie vous donne milles remerciment, & Ie me eſtime heureux que ie ne tombe entre les mains d'un Chevalier, ie penſe le plus brave valiant, & tres deſtiné Signieur d'Angleterre.

Piſt. Expound unto me boy.

Boy. He gives you upon his knees a thouſand thanks, and eſteemes himſelfe happy, that he hath falne into the hands of one (as he thinkes) the moſt brave, valorous and thrice-worthy ſigneur of England.

Piſt. As I ſucke blood, I will ſome mercy ſhew. Follow mee:

Boy. Sauve vous le grand Capitaine?

I did never know ſo wofull a voice iſſue from ſo empty a heart: but the ſong is true, The empty veſſell makes the greateſt ſound. Bardolfe and Nim had tenne times more valour, then this roaring divell i'th old play, that every one may payre his nayles with a wooden dagger, and they are both hang'd, and ſo would this be, if hee durſt ſteale any thing adventurouſly. I muſt ſtay with the Lackies, with the luggage of our camp, the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it, for there is none to guard it but boyes. Exit.

Enter Conſtable, Orleance, Burbon, Dolphin, and Rambures.

Con. O Diable.

Orl. O ſigneur le iour & perdia, toute & perdie.

Dol. Mort Dieu ma vie, all is confounded, all,
Reproach, and everlaſting ſhame
Sits mocking in our Plumes. A ſhort Alarum.
O meſchante fortune, do not runne away.

Con. Why all our rankes are broke.

Dol. O perdurable ſhame, let's ſtab our ſelves:
Be theſe the wretches that we plaid at dice for?

Orl. Is this the King we ſent to, for his ranſome?

Bur. Shame, and eternall ſhame, nothing but ſhame,
Let us flye in once more backe againe,
And he that will not follow Burbon now,
Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand
Like a baſe Pander hold the Chamber doore,
Whilſt by a baſe ſlave, no gentler then my dogge,
His faireſt daughter is contaminated.

Con. Diſorder that hath ſpoyl'd us, friend us now,
Let us on heapes go offer up our lives.

Orl. We are enow yet living in the Field,
To ſmother up the Engliſh in our throngs,
If any order might be thought upon.

Bur. The divell take Order now, Ile to the throng;
Let life be ſhort, elſe ſhame will be too long. Exit.

Alarum. Enter the King and his trayne, with Priſoners.

King. Well have we done, thrice-valiant Countrimen,
But all's not done, yet keepe the French the field.

Exe. The D. of York commends him to your Majeſty

King. Lives he good Vnckle: thrice within this houre
I ſaw him downe: thrice up againe, and fighting,
From Helmet to the ſpurre, all blood he was.

Exo. In which array (brave Soldier) doth he lye,
Larding the plaine: and by his bloody ſide,
(Yoake-fellow to his honour-owing-wounds)
The Noble Earle of Suffolke alſo lyes.
Suffolke firſt died, and Yorke all hagled over
Comes to him, where in gore he lay inſteeped,
And takes him by the Beard, kiſſes the gaſhes
That bloodily did yawne upon his face.
He cryes aloud; Tarry my Coſin Suffolke,
My ſoule ſhall thine keepe company to heaven:
Tarry (ſweet ſoule) for mine, then flye a-breſt:
As in this glorious and well-foughten field
We kept together in our Chivalry.
Vpon theſe words I came and cheer'd him up,
He ſmil'd me in the face, raught me his hand,
And with a feeble gripe, ſayes: Deere my Lord,
Commend my ſervice to my Soveraigne,
So did he turne, and over Suffolkes necke
He threw his wounded arme, and kiſt his lippes,
And ſo eſpous'd to death, with blood he ſeal'd
A Teſtament of Noble-ending-love:
The pretty and ſweet manner of it forc'd
Thoſe waters from me, which I would have ſtop'd,
But I had not ſo much of man in mee,
And all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to teares.

King. I blame you not,
For hearing this, I muſt perforce compound
With mixtfull eyes, or they will iſſue to. Alarum,
But hearke, what new alarum is this ſame?
The French have re-enforc'd their ſcatter'd men:
Then every ſouldiour kill his Priſoners,
Give the word through. Exit

Actus Quartus.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Flu. Kill the poyes and the luggage, 'Tis expreſſely againſt the Law of Armes, tis as arrant a peece of knavery marke you now, as can bee offert in your Conſcience now, is it not?

Gow. Tis certaine, ther's not a boy left alive, and the Cowardly Raſcalls that ranne from the battaile ha'done this ſlaughter: beſides they have burned and carried away all that was in the Kings Tent, wherefore the King moſt worthily hath caus'd every ſouldiour to cut his priſoners throat. O'tis a gallant King.

Flu. I, hee was porne at Monmouth Captaine Gower: what call you the Townes name, where Alexander the pig was borne?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, ſave the phraſe is a little variations.

Gower. I thinke Alexander the Great was borne in Macedon, his Father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I thinke it is in Macedon where Alexander is porne.

porne: I tell you Captaine, if you looke in the Maps of the Orld, I warrant you ſall find in the compariſons betweene Macedon and Monmouth, that the ſituations looke you, is both alike. There is a River in Macedon, and there is alſo moreover a River at Monmouth, it is call'd Wye at Monmouth: but it is out of my praines, what is the name of the other River: but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is Salmons in both. If you marke Alexanders life well, Harry of Monmouthes life is come after it indifferent well, for there is figures in all things. Alexander God knowes, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his chollers, and his moodes, and his diſpleaſures, and his indignations, and alſo being a little intoxicates in his praines, did in his Ales and his angers (looke you) kill his beſt friend Clytus.

Gow. Our King is not like him in that, he never kill'd any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done (marke you now) to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finiſhed. I ſpeak but in the figures, and compariſons of it: as Alexander kild his friend Clytus, being in his Ales and his Cuppes; ſo alſo Harry Monmouth being in his right wittes, and his good judgements, turn'd away the fat Knight with the great belly doublet: he was full of jeſts, and gypes, and knaveries, and mockes, I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir Iohn Falſtaffe.

Flu. That is he: Ile tell you, there is good men porne at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his Majeſty.

Alarum. Enter King Harry and Burbon with priſoners. Flouriſh.

King. I was not angry ſince I came to France,
Vntill this inſtant. Take a Trumpet Herald,
Ride thou unto the horſemen on yond hill:
If they will fight with us, bid them come downe,
Or voyde the field: they doe offend our ſight.
If they'll doe neither, we will come to them,
And make them sker away, as ſwift as ſtones
Enforced from the old Aſſyrian ſlings:
Beſides, we'll cut the throats of thoſe we have,
And not a man of them that we ſhall take,
Shall taſte our mercy. Goe and tell them ſo.

Enter Montioy.

Exe. Here comes the Herald of the French, my Liege.

Glou. His eyes are humbler then they us'd to be,

King. How now, what meanes their Herald? Knowſt thou not,
That I have fin'd theſe bones of mine for ranſome?
Com'ſt thou againe for ranſome?

Her. No great King:
I come to thee for charitable Licenſe,
That we may wander ore this bloody field,
To booke our dead, and then to bury them,
To ſort our Nobles from our common men.
For many of our Princes (woe the while)
Lye drown'd and ſoak'd in mercenary blood:
So doe our vulgar drench their peaſant limbes
In blood of Princes, and with wounded ſteeds
Fret fet-locke deepe in gore, and with wilde rage
Yerke out their armed heeles at their dead maſters,
Killing them twice. O give us leave great King,
To view the field in ſafety, and diſpoſe
Of their dead bodies.

King. I tell thee truly Herald,
I know not if the day be ours or no,
For yet a many of your horſemen peere,
And gallop ore the field.

Her. The day is yours.

King. Praiſed be God, and not our ſtrength for it:
What is this Caſtle call'd that ſtands hard by.

Her. They call it Agincourt.

King. Then call we this the field of Agincourt,
Fought on the day of Criſpin Criſpianus.

Flu. Your Grandfather of famous memory (an't pleaſe your Majeſty) and your great Vncle Edward the Placke Prince of Wales, as I have read in the Chronicles, fought a moſt prave pattle here in France.

King. They did Fluellen.

Flue. Your Majeſty ſayes very true: If your Majeſties is remembred of it, the Welchmen did good ſervice in a Garden where Leeks did grow, wearing Leekes in their Monmouth caps, which your Majeſty know to this houre is an honorable badge of the ſervice: And I doe beleeve your Majeſty takes no ſcorne to weare the Leeke upon S. Tavies day.

King. I weare it for a memorable honor:
For I am Welch you know good Countriman.

Flu. All the water in Wye, cannot waſh your Majeſties Welſh plood out of your pody, I can tell yov that: God pleſſe it, and preſerve it, as long as it pleaſes his Grace, and his Majeſty too.

King. Thankes good my Countryman.

Flu. By Ieſhu, I am your Majeſties Countreyman, I care not who know it: I will confeſſe it to all the Orld, I need not to be aſhamed of your Majeſty, praiſed be God ſo long as your Majeſty is an honeſt man.

King. Good keepe me ſo.

Enter Williams.

Our Heralds goe with him,
Bring me juſt notice of the numbers dead
On both our parts. Call yonder fellow hither.

Exe. Souldier, you muſt come to the King.

King. Souldier, why wear'ſt thou that Glove in thy Cap?

Will. And't pleaſe your Majeſty, 'tis the gage of one that I ſhould fight withall, if he be alive.

King. An Engliſhman?

Will. And't pleaſe your Majeſty, a Raſcall that ſwagger'd with me laſt night: who if alive, and ever dare to challenge this Glove, I have ſworne to take him a boxe a'th eare: or if I can ſee my Glove in his cap, which he ſwore as he was a Souldier hee would weare (if aliue) I will ſtrike it out ſoundly.

Kin. What thinke you Captaine Fluellen, is it fit this ſouldier keepe his oath?

Flu. He is a Craven and a Villaine elſe, and't pleaſe your Majeſty in my conſcience.

King. It may be, his enemy is a Gentleman of great ſort, quite from the anſwer of his degree.

Flu. Though he be as good a Ientleman as the devill is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himſelfe, it is neceſſary (looke your Grace) that he keepe his vow and his oath: If he be perjur'd (ſee you now) his reputation is as arrant a villaine and a Iacke ſawce, as ever his blacke ſhoo trodd upon Gods ground, and his earth, in my conſcience law.

King. Then keepe thy vow ſirrah, when thou meet'ſt the fellow,

Will. So, I will my Liege, as I live.

King. Who ſerv'ſt thou under?

Will. Vnder Captaine Gower, my Liege.

Flu. Gower is a good Captaine, and is good knowlege and literatured in the Warres.

King. Call him hither to me Souldier.

Will. I will my Liege. Exit.

King. Here Fluellen, weare thou this favour for me, and ſticke it in thy Cappe: when Alanſon and my ſelfe were downe together, I pluckt this Glove from his Helme: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alanſon, and an enemy to our Perſon; if thou encounter any ſuch, apprehend him, and thou do'ſt me love.

Flu. Your Grace doo's me as great Honors as can be deſir'd in the hearts of his Subjects: I would faine ſee the man, that ha's but two legges, that ſhall find himſelfe agreev'd at this Glove; that is all: but I would faine ſee it once, and pleaſe God of his grace that I might ſee.

King. Know'ſt thou Gower?

Flu. He is my deare friend, and pleaſe you.

King. Pray thee goe ſeeke him, and bring him to my Tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. Exit.

King. My Lord of Warwicke, and my brother Gloſter,
Follow Fluellen cloſely at the heeles.
The Glove which I have given him for a favour,
May haply purchaſe him abox a'th'eare.
It is the Souldiers: I by bargaine ſhould
Weare it my ſelfe. Follow good Couſin Warwicke:
If that the Souldier ſtrike him, as I judge
By his blunt bearing, he will keepe his word;
Some ſodaine miſchiefe may ariſe of it:
For I doe know Fluellen valiant,
And toucht with Choler, hot as Gunpowder,
And quickly will returne an injury.
Follow, and ſee there be no harme betweene them.
Goe you with me, Vnckle of Exeter. Exeunt.

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to Knight you, Captaine.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Gods will, and his pleaſure, Captaine, I beſeech you now, come apace to the King: there is more good toward you peradventure, then is in your knowlege to dreame of.

Will. Sir, know you this Glove?

Flu. Know the Glove? I know the Glove is a Glove.

Will. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant Traytor as anyes in the Vniverſall World, or in France, or in England.

Gow. How now ſir? you Villaine.

Will. Doe you thinke Ile be forſworne?

Flu. Stand away Captaine Gower, I will give Treaſon his payment into plowes, I warrant you.

Will. I am no Traytor.

Flu. That's a Lye in thy Throat. I charge you in his Majeſties Name apprehend him, he's a friend of the Duke Alanſons.

Enter Warwicke and Glouceſter.

War. How now, how now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwicke, here is, prayſed bee God for it, a moſt contagious Treaſon come to light, looke you, as you ſhall deſire in a Summers day. Heere is his Majeſty. Enter King, and Exeter.

King. How now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Liege, heere is a Villaine, and a Traytor, that looke your Grace, ha's ſtrooke the Glove which your Majeſty is take out of the Helmet of Alanſon.

Will. My Liege, this was my Glove, here is the fellow of it: and hee that I gave it to in change, promis'd to weare it in his Cappe: I promis'd to ſtrike him, if he did: I met this man with my Glove in his Cappe, and I have have beene as good as my word.

Flu. Your Majeſty heare now, ſaving your Majeſtyes Man-hood, what an arrant raſcally, beggerly, lowſie Knave it is: I hope your Majeſty is peare me teſtimony and witneſſe, and will avouchment, that this is the Glove of Alanſon, that your Majeſty is give me, in your Conſcience now.

King. Give me thy Glove Souldier;
Looke, here is the fellow of it:
'Twas I indeed thou promiſed'ſt to ſtrike.
And thou haſt given me moſt bitter termes.

Flu. And pleaſe your Majeſty, let his Necke anſwer for it, if there is any Marſhall Law in the world.

King. How canſt thou make me ſatisfaction?

Will. All offences, my Lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine, that might offend your Majeſty.

King. It was our ſelfe thou didſt abuſe.

Will. Your Majeſty came not like your ſelfe: you appear'd to me but as a common man: witneſſe the Night, your Garments, your Lowlineſſe: and what your highneſſe ſuffer'd under that ſhape, I beſeech you take it for your owne fault, and not mine: for had you beene as I tooke you for, I made no offence; therefore I beſeech your highneſſe pardon me.

Kin. Here Vnckle Exeter, fill this Glove with Crownes,
Add give it to this fellow. Keepe it fellow,
And weare it for an honor in thy Cappe,
Till I doe challenge it. Give him the Crownes:
And Captaine, you muſt needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this Day and this Light, the fellow ha's mettell enough in his belly: hold, there is twelve-pence for you, and I pray you to ſerve God, and keepe you out of prawles and prabbles, and quarrells and diſſentions, and I warrant you it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your Money.

Flu. It is with a good will: I can tell you it will ſerve you to mend your ſhooes: come, wherefore ſhould you be ſo paſhfull, your ſhooes is not ſo good: 'tis a good ſilling I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter Herauld.

King. Now Herauld, are the dead numbred?

Herauld. Heere is the number of the ſlaught'red French.

King. What Priſoners of good ſort are taken, Vnckle?

Fxe. Charles Duke of Orleance, Nephew to the King, Iohn Duke of Burbon, and Lord Bouchiquald:
Of other Lords and Barons, Knights and Squires,
Full fifteene hundred, beſides common men.

King. This Note doth tell me of ten thouſand French
That in the field lye ſlaine: of Princes in this number,
And Nobles bearing Banners, there lye dead
One hundred twenty ſix; added to theſe,
Of Knights, Eſquires, and gallant Gentlemen,
Eight thouſand and foure hundred: of the which,
Five hundred were but yeſterday dubb'd Knights;
So that in theſe ten thouſand they have loſt,
There are but ſixteene hundred Mercenaries:
The reſt are Princes, Barons, Lords, Knights, Squires,

And Gentlemen of bloud and quality,
The Names of thoſe their Nobles that lye dead:
Charles Delabreth, High Conſtable of France,
Jaques of Chatilion, Admirall of France,
The Maſter of the Croſſe-bowes, Lord Rambures,
Great Maſter of France, the brave Sir Guichard Dolphin,
Iohn Duke of Alanſon, Anthonio Duke of Brabant,
The Brother to the Duke of Burgundy,
And Edward Duke of Barr: of luſty Earles,
Grandpree and Rouſſie, Fauconbridge and Foyes,
Beaumont and Marle, Vandemont and Leſtrale.
Here was a Royall fellowſhip of death.
Where is the number of our Engliſh dead?
Edward the Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Suffolke,
Sir Richard Ketly, Davy Gam Eſquire;
None elſe of name: and of all other men,
But five and twenty.

King. O God, thy Arme was heere:
And not to us, but to thy Arme alone,
Aſcribe we all: when, without ſtratagem,
But in plaine ſhocke, and even play of Battaile,
Was ever knowne ſo great and little loſſe?
On one part and on th'other, take it God,
For it is none but thine.

Exet. 'Tis wonderfull.

King. Come, go we in proceſſion to the Village:
And be it death proclaymed through our Hoaſt,
To boaſt of this, or take that praiſe from God,
Which is his onely.

Flu. Is it not lawfull and pleaſe your Majeſty, to tell how many is kill'd.

King. Yes Captaine: but with this acknowledgement,
That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conſcience, he did us great good.

King. Doe we all holy Rights;
Let there be ſung Non nobis, and Te deum,
The dead with charity enclos'd in Clay:
And then to Callice, and to England then,
Where ne're from France arriv'd more happy men.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Chorus.

Vouchſafe to thoſe that have not read the Story,
That I may prompt them: and of ſuch as have,
I humbly pray them to admit th'excuſe
Of time, of numbers, and due courſe of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life,
Be here preſented. Now we beare the King
Toward Callice: grant him there; And there being ſeene,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts,
Athwart the Sea; Behold the Engliſh beach
Pales in the flood, with Men, with Wives, and Boyes,
Whoſe ſhouts and claps out-voyce the deepmouth'd Sea,
Which like a mighty Whiffler 'fore the King,
Seemes to prepare his way: So let him land,
And ſolemnly ſee him ſet on to London.
So ſwift a pace hath Thought, that even now
You may imagine him upon Blacke-Heath:
Where, that his Lords deſire him, to have borne
His bruiſed Helmet, and his bended Sword
Before him, through the City: he forbids it,
Being free from vaineneſſe, and ſelfe-glorious pride;
Giving full Trophee, Signall, and Oſtent,.
Quite from himſelfe, to God. But now behold,
In the quicke Forge and working-houſe of Thought,
How London doth powre out her Citizens,
The Mayor and all his Brethren in beſt ſort,
Like to the Senatours of th'antique Rome,
With the Plebeians ſwarming at their heeles,
Goe forth and fetch their Conqu'ring Cæſar in:
As by a lower, but by loving likelyhood,
Were now the Generall of our gracious Empreſſe,
As in good time he may, from Ireland comming,
Bringing Rebellion broached on his Sword;
How many would the peacefull City quit,
To welcome him? much more, and much more cauſe,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him.
As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the King of Englands ſtay at home:
The Emperour's comming in behalfe of France,
To order peace betweene them: and omit
All the occurrences, what ever chanc't,
Till Harryes backe returne againe to France:
There muſt we bring him; and my ſelfe have play'd
The Interim, by remembring you 'tis paſt.
Then brooke abridgement, and your eyes advance,
After your thoughts, ſtraight backe againe to France.

Exit.

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gow. Nay, that's right: but why weare you your Leeke to day? Saint Davies day is paſt.

Flu. There is occaſions and cauſes why and wherefore in all things: I wil tell you aſſe my friend, Captaine Gower; the raſcally, ſcauld, beggerly, lowſie, pragging Knave Piſtoll, which you and your ſelfe, and all the World know to be no petter then a fellow, looke you now, of no merits: he is come to mee, and prings me pread and ſault yeſterday, looke you, and bid me eate my Leeke: it was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him; but I will be ſo bold as to weare it in my Cap till I ſee him once againe, and then I will tell him a little piece of my deſires.

Enter Piſtoll.

Gow. Why heere he comes, ſwelling like a Turky-cocke.

Flue. 'Tis no matter for his ſwellings, nor his Turky-cocks. God pleſſe you auchient Piſtoll: you ſcurvy lowſie Knave, God pleſſe you.

Piſt. Ha, art thou bedlam? doeſt thou thirſt, baſe Troian, to have me fold up Parcas fatall Web? Hence; I am qualmiſh at the ſmell of Leeke.

Flu. I peſeech you heartily, ſcurvy lowſie Knave, at my deſires, and my requeſts, and my petitions, to eate, looke you, this Leeke; becauſe, looke you, you doe not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites and your diſgeſtions doo's not agree with it, I would deſire you to eate it.

Piſt. Not for Cadwallader and all his Goats.

Flu. There is one Goat for you. Strikes him.
Will you be ſo good, ſcauld Knave, as eate it?

Piſt. Baſe Troian, thou ſhalt dye.

Flu. You ſay very true, ſcauld Knave, when Gods will is: I will deſire you to live in the meane time, and eate your Victuals: come, there is ſawce for it. You call'd me yeſterdady Mountaine-Squier, but I will make you to day a ſquire of low degree. I pray you fall to, if you can mocke a Leeke, you can eate a Leeke.

Gour. Enough Captaine, you have aſtoniſht him.

Flu. I ſay, I will make him eate ſome part of my leeke, or I will peate his pate foure dayes: bite I pray you, it is good for your greene wound, and your ploody Coxecombe.

Piſt. Muſt I bite?

Flu. Yes certainely, and out of doubt and out of queſtion too, and ambiguities.

Piſt. By this Leeke, I will moſt horribly revenge: I eate and eate I ſweare.

Flu. Eate I pray you, will you have ſome more ſauce to your Leeke: there is not enough Leeke to ſweare by.

Piſt. Quiet thy Cudgell, thou doſt ſee I eate.

Flu. Much good doe you ſcald knave, heartily. Nay, pray you throw none away, the skinne is good for your broken Coxecombe; when you take occaſions to ſee Leekes hereafter, I pray you mocke at 'em, that is all.

Piſt. Good.

Flu. I, Leekes is good: hold you, there is a groat to heale your pate.

Piſt. Me a groat?

Flu. Yes verily, and in truth you ſhall take it, or I have another Leeke in my pocket, which you ſhall eate.

Piſt. I take thy groat in earneſt of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in Cudgels, you ſhall be a Woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels; God bu'y you, and keepe you. and heale your pate. Exit.

Piſt. All hell ſhall ſtirre for this.

Gow. Goe, goe, you are a counterfet cowardly Kave, will you mocke at an ancient Tradition began upon an honorable reſpect, and worne as a memorable Trophee of predeceaſed valor, and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words. I have ſeene you gleeking and galling at this Gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, becauſe he could not ſpeake Engliſh in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an Engliſh Cudgell: you find it otherwiſe, and henceforth let a Welſh correction teach you a good Engliſh condition, fare ye well. Exit.

Piſt. Doeth fortune play the huſwife with me now? Newes have I that my Doll is dead i'th Spittle of a malady of France, and there my rendevous is quite cut off: Old I doe waxe, and from my weary limbes honor is Cudgeld. Well, Baud Ile turne, and ſomething leane to Cut-purſe of quicke hand: To England will I ſteale, and there Ile ſteale;
And patches will I get unto theſe cudgeld ſcarres,
And ſwore I got them in the Gallia warres. Exit.

Enter at one doore, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Warwicke, and other Lords; At another, Queene Iſabel, the King, the Duke of Bourgoigne, and other French.

King. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met;
Vnto our brother France, and to our Siſter
Health and faire time of day; Ioy and good wiſhes
To our moſt faire and Princely Coſin Katherine;
And as a branch and member of this Royalty,
By whom this great aſſembly is contriv'd,
We doe ſalute you Duke of Burgoigne,
And Princes French and Peeres health to you all.

Fra. Right joyous are we to behold your face,
Moſt worthy brother England, faire met.
So are you Princes (Engliſh) every one.

Quee. So happy be the Iſſue brother England
Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes,
Your eyes which hitherto have borne in them
Againſt the French that met them in their bent,
The fatall Balls of murthering Baſilisks:
The venome of ſuch Lookes we fairely hope
Have loſt their quality, and that this day
Shall change all griefes and quarrells into love.

Eng. To cry Amen to that, thus we appeare.

Que. You Engliſh Princes all, I doe ſalute you.

Burg. My duty to you both, on equall love.
Great Kings of France and England: that I have labour'd
With all my wits, my paines, and ſtrong endevours,
To bring your moſt imperiall Majeſties
Vnto this Barre, and Royall enterview;
Your Mightineſſe on both parts beſt can witneſſe.
Since then my Office hath ſo farre prevail'd,
That Face to Face, and Royall Eye to Eye,
You have congreeted: let it not diſgrace me,
If I demand before this Royall view,
What Rub, or what impediment there is,
Why that the naked, poore, and mangled Peace,
Deare Nourſe of Arts, Plentyes, and joyfull Births,
Should not in this beſt Garden of the World,
Our fertile France, put up her lovely Viſage?
Alas, ſhe hath from France too long beene chas'd,
And all her Husbandry doth lye on heapes,
Corrupting in it owne fertility.
Her Vine, the merry chearer of the heart,
Vnpruned, dyes: her Hedges even pleach'd,
Like Priſoners wildly over-growne with hayre,
Put forth diſorder'd Twigs: her fallow Leas,
The Darnell, Hemlocke and ranke Femetary,
Doth root upon; while that the Culter ruſts,
That ſhould deracinate ſuch Savagery:
The even Mead, that erſt brought ſweetly forth
The freckled Cowſlip, Burnet, and greene Clover,
Wanting the Sythe, withall uncorrected, ranke;
Conceives by idleneſſe, and nothing teemes,
But hatefull Docks, rough Thiſtles, Kekſyes, Burres,
Loſing both beauty and vtility;
And all our Vineyards, Fallowes, Meades, and Hedges,
Defective in their natures, grow to wildneſſe.
Even ſo our Houſes, and our ſelves, and Children,
Have loſt, or doe not learne, for want of time,
The ſciences that ſhould become our Country;
But gow like Savages, as Souldiers will,
That nothing doe, but meditate on Blood,
To ſwearing, and ſterne Lookes, defus'd Attyre,
And every thing that ſeemes unaturall.
Which to reduce into our former favour,
You are aſſembled: and my ſpeech entreats,
That I may know the Let, why gentle Peace
Should not expell theſe inconveniences,
And bleſſe us with her former qualities.

Eng. If, Duke of Burgony, you would the Peace,
Whoſe want gives growth to th'imperfections
Which you have cited; you muſt buy that Peace
With full accord to all our juſt demands,
Whoſe Tenures and particular effects
You have enſchedul'd briefely in your hands.

Burg. The King hath heard them: to the which, as yet
There is no Anſwer made.

Eng. Well then: the Peace which you before ſo urg'd,
Lyes in his Anſwer.

France. I have but with a curſelary eye
O're glanc't the Articles: Pleaſeth your Grace
To appoint ſome of your Councell preſently,
To ſit with us once more, with better heed
To re-ſurvey them: we will ſuddenly
Paſſe our accept and peremptory Anſwer.

Eng. Brother we ſhall. Goe Vnckle Exeter,
And brother Clarence, and brother Glouceſter,
Warwicke, and Huntington, goe with the King;
And take with you free power, to ratifie,
Augment, or alter, as your Wiſdomes beſt
Shall ſee advantageable for our Dignity,
Any thing in or out of our Demands,
And we'll conſigne thereto. Will you, faire Siſter,
Goe with the Princes, or ſtay here with us?

Quee. Our gracious Brother, I will goe with them:
Happely a Womans Voyce may doe ſome good,
When Articles too nicely urg'd, be ſtood on.

Eng. Yet leave our Couſin Katherine here with us,
She is our capitall Demand, compris'd
Within the fore-ranke of our Articles.

Que. She hath good leave. Exeunt omnes.

Manet King, and Katherine.

King. Faire Katherine, and moſt faire,
Will you vouchſafe to teach a Souldier tearmes,
Such as will enter at a Ladyes eare,
And pleade his Love-ſuit to her gentle heart?

Kath. Your Majeſty ſhall mocke at me, I cannot ſpeake your England.

King. O faire Katherine, if yov will love me ſoundly with your French heart, I will be glad to heare you confeſſe it brokenly with your Engliſh Tongue. Doe you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonne moy, I cannot tell wat is like me.

King. An Angell is like you Kate, and you are like an Angell.

Kath. Que dit il, que Ie ſuis ſemblable a les Anges?

Lady. Ouy verament (ſauf voſtre Grace) ainſi dit il.

King. I ſaid ſo, deere Katherine, and I muſt not bluſh to affirme it.

Kath. O bon Dieu, les langues des hommes ſont plein de tromperies.

King: What ſayes ſhe, faire one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Lady. Ouy, dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits: dat is de Princeſſe.

King. The Princeſſe is the better Engliſh-woman: yfaith Kate, my wooing is fit for thy underſtanding, I am glad thou canſt ſpeake no better Engliſh, for if thou could'ſt, thou would'ſt finde me ſuch a plaine King, that thou wouldſt thinke, I had ſold my farme to buy my Crowne. I know no wayes to mince it in love, but directly to ſay, I love you; then if you urge me farther, then to ſay, Doe you in faith? I weare out my ſuite: Give me your anſwer, yfaith doe, and ſo clap hands, and a bargaine: how ſay you, Lady?

Kath. Sauf voſtre honour, me underſtand well.

King. Marry, if you would put me to Verſes, or to Dance for your ſake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one I have neither words nor meaſure; and for the other I have no ſtrength in meaſure, yet a reaſonable meaſure in ſtrength. If I could winne a Lady at Leape frogge, or by vawting into my ſaddle, with my Armor on my back; under the correction of bragging be it ſpoken, I ſhould quickely leape into a Wife: Or if I might buffet for my Love, or bound my Horſe for her favours, I could lay on like a Butcher, and ſit like a Iacke an Apes, never off. But before God Kate, I cannot looke greenely, nor gaſpe out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in proteſtation; onely downe-right Oathes, which I never uſe till urg'd, nor never breake for urging. If thou canſt love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whoſe face is not worth Sunne-burning? that never lookes in his Glaſſe, for love of any thing he ſees there? let thine Eye be thy Cooke. I ſpeake to thee plaine Souldier: If thou canſt love me for this, take me? if not? to ſay to thee that I ſhall dye, is true; but for thy love, by the L. No: yet I love thee too. And while thou liv'ſt, deare Kate, take a fellow of plaine and uncoyned Conſtancy, for he perforce muſt doe thee right, becauſe he hath not the gift to wooe in other places: for theſe fellowes of infinit tongue, that can ryme themſelves into Ladyes favours, they doe alwayes reaſon themſelves out againe. What? a ſpeaker is but a prater, a Ryme is but a Ballad; a good Legge will fall, a ſtrait Backe will ſtoope, a blacke Beard will turne white, a curl'd Pate will grow bald, a faire Face will wither, a full Eye will wax hollow: but a good Heart, Kate, is the Sunne and the Moone, or rather the Sunne, and not the Moone; for it ſhines bright, and never changes, but keepes his courſe truely. If thou would have ſuch a one, take me? and take me; take a ſouldier: take a ſouldier; take a King. And what ſay'ſt thou then to my Love? ſpeake my faire, and fairely, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it poſſible dat I ſould love de ennemy of France?

King. No, it is not poſſible you ſhould love the Enemy of France, Kate; but in loving me, you ſhould love the Friend of France: for I love France ſo well, that I will not part with a Village of it; I will have it all mine: and Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours; then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell wat is dat.

King. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am ſure will hang upon my tongue, like a new-married Wife about her Husbands Necke, hardly to be ſhooke off; Ie quand ſur le poſſeſſion de Fraunce, & quand vous aues le poſſeſſion de moy, (Let me ſee, what then? Saint Dennis be my ſpeed) Donc voſtre eſt Fraunce, & vous eſtes mienne. It is as eaſie for me, Kate, to conquer the Kingdome, as to ſpeake ſo much more French: I ſhall never move thee in French, unleſſe it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf voſtre honeur, le Francois ques vous parleis, il & melieus que l'Angolis le quel Ie parle.

Kin. No faith is't not, Kate: but thy ſpeaking of my Tongue, and I thine, moſt truely falſely, muſt needes be graunted to be much at one. But Kate, doo'ſt thou underſtand thus much Engliſh? Canſt thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

Kin. Can any of your Neighbours tell, Kate? Ile aske them, Come I know thou loveſt me: and at night, when you come into your Cloſet, you'll queſtion this Gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will to her diſpraiſe thoſe parts in me, that you love with your heart; but good Kate, mocke me mercifully, the rather gentle Princeſſe, becauſe I love thee cruelly. If ever thou beeſt mine, Kate, as I have a ſaving Faith within me tels me thou ſhalt; I get thee with skambling, and thou muſt therefore needes prove a good Souldier-breeder: Shall not thou and I, betweene Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a Boy, halfe French halfe Engliſh, that ſhall goe to Conſtantinople, and take the Turke by the Beard. Shall we not? what ſay'ſt thou, my faire Flower-de-Luce.

Kate. I doe not know dat.

King. No: 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promiſe: doe but now promiſe Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of ſuch a Boy; and for my Engliſh moyty, take the word of a King, and a Batcheler. How anſwer you, La plus belle Katherine du monde mon treſcher & devin deeſſe.

Kath. Your Majeſtee aue fauſe Frenche enough to deceive de moſt ſage Damoiſeil dat is en Fraunce.

King. Now fye upon my falſe French: by mine honor in true Engliſh, I love thee Kate; by which honor, I dare not ſweare thou loveſt me, yet my bloud begins to flatter me, that thou doo'ſt; notwithſtanding the poore and untempering effect of my Viſage. Now beſhrew my Fathers Ambition, he was thinking of Civill Warres when he got me, therefore was I created with a ſtubborne out-ſide, with an aſpect of Iron, that when I come to wooe Ladyes, I fright them: but in faith Kate, the elder I wax, the better I ſhall appeare. My comfort is, that Old Age, that ill layer up of Beauty, can doe no more ſpoyle upon my Face. Thou haſt me, if thou haſt me, at the worſt; and thou ſhalt weare me, if thou weare me, better and better: and therefore tell me, moſt faire Katherine, will you have me? Put off your Maiden Bluſhes, auouch the Thoughts of your Heart with the Lookes of an Empreſſe, take me by the Hand, and ſay, Harry of England, I am thine; which word thou ſhalt no ſooner bleſſe mine Eare withall, but I will tell thee alowd, England is thine: Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantaginet is thine; who, though I ſpeake it before his Face, if he be not Fellow with the beſt King, thou ſhalt find the beſt King of Good-fellowes. Come your anſwer in broken Muſicke; for thy Voyce is Muſicke, and thy Engliſh broken: Therefore Queene of all, Katherine, breake thy mind to me in broken Engliſh, wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is as it ſhall pleaſe de Roy mon pere.

Kin. Nay, it will pleaſe him well, Kate; it ſhall pleaſe him, Kate.

Kath. Den it ſall alſo content me.

King. Vpon that I kiſſe your Hand, and I call you my Queene.

Kath. Laiſſe mon Seigneur, laiſſe, laiſſe, may foy: Ie ne veus point que vous abbaiſſe voſtre grandeur, en baiſant le mais d' une noſtre Seigneur indignie ſerviteur, excuſe moy. Ie vous ſupply mon treſ-puiſſant Seigneur.

King. Then I will kiſſe your Lippes, Kate.

Kath. Les Dames & Damoiſels pour eſtre baiſe devant leur nopceſe il net pas le coſtume de Fraunce.

King. Madam, my Interpreter, what ſayes ſhe?

Lady. Dat it is not be de faſhion pour le Ladies of France; I cannot tell wat is buiſſe en Angliſh.

King. To kiſſe.

Lady. Your Majeſtie entendre bettre que moy.

King. It is not a faſhion for the Maids in France to kiſſe before they are marryed, would ſhe ſay?

Lady. Ouy verayment.

King. O Kate, nice Cuſtomes curſie to great Kings. Deare Kate, you and I cannot bee confin'd within the weake Lyſt of a Countreyes faſhion: we are the makers of Manners, Kate; and the liberty that followes our Places, ſtoppes the mouth of all find-faults, as I will doe yours, for upholding the nice faſhion of your Country, in denying me a Kiſſe: therefore patiently, and yeelding You have Witch-craft in your Lippes, Kate: there is more eloquence in a Suger touch of them; then in the Tongues of the French Councell: and they ſhould ſooner perſwade Harry of England, then a generall Petition of Monarchs. Heere comes your father.

Enter the French Power, and the Engliſh Lords.

Burg. God ſave your Majeſty, my Royall Couſin, teach you our Princeſſe Engliſh?

Kin. I would have her learne, my faire Couſin, how perfectly I love her, and that is good Engliſh.

Burg. Is ſhe not apt?

King. Our Tongue is rough. Coze, and my Condition is not ſmooth: ſo that having neither the Voyce nor the Heart of Flattery about me, I cannot ſo conjure up the ſpirit of love in her, that he will appeare in his true likeneſſe.

Burg. Pardon the frankneſſe of my mirth, if I anſwer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you muſt make a Circle: if conjure up love in her in his true likeneſſe, he muſt appeare naked, and blind. Can you blame her then, being a Maid, yet ros'd over with the Virgin Crimſon of Modeſty, if ſhe deny the apparance of a naked blind Boy in her naked ſeeing ſelfe? It were (my Lord) a hard Condition for a Maid to conſigne to.

King. Yet they doe winke and yeeld, as Love is blind and enforces.

Burg. They are then excus'd, my Lord, when they ſee not what they doe.

King. Then good my Lord, teach your Couſin to conſent to winking.

Burg. I will winke on her to conſent, my Lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for Maides well Summer'd, and warme kept, are like Flyes at Bartholomew-tyde, blind, though they have their eyes, and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

King. This Morall tyes me over to Time, and a hot Summer; and ſo I ſhall catch the Flye, your Couſin, in the latter end, and ſhe muſt be blind too.

Burg. As Love is my Lord, before it loves.

King. It is ſo: and you may, ſome of you, thanke Love for my blindneſſe, who cannot ſee many a faire French City for one faire French Maid that ſtands in my way.

French King. Yes my Lord, you ſee them perſpectively: the Cities turn'd into a Maid; for they are all gyrdled with Maiden Walls, that Warre hath entred.

King. Shall Kate be my Wife?

Fran. So pleaſe you.

England. I am content, ſo the Maiden Cities you talke of, may waite on her: ſo the Maid that ſtood in the way for my Wiſh, ſhall ſhew me the way to my Will.

France. We have conſented to all tearmes of reaſon.

Eng. Is't ſo, my Lords of England?

West. The King hath granted every Article:
His Daughter firſt; and then in ſequele, all,
According to their firme propoſed natures.

Exet. Onely he hath not yet ſubſcribed this:
Where your Majeſty demands, That the King of France having any occaſion to write for matter of Graunt, ſhall name your Highneſſe in this forme, and with this addition, in French: Noſtre treſcher filz Henry Roy d'Angleterre Heretere de Fraunce: and thus in Latine; Præclariſſimus Filius noſter Henricus Rex Angliæ & Heres Franciæ.

Fran. Nor this I have not Brother ſo deny'd,
But your requeſt ſhall make me let it paſſe.

Engl. I pray you then, in love and deare allyance,
Let that one Article ranke with the reſt,
And thereupon give me your Daughter.

Fran. Take her faire ſonne, and from her blood rayſe up
Iſſue to me, that the contending Kingdomes
Of France and England, whoſe very ſhoares looke pale,
With envy of each others happineſſe,
May ceaſe their hatred; and this deare Conjunction
Plant Neighbourhood and Chriſtian-like accord
In their ſweet Boſomes: that never Warre advance
His bleeding Sword 'twixt England and faire France.

Lords. Amen.

King. Now welcome Kate: and beare me witneſſe all,
That here I kiſſe her as my Soveraigne Queene.

Flouriſh.

Quee. God, the beſt maker of all Marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your Realmes in one:
As Man and Wife being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your Kingdomes ſuch a Spouſall,
That never may ill Office, or fell jealouſie,
Which troubles oft the Bed of bleſſed Marriage,
Thruſt in betweene the Pation of theſe Kingdomes,
To make divorce of their incorporate League:
That Engliſh may as French, French Engliſhmen,
Receive each other. God ſpeake this Amen.

All. Amen.

King. Prepare we for our Marriage: on which day,
My Lord of Burgundy we'll take your Oath
And all the Peeres, for ſurety of our Leagues.
Then ſhall I ſweare to Kate, and you to me,
And may our Oathes well kept and proſp'rous be.

Sonet. Exeunt.

Enter Chorus.

Thus farre with rough, and all-unable Pen,
Our bending Author hath purſu'd the Story,
In little roome confining mighty men,
Mangling by ſtarts the full courſe of their glory.
Small time: but in that ſmall, moſt greatly lived
This Starre of England. Fortune made his Sword;
By which, the Worlds beſt Garden he atchieved:
And of it left his Sonne Imperiall Lord,
Henry the Sixt, in Infant Bands crown'd King
Of France and England, did this King ſucceed:
Whoſe State ſo many had the managing,
That they loſt France, and make his England bleed:
Which oft our Stage hath ſhowne; and for their ſake,
In your faire minds let this acceptance take.

FINIS.

The firſt Part of King Henry the Sixt.

Actus Prima. Scæna Prima.

Dead March.

Enter the Funerall of King Henry the Fift, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; the Duke of Gloſter, Protector: the Duke of Exeter, Warwicke, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the Duke of Somerſet.

Bedford.

HVng be yͤ heavens with black, yeild day to night;
Comets importing change of Times and States,
Brandiſh your cryſtall Treſſes in the Sky,
And with them ſcourge the bad revolting Stars,
That have conſented unto Henries death:
King Henry the Fift, too famous to live long,
England ne're loſt a King of ſo much worth.
Gloſt. England ne're had a King untill his time:
Vertue he had, deſerving to command.
His brandiſht Sword did blind men with his beames,
His Armes ſpred wider then a Dragons Wings:
His ſparkling Eyes, repleat with wrathfull fire,
More dazled and drove backe his Enemies,
Then mid-day ſunne, fierce bent againſt their faces.
What ſhould I ſay? his Deeds exceed all ſpeech:
He ne're lift up his hand, but conquered.
Exe. We mourne in blacke, why mourn we not in Henry is dead, and never ſhall revive: (blood?
Vpon a Wooden Coffin we attend;
And deaths diſhonorable Victory,
We with our ſtately preſence glorifie,
Like Captives bound to a Triumphant Carre.
What? ſhall we curſe the Planets of Miſhap,
That plotted thus our Glories overthrow?
Or ſhall we thinke the ſubtile-witted French,
Conjurers and Sorcerers, that afraid of him,
By Magicke Verſe have contriv'd his end?
Winch. He was a King, bleſt of the King of Kings.
Vnto the French, the dreadfull judgement-Day
So dreadfull will not be, as was his ſight.
The Battailes of the Lord of Hoſts he fought:
The Churches Prayers made him ſo proſperous.
Gloſt. The Church? Where is it?
Had not Church-men pray'd,
His thred of Life had not ſo ſoone decay'd.
None doe you like, but an effeminate Prince,
Whom like a Schoole-boy you may over-awe.
Winch. Gloſter, what ere we like, thou art Protector,
And lookeſt to command the Prince and Realme.
Thy Wife is prowd, ſhe holdeth thee in awe,
More then God or Religious Church-men may.
Gloſt. Name not Religion, for thou lov'ſt the Fleſh,
And ne're throughout the yeere to Church thou go'ſt,
Except it be to pray againſt thy foes.
Bed. Ceaſe, ceaſe theſe Iarres, and reſt your minds in Let's to the Altar: Heralds wayt on us; (peace:
In ſtead of Gold, we'll offer up our Armes,
Since Armes avayle not, now that Henri's dead.
Poſterity await for wretched yeeres,
When at their Mothers moiſt eyes, Babes ſhall ſucke,
Our Ile be made a Nouriſh of ſalt Teares,
And none but Women left to wayle the dead.
Henry the Fift, thy Ghoſt I invocate:
Proſper this Realme, keepe it from Civill Broyles,
Combat with adverſe Planets in the heavens;
A farre more glorious Starre thy ſoule will make,
Then Iulius Caſar, or bright———

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My honorable Lords, health to you all:
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loſſe, of ſlaughter, and diſcomfiture:
Guyen, Champaigne, Rheimes, Orleance,
Paris, Guyſors, Poictiers, are all quite loſt.
Bed. What ſay'ſt thou man, before dead Henry's Coarſe?
Speake ſoftly, or the loſſe of thoſe great Townes
Will make him burſt his Lead, and riſe from death.
Gloſt. Is Paris loſt? and is Roan yeelded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life againe,
Theſe newes would cauſe him once more yeeld the ghoſt.
Exe. How were they loſt? what trechery was us'd?
Meſſ. No trechery, but want of Men and Money.
Amongſt the Souldiers this is muttered,
That here you maintaine ſeverall Factions:
And whil'ſt a Field ſhould be diſpatcht and fought,
You are diſputing of your Generals.
One would have lingring Warres, with little coſt;
Another would flye ſwift, but wanteth Wings:
A third man thinkes, without expence at all,
By guilefull faire words, Peace may be obtain'd.
Awake, away, Engliſh Nobility,
Let not ſlouth dimme your Honors, new begot;
Cropt are the Flower-de-Luces in your Armes
Of Englands Coat, one halfe is cut away.
Exe. Were our Teares wanting to this Funerall,
Theſe Tidings would call forth her flowing Tides.
Bed. Me they concerne, Regent I am of France:
Give me my ſtealed Coat, Ile fight for France.
Away with theſe diſgracefull wayling Robes;
Wounds will I lend the French, in ſtead of Eyes,
To weepe their intermiſſive Miſeries.

Enter to them another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Lords view theſe Letters, full of bad miſchance.
France is revolted from the Engliſh quite;
Except ſome petty Townes, of no import.
The Dolphin Charles is crowned King in Rheimes:
The Baſtard of Orleance with him is joyn'd:
Reynold, Duke of Aniou, doth his part;
The Duke of Alanſon flyeth to his ſide. Exit.
Exe. The Dolphin crown'd King? all flye to him?
O whither ſhall we flye from this reproach?
Gloſt. We will not flye, but to our enemies throats.
Bedford, if thou be ſlacke, Ile fight it out.
Bed. Gloſter, why doubtſt thou of my forwardneſſe?
An Army have I muſter'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is over-run.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My gracious Lords, to adde to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew King Henries hearſe,
I muſt informe you of a diſmall fight,
Betwixt the ſtout Lord Talbot, and the French.
Win. What? wherein Talbot overcame, is't ſo?
3. Meſ. O no: wherein Lord Talbot was o'rethrowne:
The circumſtance Ile tell you more at large.
The tenth of Auguſt laſt, this dreadfull Lord,
Retyring from the Siege of Orleance,
Having full ſcarce ſix thouſand in his troupe,
By three and twenty thouſand of the French
Was round incompaſſed, and ſet upon:
No leyſure had he to enranke his men.
He wanted Pikes to ſet before his Archers:
In ſtead whereof, ſharpe Stakes pluckt out of Hedges
They pitched in the ground confuſedly,
To keepe the Horſemen off, from breaking in.
More then three houres the fight continued:
Where valiant Talbot, above humane thought,
Enacted wonders with his Sword and Lance.
Hundreds he ſent to hell, and none durſt ſtand him:
Here, there, and every where enrag'd, he ſlew.
The French exclaym'd, the Devill was in Armes,
All the whole Army ſtood agaz'd on him.
His Souldiers ſpying his undaunted Spirit,
A Talbot, a Talbot, cry'd out amaine.
And ruſht into the Bowels of the battaile.
Here had the Conqueſt fully beene ſeal'd up,
If Sir Iohn Falſtaffe had not play'd the Coward,
He being in the Vauward, plac't behind,
With purpoſe to relieve and follow them,
Cowardly fled, not having ſtrucke one ſtroake.
Hence grew the generall wracke and maſſacre;
Encloſed were they with their Eenemies.
A baſe Wallon, to win the Dolphins grace,
Thruſt Talbot with a Speare into the Backe,
Whom all France, with their chiefe aſſembled ſtrength,
Durſt not preſume to looke once in the face.
Bed. Is Talbot ſlaine then? I will ſlay my ſelfe,
For living idly here, in pompe and eaſe,
Whil'ſt ſuch a worthy Leader, wanting ayd,
Vnto his daſtard foe-men is betray'd.
3. Meſ. O no, he lives, but is tooke Priſoner,
And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford:
Moſt of the reſt ſlaughter'd, or tooke likewiſe.
Bed. His Ranſome there is none but I ſhall pay.
Ile hale the Dolphin headlong from his Throne,
His Crowne ſhall be the Ranſome of my friend:
Foure of their Lords Ile change for one of ours.
Farewell my Maſters, to my Taſke will I,
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,
To keepe our great Saint Georges Feaſt withall.
Ten thouſand Souldiers with me I will take,
Whoſe bloody deeds ſhall make all Europe quake.
3. Meſ. So you had neede, for Orleance is beſieg'd,
The Engliſh Army is growne weake and faint:
The Earle of Saliſbury craveth ſupply,
And hardly keepes his men from mutiny,
Since they ſo few, watch ſuch a multitude.
Exe. Remember Lords your Oathes to Henry ſworne:
Eyther to quell the Dolphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoake.
Bed. I doe remember it, and here take leave,
To goe about my preparation. Exit Bedford.
Gloſt. Ile to the Tower with all the haſt I can,
To view th'Artillery and Munition,
And then I will proclaime young Henry King.
Exit Gloſter.
Exe. To Eltam will I, where the young King is,
Being ordain'd his ſpeciall Governor,
And for his ſafety there Ile beſt deviſe. Exit.
Winch. Each hath his Place and Function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remaines:
But long I will not be Iacke out of Office,
The King from Eltam I intend to ſend,
And ſit at chiefeſt ſterne of publique Weale.
Exit.

Enter Charles, Alanſon, and Reigneir, marching with Drum and Souldiers.

Charl. Mars his true moving, even as in the Heavens
So in the Earth to this day is not knowne.
Late did he ſhine upon the Engliſh ſide:
Now we are Victors, upon us he ſmiles.
What Townes of any moment, but we have?
At pleaſure here we lye, neere Orleance:
Otherwhiles, the famiſht Engliſh, like pale ghoſts,
Faintly beſiege us one houre in a moneth.
Al. They want their Porredge, and their fat Bul Beeves
Eyther they muſt be dyeted like Mules.
Reig. Let's raiſe the Siege: why live we idly here?
And have their Provender ty'd to their mouthes,
Or pitteous they will looke, like drowned Mice.
Talbot is taken, whom we wont to feare:
Remayneth none but mad-brain'd Saliſbury,
And he may well in fretting ſpend his gall,
Nor men nor Money hath he to make Warre.
Char. Sound, ſound Alarum, we will ruſh on them,
Now for the honour of the forlorne French:
Him I forgive my death, that killeth me;
When he ſees me goe backe one foot, or flye. Exeunt.

Heere Alarum, they are beaten backe by the Engliſh, with great loſſe.

Enter Charles, Alanſon, and Reigneir.

Charl. Who ever ſaw the like? what men have I?
Dogges, Cowards, Daſtards: I would ne're have fled,
But that they left me 'midſt my Enemies.
Reig. Saliſbury is a deſperate Homicide,
He fighteth as one weary of his life:
To other Lords, like Lyons wanting foode,
Doe ruſh upon us as their hungry prey.

Alanſ. Froyſard, a Countreyman of ours, records,
England all Olivers and Rowlands breed,
During the time Edward the third did raigne:
More truely now may this be verified;
For none but Samſons and Goliaſſes
It ſendeth forth to skirmiſh: one to tenne?
Leane raw-bon'd Raſcalls, who would e're ſuppoſe,
They had ſuch courage and audacity;
Charl. Let's leave this Towne,
For they are hayre-brain'd Slaves,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their Teeth
The Walls they'll teare downe, then forſake the Siege.
Reig. I thinke by ſome odde Gimmalls or device
Their Armes are ſet, like Clockes, ſtill to ſtrike on;
Elſe ne're could they hold out ſo as they doe:
By my conſent, we'll even let them alone.
Alan. Be it ſo.

Enter the Baſtard of Orleance.

Baſt. Where's the Prince Dolphin? I have newes for him.
Dolph. Baſtard of Orleance, thrice welcome to us.
Baſt. Me thinkes your lookes are ſad, your cheare ap-
Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence? (pal'd.
Be not diſmay'd, for ſuccour is at hand:
A holy Maid hither with me I bring,
Which by a Viſion ſent to her from Heaven,
Ordayned is to raiſe this tedious Seige,
And drive the Engliſh forth the bounds of France:
The ſpirit of deepe Propheſie ſhe hath,
Exceeding the nine Sibyls of old Rome:
What's paſt, and what's to come, ſhe can deſcry.
Speake, ſhall I call her in? beleeve my words,
For they are certaine, and unfallible.
Dolph. Goe call her in: but firſt, to try her skill,
Reignier ſtand thou as Dolphin in my place;
Queſtion her prowdly, let thy Lookes be ſterne,
By this meanes ſhall we ſound what skill ſhe hath.

Enter Ioane Puzel.

Reig. Faire Maid, is't thou wilt doe theſe wondrous feats?
Puz. Reignier, is't thou that thinkeſt to beguile me?
Where is the Dolphin? Come, come from behind,
I know thee well, though never ſeene before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me;
In private wil I talke with thee apart:
Stand backe you Lords, and give us leave a while.
Reig. She takes upon her bravely at firſt daſh.
Puz. Dolphin, I am by birth a Shepheards Daughter,
My wit untrain'd in any kind of Art:
Heaven and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd
To ſhine on my contemptible eſtate.
Loe, whileſt I wayted on my tender Lambes,
And to Sunnes parching heat diſplai'd my cheekes,
Gods Mother deigned to appeare to me,
And in a Viſion full of Majeſty,
Will'd me to leave my baſe Vocation,
And free my Countrey from Calamity:
Her ayde ſhe promis'd, and aſſur'd ſucceſſe.
In compleat Glory ſhe reveal'd her ſelfe;
And whereas I was blacke and ſwart before:
With thoſe cleare Rayes, which ſhe infus'd on me,
That beauty am I bleſt with, which you ſee.
Aske me what queſtion thou canſt poſſible,
And I will anſwer unpremeditated:
My Courage try by Combat, if thou dar'ſt,
And thou ſhalt find that I exceed my Sex.
Reſolve on this, thou ſhalt be fortunate,
If thou receive me for thy Warlike Mate.
Dolph. Thou haſt aſtoniſht me with thy high termes:
Onely this proofe Ile of thy Valour make,
In ſingle Combat thou ſhalt buckle with me;
And if thou vanquiſheſt, thy words are true,
Otherwiſe I renounce all confidence.
Puz. I am prepar'd: here is my keene-edg'd Sword,
Deckt with fine Flower-de-Luces on each ſide,
The which at Touraine, in S. Katherines Church-yard,
Out of a great deale of old Iron, I choſe forth.
Dolph. Then come a Gods name, I feare no woman.
Puzel. And while I live, Ile ne're flye no man.

Here they fight, and Ioane de Puzel overcomes.

Dolph. Stay, ſtay thy hands, thou art an Amazon,
And fighteſt with the Sword of Debora.
Puzel. Chriſts Mother helpes me, elſe I were too weake.
Dolph. Who e're helps thee, 'tis thou that muſt helpe
Impatiently I burne with thy deſire, (me:
My heart and hands thou haſt at once ſubdu'd,
Excellent Puzel, if thy name be ſo,
Let me thy ſervant, and not Soveraigne be,
'Tis the French Dolphin ſueth to thee thus.
Puzel. I muſt not yeeld to any rights of Love,
For my Profeſſion's ſacred from above:
When I have chaſed all thy Foes from hence,
Then will I thinke upon a recompence.
Dolph. Meane time looke gracious on thy proſtrate Thrall.
Reig. My Lord me thinkes is very long in talke.
Alan. Doubtleſſe he ſhrives this woman to her ſmocke
Elſe ne're could he ſo long protract his ſpeech.
Reigni. Shall wee diſturbe him, ſince he keepes no meane?
Ala. He may mean more then we poore men do know?
Theſe women are ſhrewd tempters with their tongues.
Reig. My Lord, where are you? what deviſe you on,
Shall we give o're Orleance, or no?
Puzel. Why no, I ſay: diſtruſtfull Recreants,
Fight till the laſt gaſpe: for Ile be your guard.
Dolph. What ſhe ſayes, Ile confirme: we'll fight it out.
Puzel. Aſſign'd am I to be the Engliſh Scourge.
This night the Siege aſſuredly Ile raiſe:
Expect Saint Martins Summer, Halcyons dayes,
Since I have entred thus into theſe Warres.
Glory is like a Circle in the Water,
Which never ceaſeth to enlarge it ſelfe,
Till by broad ſpreading, it diſperſe to nought.
With Henries death, the Engliſh Circle ends,
Diſperſed are the glories it included:
Now am I like that prowd inſulting Ship,
Which Cæſar and his fortune bare at once.
Dolph. Was Mahomet inſpired with a Dove?
Thou with an Eagle art inſpired then.
Helen, the Mother of Great Conſtantine,
Nor yet S. Philips daughters were like thee.
Bright Starre of Venus, faine downe on the Earth,
How may I reverently worſhip thee enough?
Alan. Leave off delayes, and let us raiſe the Siege.

Reig. Woman, doe what thou canſt to ſave our honors,
Drive them from Orleance, and be immortaliz'd.
Dolph. Preſently we'll try: come, let's away about it,
No Prophet will I truſt, if ſhe prove falſe. Exeunt.

Enter Gloſter, with his Serving-men.

Gloſt. I am come to ſurvey the Tower this day;
Since Henries death, I feare there is Conveyance:
Where be theſe Warders, that they wait not here?
Open the Gates, 'tis Gloſter that calls.
1. Warder. Who's there, that knocks ſo imperiouſly?
Gloſt. 1. Man. It is the Noble Duke of Gloſter.
2. Warder. Who ere he be, you may not be let in.
1. Man. Villaines, anſwer you ſo the Lord Protector?
1. Warder. The Lord protect him, ſo we anſwer him,
We doe no otherwiſe then we are will'd.
Gloſt. Who willed you? or whoſe will ſtands but mine?
There's none Protector of the Realme, but I:
Breake up the Gates, Ile be your warrantize;
Shall I be flowted thus by dunghill Groomes?

Gloſters men ruſh at the Tower Gates, and Woodvile the Lieutenant ſpeakes within.

Wood. What noyſe is this? what Traytors have wee here?
Gloſt. Lieutenant, is it you whoſe voyce I heare?
Open the Gates, here's Gloſter that would enter.
Wood. Have patience Noble Duke, I may not open,
The Cardinall of Wincheſter forbids:
From him I have expreſſe commandement,
That thou nor none of thine ſhall be let in.
Gloſt. Faint-hearted Woodvile, prizeſt him 'fore me:
Arrogant Wincheſter, that haughty Prelate,
Whom Henry our late Soveraigne ne're could brooke?
Thou art no friend to God, or to the King:
Open the Gates, or Ile ſhut thee out ſhortly.
Servingmen. Open the Gates unto the Lord Protector,
Or we'll burſt them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter to the Protector at the Tower Gates. Wincheſter and his men in Tawney Coates.

Wincheſt. How now ambitious Vmpire, what meanes this?
Gloſt. Piel'd Prieſt, doo'ſt thou command me to be ſhut out?
Wincheſt. I doe, thou moſt uſurping Proditor,
And not Protector of the King or Realme.
Gloſt. Stand backe thou manifeſt Conſpirator,
Thou that contrived'ſt to murther our dread Lord,
Thou that giv'ſt Whores Indulgences to ſinne,
Ile canvas thee in thy broad Cardinalls Hat,
If thou proceed in this thy inſolence.
Winch. Nay, ſtand thou backe, I will not budge a foot:
This be Damaſcus, be thou curſed Cain,
To ſlay thy Brother Abel, if thou wilt.
Gloſt. I will not ſlay thee, but Ile drive thee backe:
Thy Scarlet Robes, as a Childs bearing Cloth,
Ile uſe, to carry thee out of this place.
Winch. Doe what thou dar'ſt, I beard thee to thy face.
Gloſt. What? am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?
Draw men, for all this priviledged place,
Blew Coats to Tawny Coats. Prieſt, beware your Beard,
I meane to tugge it, and to cuffe you ſoundly.
Vnder my feet Ile ſtampe thy Cardinalls Hat:
In ſpight of Pope, or dignities of Church,
Here by the Cheekes Ile drag thee up and downe.
Wincheſt. Gloſter, thou wilt anſwer this before the Pope.
Gloſt. Wincheſter Gooſe, I cry, a Rope, a Rope.
Now beat them hence, why doe you let them ſtay?
Thee Ile chaſe hence, thou Wolfe in Sheepes array.
Out Tawney-Coates, out Scarlet Hypocrite.

Here Gloſters men beat out the Cardinalls men, and enter in the hurly-burly the Mayor of London, and his Officers.

Mayor. Fye Lords, that you being ſupreme Magiſtrats,
Thus contumeliouſly ſhould breake the Peace.
Gl. Peace Mayor, for thou know'ſt little of my wrongs:
Here's Beauford, that regards nor God nor King,
Hath here diſtrayn'd the Tower to his uſe.
Winch. Here's Gloſter too, a Foe to Citizens,
One that ſtill motions Warre, and never Peace,
O're-charging your free Purſes with large Fines;
That ſeekes to overthrow Religion,
Becauſe he is Protector of the Realme;
And would have Armour here out of the Tower,
To Crowne himſelfe King, and ſuppreſſe the Prince.
Gloſt. I will not anſwer thee with words, but blowes.

Here they skirmiſh againe.

Mayor. Nought reſts for me, in this tumultuous ſtrife,
But to make open Proclamation.
Come Officer, as lowd as e're thou canſt, cry:
All manner of men, aſſembled here in Armes this day, againſt Gods Peace and the Kings, we charge and command you, in his Highneſſe Name, to repayre to your ſeverall dwelling places, and not to weare, handle, or uſe any Sword, Weapon, or Dagger hence-forward, upon paine of death.
Gloſt. Cardinall, Ile be no breaker of the Law:
But we ſhall meet, and breake our minds at large.
Winch. Gloſter, we'll meet to thy deare coſt be ſure:
Thy heart-blood I will have for this dayes worke.
Mayor. Ile call for Clubs, if you will not away:
This Cardinall is more haughty then the Devill.
Gloſter. Major farewell: thou doo'ſt but what thou may'ſt.
Winch. Abhominable Gloſter, guard thy Head,
For I intend to have it ere long. Exeunt.
Mayor. See the Coaſt clear'd, and then we will depart.
Good God, theſe Nobles ſhould ſuch ſtomacks beare,
I my ſelfe fight not once in forty yeere. Exeunt.

Enter the Maſter Gunner of Orleance, and his Boy.

M. Gun. Sirrha, thou know'ſt how Orleance is beſieg'd
And how the Engliſh have the Suburbs wonne.
Boy. Father I know, and oft have ſhot at them,
How e're unfortunate, I miſs'd my ayme.
M. Gun. But now thou ſhalt not. Be thou rul'd by me:
Cheife Maſter Gunner am I of this Towne,
Something I muſt doe to procure me grace:
The Princes eſpyals have informed me:
How the Engliſh, in the Suburbs cloſe entrencht,
Went through a ſecret Grate of Iron Barres,
In yonder Tower, to over-peere the City,
And thence diſcover, how with moſt advantage
They may vex us with Shot or with Aſſault.
To intercept this inconvenience,
A Peece of Ordnance 'gainſt it I have plac'd,

And fully even theſe three dayes have I watcht,
If I could ſee them. Now Boy doe thou watch,
For I can ſtay no longer.
If thou ſpy'ſt any, runne and bring me word,
And thou ſhalt find me at the Governors. Exit.
Boy. Father, I warrant you, take you no care,
Ile never trouble you, if I may ſpye them. Exit.

Enter Salisbury, and Talbot on the Turrets, with others.

Salis. Talbot, my life, my joy, againe return'd?
How wert thou handled, being Priſoner?
Or by what meanes got's thou to be releas'd?
Diſcourſe I prethee on this Turrets top.
Tal. The Earle of Bedford had a Priſoner,
Call'd the brave Lord Ponton de Santraile,
For him was I exchang'd, and ranſom'd.
But with a baſer man of Armes by farre,
Once in contempt they would have barter'd me:
Which I diſdaining, ſcorn'd, and craved death,
Rather then I would be ſo pil'd eſteem'd;
In fine, redeem'd I was as I deſir'd.
But O, the trecherous Falſtaffe wounds my heart,
Whom with my bare fiſts I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.
Salis. Yet tell'ſt thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.
Tal. With ſcoffes and ſcornes, and contumelious taunts,
In open Market-place produc't they me,
To be a publique ſpectacle to all:
Here, ſaid they, is the Terror of the French,
The Scar-Crow that affrights our Children ſo.
Then broke I from the Officers that led me,
And with my nayles digg'd ſtones out of the ground,
To hurle at the beholders of my ſhame.
My griſly countenance made others flye,
None durſt come neere, for feare of ſuddaine death.
In Iron Walls they deem'd me not ſecure:
So great feare of my Name 'mongſt them were ſpread,
That they ſuppos'd I could rend Barres of ſteele,
And ſpurne in pieces Poſts of Adamant.
Wherefore a guard of choſen Shot I had;
That walkt about me every Minute while:
And if I did but ſtirre out of my Bed,
Ready they were to ſhoot me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a Linſtocke.

Salis: I grieve to heare what torments you endur'd,
But we will be reveng'd ſufficiently.
Now it is Supper time in Orleance:
Here, through this Grate, I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortifie:
Let us looke in, the ſight will much delight thee:
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glanſdale,
Let me have your expreſſe opinions,
Where is beſt place to make our Batt'ry next?
Gargr. I thinke at the North Gate, for there ſtand Lords.
Glanſ. And I heere, at the Bulwarke of the Bridge.
Talb. For ought I ſee, this City muſt be famiſht,
Or with light Skirmiſhes enfeebled.

Here they ſhot, and Salisbury falls downe.

Salis. O Lord have mercy on us, wretched ſinners.
Garg. O Lord have mercy on me, wofull man.
Talb. What chance is this, that ſuddenly hath croſt us?
Speake Salisbury; at leaſt, if thou canſt, ſpeake:
How far'ſt thou, Mirror of all Martiall men?
One of thy Eyes, and thy Cheekes ſide ſtrucke off?
Accurſed Tower, accurſed fatall Hand,
That hath contriv'd this wofull Tragedy.
In thirteene Battailes, Salisbury o'recame:
Henry the Fift he firſt trayn'd to the Warres.
Whil'ſt any Trumpe did ſound, or Drum ſtrucke up,
His Sword did ne're leaue ſtriking in the field.
Yet liv'ſt thou Salisbury? though thy ſpeech doth fayle;
One Eye thou haſt to looke to Heaven for grace.
The Sunne with one Eye vieweth all the World.
Heaven be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands.
Beare hence his Body, I will helpe to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargrave, haſt thou any life?
Speake unto Talbot, nay, looke up to him.
Salisbury cheare thy Spirit with this comfort,
Thou ſhalt not dye whiles ———
He beckens with his hand, and ſmiles on me:
As who ſhould ſay, When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.
Plantaginet I will, and Nero like will,
Play on the Lute, beholding the Townes burne:
Wretched ſhall France be onely in my Name.

— Here an Alarum, and it Thunders and Lightens.

What ſtirre is this? what tumult's in the Heavens?
Whence commeth this Alarum, and the noyſe?

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord, my Lord, the French have gather'd
The Dolphin, with one Ioane de Puzel joyn'd, (head
A holy Propheteſſe, new riſen up,
Is come with a great Power, to rayſe the Siege.

Here Salisbury lifteth himſelfe up, and groanes.

Talb. Heare, heare, how dying Salisbury doth gro
It irkes his heart he cannot be reveng'd.
Frenchmen, Ile be a Salisbury to you.
Puzel or Puſſel, Dolphin or Dog-fiſh,
Your hearts Ile ſtampe out with my Horſes heeles,
And make a Quagmire of your mingled braines.
Convey me Salisbury into his Tent,
And then we'll try what theſe daſtard Frenchmen dare.

Alarum, Exe

Here an Alarum againe, and Talbot purſueth the Dolp and driveth him: Then enter Ioane de Puzel, driving Engliſhmen before her. Then enter Talbot.

Talb. Where is my ſtrength, my valour, and my fo
Our Engliſh Troupes retyre, I cannot ſtay them.
A Woman clad in Armour chaſeth them.

Enter Puzel.

Here, here ſhe comes. Ile have about with thee:
Devill, or Devils Dam, Ile conjure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a Witch.
And ſtraightway give thy Soule to him thou ſerv'ſt.
Puz. Come, come, 'tis onely I that muſt diſgrace th

Here they fight.

Talb. Heavens, can you ſuffer Hell ſo to prevaile?
My breſt Ile burſt with ſtraining of my courage,
And from my ſhoulders cracke my Armes aſunder,
But I will chaſtiſe this high-minded Strumpet.

They fight againe.

Puz. Talbot farewell, thy houre is not yet come,
I muſt goe Victuall Orleance forwith;

A ſhort Alarum: then enter the Towne with Souldiers.

O're-take me if thou canſt, I ſcorne thy ſtrength.
Goe, goe, cheare up thy hongry-ſtarved men,
Helpe Salisbury to make his Teſtament,
This Day is ours, as many more ſhall be. Exit.

Talb. My thoughts are whirled like a Potters Wheele.
I know not where I am, nor what I doe:
A Witch by feare, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives backe our troupes, and conquers as ſhe liſts:
So Bees with ſmoake, and Doves with noyſome ſtench,
Are from their Hyves and Houſes driven away.
They call'd us, for our fierceneſſe, Engliſh Dogges,
Now like the Whelpes, we crying runne away.

A ſhort Alarum.

Hearke Countreymen, eyther renew the fight,
Or teare the Lyons out of Englands Coat;
Renounce your Soyle, give Sheepe in Lyons ſtead:
Sheepe run not halfe ſo trecherous from the Wolfe,
Or Horſe or Oxen from the Leopard,
As you flye from your oft-ſubdued ſlaves.

Alarum. Here another Skirmiſh.

It will not be, retyre into your Trenches:
You all conſented unto Salisburies death,
For none would ſtrike a ſtroake in his revenge.
Puzel is entred into Orleance,
In ſpight of us, or ought that we could doe.
O would I were to dye with Salisbury,
The ſhame hereof, will make me hide my head.

Exit Talbot.

Alarum, Retreat, Flouriſh.

Enter on the Walls, Puzel, Dolphin, Reigneir, Alanſon, and Souldiers.

Puzel. Aduance our wauing Colours on the Walls,
Reſcu'd is Orleance from the Engliſh wolves:
Thus Ioane de Puzel hath perform'd her word.

Dolph. Divineſt Creature, bright Aſtrea's Daughter,
How ſhall I honour thee for this ſucceſſe?
Thy promiſes are like Adonis Garden,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitfull were the next.
France, triumph in thy glorious Propheteſſe,
Recover'd is the Towne of Orleance,
More bleſſed hap did ne're befall our State.

Reigneir. Why ring not out the Bells alowd,
Throughout the Towone?
Dolphin command the Citizens make Bonefires,
And feaſt and banquet in the open ſtreets,
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

Alanſ. All France will be repleat with mirth and joy,
When they ſhall heare how we have play'd the men.

Dolph. 'Tis Ioane not we, by whom the day is wonne:
For which, I will devide my Crowne with her,
And all the Prieſts and Fryers in my Realme,
Shall in proceſſion ſing her endleſſe prayſe.
A ſtatelyer Pyramis to her Ile reare,
Then Rhodope's or Memphis ever was.
In memorie of her wen ſhe is dead,
Her Aſhes, in an Vrne more precious
Then the rich-jewel'd Coffer of Darius,
Tranſported, ſhall be at high Feſtivals
Before the Kings and Queenes of France.
No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry,
But Ioane de Puzel ſhall be France's Saint.
Come in, and let us Banquet Royally,
After this Golden Day of Victorie.

Flouriſh. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter a Sergeant of a Band, with two Sentinels.

Ser. Sirs, take your places and be vigilant:
If any noyſe or Souldier you perceive
Neere to the walles, by ſome apparant ſigne
Let us have knowledge at the Court of Guard.

Sent. Sergeant you ſhall. Thus are poore Servitors
(Wheu others ſleepe upon their quiet beds)
Conſtrain'd to watch in darkeneſſe, raine, and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, and Burgundy, with ſcaling Ladders: Their Drummes beating a Dead March.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubted Burgundy,
By whoſe approach, the Regions of Artoys,
Wallon, and Picardy, are friends to us:
This happy night, the Frenchmen are ſecure,
Having all day carows'd and banquetted,
Embrace we then this opportunitie,
As fitting beſt to quittance their deceite,
Contriv'd by Art, and balefull Sorcerie.

Bed. Coward of France, how much he wrongs his fame,
Deſpairing of his owne armes fortitude,
To joyne with Witches, and the helpe of Hell.

Bur. Traitors have never other company.
But what's that Puzell whom they tearme ſo pure?

Tal. A Maid, they ſay.

Bed. A Maid? And be ſo martiall?

Bur. Pray God ſhe prove not maſculine ere long:
If underneath the Standard of the French
She carry Armor, as ſhe hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practiſe and converſe with ſpirits.
God is our Fortreſſe, in whoſe conqvering name
Let us reſolve to ſcale their flinty bulwarkes.

Bed. Aſcend brave Talbot, we will follow thee.

Tal. Not altogether: Better farre I gueſſe,
That we do make our entrance ſeverall wayes:
That if it chance the one of us do faile,
The other yet may riſe againſt their force.

Bed. Agreed; Ile to yond corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And heere will Talbot mount, or make his grave.
Now Salisbury for thee and for the right
Of Engliſh Henry, ſhall this night appeare
How much in duty, I am bound to both.

Sent. Arme, arme, the enemy doth make aſſault.

Cry, S. George. A Talbot.

The French leape ore the walles in their ſhirts. Enter ſeverall wayes, Baſtard, Alanſon, Reignier, halfe ready, and halfe unready.

Alan. How now my Lords? what all unreadie ſo?

Baſt. Vnready? I and glad we ſcap'd ſo well.

Reig. 'Twas time (I trow) to wake and leave our beds,
Hearing Alarums at our Chamber doores.

Alan. Of all exploits ſince firſt I follow'd Armes,
Ne're heard I of a walike enterprize

More venturous, or deſperate then this.
Baſt. I thinke this Talbot be a Fiend of Hell.
Reig. If not of Hell, the Heavens ſure favour him.
Alanſ. Here commeth Charles, I marvell how he ſped?

Enter Charles and Ione.

Baſt. Tut, holy Ioane was his defenſive Guard.
Charl. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitfull Dame?
Didſt thou at firſt, to flatter us withall,
Make us partakers of a little gayne,
That now our loſſe might be ten times ſo much?
Ioane. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?
At all times will you have my power alike?
Sleeping or waking, muſt I ſtill prevaile,
Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?
Improvident Souldiers, had your watch beene good,
This ſodaine miſchiefe never could have falne.
Charl. Duke of Alanſon, this was your default,
That being Captaine of the Watch to Night,
Did looke no better to that weightie Charge.
Alanſ. Had all our Quarters beene as ſafely kept,
As that whereof I had the government,
We had not beene thus ſhamefully ſurpriz'd.
Baſt. Mine was ſecure.
Reig. And ſo was mine, my Lord.
Charl. And for my ſelfe, moſt part of all this Night
Within her Quarter, and mine owne Precinct,
I was imploy'd in paſſing to and fro,
About relieving of the Centinels.
Then how, or which way, ſhould they firſt breake in?
Ioane. Queſtion (my Lords) no further of the caſe,
How or which way; 'tis ſure they found ſome place,
But weakely guarded, where the breach was made:
And now there reſts no other ſhift but this,
To gather our Souldiors, ſcatter'd and diſperc't,
And lay new Plat-formes to endammage them.
Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter a Souldier, crying, a Talbot, a Talbot: they flye, leaving their Cloathes behind.

Sould. Ile be ſo bold to take what they have left:
The Cry of Talbot ſerves me for a Sword,
For I have loaden me with many Spoyles,
Vſing no other Weapon but his Name. Exit.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundie.

Bedf. The day begins to breake, and Night is fled,
Whoſe pitchy Mantle over-vayl'd the Earth.
Here ſound Retreat, and ceaſe our hot purſuit. Retreat.
Talb. Bring forth the Body of old Salisbury,
And here advance it in the Market-Place,
The middle Center of this curſed Towne.
Now have I pay'd my Vow unto his Soule,
For every drop of blood was drawne from him,
There hath at leaſt five Frenchmen dyed to night.
And that hereafter Ages may behold
What ruine happened in revenge of him,
Within their chiefeſt Temple Ile erect
A Tombe, wherein his Corps ſhall be interr'd:
Vpon the which, that every one may reade,
Shall be engrav'd the ſacke of Orleance,
The trecherous manner of his mournefull death,
And what a terror he had beene to France.
But Lords, in all our bloudy Maſſacre,
I muſe we met not with the Dolphins Grace,
His new-come Champion, vertuous Ioane of Acre,
Nor any of his falſe Confederates.
Bedf. 'Tis thought Lord Talbot, when the fight began,
Rows'd on the ſodaine from their drowſie Beds,
They did amongſt the troupes of armed men,
Leape o're the Walls for refuge in the field.
Burg. My ſelfe, as farre as I could well diſcerne,
For ſmoake, and duskie vapors of the night,
Am ſure I ſcar'd the Dolphin and his Trull,
When Arme in Arme they both came ſwiftly running,
Like to a paire of loving Turtle-Doves,
That could not live aſunder day or night,
After that things are ſet in order here,
Wee'le follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. All hayle, my Lords: which of his Princely trayne
Call ye the Warlike Talbot, for his Acts
So much applauded through the Realme of France?
Talb. Here is the Talbot, who would ſpeake with him?
Meſſ. The vertuous Lady, Counteſſe of Auergne,
With modeſtie admiring thy Renowne,
By me entreats (great Lord) thou would'ſt vouchſafe
To viſit her poore Caſtle where ſhe lyes,
That ſhe may boaſt ſhe hath beheld the man,
Whoſe glory fills the World with lowd report.
Burg. Is it even ſo? Nay, then I ſee our Warres
Will turne unto a peacefull Comick ſport,
When Ladyes crave to be encountred with.
You may not (my Lord) deſpiſe her gentle ſuit.
Talb. Ne're truſt me then: for when a World of men
Could not prevayle with all their Oratorie,
Yet hath a Womans kindneſſe over-rul'd:
And therefore tell her, I returne great thankes,
And in ſubmiſſion will attend on her.
Will not your Honours beare me company?
Bedf. No, truly, 'tis more then manners will:
And I have heard it ſayd, Vnbidden Gueſts
Are often welcommeſt when they are gone.
Talb. Well then, alone (ſince there's no remedie)
I meane to prove this Ladyes courteſie.
Come hither Captaine, you perceive my minde.
Whiſpers.
Capt. I doe my Lord, and meane accordingly.
Exeunt

Enter Counteſſe.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge,
And when you have done ſo, bring the Keyes to me.
Port. Madame, I will. Exit.
Count. The Plot is layd, if all things fall out right,
I ſhall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Tomyris by Cyrus death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadfull Knight,
And his atchievements of no leſſe account:
Faine would mine eyes be witneſſe with mine eares,
To give their cenſure of theſe rare reports.

Enter Meſſenger and Talbot.

Meſ. Madame, according as your Ladyſhip deſir'd,
By meſſage crav'd, ſo is Lord Talbot come.
Count. And he is welcome: what? is this the man?
Meſſ. Madame, it is.
Cout. Is this the Scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, ſo much fear'd abroad?
That with his Name the Mothers ſtill their Babes?
I ſee Report is fabulous and falſe.

I thought I ſhould have ſeene ſome Hercules,
A ſecond Hector, for his grim aſpect,
And large proportion of his ſtrong knit Limbes.
Alas, this is a Child, a ſilly Dwarfe:
It cannot be, this weake and writhled ſhrimpe
Should ſtrike ſuch terror to his Enemies.
Talb. Madame, I have beene bold to trouble you:
But ſince your Ladyſhip is not at leyſure,
Ile ſort ſome other time to viſit you.
Count. What meanes he now?
Goe aske him, whither he goes?
Meſſ. Stay my Lord Talbot, for my Lady craves,
To know the cauſe of your abrupt departure?
Talb. Marry, for that ſhee's in a wrong beleefe,
I goe to certifie her Talbot's here.

Enter Porter with Keyes.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou Priſoner.
Talb. Priſoner? to whom?
Count. To me, blood-thirſtie Lord:
And for that cauſe I train'd thee to my Houſe.
Long time thy ſhadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my Gallery thy picture hangs:
But now the ſubſtance ſhall endure the like,
And I will chayne theſe Legges and Armes of thine,
That haſt by tyrannie theſe many yeeres
Waſted our Countrey, ſlaine our Citizens,
And ſent our Sonnes and Husbands captivate.
Talb. Ha, ha, ha.
Count. Laugheſt thou Wretch?
Thy mirth ſhall turne to moane.
Talb. I laugh to ſee your Ladiſhip ſo fond,
To thinke, that you have ought but Talbots ſhadow,
Whereon to practiſe your ſeverity.
Count. Why? art not thou the man?
Talb. I am indeede.
Count. Then have I ſubſtance too.
Talb. No, no, I am but ſhadow of my ſelfe:
You are deceiv'd, my ſubſtance is not here;
For what you ſee, is but the ſmalleſt part,
And leaſt proportion of Humanitie:
I tell you Madame, were the whole Frame here,
It is of ſuch a ſpacious loftie pitch,
Your Roofe were not ſufficient to contayn't.
Count. This is a Riddling Merchant for the nonce,
He will be here, and yet he is not here:
How can theſe contrarieties agree?
Talb. That will I ſhew you preſently.

Winds his Horne, Drummes ſtrike up, a Peale of Ordenance: Enter Souldiers.

How ſay you Madame? are you now perſwaded,
That Talbot is but ſhadow of himſelfe?
Theſe are his ſubſtance, ſinewes, armes, and ſtrength,
With which he yoaketh your rebellious Neckes,
Razeth your Cities, and ſubverts your Townes,
And in a moment makes them deſolate.
Count. Victorious Talbot, pardon my abuſe,
I finde thou art no leſſe then Fame hath bruited,
And more then may be gathered by thy ſhape.
Let my preſumption not provoke thy wrath,
For I am ſorry, that with reverence
I did not entertaine thee as thou art.
Talb. Be not diſmay'd, faire Lady, nor miſconſter
The minde of Talbot, as you did miſtake
The outward compoſition of his body.
What you have done, hath not offended me:
Nor other ſatisfaction doe I crave,
But onely with our patience, that we may
Taſte of your Wine, and ſee what Cates you have,
For Souldiers ſtomackes alwayes ſerve them well.
Count. With all my heart, and thinke me honored,
To feaſt ſo great a Warrior in my houſe. Exeunt.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, Somerſet, Poole, and others.

Yorke. Great Lords and Gentlemen,
What meanes this ſilence?
Dare no man anſwere in a Caſe of Truth?
Suff. Within the Temple Hall we were too lowd,
The Garden here is more convenient.
York. Then ſay at once, if I maintain'd the Truth:
Or elſe was wrangling Somerſet in th'error?
Suff. Faith I have beene a Truant in the Law,
And never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the Law unto my will.
Som. Iudge you, my Lord of Warwicke, then betweene us.
War. Between two Hawks, which flyes the higher pitch,
Betweene two Dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Betweene two Blades, which beares the better temper,
Betweene two Horſes, which doth beare him beſt,
Betweene two Girles, which hath the merrieſt eye,
I have perhaps ſome ſhallow ſpirit of judgement:
But in theſe nice ſharpe Quillets of the Law,
Good faith I am no wiſer then a Daw.
Yorke. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance:
The truth appeares ſo naked on my ſide,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
Som. And on my ſide it is ſo well apparrell'd,
So cleare, ſo ſhining, and ſo evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind-mans eye.
Yorke. Since you are tongue-ty'd, and ſo loth to ſpeake,
In dumbe ſignificants proclayme your thoughts:
Let him that is a true-borne Gentleman,
And ſtands upon the honor of his birth,
If he ſuppoſe that I have pleaded truth,
From off this Bryer plucke a white Roſe with me,
Som. Let him that is no Coward, nor no flatterer,
But dare maintaine the party of the truth,
Pluck a red Roſe from off this Thorne with me.
War. I love no Colours: and without all colour
Of baſe inſinuating flatterie,
I pluck this white Roſe with Plantagenet.
Suff. I plucke this red Roſe, with young Somerſet,
And ſay withall, I thinke he held the right.
Vernon. Stay Lords and Gentlemen, and pluck no more
Till you conclude, that he upon whoſe ſide
The feweſt Roſes are cropt from the tree,
Shall yeeld the other in the right opinion.
Som. Good Maſter Vernon, it is well objected:
If I have feweſt, I ſubſcribe in ſilence.
Yorke. And I.
Vernon. Then for the truth, and plaineneſſe of the Caſe,
I plucke this pale and Majden Bloſſome here,
Giving my Verdict on the white Roſe ſide.
Som. Prick not your finger as you plucke it off,
Leaſt bleeding, you doe paint the white Roſe red,
And fall on my ſide ſo againſt your will.
Vernon. If I, my Lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion ſhall be Surgeon to my hurt,
And keepe me on the ſide where ſtill I am.
Som. Well, well, come on, who elſe?

Lawier. Vnleſſe my Studie and my Bookes be falſe,
The argument you held, was wrong in you;
In ſigne whereof, I plucke a white Roſe too.
Yorke. Now Somerſet, where is your argument?
Som. Here in my Scabbard, meditating, that Shall dye your white Roſe in a bloody red.
York. Meane time your cheeks do counterfeit our Roſes:
For pale they looke with feare, as witneſſing
The truth on our ſide.
Som. No Plantagenet:
'Tis not for feare, but anger, that thy cheekes
Bluſh for pure ſhame, to counterfeit our Roſes,
And yet thye tongue will not confeſſe thy error.
Yorke. Hath not thy Roſe a Canker, Somerſet?
Som. Hath not thy Roſe a Thorne, Plantagenet?
Yorke. I, ſharpe and piercing to maintaine his truth,
Whiles thy conſuming Canker eates his falſehood.
Som. Well, Ile find friends to weare my bleeding Roſes,
That ſhall maintaine what I have ſaid is true,
Where falſe Plantagenet dare not be ſeene.
Yorke. Now by this Maiden Bloſſome in my hand,
I ſcorne thee and thy faſhion, peeviſh Boy.
Suff. Turne not thy ſcornes this way Plantagenet.
Yorke. Prowd Poole, I will, and ſcorne both him and thee.
Suff. Ile turne my part thereof into thy throat.
Som. Away, away, good William de la Poole,
We grace the Yeoman, by converſing with him.
Warw. Now by Gods will thou wrong'ſt him, Somerſet:
His Grandfather was Lyonel Duke of Clarence,
Third Sonne to the third Edward King of England:
Spring Creſtleſſe Yeomen from ſo deepe a Root?
Yorke. He beares him on the place's Priviledge,
Or durſt not for his craven heart ſay thus.
Som. By him that made me, Ile maintaine my words
On any plot of Ground in Chriſtendome.
Was not thy Father, Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
For Treaſon executed in our late Kings dayes?
And by his Treaſon, ſtand'ſt not thou attainted,
Corrupted and exempt from ancient Gentry?
His treſpaſſe yet lives guiltie in thy blood,
And till thou be reſtor'd, thou art a Yeoman.
Yorke. My Father was attached, not attainted,
Condemn'd to dye for Treaſon, but no Traytor;
And that Ile prove on better men then Somerſet,
Were growing time once ripened to my will.
For your partaker Poole, and you your ſelfe,
Ile note you in my Booke of Memorie,
To ſcourge you for this apprehenſion:
Looke to it well, and ſay you are well warn'd.
Som. Ah, thou ſhalt finde us ready for thee ſtill:
And know us by theſe Colours for thy Foes,
For theſe, my friends in ſpight of thee ſhall weare.
Yorke. And by my Soule, this pale and angry Roſe,
As Cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for ever, and my faction weare,
Vntill it wither with me to my Grave,
Or flouriſh to the height of my Degree.
Suff. Goe forward, and be choak'd with thy ambition:
And ſo farewell, untill I meete thee next. Exit.
Som. Have with thee Poole: Farewell ambitious Richard. Exit.
Yorke. How I am brav'd and muſt perforce endure it?
Warw. This blot that they object againſt your houſe,
Shall be wip't out in the next Parliament,
Call'd for the Truce of Wincheſter and Glouceſter:
And if thou be not then created Yorke,
I will not live to be accounted Warwicke.
Meane time, in ſignall of my love to thee,
Againſt proud Somerſet, and William Poole,
Will I upon thy partie weare this Roſe.
And here I prophecie: this brawle to day,
Growne to this faction in the Temple Garden,
Shall ſend betweene the Red-Roſe and the White,
A thouſand Soules to Death and deadly Night.
Yorke. Good Maſter Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalfe would plucke a Flower.
Ver. In your behalfe ſtill will I weare the ſame.
Lawyer. And ſo will I.
Yorke. Thankes gentle Sir.
Come, let us foure to Dinner: I dare ſay,
This Quarrell will drinke Blood another day.
Exeunt.

Enter Mortimer, brought in a Chayre, and Iaylors.

Mort. Kind Keepers of my weake decaying Age,
Let dying Mortimer here reſt himſelfe.
Even like a man new haled from the Wrack,
So fare my Limbes with long Impriſonment:
And theſe gray Lockes, the Purſuivants of death,
Neſtor-like aged, in an Age of Care,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.
Theſe Eyes, like Lampes, whoſe waſting Oyle is ſpent,
Waxe dimme, as drawing to their Exigent.
Weake Shoulders, over-borne with burthening Griefe,
And pyth-leſſe Armes, like to a withered Vine,
That droupes his ſappe-leſſe Branches to the ground.
Yet are theſe Feet, whoſe ſtrength-leſſe ſtay is numme,
(Vnable to ſupport this Lumpe of Clay)
Swift-winged with deſire to get a Grave,
As witting I no other comfort have.
But tell me Keeper, will my Nephew come?
Keeper. Richard Plantagenet, my Lord, will come:
We ſent unto the Temple, his Chamber,
And anſwer was return'd, that he will come:
Mort. Enough: my ſoule then ſhall be ſatisfied.
Poore Gentleman, his wrong doth equall mine,
Since Henrie Monmouth firſt began to reigne,
Before whoſe Glory I was great in Armes,
This loathſome ſequeſtration have I had;
And even ſince then, hath Richard beene obſcur'd,
Depriv'd of Honour and Inheritance.
But now, the Arbitrator of Deſpaires,
Iuſt death, kinde Vmpire of mens miſeries,
With ſweet enlargement doth diſmiſſe me hence:
I would his troubles likewiſe were expir'd,
That ſo he might recover what was loſt.

Enter Richard

Keeper. My Lord, your loving Nephew now is come.
Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?
Rich. I, Noble Vnckle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your Nephew, late deſpiſed Richard, comes.
Mort. Direct mine Armes, I may embrace his Necke,
And in his Boſome ſpend my latter gaſpe.
Oh tell me when my Lippes doe touch his Cheekes,
That I may kindly give one fainting Kiſſe,
And now declare ſweet Stem from Yorkes great Stock
Why didſt thou ſay of late thou wert deſpis'd?
Rich. Firſt

Rich. Firſt, leane thine aged Back againſt mine Arme,
And in that eaſe, Ile tell thee my Diſeaſe.
This day in argument upon a Caſe,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerſet and me:
Amongſt which tearmes, he us'd his laviſh tongue,
And did upbrayd me with my Fathers death;
Which obloquie ſet barres before my tongue,
Elſe with the like I had requited him.
Therefore good Vnckle, for my Fathers ſake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And for Alliance ſake, declare the cauſe
My Father, Earle of Cambridge, loſt his Head.
Mort. That cauſe (faire Nephew) that impriſon'd me,
And hath detayn'd me all my flowring Youth,
Within a loathſome Dungeon, there to pyne,
Was curſed inſtrument of his deceaſe.
Rich. Diſcover more at large what cauſe that was,
For I am ignorant, and cannot gueſſe.
Mort. I will, if that my fading breath permit,
And death approach not, ere my Tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, Grandfather to this King,
Depos'd his Nephew Richard, Edwards Sonne,
The firſt begotten, and the lawfull Heire
Of Edward King, third of that Deſcent.
During whoſe Reigne, the Percies of the North,
Finding his Vſurpation moſt unjuſt,
Endevor'd my aduancement to the Throne.
The reaſon mov'd theſe Warlike Lords to this,
Was, for that (young King Richard thus remov'd, Leaving no Heire begotten of his Body)
I was the next by Birth and Parentage:
For by my Mother I derived am
From Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third Sonne
To King Edward the Third; whereas hee,
From Iohn of Gaunt doth bring his Pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that Heroick Lyne.
But marke: as in this haughtie great attempt,
They laboured to plant the rightfull Heire,
I loſt my Libertie, and they their Lives.
Long after this, when Henry the Fift
(Succeeding his Father Bullingbrooke) did reigne;
Thy Father, Earle of Cambridge, then deriv'd
From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of Yorke,
Marrying my Siſter, that thy Mother was;
Againe, in pitty of my hard diſtreſſe,
Levied an Army, weening to redeeme,
And have inſtall'd me in the Diademe:
But as the reſt, ſo fell that Noble Earle,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the Title reſted, were ſuppreſt.
Rich. Of which, my Lord, your Honor is the laſt.
Mort. True; and thou ſeeſt, that I no Iſſue have,
And that my fainting words doe warrant death:
Thou art my Heire; the reſt, I wiſh thee gather:
But yet be wary in thy ſtudious care.
Rich. Thy grave admoniſhments prevaile with me:
But yet me thinkes, my Fathers execution
Was nothing leſſe then bloody Tyranny.
Mort. With ſilence, Nephew, be thou pollitick,
Strong fixed is the Houſe of Lancaſter,
And like a Mountaine, not to be remov'd.
But now thy Vnckle is removing hence,
As Princes doe their Courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a ſetled place.
Rich. O Vnckle, would ſome part of my young yeeres
Might but redeeme the paſſage of your Age.
Mort. Thou do'ſt then wrong me, as yͤ ſlaughterer doth,
Which giveth many Wounds, when one will kill.
Mourne not, except thou ſorrow for my good,
Onely give order for my Funerall.
And ſo farewell, and faire be all thy hopes;
And proſperous be thy Life in Peace and Warre. Dyes.
Rich. And peace, no Warre, befall thy parting Soule.
In priſon haſt thou ſpent a Pilgrimage,
And like a Hermite over-paſt thy dayes.
Well, I will locke his Counſell in my Breſt,
And what I doe imagine, let that reſt.
Keepers convey him hence, and I my ſelfe
Will ſee his Buriall better then his Life. Exit.
Here dyes the duskie Torch of Mortimer,
Choakt with Ambition of the meaner ſort.
And for thoſe Wrongs, thoſe bitter injuries,
Which Somerſet hath offer'd to my Houſe,
I doubt not, but with honor to redreſſe.
And therefore haſte I to the Parliament,
Eyther to be reſtored to my Blood,
Or make my will th' advantage of my good. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Flouriſh. Enter King, Exeter, Gloſter, Winchester, Warwick, Somerſet, Suffolke, Richard Plantagenet. Gloſter offers to put up a Bill: Wincheſter ſnatches it, teares it.

Winch. Com'ſt thou with deepe premeditated Lines?
With written Pamphlets, ſtudiouſly devis'd?
Humfrey of Gloſter, if thou canſt accuſe,
Or ought intend'ſt to lay unto my charge,
Doe it without invention, ſuddenly,
As I with ſudden, and extemporall ſpeech,
Purpoſe to anſwer what thou canſt object.
Glo. Preſumptuous Prieſt, this place cõmands my patiẽce,
Or thou ſhould'ſt finde thou haſt dis-honor'd me.
Thinke not, although in Writing I preferr'd
The manner of thy vile outragious Crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able
Verbatim to rehearſe the Methode of my Penne.
No prelate, ſuch is thy audacious wickedneſſe,
Thy lewd, peſtiferous and diſſentious pranks,
As very infants prattle of thy pride.
Thou art a moſt pernitious Vſurer,
Froward by nature, Enemy to peace,
Laſcivious, wanton, more then well beſeemes
A man of thy profeſſion, and Degree.
And for thy Trecherie, what's more manifeſt?
In that thou layd'ſt a Trap to take my Life,
As well at London Bridge, as at the Tower.
Beſide, I feare me, if thy thoughts were ſifted,
The King, thy ſoveraigne, is not quite exempt
From envious mallice of thy ſwelling heart.
Winch. Gloſter, I doe defie thee. Lords vouchſafe
To give me hearing what I ſhall reply.
If I were covetous, ambitious or perverſe,
As he will have me: how am I ſo poore?
Or how haps it, I ſeeke not to advance
Or rayſe my ſelfe? but keepe my wonted Calling.
And for Diſſention, who preferreth Peace
More then I doe? except I be provok'd.
No, my good Lords, it is not that offends,
It is not that, that hath incens'd the Duke:
It is becauſe no one ſhould ſway but he,
No one, but he, ſhould be about the King;
And that engenders Thunder in his breſt,

And makes him rore theſe Accuſations forth.
But he ſhall know I am as good——
Gloſt. As good?
Thou Baſtard of my Grandfather.
Winch. I, Lordly Sir: for what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in anothers Throne?
Gloſt. Am I not Protector, ſawcie Prieſt?
Winch. And am not I a Prelate of the Church?
Gloſt. Yes, as an Out-law in a Caſtle keepes,
And uſeth it, to patronage his Theft.
Winch. Vnreverent Glocester.
Gloſt. Thou art reverent,
Touching thy Spiritnall Function, not thy Life.
Winch. Rome ſhall remedie this.
Warw. Roame thither then.
My Lord, it were your dutie to forbeare.
Som. I, ſee the Biſhop be not over-borne:
Me thinkes my Lord ſhould be Religious,
And know the Office that belongs to ſuch.
Warw. Me thinkes his Lordſhip ſhould be humbler,
It fitteth not a Prelate ſo to plead.
Som. Yes, when his holy State is toucht ſo neere.
Warw. State holy, or unhallow'd, what of that?
Is not his Gtace Protector to the King?
Rich. Plantagenet I ſee muſt hold his tongue,
Leaſt it be ſaid, Speake Sirrha when you ſhould:
Muſt your bold Verdict enter talke with Lords?
Elſe would I have a fling at Winchester.
King. Vnckles of Gloster, and of Winchester,
The ſpeciall Watch-men of our Engliſh Weale,
I would prevayle, if Prayers might prevayle,
To joyne your hearts in love and amitie.
Oh, what a Scandall is it to our Crowne,
That two ſuch Noble Peeres as ye ſhould iarre?
Beleeve me, Lords, my tender yeeres can tell,
Civill diſſention is a viperous Worme,
That gnawes the Bowels of the Common-wealth.

A noyſe within. Downe with the Tawny-Coats.

King. What tumult's this?
Warw. An Vprore, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the Biſhops men.

A noyſe againe, Stones, Stones.

Enter Mayor.

Mayor. Oh my good Lords, and vertuous Henry,
Pitty the Cittie of London, pitty us:
The Biſhop, and the Duke of Gloſters men,
Forbidden late to carry any Weapon,
Have fill'd their Pockets full of peeble ſtones;
And banding themſelves in contrary parts,
Doe pelt ſo faſt at one anothers Pate,
That many have their giddy braynes knockt out:
Our Windowes are broke downe in every Street,
And we, for feare, compell'd to ſhut our Shops.

Enter in skirmiſh with bloody Pates.

King. We charge you, on allegeance to our ſelves,
To hold your ſlaughtring hands, and keepe the Peace:
Pray' Vnckle Gloster mittigate this ſtrife.
1. Serving. Nay, if we be forbidden Stones, wee'le fall to it with our Teeth.
2. Serving. Doe what ye dare, we are as reſolute.

skirmiſh againe.

Gloſt. You of my houſehold, leave this peeviſh broyle,
And ſet this unaccuſtom'd fight aſide.
3. Seru. My Lord, we know your Grace to be a man
Iuſt, and upright; and for your Royall Birth,
Inferior to none, but to his Majeſtie:
And ere that we will ſuffer ſuch a Prince,
So kinde a Father of the Common-weale,
To be diſgraced by an Inke-horne Mate,
Wee and our Wives and Children all will fight,
And have our bodyes ſlaughtred by thy foes.
1. Seru. I, and the very parings of our Nayles
Shall pitch a Field when we are dead.

Begin againe.

Gloſt. Stay, ſtay, I ſay:
And if you love me, as you ſay you doe,
Let me perſwade you to forbeare a while.
King. Oh, how this diſcord doth afflict my ſoule.
Can you, my Lord of Wincheſter, behold
My ſighes and teares, and will not once relent?
Who ſhould be pittifull, if you be not?
Or who ſhould ſtudy to preferre a Peace,
If holy Church-men take delight in broyles?
Warw. Yeeld my Lord Protector, yeeld Winchester,
Except you meane with obſtinate repulſe
To ſlay your Soveraigne, and deſtroy the Realme.
You ſee what miſchiefe, and what Murther too,
Hath beene enacted through your enmitie:
Then be at peace, except ye thirſt for blood.
Winch. He ſhall ſubmit, or I will never yeeld.
Gloſt. Compaſſion on the King commands me ſtoupe,
Or I would ſee his heart our, ere the Prieſt
Should ever get that priviledge of me.
Warw. Behold my Lord of Wincheſter, the Duke
Hath baniſht moodie diſcontented fury,
As by his ſmoothed Browes it doth appeare:
Why looke you ſtill ſo ſterne, and tragicall?
Gloſt. Here Winchester, I offer thee my Hand.
King. Fie Vnckle Beauford, I have heard you preach,
That Mallice was a great and grievous ſinne:
And will not you maintaine the thing you teach?
But prove a chiefe offender in the ſame.
Warw. Sweet King: the Biſhop hath a kindly gyrd:
For ſhame my Lord of Wincheſter relent;
What, ſhall a Child inſtruct you what to doe?
Winch. Well, Duke of Gloſter, I will yeeld to thee
Love for thy Love, and Hand for Hand I give.
Gloſt. I, but I feare me with a hollow Heart.
See here my friends and loving Countreymen,
This token ſerveth for a Flagge of Truce,
Betwixt our ſelves, and all our followers:
So helpe me God, as I diſſemble not.
Winch. So helpe me God, as I intend it not.
King. Oh loving Vnckle, kinde Duke of Gloſter,
How joyfull am I made by this Contract,
Away my Maſters, trouble us no more,
But joyne in friendſhip, as your Lords have done.
1. Seru. Content, Ile to the Surgeons.
2. Seru. And ſo will I.
3. Seru. And I will ſee what Phyſicke the Taverne affords. Exeunt.
Warw. Accept this Scrowle, moſt gracious Soveraigne,
Which in the Right of Richard Plantagenet,
We doe exhibite to your Majeſtie.
Glo. Wel urg'd, my Lord of Warwick: for ſweet Prince,
And if your Grace marke every circumſtance,
You have great reaſon to doe Richard right,
Eſpecially for thoſe occaſions
At Eltam Place I told your Majeſtie.

King. And thoſe occaſions, Vnckle, were of force:
Therefore my loving Lords, our pleaſure is,
That Richard be reſtored to his Blood.
Warw. Let Richard be reſtord to his Blood,
So ſhall his Fathers wrongs be recompenc't.
Winch. As will the reſt, ſo willeth Winchester.
King. If Richard will be true, not that alone,
But al the whole Inheritance I give,
That doth belong unto the Houſe of Yorke,
From whence you ſpring, by Lineall Deſcent.
Rich. Thy humble ſervant vowes obedience,
And humble ſervice, till the point of death.
King. Stoope then, and ſet your Knee againſt my Foot,
And in reguerdon of that dutie done,
I gyrt thee with the valiant Sword of Yorke.
Riſe Richard, like a true Plantagenet,
And riſe created Princely Duke of Yorke.
Rich. And ſo thrive Richard, as thy foes may fall;
And as my dutie ſprings, ſo periſh they,
That grudge one thought againſt your Majeſtie.
All. Welcome high Prince, the mighty Duke of Yorke.
Som. Periſh baſe Prince, ignoble Duke of Yorke.
Gloſt. Now will it beſt availe your Majeſtie,
To croſſe the Seas, and to be Crown'd in France:
The preſence of a King engenders love
Amongſt his Subjects and his loyall Friends,
As it diſ-animates his Enemies.
King. When Gloſter ſayes the word, King Henry goes,
For friendly counſaile cuts off many Foes.
Gloſt. Your Ships already are in readineſſe.
Exeunt.

Manet Exeter.

Exet. I, we may march in England, or in France,
Not ſeeing what is likely to enſue;
This late diſſention growne betwixt the Peeres,
Burnes under fained aſhes of forg'd love,
And will at laſt breake out into a flame,
As feſtred members rot but by degree,
Till bones and fleſh and ſinewes fall away,
So will this baſe and envious diſcord breed.
And now I feare that fatall Prophecie,
Which in the time of Henry, nam'd the Fiſt,
Was in the mouth of every ſucking Babe,
That Henry borne at Monmouth ſhould winne all,
And Henry borne at Windſor ſhould loſe all:
Which is ſo plaine, that Exeter doth wiſh,
His dayes may finiſh, ere that hapleſſe time. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Pucell diſguis'd, with foure Souldiers with Sacks upon their backs.

Pucell. Theſe are the Citie Gates, the Gates of Roan,
Through which our Pollicy muſt make a breach.
Take heed, be wary how you place your words,
Talke like the vulgar ſort of Market men,
That come to gather Money for their Corne.
If we have entrance, as I hope we ſhall,
And that we finde the ſlouthfull Watch but weake,
Ile by a ſigne give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dolphin may encounter them.
Souldier, Our Sacks ſhall be a meane to ſacke the City,
And we be Lords and Rulers over Roan;
Therefore wee'le knock. Knock.
Watch. Che la.
Pucell. Peaſauns la pouure gens de France,
Poore Market folkes that come to ſell their Corne.
Watch. Enter, goe in, the Market Bell is rung.
Pucell. Now Roan, Ile ſhake thy Bulwarkes to the ground. Exeunt.

Enter Charles, Baſtard, Alanſon.

Charles. Saint Dennis bleſſe this happy Stratageme,
And once againe wee'le ſleepe ſecure in Roan.
Baſtard. Here entred Pucell, and her Practiſants:
Now ſhe is there, how will ſhe ſpecifie?
Here is the beſt and ſafeſt paſſage in.
Reig. By thruſting out a Torch from yonder Tower,
Which once diſcern'd, ſhewes that her meaning is,
No way to that (for weakneſſe) which ſhe entred.

Enter Pucell on the top, thruſting out a
Torch burning.

Pucell. Behold, this is the happy Wedding Torch,
That joyneth Roan unto her Countreymen,
But burning fatall to the Talbonites.
Baſtard. See Noble Charles the Beacon of our friend,
The burning Torch in yonder Turret ſtands.
Charles. Now ſhine it like a Commet of Revenge,
A Prophet to the fall of all our Foes.
Reig. Deferre no time, delayes have dangerous ends,
Enter and cry, the Dolphin, preſently,
And then doe execution on the Watch. Alarum.

An Alarum, Talbot in an Excurſion.

Talb. France, thou ſhalt rue this Treaſon with thy teares,
If Talbot but ſurvive thy Trecherie.
Pucell that Witch, that damned Sorcereſſe,
Hath wrought this Helliſh Miſchiefe unawares,
That hardly we eſcap't the Pride of France. Exit.

An Alarum: Excurſions. Bedford brought in ſicke in a Chayre.

Enter Talbot and Burgonie without: within, Pucell,
Charles, Baſtard, and Reigneir on the Walls.

Pucell. God morrow Gallants, want ye Corn for Bread?
I thinke the Duke of Burgonie will faſt,
Before hee'le buy againe at ſuch a rate.
'Twas full of Darnell: doe you like the taſte?
Burg. Scoffe on vile Fiend, and ſhameleſſe Curtizan,
I truſt ere long to choake thee with thine owne,
And make thee curſe the Harveſt of that Corne.
Charles, Your Grace may ſtarve (perhaps) before that time.
Bedf. Oh let no words, but deedes, revenge this Treaſon.
Pucell. What will you doe, good gray-beard?
Breake a Launce, and runne a-Tilt at Death,
Within a Chayre.
Talb. Foule Fiend of France, and Hag of all deſpight,
Incompaſs'd with thy luſtfull Paramours,
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant Age,
And twit with Cowardiſe a man halfe dead?
Damſell, Ile have a bowt with you againe,
Or elſe let Talbot periſh with this ſhame.
Pucell. Are ye ſo hot, Sir: yet Pucell hold thy peace,
If Talbot doe but Thunder, Raine will follow.
They whiſper together in counſell.
God ſpeed the Parliament: who ſhall be the Speaker?

Talb. Dare yee come forth, and meet us in the field?
Pucell. Belike your Lordſhip takes us then for fooles,
To try if that our owne be ours, or no.
Talb. I ſpeake not to that rayling Hecate,
But unto thee Alanſon, and the reſt.
Will ye, like Souldiors, come and fight it out?
Alanſ. Seignior no.
Talb. Seignior hang: baſe Muleters of France,
Like Peſant foot-Boyes doe they keepe the Walls,
And dare not take up Armes, like Gentlemen.
Pucell. Away Captaines, let's get us from the Walls,
For Talbot meanes no goodneſſe by his Lookes,
God b'uy my Lord, we came ſir but to tell you.
That we are here. Exeunt from the Walls.
Talb. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
Or elſe reproach be Talbots greateſt fame.
Vow Burgonie, by honor of thy houſe,
Prickt on by publike Wrongs ſuſtain'd in France,
Either to get the Towne againe, or dye.
And I, as ſure as Engliſh Henry lives,
And as his Father here was Conqueror;
As ſure as in this late betrayed Towne,
Great Cordelions Heart was buryed;
So ſure I ſweare, to get the Towne, or dye.
Burg. My Vowes are equall partners with thy Vowes.
Talb. But ere we goe, regard this dying Prince,
The valiant Duke of Bedford: Come my Lord,
We will beſtow you in ſome better place,
Fitter for ſickneſſe, and for craſie age,
Bedf. Lord Talbot, doe not ſo diſhonour me:
Here will I ſit, before the Walls of Roan,
And will be partner of your weale or woe.
Burg. Couragious Bedford, let us now perſwade you.
Bedf. Not to be gone from hence, for once I read,
That ſtout Pendragon, in his Litter ſick,
Came to the field, and vanquiſhed his foes.
Me thinkes I ſhould revive the Souldiors hearts,
Becauſe I ever found them as my ſelfe.
Talb. Vndaunting ſpirit in a dying breſt,
Then be it ſo: Heavens keepe old Bedford ſafe.
And now no more adoe, brave Burgonie,
But gather we our Forces out of hand,
And ſet upon our boaſting Enemie. Exit.

An Alarum: Excurſions. Enter Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, and a Captaine.

Capt. Whither away Sir Iohn Falſtaffe, in ſuch haſte?
Falſt. Whither away? to ſave my ſelfe by flight,
We are like to have the overthrow againe.
Capt. What? will you flye, and leave Lord Talbot?
Falſt. I, all the Talbots in the World, to ſave my life. Exit.
Capt. Cowardly Knight, ill fortune follow thee. Exit.

Retreat. Excurſions. Pucell, Alanſon, and Charles flye.

Bedf. Now quiet Soule, depart when Heaven pleaſe,
For I have ſeene our Enemies overthrow.
What is the truſt or ſtrength of fooliſh man?
They that of late were daring with their ſcoffes,
Are glad and faine by flight to ſave themſelves.
Bedford dyes, and is carryed in by two in his Chaire.

An Alarum. Enter Talbot, Burgonie, and the reſt.

Talb. Loſt, and recovered in a day againe,
This is a double Honor, Burgonie:
Yet Heavens have glory for this Victory.
Burg. Warlike and Martiall Talbot, Burgonie
Inſhrines thee in his heart, and there erects
Thy Noble Deeds, as Valors Monuments.
Talb. Thankes gentle Duke: but where is Pucel now?
I thinke her old Familiar is aſleepe.
Now where's the Baſtards braves, and Charles his glikes?
What all amort? Roan hangs her head for griefe,
That ſuch a valiant Company are fled.
Now will we take ſome order in the Towne,
Placing therein ſome expert Officers,
And then depart to Paris, to the King,
For there young Henry with his Nobles lye.
Burg. What wills Lord Talbot, pleaſeth Burgonie.
Talb. But yet before we goe, let's not forget
The Noble Duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,
But ſee his Exequies fulfill'd in Roan,
A braver Souldier never couched Launce,
A gentler heart did never ſway in Court.
But Kings and mightieſt Potentates muſt die,
For that's the end of humane miſerie. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Charles, Baſtard, Alanſon, Pucell.

Pucell. Diſmay not (Princes) at this accident,
Nor grieve that Roan is ſo recovered:
Care is no cure, but rather corraſive,
For things that are not to be remedy'd.
Let frantike Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a Peacocke ſweepe along his tayle,
Wee'le pull his Plumes, and take away his Trayne,
If Dolphin and the reſt will be but rul'd.
Charles. We have beene guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy Cunning had no diffidence,
One ſudden Foyle ſhall never breed diſtruſt.
Baſtard. Search out thy wit for ſecret pollicies,
And we will make thee famous through the World.
Alanſ. Wee'le ſet thy Statue in ſome holy place,
And have thee reverenc't like a bleſſed Saint.
Employ thee then, ſweet Virgin, for our good.
Pucell. Then thus it muſt be, this doth Ioane deviſe:
By faire perſwaſions, mixt with ſugred words,
We will intice the Duke of Burgonie
To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.
Charles. I marry Sweeting, if we could doe that,
France were no place for Henries Warriors,
Nor ſhould that Nation boaſt it ſo with us,
But be extirped from our Provinces.
Alanſ. For ever ſhould they be expuls'd from France,
And not have Title of an Earledome here.
Pucell. Your Honors ſhall perceive, how I will worke,
To bring this matter to the wiſhed end.
Drumme ſounds a farre off.
Hearke, by the ſound of Drumme you may perceive
Their Powers are marching unto Paris-ward.
Here ſound an Engliſh March.
There goes the Talbot with his Colours ſpred,
And all the Troupes of Engliſh after him.

French March.
Now in the Rereward comes the Duke and his:
Fortune in favour makes him lagge behinde.
Summon a Parley, we will talke with him.
Trumpets ſound a Parley.
Charles. A Parley with the Duke of Burgonie?
Burg. Who craves a Parley with the Burgonie?
Pucell. The Princely Charles of France, thy Countreyman.
Burg. What ſay'ſt thou Charles? for I am marching hence.
Charles. Speake Pucell, and enchant him with thy words.
Pucell. Brave Burgonie, undoubted hope of France,
Stay, let thy humble hand-maid ſpeake to thee.
Burg. Speake on, but be not over-tedious.
Pucell. Looke on thy Countrey, looke on fertile France,
And ſee the Cities and the Townes defac't,
By waſting Ruine of the cruell Foe,
As lookes the Mother on her lowly Babe,
When Death doth cloſe his tender-dying Eyes,
See, ſee the pining Malady of France:
Behold the Wounds, the moſt unnaturall Wounds,
Which thou thy ſelfe haſt given her wofull Breſt.
Oh turne thy edged Sword another way,
Strike thoſe that hurt, and hurt not thoſe that helpe:
One drop of Blood drawne from thy Countries Boſome,
Should grieve thee more then ſtreames of forraine gore.
Returne thee therefore with a floud of Teares,
And waſh away thy Countries ſtayned Spots.
Burg. Either ſhe hath bewitcht me with her words,
Or Nature makes me ſuddenly relent.
Pucell. Beſides, all French and France exclaimes on thee,
Doubting thy Birth and lawfull Progenie.
Whom joyn'ſt thou with, but with a Lordly Nation,
That will not truſt thee, but for Profits ſake?
When Talbot hath ſet footing once in France,
And faſhion'd thee that Inſtrument of Ill,
Who then, but Engliſh Henry, will be Lord,
And thou be thruſt out, like a Fugitive?
Call we to minde, and marke but this for proofe:
Was not the Duke of Orleance thy Foe?
And was he not in England Priſoner?
But when they heard he was thine Enemie,
They ſet him free, without his Ranſome pay'd,
In ſpight of Burgonie and all his friends.
See then, thou fight'ſt againſt thy Countreymen,
And joyn'ſt with them will be thy ſlaughter-men.
Come, come, returne; returne thou wandring Lord,
Charles and the reſt will take thee in their armes.
Burg. I am vanquiſhed:
Theſe haughty words of hers
Have batt'red me like roaring Cannon-ſhot,
And made me almoſt yeeld upon my knees.
Forgive me Countrey, and ſweet Countreymen:
And Lords accept this heartie kind embrace.
My Forces and my Power of men are yours.
So farewell Talbot, Ile no longer truſt thee.
Pucell. Done like a Frenchman: turne and turne againe.
Charles. Welcome brave Duke, thy friendſhip makes us freſh.
Baſtard. And doth beget new Courage in our Breſts.
Alanſ. Pucell hath bravely play'd her part in this,
And doth deſerve a Coronet of Gold.
Charles. Now let us on, my Lords,
And ioyne our Powers,
And ſeeke how we may preiudice the Foe. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter the King, Glouceſter, Wincheſter, Yorke, Suffolke Somerſet, Warwicke, Exeter: To them, with his Souldiors, Talbot.

Talb. My gracious Prince, and honorable Peeres,
Hearing of your arrivall in this Realme,
I have a while given Truce unto my Warres,
To doe my dutie to my Soveraigne.
In ſigne whereof, this Arme, that hath reclaim'd
To your obedience, fiftie Fortreſſes,
Twelve Cities, and ſeven walled Townes of ſtrength,
Beſide five hundred Priſoners of eſteeme;
Lets fall his Sword before your Highneſſe feet:
And with ſubmiſſive loyaltie of heart
Aſcribes the Glory of his Conqueſt got,
Firſt to my God, and next unto your Grace.
King. Is this the Lord Talbot, Vnckle Glouceſter,
That hath ſo long beene reſident in France?
Gloſt. Yes, if it pleaſe your Majeſtie, my Liege.
King Welcome brave Captaine, and victorious Lord
When I was young (as yet I am not old)
I doe remember how my Father ſaid,
A ſtouter Champion never handled Sword.
Long ſince we were reſolved of your truth,
Your faithfull ſervice, and your toyle in Warre:
Yet never have you taſted our reward,
Or beene reguerdon'd with ſo much as Thankes,
Becauſe till now, we never ſaw your face,
Therefore ſtand up, and for theſe good deſerts,
We here create you Earle of Shrewsbury,
And in our Coronation take your place.
Exeunt.

Manent Vernon and Baſſet.

Vern. Now Sir, to you that were ſo hot at Sea,
Diſgracing of theſe Colours that I weare,
In honor of my Noble Lord of Yorke,
Dar'ſt thou maintaine the former words thou ſpak'ſt?
Baſſ. Yes Sir, as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your ſawcie Tongue,
Againſt the Duke of Somerſet.
Vern. Sirrha, thy Lord I honor as he is.
Baſſ. Why what is he? as good a man as Yorke.
Vern. Hearke ye: not ſo: in witneſſe take ye that.
Strikes him.
Baſſ. Villaine, thou knoweſt
The Law of Armes is ſuch,
That who ſo drawes a Sword, 'tis preſent death,
Or elſe this Blow ſhould broach thy deareſt Bloud.
But Ile unto his Majeſtie, and crave,
I may have liberty to venge this Wrong,
When thou ſhalt ſee, Ile meet thee to thy coſt.
Vern. Well miſcreant, Ile be there as ſoone as you,
And after meete you, ſooner then you would.
Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter King, Gloceſter, Wincheſter, Yorke, Suffolke, Somerſet, Warwicke, Talbot, and Governor Exeter.

Glo. Lord Biſhop, ſet the Crowne upon his head.
Win. God ſave King Henry of that name the ſixt.
Glo. Now Governour of Paris take your oath,
That you elect no other King but him;
Eſteeme none friends, but ſuch as are his Friends,
And none your Foes, but ſuch as ſhall pretend
Malicious practiſes againſt his State:
This ſhall ye do, ſo helpe you righteous God.

Enter Falſtaffe.

Fal. My gracious Soveraigne, as I rode from Calice,
To haſte unto your Coronation:
A Letter was deliver'd to my hands,
Writ to your Grace, from th' Duke of Burgundy.
Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy, and thee:
I vow'd (baſe Knight) when I did meet thee next,
To teare the Garter from thy Cravens legge,
Which I have done, becauſe (unworthily)
Thou was't inſtalled in that High Degree.
Pardon me Princely Henry, and the reſt:
This Daſtard, at the battell of Poictiers,
When (but in all) I was ſixe thouſand ſtrong,
And that the French were almoſt ten to one,
Before we met, or that a ſtroke was given,
Like to a truſtie Squire, did run away.
In which aſſault, we loſt twelue hundred men.
My ſelfe, and divers Gentlemen beſide,
Were there ſurpriz'd, and taken priſoners.
Then iudge (great Lords) if I have done amiſſe:
Or whether that ſuch Cowards ought to weare
This Ornament of Knighthood, yea or no?
Glo. To ſay the truth, this fact was infamous,
And ill beſeeming any common man:
Much more a Knight, a Captaine, and a Leader.
Tal. When firſt this Order was ordain'd my Lords,
Knights of the Garter were of Noble birth;
Valiant, and Vertuous, full of haughty Courage,
Such as were growne to credit by the warres:
Not fearing Death, nor ſhrinking for Diſtreſſe.
But alwayes reſolute, in moſt extreames.
He then, that is not furniſh'd in this ſort,
Doth but vſurpe the Sacred name of Knight,
Prophaning this moſt Honourable Order,
And ſhould (if I were worthy to be Iudge)
Be quite degraded, like a Hedge-Borne Swaine,
That doth preſume to boaſt of Gentle blood.
K. Staine to thy Countrymen, thou hear'ſt thy doom;
Be packing therefore, thou that waſt a knight:
Henceforth we baniſh thee on paine of death. Exit.
And now my Lord Protector view the Letter,
Sent from our Vncle Duke of Burgundy.
Glo. What meanes his Grace, that he hath chaung'd his Stile?
No more but plaine and bluntly? (To the King.)
Hath he forgot he is his Soueraigne?
Or doth this churliſh Superſcription
Pretend ſome alteration in good will?
What's heere? I have upon eſpeciall cauſe,
Mov'd with compaſſion of of my Countries wracke,
Together with the pittifull complaints
Of ſuch as your oppreſſion feedes upon,
Forſaken your pernitious Faction,
And ioyn'd with Charles, the rightfull king of France.
O monſtrous Treachery: Can this be ſo?
That in alliance, amity, and oathes,
There ſhould be found ſuch falſe diſſembling guile?
King. What? doth my Vncle Burgundy revolt?
Glo. He doth my Lord, and is become my foe.
King. Is that the worſt this letter doth containe?
Glo. It is the worſt, and all (my Lord) he writes.
King. Why then Lord Talbot there ſhal talke with him,
And giue him chaſticement for this abuſe.
How ſay you (my Lord) are you not content?
Tal. Content my Liege? Yes: but that I am prevented,
I ſhould have begg'd I might have bene employd.
King.. Then gather ſtrength, and march unto him ſtraight:
Let him perceive how ill we brooke his Treaſon,
And what offence it is to flout his Friends.
Tal. I go my Lord, in heart deſiring ſtill
You may behold confuſion of your foes.

Enter Vernon and Baſſet.

Ver. Grant me the Combate, gracious Soveraigne.
Baſ. And me (my Lord) grant me the Combate too.
Yorke. This is my Seruant, heare him Noble Prince.
Som. And this is mine (ſweet Henry) favour him.
King. Be patient Lords, and give them leave to ſpeake,
Say Gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaime
And wherefore crave you Combate? Or with whom?
Ver. With him (my Lord) for he hath done me wrong.
Baſ. And I with him, for he hath done me wrong.
King. What is that wrong whereon you both complain?
Firſt let me know, and then Ile anſwer you.
Baſ. Croſſing the Sea, from England into France,
This Fellow heere with carping tongue,
Vpbraided me about the Roſe I weare,
Saying, the ſanguine colour of the Leaves
Did preſent my Maſters bluſhing cheekes:
When ſtubbornly he did repugne the truth,
About a certaine queſtion in the Law,
Argu'd betwixt the Duke of Yorke, and him:
With other vile and ignominious tearmes.
In confutation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my Lords worthineſſe,
I craue the benefit of Law of Armes.
Ver. And that is my petition (Noble Lord:)
For though he ſeeme with forged queint conceite
To ſet a gloſſe upon his bold intent,
Yet know (my Lord) I was provok'd by him,
And he firſt tooke exceptions at this badge,
Pronouncing that the paleneſſe of this Flower,
Bewray'd the faintneſſe of my Maſters heart.
Yorke. Will not this malice Somerſet be left?
Som. Your private grudge my Lord of Yorke, wil out,
Though ne're ſo cunningly you ſmother it.
King. Good Lord what madneſſe rules in braine-ſicke men,
When for ſo ſlight and frivolous a cauſe,
Such factions æmulations ſhall ariſe?
Good Couſins both of Yorke and Somerſet,
Quiet your ſelves, and be at peace,
Yorke. Let this diſſention firſt be tryed by fight,
And then your Highneſſe ſhal command a Peace.
Som. The quarrell toucheth none but us alone,
Betwixt our ſelves let us decide it then.
Yorke. There is my pledge, accept it Somerſet.
Ver. Nay, let it reſt where it began at firſt.

Baſſ. Confirme it ſo, mine honourable Lord.
Glo. Confirme it ſo? Confounded be your ſtrife,
And periſh ye with your audacious prate,
Preſumptuous vaſſals, are you not aſham'd
With this immodeſt clamorous outrage,
To trouble and diſturbe the King, and Vs?
And you my Lords, me thinkes you do not well
To beare with their perverſe Objections:
Much leſſe to take occaſion from their mouthes,
To raiſe a mutiny betwixt your ſelves:
Let me perſwade you take a better courſe.
Exet. It grieves his Highneſſe,
Good my Lords, be friends.
King. Come hither you that would be Combatants:
Henceforth I charge you, as you love our favour,
Quite to forget this Quarrell, and the cauſe.
And you my Lords: Remember where we are,
In France, amongſt a fickle wavering Nation:
If they perceive diſſention in our lookes,
And that within our ſelves we diſagree;
How will their grudging ſtomackes be provok'd
To wilfull Diſobedience, and Rebell?
Beſide, What infamy will there ariſe,
When Forraigne Princes ſhall be certified,
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henries Peeres, and chiefe Nobility,
Deſtroy'd themſelves, and loſt the Realme of France?
Oh thinke upon the Conqueſt of my Father,
My tender yeares, and let us not forgoe
That for a trifle, that was bought with blood.
Let me be Vmper in this doubtfull ſtrife:
I ſee no reaſon if I weare this Roſe,
That any one ſhould therefore be ſuſpitious
I more incline to Somerſet, then Yorke:
Both are my kinſmen, and I love them both.
As well they may upbray'd me with my Crowne,
Becauſe (forſooth) the King of Scots is Crown'd.
But your diſcretions better can perſwade,
Then I am able to inſtruct or teach:
And therefore as we hither came in peace,
So let us ſtill continue peace and love.
Coſin of Yorke, we inſtitute your Grace
To be our Regent in theſe parts of France:
And good my Lord of Somerſet, unite
Your troopes of horſemen, with his Bands of foote,
And like true Subjects, ſonnes of your Progenitors,
Go cheerefully together, and digeſt
Your angry Choller on your Enemies.
Our Selfe, my Lord Protector, and the reſt,
After ſome reſpit will returne to Calice;
From thence to England, where I hope ere long
To be preſented by your Victories,
With Charles, Alanſon, and that Traiterous rout.
Exeunt. Manet Yorke, Warwicke, Exeter, Vernon.
War. My Lord of Yorke, I promiſe you the King
Prettyly (me thought) did play the Orator.)
Yorke. And ſo he did, but yet I like it not,
In that he weares the badge of Somerſet.
War. Tuſh, that was but his fancie, blame him not,
I dare preſume (ſweet Prince) he thought no harme.
Yorke. And if I wiſh he did. But let it reſt,
Other affayres muſt now be managed. Exeunt.
Flouriſh. Manet Exeter.
Exet. Well didſt thou Richard to ſuppreſſe thy voyce:
For had the paſſions of thy heart burſt out,
I feare we ſhould have ſeene decipher'd there
More rancorous ſpight, more furious raging broyles,
Then yet can be imagin'd or ſuppos'd:
But howſoere, no ſimple man that ſees
This iarring diſcord of Nobilitie,
This ſhouldering of each other in the Court,
This factious bandying of their Favourites,
But that it doth preſage ſome ill event.
'Tis much, when Scepters are in Childrens hands:
But more, when Envy breeds unkinde deviſion. Exit.
Then comes the ruine, there begins confuſion.

Enter Talbot with Trumpet and Drumme, before Burdeaux.

Talb. Go to the Gates of Burdeaux, Trumpeter, Summon their Generall unto the Wall. Sounds.
Enter Generall aloft.
Engliſh Iohn Talbot (Captaines) calls you forth,
Servant in Armes to Harry King of England,
And thus he would. Open your City Gates,
Be humbled to us, call my Soveraigne yours,
And do him homage as obedient Subjects;
And Ile withdraw me, and my bloody power.
But if you frowne upon this proffer'd Peace,
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Leane Famine, quartering Steele, and climbing Fire,
Who in a moment, even with the earth,
Shall lay your ſtately, and ayre-braving Towers,
If you forſake the offer of their love.
Cap. Thou ominous and fearefull Owle of death,
Our Nations terror, and their bloody ſcourge,
The period of thy Tyranny approacheth,
On us thou canſt not enter but by death:
For I proteſt we are well fortified,
And ſtrong enough to iſſue out and fight.
If thou retire, the Dolphin well appointed,
Stands with the ſnares of Warre to tangle thee.
On either hand thee, there are ſquadrons pitcht,
To wall thee from the liberty of Flight;
Ten thouſand French have tane the Sacrament,
And no way canſt thou turne thee for redreſſe,
But death doth front thee with apparant ſpoyle,
And pale deſtruction meetes thee in the face:
To ryue their dangerous Artillerie
Vpon no Chriſtian ſoule but Engliſh Talbot:
Loe, there thou ſtandſt a breathing valiant man
Of an invincible unconquer'd ſpirit:
This is the lateſt Glorie of thy prayſe,
That I thy enemy dew thee withall:
For ere the Glaſſe that now begins to runne,
Finiſh the proceſſe of his ſandy houre,
Theſe eyes that ſee thee now well coloured,
Shall ſee thee withered, bloody, pale, and dead.
Drum a farre off.
Harke, harke, the Dolphins drumme, a warning bell,
Sings heavy Muſicke to thy timorous ſoule,
And mine ſhall ring thy dire departure out. Exit.
Tal. He Fables not, I heare the enemie:
Out ſome light Horſemen, and peruſe their Wings.
O negligent and heedleſſe Diſcipline,
How are we park'd and bounded in a pale?
A little Heard of Englands timorous Deere,
Maz'd with a yelping kennell of French Curres.
If we be Engliſh Deere, be then in blood,
Not Raſcall-like to fall downe with a pinch,
But rather moodie mad: And deſperate Stagges,

Turne on the bloody Hounds with heads of Steele,
And make the Cowards ſtand aloofe at bay:
Sell every man his life as deere as mine,
And they ſhall finde deere Deere of us my Friends.
God, and S. George, Talbot and Englands right,
Proſper our Colors in this dangerous fight. Exeunt.

Enter a Meſſenger that meets Yorke. Enter Yorke with Trumpet, and many Souldiers.

Yorke. Are not the ſpeedy ſcouts return'd againe,
That dog'd the mighty Army of the Dolphin?
Meſſ. They are return'd my Lord, and give it out,
That he is march'd to Burdeaux with his power
To fight with Talbot: as he march'd along,
By your eſpyals were diſcovered
Two mightier Troopes then that the Dolphin led,
Which joyn'd with him, and made their march for (Burdeaux
Yorke. A plague upon that Villaine Somerſet,
That thus delayes my promiſed ſupply
Of horſemen, that were levied for this ſiege.
Renowned Talbot doth expect my ayde,
And I am lowted by a Traitor Villaine,
And cannot helpe the noble Chevalier:
God comfort him in this neceſſity:
If he miſcarry, farewell Warres in France.

Enter another Meſſenger.

2.Meſ. Thou Princely Leader of our Engliſh ſtrength,
Never ſo needfull on the earth of France,
Spurre to the reſcue of the Noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waſte of Iron,
And hem'd about with grim deſtruction:
To Burdeaux warlike Duke, to Burdeaux Yorke,
Elſe farwell Talbot, France, and Englands honor.
Yorke. O God, that Somerſet who in proud heart
Doth ſtop my Cornets, were in Talbots place,
So ſhould we ſave a valiant Gentleman,
By forfeyting a Traitor and a Coward:
Mad ire, and wrathfull fury makes me weepe,
That thus we dye, while remiſſe Traitors ſleepe.
Meſ. O ſend ſome ſuccour to the diſtreſt Lord.
Yorke. He dies, we loſe: I breake my warlike word:
We mourne, France ſmiles: We loſe, they dayly get,
All long of this vile Traitor Somerſet.
Meſ. Then God take mercy on brave Talbots ſoule,
And on his Sonne yong Iohn, who two hours ſince,
I met in travaile towards his warlike Father;
This ſeaven yeeres did not Talbot ſee his ſonne,
And now they meet where both their lives are done.
Yorke. Alas, what joy ſhall noble Talbot have,
To bid his yong ſonne welcome to his Grave:
Away, vexation almoſt ſtoppes my breath,
That ſundred friends greete in the houre of death.
Lucie farewell, no more my fortune can,
But curſe the cauſe I cannot ayde the man.
Maine, Bloys, Poytiers, and Toures, are wonne away,
Long all of Somerſet, and his delay. Exit.
Meſ. Thus while the Vulture of ſedition,
Feedes in the boſome of ſuch great Commanders,
Sleeping neglection doth betray to loſſe:
The Conqueſt of our ſcarſe-cold Conqueror,
That ever-living man of Memorie,
Henrie the fift: Whiles they each other croſſe,
Lives, Honours, Lands, and all, hurrie to loſſe. Exit.

Enter Somerſet with his Armie.

Som. It is too late, I cannot ſend them now:
This expedition was by Yorke and Talbot,
Too raſhly plotted. All our generall force,
Might with a ſally of the very Towne
Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot
Hath ſullied all his gloſſe of former Honor
By this unheedfull, deſperate, wilde adventure:
Yorke ſet him on to fight, and dye in ſhame,
That Talbot dead, great Yorke might beare the name.
Cap. Heere is Sir William Lucie, who with me
Set from our ore-matcht forces forth for ayde.
Som. How now Sir William, whither were you ſent?
Lu. Whither my Lord, from bought and ſold L. Talbot,
Who ring'd about with bold adverſitie,
Cries out for noble Yorke and Somerſet,
To beate aſſayling death from his weake Regions;
And whiles the honourable Captaine there
Drops bloody ſwet from his warre-wearied limbes,
And in advantage lingring lookes for reſcue,
You his falſe hopes, the truſt of Englands honour,
Keepe off aloofe with worthleſſe emulation:
Let not your private diſcord keepe away
The levied ſuccours that ſhall lend him ayde,
While he renowned Noble Gentleman
Yeelds up his life unto a world of oddes.
Orleance the Baſtard, Charles, and Burgundie,
Alanſon, Reignard, compaſſe him about,
And Talbot periſheth by your default.
Som. Yorke ſet him on, Yorke ſhould have ſent him ayde.
Luc. And Yorke as faſt upon your Grace exclaimes,
Swearing that you with-hold his levied hoaſt,
Collected for this expedition.
Som. York lyes: He might have ſent, & had the Horſe:
I owe him little Dutie, and leſſe Love,
And take foule ſcorne to fawne on him by ſending.
Lu. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now intrapt the Noble-minded Talbot:
Never to England ſhall he beare his life,
But dies betraid to fortune by your ſtrife.
Som. Come go, I will diſpatch the Horſemen ſtrait:
Within ſixe houres, they will be at his ayde.
Lu. Too late comes reſcue, he is tane or ſlaine,
For flye he could not, if he would have fled:
And flye would Talbot never though he might.
Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot then adieu.
Lu. His fame lives in the world. His ſhame in you. Exeunt.

Enter Talbot and his Sonne.

Tal. O young Iohn Talbot, I did ſend for thee
To tutor thee in ſtratagems of Warre,
That Talbots name might be in thee reviv'd,
When ſapleſſe Age, and weake unable limbes
Should bring thy Father to his drooping Chaire.
But O malignant and ill-boading Starres,
Now thou art come unto a Feaſt of death,
A terrible and unavoyded danger:
Therefore deere Boy, mount on my ſwifteſt horſe,
And Ile direct thee how thou ſhalt eſcape
By ſodaine flight. Come, dally not, be gone.
Iohn. Is my name Talbot? and am I your Sonne?

And ſhall I flye? O, if you love my Mother,
Diſhonor not her Honorable Name,
To make a Baſtard, and a Slave of me:
The World will ſay, he is not Talbots blood,
That baſely fled, when Noble Talbot ſtood.
Talb. Flye, to revenge my death, if I be ſlaine.
Iohn. He that flyes ſo, will ne're returne againe.
Talb. If we both ſtay, we both are ſure to dye.
Iohn. Then let me ſtay, and Father doe you flye:
Your loſſe is great, ſo your regard ſhould be;
My worth unknowne, no loſſe is knowne in me.
Vpon my death, the French can little boaſt;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are loſt.
Flight cannot ſtayne the Honor you have wonne,
But mine it will, that no Exploit have done.
You fled for Vantage, every one will ſweare:
But if I bow, they'le ſay it was for feare.
There is no hope that ever I will ſtay,
If the firſt howre I ſhrinke and run away:
Here on my knee I begge Mortality,
Rather then Life, preſerv'd with Infamy.
Talb. Shall all thy Mothers hopes lye in one Tombe?
Iohn. I, rather then Ile ſhame my Mothers Wombe.
Talb. Vpon my Bleſſing I command thee goe.
Iohn. To fight I will, but not to flye the Foe.
Talb. Part of thy Father may be ſav'd in thee.
Iohn. No part of him, but will be ſhame in mee.
Talb. Thou never hadſt Renowne, nor canſt not loſe it.
Iohn. Yes, your renowned Name: ſhall flight abuſe it?
Tal. Thy Fathers charge ſhal cleare thee from yͤ ſtaine.
Iohn. You cannot witneſſe for me, being ſlaine.
If Death be ſo apparant, then both flye.
Talb. And leave my followers here to fight and dye?
My Age was never tainted with ſuch ſhame.
Iohn. And ſhall my Youth be guilty of ſuch blame?
No more can I be ſevered from your ſide,
Then can your ſelfe, your ſelfe in twaine divide:
Stay, goe, doe what you will, the like doe I;
For live I will not, if my Father dye.
Talb. Then here I take my leave of thee, faire Sonne,
Borne to eclipſe thy Life this afternoone:
Come, ſide by ſide, together live and dye,
And Soule with Soule from France to Heaven flye.
Exeunt.

Alarum: Excurſions, wherein Talbots Sonne is hemm'd about, and Talbot reſcues him.

Talb. Saint George, and Victory; fight Souldiers, fight:
The Regent hath with Talbot broke his word,
And left us to the rage of France his Sword.
Where is Iohn Talbot? pawſe, and take thy breath,
I gave thee Life, and reſcu'd thee from Death.
Iohn. O twice my Father, twice am I thy Sonne:
The Life thou gav'ſt me firſt, was loſt and done,
Till with thy Warlike Sword, deſpight of Fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'ſt new date.
Talb. When from the Dolphins Creſt thy Sword ſtruck (fire,
It warm'd thy Fathers heart with prowd deſire
Of bold-fac't Victory. Then Leaden Age,
Quicken'd with Youthfull Spleene, and Warlike Rage,
Beat downe Alanſon, Orleance; Burgundie,
And from the Pride of Gallia reſcued thee.
The irefull Baſtard Orleance, that drew blood
From thee my Boy, and had the Maidenhood
Of thy firſt fight, I ſoone encountred,
And interchanging blowes, I quickly ſhed
Some of his Baſtard blood, and in diſgrace
Beſpoke him thus: Contaminated, baſe,
And mis-begotten blood, I ſpill of thine,
Meane and right poore, for that pure blood of mine,
Which thou didſt force from Talbot, my brave Boy.
Here purpoſing the Baſtard to deſtroy,
Came in ſtrong reſcue. Speake thy Fathers care:
Art thou not weary Iohn? How do'ſt thou fare?
Wilt thou yet leave the Battaile, Boy, and flie,
Now thou art ſeal'd the Sonne of Chivalry?
Flye, to revenge my death when I am dead,
The helpe of one ſtands me in little ſtead.
Oh, too much folly is it, well I wot,
To hazard all our lives in one ſmall Boat.
If I to day dye not with Frenchmens Rage,
To morrow I ſhall dye with mickle Age.
By me they nothing gaine, and if I ſtay,
'Tis but the ſhortning of my Life one day.
In thee thy Mother dyes, our Houſeholds Name,
My Deaths Revenge, thy Youth, and Englands Fame:
All theſe, and more, we hazard by thy ſtay;
All theſe are ſav'd, if thou wilt flye away.
Iohn. The Sword of Orleance hath not made me ſmart,
Theſe words of yours draw Life-blood from my Heart.
On that aduantage, bought with ſuch a ſhame,
To ſave a paltry Life, and ſlay bright Fame,
Before young Talbot from old Talbot flye,
The Coward Horſe that beares me, fall and dye:
And like me to the peſant Boyes of France,
To be Shames ſcorne, and ſubject of Miſchance.
Surely, by all the Glory you have wonne,
And if I flye, I am not Talbots Sonne.
Then talke no more of flight, it is no boot,
If Sonne to Talbot, dye at Talbots foot.
Talb. Then follow thou thy deſp'rate Syre of Creet,
Thou Icarus, thy Life to me is ſweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy Fathers ſide,
And commendable prov'd, let's dye in pride. Exit.

Alarum. Excurſions. Enter old Talbot led.

Talb. Where is my other Life? mine owne is gone.
O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant Iohn?
Triumphant Death, ſmear'd with Captivity,
Young Talbots Valour makes me ſmile at thee.
When he perceiv'd me ſhrinke, and on my Knee,
His bloody Sword he brandiſht over mee,
And like a hungry Lyon did commence
Rough deeds of Rage, and ſterne Impatience:
But when my angry Guardant ſtood alone,
Tendring my ruine, and aſſayl'd of none,
Dizzie-ey'd Fury, and great rage of Heart,
Suddenly made him from my ſide to ſtart
Into the cluſtring Battaile of the French:
And in that Sea of Blood, my Boy did drench
His over-mounting Spirit; and there di'de
My Icarus, my Bloſſome, in his pride.

Enter with Iohn Talbot, borne.

Serv. O my deare Lord, loe where your Sonne is borne.
Ta. Thou antique Death, which laugh'ſt us here to ſcorn,
Anon from thy inſulting Tyrannie,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
Two Talbots winged through the lither Skie,
In thy deſpight ſhall ſcape Mortality.
O thou whoſe wounds become hard favoured death,

Speake to thy father, ere thou yeeld thy breath,
Brave death by ſpeaking, whither he will or no:
Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy Foe.
Poore Boy, he ſmiles, me thinkes, as who ſhould ſay,
Had Death bene French, then Death had dyed to day.
Come, come, and lay him in his Fathers armes,
My ſpirit can no longer beare theſe harmes.
Souldiers adieu: I have what I would have,
Now my old armes are yong Iohn Talbots grave. Dyes.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Charles, Alanſon, Burgundie, Baſtard, and Pucell.

Char. Had Yorke and Somerſet brought reſcue in,
We ſhould have found a bloody day of this.
Baſt. How the yong whelpe of Talbots raging wood,
Did fleſh his puny-ſword in Frenchmens blood.
Puc. Once I encountred him, and thus I ſaid:
Thou Maiden youth, be vanquiſht by a Maide.
But with a provd Majeſticall high ſcorne
He anſwer'd thus: Yong Talbot was not borne
To be the pillage of a Giglot Wench,
He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.
Bur. Doubtleſſe he would have made a noble Knight:
See where he lyes inherced in the armes
Of the moſt bloody Nutſſer of his harmes.
Baſt. Hew them to peeces, hack their bones aſſunder,
Whoſe life was Englands glory, Gallia's wonder.
Char. Oh no forbeare: For that which we have fled
During the life, let us not Wrong it dead.
Enter Lucy.
Lu. Herald, conduct me to the Dolphins Tent,
To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.
Char. On what ſubmiſſive meſſage art thou ſent?
Lucy. Submiſſion Dolphin? Tis a meere French word:
We Engliſh Warriours wot not what it meanes.
I come to know what Priſoners thou haſt tane,
And to ſurvey the bodies of the dead.
Char. For priſoners askſt thou? Hell our priſon is.
But tell me whom thou ſeek'ſt?
Luc. But where's the great Alcides of the field,
Valiant Lord Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury?
Created for his rare ſucceſſe in Armes,
Great Earle of Waſhford, Waterford, and Valence,
Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Vrchinfield,
Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdon of Alton,
Lord Cromwell of Wingefield, Lord Furnivall of Sheffeild,
The thrice victorious Lord of Falconbridge,
Knight of the Noble Order of S. George,
Worthy S. Michael, and the Golden Fleece,
Great Marſhall to our King Henry the ſixt,
Of all his Warres within the Realme of France.
Puc. Heere's a ſilly ſtately ſtile indeede:
The Turke that two and fifty Kingdomes hath,
Writes not ſo tedious a Stile as this.
Him that thou magnifi'ſt with all theſe Titles,
Stinking and fly-blowne lyes heere at our feete.
Lucy. Is Talbot ſlaine, the Frenchmens only Scourge,
Your Kingdomes terror, and blacke Nemeſis?
Oh were mine eye-balles into Bullets turn'd,
That I in rage might ſhoot them at your faces.
Oh, that I could but call theſe dead to life,
It were enough to fright the Realme of France.
Were but his Picture left amongſt you here,
It would amaze the prowdeſt of you all.
Give me their Bodyes, that I may beare them hence,
And give them Buriall, as beſeemes their worth.
Puc. I thinke this upſtart is old Talbots Ghoſt,
He ſpeakes with ſuch a proud commanding ſpirit:
For Gods ſake let him have him; to keepe them here,
They would but ſtinke, and putrifie the ayre.
Char. Go take their bodies hence.
Lucy. Ile beare them hence: but from their aſhes ſhall be reard
A Phœnix that ſhall make all France affear'd.
Char. So we be rid of them, do with them what yͧ wilt.
And now to Paris in this conquering vaine,
All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's ſlaine. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter King, Gloceſter, and Exeter.

King. Have you perus'd the Letters from the Pope,
The Emperor, and the Earle of Arminack?
Glo. I have my Lord, and their intent is this,
They humbly ſue vnto your Excellence,
To have a godly peace concluded of,
Betweene the Realmes of England, and of France.
King. How doth your Grace affect their motion?
Glo. Well (my good Lord) and as the only meanes
To ſtop effuſion of our Chriſtian blood,
And ſtabliſh quietneſſe on every ſide.
King. I marry Vnckle, for I alwayes thought
It was both impious and unnaturall,
That ſuch immanity and bloody ſtrife
Should reigne among Profeſſors of one Faith.
Glo. Beſide my Lord, the ſooner to effect,
And ſurer binde this knot of amitie,
The Earle of Arminacke neere knit to Charles,
A man of great Authority in France,
Proffers his onely daughter to your Grace,
In marriage, with a large and ſumptuous Dowry.
King. Marriage Vnckle? Alas my yeares are yong:
And fitter is my ſtudy, and my Bookes,
Than wanton dalliance with a Paramour.
Yet call th'Embaſſadors, and as you pleaſe,
So let them have their anſweres every one:
I ſhall be well content with any choyce
Tends to Gods glory, and Countries weale.

Enter Wincheſter, and three Ambaſſadors.

Exet. What, is my Lord of Wincheſter inſtall'd,
And call'd unto a Cardinalls degree?
Then I perceive, that will be verified
Henry the Fift did ſometime propheſie.
If once he come to be a Cardinall,
Hee'l make his cap coequall with the Crowne.
King. My Lords Ambaſſadors, your ſeverall ſuites
Have bin conſider'd and debated on,
Your purpoſe is both good and reaſonable:
And therefore are we certainly reſolv'd,
To draw conditions of a friendly peace,

Which by my Lord Wincheſter we meane
Shall be tranſported preſently to France.
Glo. And for the proffer of my Lord your Maiſter,
I have inform'd his Highneſſe ſo at large,
As liking of the Ladies vertuous gifts,
Her Beauty, and the valew of her Dower,
He doth intend ſhe ſhall be Englands Queene.
King. In argument and proofe of which contract,
Beare her this Iewell, pledge of my affection.
And ſo my Lord Protector ſee them guarded,
And ſafely brought to Dover, wherein ſhip'd
Commit them to the fortune of the ſea. Exeunt.
Win. Stay my Lord Legate, you ſhall firſt receive
The ſumme of money which I promiſed
Should be delivered to his Holineſſe,
For cloathing me in theſe grave Ornaments.
Legat. I will attend upon your Lordſhips leyſure,
Win. Now Wincheſter will not ſubmit, I trow,
Or be inferiour to the proudeſt Peere;
Humfrey of Gloſter, thou ſhalt well perceive,
That neither in birth, or for authority,
The Biſhop will be over-borne by thee:
Ile either make thee ſtoope, and bend thy knee,
Or ſacke this Country with a mutiny. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alanſon, Baſtard,
Reignier, and Ione.

Char. Theſe newes (my Lords) may cheere our drooping ſpirits:
'Tis ſaid, the ſtout Pariſians do revolt,
And returne againe unto the warlike French.
Alan. Then march to Paris Royall Charles of France,
And keepe not backe your power in dalliance.
Puc. Peace be amongſt them if they turne to us,
Elſe ruine combate with their Pallaces.
Enter Scout.
Scout. Succeſſe unto our valiant Generall,
And happineſſe to his accomplices.
Char. What tidings ſend our Scouts? I prethee ſpeak,
Scout. The Engliſh Army that divided was
Into two parties, is now conjoyn'd in one,
And meanes to give you battell preſently.
Char. Somewhat too ſodaine Sirs, the warning is,
But we will preſently provide for them.
Bur. I truſt the Ghoſt of Talbot is not there:
Now he is gone my Lord, you neede not feare.
Puc. Of all baſe paſſions, Feare is moſt accurſt.
Command the Conqueſt Charles, it ſhall be thine:
Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.
Char. Then on my Lords, and France be fortunate.
Exeunt. Alarum. Excurſions.

Enter Ione de Pucell.

Puc. The Regent conquers, and the Frenchmen flye.
Now helpe ye charming Spelles and Periapts,
And ye choyſe ſpirits that admoniſh me,
And give me ſignes of future accidents. Thunder.
You ſpeedy helpers, that are ſubſtitutes
Vnder the Lordly Monarch of the North,
Appeare, and ayde me in this enterprize.
Enter Fiends.
This ſpeedy and quicke appearance argues proofe
Of your accuſtom'd diligence to me.
Now ye Familiar Spirits, that are cull'd
Out of the powerfull Regions under earth,
Helpe me this once, that France may get the field.
They walke, and ſpeake not.
Oh hold me not with ſilence over-long:
Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,
Ile lop a member off, and give it you,
In earneſt of a further benefit:
So you do condeſcend to helpe me now.
They hang their heads.
No hope to have redreſſe? My body ſhall
Pay recompence, if you will graunt my ſuite,
They ſhake their heads.
Cannot my body, nor blood-ſacrifice,
Intreate you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my ſoule; my body, ſoule, and all,
Before that England give the French the foyle.
They depart.
See, they forſake me. Now the time is come,
That France muſt vale her lofty plumed Creſt,
And let her head fall into Englands lappe.
My ancient Incantations are too weake,
And hell too ſtrong for me to buckle with:
Now France, thy glory droopeth to the duſt. Exit.

Excurſions. Burgundy and Yorke fight hand to hand. French flye.

Yorke. Damſell of France, I thinke I have you faſt,
Vnchaine your ſpirits now with ſpelling Charmes,
And try if they can gaine your liberty.
A goodly prize, fit for the divels grace.
See how the ugly Witch doth bend her browes,
As if with Circe, ſhe would change my ſhape.
Puc. Chang'd to a worſer ſhape thou canſt not be:
Yor. Oh, Charles the Dolphin is a proper man,
No ſhape but his can pleaſe your dainty eye.
Puc. A plaguing miſcheefe light on Charles, and thee,
And may ye both be ſodainly ſurpriz'd
By bloudy hands, in ſleeping on your beds.
Yorke. Fell banning Hagge, Inchantreſſe hold thy tongue.
Puc. I prethee give me leave to curſe awhile.
Yor. Curſe Miſcreant, when thou comſt to the ſtake
Exeunt.
Alarum. Enter Suffolke with Margaret in his hand.

Suff. Be what thou wilt, thou art my priſoner.
Gazes on her.
Oh Faireſt Beauty, do not feare, nor flye:
For I will touch thee but with reverend hands,
I kiſſe theſe fingers for eternall peace,
And lay them gently on thy tender ſide.
Who art thou, ſay? that I may honor thee.
Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a King,
The King of Naples, who ſo ere thou art.
Suf. And Earle I am, and Suffolke am I call'd.
Be not offended Natures myracle,
Thou art alotted to be tane by me:
So doth the Swan her downy Cignets ſave,

Keeping them priſoner underneath hir wings:
Yet if this ſervile uſage once offend,
Go,and be free againe,as Suffolkes friend. She is going.
Oh ſtay:I have no power to let her paſſe,
My hand would free her, but my heart ſayes no.
As playes the Sunne upon the glaſſie ſtreames,
Twinkling another counterfetted beame,
So ſeemes this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes,
Faine would I wooe her, yet I dare not ſpeake:
Ile call for Pen and Inke,and write my minde:
Fye De la Pole,diſable not thy ſelfe:
Haſt not a Tongue? Is ſhe not heere thy priſoner?
Wilt thou be daunted at a Womans ſight?
I:Beauties Princely Majeſty is ſuch,
Confounds the tongue, and makes the ſenſes rough.
Mar. Say Earle of Suffolke,if thy name be ſo,
What ranſome muſt I pay before I paſſe?
For I perceive I am thy priſoner.
Suf. How canſt thou tell ſhe will deny thy ſuite,
Before thou make a triall of her love?
M. Why ſpeak'ſt thou not? What ranſom muſt I pray?
Suf. She's beautifull; and therefore to be Wooed:
She is a Woman;therefore to be Wonne.
Mar. Wilt thou accept of ranſome,yea or no?
Suf. Fond man, remember that thou haſt a wife,
Then how can Margaret be thy Paramour?
Mar. I were beſt to leave him,for he will not heare.
Suf. There all is marr'd:there lies a cooling card.
Mar. He talkes at randon:ſure the man is mad.
Suf. And yet a diſpenſation may be had.
Mar. And yet I would that you would anſwer me:
Suf. Ile win this Lady Margaret. For whom?
Why for my King: Tuſh,that's a woodden thing.
Mar. He talkes of wood: It is ſome Carpenter.
Suf. Yet ſo my fancy may be ſatisfied,
And peace eſtabliſhed betweene theſe Realmes.
But there remaines a ſcruple in that too:
For though her Father be the King of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Mayne,yet is he poore,
And our Nobility will ſcorne the match.
Mar. Heare ye Captaine? Are you not at leaſure?
Suf. It ſhall be ſo,diſdaine they ne're ſo much:
Henry is youthfull,and will quickly yeeld.
Madam,I have a ſecret to reveale.
Mar. What though I be inthral'd, he ſeems a knight,
And will not any way diſhonor me.
Suf. Lady,vouchſafe to liſten what I ſay.
Mar. Perhaps I ſhall be reſcu'd by the French,
And then I need not crave his curteſie.
Suf. Sweet Madam,give me hearing in a cauſe.
Mar. Tuſh, women have bene captivate ere now.
Suf. Lady,wherefore talke you ſo?
Mar. I cry you mercy,'tis but Quid for Quo.
Suf. Say gentle Princeſſe,would you not ſuppoſe
Your bondage happy,to be made a Queene?
Mar. To be a Queene in bondage,is more vile,
Than is a ſlave,in baſe ſervility:
For Princes ſhould be free.
Suf. And ſo ſhall you,
If happy Englands Royall King be free.
Mar. Why what concernes his freedome unto mee?
Suf. Ile undertake to make thee Henries Queene,
To put a Golden Scepter in thy hand
And ſet a precious Crowne upon thy head,
If thou wilt condeſcend to be my———
Mar. What?
Suf. His love.
Mar. I am unworthy to be Henries wife.
Suf. No gentle Madam, I unworthy am
To wooe ſo faire a Dame to be his wife,
And have no portion in the choice my ſelfe.
How ſay you Madam,are ye ſo content?
Mar. And if my Father pleaſe, I am content.
Suf. Then call our Captaines and our Colours forth,
And Madam,at your Fathers Caſtle walles,
Wee'l crave a parley,to conferre with him.

Sound. Enter Reignier on the Walles.

See Reignier ſee,thy daughter priſoner.
Reig. To whom?
Suf. To me.
Reig. Suffolke, what remedy?
I am a Souldier, and unapt to weepe,
Or to exclaime on Fortunes fickleneſſe.
Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough my Lord,
Conſent,and for thy Honor give conſent,
Thy daughter ſhall be wedded to my King,
Whom I with paine have wooed and wonne thereto:
And this her eaſie held impriſonment,
Hath gain'd thy daughter Princely liberty.
Reig. Speakes Suffolke as he thinkes?
Suf. Faire Margaret knowes,
That Suffolke doth not flatter,face,or faine.
Reig. Vpon thy Princely warrant,I deſcend,
To give thee anſwer of thy juſt demand.
Suf. And heere I will expect thy comming.

Trumpets ſound. Enter Reignier.

Reig. Welcome brave Earle into our Territories,
Command in Anjou what your Honor pleaſes.
Suf. Thankes Reignier,happy for ſo ſweet a Childe,
Fit to be made companion with a King:
What anſwer makes your Grace unto my ſuite?
Reig. Since thou doſt daigne to wooe her little worth,
To be the Princely Bride of ſuch a Lord:
Vpon condition I may quietly
Enjoy mine owne,the Country Maine and Anjou,
Free from oppreſſion,or the ſtroke of Warre,
My daughter ſhall be Henries,if he pleaſe.
Suf. That is her ranſome, I deliver her,
And thoſe two Counties I will undertake
Your Grace ſhall well and quietly enjoy.
Reig. And I againe in Henries Royall name,
As Deputy unto that gracious King,
Give thee her hand for ſigne of plighted faith.
Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee Kingly thankes,
Becauſe this is in Trafficke of a King.
And yet me thinkes I could be well content
To be mine owne Atturney in this caſe.
Ile over then to England with this newes,
And make this marriage to be ſolemniz'd:
So farewell Reignier,ſet this Diamond ſafe
In Golden Pallaces as it becomes.
Reig. I do embrace thee,as I would embrace
The Chriſtian Prince King Henry were he heere.
Mar. Farewell my Lord,good wiſhes,praiſe,& prayers,
Shall Suffolke ever have of Margaret. Shee is going.
Suf. Farewel ſweet Madam:but hearke you Margaret,
No Princely commendations to my King?
Mar. Such commendations as becomes a Maide,
A Virgin,and his Servant,ſay to him.
Suf. Words ſweetly plac'd,and modeſtly directed,

But Madame, I muſt trouble you againe,
No loving Token to his Majeſty?
Mar. Yes, my good Lord, a pure unſpotted heart,
Never yet taint with love, I ſend the King.
Suf. And this withall. Kiſſe her.
Mar. That for thy ſelfe, I will not ſo preſume,
To ſend ſuch peeviſh tokens to a King.
Suf. Oh wert thou for my ſelfe: but Suffolke ſtay,
Thou mayeſt not wander in that Labyrinth,
There Minotaurs and ugly Treaſons lurke.
Solicite Henry with her wonderous praiſe,
Bethinke thee on her Vertues that ſurmount,
Made naturall Graces that extinguiſh Art,
Repeate their ſemblance often on the Seas,
That when thou com'ſt to kneele at Henries feete,
Thou mayeſt bereave him of his wits with wonder. Exit.

Enter Yorke, Warwicke, Shepheard, Pucell.

Yor. Bring forth that Sorcereſſe condemn'd to burne.
Shep. Ah Ione, this kils thy Fathers heart out-right,
Have I ſought every Countrey farre and neere,
And now it is my chance to finde thee out,
Muſt I behold thy timeleſſe cruell death:
Ah Ione, ſweet daughter Ile die with thee.
Puc. Decrepit Miſer, baſe ignoble Wretch,
I am deſcended of a gentler blood.
Thou art no Father, nor no Friend of mine.
Shep. Out, out: My Lords, and pleaſe you, 'tis not ſo,
I did beget her, all the Pariſh knowes:
Her Mother liveth yet, can teſtifie
She was the firſt fruite of my Bach'ler-ſhip.
War. Graceleſſe, wilt thou deny thy Parentage?
Yor. This argues what her kinde of life hath beene,
Wicked and vile, and ſo her death concludes.
Shep. Fye Ione, that thou wilt be ſo obſtacle:
God knowes, thou art a collop of my fleſh,
And for thy ſake have I ſhed many a teare:
Deny me not, I prythee, gentle Ione.
Puc. Pezant avant. You have ſuborn'd this man
Of purpoſe, to obſcure my Noble birth.
Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a Noble to the Prieſt,
The morne that I was wedded to her mother.
Kneele downe and take my bleſſing, good my Gyrle.
Wilt thou not ſtoope? Now curſed be the time
Of thy nativity: I would the Milke
Thy mother gave thee when thou ſuck'dſt her breſt,
Had bin a little Rats-bane for thy ſake.
Or elſe, when thou didſt keepe my Lambes a field,
I wiſh ſome ravenous Wolfe had eaten thee.
Doeſt thou deny thy Father, curſed Drab?
O burne her, burne her, hanging is too good. Exit.
Yor. Take her away, for ſhe hath liv'd too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.
Puc. Firſt let me tell you whom you have condemn'd;
Not me, begotten of a Shepheard Swaine,
But iſſued from the Progeny of Kings.
Vertuous and Holy, choſen from above,
By inſpiration of Celeſtiall Grace,
To worke exceeding miracles on earth.
I never had to do with wicked Spirits,
But you that are polluted with your luſtes,
Stain'd with the guiltleſſe blood of Innocents,
Corrupt and tainted with a thouſand Vices:
Becauſe you want the grace that others have,
You judge it ſtraight a thing impoſſible
To compaſſe Wonders, but by helpe of divels.
No miſconceived, Ione of Aire hath beene
A Virgin from her tender infancy,
Chaſte, and immaculate in very thought,
Whoſe Maiden-blood thus rigorouſly effus'd,
Will cry for Vengeance, at the Gates of Heaven.
Yor. I, I: away with her to execution.
War. and hearke ye ſirs: becauſe ſhe is a Maide,
Spare for no Faggots, let there be enow:
Place barrelles of pitch upon the fatall ſtake,
That ſo her torture may be ſhortned.
Puc. Will nothing turne your unrelenting hearts?
Then Ione diſcovet thine infirmity,
That warranteth by Law, to be thy priviledge.
I am with childe ye bloody Homicides:
Murther not then the Fruite within my Wombe,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.
Yor. Now heaven forfend, the holy Maid with child?
War. The greateſt miracle that ere ye wrought:
Is all your ſtrict preciſeneſſe come to this?
Yor. She and the Dolphin have bin jugling,
I did imagine what would be her refuge.
War. Well go to, we will have no Baſtards live,
Eſpecially ſince Charles muſt Father it.
Puc. You are deceiv'd, my childe is none of his,
It was Alanſon that injoy'd my love.
Yor. Alanſon that notorious Machevile?
It dyes, and if it had a thouſand lives.
Puc. Oh give me leave, I have deluded you,
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the Duke I nam'd,
But Reignier King of Naples that prevail'd.
War. A married man! that's moſt intollerable.
Yor. Why here's a Gyrle: I thinke ſhe knowes not wel
(There were ſo many) whom ſhe may accuſe.
War. It's ſigne ſhe had beene liberall and free.
Yor. And yet forſooth ſhe is a Virgin pure.
Strumpet, thy words condemne thy Brat, and thee.
Vſe no intreaty, for it is in vaine.
Pu. Then lead me hence: with whom I leave my curſe.
May never glorious Sunne reflex his beames
Vpon the Countrey where you make abode:
But darkneſſe, and the gloomy ſhade of death
Inviron you, till Miſcheefe and Deſpaire,
Drive you to break your necks, or hang your ſelves. Exit.

Enter Cardinall.

Yor. Breake thou in peeces, and conſume to aſhes,
You fowle accurſed miniſter of Hell.
Car. Lord Regent, I do greete your Excellence
With Letters of Commiſſion from the King.
For know my Lords, the States of Chriſtendome,
Mov'd with remorſe of theſe out-ragious broyles,
Have earneſtly implor'd a generall peace,
Betwixt our Nation, and th'aſpyring French;
And heere at hand, the Dolphin and his Traine
Approacheth, to conferre about ſome matters.
Yor. Is all our travell turn'd to this effect,
After the ſlaughter of ſo many Peeres,
So many Captaines, Gentlemen, and Souldiers,
That in this quarrell have beeene overthrowne,
And ſold their bodies for their Countries benefit,
Shall we at laſt conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not loſt moſt part of all the Townes,
By treaſon, Falſhood, and by Treachery,
Our great Progenitors had conquered?
Oh Warwicke, Warwicke, I foreſee with greefe
The utter loſſe of all the Realme of France.
War. Be patient Yorke, if we conclude a Peace

It ſhall be with ſuch ſtrict and ſevere Covenants,
As little ſhall the Frenchmen gaine thereby.

Enter Charles, Alanſon, Baſtard, Reignier.

Char. Since Lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peacefull truce ſhall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by your ſelves,
What the conditions of that league muſt be.
Yor. Speake Wincheſter, for boyling choller chokes
The hollow paſſage of my poyſon'd voice,
By ſight of theſe our balefull enemies.
Win. Charles, and the reſt, it is enacted thus:
That in regard King Henry gives conſent,
Of meere compaſſion, and of lenity,
To eaſe your Country of diſtreſſefull Warre,
And ſuffer you to breathe in fruitfull peace,
You ſhall become true Liegemen to his Crowne.
And Charles, upon condition thou wilt ſweare
To pay him tribute, and ſubmit thy ſelfe,
Thou ſhalt be plac'd as Viceroy under him,
And ſtill enjoy thy Regall dignity.
Alan. Muſt he be then as ſhadow of himſelfe?
Adorne his Temples with a Coronet,
And yet in ſubſtance and authority,
Retaine but priviledge of a private man?
This proffer is abſurd, and reaſonleſſe.
Char. 'Tis knowne already that I am poſſeſt
With more then halfe the Gallian Territories,
And therein reverenc'd for their lawfull King.
Shall I for lucre of the reſt un-vanquiſht,
Detract ſo much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but Viceroy of the whole?
No Lord Ambaſſador, Ile rather keepe
That which I have, than coveting for more
Be caſt from poſſibility of all.
Yor. Inſulting Charles, haſt thou by ſecret meanes
Vs'd interceſſion to obtaine a league,
And now the matter growes to compremize,
Stand'ſt thou aloofe upon Compariſon.
Either accept the Title thou uſurp'ſt,
Of benefit proocceding from our King,
And not of any challenge of Deſert,
Or we will plague thee with inceſſant Warres.
Reig. My Lord, you do not well in obſtinacy,
To cavill in the courſe of this Contract:
If onceit be neglected, ten to one
We ſhall not finde like opportunity.
Alan. To ſay the truth, it is your policy,
To ſave your Subiects from ſuch maſſacre
And ruthleſſe ſlaughters as are daily ſeene
By our proceeding in Hoſtility.
And therefore take this compact of a Truce,
Although you breake it, when your pleaſure ſerves.
War. How ſayſt thou Charles?
Shall our Condition ſtand?
Char. It Shall:
Onely reſerv'd, you claime no intereſt
In any of our Townes of Garriſon.
Yor. Then ſweare Allegeance to his Majeſty,
As thou art Knight, never to diſobey,
Nor be Rebellious to the Crowne of England,
Thou nor thy Nobles, to the Crowne of England.
So, now diſmiſſe your Army when ye pleaſe:
Hang up your Enſignes, let your Drummes be ſtill,
For heere we entertaine a ſolemne peace. Exeunt.

Enter Suffolke in conference with the King, Glooceſter, and Exeter.

King. Your wondrous rare deſcription (noble Earle)
Of beauteous Margaret hath aſtoniſh'd me:
Her vertues graced with externall gifts,
Do breed Loves ſetled paſſions in my heart,
And like as rigour of tempeſtuous guſtes
Provokes the mightieſt Hulke againſt the tide,
So am I driven by breath of her Renowne,
Either to ſuffer Shipwracke, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her Loue.
Suf. Tuſh my good Lord, this ſuperficiall tale,
Is but a preface of her worthy praiſe:
The cheefe perfections of that lovely Dame,
(Had I ſufficient skill to utter them)
Would make a volume of inticing lines,
Able to raviſh any dull conceit.
And which is more, ſhe is not ſo Divine,
So full repleate with choice of all delights,
But with as humble lowlineſſe of minde,
She is content to be at your command:
Command I meane, of Vertuous chaſte intents,
To love, and Honor Henry as her Lord.
King. And otherwiſe, will Henry ne're preſume:
Therefore my Lord Protector, give conſent,
That Marg'ret may be Englands Royall Queene.
Glo. So ſhould I give conſent to flatter ſinne,
You know (my Lord) your Highneſſe is betroath'd
Vnto another Lady of eſteeme,
How ſhall we then diſpence with that contract,
And not deface your Honor with reproach?
Suf. As doth a Ruler with unlawfull Oathes,
Or one that at a Triumph, having vow'd
To try his ſtrength, forſaketh yet the Liſtes
By reaſon of his Adverſaries oddes.
A poore Earles daughter is unequall oddes,
And therefore may be broke without offence.
Glou. Why what (I pray) is Margaret more than that?
Her Father is no better than an Earle,
Although in glorious Titles he excell.
Suf. Yes my good Lord, her Father is a King,
The King of Naples, and Ieruſalem,
And of ſuch great Authority in France,
As his alliance will confirme our peace,
And keepe the Frenchmen in Allegeance.
Glo. And ſo the Earle of Arminacke may doe,
Becauſe he is neere Kinſman unto Charles.
Exet. Beſide, his wealth doth warrant liberall dower,
Where Reignier ſooner will receive, than give.
Suf. A Dowre my Lords? Diſgrace not ſo your King,
That he ſhould be ſo abject, baſe, and poore,
To chooſe for wealth, and not for perfect Love.
Henry is able to enrich his Queene,
And not to ſeeke a Queene to make him rich:
So worthleſſe Pezants bargaine for their Wives,
As Market men for Oxen, Sheepe, or Horſe.
But marriage is a matter of more worth,
Then to be dealt in by Atturney-ſhip:
Not whom we will, but whom his Grace affects,
Muſt be companion of his Nuptiall bed.
And therefore Lords, ſince he affects her moſt,
Moſt of all theſe reaſons bindeth us,
In our opinions ſhe ſhould be preferr'd.
For what is wedlocke forced, but a Hell,
An age of diſcord and continuall ſtrife?

Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliſſe,
And is a patterne of Celeſtiall peace.
Whom ſhould we match with Henry being a King,
But Margaret, that is daughter to a King?
Her peereleſſe feature, joyned with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a King.
Her valiant courage, and undaunted ſpirit,
(More then in women commonly is ſeene)
Will anſwer our hope in iſſue of a King:
For Henry, ſonne unto a Conqueror,
Is likely to beget more Conquerors,
If with a Lady of ſo high reſolve,
(As is faire Margaret) he be link'd in love:
Then yeeld my Lords, and heere conclude with mee,
That Margaret ſhall be Queene, and none but ſhee.
King. Whether it be through force of your report,
My Noble Lord of Suffolke: Or for that
My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any paſſion of inflaming love,
I cannot tell: but this I am aſſur'd,
I feele ſuch ſharpe diſſention in my breaſt,
Such fierce alarums both of Hope and Feare,
As I am ſicke with working of my thoughts.
Take therefore ſhipping, poſte my Lord to France,
Agree to any covenants, and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchſafe to come
To croſſe the Seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henries faithfull and annointed Queene.
For your expences and ſufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone I ſay, for till you do returne,
I reſt perplexed with a thouſand Cares.
And you (good Vnckle) baniſh all offence:
If you do cenſure me, by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuſe
This ſodaine execution of my will.
And ſo conduct me, where from company,
I may revolve and ruminate my greefe. Exit.
Glo. I, greefe I feare me, both at firſt and laſt.
Exit Gloceſter.
Suf. Thus Suffolke hath prevail'd, and thus he goes
As did the youthfull Paris once to Greece,
With hope to finde the like event in love,
But proſper better than the Trojan did:
Margaret ſhall now be Queene, and rule the King:
But I will rule both her, the King, and Realme. Exit.

FINIS.

The ſecond Part of King Henry the Sixt.

vvith the death of the Good Duke HVMFREY.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Flouriſh of Trumpets: Then Hoboyes.

Enter King, Duke Humfrey, Salisbury, Warwicke, and Beauford on the one ſide.
The Queene, Suffolke, Yorke, Somerſet, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suffolke.

AS by your high Imperiall Majeſty,
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As Procurator to your Excellence,
To marry Princes Margaret for your Grace;
So in the Famous Ancient City, Toures,
In preſence of the Kings of France, and Sicill,
The Dukes of Orleance, Calaber, Britaigne, Alanſon,
Seven Earles, twelve Barons, & twenty reverend Biſhops
I have perform'd my Taske, and was eſpous'd,
And humbly now upon my bended knee,
In ſight of England, and her Lordly Peeres,
Deliver up my Title in the Queene
To your moſt gracious hand, that are the Subſtance
Of that great Shadow I did repreſent:
The happieſt Gift, that ever Marqueſſe gave,
The Faireſt Queene, that ever King receiv'd.

King. Suffolke ariſe. Welcome Queene Margaret,
I can expreſſe no kinder ſigne of Love
Then this kinde kiſſe: O Lord, that lends me life,
Lend me a heart repleate with thankfulneſſe:
For thou haſt given me in this beauteous Face
A world of earthly bleſſings to my ſoule,
If Simpathy of Love unite our thoughts.

Que. Great King of England, and my gracious Lord,
The mutuall conference that my minde hath had,
By day, by night; waking, and in my dreames,
In Courtly company, or at my Beades,
With you mine Alder lieſeſt Soveraigne,
Makes me the bolder to ſalute my King,
With ruder termes, ſuch as my wit affoords,
And over joy of heart doth miniſter.

King. Her ſight did raviſh, but her grace in Speech,
Her words yclad with wiſedomes Majeſty,
Makes me from Wondring, fall to Weeping joyes,
Such is the Fulneſſe of my hearts content.
Lords, with one cheerefull voice, Welcome my Love.

All kneel. Long live Qu. Margaret, Englands happines.

Quee. We thanke you all. Flouriſh

Suf. My Lord Protector, ſo it pleaſe your Grace,
Here are the Articles of contracted peace,
Betweene our Soveraigne, and the French King Charles,
For eighteene moneths concluded by conſent.

Glo. Reads. Inprimis, It is agreed betweene the French K. Charles, and William de la Pole Marqueſſe of Suffolke, Ambaſſador for Henry King of England, That the ſaid Henry ſhal eſpouſe the Lady Margaret, daughter unto Reignier King of Naples, Sicillia, and Ieruſalem, and Crowne her Queene of England, ere the thirtieth of May next enſuing.

Item, That the Dutchy of Anjou, and the County of Maine ſhall be releaſed and delivered to the King her father.

King. Vnkle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me gracious Lord,
Some ſodaine qualme hath ſtrucke me at the heart,
And dim'd mine eyes, that I can reade no further.

King. Vnckle of Wincheſter, I pray reade on.

Win. Item, It is further agreed betweene them, That the Dutcheſſe of Anjou and Maine, ſhal be releaſed and delivered over to the King her Father, and ſhee ſent over of the King of Englands owne proper Coſt and Charges, without having any Dowry.

King. They pleaſe us well. Lord Marques kneel down,
We heere create thee the firſt Duke of Suffolke,
And girt thee with the Sword. Coſin of Yorke,
We heere diſcharge your Grace from being Regent
I'th parts of France, till terme of eighteene Moneths
Be full expyr'd. Thankes Vnckle Wincheſter,
Gloſter, Yorke, Buckingham, and Somerſet,
Salisbury, and Warwicke.
We thanke you all for this great favour done,
In entertainment to my Princely Queene.
Come, let us in, and with all ſpeede provide
To ſee her Coronation be perform'd.

Exeunt King, Queene, and Suffolke.

Manent the reſt.

Glo. Brave Peeres of England, Pillars of the State,
To you Duke Humfrey muſt unload his greefe:
Your greefe, the common greefe of all the Land.
What? did my brother Henry ſpend his youth,
His valour, coine, and people in the warres?
Did he ſo often lodge in open field,
In Winters cold, and Summers parching heate,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toyle his wits,

To keepe by policy what Henry got:
Have you your ſelves, Somerſet, Buckingham,
Brave Torke, Saliſbury, and victorious Warwicke,
Received deepe ſcarres in France and Normandy:
Or hath mine Vncke Beanford, and my ſelfe,
With all the Learned Counſell of the Realme,
Studied ſo long, ſat in the Councell houſe,
Early and late, debating too and fro
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe,
And hath his Highneſſ[illegible] his infancy,
Crowned in Paris in deſpight of foes,
And ſhall theſe Labours, and theſe Honours dye?
Shall Henries Conqueſt, Bedfords vigilance,
Your Deeds of Warre, and all our Counſell dye?
O Peeres of England, ſhamefull is this League,
Fatall this Marriage, cancelling your Fame,
Blotting your names from Bookes of memory,
Racing the Charracters of your Renowne,
Defacing Monuments of Conquer'd France,
Vndoing all as all had never bin.

Car. Nephew, what meanes this paſſionate diſcourſe?
This peroration with ſuch circumſtance:
For France, 'tis ours; and we will keepe it ſtill,

Glo. I Vnckle, we will keepe it, if we can:
But now it is impoſſible we ſhould.
Suffolke, the new made Duke that rules the roſt,
Hath given the Dutchy of Anjou and Maine,
Vnto the poore King Reignier, whoſe large ſtyle
Agrees not with the leanneſſe of his purſe.

Sal. Now by the death of him that dyed for all,
Theſe Counties were the Keyes of Normandie:
But wherefore weepes Warwicke, my valiant ſonne?

War. For greefe that they are paſt recovery.
For were there hope to conquer them againe,
My ſword ſhould ſhed hot blood; mine eyes no teares.
Anjou and Maine? My ſelfe did win them both:
Thoſe Provinces, theſe Armes of mine did conquer,
And are the Citties that I got with wounds,
Deliver'd up againe with peacefull words?
Mort Dieu.

Yor. For ſuffolkes Duke, may he be ſuffocate,
That dims the Honor of this Warlike Iſle:
France ſhould have torne and rent my very heart,
Before I would have yeelded to this League.
I never read but Englands Kings have had
Large ſummes of Gold, and Dowries with their wives,
And our King Henry gives away his owne,
To match with her that brings no vantages.

Hum. A proper jeſt, and never heard before,
That Suffolke ſhould demand a whole Fifteenth,
For Coſts and Charges in tranſporting her:
She ſhould have ſtaid in France, and ſterv'd in France
Before———

Car. My Lord of Gloſter, now ye grow too hot,
It was the pleaſure of my Lord the King.

Hum. My Lord of Wincheſter I know your minde.
'Tis not my ſpeeches that you do miſlike:
But 'tis my preſence that doth trouble ye,
Rancour will out, proud Prelate, in thy face
I ſee thy fury: If I longer ſtay,
We ſhall begin our ancient bickerings:
Lordings farewell, and ſay when I am gone,
I propheſied, France will be loſt ere long. Exit Humfrey.

Car. So, there goes our Protector in a rage:
'Tis knowne to you he is mine enemy:
Nay more, an enemy unto you all,
And no great friend, I feare me to the King;
Conſider Lords, he is the next of blood,
And heyre apparant to the Engliſh Crowne:
Had Henry got an Empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy Kingdomes of the Weſt,
There's reaſon he ſhould be diſpleas'd at it:
Looke to it Lords, let not his ſmoothing words
Bewitch your hearts, be wiſe and circumſpect.
What though the common people favour him,
Calling him, Humfrey the good Duke of Gloſter,
Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice,
Ieſu maintaine your Royall Excellence,
With God preſerve the good Duke Humfrey.
I feare me Lords, for all this flattering gloſſe,
He will be found a dangerous Protector.

Buc. Why ſhould he then protect our Soveraigne?
He being of age to governe of himſelfe.
Coſin of Somerſet, joyne you with me,
And altogether with the Duke of Suffolke,
Wee'l quickly hoyſe Duke Humfrey from his ſeat.

Car. This weighty buſineſſe will not brooke delay,
Ile to the Duke of Suffolke preſently. Exit Cardinall.

Som. Coſin of Buckingham, though Humfryes pride
And greatneſſe of his place be greefe to us,
Yet let us watch the haughty Cardinall,
His inſolence is more intollerable
Then all the Princes in the Land beſide,
If Gloſter be diſplac'd, hee'l be Protector.

Buc. Or thou, or I Somerſet will be Protector,
Deſpite Duke Humfrey, or the Cardinall.

Exit Buckingham, and Somerſet.

Sal. Pride went before, Ambition followes him.
While theſe do labour for their owne preferment,
Behooves it us to labor for the Realme.
I never ſaw but Humfrey Duke of Gloſter,
Did beare him like a Noble Gentleman:
Oft have I ſeene the haughty Cardinall.
More like a Souldier then a man o'th Church,
As ſtout and proud as he were Lord of all,
Sweare like a Ruffian, and demeane himſelfe
Vnlike the Ruler of a Common-weale.
Warwicke my ſonne, the comfort of my age,
Thy deeds, thy plainneſſe, and thy houſe-keeping,
Hath wonne the greateſt favour of the Commons,
Excepting none but good Duke Humfrey.
And Brother Yorke, thy Acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civill Diſcipline:
Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
When thou wert Regent for our Soveraigne,
Have made thee fear'd and honor'd of the people,
Ioyne we together for the publicke good,
In what we can, to bridle and ſuppreſſe
The pride of Suffolke, and the Cardinall,
With Somerſets and Buckinghams Ambition,
And as we may, cheriſh Duke Humfries deeds,
While they do tend the profit of the Land.

War. So God helpe Warwicke, as he loves the Land,
And common profit of his Countrey.

Yor. And ſo ſayes Yorke,
For he hath greateſt cauſe.

Sal. Then lets make haſte away,
And looke unto the maine?

Warw. Vnto the maine?
Oh Father, Maine is loſt,
That Maine, which by maine force Warwicke did winne
And would have kept, ſo long as breath did laſt:

Main-chance father you meant, but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or elſe be ſlaine.
Exit Warwicke, and Saliſbury. Manet Yorke.

Yorke. Anjou and Maine are given to the French,
Paris is loſt, the ſtate of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone:
Suffolke concluded on the Articles,
The Peeres agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two Dukedomes for a Dukes faire daughter.
I cannot blame them all, what is't to them?
'Tis thine they give away, and not their owne.
Pirates may make cheape penyworths of their pillage,
And purchaſe Friends, and give to Curtezans,
Still revelling like Lords till all be gone:
While as the ſilly Owner of the goods
Weepes over them, and wrings his hapleſſe hands,
And ſhakes his head, and trembling ſtands aloofe,
While all is ſhar'd and all is borne away,
Ready to ſterve, and dare not touch his owne.
So Yorke muſt ſit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his owne Lands are bargain'd for, and ſold:
Me thinkes the Realmes of England, France, and Ireland,
Beare that proportion to my fleſh and blood,
As did the fatall brand Althaa burnt,
Vnto the Princes heart of Calidon:
Anjou and Maine both given unto the French?
Cold newes for me: for I had hope of France,
Even as I have of fertile Englands ſoile.
A day will come, when Yorke ſhall claime his owne,
And therefore I will take the Nevills parts,
And make a ſhew of love to proud Duke Humfrey,
And when I ſpy advantage, claime the Crowne,
For that's the Golden marke I ſeeke to hit:
Nor ſhall proud Lancaſter uſurpe my right,
Nor hold the Scepter in his childiſh Fiſt,
Nor weare the Diadem upon his head,
Whoſe Church-like humors fits not for a Crowne.
Then Yorke be ſtill a-while, till time do ſerve:
Watch thou, and wake when others be aſleepe,
To prie into the ſecrets of the State,
Till Henry ſurfetting in joyes of love,
With his new Bride, & Englands deere bought Queene,
And Humfrey with the Peeres be falne at jarres:
Then will I raiſe aloft the Milke-white-Roſe,
With whoſe ſweet ſmell the Ayre ſhall be perfum'd,
And in my Standard beare the Armes of Yorke,
To grapple with the houſe of Lancaſter,
And force perforce Ile make him yeeld the Crowne,
Whoſe bookiſh Rule, hath pull'd faire England downe.
Exit Yorke.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his wife Elianor.

Elia. Why droopes my Lord like over-ripen'd Corn,
Hanging the head at Ceres plenteous load?
Why doth the Great Duke Humfrey knit his browes,
As frowning at the Favours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fixt to the ſullen earth,
Gazing on that which ſeemes to dimme thy ſight?
What ſeeſt thou there? King Henries Diadem,
Inchac'd with all the Honors of the world?
If ſo, gaze on, and grovell on thy face,
Vntill thy head be circled with the ſame.
Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious Gold.
What, is't too ſhort? Ile lengthen it with mine.
And having both together heav'd it up,
Wee'le both together lift our heads to heaven,
And never more abaſe our ſight ſo low,
As to vouchſafe one glance unto the ground.

Hum. O Nell, ſweet Nell, if thou doſt love thy Lord,
Baniſh the Canker of ambitious thoughts:
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Againſt my King and Nephew, vertuous Henry,
Be my laſt breathing in this mortall world.
My troublous dreames this night, doth make me ſad.

Eli. What dream'd my Lord, tell me, and Ile requite it
With ſweet rehearſall of my mornings dreame?

Hum. Me thought this ſta[illegible] mine Office-badge in Court
Was broke in twaine: by whom, I have forgot,
But as I thinke, it was by'th Cardinall,
And on the peeces of the broken Wand
Were plac'd the heads of Edmond Duke of Somerſet,
And William de la Pole firſt Duke of Suffolke.
This was my dreame, what it doth bode God knowes.

Eli. Tut, this was nothing but an argument,
That he that breakes a ſticke of Gloſters grove,
Shall loſe his head for his preſumption.
But liſt to me my Humfrey, my ſweete Duke:
Me thought I ſate in Seate of Majeſty,
In the Cathedrall Church of Weſtminſter,
And in that Chaire where Kings & Queens wer crownd,
Where Henry and Dame Margaret kneeled to me,
And on my head did ſet the Diadem.

Hum. Nay Elianor, then muſt I chide outright:
Preſumptuous Dame, ill-nurter'd Elianor,
Art thou not ſecond Woman in the Realme?
And the Protectors wife belov'd of him?
Haſt thou not worldly pleaſure at command,
Above the reach or compaſſe of thy thought?
And wilt thou ſtill be hammering Treachery,
To tumble downe thy husband, and thy ſelfe,
From top of Honor, to Diſgraces feete?
Away from me, and let me heare no more.

Elia. What, what, my Lord? Are you ſo chollericke
With Elianor, for telling but her dreame?
Next time Ile kepe my dreames unto my ſelfe,
And not be check'd.

Hum. Nay be not angry, I am pleas'd againe.

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord Protector, 'tis his Highnes pleaſure,
You do prepare to ride unto S. Albons,
Where as the King and Queene do meane to Hawke.

Hu. I go. Come Nell thou wilt ride with us? Ex. Hu.

Elia. Yes my good Lord, Ile follow preſently.
Follow I muſt, I cannot go before,
While Gloſter beares this baſe and humble minde.
Were I a Man, a Duke, and next of blood,
I would remove theſe tedious ſtumbling blockes,
And ſmooth my way upon their headleſſe neckes.
And being a woman, I will not be ſlacke
To play my part in Fortunes Pageant.
Where are you there? Sir Iohn; nay feare not man,
We are alone, here's none but thee, & I. Enter Hume.

Hume. Ieſus preſerve your Royall Majeſty.

Eli. What ſaiſt thou? Majeſty: I am but Grace.

Hume, But by the grace of God, and Humes advice,
Your Graces Title ſhall be multiplied.

Elia. What ſaiſt thou man? Haſt thou as yet conferr'd
With Margerie Iordane the cunning Witch,
With Roger Bollingbrooke the Conjurer?
And will they undertake to do me good?

Hume. This they have promiſed, to ſhew your Highnes
A Spirit rais'd from depth of under ground,

That ſhall make anſwere to ſuch Queſtions,
As by your Grace ſhall be propounded him.

Elianor. It is enough, Ile thinke upon the Queſtions:
When from Saint Albons we doe make returne,
Wee'le ſee theſe things effected to the full.
Here Hume, take this reward, make merry man
With thy Confederates in this weighty cauſe.
Exit Elianor.

Hum. Hume muſt make merry with the Ducheſſe Gold:
Marry and ſhall: but how now, Sir Iohn Hume?
Seale up your Lips, and give no words but Mum,
The buſineſſe asketh ſilent ſecrecy.
Dame Elianor gives Gold, to bring the Witch:
Gold cannot come amiſſe, were ſhe a Devill.
Yet have I Gold flyes from another Coaſt:
I dare not ſay, from the rich Cardinall,
And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolke;
Yet I doe finde it ſo: for to be plaine,
They (knowing Dame Elianors aſpiring humor),
Have hyred me to under-mine the Ducheſſe,
And buzze theſe Conjurations in her brayne.
They ſay, A crafty Knave do's need no Broker.
Yet am I Suffolke and the Cardinalls Broker.
Hume, if you take not heed, you ſhall goe neere
To call them both a payre of crafty Knaves.
Well, ſo it ſtands: and thus I feare at laſt,
Humes Knavery will be the Ducheſſe Wracke,
And her Attainture, will be Humphreyes fall:
Sort how it will, I ſhall have Gold for all. Exit.

Enter three or foure Petitioners, the Armorers Man being one.

1. Pet. My Maiſters, let's ſtand cloſe, my Lord Protector will come this way by and by, and then wee may deliver our Supplications in the Quill.

2. Pet. Marry the Lord protect him, for hee's a good man, Ieſu bleſſe him.

Enter Suffolke, and Queene.

Peter. Here a comes me thinkes, and the Queene with him: Ile be the firſt ſure.

2. Pet. Come backe foole, this is the Duke of Suffolk, and not my Lord Protector.

Suff. How now fellow: would'ſt any thing with me?

1. Pet. I pray my Lord pardon me, I tooke ye for my Lord Protector.

Quee. To my Lord Protector? Are your Supplications to his Lordſhip? Let me ſee them: what is thine?

1. Pet. Mine is, and't pleaſe your Grace, againſt Iohn Goodman, my Lord Cardinals Mã, for keeping my Houſe, and Lands, and Wife and all, from me.

Suff. Thy Wife too? that's ſome Wrong indeede. What's yours? What's heere? Againſt the Duke of Suffolke, for encloſing the Commons of Melforde. How now, Sir Knave?

2. Pet. Alas Sir, I am but a poore Petitioner of our whole Towneſhip.

Pet. Againſt my Maiſter Thomas Horner, for ſaying, That the Duke of Yorke was rightfull Heire to the Crowne.

Quee. What ſay'ſt thou? Did the Duke of Yorke ſay, hee was rightfull Heire to the Crowne?

Pet. That my Miſtreſſe was? No forſooth: my Maiſter ſaid, That he was; and that the King was an Vſurper.

Suff. Who is there?

Enter Servant.

Take this fellow in, and ſend for his Maiſter with a Purſevant preſently: wee'le heare more of your matter before the King. Exit.

Quee. And as for you that love to be protected
Vnder the Wings of our Protectors Grace,
Begin your Suites anew, and ſue to him.

Teare the Supplication.

Away, baſe Cullions: Suffolke let them goe.

All. Come, let's be gone. Exit.

Quee. My Lord of Suffolke, ſay, is this the guiſe?
Is this the Faſhions in the Court of England?
Is this the Governement of Britaines Ile?
And this the Royalty of Albions King?
What, ſhall King Henry be a Pupill ſtill,
Vnder the ſurly Gloſters Governance?
Am I a Queene in Title and in Stile,
And muſt be made a Subject to a Duke?
I tell thee Poole, when in the Citie Tours
Thou ran'ſt a-tilt in honor of my Love,
And ſtol'ſt away the Ladies hearts of France;
I thought King Henry had reſembled thee,
In Courage, Courtſhip, and Proportion:
But all his minde is bent to Holineſſe,
To number Ave-Maries on his Beades:
His Champions, are the Prophets and Apoſtles,
His Weapons, holy Sawes of ſacred Writ,
His Study is his Tilt-yard, and his Loves
Are brazen Images of Canonized Saints.
I would the Colledge of the Cardinalls
Would chuſe him Pope, and carry him to Rome,
And ſet the Triple Crowne upon his Head;
That were a State fit for his Holineſſe.

Suff. Madame be patient: as I was cauſe
Your Highneſſe came to England, ſo will I
In England worke your Graces full content.

Quee. Beſide the haught Protector, have we Beauford
The imperious Churchman; Somerſet, Buckingham,
And grumbling Yorke: and not the leaſt of theſe,
But can doe more in England then the King.

Suff. And he of theſe, that can doe moſt of all,
Cannot doe more in England then the Nevils:
Salisbury and Warwick are no ſimple Peeres.

Quee. Not all theſe Lords do vex me halfe ſo much,
As that prowd Dame, the Lord Protectors Wife:
She ſweepes it though the Court with troups of Ladies,
More like an Empreſſe, then Duke Humphreyes Wife:
Strangers in Court, doe take her for the Queene:
She beares a Dukes Revenewes on her backe,
And in her heart ſhe ſcornes our Poverty:
Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her?
Contemptuous baſe-borne Callot as ſhe is,
She vaunted 'mongſt her Minions t'other day,
The very trayne of her worſt wearing Gowne,
Was better worth then all my Fathers Lands,
Till Suffolke gave two Dukedomes for his Daughter.

Suff. Madame, my ſelfe have lym'd a Buſh for her,
And plac't a Quier of ſuch enticing Birds,
That ſhe will light to liſten to the Layes,
And never mount to trouble you againe.
So let her reſt: and Madame liſt to me,
For I am bold to counſaile you in this;
Although we fancy not the Cardinall,
Yet muſt we joyne with him and with the Lords,
Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in diſgrace.

A

As for the Duke of Yorke, this late Complaint
Will make but little for his benefit:
So one by one wee'le weed them all at laſt,
And you your ſelfe ſhall ſteere the happy Helme. Exit.

Enter the King, Duke Humfrey, Cardinall, Buckingham, Yorke, Salisbury, VVarwicke, and the Ducheſſe.

King. For my part, Noble Lords, I care not which,
Or Somerſet, or Yorke, all's one to me.
Yor. If Yorke have ill demean'd himſelfe in France,
Then let him be denay'd the Regent-ſhip.
Som. If Somerſet be unworthy of the Place,
Let Yorke be Regent, I will yeeld to him.
VVarw. Whether your Grace be worthy, yea or no,
Diſpute not that, Yorke is the worthyer.
Card. Ambitious VVarwicke, let thy betters ſpeake.
VVarw. The Cardinall's not my better in the field.
Buck. All in this preſence are thy betters, VVarwicke.
VVarw. VVarwicke may live to be the beſt of all.
Saliſb. Peace Sonne, and ſhew ſome reaſon Buckingham
Why Somerſet ſhould be preferr'd in this?
Queene. Becauſe the King forſooth will have it ſo.
Humf. Madame, the King is old enough himſelfe
To give his Cenſure: Theſe are no Womens matters.
Quee. If he be old enough, what needs your Grace
To be Protector of his Excellence?
Humf. Madame, I am Protector of the Realme,
And at his pleaſure will reſigne my Place.
Suff. Reſigne it then, and leave thine inſolence.
Since thou wert King, as who is King, but thou?
The Common-wealth hath dayly run to wrack,
The Dolphin hath prevayl'd beyond the Seas,
And all the Peeres and Nobles of the Realme
Have beene as Bond-men to thy Soveraignty.
Car. The Commons haſt thou rackt, the Clergies Bags
Are lanke and leane with thy Extortions.
Som. Thy ſumptuous Buildings, and thy Wives Attyre
Have coſt a maſſe of publique Treaſure.
Buck. Thy Cruelty in execution
Vpon Offendors, hath exceeded Law,
And left thee to the mercy of the Law.
Quee. Thy ſale of Offices and Townes in France,
If they were knowne, as the ſuſpect is great,
Would make thee quickly hop without thy Head.
Exit Humfrey.
Give me my Fanne: what, Mynion, can ye not?

She gives the Ducheſſe a box on the eare.

I cry you mercy, Madame: was it you?
Duch. Was't I? yea, I it was, prowd French-woman:
Could I come neere your Beauty with my Nailes,
I could ſet my ten Commandements in your face.
King. Sweet Aunt be quiet, 'twas againſt her will.
Duch. Againſt her will, good King? looke to't in time,
Shee'le hamper thee, and dandle thee like a Baby:
Though in this place moſt Maiſter weares no Breeches,
She ſhall not ſtrike Dame Elianor vnreveng'd.
Exit Elianor.
Buck. Lord Cardinall, I will follow Elianor, nd liſten after Humfrey, how he proceedes:
e's tickled now, her Fume can neede no ſpurres,
'le gallop farre enough to her deſtruction.
Exit Buckingham.

Enter Humfrey.

Humf. Now Lords, my Choller being over-blowne,
With walking once about the Quadrangle,
I come to talke of Common-wealth Affaires.
As for your ſpightfull falſe Objections,
Prove them, and I lye open to the Law:
But God in mercy ſo deale with my Soule,
As I in duty love my King and Countrey.
But to the matter that we have in hand:
I ſay, my Soveraigne, Yorke is meeteſt man
To be your Regent in the Realme of France.
Suff. Before we make election, give me leave
To ſhew ſome reaſon, of no little force,
That Yorke is moſt unmeet of any man.
Yorke. Ile tell thee, Suffolke, why I am vnmeet.
Firſt, for I cannot flatter thee in Pride:
Next, if I be appointed for the Place,
My Lord of Somerſet will keepe me here,
Without Diſcharge, Money, or Furniture,
Till France be wonne into the Dolphins hands:
Laſt time I danc't attendance on his will,
Till Paris was beſieg'd, famiſht, and loſt.
Warw. That can I witneſſe, and a fouler fact
Did never Traytor in the Land commit.
Suff. Peace head-ſtrong Warwicke.
Warw. Image of Pride, why ſhould I hold my peace?

Enter Armorer and his Man.

Suff. Becauſe here is a man accuſed of Treaſon,
Pray God the Duke of Yorke excuſe himſelfe.
Yorke. Doth any one accuſe Yorke for a Traytor?
King. What mean'ſt thou, Suffolke? tell me, what are theſe?
Suff. Pleaſe it your Majeſty, this is the man
That doth accuſe his Maiſter of High Treaſon;
His words were theſe: That Richard, Duke of Yorke,
Was rightfull Heire unto the Engliſh Crowne,
And that your Majeſty was an Vſurper.
King. Say man, were theſe thy words?
Armo. And't ſhall pleaſe your Majeſty, I never ſayd nor thought any ſuch matter: God is my witneſſe, I am falſely accus'd by the Villaine.
Peter. By theſe tenne bones, my Lords, he did ſpeake them to me in the Garret one Night, as wee were ſcowring my Lord of Yorkes Armor.
Yorke. Baſe Dunghill Villaine, and Mechanicall,
Ile have thy Head for this thy Traytors ſpeech:
I doe beſeech your Royall Msjeſty,
Let him haue all the rigor of the Law.
Ar. Alas, my Lord, hang me if ever I ſpake the words: my accuſer is my Prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, hee did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witneſſe of this; therefore I beſeech your Majeſty, doe not caſt away an honeſt man for a Villaines accuſation.
King. Vnckle, what ſhall we ſay to this in law?
Humf. This doome, my Lord, if I may judge:
Let Somerſet be Regent o're the French,
Becauſe in Yorke this breedes ſuſpition:
And let theſe have a day appointed them
For ſingle Combat, in convenient place,
For he hath witneſſe of his ſervants malice:
This is the Law, and this Duke Humfreyes doome.

Som. I humbly thanke your Royall Majeſty.

Armorer. And I accept the Combat willingly.

Peter, Alas, my Lord, I cannot fight; for Gods ſake pitty my caſe: the ſpight of my man prevaileth againſt me. O Lord have mercy upon me, I ſhall never be able to fight a blow: O Lord my heart.

Humf. Sirrha, or you muſt fight, or elſe be hang'd.

King. Away with them to Priſon: and the day of Combat, ſhall be the laſt of the next moneth. Come Somerſet. we'll ſee thee ſent away.

Flouriſh. Exeunt.

Enter the Witch, the two Prieſts, and Bullingbrooke.

Hume. Come my Maſters, the Ducheſſe I tell you expects performance of your promiſes.

Bullin. Maſter Hume, we are therefore provided: will her Ladyſhip behold and heare our Exorciſmes?

Hume. I, what elſe? feare you not her courage.

Bullin. I have heard her reported to be a Woman of an invincible ſpirit: but it ſhall be convenient, Maſter Hume, that you be by her aloft, while we be buſie below; and ſo I pray you goe in Gods Name, and leave us.

Exit Hume.

Mother Iordan, be you proſtrate, and grovell on the Earth; Iohn Southwell reade you, and let us to our worke.

Enter Elianor aloft.

Elian. Well ſaid my Maſters, and welcome all: To this geere, the ſooner the better.

Bullin. Patience, good Lady, Wizards know their times:
Deepe Night, darke Night, the ſilent of the Night,
The time of Night when Troy was ſet on fire,
The time when Screech-owles cry, and Bandogs howle;
And ſpirits walke, and Ghoſts breake up their Graves;
That time beſt fits the worke we have in hand.
Madam, ſit you, and feare not: whom we raiſe,
We will make faſt within a hallow'd Verge.

Here doe the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle, Bullingbrooke or Southwell reades, Conjuro te, &c. It Thunders and Lightens terribly: then the Spirit riſeth.

Spirit. Adſum.

Witch. Aſmath, by the eternall God,
Whoſe name and power thou trembleſt at,
Anſwer that I aske: for till thou ſpeake,
Thou ſhalt not paſſe from hence.

Spirit. Aske what thou wilt; that I had ſaid, and done.

Bullin. Firſt of the King: What ſhall of him become?

Spirit. The Duke yet lives, that Henry ſhall depoſe:
But him out-live, and dye a violent death.

Bullin. What fates await the Duke of Suffolke?

Spirit. By Water ſhall he dye, and take his end.

Bullin. What ſhall befall the Duke of Somerſet?

Spirit. Let him ſhun Caſtles.
Safer ſhall he upon the ſandie Plaines,
Then where Caſtles mounted ſtand.
Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Bulling. Deſcend to Darkeneſſe, and the burning Lake:
Falſe fiend avoy[illegible].

Thunder and Lightning. Exit Spirit.

Enter the Duke of Yorke, and the Duke of Buckingham with their Guard, and breake in.

Yorke. Lay hands upon theſe Traytors, and their traſh:
Beldam I thinke we watcht you at an inch.
What Madam, are you there? the King and Commonweale
Are deepely indebted for this peece of paines;
My Lord Protector will, I doubt it not,
See you well guerdon'd for theſe good deſerts.

Elian. Not halfe ſo bad as thine to Englands King,
Injurious Duke, that threateſt where's no cauſe.

Buck. True Madam, none at all: what call you this?
Away with them, let them be clapt up cloſe,
And kept aſunder: you Madam ſhall with us.
Stafford take her to thee.
We'll ſee your Trinkets here all forth-comming.
All away. Exit.

Yorke. Lord Buckingham, me thinkes you watcht her well:
A pretty Plot, well choſen to build upon.
Now pray my Lord, let's ſee the Devills Writ.
What have we here? Reades.
The Duke yet lives, that Henry ſhall depoſe:
But him out live, and dye a violent death.
Why this is juſt. Aio Æacida Romanos vincere poſſe.
Well, to the reſt:
Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolke?
By Water ſhall he dye, and take his end.
What ſhall betide the Duke of Somerſet?
Let him ſhunne Caſtles,
Safer ſhall he be upon the ſandy Plaines,
Then where Caſtles mounted ſtand.
Come, come, my Lords,
Theſe Oracles are hardly attain'd,
And hardly underſtood.
The King is now in progreſſe towards Saint Albones,
With him, the husband of this lovely Lady:
Thither goes theſe Newes,
As faſt as horſe can carry them:
A ſorry breakfaſt for my Lord Protector.

Buc. Your Grace ſhall give me leave, my Lord of Yorke,
To be the Poſte, in hope of his reward.

Yorke. At your pleaſure, my good Lord.
Who's within there, hoe?

Enter a Servingman.

Invite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwicke
To ſup with me to morrow Night. Away.

Exeunt

Enter the King, Queene, Protector, Cardinall, and Suffolke, with Faulkners hollawing.

Quee. Beleeve me Lords, for flying at the Brooke,
I ſaw not better ſport theſe ſeven yeeres day;
Yet by your leave, the Winde was very high,
And ten to one, old Ioane had not gone out.

King. But what a point, my Lord, your Faulcon made,
And what a pytch ſhe flew above the reſt:
To ſee how God in all his Creatures workes,
Yea Man and Birds are fayne of climbing high.

Suff. No marvell, and it like your Majeſty,
My Lord Protectors Hawkes doe towre ſo well,
They know their Maſter loves to be aloft,
And beares his thoughts above his Faulcons Pitch.

Gloſt. My Lord, 'tis but a baſe ignoble minde,
That mounts no higher then a Bird can ſore.

Card. I thought as much, he would be above the Clouds.
Gloſt. I my Lord Cardinall, how thinke you by that?
Were it not good your Grace could flye to Heaven?
King. The Treaſury of everlaſting Ioy.
Card. Thy heaven is on Earth, thine Eyes and Thoughts
Beat on a Crowne, the Treaſure of thy heart,
Pernitious Protector, dangerous Peere,
That ſmooth'ſt it ſo with King and Commonweale.
Gloſt. What Cardinall?
Is your Prieſt-hood growne peremptory?
Tantane animis Cœleſtibus ira, Church-men ſo hot?
Good Vnckle hide ſuch mallice:
With ſuch Holyneſſe can you doe it?
Suff. No mallice Sir, no more then well becomes
So good a Quarrell, and ſo bad a Peere.
Gloſt. As who, my Lord?
Suff. Why, as you, my Lord,
An't like yonr lordly Lords Protectorſhip.
Gloſt. Why Suffolke, England knowes thine inſolence.
Quee. And thy Ambition, Gloſter.
King. I prethee peace, good Queene,
And whet not on theſe too-too furious Peeres,
For bleſſed are the Peace-makers on Earth
Card. Let me be bleſſed for the Peace I make
Againſt this prowd Protector with my Sword.
Gloſt. Faith holy Vnckle, would't were come to that.
Card. Marry, when thou dar'ſt.
Gloſt. Make up no factious numbers for the matter,
In thine owne perſon anſwer thy abuſe.
Card. I, where thou dar'ſt not peepe:
And if thou dar'ſt, this Evening,
On the Eaſt ſide of the Grove.
King. How now, my Lords?
Card. Beleeve me, Couſin Gloſter,
Had not your man put up the Foule ſo ſuddenly,
We had had more ſport.
Come with thy two-hand Sword,
Gloſt. True Vnckle, are ye adviſ'd?
The Eaſt ſide of the Grove:
Cardinall, I am with you.
King. Why how now, Vnckle Gloſter?
Gloſt. Talking of Hawking; nothing elſe, my Lord.
Now by Gods Mother, Prieſt,
Ile ſhave your Crowne for this,
Or all my Fence ſhall faile.
Card. Medice teipſum, Protector ſee to't well, protect your ſelfe.
King. The Windes grow high,
So doe your Stomackes Lords:
How irkeſome is this Muſicke to my heart?
When ſuch Strings jarre, what hope of Harmony?
I pray my Lords let me compound this ſtrife,

Enter one crying a Miracle.

Gloſt. What meanes this noyſe?
Fellow, what Miracle do'ſt thou proclaime?
One. A Miracle, a Miracle.
Suffolke. Come to the King, and tell him what Miracle.
One. Forſooth, a blind man at Saint Albanes Shrine,
Within this halfe houre hath receiv'd his ſight,
A man that ne're ſaw in his life before.
King. Now God be prais'd, that to beleeving Soules
Gives Light in Darkeneſſe, Comfort in Deſpaire.

Enter the Mayor of Saint Albones, and his Brethren, bearing the man betweene two in a Chayre.

Card. Here comes the Towneſ-men, on Proceſſion,
To preſent your Highneſſe with the man.
King. Great is his comfort in this Earthly Vale,
Although by his ſight his ſinne be multiplyed.
Gloſt. Stand by, my Maſters, bring him neere the King,
His highneſſe pleaſure is to talke with him.
King. Good-fellow, tell us here the circumſtance,
That we for thee may glorifie the Lord.
What, haſt thou beene long blind, and now reſtor'd?
Simp. Borne bliud, and't pleaſe your Grace.
Wife. I indeed was he.
Suff. What Woman is this?
Wife. His Wife, and't like your Worſhip.
Gloſt. Hadſt thou beene his Mother, thou could'ſt have better told.
King. Where wert thou borne?
Simpc. At Barwicke in the North, and't like your Grace.
King. Poore ſoule,
Gods goodneſſe hath beene great to thee:
Let never Day nor Night unhallowed paſſe,
But ſtill remember what the Lord hath done.
Quee. Tell me, good-fellow,
Cam'ſt thou here by Chance, or of Devotion,
To this holy Shrine?
Simp. God knowes of pure Devotion,
Being call'd a hundred times, and oftner,
In my ſleepe, by good Saint Albon:
Who ſaid; Symon, come: come offer at my Shrine,
And I will helpe thee.
Wife. Moſt true, forſooth:
And many time and oft my ſelfe have heard a Voyce,
To call him ſo.
Card. What, art thou lame?
Simp. I, God Almighty helpe me.
Suff. How cam'ſt thou ſo?
Simp. A fall off of a Tree.
Wife. A Plum-trre, Maſter.
Gloſt. How long haſt thou beene blind?
Simpc. O borne ſo, Maſter.
Gloſt. What, and would'ſt climbe a Tree?
Simpc. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.
Wife. Too true, and bought his climbing very deare,
Gloſt. 'Maſſe, thou lov'dſt Plummes well, that would'ſt venture ſo.
Simp. Alas, good Maſter, my Wife deſired ſome Damſons, and made mee climbe, with danger of my Life.
Gloſt. A ſubtill Knave, but yet it ſhall not ſerve:
Let me ſee thine Eyes; winck now, now open them,
In my opinion, yet thou ſeeſt not well.
Simpc. Yes Maſter, cleare as day, I thanke God and Saint Albon.
Gloſt. Say'ſt thou me ſo: what Colour is this Cloake of?
Simpc. Red Maſter, Red as blood.
Gloſt. Why that's well ſaid: What Colour is my Gowne of?
Simp. Blacke forſooth, Coale-blacke, as Iet.
King. Why then, thou know'ſt what Colour Iet is of?
Suff. And yet I thinke, Iet did he never ſee.

Gloſt. But Cloakes and Gownes, before this day, a many.
Wife. Never before this day, in all his life,
Gloſt. Tell me Sirrha, what's my Name?
Simpc. Alas Maſter, I know not.
Gloſt. What's his Name?
Simpc. I know not,
Gloſt. Nor his?
Simpc. No indeed, Maſter.
Gloſt. What's thine owne Neme?
Simpc. Saunder Simpcoxe, and if it pleaſe you, Maſter.
Gloſt. Then Saunder, ſit there,
The lying'ſt Knave in Chriſtendome.
If thou hadſt beene borne blind,
Thou might'ſt as well have knowne all our Names,
As thus to name the ſeverall Colours we doe weare.
Sight may diſtinguiſh Colours:
But ſuddenly to nominate them all,
It is impoſſible.
My Lords, Saint Albone here hath done a Miracle:
And would ye not thinke it, Cunning to be great,
That could reſtore this Cripple to his Legges againe?
Simpc. O Maſter, that you could?
Gloſt. My Maſters of Saint Albons,
Have you not Beadles in your Towne,
And things call'd Whippes?
Mayor. Yes, my Lord, if it pleaſe your Grace.
Gloſt. Then ſend for one preſently.
Mayor. Sirrha, goe fetch the Beadle hither ſtraight.
Exit.
Gloſt. New fetch me a Stoole hither by and by.
Now Sirrha, if you meane to ſave your ſelfe from Whipping, leape me over this Stoole, and runne away.
Simp. Alas Maſter, I am not able to ſtand alone:
You goe about to torture me in vaine.

Enter a Beadle with Whippes.

Gloſt. Well Sir, we muſt have you find your Legges.
Sirrha Beadle, whippe him till he leape over that ſame Stoole.
Bead. I will, my Lord.
Come on Sirrha, off with your Doublet, quickly.
Simp. Alas Maſter, what ſhall I doe? I am not able to ſtand.

After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leapes over the Stoole, and runnes away: and they follow, and cry, A Miracle.

King. O God, ſeeſt thou this, and beareſt ſo long;
Quee. It made me laugh, to ſee the Villaine runne.
Gloſt. Follow the Knave, and take this Drab away.
Wife. Alas Sir, we did it for pure need.
Glo. Let them be whipt through every Market Towne
Till they come to Barwicke, from whence they came.
Exit.
Card. Duke Humfrey ha's done a Miracle to day.
Suff. True: made the Lame to leape and flye away.
Gloſt. But you have done more Miracles then I:
You made in a day, my Lord, whole Townes to flye.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What Tidings with our Couſin Buckingham?
Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold:
A ſort of naughty perſons, lewdly bent,
Vnder the Countenance and Confederacy
Of Lady Elianor, the Protectors Wife,
The Ring-leader and head of all this Rout,
Have practis'd dangerouſly againſt your State,
Dealing with Witches and with Conjurers,
Whom we have apprehended in the Fact,
Rayſing up wicked Spirits from under ground,
Demanding of King Henries Life and Death,
And other of your Highneſſe Privy Councell,
As more at large your Grace ſhall underſtand.
Card. And ſo my Lord Protector, by this meanes
Your Lady is forth-comming, yet at London.
This Newes I thinke hath turn'd your Weapons edge;
'Tis like, my Lord, you will not keepe your houre.
Gloſt. Ambitious Church-man, leave to afflict my heart:
Sorrow and griefe have vanquiſht all my powers;
And vanquiſht as I am, I yeeld to thee,
Or to the meaneſt Groome.
King. O God, what miſchiefes worke the wicked ones?
Heaping confuſion on their owne heads thereby.
Quee. Gloſter, ſee here the Taincture of thy Neſt,
And looke thy ſelfe be faultleſſe, thou wert beſt.
Gloſt. Madam, for my ſelfe, to heaven I doe appeale,
How I have lov'd my King, and Common-weale:
And for my Wife, I know not how it ſtands,
Sorry I am to heare what I have heard.
Noble ſhe is: but if ſhe have forgot
Honor and Vertue, and convers't with ſuch,
As like to Pytch, defile Nobility;
I baniſh her my Bed, and Company,
And give her as a Prey to Law and Shame,
That hath dis-honored Gloſters honeſt Name.
King. Well, for this Night we will repoſe us here:
To morrow toward London, backe againe,
To looke into this Buſineſſe thorowly,
And call theſe foule Offendors to their Anſweres;
And poyſe the Cauſe in Iuſtice equall Scales,
Whoſe Beame ſtands ſure, whoſe rightfull cauſe prevailes,
Exeunt.

Enter Yorke, Salisbury, and Warwicke.

Yorke. Now my good Lords of Salisbury and Warwicke,
Our ſimple Supper ended, give me leave,
In this cloſe Walke, to ſatisfie my ſelfe,
In craving your opinion of my Title,
Which is infallible, to Englands Crowne.
Salis. My Lord, I long to heare it at full.
Warw. Sweet Yorke begin: and if thy clayme be good,
The Nevills are thy Subjects to command.
Yorke. Then thus:
Edward the third, my Lords, had ſeven Sonnes:
The firſt, Edward the Blacke-Prince, Prince of Wales;
The ſecond, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel, Duke of Clarence: next to whom,
Was Iohn of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaſter;
The fift, was Edward Langley. Duke of Yorke;
The ſixt, was Thomas of Woodſtocke, Duke of Gloſter,
William of Windſor was the ſeventh, and laſt,
Edward the Blacke-Prince dyed before his Father,
And left behind him Richard, his onely Sonne,
Who after Edward the third's death, raign'd King,
Till Henry Bullingbrooke, Duke of Lancaſter,
The eldeſt Sonne and Heire of Iohn of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the Name of Henry the fourth,
Seiz'd on the Realme, depos'd the rightfull King,
Sent his poore Queene to France, from whence ſhe came,

And him to Pumfret; where, as all you know,
Harmeleſſe King Richard was murthered traiterouſly:
Warw. Father, the Duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the Houſe of Lancaſter the Crowne.
Yorke. Which now they hold by force, and not by right:
For Richard, the firſt Sonnes Heire, being dead,
The iſſue of the next Sonne ſhould have reign'd.
Salis. But William of Hatfield dyed without an Heire.
Yorke. The third Sonne, Duke of Clarence,
From whoſe Line I clayme the Crowne,
Had Iſſue Philip, a Daughter,
Who marryed Edmond Mortimer, Earle of March:
Edmond had Iſſue, Roger Earle of March;
Roger had Iſſue, Edmond, Anne, and Elianor.
Salis. This Edmond, in the Reigne of Bullingbrooke,
As I have read, layd clayme unto the Crowne,
And but for Owen Glendour, had beene King;
Who kept him in Captivity, till he dyed.
But, to the reſt.
Yorke. His eldeſt Siſter, Anne,
My Mother, being Heire unto the Crowne,
Marryed Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
Who was to Edmond Langley,
Edward the thirds fift Sonnes ſonne;
By her I clayme the Kingdome:
She then was Heire to Roger, Earle of March,
Who was the Sonne of Edmond Mortimer,
Who marryed Philip, ſole Daughter
Vnto Lionel, Duke of Clarence.
So, if the iſſue of the elder Sonne
Succeed before the younger, I am King. (this?
Warw. What plaine proceeding is more plaine then
Henry doth clayme the Crowne from Iohn of Gaunt,
The fourth Sonne, Yorke claymes it from the third:
Till Lionels iſſue fayles, his ſhould not reigne.
It fayles not yet, but flouriſhes in thee,
And in thy Sonnes, faire ſlippes of ſuch a Stocke.
Then Father Salisbury, kneele we together,
And in this private Plot be we the firſt,
That ſhall ſalute our rightfull Soveraigne
With honor of his Birth-right to the Crowne.
Both. Long live our Soveraigne Richard, Englands King.
Yorke. We thanke you Lords:
But I am not your King, till I be Crown'd,
And that my Sword be ſtayn'd
With heart-blood of the Houſe of Lancaſter:
And that's not ſuddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and ſilent ſecrecy.
Doe you as I doe in theſe dangerous dayes,
Winke at the Duke of Suffolkes inſolence,
At Beaufords Pride, at Somerſets Ambition,
At Buckingham, and all the Crew of them,
Till they have ſnar'd the Shepheard of the Flocke,
That vertuous Prince, the good Duke Humfrey:
'Tis that they ſeeke; and they, in ſeeking that,
Shall find their deaths, if Yorke can prophecy.
Salisb. My Lord, breake we off; we know your mind at full.
Warw. My heart aſſures me, that the Earle of Warwicke,
Shall one day make the Duke of Yorke a King.
Yorke. And Nevill, this I doe aſſure my ſelfe.
Richard ſhall live to make the Earle of Warwicke
The greateſt man in England, but the King.
Exeunt.

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King and State, with Guard, to baniſh the Ducheſſe.

King. Stand forth Dame Elianor Cobham,
Gloſters Wife:
In ſight of God, and us, your guilt is great,
Receive the ſentence of the Law for ſinne,
Such as by Gods Booke are adiudg'd to death.
You foure from hence to Priſon, backe againe:
From thence, unto the place of Execution;
The Witch in Smithfield ſhall be burnt to aſhes,
And you three ſhall be ſtrangled on the Gallowes.
You Madam, for you are more Nobly borne,
Deſpoyled of your Honor in your Life,
Shall, after three dayes open Penance done,
Live in your Countrey here, in Baniſhment,
With Sir Iohn Stanly, in the Ile of Man.
Elian. Welcome is Baniſhment, welcome were my Death.
Gloſt. Elianor, the Law thou ſeeſt hath iudged thee,
I cannot iuſtifie whom the Law condemnes.
Mine eyes ar full of teares, my heart of griefe.
Ah Humfrey, this diſhonor in thine age,
Will bring thy head with ſorrow to the ground.
I beſeech your Majeſty give me leave to goe;
Sorrow would ſollace, and mine Age would ceaſe.
King. Stay Humfrey, Duke of Gloſter,
Ere thou goe, give up thy Staffe,
Henry will to himſelfe Protector be,
And God ſhall be my hope, my ſtay, my guide,
And Lanthorne to my feete:
And goe in peace, Humfrey, no leſſe belov'd,
Then when thou wert Protector to thy King.
Quee. I ſee no reaſon, why a King of yeeres
Should be to be protected like a Child;
God and King Henry governe Englands Realme:
Give up your Staffe, Sir, and the King his Realme.
Gloſt. My Staffe? Here, Noble Henry, is my Staffe:
As willingly doe I the ſame reſigne,
As ere thy Father Henry made it mine;
And even as willingly at thy feete I leave it,
As others would ambitiouſly receive it.
Farewell good King: when I am dead and gone,
May honorable Peace attend thy Throne.
Exit Gloſter.
Quee. Why now is Henry King, and Margaret Queene,
And Humfrey, Duke of Gloſter, ſcarce himſelfe,
That beares ſo ſhrewd a mayme: two Pulls at once;
His Lady baniſht, and a Limbe lopt off
This Staffe of Honor raught, there let it ſtand,
Where it beſt fits to be, in Henries hand.
Suff. Thus droupes this lofty Pyne, & hangs his ſprayes,
Thus Elianors Pride dyes in her youngeſt dayes.
Yorke. Lords, let him goe. Pleaſe it your Majeſty,
This is the day appointed for the Combat,
And ready are the Appellant and Defendant,
The Armorer and his Man, to enter the Liſts,
So pleaſe your highneſſe to behold the fight.
Quee. I, good my Lord: for purpoſely therefore Left I the Court, to ſee this Quarrell try'de.
King. A Gods Name ſee the Lyſts and all things fit,
Here let them end it, and God defend the right.
Yorke. I never ſaw a fellow worſe beſtead,
Or more afraid to fight, then is the Appellant,
The ſervant of this Armorer, my Lords.

Enter at one Doore the Armorer and his Neighbors, drinking to him ſo much, that he is drunke; and he enters with a Drumme before him, and his Staffe, with a Sand-bagge faſtened to it: and at the other Doore his Man, with a Drumme and Sand-bagge, and Prentices drinking to him.

1. Neighbor. Here Neighbour Horner, I drinke to you in a Cup of Sacke; and feare not Neighbor, you ſhall doe well enough.

2. Neighbor. And here Neighbour, here's a Cup of Charneco.

3. Neighbor. And here's a Pot of good Double-Beere Neighbor: drinke, and feare not your Man.

Armorer. Let it come ifaith, and Ile pledge you all, and a figge for Peter.

1. Pren. Here Peter, I drinke to thee, and be not afraid.

2. Pren. Be merry Peter, and feare not thy Maſter, Fight for credit of the Prentices.

Peter. I thanke you all: drinke, and pray for me, I pray you, for I thinke I have taken my laſt Draught in this World. Here Robin, and if I dye, I give thee my Aporne; and Will, thou ſhalt have my Hammer: and here Tom, take all the Money that I have. O Lord bleſſe me, I pray God, for I am never able to deale with my Maſter, he hath learnt ſo much fence already.

Salis. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blowes. Sirrha, what's thy Name?

Peter. Peter forſooth.

Salis. Peter? what more?

Peter. Thumpe.

Salisb. Thumpe? Then ſee thou thumpe thy Maſter well.

Armorer. Maſters, I am come hither as it were upon my Mans inſtigation, to prove him a Knave, and my ſelfe an honeſt man: and touching the Duke of Yorke, I will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the King, nor the Queene: and therefore Peter have at thee with a downe-right blow.

York. Diſpatch, this Knaves tongue begins to double.
Sound Trumpets, Alarum to the Combattants.

They fight, and Peter ſtrikes him downe.

Armorer. Hold Peter, hold, I confeſſe, I confeſſe Treaſon.

York. Take away his Weapon: Fellow thanke God, and the good Wine in thy Maſters way.

Peter. O God, have I overcome mine Enemie in this preſence? O Peter, thou haſt prevayl'd in right.

King. Goe, take hence that Traytor from our ſight,
For by his death we doe perceive his guilt,
And God in Iuſtice hath reveal'd to us
The truth and innocence of this poore fellow,
Which he had thought to have murther'd wrongfully.
Come fellow, follow us for thy Reward.

Exeunt.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his Men in Mourning Cloakes.

Gloſt. Thus ſometimes hath the brighteſt day a Cloud:
And after Summer, evermore ſucceeds
Barren Winter, with his wrathfull nipping Cold;
So Cares and Ioyes abound, as Seaſons fleet.
Sirs, what's a Clocke?

Serv. Tenne, my Lord.

Gloſt. Tenne is the houre that was appointed me,
To watch the comming of my puniſht Ducheſſe:
Vnneath may ſhe endure the Flinty Streets,
To treade them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Nell, ill can thy Noble Mind abrooke
The abject People, gazing on thy face,
With envious Lookes ſtill laughing at thy ſhame,
That erſt did follow thy prowd Chariot-Wheeles,
When thou didſt ride in triumph through the ſtreets.
But ſoft, I thinke ſhe comes, and Ile prepare
My teare-ſtayn'd eyes, ſo ſee her Miſeries.

Enter the Ducheſſe in a white Sheet, and a Taper burning in her hand, with the Sherife and Officers.

Serv. So pleaſe your Grace, we'll take her from the Sherife.

Gloſter. No, ſtirre not for your lives, let her paſſe by.

Elian. Come you, my Lord, to ſee my open ſhame?
Now thou do'ſt Penance too. Looke how they gaze,
See how the giddy multitude doe point,
And nodde their heads, and throw their eyes on thee.
Ah Gloſter, hide thee from their hatefull lookes,
And in thy Cloſet pent up, rue my ſhame,
And banne thine Enemies, both mine and thine.

Gloſt. Be patient, gentle Nell, forget this griefe.

Elian. Ah Gloſter, teach me to forget my ſelfe:
For whileſt I thinke I am thy married Wife,
And thou a Prince, Protector of this Land:
Me thinkes I ſhould not thus be led along,
Mayl'd up in ſhame, with Papers on my backe,
And follow'd with a Rabble, that rejoyce
To ſee my teares, and heare my deepe-fet groanes.
The ruthleſſe Flint doth cut my tender feet,
And when I ſtart, the envious people laugh,
And bid me be adviſed how I treade.
Ah Humfrey, can I beare this ſhamefull yoake?
Troweſt thou, that ere Ile looke upon the World,
Or count them happy, that enjoyes the Sunne?
No: Darke ſhall be my Light, and Night my Day.
To thinke upon my Pompe, ſhall be my Hell.
Sometime Ile ſay, I am Duke Humfreyes Wife,
And he a Prince, and Ruler of the Land:
Yet ſo he rul'd, and ſuch a Prince he was,
As he ſtood by, whileſt I, his forlorne Ducheſſe,
Was made a wonder, and a pointing ſtocke
To every idle Raſcall follower.
But be thou milde, and bluſh not at my ſhame,
Nor ſturre at nothing, till the Axe of Death
Hang over thee, as ſure it ſhortly will.
For Suffolke, he that can doe all in all
With her, that hateth thee and hates us all,
And Yorke, and impious Beauford, that falſe Prieſt,
Have all lym'd Buſhes to betray thy Wings,
And flye thou how thou canſt, they'le tangle thee.
But feare not thou, untill thy foot be ſnar'd,
Nor never ſeeke prevention of thy foes.

Gloſt. Ah Nell, forbeare: thou aymeſt all awry.
I muſt offend, before I be attainted:
And had I twenty times ſo many foes,
And each of them had twenty times their power,
All theſe could not procure me any ſcathe,
So long as I am loyall, true, and crimeleſſe.
Would'ſt have me reſcue thee from this reproach?

Why yet thy ſcandall were not wipt away,
But I in danger for the breach of Law?
Thy greateſt helpe is quiet, gentle Nell:
I pray thee ſort thy heart to patience,
Theſe few dayes wonder will be quickly worne.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I ſummon your Grace to his Majeſties Parliament
Holden at Bury, the firſt of this next Moneth.
Gloſt. And my conſent ne're ask'd herein before?
This is cloſe dealing. Well, I will be there.
My Nell, I take my leave; and Maſter Sheriſe,
Let not her Penance exceede the Kings Commiſſion.
Sher. And't pleaſe you Grace, here my Commiſſion
And Sir Iohn Stanly is appointed now, (ſtayes:
To take her with him to the Ile of Man.
Gloſt. Muſt you, Sir Iohn, protect my Lady here?
Stanly. So am I given in charge, may't pleaſe your Grace.
Gloſt. Entreat her not the worſe, in that I pray
You uſe her well: the World may laugh againe,
And I may live to doe you kindneſſe, if you doe it her.
And ſo Sir Iohn, farewell.
Elian. What, gone my Lord, and bid me not farewell?
Gloſt. Witneſſe my teares, I cannot ſtay to ſpeake.

Exit Gloſter.

Elian. Art thou gone too? all comfort goe with thee,
For none abides with me: my Ioy, is Death:
Death, at whoſe Name I oft have beene afear'd,
Becauſe I wiſh'd this Worlds eternity.
Stanley, I prethee goe, and take me hence,
I care not whither, for I begge no favour;
Onely convey me where thou art commanded.
Stan. Why, Madam, that is to the Ile of Man,
There to be us'd according to your State.
Elian. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
And ſhall I then be us'd reproachfully?
Stan. Like to a Ducheſſe, and Duke Humfreyes Lady,
According to that State you ſhall be us'd.
Elian. Sheriſe farewell, and better then I fare,
Although thou haſt beene Conduct of my ſhame.
Sheri. It is my Office, and Madam pardon me.
Elian. I, I, farewell, thy Office is diſcharg'd:
Come Stanley, ſhall we goe?
Stan. Madam, your Penance done,
Throw off this Sheet,
And goe we to attyre you for our Iourney.
Elian. My ſhame will not be ſhifted with my Sheet:
No, it will hang upon my richeſt Robes,
And ſhew it ſelfe, attyre me how I can.
Goe, leade the way, I long to ſee my Priſon. Exeunt.

Enter King, Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Yorke, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Parliament.

King. I muſe my Lord of Gloſter is not come:
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmoſt man,
What e're occaſion keepes him from us now.
Quee. Can you not ſee? or will ye not obſerve
The ſtrangeneſſe of his alter'd Countenance?
With what a Majeſty he beares himſelfe,
How inſolent of late he is become,
How prowd, how peremptory, and unlike himſelfe.
We know the time ſince he was milde and affable,
And if we did but glance a farre-off Looke,
Immediately he was upon his Knee,
That all the Court admir'd him for ſubmiſſion.
But meet him now, and be it in the Morne,
When every one will give the time of day,
He knits his Brow, and ſhewes an angry Eye,
And paſſeth by with ſtiffe unbowed Knee,
Diſdaining duty that to us belongs.
Small Curres are not regarded when they grinne,
But great men tremble when the Lyon rores,
And Humfrey is no little Man in England.
Firſt note, that he is neere you in deſcent,
And ſhould you fall, he is the next will mount.
Me ſeemeth then, it is no Pollicy,
Reſpecting what a rancorous mind he beares,
And his advantage following your deceaſe,
That he ſhould come about your Royall Perſon,
Or be admitted to your highneſſe councell.
By flattery hath he wonne the Commons hearts:
And when he pleaſe to make Commotion,
'Tis to be fear'd they all will follow him.
Now 'tis the Spring, and Weedes are ſhallow-rooted,
Suffer them now, and they'le o're-grow the Garden,
And choake the Herbes for want of husbandry.
The reverent care I beare unto my Lord,
Made me collect theſe dangers in the Duke.
If it be fond, call it a Womans feare:
Which feare, if better Reaſons can ſupplant,
I will ſubſcribe, and ſay I wrong'd the Duke.
My Lord of Suffolke, Buckingham, and Yorke.
Reprove my allegation, if you can,
Or elſe conclude my words effectuall.
Suff. Well hath your highneſſe ſeene into this Duke:
And had I firſt beene put to ſpeake my mind,
I thinke I ſhould have told your Graces Tale.
The Ducheſſe, by his ſubornation,
Vpon my Life began her divelliſh practiſes:
Or if he were not privy to thoſe Faults,
Yet by reputing of his high deſcent,
As next the King, he was ſucceſſiue Heire,
And ſuch high vaunts of his Nobility,
Did inſtigate the Bedlam braine-ſicke Ducheſſe,
By wicked meanes to frame our Soveraignes fall.
Smooth runnes the Water, where the Brooke is deepe,
And in his ſimple ſhew he harbours Treaſon.
The Fox barkes not, when he would ſteale the Lambe.
No, no, my Soveraigne, Gloſter is a man
Vnſounded yet, and full of deepe deceit.
Card. Did he not, contrary to forme of Law,
Deviſe ſtrange deaths, for ſmall offences done?
Yorke. And did he not, in his Protectorſhip,
Levy great ſummes of Money through the Realme,
For Souldiers pay in France, and never ſent it?
By meanes whereof, the Townes each day revolted.
Buck. Tut, theſe are petty faults to faults unknowne,
Which time will bring to light in ſmooth Duke Humfrey.
King. My Lords at once: the care you have of us,
To mowe downe Thornes that would annoy our Foot,
Is worthy praiſe: but ſhall I ſpeake, my conſcience,
Our Kinſman Gloſter is as innocent,
From meaning Treaſon to our Royall Perſon,
As is the ſucking Lambe, or harmeleſſe Dove:
The Duke is vertuous, milde, and too well given,
To dreame on evill, or to worke my downefall.
Que. Ah what's more dangerous, then this fond af-
Seemes he a Dove? his feathers are but borrow'd, (ance?
For he's diſpoſed as the hatefull Raven.
Is he a Lambe? his Skinne is ſurely lent him,

For he's enclin'd as is the ravenous Wolves.
Who cannot ſteale a ſhape, that meanes deceit?
Take heed, my Lord, the welfare of us all,
Hangs on the cutting ſhort that fraudfull man.

Enter Somerſet.

Som. All health unto my gracious Soveraigne.
King. Welcome Lord Somerſet: What Newes from France?
Som. That all your Intereſt in thoſe Territories,
Is vtterly bereft you: all is loſt.
King. Cold Newes, Lord Somerſet: but Gods will be done.
Yorke. Cold Newes for me: for I had hope of France,
As firmely as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my Bloſſomes blaſted in the Bud,
And Caterpillers eate my Leaves away:
But I will remedy this geare ere long,
Or ſell my Title for a glorious Grave.

Enter Gloceſter.

Gloceſt. All happineſſe unto my Lord the King:
Pardon, my Liege, that I have ſtay'd ſo long.
Suff. Nay Gloceſter, know that thou art come too ſoone,
Vnleſſe thou wert more loyall then thou art:
I doe arreſt thee of high Treaſon here.
Gloceſt. Well Suffolke, yet thou ſhalt not ſee me bluſh,
Nor change my Countenance for this Arreſt:
A heart unſpotted, is not eaſily daunted.
The pureſt Spring is not ſo free ftom mud,
As I am cleare from Treaſon to my Soveraigne.
Who can accuſe me? wherein am I guilty?
Yorke. 'Tis thought, my Lord,
That you tooke Bribes of France,
And being Protector, ſtay'd the Souldiers pay,
By meanes whereof, his highneſſe hath loſt France.
Gloceſt. Is it but thought ſo?
What are they that thinke it?
I never rob'd the Souldiers of their pay,
Nor ever had one penny Bribe from France.
So helpe me God, as I have watcht the Night,
I, Night by Night, in ſtudying good for England.
That Doyt that ere I wreſted from the King,
Or any Groat I hoorded to my uſe,
Be brought againſt me at my Tryall day.
No: many a Pound of mine owne proper ſtore,
Becauſe I would not taxe the needy Commons,
Have I diſperſed to the Garriſons,
And never ask'd for reſtitution.
Card. It ſerves you well, my Lord, to ſay ſo much.
Gloceſt. I ſay no more then truth, ſo helpe me God.
Yorke. In your Protectorſhip, you did deviſe
Strange Tortures for Offenders, never heard of,
That England was defam'd by Tyranny.
Gloceſt. Why 'tis well knowne, that whiles I was Protector,
Pitty was all the fault that was in me:
For I ſhould melt at an Offendors teares,
And lowly words were Ranſome for their fault:
Vnleſſe it were a bloody Murtherer,
Or foule felonious Theefe, that fleec'd poore paſſengers,
I never gave them condigne puniſhment.
Murther indeed, that bloody ſinne, I tortur'd
Above the Felon, or what Treſpas elſe.
Suff. My Lord, theſe faults are eaſie, quickly anſwer'd:
But mightier Crimes are lay'd unto your charge,
Whereof you cannot eaſily purge your ſelfe.
I doe arreſt you in his highneſſe Name,
And here commit you to my Lord Cardinall
To keepe, untill your farther time of Tryall.
King. My Lord of Gloceſter, 'tis my ſpeciall hope,
That you will cleare your ſelfe from all ſuſpence,
My Conſcience tells me you are innocent.
Gloceſt. Ah gracious Lord, theſe dayes are dangerous:
Vertue is choakt with foule Ambition,
And Charity chas'd hence by Rancours hand;
Foule Subornation is predominant,
And Equitie exil'd your highneſſe Land.
I know, their Complot is to have my Life:
And if my death might make this Iland happy,
And prove the Period of their Tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingneſſe.
But mine is made the Prologue to their Play:
For thouſands more, that yet ſuſpect no perill,
Will not conclude their plotted Tragedy.
Beaufords red ſparkling eyes blab his hearts mallice,
And Suffolkes cloudy Brow his ſtormy hate;
Sharpe Buckingham unburthens with his tongue,
The envious Load that lyes upon his heart:
And dogged Yorke, that reaches at the Moone,
Whoſe over-weening Arme I have pluckt backe,
By falſe accuſe doth levell at my life.
And you, my Soveraigne Lady, with the reſt,
Cauſeleſſe have lay'd diſgraces on my head,
And with your beſt endevour have ſtirr'd up
My liefeſt Liege to be mine Enemy:
I, all of you have lay'd your heads together,
My ſelfe had notice of your Conventicles,
And all to make away my guiltleſſe life.
I ſhall not want falſe Witneſſe, to condemne me,
Nor ſtore of Treaſons, to augment my guilt:
The ancient Proverbe will be well effected,
A Staffe is quickly found to beat a Dogge.
Card. My Liege, his rayling is intollerable.
If thoſe that care to keepe your Royall Perſon
From Treaſons ſecret Knife, and Traytors Rage,
Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,
And the Offender granted ſcope of ſpeech,
'Twill make them coole in zeale unto your Grace.
Suff. Hath he not twit our Soveraigne Lady here
With ignominious words, though Clarkely couch't?
As if ſhe had ſuborned ſome to ſweare
Falſe allegations, to o'rethrow his ſtate.
Que. But I can give the loſer leave to chide.
Gloceſt. Farre truer ſpoke then meant: I loſe indeed,
Beſhrew the winners, for they play'd me falſe,
And well ſuch loſers may have leave to ſpeake.
Buck. He'll wreſt the ſence, and hold us here all day.
Lord Cardinall, he is your Priſoner.
Card. Sirs, take away the Duke, and guard him ſure.
Gloceſt. Ah, thus King Henry throwes away his Crutch
Before his Legges be firme to beare his body.
Thus is the Shepheard beaten from thy ſide,
And Wolves are gnarling, who ſhall gnaw thee firſt.
Ah that my feare were falſe, ah that it were;
For good King Henry, thy decay I feare. Exit Gloceſter.
King. My Lords, what to your wiſdomes ſeemeth beſt,
Doe, or undoe, as if our ſelfe were here.
Queene: What, will your highneſſe leave the Parliament?
King. I Margaret: my heart is drown'd with griefe,
Whoſe floud begins to flowe within mine eyes;
My body round engyrt with miſery:

For what's more miſerable then Diſcontent?
Ah Vnckle Humfrey, in thy face I ſee
The Map of Honor, Truth, and Loyalty:
And yet, good Humfrey, is the houre to come,
That ere I prov'd thee falſe, or fear'd thy faith.
What lowring Starre now envies thy eſtate?
That theſe great Lords, and Margaret our Queene,
Doe ſeeke ſubverſion of thy harmeleſſe Life.
Thou never didſt them wrong, nor no man wrong:
And as the Butcher takes away the Calfe,
And binds the Wretch, and beats it when it ſtrayes,
Bearing it to the bloody Slaughter-houſe;
Even ſo remorſeleſſe have they borne him hence:
And as the Damme runnes lowing up and downe,
Looking the way her harmeleſſe young one went,
And can doe nought but wayle her Darlings loſſe;
Even ſo my ſelfe bewayles good Gloſters caſe
With ſad unhelpefull teares, and with dimn'd eyes;
Looke after him, and cannot doe him good:
So mighty are his vowed Enemies.
His fortunes I will weepe, and 'twixt each groane,
Say, who's a Traytor? Gloſter he is none. Exit.

Quee. Free Lords:
Cold Snow melts with the Sunnes hot Beames:
Henry, my Lord, is cold in great Affaires,
Too full of fooliſh pitty: and Gloſters ſhew
Beguiles him, as the mournefull Crocodile
With ſorrow ſnares relenting paſſengers;
Or as the Snake, roll'd in a flowring Banke,
With ſhining checker'd ſlough doth ſting a Child,
That for the beauty thinkes it excellent.
Beleeve me Lords, were none more wiſe then I,
And yet herein I judge mine owne Wit good;
This Gloſter ſhould be quickly rid the World,
To rid us from the feare we have of him.

Card. That he ſhould dye, is worthy pollicy,
But yet we want a Colour for his death:
'Tis meet he be condemn'd by courſe of Law.

Suff. But in my mind, that were no pollicy:
The King will labour ſtill to ſave his Life,
The Commons haply riſe, to ſave his Life;
And yet we have but triviall argument,
More then miſtruſt, that ſhewes him worthy death.

Yorke. So that by this, you would not have him dye.

Suff. Ah Yorke, no man alive, ſo faine as I.

Yorke. 'Tis Yorke that hath more reaſon for his death.
But my Lord Cardinall, and you my Lord of Suffolke,
Say as you thinke, and ſpeake it from your Soules:
Wer't not all one, an empty Eagle were ſet,
To guard the Chicke from a hungry Kyte,
As place Duke Humfrey for the Kings Protector?

Quee. So the poore Chicken ſhould be ſure of death.

Suff. Madam 'tis true: and wer't not madneſſe then,
To make the Fox ſurveyor of the Fold?
Who being accus'd a crafty Murtherer,
His guilt ſhould be but idly poſted over,
Becauſe his purpoſe is not executed.
No: let him dye, in that he is a Fox,
By nature prov'd an Enemy to the Flocke,
Before his Chaps be ſtayn'd with Crimſon blood,
As Humfrey prov'd by Reaſons to my Liege.
And doe not ſtand on Quillets how to ſlay him:
Be it by Gynnes, by Snares, by Subtlety,
Sleeping, or Waking, 'tis no matter how,
So he be dead; for that is good deceit,
Which mates him firſt, that firſt intends deceit.

Quee. Thrice Noble Suffolke, 'tis reſolutely ſpoke.

Suff. Not reſolute, except ſo much were done,
For things are often ſpoke, and ſeldome meant,
But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preſerve my Soveraigne from his Foe,
Say but the word, and I will be his Prieſt.

Card. But I would have him dead, my Lord of Suffolke,
Ere you can take due Orders for a Prieſt:
Say you conſent, and cenſure well the deed,
And Ile provide his Executioner,
I tender ſo the ſafety of my Liege.

Suff. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.

Quee. And ſo ſay I.

Yorke. And I: and now we three have ſpoke it,
It skills not greatly who impugnes our doome.

Enter a Poſte.

Poſt. Great Lords, from Ireland am I come amaine,
To ſignifie, that Rebels there are up,
And put the Engliſhmen unto the Sword,
Send Succours (Lords) and ſtop the Rage betime,
Before the Wound doe grow uncurable;
For being greene, there is great hope of helpe.

Card. A Breach that craves a quicke expedient ſtop.
What counſaile give you in this weighty cauſe?

Yorke. That Somerſet be ſent a Regent thither:
'Tis meet that luckye Ruler be imploy'd,
Witneſſe the fortune he hath had in France.

Som. If Yorke, with all his farre-fet pollicy,
Had beene the Regent there, in ſtead of me,
He never would have ſtay'd in France ſo long.

Yorke. No, not to loſe it all, as thou haſt done.
I rather would have loſt my life betimes,
Then bring a burthen of diſ-honour home,
By ſtaying there ſo long, till all were loſt.
Shew me one skarre, character'd on thy skinne.
Mens fleſh preſerv'd ſo whole, doe ſeldome winne.

Quee. Nay then, this ſparke will prove a raging fire,
If Wind and Fuell be brought, to feed it with:
No more, good Yorke; ſweet Somerſet be ſtill.
Thy fortune, Yorke, hadſt thou beene Regent there,
Might haply have prov'd farre worſe then his.

Yorke. What, worſe then naught? nay, then a ſhame take all.

Somerſet. And in the number, thee, that wiſheſt ſhame.

Card. My Lord of Yorke, try what your fortune is.
Th'uncivill Kernes of Ireland are in Armes,
And temper Clay with blood of Engliſhmen.
To Ireland will you leade a Band of men,
Collected choycely, from each County ſome,
And try your hap againſt the Iriſhmen?

Yorke. I will, my Lord, ſo pleaſe his Majeſty.

Suff. Why, our Authority is his conſent,
And what we doe eſtabliſh, he confirmes;
Then, Noble Yorke, take thou this Taske in hand.

Yorke. I am content: Provide me Souldiers, Lords,
Whiles I take order for mine owne affaires.

Suff. A charge, Lord Yorke, that I will ſee perform'd.
But now returne we to the falſe Duke Humfrey.

Card. No more of him: for I will deale with him,
That henceforth he ſhall trouble us no more:
And ſo breake off, the day is almoſt ſpent,
Lord Suffolke, you and I muſt talke of that event.

Yorke. My Lord of Suffolke, within foureteene dayes
At Briſtow I expect my Souldiers,
For there Ile ſhip them all for Ireland.
Suff. Ile ſee it truely done, my Lord of Yorke. Exeunt.

Manet Yorke.

Yorke. Now Yorke, or never, ſteele thy fearfull thoughts
And change miſdoubt to reſolution ;
Be that thou hop'ſt to be, or what thou art;
Reſigne to death, it is not worth th'enjoying :
Let pale-fac't feare keepe with the meane-borne man ,
And finde no harbor in a Royall heart. (thought,
Faſter then Spring-time ſhowres, comes thought on
And not a thought, but thinkes on Dignity.
My braine, more buſie then the labouring Spider,
Weaves tedious Snares to trap mine Enemies.
Well Nobles, well: 'tis politikely done,
To ſend me packing with an Hoaſt of men :
I feare me, you but warme the ſtarved Snake,
Who cheriſht in your breaſts, will ſting your hearts,
'Twas men I lackt, and you will give them me ;
I take it kindly : yet be well aſſur'd,
You put ſharpe Weapons in a mad-mans hands.
Whiles I in Ireland nouriſh a mighty band,
I will ſtirre up in England ſome blacke Storme,
Shall blow ten thouſand Soules to heaven, or hell :
And this fell Tempeſt ſhall not ceaſe to rage,
Vntill the Golden Circuit on my head,
Like to the glorious Sunnes tranſparant Beames,
Doe calme the fury of this mad-bred Flawe.
And for a miniſter of my intent,
I have ſeduc'd a head-ſtrong Kentiſhman,
Iohn Cade of Aſhford,
To make Commotion, as full well he can,
Vnder the Title of Iohn Mortimer.
In Ireland have I ſeene this ſtubborne Cade
Oppoſe himſelfe againſt a Troupe of Kernes,
And fought ſo long, till that his thighes with Darts
Were almoſt like a ſharpe-quill'd Porpentine :
And in the end being reſcued, I have ſeene
Him caper upright, like a wilde Moriſco,
Shaking the bloody Darts, as he his Bells.
Full often, like a ſhag-hayr'd crafty Kerne,
Hath he converſed with the Enemy,
And undiſcover'd, come to me againe,
And given me notice of their Villanies.
This devill here ſhall be my ſubſtitute ,
For that Iohn Mortimer, which now is dead,
In face, in gate, in ſpeech he doth reſemble.
By this, I ſhall perceive the Commons mind,
How they affect the Houſe and Clayme of Yorke.
Say he be taken, rackt, and tortured ;
I know, no paine they can inflict upon him,
Will make him ſay, I mov'd him to thoſe Armes.
Say that he thrive, as 'tis great like he will,
Why then from Ireland come I with my ſtrength,
And reape the Harveſt which that Raſcall ſow'd.
For Humfrey ; being dead, as he ſhall be,
And Henry put apart ; the next for me. Exit.

Enter two or three running over the Stage, from the Murther of Duke Humfrey.

1. Runne to my Lord of Suffolke : let him know
We have diſpatcht the Duke, as he commanded.
2. Oh, that it were to doe ; what have we done ?
Didſt ever heare a man ſo penitent ? Enter Suffolke.
1. Heere comes my Lord.
Suff. Now Sirs, have you diſpatcht this thing ?
1. I, my good Lord, he's dead.
Suff. Why that's well ſaid. Goe, get you to my houſe,
I will reward you for this venturous deed :
The King and all the Peeres are here at hand.
Have you layd faire the Bed ? are all things well,
According as I gave directions ?
1. 'Tis, my good Lord.
Suff. Away, be gone. Exeunt.

Enter the King, the Queene, Cardinall, Suffolke, Somerſet, with Attendants.

King. Goe call our Vnckle to our preſence ſtraight :
Say, we intend to try his Grace to day,
If he be guilty, as 'tis publiſhed.
Suff. Ile call him preſently, my Noble Lord. Exit.
King. Lords take your places ; and I pray you all
Proceed no ſtraiter 'gainſt our Vnckle Gloſter,
Then from true evidence, of good eſteeme,
He be approv'd in practiſe culpable.
Quee. God forbid any Malice ſhould prevayle,
That faultleſſe may condemne a Noble man :
Pray God he may acquit him of ſuſpition.
King. I thanke thee Nell, theſe wordes content me much.

Enter Suffolke.

How now? why look'ſt thou pale? why trembleſt thou?
Where is our Vnckle ? what's the matter, Suffolke ?
Suff. Dead in his Bed, my Lord : Gloſter is dead.
Quee. Marry God forſend.
Card. Gods ſecret Iudgement : I did dreame to Night,
The Duke was dumbe, and could not ſpeake a word.

King ſounds.

Quee. How fares my Lord ? Helpe Lords, the King is dead.
Som. Reare up his Body, wring him by the Noſe.
Quee. Run, goe, helpe, helpe: Oh Henry ope thine eyes
Suff. He doth reviue againe, Madam be patient.
King. Oh heavenly God.
Quee. How fares my gracious Lord?
Suff. Comfort my Soveraigne, gracious Henry comfore.
King. What, doth my Lord of Suffolke comfort me?
Came he right now to ſing a Ravens Note,
Whoſe diſmall tunne bereft my Vitall powres :
And thinkes he, that the chirping of a Wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breaſt,
Can chaſe away the firſt conceived ſound?
Hide not thy poyſon with ſuch ſugred words,
Lay not thy hands on me : forbeare I ſay,
Their touch affrights me as a Serpents ſting.
Thou balefull Meſſenger, out of my ſight :
Vpon thy eye-balls, murderous Tyranny
Sits in grim Majeſty, to fright the World.
Looke not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding ;
Yet doe not goe away ; come Baſiliske.
And kill the innocent gazer with thy ſight :
For in the ſhade of death, I ſhall find joy ;
In life, but double death, now Gloſter's dead.
Quee. Why doe you rate my Lord of Suffolke thus ?
Although the Duke was enemy to him,
Yet he moſt Chriſtian-like laments his death ;
And for my ſelfe, Foe as he was to me,
Might liquid teares, or heart-offending groanes,
Or blood-conſuming ſighes recall his Life ;

I would be blind with weeping, ſicke with grones,
Looke pale as Prim-roſe with blood-drinking ſighes;
And all to have the Noble Duke alive.
What know I how the world may deeme of me?
For it is knowne we were but hollow Friends:
It may be judg'd I made the Duke away.
So ſhall my name with Slanders tongue be wounded,
And Princes Courts be fill'd with my reproach:
This get I by his death: Aye me unhappy,
To be a Queene, and Crown'd with infamy.
King. Ah woe is me for Gloſter, wretched man.
Quee. Be woe for me, more wretched then he is.
What, Doſt thou turne away, and hide thy face?
I am no loathſome Leaper, looke on me.
What? Art thou like the Adder waxen deafe?
Be poyſonous too, and kill thy forlorne Queene.
Is all thy comfort ſhut in Gloſters Tombe?
Why then Dame Elianor was ne're thy joy.
Erect his Statue, and worſhip it,
And make my Image but an Ale-houſe ſigne.
Was I for this nye wrack'd upon the Sea,
And twice by aukward winde from Englands banke
Drove backe againe unto my Native Clime.
What boaded this? but well fore-warning winde
Did ſeeme to ſay, ſeeke not a Scorpions Neſt,
Nor ſet no footing on this unkind Shore.
What did I then? But curſt the gentle guſts,
And he that loos'd them forth their Brazen Caves,
And bid them blow towards Englands bleſſed ſhore,
Or turne our Sterne upon a dreadfull Rocke:
Yet Æolus would not be a murtherer,
But left that hatefull office unto thee.
The pretty vaulting Sea refus'd to drowne me,
Knowing that thou wouldſt have me drown'd on ſhore
With teares as ſalt as Sea, through thy unkindneſſe.
The ſplitting Rockes cowr'd in the ſinking ſands,
And would not daſh me with their ragged ſides,
Becauſe thy flinty heart more hard then they,
Might in thy Pallace, periſh Elianor,
As farre as I could ken thy Chalky Cliffes,
When from thy Shore, the Tempeſt beate us backe,
I ſtood upon the Hatches in the ſtorme:
And when the duſky sky, began to rob
My earneſt-gaping-ſight of the Lands view,
I tooke a coſtly Iewell from my necke,
A Heart it was bound in with Diamonds,
And threw it towards thy Land: The Sea receiv'd it,
And ſo I wiſh'd thy body might my Heart:
And even with this, I loſt faire Englands view,
And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart,
And call'd them blind and duſky Spectacles,
For loſing ken of Albions wiſhed Coaſt,
How often have I tempted Suffolkes tongue
(The agent of thy foule inconſtancy)
To ſit and watch me as Aſcanius did,
When he to madding Dido would unfold
His Fathers Acts, commenc'd in burning Troy,
Am I not witcht like her? Or thou not falſe like him?
Aye me, I can no more: Dye Elinor,
For Henry weepes, that thou doſt live ſo long.

Noyſe within. Enter Warwicke, and many Commons.

War. It is reported, mighty Soveraigne,
That good Duke Humfrey Traiterouſly is murdered
By Suffolkes, and the Cardinall Beaufords meanes:
The Commons like an angry hive of Bees
That want their Leader, ſcatter up and downe,
And care not who they ſting in his revenge.
My ſelfe have calm'd their ſpleenfull mutiny,
Vntill they heare the order of his death.
King. That he is dead good Warwicke, 'tis too true,
But how he dyed, God knowes, not Henry:
Enter his Chamber, view his breathleſſe Corpes,
And comment then upon his ſodaine death.
Warw. That ſhall I doe my Liege: Stay Salsbury
With the rude multitude, till I returne.
King. O thou that judgeſt all things, ſtay my thoughts:
My thoughts, that labour to perſwade my ſoule,
Some violent hands were laid on Humfryes life:
If my ſuſpect be falſe, forgive me God,
For judgement onely doth belong to thee:
Faine would I goe to chafe his paly lips,
With twenty thouſand kiſſes, and to draine
Vpon his face an Ocean of ſalt teares,
To tell my love unto his dumbe deafe trunke,
And with my fingers feele his hand, unfeeling:
But all in vaine are theſe meane Obſequies,

Bed put forth.

And to ſurvey his dead and earthly Image:
What were it but to make my ſorrow greater?
Warw. Come hither gracious Soveraigne, view this body.
King. That is to ſee how deeepe my grave is made,
For with his ſoule fled all my worldly ſolace;
For ſeeing him, I ſee my life in death.
War. As ſurely as my ſoule intends to live
With that dread King that tooke our ſtate upon him,
To free us from his Fathers wrathfull curſe,
I doe beleeue that violent hands were laid
Vpon the life of this thrice-famed Duke.
Suff. A dreadfull Oath, ſworne with a ſolemne tongue:
What inſtance gives Lord Warwicke for his vow?
War. See how the blood is ſetled in his face.
Oft have I ſeene a timely-parted Ghoſt,
Of aſhy ſemblance, meager, pale, and bloodleſſe,
Being all deſcended to the labouring heart,
Who in the Conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the ſame for aydance 'gainſt the enemy,
Which with the heart there cooles, and ne're returneth,
To bluſh and beautifie the Cheeke againe.
But ſee, his face is blacke, and full of blood:
His eye-balles further out, than when he lived,
Staring full gaſtly, like a ſtrangled man:
His hayre up rear'd, his noſtris ſtretcht with ſtrugling:
His hands abroad diſplay'd, as one that graſpt
And tugg'd for Life, and was by ſtrength ſubdude.
Looke on the ſheets his haire (you ſee) is ſticking,
His well proportion'd Beard, made ruffe and rugg'd,
Like to the Summers Corne by Tempeſt lodged:
It cannot be but he was murdred heere,
The leaſt of all theſe ſignes were probable.
Suf. Why Warwicke, who ſhould doe the D. to death?
My ſelfe and Beauford had him in protection,
And we, I hope ſir, are no murtherers.
War. But both of you were vowed D. Humfries death.
And you (forſooth) had the good Duke to keepe:
Tis like you would not feaſt him like a friend,
And 'tis well ſeene, he found an enemy.
Queen. Then you belike ſuſpect theſe Noblemen,
As guilty of Duke Humfries timeleſſe death.

War.

Warw. Who finds the Heyfer dead, and bleeding freſh,
And ſees faſt-by, a Butcher with an Axe,
But will ſuſpect, 'twas he that made the ſlaughter?
Who finds the Partridge in the Puttockes Neſt,
But may imagine how the Bird was dead,
Although the Kyte ſoare with vnbloudied Beake?
Euen ſo ſuſpitious is this Tragedy.
Qu. Are you the Butcher, Suffolke? where's your Knife?
Is Beauford tearm'd a Kyte? where are his Tallons?
Suff. I weare no Knife, to ſlaughter ſleeping men,
But here's a vengefull Sword, ruſted with eaſe,
That ſhall be ſcowred in his rancorous heart,
That ſlanders me with Murthers Crimſon Badge.
Say, if thou dar'ſt, prow'd Lord of Warwickſhire,
That I am faulty in Duke Humfryes death.
Warw. What dares not Warwicke, if falſe Suffolke dare him?
Que. He dares not calme his contumelious Spirit,
Nor ceaſe to be an arrogant Controller,
Though Suffolke dare him twenty thouſand times.
Warw. Madam be ſtill: with reuerence may I ſay,
For euery word you ſpeake in his behalfe,
Is ſlander to your Royall Dignity.
Suff. Blunt-witted Lord, ignoble in demeanor,
If euer Lady wrong'd her Lord ſo much,
Thy Mother tooke into her blamefull Bed,
Some ſterne vntutor'd Churle; and Noble Stocke
Was graft with Crab-tree ſlip, whoſe Fruit thou art,
And neuer of the Nevils Noble Race.
Warw. But that the guilt of Murther bucklers thee,
And I ſhould rob the Deaths-man of his Fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thouſand ſhames,
And that my Soueraignes preſence makes me mild,
I would, falſe murd'rous Coward, on thy Knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy paſſed ſpeech,
And ſay, it was thy Mother that thou meant'ſt,
That thou thy ſelfe waſt borne in Baſtardy;
And after all this fearefull Homage done,
Giue thee thy hyre, aed thy Soule to hell,
Pernicious blood-ſucker of ſleeping men.
Suf. Thou ſhalt be waking, while I ſhed thy blood,
If from this preſence thou dar'ſt goe with me.
Warw. Away euen now, or I will drag thee hence,
Vnworthy though thou art, Ile cope with thee,
And doe ſome ſeruice to Duke Humfreyes Ghoſt.
Exeunt.
King. What ſtrõger Breſt-plate then a heart vntainted?
Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his Quarrell iuſt;
And he but naked, though lockt vp in Steele,
Whoſe conſcience with iniuſtice is corrupted.
A noyſe within.
Quee. What noyſe is this?

Enter Suffolke and Warwicke, with their Weapons drawne.

King. Why how now Lords?
Your wrathfull Weapons drawne,
Here in our preſence? Dare you be ſo bold?
Why what tumultuous clamor haue we here?
Suff. The trayt'rous Warwicke, with the men of Bury,
Set all vpon me, mighty Soueraigne.

Enter Saliſbury.

Salis. Sirs ſtand apart, the King ſhall know your mind.
Dread Lord, the Commons ſend you word by me,
Vnleſſe Lord Suffolke ſtraight be done to death,
Or baniſhed faire Englands Territories,
They will by violence teare him from your Pallace,
And torture him with grieuous lingring death.
They ſay, by him the good Duke Humfrey dy'de:
They ſay, in him they feare your Highneſſe death;
And meere inſtinct of Loue and Loyalty,
Free from a ſtubborne oppoſite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his Baniſhment.
They ſay, in care of your moſt Royall Perſon,
That if your Highneſſe ſhould intend to ſleepe,
And charge, that no man ſhould diſturbe your reſt,
In paine of your diſlike, or paine of death;
Yet notwithſtanding ſuch a ſtrait Edict,
Were there a Serpent ſeene, with forked Tongue,
That ſlyly glyded towards your Maieſty,
It were but neceſſary you were wak't:
Leaſt being ſuffer'd in that harmeleſſe ſlumber,
The mortall Worme might make the ſleepe eternall.
And therefore doe they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, where you will, or no,
From ſuch fell Serpents as falſe Suffolke is;
With whoſe inuenomed and fatall ſting,
Your louing Vnckle, twenty times his worth,
They ſay is ſhamefully bereft of life.
Commons within. An Anſwer from the King, my Lord of Saliſbury.
Suff. 'Tis like the Commons, rude vnpoliſht hinds,
Could ſend ſuch Meſſage to their Soueraigne:
But you, my Lord, were glad to be imploy'd,
To ſhew how queint an Orator you are.
But all the Honor Saliſbury hath wonne,
Is, that he was the Lord Embaſſador,
Sent from a ſort of Tinkers to the King.
Within. An anſwer from the King, or wee will all breake in.
King. Goe Saliſbury, and tell them all from me,
I thanke them for their tender louing care;
And had I not beene cited ſo by them,
Yet did I purpoſe as they doe entreat:
For ſure, my thoughts doe hourely prophecy,
Miſchance vnto my State by Suffolkes meanes.
And therefore by his Maieſty I ſweare,
Whoſe farre-vnworthy Deputy I am,
He ſhall not breathe infection in this ayre,
But three dayes longer, on the paine of death.
Que. Oh Henry, let me pleade for gentle Suffolke.
King. Vngentle Queene, to call him gentle Suffolke.
No more I ſay: if thou do'ſt pleade for him,
Thou wilt but adde encreaſe vnto my Wrath.
Had I but ſaid, I would haue kept my word;
But when I ſweare, it is irreuocable:
If after three dayes ſpace thou here bee'ſt found,
On any ground that I am Ruler of,
The World ſhall not be Ranſome for thy Life.
Come Warwicke, come good Warwicke, goe with me,
I haue great matters to impart to thee. Exit.
Que. Miſchance and Sorrow goe along with you,
Hearts Diſcontent, and ſowre Affliction,
Be play-fellowes to keepe you company:
There's two of you, the Deuill made a third,
And three-fold Vengeance tend vpon your ſteps.
Suff. Ceaſe, gentle Queene, theſe Execrations,
And let thy Suffolke take his heauy leaue.

Queene.

Quee. Fye Coward woman, and ſoft hearted wretch,
Haſt thou not ſpirit to curſe thine enemy?
Suff. A plague upon them: wherefore ſhould I curſſe them?
Would curſes kill, as doth the Mandrakes grone,
I would invent as bitter ſearching termes,
As curſt, as harſh, and horrible to heare,
Deliver'd ſtrongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many ſignes of deadly hate,
As leane-fac'd envy in her loathſome cave.
My tongue ſhould ſtumble in mine earneſt words,
Mine eyes ſhould ſparkle like the beaten Flint,
Mine haire be fixt an end, as one diſtract:
I, every joynt ſhould ſeeme to curſe and ban,
And even now my burthen'd heart would breake
Should I not curſe them. Poyſon be their drinke;
Gall, worſe then Gall, the daintieſt that they taſte:
Their ſweeteſt ſhade, a grove of Cypreſſe Trees:
Their cheefeſt Proſpect, murd'ring Baſiliskes:
Their ſofteſt Touch, as ſmart as Lyzards ſtings:
Their Muſicke, frightfull as the Serpents hiſſe,
And boading Screech-Owles, make the Conſort full.
All the foule terrors in darke ſeated hell———
Que. Enough ſweet Suffolke, thou torment'ſt thy ſelfe,
And theſe dread curſes like the Sunne 'gainſt glaſſe,
Or like an over-charged Gun, recoile,
And turnes the force of them upon thy ſelfe.
Suff. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?
Now by the ground that I am baniſh'd from,
Well could I curſe away a Winters night,
Though ſtanding naked on a Mountaine top,
Where byting cold would never let graſſe grow,
And thinke it but a minute ſpent in ſport.
Quee. Oh, let me intreat thee ceaſe, give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournfull teares;
Nor let the raine of heaven wet this place,
To waſh away my woefull Monuments.
Oh, could this kiſſe be printed in thy hand,
That thou might'ſt thinke upon theſe by the Seale,
Through whom a thouſand ſighes are breath'd for thee.
So get thee gone, that I may know my griefe,
'Tis but ſurmiz'd, whiles thou art ſtanding by,
As one that ſurfets, thinking on a want:
I will repeale thee, or be well aſſur'd,
Adventure to be baniſhed my ſelfe:
And baniſhed I am, if but from thee.
Goe, ſpeake not to me; even now be gone,
Oh goe not yet. Even thus, two friends condemn'd,
Embrace, and kiſſe, and take ten thouſand leaves,
Loather a hundred times to part then dye;
Yet now farewell, and farewell life with thee.
Suff. Thus is poore Suffolke ten times baniſhed,
Once by the King, and three times thrice by thee.
'Tis not the Land I care for, wer't thou hence,
A Wilderneſſe is populous enough,
So Suffolke had thy heavenly company:
For where thou art, there is the World it ſelfe,
With every ſeverall pleaſure in the World:
And where thou art not, Deſolation.
I can no more: Live thou to joy thy life;
My ſelfe no joy in nought, but that thou liv'ſt.

Enter Vaux.

Quee. Whither goes Vaux ſo faſt? what newes I prethee?
Vaux. To ſignifie unto his Majeſty,
That Cardinall Beauford is at point of death:
For ſodainely a greivous ſickeneſſe tooke him,
That makes him gaspe, and ſtare, and catch the ayre,
Blaſpheming God, and curſing men on earth.
Sometime he talkes, as if Duke Humfryes Ghoſt
Were by his ſide: Sometime, he calles the King,
And whiſpers to his pillow, as to him,
The ſecrets of his over-charged ſoule,
And I am ſent to tell his Majeſty,
That even now he cries alowd for him.
Quee. Goe tell this heavy Meſſage to the King. Exit.
Aye me! What is this World? What newes are theſe?
But wherefore greeve I at an houres poore loſſe,
Omitting Suffolkes exile, my ſoules Treaſure?
Why onely Suffolke mourne I not for thee?
And with the Southerne clouds, contend in teares?
Theirs for the earths encreaſe; mine for my ſorrowes.
Now get thee hence, the King thou know'ſt is comming
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.
Suff. If I depart from thee, I cannot live,
And in thy ſight to dye, what were it elſe,
But like a pleaſant ſlumber in thy lap?
Heere could I breath my ſoule into the ayre,
As milde and gentle as the Cradle-babe,
Dying with mothers dugge betweene it's lips.
Where from thy ſight, I ſhould be raging mad.
And cry out for thee to cloſe up mine eyes:
To have thee with thy lippes to ſtop my mouth:
So ſhould'ſt thou either turne my flying ſoule,
Or I ſhould breathe it ſo into thy body,
And then it liv'd in ſweet Elizium.
To dye by thee, were but to dye in jeſt,
From thee to dye, were torture more then death:
Oh let me ſtay, befall what may befall.
Quee. Away: Though parting be a fretfull coroſive,
It is applyed to a deathfull wound.
To France ſweet Suffolke: Let me heare from thee:
For whereſoever thou art in this worlds Globe,
Ile have an Iris that ſhall find thee out.
Suff. I goe.
Quee. And take my heart with thee.
Suff. A Iewell lockt into the wofulſt Caske,
That ever did containe a thing of worth,
Even as a ſplitted Barke, ſo ſunder we:
This way fall I to death.
Quee. This way for me. Exeunt.

Enter the King, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Cardinall in bed.

King. How fare's my Lord? Speake Beauford to thy Soveraigne.
Ca. If thou beeſt death, Ile give thee Englands Treaſure,
Enough to purchaſe ſuch another Iſland,
So thou wilt let me live, and feele no paine.
King. Ah, what a ſigne it is of evill life,
Where death's approach is ſeene ſo terrible.
War. Beauford, it is thy Soveraigne ſpeakes to thee.
Beau. Bring me unto my Triall when you will.
Dy'de he not in his bed? Where ſhould he dye?
Can I make men live where they will or no?
Oh torture me no more, I will confeſſe.
Alive againe? Then ſhew me where he is,
Ile give a thouſand pound to looke upon him,
He hath no eyes, the duſt hath blinded them.

Combe downe his haire; looke, looke, it ſtands upright,
Like Lime-twigs ſet to catch my winged ſoule:
Give me ſome drinke, and bid the Apothecarie
Bring the ſtrong poyſon that I bought of him.

King. Oh thou eternall moover of the heavens,
Looke with a gentle eye upon this Wretch,
Oh beate away the buſie medling Fiend,
That layes ſtrong ſiege unto this wretches ſoule,
And from his boſome purge this blacke deſpaire.

War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin.

Sal. Diſturbe him not, let him paſſe peaceably.

King. Peace to his ſoule, if Gods good pleaſure be.
Lord Card'nall, if thou think'ſt on heavens bliſſe,
Hold up thy hand, make ſignall of thy hope.
He dyes and makes no ſigne: Oh God forgive him.

War. So bad a death, argues a monſtrous life.

King. Forbeare to judge, for we are ſinners all.
Cloſe up his eyes, and draw the Curtaine cloſe,
And let us all to Meditation. Exeunt.

Alarum. Fight at Sea. Ordenance goes off.

Enter Lieutenant, Suffolke, and others.

Lieu. The gaudy blabbing and remorſefull day,
Is crept into the boſome of the Sea:
And now loud houling Wolves arouſe the Iades
That dragge the Tragicke melancholy night:
Who with their drowſie, ſlow, and flagging wings
Cleape dead-mens graves; and from their miſty Iawes,
Breathe foule contagious darkneſſe in the ayre:
Therefore bring forth the Souldiers of our prize,
For whilſt our Pinnace Anchors in the Downes,
Here ſhall they make their ranſome on the ſand,
Or with their blood ſtaine this diſcoloured ſhore.
Maſter, this Priſoner freely give I thee.
And thou that art his Mate, make boote of this:
The other Walter Whitmore is thy ſhare.

1 Gent. What is my ranſome Maſter, let me know.

Ma. A thouſand Crownes, or elſe lay down your head.

Mate. And ſo much ſhall you give, or off goes yours.

Lieu. What thinke you much to pay 2000. Crownes,
And beare the name and port of Gentlemen?
Cut both the Villaines throat, for dye you ſhall:
The lives of thoſe which we have loſt in fight,
Be counter-poys'd with ſuch a pettie ſumme.

1. Gent. Ile give it ſir, and therefore ſpare my life.

2 Gent. And ſo will I, and write home for it ſtraight.

Whitm. I loſt mine eye in laying the prize aboord,
And therefore to revenge it, ſhalt thou dye,
And ſo ſhould theſe, if I might have my will.

Lieu. Be not ſo raſh, take ranſome, let him live.

Suf. Looke on my George, I am a Gentleman,
Rate me at what thou wilt, thou ſhalt be payed.

Whit. And ſo am I: my name is Walter Whitmore.
How now? why ſtarts thou? what doth death affright?

Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whoſe ſound is death:
A cunning man did calculate my Birth,
And told me that by water I ſhould dye:
Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded,
Thy name is Gualtier, being rightly ſounded.

Wit. Gualtier or Walter, which it is I care not,
Never yet did baſe diſhonour blurre our name,
But with our ſword we wip'd away the blot.
Therefore, when Merchant-like I ſell revenge,
Broke be my ſword, my Armes torne and defac'd,
And I proclaim'd a Coward through the world,

Suf. Stay Whitmore, for thy Priſoner is a Prince,
The Duke of Suffolke, William de la Pole.

Whit. The Duke of Suffolke, muffled up in ragges?

Suf. I, but theſe raggs are no part of the Duke.

Lieu. But Iove was never ſlaine as thou ſhalt be,
Obſcure and lowſie Swaine, King Henries blood.

Suf. The honourable blood of Lancaſter
Muſt not be ſhed by ſuch a jaded Groome:
Haſt thou not kiſt thy hand, and held my ſtirrop?
Bare-headed plodded by my foot-cloth Mule,
And thought thee happy when I ſhooke my head.
How often haſt thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my Trencher, kneel'd downe at the boord,
When I have feaſted with Queene Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee Creſt-falne,
I, and alay this thy abortive Pride:
How in our voiding Lobby haſt thou ſtood,
And duly waited for my comming forth?
This hand of thine hath writ in thy behalfe,
And therefore ſhall it charme thy riotous tongue.

Whit. Speake Captaine, ſhall I ſtab the forlorn Swain?

Lieu. Firſt let my words ſtab him, as he hath me.

Suf. Baſe ſlave, thy words are blunt, and ſo art thou.

Lieu. Convey him hence, and on our long boats ſide,
Strike off his head. Suf. Thou dar'ſt not for thy owne.

Lieu. Poole, Sir Poole? Lord,
I kennell, puddle, ſinke, whoſe filth and durt
Troubles the ſilver Spring, where England drinkes:
Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For ſwallowing the Treaſure of the Realme.
Thy lips that kiſt the Queene, ſhall ſweepe the ground:
And thou that ſmil'dſt at good Duke Humfries death,
Againſt the ſenſeleſſe windes ſhalt grin in vaine,
Who in contempt ſhall hiſſe at thee againe.
And wedded be thou to the Hagges of hell,
For daring to affye a mighty Lord
Vnto the daughter of a worthleſſe King,
Having neither Subject, Wealth, nor Diadem:
By diveliſh policy art thou growne great,
And like ambitious Sylla over-gor'd,
With gobbets of thy Mother-bleeding heart.
By thee Anjou and Maine were ſold to France.
The falſe revolting Normans thorough thee,
Diſdaine to call us Lord, and Piccardie
Hath ſlaine their Governors, ſurpriz'd our Forts,
And ſent the ragged Souldiers wounded home:
The Princely Warwicke, and the Nevils all,
Whoſe dreadfull ſwords were never drawne in vaine,
As hating thee, and riſing up in Armes.
And now the Houſe of Yorke thruſt from the Crowne,
By ſhamefull murther of a guiltleſſe King,
And lofty proud incroaching tyranny,
Burnes with revenging fire, whoſe hopefull colours
Advance our halfe-fac'd Sunne, ſtriving to ſhine;
Vnder the which is writ, Inuitis nubibus.
The Commons heere in Kent are up in armes,
And to conclude, Reproach and Beggerie,
Is crept into the Pallace of our King,
And all by thee: away convey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a God, to ſhoot forth Thunder
Vpon theſe paltry, ſervile, abject Drudges:
Small things make baſe men proud. This Villaine heere,
Being Captaine of a Pinnace, threats more
Then Bargulus the ſtrong Illyrian Pyrate.
Drones ſucke not Eagles blood, but rob Bee-hives;
It is impoſſible that I ſhald dye

By ſuch a lowly Vaſſall as thy ſelfe.
Thy words move Rage, and not remorſe in me:
I goe of Meſſage from the Queene to France:
I charge thee waft me ſafely croſſe the Channell.

Lieu. Water: W. Come Suffolke, I muſt waft thee to thy death.

Suf. Gelidus timor occupat artus, it is thee I feare.

Wal. Thou ſhalt have cauſe to feare before I leave thee.
What, are ye danted now? Now will ye ſtoope?

1. Gent. My gracious Lord intreat him, ſpeak him fair.

Suf. Suffolkes Imperiall tongue is ſterne and rough:
Vs'd to command, untaught to pleade for favour.
Farre be it, we ſhould honour ſuch as theſe
With humble ſuite: no, rather let my head
Stoope to the blocke, then theſe knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heaven; and to my King:
And ſooner dance upon a bloody pole,
Then ſtand uncover'd to the Vulgar Groome.
True-Nobility, is exempt from feare:
More can I beare, then you dare execute.

Lieu. Hale him away, and let him talke no more:
Come Souldiers, ſhew what cruelty ye can.

Suf. That this my death may never be forgot.
Great men oft dye by vilde Bezonians.
A Romane Sworder, and Bandetto ſlave
Murder'd ſweet Tully. Brutus Baſtard hand
Stab'd Iulius Cæſar. Savage Iſlanders
Pompey the Great, and Suffolke dyes by Pyrats.

Exit Walter with Suffolke.

Lieu. And as for theſe whoſe ranſome we have ſet,
It is our pleaſure one of them depart:
Therefore come you with us, and let him go.

Exit Lieutenant, and the reſt.

Manet the firſt Gent. Enter Walter with the body.

Wal. There let his head, and liveleſſe bodie lye, Vntill the Queene his Miſtris bury it. Exit Walter.

1.Gent. O barbarous and bloudy ſpectacle,
His body will I beare unto the King:
If he revenge it not, yet will his Friends,
So will the Queene, that living, held him deere. Exit.

Enter Bevis, and Iohn Holland.

Bevis. Come and get thee a ſword, though made of a Lath, they have bene up theſe two dayes.

Hol. They have the more neede to ſleepe now then.

Bevis. I tell thee, Iacke Cade the Cloathier, meanes to dreſſe the Common-wealh and turne it, and ſet a new nap upon it.

Hol. So he had need, 'tis thred-bare. Well, I ſay, it was never merrie world in England, ſince Gentlemen came up.

Bevis. O miſerable Age: Vertue is not regarded in Handy-crafts men.

Hol. The Nobilitie thinke ſcorne to goe in Leather Aprons.

Bevis. Nay more, the Kings Councell are no good Workemen.

Hol. True: and yet it is ſaid, Labour in thy Vocation: which is as much to ſay, as let the Magiſtrates be labouring men, and therefore ſhould we be Magiſtrates.

Bevis. Thou haſt hit it: for there's no better ſigne of a brave minde, then a hard hand.

Hol. I ſee them, I ſee them: There's Beſts Sonne, the Tanner of Wingham.

Bevis. He ſhall have the skinnes of our enemies, to make Dogges Leather of.

Hol. And Dicke the Butcher.

Bevis. Then is ſin ſtrucke downe like an Oxe, and iniquities throate cut like a Calfe.

Hol. And Smith the Weaver.

Bev. Argo, their thred of life is ſpun.

Hol. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drumme. Enter Cade, Dicke Butcher, Smith the Weaver, and a Sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. We Iohn Cade, ſo term'd of our ſuppoſed Father.

But. Or rather of ſtealing a Cade of Herrings.

Cade. For our enemies ſhall faile before us, inſpired with the ſpirit of putting down Kings and Princes. Command ſilence.

But. Silence.

Cade. My Father was a Mortimer.

But. He was an honeſt man, and a good Bricklayer.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet.

Butch. I knew her well, ſhe was a Midwife.

Cade. My wife deſcended of the Lacies.

But. She was indeed a Pedlers daughter, and ſold many Laces.

Weaver. But now of late, not able to travell with her furr'd Packe, ſhe waſhes buckes here at home.

Cade. Therefore am I of an honorable houſe.

But. I by my faith the field is honourable, and there was he borne, under a hedge: for his Father had never a houſe but the Cage.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Weaver. A muſt needs, for beggery is valiant.

Cade. I am able to endure much.

But. No queſtion of that: for I have ſeene him whipt three Market dayes together.

Cade. I feare neither ſword, nor fire.

Wea. He need not feare the ſword, for his Coate is of proofe.

But. But me thinkes he ſhould ſtand in feare of fire, being burnt i'th hand for ſtealing of Sheepe.

Cade. Be brave then, for your Captaine is Brave, and Vowes Reformation. There ſhall be in England, ſeven halfe peny Loaves ſold for a peny: the three hoop'd pot, ſhall have ten hoopes, and I will make it Fellony to drinke ſmall Beere. All the Realme ſhall be in Common, and in Cheapſide ſhall my Palfrey go to graſſe: and when I am King, as King I will be.

All. God ſave your Majeſtie.

Cade. I thanke you good people. There ſhall bee no mony, all ſhall eate and drinke on my ſcore, and I will apparrell them all in one Livery, that they may agree like Brothers, and worſhip me their Lord.

But. The firſt thing we do, let's kill all the Lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I meane to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent Lambe ſhould be made Parchment; that Parchment being ſcribl'd o're, ſhould undoe a man. Some ſay the Bee ſtings, but I ſay, 'tis the Bees wax: for I did but ſeale once to a thing, and I was never my owne man ſince. How now? Who's there?

Enter a Clearke.

Weaver. The Clearke of Chattam: hee can write and reade, and caſt accompt.

Cade. O monſtrous!

Wea. We tooke him ſetting boyes Coppies.

Cade. Here's a Villaine.

Wea. Ha's a Booke in his pocket with red Letters in't.

Cade. Nay then he is a Conjurer.

But. Nay, he can make Obligations, and write Court hand.

Cade. I am ſorry for't: The man is a proper man of mine Honor: unleſſe I finde him guilty, he ſhall not die. Come hither ſirrah, I muſt examine thee: What is thy name?

Clearke. Emanuell.

But. They uſe to write it on the top of Letters: 'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone: Doſt thou uſe to write thy name? Or haſt thou a marke to thy ſelfe, like an honeſt plain dealing man?

Clearke. Sir I thanke God, I have bin ſo well brought up, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confeſt: away with him: he is a Villaine and a Traitor.

Cade. Away with him I ſay: Hang him with his Pen and Inke-horne about his necke.

Exit one with the Clearke

Enter Michaell.

Mich. Where's our Generall?

Cade. Heere I am thou particular fellow.

Mich. Fly, fly, fly, Sir Humfrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the Kings Forces.

Cade. Stand villaine, ſtand, or Ile fell thee downe: he ſhall be encountred with a man as good as himſelfe. He is but a Knight, is a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equall him I will make my ſelfe a knight preſently; Riſe up Sir Iohn Mortimer. Now have at him.

Enter Sir Humfrey Stafford, and his Brother, with Drum and Soldiers.

Staf. Rebellious Hinds, the filth and ſcum of Kent,
Mark'd for the Gallowes: Lay your Weapons downe,
Home to your Cottages: forſake this Groome.
The King is mercifull, if you revolt.

Bro. But angry, wrathfull, and inclin'd to blood,
If you go forward: therefore yeeld, or dye.

Cade. As for theſe ſilken-coated ſlaves I paſſe not,
It is to you good people, that I ſpeake,
Over whom (in time to come) I hope to reigne;
For I am rightfull heyre unto the Crowne.

Staf. Villaine, thy Father was a Playſterer,
And thou thy ſelfe a Sheareman, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a Gardiner.

Bro. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this Edmond Mortimer Earle of March, married the Duke of Clarence daughter, did he not?

Staf. I ſir.

Cade. By her he had two Children at one birth.

Bro. That's falſe.

Cade. I, there's the queſtion; But I ſay, 'tis true:
The elder of them being put to nurſe,
Was by a begger-woman ſtolne away,
And ignorant of his birth and parentage,
Became a Bricklayer, when he came to age.
His ſonne am I, deny it if you can.

But. Nay, 'tis too true, therefore he ſhall be King.

Wea. Sir, he made a Chimney in my Fathers houſe, and the brickes are alive at this day to teſtifie it: therefore deny it not.

Staf. And will you credit this baſe Drudges Wordes, that ſpeakes he knowes not what?

All. I marry will we, therefore get you gone.

Bro. Iacke Cade, the D. of Yorke hath taught you this.

Cade. He lyes, for I invented it my ſelfe. Go too Sirrah, tell the King from me, that for his Fathers ſake Henry the fift, (in whoſe time boyes went to Span-counter for French Crownes) I am content he ſhall reigne, but Ile be Protector over him.

Butcher. And furthermore wee'le have the Lord Sayes head, for ſelling the Dukedome of Maine.

Cade. And good reaſon: for thereby is England main'd
And faine to goe with a ſtaffe, but that my puiſſance holds it up. Fellow-Kings, I tell you, that that Lord Say hath gelded the Commonwealth, and made it an Eunuch: and more then that, he can ſpeake French, and therefore he is a Traitor.

Staf. O groſſe and miſerable ignorance.

Cade. Nay anſwer if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go too then: I ask but this: Can he that ſpeaks with the tonge of an enemy, be a good Councellour, or no?

All. No, no, and therefore wee'l have his head.

Bro. Well, ſeeing gentle words will not prevayle,
Aſſayle them with ths Army of the King.

Staf. Herald away, and throughout every Towne,
Proclaime them Traytors that are up with Cade,
That thoſe which flye before the battell ends,
May even in their wives and Childrens ſight,
Be hang'd up for example at their doores:
And you that be the Kings friends follow me. Exit.

Cade. And you that love the Commons follow me:
Now ſhew your ſelves men, 'tis for Liberty.
We will not leave one Lord, one Gentleman:
Spare none, but ſuch as go in clouted ſhooen,
For they are thrifty honeſt men, and ſuch
As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

But. They are are all in order, and march toward us.

Cade. But then are we in order, when we are moſt out of order. Come, march forward.

Alarums to the fight, wherein both the Staffords are ſlaine.
Enter Cade and the reſt.

Cade. Where's Dicke, the Butcher of Aſhford?

But. Heere ſir.

Cade. They fell before thee like ſheepe and Oxen, and thou behaved'ſt thy ſelfe, as if thou hadſt beene in thine owne Slaughter-houſe: Therefore thus wil I reward thee, the Lent ſhall bee as long againe as it is, and thou ſhalt have a Licenſe to kill for a hundred lacking one.

But. I deſire no more.

Cade. And to ſpeake truth, thou deſerv'ſt no leſſe.
This Monument of the victorie will I beare, and the bodies ſhall be dragg'd at my horſe heeles, till I do come to London, where we will have the Maiors ſword born before us.

But. If we meane to thrive, and do good, breake open the Gaoles, and let out the Priſoners.

Cade. Feare not that I warrant thee. Come, let's march towards London. Exeunt.

Enter the King with a Supplication, and the Queene with Suffolkes head, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Say.

Queene. Oft have I heard that greefe ſoftens the mind,

And makes it fearefull and degenerate,
Thinke therefore on revenge, and ceaſe to weepe.
But who can ceaſe to weepe, and looke on this?
Here may his head lye on my throbbing breſt:
But where's the body that I ſhould imbrace?

Buc. What anſwer makes your Grace to the Rebells Supplication?

King. Ile ſend ſome holy Biſhop to intreate:
For God forbid, ſo many ſimple ſoules
Should periſh by the Sword. And I my ſelfe,
Rather then bloody warre ſhall cut them ſhort,
Will parly with Iacke Cade their Generall.
But ſtay, Ile reade it over once againe.

Qu. Ah barbarous villaines: Hath this lovely face,
Rul'd like a wandring Plannet over me,
And could it not inforce them to relent,
That were unworthy to behold the ſame?

King. Lord Say, Iacke Cade hath ſworne to have thy head.

Say. I, but I hope your Highneſſe ſhall have his.

King. How now Madam?
Stil lamenting and mourning for Suffolkes death?
I feare me (Love) if that I had beene dead,
Thou would'ſt not halfe have mourn'd ſo much for me.

Qu. No my Love, I ſhould not mourne, but dye for thee.

Enter a Meſſenger.

King. How now? What newes? Why com'ſt thou in ſuch haſte?

Meſ. The Rebels are in Southwarke: Fly my Lord:
Iacke Cade proclaimes himſelfe Lord Mortimer,
Deſcended from the Duke of Clarence houſe,
And calls your Grace Vſurper, openly,
And vowes to Crowne himſelfe in Weſtminſter.
His Army is a ragged multitude
Of Hinds and Pezants, rude and mercileſſe:
Sir Humfrey Stafford, and his Brothers death,
Hath given them heart and courage to proceede:
All Schollers, Lawiers, Courtiers, Gentlemen,
They call falſe Catterpillers, and intend their death.

Kin. Oh graceleſſe men: they know not what they do.

Buck. My gracious Lord, retire to Killingworth,
Vntill a power be rais'd to put them downe.

Qu. Ah were the Duke of Suffolke now alive,
Theſe Kentiſh Rebels ſhould be ſoone appeas'd.

King. Lord Say, the Traitors hate thee,
Therefore away with us to Killingworth.

Say. So might your Graces perſon be in danger:
The ſight of me is odious in their eyes:
And therefore in this City will I ſtay,
And live alone as ſecret as I may.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Iacke Cade hath gotten London-bridge,
The Citizens flye him and forſake their houſes:
The Raſcall people, thirſting after prey,
Ioyne with the Traitor, and they joyntly ſweare
To ſpoyle the City, and your Royall Court.

Buc. Then linger not my Lord, away, take horſe.

King. Come Margaret, God our hope will ſuccour us.

Qu. My hope is gone, now Suffolke is deceaſt.

King. Farewell my Lord, truſt not to Kentiſh Rebels.

Buc. Truſt no body for feare you be betraid.

Say. The truſt I have, is in mine innocence,
And therefore am I bold and reſolute. Exeunt.

Enter Lord Scales upon the Tower walking. Then enters two or thee Citizens below.

Scales. How now? Is Iacke Cade ſlaine?

1. Cit. No my Lord, nor likely to be ſlaine:
For they have wonne the Bridge,
Killing all thoſe that withſtand them:
The L. Maior craves ayd of your Honor from the Tower
To defend the City from the Rebels.

Scales. Such ayd as I can ſpare you ſhall command,
But I am troubled heere with them my ſelfe.
The Rebels have aſſay'd to win the Tower.
But get you into Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither I will ſend you Mathew Goffe.
Fight for your King, your Country, and your Lives,
And ſo farewell, for I muſt hence againe. Exeunt.

Enter Iacke Cade and the reſt, and ſtrikes his ſtaffe on London ſtone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer Lord of this City,
And heere ſitting upon London Stone,
I charge and command, that of the Cities coſt
The piſſing Conduit run nothing but Clarret Wine
The firſt yeere of our raigne.
And now henceforward it ſhall be Treaſon for any,
That calles me other then Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Souldier running.

Soul. Iacke Cade, Iacke Cade.

Cade. Knocke him downe there. They kill him.

But. If this Fellow be wiſe, hee'l never call yee Iacke Cade more, I thinke he hath a very faire warning.

Dicke. My Lord, there's an Army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come, then let's go fight with them:
But firſt, go and ſet London Bridge on fire,
And if you can, burne downe the Tower too.
Come, let's away. Exeunt omnes.

Alarums. Mathew Goffe is ſlaine, and all the reſt. Then enter Iacke Cade, with his Company,

Cade. So ſirs: now go ſome and pull down the Savoy:
Others to'th Innes of Court, downe with them all.

But. I have a ſuit unto your Lordſhip.

Cade. Be it a Lordſhippe, thou ſhalt have it for that word.

But. Onely that the Lawes of England may come out of your mouth.

Iohn. Maſſe 'twill be ſore Law then, for he was thruſt in the mouth with a Speare, and 'tis not whole yet.

Smith. Nay Iohn, it will be ſtinking Law, for his breath ſtinkes with toſted Cheeſe.

Cade. I have thought upon it, it ſhall bee ſo. Away, burne all the Records of the Realme, my mouth ſhall bee the Parliament of England.

Iohn. Then we are like to have biting Statutes
Vnleſſe his teeth be pull'd out.

Cade. And hence-forward all things ſhall be in Common. Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. My Lord, a prize, a prize, heeres the Lord Say, which ſold the Townes in France. He that made us pay one and twentie Fifteenes, and one ſhilling to the pound, the laſt Subſidie.

Enter George with the Lord Say.

Cade. Well, he ſhall be beheaded for it ten times: Ah thou Say, thou Surge, nay thou Buckram Lord, now art thou within point-blanke of our Iuriſdiction Regall. What canſt thou anſwer to my Majeſty, for giving up of Normandie unto Mounſier Baſimecu, the Dolphin of France? Be it knowne unto thee by theſe preſence, even the preſence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the Beeſome that muſt ſweepe the Court cleane of ſuch filth as thou art: Thou haſt moſt traitorouſly corrupted the youth of the Realme, in erecting a Grammar Schoole: and whereas before, our Fore-fathers had no other Bookes but the Score and the Tally, thou haſt cauſed printing to be us'd, and contrary to the King, his Crowne, and Dignity, thou haſt built a Paper-Mill. It willbee proved to thy Face, that thou haſt men about thee, that uſually talke of a Nowne and a Verbe, and ſuch abominable wordes, as no Chriſtian eare can endure to heare. Thou haſt appointed Iuſtices of Peace, to call poore men before them, about matters they were not able to anſwere. Moreover, thou haſt put them in priſon, and becauſe thy could not reade, thou haſt hang'd them, when (indeed) onely for that cauſe they have beene moſt worthy to live. Thou doſt ride on a foot-cloth, doſt thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou ought'ſt not to let thy horſe weare a Cloake, when honeſter men then thou go in their Hoſe and Doublets.

Dicke. And worke in their ſhirt too, as my ſelfe for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent.

Dic. What ſay you of Kent.

Say. Nothing but this: 'Tis bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him, away with him, he ſpeakes Latine.

Say. Heare me but ſpeake, and beare me wher'e you will:
Kent in the Commentaries Cæſar writ,
Is term'd the civel'ſt place of all this Iſle:
Sweet is the Country, becauſe full of Riches,
The People Liberall, Valiant, Active, Wealthy,
Which makes me hope thou art not void of pitty.
I ſold not Maine, I loſt not Normandie,
Yet to recover them would loſe my life:
Iuſtice with favour have I alwayes done,
Prayers and Teares have mov'd me, Gifts could never;
When have I ought exacted at your hands?
Kent to maintaine, the King, the Realme and you,
Large gifts have I beſtow'd on learned Clearkes,
Becauſe my Booke preferr'd me to the King.
And ſeeing Ignorance is the curſe of God,
Knowledge the Wing wherewith we flye to heaven,
Vnleſſe you be poſſeſt with divelliſh ſpirits,
You cannot but forbeare to murther me:
This Tongue hath parlied unto Forraigne Kings
For your behoofe.

Cade. Tut, when ſtruck'ſt thou one blow in the field?

Say. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I ſtruck
Thoſe that I neve ſaw, and ſtrucke them dead.

Geo. O monſtrous Coward! What, to come behinde Folkes?

Say. Theſe cheeks are pale with watching for your good.

Cade. Give him a box o'th'eare, and that will make'em red againe.

Say. Long ſitting to determine poore mens cauſes,
Hath made me full of ſickneſſe and diſeaſes.

Cade. Ye ſhall have a hempen Candle then, & the help of a hatchet.

Dicke. Why doſt thou quiver man?

Say. The Palſie, and not feare provokes me.

Cade. Nay he noddes at us, as who ſhould ſay, Ile be even with you. Ile ſee if his head will ſtand ſteddier on a pole, or no: Take him away and behead him.

Say. Tell me: wherein have I offended moſt?
Have I affected wealth, or honor? Speake.
Are my Cheſts fill'd up with extorted Gold?
Is my apparrell ſumptuous to behold?
Whom have I injur'd, that ye ſeeke my death?
Theſe hands are free from guiltleſſe bloodſhedding,
This breſt from harbouring foule deceitfull thoughts.
O let me live.

Cade. I feele remorſe in my ſelfe with his words: but Ile bridle it: he ſhall dye, and it be but for pleading ſo well for his life. Away with him, he ha's a Familiar under his Tongue, he ſpeake not a Gods name. Goe, take him away I ſay, and ſtrike off his head preſently, and then breake into his Sonne in Lawes houſe, Sir Iames Cromer, and ſtrike off his head, aud bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It ſhall be done.

Say. Ah Countrimen; If when you make your prai'rs,
God ſhould be ſo obdurate as your ſelves:
How would it fare with your departed ſoules?
And therefore yet relent, and ſave my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye: the proudeſt Peere in the Realme, ſhall not weare a head on his ſhoulders, unleſſe he pay me tribute: there ſhall not a maid be married, but ſhe ſhall pay to me her Maydenhead ere they have it: Men ſhall hold of mee in Capite. And we charge and command, that their wives be as free as heart can wiſh, or tongue can tell.

Dicke. My Lord,
When ſhall we go to Cheapſide, and take up commodities upon our billes?

Cade. Marry preſently.

All. O brave.

Enter one with the heads.

Cade. But is not this braver:
Let them kiſſe one another: For they lov'd well
When they were alive. Now part them againe,
Leaſt they conſult about the giving up
Of ſome more Townes in France. Soldiers,
Deferre the ſpoyle of the Citic untill night;
For with theſe borne before us, in ſteed of Maces,
Will we ride through the ſtreets, and at every Corner
Have them kiſſe. Away. Exit.

Alarum, and Retreat. Enter againe Cade, and all his rabblement.

Cade. Vp Fiſh-ſtreete; downe Saint Magnes corner, kill and knocke downe, throw them into Thames:

Sound a parley.

What noyſe is this I heare?
Dare any be ſo bold to ſound Retreat or Parley
When I command them kill?

Enter Buckingham, and old Clifford.

Buc. I heere they be, that dare and will diſturb thee:
Know Cade, we come Ambaſſadors from the King
Vnto the Commons, whom thou haſt miſled,
And heere pronounce free pardon to them all,
That will forſake thee, and go home in peace.

Clif. What ſay ye Countrimen, will ye relent
And yeeld to mercy, whil'ſt 'tis offered you,
Or let a rabble leade you to your deaths.
Who loves the King, and will imbrace his pardon,
Fling up his cap and ſay, God ſave his Majeſtie;
Who hateth him, and honors not his Father,
Henry the fift, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us, and paſſe by.

All. God ſave the King, God ſave the King,

Cade, What Buckingham and Clifford are ye ſo brave? And you baſe Pezants, doe ye beleeve him, will you needs be hang'd with your Pardons about your neckes? Hath my ſword therefore broke through London gates, that you ſhould leave me at the white-heart in Southwarke. I thought ye would never have given out theſe Armes til you had revovered your ancient Freedome: but you are all Recreants and Daſtards, and delight to live in ſlaverie to the Nobility. Let them breake your backes with burthens, take your houſes over your heads, raviſh your Wives and Daughters before your faces. For me, I will make ſhift for one, and ſo Gods Curſſe light uppon you all.

All. Wee'l follow Cade,
Wee'l follow Cade.

Clif. Is Cade the ſonne of Henry the fift,
That thus you do exclaime you'l go with him.
Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
And make the meaneſt of you Earles and Dukes?
Alas, he hath no home, no place to flye too:
Nor knowes he how to live, but by the ſpoyle,
Vnleſſe by robbing of your Friends, and us.
Wer't not a ſhame, that whilſt you live at iarre,
The fearfull French, whom you late vanquiſhed
Should make a ſtart ore-ſeas, and vanquiſh you?
Me thinkes alreadie in this civill broyle,
I ſee them Lording it in London ſtreets,
Crying Villiago unto all they meete.
Better ten thouſand baſe-borne Cades miſcarry,
Then you ſhould ſtoope unto a Frenchmans mercy.
To France, to France, and get what you have loſt:
Spare England, for it is your Native Coaſt:
Henry hath mony, you are ſtrong and manly:
God on our ſide, doubt not of Victorie.

All. A Clifford, a Clifford,
Wee'l follow the King and Clifford.

Cade. Was ever Feather ſo lightly blowne too & fro, as this multitude? The name of Henry the fift, hales them to an hundred miſchiefes, and makes them leave me deſolate. I ſee them lay their heads together to ſurprize me. My ſword make way for me, for heere is no ſtaying: in deſpight of the divels and hell, have through the verie middeſt of you, and heavens and honor be witneſſe, that no want of reſolution in mee, but onely my Followers baſe and ignominious treaſons, make me betake mee to my heeles. Exit.

Buck. What, is he fled? Go ſome and follow him,
And he that brings his head unto the King,
Shall have a thouſand Crownes for his reward.
Exeunt ſome of them.

Follow me ſouldiers, wee'l deviſe a meane,
To reconcile you all unto the King. Exeunt omnes.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King, Queene, and Somerſet on the Tarras.

King. Was ever King that joy'd an earthly Throne,
And could command no more content then I?
No ſooner was I crept out of my Cradle,
But I was made a King, at nine moneths olde.
Was never ſubject long'd to be a King,
As I do long and wiſh to be a Subject.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buc. Health and glad tydings to your Majeſty.

Kin. Why Buckingham, is the Traitor Cade ſurpris'd?
Or is he but retir'd to make him ſtrong?

Enter Multitudes with Halters about their Neckes.

Clif. He is fled my Lord, and all his powers do yeeld,
And humbly thus with halters on their neckes,
Expect your Highneſſe doome of life, or death.

King. Then heaven ſet ope thy everlaſting gates,
To entertaine my vowes of thankes and praiſe.
Souldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,
And ſhew'd how well you love your Prince & Country:
Continue ſtill in this ſo good a minde,
And Henry though he be infortunate,
Aſſure your ſelves will never be unkinde:
And ſo with thankes, and pardon to you all,
I do diſmiſſe you to your ſeverall Countries.

All. God ſave the King, God ſave the King.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Pleaſe it your Grace to be advertiſed,
The Duke of Yorke is newly come from Ireland,
And with a puiſſant and a mighty power
Of Gallow-glaſſes and ſtout Kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array,
And ſtill proclaimeth as he comes along,
His Armies are onely to remove from thee
The Duke of Somerſet, whom he tearmes a Traitor.

King. Thus ſtands my ſtate, 'twixt Cade and Yorke diſtreſt,
Like to a Ship, that having ſcap'd a Tempeſt,
Is ſtraight way claimd, and boorded with a Pyrate,
But now is Cade driven backe, his men diſpierc'd,
And now is Yorke in Armes, to ſecond him.
I pray thee Buckingham go and meet him,
And aske him what's the reaſon of theſe Armes:
Tell him, Ile ſend Duke Edmund to the Tower,
And Somerſet we will commit thee thither,
Vntill his Army be diſmiſt from him.

Somerſet. My Lord,
Ile yeeld my ſelfe to priſon willingly,
Or unto death, to do my Countrey good.

King. In any caſe, be not too rough in termes,
For he is fierce, and cannot brooke hard Language.

Buc. I will my Lord, and doubt not ſo to deale,
As all things ſhall redound unto your good.

King. Come wife, let's in, and learne to governe better,
For yet may England curſe my wretched reigne.
Exeunt.

Enter Cade.

Cade. Fye on Ambition: fie on my ſelfe, that have a ſword, and yet am ready to famiſh. Theſe five dayes have I hid me in theſe Woods, and durſt not peepe out, for all the Country is laid for me: but now am I hungry, that if I might have a Leaſe of my life for a thouſand yeares, I could ſtay no longer. Wherefore on a Bricke wall have I climb'd into this Garden, to ſee if I can eate Graſſe, or picke a Sallet another while, which is not amiſſe to coole a mans ſtomacke this hot weather: and I think this word Sallet was borne to do me good; for many a time but for a Sallet, my braine-pan had beene cleft with a brown Bill; and many a time when I have beene dry, & bravely martching, it hath ſerv'd me inſteede of a quart pot to drinke in: and now the word Sallet muſt ſerve me to feed on.

Enter Iden.

Iden. Lord who would live turmoyld in the Court,
And may enjoy ſuch quiet walkes as theſe?
This ſmall inheritance my Father left me,
Contenteth me, and worth a Monarchy.
I ſeeke not to waxe great by others warning,
Or gather wealth I care not with what envy:
Sufficeth, that I have maintaines my ſtate,
And ſends the poore well pleaſed from my gate.

Cade. Heere's the Lord of the ſoile come to ſeize mee for a ſtray, for entring his Fee-ſimple without leave. A Villaine, thou wilt betray me, and get a 1000. Crownes of the King by carrying my head to him, but Ile make thee eate Iron like an Oſtridge, and ſwallow my Sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part.

Iden. Why rude Companion, whatſoere thou be,
I know thee not, why then ſhould I betray thee?
Is't not enough to breake into my Garden,
And like a theefe to come to rob my grounds:
Climbing my walles in ſpight of me the Owner,
But thou wilt brave me with theſe ſawcie tearmes?

Cade. Brave thee? I by the beſt blood that ever was broach'd, and beard thee to. Looke on me well, I have eate no meate theſe five dayes, yet come thou and thy five men, and if I doe not leave you all as dead as a doore naile, I pray God I may never eate graſſe more.

Iden. Nay, it ſhall ne're be ſayd, while England ſtands,
That Alexander Iden an Eſquire of Kent,
Tooke oddes to combate a poore famiſht man.
Oppoſe thy ſtedfaſt gazing eyes to mine,
See if thou canſt out-face me with thy lookes:
Set limbe to limbe, and thou art farre the leſſer:
Thy hand is but a finger to my fiſt,
Thy legge a ſticke compared with this Truncheon,
My foote ſhall fight with all the ſtrength thou haſt,
And if mine arme be heaved in the Ayre,
Thy grave is digg'd alreadie in the earth:
As for words, whoſe greatneſſe anſwer's words,
Let this my ſword report what ſpeech forbeares.

Cade. By my Valour: the moſt compleate Champion that ever I heard. Steele, if thou turne the edge, or, cut not out the burly bon'd Clowne in chaines of Beefe, ere thou ſleepe in thy Sheath, I beſeech Iove on my knees thou mayſt be turn'd to Hobnailes.

Heere they fight.

O I am ſlaine, Famine and no other hath ſlaine me, let ten thouſand divelles come againſt me, and give me but the ten meales I have loſt, and I'de defie them all. Wither Garden, and be henceforth a burying place to all that do dwell in this houſe, becauſe the unconquered ſoule of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I have ſlain, that monſtrous traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deede,
And hang thee o're my Tombe, when I am dead.
Ne're ſhall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou ſhalt weare it as a Heralds coate,
To emblaze the Honor thy Maſter got.

Cade. Iden farewell, and be proud of thy victory: Tell Kent from me, ſhe hath loſt her beſt man, and exhort all the World to be Cowards: for I that never feared any, am vanquiſhed by famine, not by Valour. Dyes.

Id. How much thou wrong'ſt me heaven be my judge;
Die damned Wretch, the curſe of her that bare thee:
And as I thruſt thy body in with my ſword,
So wiſh I, I might thruſt thy ſoule to hell.
Hence will I dragge thee headlong by the heeles
Unto a dunghill, which ſhall be thy grave,
And there cut off thy moſt ungracions head,
Which I will beare in triumph to the King,
Leaving thy trunke for Crowes to feed upon. Exit.

Enter Yorke, and his Army of Iriſh, with Drumme and Colours.

Yor. From Ireland thus comes Yorke to claim his right,
And plucke the Crowne from feeble Henries head.
Ring, Belles alowd, burne Bonfires cleare and bright
To entertaine great Englands lawfull King.
Ah Sancta Majeſtas! who would not buy thee deere?
Let them obey, that knowes not how to Rule.
This hand was made to handle nought but Gold.
I cannot give due action to my words,
Except a Sword or Scepter ballance it.
A Scepter ſhall it have, have I a ſoule,
On which Ile toſſe the Fleure-de-Luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom have we heere? Buckingham to diſturbe me?
The king hath ſent him ſure: I muſt diſſemble.

Buc. Yorke, if thou meaneſt well, I greet thee well.

Yor. Humfrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.
Art thou à Meſſenger, or come of pleaſure.

Buc. A Meſſenger from Henry, our dread Liege,
To know the reaſon of theſe Armes in peace.
Or why, thou being a Subject, as I am,
Againſt thy Oath, and true Allegeance ſworne,
Should raiſe ſo great a power without his leave?
Or dare to bring thy Force ſo neere the Court?

Yor. Scarſe can I ſpeake, my Choler is ſo great.
Oh I could hew up Rockes, and fight with Flint,
I am ſo angry at theſe abject termes.
And now like Aiax Telamonius,
On Sheepe or Oxen could I ſpend my furie.
I am farre better borne then is the King:
More like a King, more Kingly in my thoughts.
But I muſt make faire weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weake, and I more ſtrong.
O Buckingham, I prethee pardon me,
That I have given no anſwer all this while:
My minde was troubled with deepe Melancholly.
The cauſe why I have brought this armie hither,

Is to remove proud Somerſet from the King,
Seditious to his Grace, and to the State.
Buc. That is too much preſumption on thy part:
But if thy Armes be to no other end,
The King hath yeelded unto thy demand:
The Duke of Somerſet is in the Tower.
Yorke. Vpon thine Honor is he Priſoner?
Buc. Vpon mine Honor he is Priſoner?
Yorke. Then Buckingham, I do diſmiſſe my Powers.
Souldiers I thanke you all: diſperſe your ſelves:
Meet me to morrow in S. Georges Field,
You ſhall have pay, and every thing you wiſh.
And let my Soveraigne, vertuous Henrie,
Command my eldeſt ſonne, nay all my ſonnes,
As pledges of my Fealtie and Love,
Ile ſend them all as willing as I live:
Lands, Goods, Horſe, Armor, any thing I have
Is his to uſe, ſo Somerſet may dye.
Buc, Yorke, I commend this kinde ſubmiſſion,
We twaine will go into his Highneſſe Tent.

Enter King and Ateendants.

King. Buckingham, doth Yorke intend no harme to us,
That thus he marcheth with thee Arme in Arme?
Yorke. In all ſubmiſſion and humility,
Yorke doth preſent himſelfe unto your Highneſſe.
K. Then what intends theſe forces thou doſt bring?
Yor. To heave the Traitor Somerſet from hence,
And fight againſt that monſtrous Rebell Cade,
Whom ſince I heard to be diſcomfited.

Enter Iden with Cades head.

Iden. If one ſo rude, and of ſo meane condition
May paſſe into the preſence of a King:
Loe, I preſent your Grace a Traitors head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combate ſlew.
King. The head of Cade? Great God, how juſt art thou?
Oh let me view his Viſage being dead,
That living wrought me ſuch exceeding trouble.
Tell me my Friend, art thou the man that ſlew him?
Iden. I was, an't like your Majeſtie.
King. How art thou call'd? And what is thy degree?
Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name,
A poore Eſquire of Kent, that loves the King.
Buc. So pleaſe it you my Lord, 'twere not amiſſe
He were created Knight for his good ſervice.
King. Iden, kneele downe, riſe up a Knight:
We give thee for reward a thouſand Markes,
And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.
Idan. May Iden live to merit ſuch a bountie,
And never live but true unto his Liege.

Enter Queene and Somerſet.

K. See Buckingham, Somerſet comes with th' Queene,
Go bid her hide him quickly from the Duke.
Qu. For thouſand Yorkes he ſhall not hide his head,
But boldly ſtand, and front him to his face,
Yor. How now? is Somerſet at libertie?
Then Yorke unlooſe thy long impriſoned thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equall with thy heart.
Shall I endure the ſight of Somerſet?
Falſe King, why haſt thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brooke abuſe?
King did I call thee? no, thou art no King:
Not fit to governe and rule multitudes,
Which durſt not, no nor canſt not rule a Traitor.
That Head of thine doth not become a Crowne:
Thy hand is made to graſpe a Palmers ſtaffe,
And not to grace an awefull Princely Scepter.
That Gold, muſt round engirt the browes of mine,
Whoſe Smile and Frowne, like Achilles Speare
Is able with the change, to kill and cure.
Heere is a hand to hold a Scepter up,
And with the ſame to acte controlling Lawes:
Give place: by heaven thou ſhalt rule no more
O're him, whom heaven created for thy Ruler.
Som. O monſtrous Traitor! I arreſt thee Yorke
Of Capitall Treaſon 'gainſt the King and Crowne:
Obey audacious Traitor, kneele for Grace.
York. Wold'ſt have me kneele? Firſt let me aske of thee,
If they can brooke I bow a knee to man:
Sirrah, call in my ſonnes to be my baile:
I know ere they will let me goe to Ward,
They'l pawne their Swords for my infranchiſement.
Qu. Call hither Clifford, bid him come amaine,
To ſay, if that the Baſtard boyes of Yorke
Shall be the Surety for their Traitor Father.
Yorke. O blood-beſpotted Neapolitan,
Out-caſt of Naples, Englands bloody Scourge:
The ſonnes of Yorke, thy betters in their birth,
Shall be their Fathers baile, and bane to thoſe
That for my Surety will refuſe the Boyes.

Enter Edward and Richard.

See where they come, Ile warrant they'l make it good.

Enter Clifford.

Qu. And here comes Clifford to deny their baile.
Clif. Health and all happineſſe to my Lord the King.
Yor. I thanke thee Clifford: Say, what newes with thee?
Nay, do not fright me with an angry looke:
We are thy Soveraigne Clifford, kneele againe;
For thy miſtaking ſo, We pardon thee.
Clif. This is my King Yorke, I do not miſtake,
But thou miſtakeſt me much to thinke I do,
To Bedlem with him, is the man growne mad?
King. I Clifford, a Bedlem and ambitious humor
Makes him oppoſe himſelfe againſt his King.
Clif. He is a Traitor, let him to the Tower,
And crop away that factious pate of his.
Qu. He is arreſted, but will not obey:
His ſonnes (he ſayes) ſhall give their words for him.
Yor. Will you not ſonnes?
Edw. I Noble Father, if our words will ſerue.
Rich. And if words will not, then our Weapons ſhall.
Clif. Why what a brood of Traitors have we heere?
Yor. Looke in a Glaſſe, and call thy Image ſo.
I am thy King, and thou a falſe-heart Traitor:
Call hither to the ſtake my two brave Beares,
That with the very ſhaking of their Chaines,
They may aſtoniſh theſe fell-lurking Curres:
Bid Salisbury and Warwicke come to me.

Enter the Earles of Warwicke, and Salisbury.

Clif. Are theſe thy Beares? Wee'l baite thy Bears to death,
And manacle the Berard in their Chaines,
If thou dar'ſt bring them to the bayting place.
Rich. Oft have I ſeene a hot ore-weening Curre,
Run backe and bite, becauſe he was with-held,
Who being ſuffer'd with the Beares fell paw,
Hath clapt his taile, betweene his legges and cride,
And ſuch a peece of ſervice will you do,

If you oppoſe your ſelves to match Lord Warwicke.
Clif. Hence heape of wrath, foule indigeſted lumpe,
As crooked in thy manners, as thy ſhape.
Yorke. Nay we ſhal heate you thoroughly anon.
Clif. Take heede leaſt by your heate you burne your ſelves.
King. Why Warwicke, hath thy knee forgot to bow?
Old Salisbury, ſhame to thy ſilver haire,
Thou mad miſleader of thy brain-ſicke ſonne,
What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the Ruffian?
And ſeeke for ſorrow with thy ſpectacles?
Oh where is Faith? Oh, where is Loyalty?
If it be baniſht from the froſty head,
Where ſhall it finde a harbour in the earth?
Wilt thou go digge a grave to finde out Warre,
And ſhame thine honourable age with blood?
Why art thou old, and want'ſt experience?
Or wherefore doeſt abuſe it, if thou haſt it?
For ſhame in dutie bend thy knee to me,
That bowes unto the grave with milckie age.
Sal. My Lord, I have conſidered with my ſelfe
The Title of this moſt renowned Duke;
And in my conſcience, do repute his grace
The rightfull heire to Englands Royall ſeate.
King. Haſt thou not ſworne Allegeance unto me?
Sal. I have.
Ki. Canſt thou diſpenſe with heaven for ſuch an oath?
Sal. It is great ſinne, to ſweare unto a ſinne:
But greater ſinne to keepe a ſinfull oath:
Who can be bound by any ſolemne Vow
To doe a murd'rous deede, to rob a man,
To force a ſpotleſſe Virgins Chaſtitie,
To reave the Orphan of his Patrimonie,
To wring the Widdow from her cuſtom'd right,
And have no other reaſon for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a ſolemne Oath?
Qu. A ſubtle Traitor needs no Sophiſter.
King. Call Buckingham, and bid him arme himſelfe.
Yorke. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou haſt,
I am reſolv'd for death and dignity.
Old Clif. The firſt I warrant thee, if dreames prove true.
War. You were beſt to go to bed, and dreame againe,
To keepe thee from the Tempeſt of the field.
Old Clif. I am reſolv'd to beare a greater ſtorme,
Then any thou canſt conjure up to day:
And that Ile write upon thy Burgonet,
Might I but know thee by thy houſes Badge.
War. Now by my Fathers badge, old Nevils Creſt,
The rampant Beare chain'd to the ragged ſtaffe,
This day Ile weare aloft my Burgonet,
As on a Mountaine top, the Cedar ſhewes,
That keepes his leaves in ſpight of any ſtorme,
Even ſo affright thee with the view thereof.
Old Clif. And from thy Burgonet Ile rend thy Beare,
And tread it under foot with all contempt,
Deſpight the Bearard, that protects the Beare.
Yo. Clif. And ſo to Armes victorious noble Father,
To quell the Rebels, and their Complices.
Rich. Fie, Charitie for ſhame, ſpeake not in ſpight,
For you ſhall ſup with Ieſu Chriſt to night.
Yo. Clif. Foule ſtigmaticke, that's more then thou canſt tell.
Rich. If not in heaven, you'l ſurely ſup in hell. Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwicke calles:
And if thou doſt not hide thee from the Beare,
Now when the angrie Trumpet ſounds alarum,
And dead mens cries do fill the emptie ayre,
Clifford I ſay, come forth and fight with me,
Proud Northerne Lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwicke is hoarſe with calling thee to armes.

Enter Yorke.

War. How now my Noble Lord? What all a-foot.
Yor. The deadly handed Clifford ſlew my ſteed:
But match to match I have encountred him,
And made a prey for Carrion Kytes and Crowes
Even of the bonnie beaſt he loved ſo well.

Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.
Yor. Hold Warwicke: ſeek thee out ſome other chace,
For I my ſelfe muſt hunt this Deere to death.
War. Then nobly Yorke, 'tis for a Crown thou fighteſt:
As I intend Clifford to thrive to day,
It greeves my ſoule to leave thee unaſſail'd. Exit War.
Clif. What ſeeſt thou in me Yorke?
Why doſt thou pauſe?
Yorke. With thy brave bearing ſhould I be in love,
But that thou art ſo faſt mine enemie.
Clif. Nor ſhould thy proweſſe want praiſe and eſteeme,
But that 'tis ſhewne ignobly, and in Treaſon.
Yorke. So let it helpe me againſt thy ſword,
As I in juſtice, and true right expreſſe it.
Clif. My ſoule and bodie on the action both.
Yorke. A dreadfull lay, addreſſe thee inſtantly.
Clif. La fin Corronne les oevres. Dies.
Yor. Thus Warre hath given thee peace, for yͧ art ſtill,
Peace with his ſoule, heaven if it be thy will.

Enter young Clifford.

Clif. Shame and Confuſion all is on the rout,
Feare frames diſorder, and diſorder wounds
Where it ſhould guard. O Warre, thou ſonne of hell,
Whom angry heavens do make their miniſter,
Throw in the frozen boſomes of our part,
Hot Coales of Vengeance. Let no Souldiers flye.
He that is truely dedicate to Warre,
Hath no ſelfe-love: nor he that loves himſelfe,
Hath not eſſentially, but by circumſtance
The name of Valour. O let the vile world end,
And the premiſed Flames of the Laſt day,
Knit earth and heaven together.
Now let the generall Trumpet blow his blaſt,
Particularities, and petty ſounds
To ceaſe. Was't thou ordained (O deere Father)
To loſe thy youth in peace, and to atchieve
The Silver Livery of adviſed Age,
And in thy Reverence, and thy Chayre-dayes, thus
To dye in Ruffian battell? Even at this ſight,
My heart is turn'd to ſtone: and while 'tis mine,
It ſhall be ſtony. Yorke, not our old men ſpares:
No more will I their Babes, Teares Virginall,
Shall be to me, even as the Dew to Fire,
And Beautie, that the Tyrant oft reclaimes,
Shall to my flaming wrath, be Oyle and Flax:
Henceforth, I will not have to doe with pitty,
Meet I an infant of the houſe of Yorke,
Into as many gobbits will I cut it
As wilde Medea yong Abſirtis did.
In cruelty, will I ſeeke out my Fame.
Come thou new ruine of olde Cliffords houſe:
As did Æneas old Anchiſes beare,
So beare I thee upon my manly ſhouldiers:
But then, Æneas bare a living loade;

Nothing ſo heavy as theſe woes of mine.

Enter Richard, and Somerſet to fight.

Rich. So lye thou there:
For underneath an Ale-houſe paltry ſigne,
The Caſtle in S. Albons, Somerſet
Hath made the Wizard famous in his death:
Sword, hold thy temper; Heart, be wrathfull ſtill:
Prieſts pray for enemies, but Princes kill.

Fight. Excurſions.

Enter King, Queene, and others.

Qu. Away my Lord, you are ſlow, for ſhame away.

King. Can we out-run the Heavens? Good Margaret ſtay.

Qu. What are you made of? You'l nor fight nor flye:
Now is it manhood, wiſedome, and defence,
To give the enemy way, and to ſecure us
By what we can, which can no more but flye.

Alarum a farre off.

If you be tane, we then ſhould ſee the bottome
Of all our Fortunes: but if we haply ſcape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We ſhall to London get, where you are lov'd,
And where this breach now in our fortunes made
May readily be ſtopt.

Enter Clifford.

Clif. But that my heart's on future miſchiefe ſet,
I would ſpeake blaſphemy ere bid you fly:
But flye you muſt: Vncureable diſcomfite
Reignes in the hearts of all our preſent parts.
Away for your releiſe, and we will live
To ſee their day, and them our Fortune give.
Away my Lord, away. Exeunt.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Yorke, Richard, Warwicke, and Souldiers, with Drum & Colours.

Yorke. Of Salsbury, who can report of him,
That winter Lyon, who in rage forgets
Aged contuſions, and all bruſh of Time:
And like a Gallant, in the brow of youth,
Repaires him with Occaſion. This happy day
Is not it ſelfe, nor have we wonne one foot,
If Salsbury be loſt.

Rich. My Noble Father:
Three times to day I hope him to his horſe,
Three times beſtrid him: Thrice I led him off,
Perſwaded him from any further act:
But ſtill where danger was, ſtill there I met him,
And like rich hangings in a homely houſe,
So was his will, in his old feeble body.
But Noble as he is, looke where he comes.

Enter Saliſbury.

Sal. Now by my Sword, well haſt thou fought to day:
By'th'Maſſe ſo did we all. I thanke you Richard.
God knowes how long it is I have to live:
And it hath pleas'd him that three times to day
You have defended me from imminent death.
Well Lords, we have not got that which we have,
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being oppoſites of ſuch repayring Nature.

Yorke. I know our ſafety is to follow them
For (as I heare) the King is fled to London,
To call a preſent Court of Parliament.
Let us purſue him ere the Writs go forth.
What ſayes Lord Warwicke, ſhall we after them?

War. After them? nay before them if we can:
Now by my hand (Lords) 'twas a glorious day.
Saint Albons battell wonne by famous Yorke,
Shall be eterniz'd in all Age to come.
Sound Drumme and Trumpets, and to London all,
And more ſuch dayes as theſe, to us befall. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The third Part of King Henry the Sixt,

vvith the death of the Duke of YORKE.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Alarum.

Enter Plantagenet, Edward, Norfolke, Mountague, Warwicke, and Souldiers.

Warwicke.

I Wonder how the King eſcap'd our hands?

Pl. While we purſu'd the Horſmen of ÿ North,
He ſlyly ſtole away, and left his men:
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,
Whoſe Warlike eares could never brouke retreat,
Chear'd up the drouping Army, and himſelfe.
Lord Clifford and Lord Stafford all a-breſt
Charg'd our maine Battailes Front: and breaking in,
Were by the Swords of common Souldiers ſlaine.

Edw. Lord Staffords Father, Duke of Buckingham,
Is either ſlaine or wounded dangerous.
I cleft his Beaver with a down-right blow:
That this is true (Father) behold his blood.

Mount. And Brother, here's the Earle of Wiltſhires blood,
Whom I encountred as the Battels joyn'd.

Rich. Speake thou for me, and tell them what I did.

Plan. Richard hath beſt deſerv'd of all my ſonnes:
But is your Grace dead, my Lord of Somerſet?

Nor. Such hope have all the line of Iohn of Gaunt.

Rich. Thus do I hope to ſhake King Henries head.

Warw. And ſo doe I, victorious Prince of Yorke.
Before I ſee thee ſeated in that Throne,
Which now the Houſe of Lancaſter uſurpes,
I vow by Heaven, theſe eyes ſhall never cloſe.
This is the Pallace of the fearefull King,
And this the Regall Seat: poſſeſſe it Yorke,
For this is thine, and not King Henries Heires.

Plant. Aſſiſt me then, ſweet Warwicke, and I will,
For hither we have broken in by force.

Norf. Wee'le all aſſiſt you: he that flyes, ſhall dye.

Plant. Thanks gentle Norfolke, ſtay by me my Lords,
And Souldiers ſtay and lodge by me this Night.

They goe up.

Warw. And when the King comes, offer him no violence,
Vnleſſe he ſeeke to thruſt you out perforce.

Plant. The Queene this day here holds her Parliament,
But little thinkes we ſhall be of her counſaile,
By words or blowes here let us winne our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's ſtay within this Houſe.

Warw. The bloody Parliament ſhall this be call'd,
Vnleſſe Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, be King,
And baſhful Henry depos'd, whoſe Cowardize,
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

Plant. Then leave me not, my Lords be reſolute,
I meane to take poſſeſſion of my right.

Warw. Neither the King, nor he that loves him beſt,
The prowdeſt he that holds up Lancaſter,
Dares ſtirre a Wing, if Warwicke ſhake his Bells.
Ile plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares:
Reſolve thee Richard, clayme the Engliſh Crowne.

Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Weſtmerland, Exeter, and the reſt.

Henry. My Lords, looke where the ſturdy Rebell ſits,
Even in the Chayre of State: belike he meanes,
Backt by the power of Warwicke, that falſe Peere,
To aſpire unto the Crowne, and reigne as King.
Earle of Northumberland, he ſlew thy Father,
And thine, Lord Clifford, & you both have vow'd revenge
On him, his ſonnes, his favorites, and his friends.

Northumb. If I be not, Heavens be reveng'd on me.

Clifford. The hope thereof, makes Clifford mourne in Steele.

Weſtm. What, ſhall we ſuffer this? let's pluck him down,
My heart for anger burnes, I cannot brooke it.

Henry. Be patient, gentle Earle of Weſtmerland.

Clifford. Patience is for Poultroones, and ſuch is he:
He durſt not ſit there, had your Father liv'd.
My gracious Lord, here in the Parliament
Let us aſſayle the Family of Yorke.

North. Well haſt thou ſpoken, Couſin be it ſo.

Henry. Ah, know you not the City favours them,
And they have troopes of Souldiers at their beckes?

Weſtm. But when the Duke is ſlaine, they'le quickly flye.

Henry. Farre be the thought of this from Henries heart,
To make a Shambles of the Parliament Houſe.
Couſin of Exeter, frownes, words, and threats,
Shall be the Warre that Henry meanes to uſe:
Thou factious Duke of Yorke deſcend my Throne,
And kneele for grace and mercie at my feet,
I am thy Soveraigne.

Yorke. I am thine.

Exet. For ſhame come downe, he made thee Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. It was my Inheritance, as the Earledome was.

Exet. Thy Father was a Traytor to the Crowne.
Warw. Exeter thou art a Traytor to the Crowne.
In following this vſurping Henry.
Clifford. Whom ſhould hee follow, but his naturall King?
Warw. True Clifford, and that's Richard Duke of Yorke.
Henry. And ſhall I ſtand, and thou ſit in my Throne?
Yorke. It muſt and ſhall be ſo, content thy ſelfe.
Warw. Be Duke of Lancaſter, let him be King.
Weſtm. He is both King, and Duke of Lancaſter,
And that the Lord of Weſtmerland ſhall maintaine.
Warw. And Warwicke ſhall diſproue it. You forget,
That we are thoſe which chas'd you from the field,
And ſlew your Fathers, and with Colours ſpread
Marcht through the Citie to the Pallace Gates.
Northumb. Yes Warwicke, I remember it to my griefe,
And by his Soule, thou and thy Houſe ſhall rue it.
Weſtm. Plantagenet, of thee and theſe thy Sonnes,
Thy Kinſmen, and thy Friends, Ile haue more liues
Then drops of bloud were in my Fathers Veines.
Cliff. Vrge it no more, leſt that in ſteed of words,
I ſend thee, Warwicke, ſuch a Meſſenger,
As ſhall reuenge his death, before I ſtirre.
Warw. Poore Clifford, how I ſcorne his worthleſſe Threats.
Plant. Will you we ſhew our Title to the Crowne?
If not, our Swords ſhall pleade it in the field.
Henry. What Title haſt thou Traytor to the Crowne?
My Father was as thou art, Duke of Yorke,
Thy Grandfather Roger Mortimer, Earle of March.
I am the Sonne of Henry the Fift,
Who made the Dolphin and the French to ſtoupe,
And ſeiz'd vpon their Townes and Prouinces.
Warw. Talke not of France, ſith thou haſt loſt it all.
Henry. The Lord Protector loſt it, and not I:
When I was crown'd I was but nine moneths old.
Rich. You are old enough now,
And yet me thinkes you loſe:
Father teare the Crowne from the Vſurpers Head.
Edward. Sweet Father doe ſo, ſet it on your Head.
Mount. Good Brother,
As thou lou'ſt and honoreſt Armes,
Let's fight it out, and not ſtand cauilling thus.
Richard. Sound Drummes and Trumpets, and the King will flye.
Plant. Sonnes peace.
Henry. Peace thou, and giue King Henry leaue to ſpeake.
Warw. Plantagenet ſhall ſpeake firſt: Heare him Lords,
And be you ſilent and attentiue too,
For he that interrupts him, ſhall not liue.
Hen. Think'ſt thou, that I will leaue my Kingly Throne,
Wherein my Grandſire and my Father ſat?
No: firſt ſhall Warre vnpeople this my Realme;
I, and their Colours often borne in France,
And now in England, to our hearts great ſorrow,
Shall be my Winding-ſheet. Why faint you Lords?
My Title's good, and better farre then his.
Warw. But proue it Henry, and thou ſhalt be King.
Hen. Henry the Fourth by Conqueſt got the Crowne.
Plant. 'Twas by Rebellion againſt his King.
Henry. I know not what to ſay, my Titles weake:
Tell me, may not a King adopt an Heire?
Plant. What then?
Henry. And if he may, then am I lawfull King:
For Richard, in the view of many Lords,
Reſign'd the Crowne to Henry the Fourth,
Whoſe Heire my Father was, and I am his.
Plant. He roſe againſt him, being his Soueraigne,
And made him to reſigne his Crowne perforce.
Warw. Suppoſe, my Lords, he did it vnconſtrayn'd,
Thinke you 'twere prejudiciall to his Crowne?
Exet. No: for he could not ſo reſigne his Crowne,
But that the next Heire ſhould ſucceed and reigne.
Henry. Art thou againſt us, Duke of Exeter?
Exet. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.
Plant. Why whiſper you, my Lords, and anſwer not?
Exet. My Conſcience tells me he is lawfull King.
Henry. All will reuolt from me, and turne to him.
Northumb. Plantagenet, for all the Clayme thou lay'ſt,
Thinke not, that Henry ſhall be ſo depos'd.
Warw. Depos'd he ſhall be, in deſpight of all.
Northumb. Thou art deceiu'd:
'Tis not thy Southerne power
Of Eſſex, Norfolke, Suffolke, nor of Kent,
Which makes thee thus preſumptuous and prowd,
Can ſet the Duke vp in deſpight of me.
Clifford. King Henry, be thy Title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vowes to fight in thy defence:
May that ground gape, and ſwallow me aliue,
Where I ſhall kneele to him that ſlew my Father.
Henry. Oh Clifford, how thy words reuiue my heart.
Plant. Henry of Lancaſter, reſigne thy Crowne:
What mutter you, or what conſpire you Lords?
Warw. Doe right vnto this Princely Duke of Yorke,
Or I will fill the houſe with armed men,
And ore the Chayre of State, where now he ſits,
Write vp his Title with vſurping blood.

He ſtampes with his foot, and the Souldiers ſhew themſelues.

Henry. My Lord of Warwick, heare but one word,
Let me for this time reigne as King.
Plant. Confirme the Crowne to me and to mine Heires,
And thou ſhalt reigne in quiet while thou liu'ſt.
Henry. I am content: Richard Plantagenet
Enjoy the Kingdome after my deceaſe.
Clifford. What wrong is this vnto the Prince, your Sonne?
Warw. What good is this to England, and himſelfe?
Weſtm. Baſe, fearefull, and deſpairing Henry.
Clifford. How haſt thou injur'd both thy ſelfe and vs?
Weſtm. I cannot ſtay to heare theſe Articles.
Northumb. Nor I.
Clifford. Come Couſin, let vs tell the Queene theſe Newes.
Weſtm. Farewell faint-hearted and degenerate King,
In whoſe cold blood no ſparke of honor bides.
Northumb. Be thou a prey vnto the houſe of Yorke,
And dye in Bands, for this vnmanly deed.
Clif. In dreadfull Warre may'ſt thou be ouercome,
Or liue in peace abandon'd and deſpis'd.
Warw. Turne this way Henry, and regard them not.
Exeter. They ſeeke reuenge, and therefore will not yeeld.
Henry. Ah Exeter.
Warw. Why ſhould you ſigh, my Lord?
Henry. Not for my ſelfe Lord Warwicke, but my Sonne,
Whom I vnnaturally ſhall diſ-inherite.
But be it as it may: I here entayle
The Crowne to thee and to thine heires for euer,
Conditionally, that here thou take an Oath,
To ceaſe this Ciuill Warre: and whil'ſt I liue,

To honor me as thy King, and Soveraigne:
Neither by Treaſon nor Hoſtility,
To ſeeke to put me downe, and reigne thy ſelfe.
Plant. This Oath I willingly take, and will performe.
War. Long live King Henry: Plantagenet embrace him.
Henry. And long live thou, & theſe thy forward Sonnes.
Plant. Now Yorke and Lancaſter are reconcil'd.
Exet. Accurſt be he that ſeekes to make them foes.

Senet. Here they come downe.

Plant. Farewell my gracious Lord, Ile to my Caſtle.
War. And Ile keepe London with my Souldiers.
Norf. And I to Norfolke with my followers.
Mount. And I unto the Sea, from whence I came.
Hen. And I with griefe and ſorrow to the Court.

Enter the Queene.

Exet. Heere comes the Queene,
Whoſe Lookes bewray her anger:
Ile ſteale away.
Henry. Exeter, ſo will I.
Queene. Nay, goe not from me, I will follow thee.
Hen. Be patient gentle Queene, and I will ſtay.
Quee. Who can be patient in ſuch extreames?
Ah wretched man, would I had dy'de a Maid,
And never ſeene thee, never borne thee Sonne,
Seeing thou haſt prov'd ſo unnaturall a Father.
Hath he deſerv'd to loſe his Birth-right thus?
Hadſt thou but lov'd him halfe ſo well as I,
Or felt that paine which I did for him once,
Or nouriſht him, as I did with my blood;
Thou would'ſt have left thy deareſt heart-blood there,
Rather then made that ſavage Duke thine Heire,
And diſ-inherited thine onely Sonne.
Prin. Father, you cannot diſ-inherite me:
If you be King, why ſhould not I ſucceede?
Hen. Pardon me Margaret, pardon me ſweet Sonne,
The Earle of Warwick and the Duke enforc't me.
Que. Enforc't thee? Art thou King, and wilt be forc't?
I ſhame to heare thee ſpeake: ah timorous Wretch,
Thou haſt undone thy ſelfe, thy Sonne, and me,
And giv'n unto the Houſe of Yorke ſuch head,
As thou ſhalt reigne but by their ſufferance.
To entaile him and his Heires unto the Crowne,
What is it, but to make thy Sepulcher,
And creepe into it farre before thy time?
Warwicke is Chancelor, and the Lord of Callice,
Sterne Falconbridge commands the Narrow Seas,
The Duke is made Protector of the Realme,
And yet ſhalt thou be ſafe? Such ſafety findes
The trembling Lambe, invironned with Wolves.
Had I beene there, which am a ſilly Woman,
The Souldiers ſhould have toſs'd me on their Pikes,
Before I would have granted to that Act.
But thou preferr'ſt thy Life, before thine Honor.
And ſeeing thou do'ſt, I here divorce my ſelfe,
Both from thy Table Henry, and thy Bed,
Untill that Act of Parliament be repealed,
Whereby my Sonne is diſ-inherited.
The Northerne Lords, that have forſworne thy Colours,
Will follow mine, if once they ſee them ſpread:
And ſpread they ſhall be, to thy foule diſgrace,
And utter ruine of the Houſe of Yorke.
Thus doe I leave thee: Come Sonne, let's away,
Our Army is ready, come, wee'le after them.
Henry. Stay gentle Margaret, and heare me ſpeake.
Queene. Thou haſt ſpoke too much already: get thee gone.
Hen. Gentle Sonne Edward, thou wilt ſtay with me?
Que. I, to be murther'd by his Enemies.
Prin. When I returne with victory from the field,
Ile ſee your Grace: till then, Ile follow her.
Que. Come Sonne away, we may not linger thus.
Hen. Poore Queene,
How love to me, and to her Sonne,
Hath made her breake out into termes of Rage.
Reveng'd may ſhe be on that hatefull Duke,
Whoſe haughty ſpirit, winged with deſire,
Will coſt my Crowne, and like an empty Eagle,
Tyre on the fleſh of me, and of my Sonne.
The loſſe of thoſe three Lords torments my heart:
Ile write unto them, and entreat them faire;
Come Couſin, you ſhall be the Meſſenger.
Exet. And I hope, ſhall reconcile them all. Exit.

Enter Richard, Edward, and Mountague.

Richard. Brother, though I bee youngeſt, give mee leave.
Edw. No, I can better play the Orator.
Moun. But I have reaſons ſtrong and forceable.

Enter the Duke of Yorke.

Yor. Why how now Sonnes, and Brother, at a ſtrife?
What is your Quarrell? how began it firſt?
Edw. No Quarrell, but a ſlight Contention.
Yor. About what?
Rich. About that which concernes your Grace and us,
The Crowne of England, Father, which is yours.
Yor. Mine Boy? not till King Henry be dead.
Rich. Your Right depends not on his life, or death.
Edw. Now you are Heire, therefore enjoy it now:
By giving the Houſe of Lancaſter leave to breathe,
It will out-runne you, Father, in the end.
Yor. I tooke an Oath, that he ſhould quietly reigne.
Edw. But for a Kingdome any Oath may be broken:
I would breake thouſand Oathes, to reigne one yeere.
Richard. No: God forbid your Grace ſhould be forſworne.
Yor. I ſhall be, if I claime by open Warre.
Richard. Ile prove the contrary, if you'le heare mee ſpeake.
Yor. Thou canſt not, Sonne: it is impoſſible.
Rich. An Oath is of no moment, being not tooke
Before a true and lawfull Magiſtrate,
That hath authority over him that ſweares.
Henry had none, but did uſurpe the place.
Then ſeeing 'twas he that made you to depoſe,
Your Oath, my Lord, is vaine and frivolous.
Therefore to Armes: and Father doe but thinke,
How ſweet a thing it is to weare a Crowne,
Within whoſe Circuit is Elizium,
And all that Poets faine of Bliſſe and Joy.
Why doe we linger thus? I cannot reſt,
Untill the White Roſe that I weare, be dy'de
Even in the luke-warme blood of Henries heart.
Yor. Richard ynough: I will be King, or dye.
Brother, thou ſhalt to London preſently,
And whet on Warwick to this Enterpriſe.

Thou Richard ſhalt to the Duke of Norfolke,
And tell him privily of our intent.
You Edward ſhall unto my Lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentiſhmen will willingly riſe.
In them I truſt:for they are Souldiors,
Witty,courteous,liberall,full of ſpirit.
While you are thus imploy'd, what reſteth more?
But that I ſeeke occaſion how to riſe,
And yet the King not privy to my Driſt,
Nor any of the Houſe of Lancaſter.

Enter Gabriel.

But ſtay,what Newes? Why comm'ſt thou in ſuch poſte?
Gabriel. The Queene,
With all the Northerne Earles and Lords,
Intend heere to beſiege you in your Caſtle.
She is hard by,with twenty thouſand men:
And therefore fortifie your Hold,my Lord.
Yor. I, with my Sword.
What?think'ſt thou,that we feare them?
Edward and Richard,you ſhall ſtay with me,
My Brother Mountague ſhall poſte to London.
Let Noble Warwicke, Cobham, and the reſt,
Whom we have left Protectors of the King,
With powrefull Pollicy ſtrengthen themſelves,
And truſt not ſimple Henry,nor his Oathes.
Moun. Brother, I goe:Ile winne them,feare it not.
And thus moſt humbly I doe take my leave.
Exit Mountague.

Enter Mortimer,and his Brother.

Yor. Sir Iohn,and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine Vnckles,
You are come to Sandall in a happy houre.
The Armie of the Queene meane to beſiege us.
Iohn. Shee ſhall not neede, wee'le meete her in the field.
Yor. What,with five thouſand men?
Rich. I,with five hundred, Father,for a neede.
A Woman's Generall:what ſhould we feare?
A March afarre off.
Edw. I heare their Drummes:
Let's ſet our men in order,
And iſſue forth,and bid them Battaile ſtraight.
Yor. Five men to twenty:though the oddes be great,
I doubt not, Vnckle,of our Victory.
Many a Battaile have I wonne in France,
When as the Enemy hath beene tenne to one:
Why ſhould I not now have the like ſucceſſe?
Alarum. Exit.

Enter Rutland,and his Tutor.

Rutl. Ah, whither ſhall I flye,to ſcape their hands?
Ah Tutor,looke where bloody Clifford comes.

Enter Clifford.

Clifford. Haplaine away,thy Prieſthood ſaves thy life.
As for the Brat of this accuſed Duke,
Whoſe Father ſlew my Father,he ſhall dye.
Tutor. And I, my Lord,will beare him company.
Cliff. Souldiers,away with him.
Tutor. Ah Clifford,murther not this innocent Child,
Leaſt thou be hated both of God and Man. Exit.

Clifford. How now?is he dead already?
Or is it feare,that makes him cloſe his eyes?
Ile open them.
Rutl. So looks the pent-up Lyon o're the Wretch,
That trdmbles under his devouring Pawes:
And ſo he walkes, inſulting o're his Prey,
And ſo he comes,to rend his Limbes aſunder.
Ah gentle Clifford, kill me with thy Sword,
And not with ſuch a cruell threatning Looke:
Sweet Clifford heare me ſpeake,before I dye:
I am too meane a ſubiect for thy Wrath,
Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.
Cliff. In vaine thou ſpeak'ſt,poore Boy:
My Fathers blood hath ſtopt the paſſage
Where thy words ſhould enter.
Rutl. Then let my Fathers blood open it againe,
He is a man,and Clifford cope with him.
Cli. Had I thy Brethren here,their lives and thine
Were not revenge ſufficient for me:
No, if I digg'd up thy fore-fathers Graves,
And hung their rotten Coffins up in Chaynes,
It could not ſlake mine ire, nor eaſe my heart.
The ſight of any of of the Houſe of Yorke,
Is as a Fury to torment my Soule:
And till I root out their accurſed Line,
And leave not one alive,I live in Hell.
Therefore----
Rutl. Oh let me pray,before I take my death:
To thee I pray;ſweet Clifford pitty me.
Clifford. Such pitty as my Rapiers point affords.
Rut. I never did thee harme:why wilt thou ſlay me?
Clif. Thy Father hath.
Rut. But 'twas ere I was borne:
Thou haſt,one Sonne,for his ſake pitty me,
Leaſt in revenge thereof,ſith God is juſt,
He be as miſerably ſlaine as I.
Ah,let me live in Priſon all my dayes,
And when I give occaſion of offence,
Then let me dye,for now thou haſt no cauſe.
Cli. No cauſe?thy Father ſlew my Father:therefore dye.
Rutl. Dij faciant laudis ſumma ſit iſta tua. Dies.
Cli. Plantagenet,I come Plantagenet:
And this thy Sonnes blood cleaving to my Blade,
Shall ruſt upon my Weapon,till thy blood
Congeal'd with this, doe make me wipe off both, Exit.

Alarum. Enter Richard, Duke of Yorke.

Yor. The Army of the Queene hath got the field:
My Vnckles both are ſlaine,in reſcuing me;
And all my followers,to the eager foe
Turne back,and flye,like, Ships before the Winde,
Or Lambes purſu'd by hunger-ſtarued Wolves.
My Sonnes,God knowes what hath bechanced them:
But this I know,they have demean'd themſelves
Like men borne to Renowne,by Life or Death.
Three times did Richard make a Lane to me,
And thice cry'de,Courage Father,fight it out:
And full as oft came Edward to my ſide,
With Purple Faulchion,painted to the Hilt,
In blood of thoſe that had encountred him:
And when the hardyeſt Warriors did retyre,
Richard cry'de,Charge,and give no foot of ground,
And cry'de,A Crowne,or elſe a glorious Tombe,

A Scepter,or an Earthly Sepulcher.
With this we charg'd againe:but out alas,
We bodg'd againe,as I have ſeene a Swan
With boothleſſe labour ſwimme againſt the Tyde,
And ſpend her ſtrength with over-matching Waves.

A ſhort Alarum within.

Ah hearke,the fatall followers doe purſue,
And I am faint,and cannot flye their fury:
And were I ſtrong,I would not ſhunne their fury.
The Sands are numbred,that make up my Life,
Here muſt I ſtay,and here my Life muſt end.

Enter the Queene,Clifford,Northumberland,
the young Prince,and Souldiers.

Come bloody Clifford,rough Northumberland,
I dare your quenchleſſe fury to more rage:
I am your But,and I abide your Shot.

North. Yeeld to our mercy,proud Plantagenet.

Clif. I,to ſuch mercy,as his ruthleſſe Arme
With downe-right payment,ſhew'd unto my Father.
Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his Carre,
And made an Evening at the Noone-tide Prick.

Yor. My aſhes,as the Phœnix,may bring forth
A Bird,that will revenge upon you all:
And in that hope,I throw mine eyes to Heaven,
Scorning what ere you can afflict me with.
Why come you not?what,multitudes,and feare?

Clif. So Cowards fight,when they can flye no further,
So Doves doe peck the Faulcons piercing Tallons,
So deſperate Theeves,all hopeleſſe of their Lives,
Breathe out Invectives 'gainſt the Officers.

Yor. Oh Clifford,but bethinke thee once againe,
And in thy thought ore-run my former time:
And if thou canſt,for bluſhing,view this face,
And bite thy tongue,that ſlanders him with Cowardice,
Whoſe frowne hath made thee faint and flye ere this.

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word,
But buckler with thee blowes twice two for one.

Que. Hold valiant Clifford,for a thouſand cauſes
I would prolong a while the Traytors Life:
Wrath makes him deafe;ſpeake thou Northumberland.

North. Hold Clifford,doe not honor him ſo much,
To prick thy finger,though to wound his heart.
What valour were it,when a Curre doth grinne,
For one to thruſt his Hand betweene his Teeth,
When he might ſpurne him with his Foot away?
It is Warres prize,to take all Vantages,
And tenne to one,is no impeach of Valour.

Clifford. I,I,ſo ſtrives the Woodcooke with the Gynne.

Northumberland. So doth the Conny ſtruggle in the Net.

Yor. So triumph Theeves upon their conquer'd Booty,
So True men yeeld,with Robbers ſo o're-matcht.

Norb. What would your Grace have done unto him now?

Que. Brave Warriors,Clifford and Northumberland,
Come make him ſtand upon this Mole-hill here,
That raught at Mountaines with out-ſtretched Armes,
Yet parted but the ſhadow with his Hand.
What,was it you,that would be Englands King?
Was't you that revell'd in our Parliament,
And made a Preachment of your high Deſcent?
Where are your Meſſe of Sonnes,to back you now?
The wanton Edward,and the luſty George?
And where's that valiant Crook-back Prodigy,
Dicky,your Boy,that with his grumbling voyce
Was wont to cheare his Dad in Mutinies?
Or with the reſt,where is your Darling,Rutland?
Looke Yorke,I ſtayn'd this Napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford,with his Rapiers point,
Made iſſue from the boſome of the Boy,
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy Cheekes withall.
Alas poore Yorke,but that I hate thee deadly,
I ſhould lament thy miſerable ſtate.
I prythee grieve,to make me merry,Yorke.
What,hath thy fiery heart ſo parcht thine entrayles,
That not a Teare can fall,for Rutlands death?
Why art thou patient,man?thou ſhould'ſt be mad:
And I,to make thee mad,doe mock thee thus.
Stampe,rave,and fret,that I may ſing and dance.
Thou would'ſt be fee'd,I ſee,to make me ſport:
Yorke cannot ſpeake,unleſſe he weare a Crowne.
A Crowne for Yorke;and Lords,bow lowe to him:
Hold you his hands,whileſt I doe ſet it on.
I marry Sir,now lookes he like a King:
I,this is he that tooke King Henries Chaire,
And this is he was his adopted Heire.
But how is it,that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd ſo ſoone,and broke his ſolemne Oath?
As I bethinke me,you ſhould not be King,
Till our King Henry had ſhooke hands with Death.
And will you pale your head in Henries Glory,
And rob his Temples of the Diademe,
Now in his Life,againſt your holy Oath?
Oh 'tis a fault too too unpardonable.
Off with the Crowne:and with the Crowne,his Head,
And whileſt we breathe,take time to doe him dead.

Clifford. That is my Office,for my Fathers ſake.

Queene. Nay ſtay,let's heare the Orizons hee makes.

Yorke. Shee-Wolfe of France,
But worſe then Wolves of France,
Whoſe Tongue more poiſons then the Adders Tooth:
How ill-beſeeming is it in thy Sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian Trull,
Vpon their Woes,whom Fortune captivates?
But that thy Face is Vizard-like,unchanging,
Made impudent with uſe of evill deedes,
I would aſſay,prowd Queene,to make thee bluſh.
To tell thee whence thou cam'ſt,of whom deriv'd,
Were ſhame enough,to ſhame thee,
Wert thou not ſhameleſſe,
Thy Father beares the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils,and Ieruſalem,
Yet not ſo wealthy as an Engliſh Yeoman.
Hath that poore Monarch taught thee to inſult?
It needes not,nor it bootes thee not,prowd Queene,
Vnleſſe the Adage muſt be verify'd,
That Beggers mounted,runne their Horſe to death.
'Tis Beauty that doth oft make Women prowd,
But God he knowes,thy ſhare thereof is ſmall.
'Tis Vertue that doth make them moſt admir'd,
The contrary doth make thee wondred at.
'Tis Government that makes them ſeeme Divine,
The want thereof,makes thee abhominable.
Thou art as oppoſite to every good,
As the Antipodes are unto vs,
Or as the South to the Septentrion.
Oh Tygres Heart,wrapt in a Womans Hide,

How could'ſt thou drayne the Life-blood of the Child,
To bid the Father wipe his eyes withall,
And yet be ſeene to beare a Womans face?
Women are ſoft, milde, pittiful, and flexible;
Thou ſterne, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorſeleſſe.
Bidſt thou me rage? why now thou haſt thy wiſh.
Would'ſt have me weepe? why now thou haſt thy will.
For raging wind blowes up inceſſant ſhowers,
And when the Rage allayes, the Raine begins.
Theſe Teares are my ſweet Rutlands Obſequies,
And every drop cryes vengeance for his death,
Gainſt thee fell Clifford, and thee falſe French-woman.
Northumb. Beſhrew me, but his paſſions move me ſo,
That hardly can I check my eyes from Teares.
Yor. That face of his,
The hungry Caniballs would not have toucht,
Would not have ſtayn'd the roſes juſt with blood:
But you are more inhumane, more inexorable,
Oh, tenne times more then Tygers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthleſſe Queene, a hapleſſe Fathers Teares:
This Cloth thou dipd'ſt in blood of my ſweet Boy,
And I with Teares doe waſh the blood away.
Keepe thou the Napkin, and goe boaſt of this,
And if thou tell'ſt the heavy ſtory right,
Vpon my Soule, the hearers will ſhed Teares:
Yea, even my Foes will ſhed faſt-falling Teares,
And ſay, Alas, it was a pittious deed.
There, take the Crown, and with the Crowne, my Curſe,
And in thy need, ſuch comfort come to thee,
As now I reape at thy too cruell hand.
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the World,
My ſoule to Heaven, my Blood upon your Heads.
North. Had he been ſlaughter-man to all my Kinne,
I ſhould not for my Life but weepe with him,
To ſee how inly Sorrow gripes his Soule.
Que. What weeping ripe, my Lord Northumberland?
Thinke but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting Teares.
Clifford. Heere's for my Oath, heere's for my Fathers Death.
Queene. And heere's to right our gentle-hearted King.
Yor. Open thy Gate of Mercy, gracious God.
My Soule flyes through theſe wounds, to ſeeke out thee.
Quee. Off with his Head, and ſet it on Yorke Gates,
So Yorke may over-looke the Towne of Yorke.
Exeunt.

A Martch. Enter Edward, Richard, and their power.

Edw. I wonder how our Princely Father ſcap't:
Or whether he be ſcap't away, or no,
From Cliffords and Nothumberlands purſuit?
Had he been t'ane, we ſhould have heard the newes:
Had he beene ſlaine, we ſhould have heard the newes:
Or had he ſcap't, me thinkes we ſhould have heard
The happy tidings of his good eſcape.
How fares my Brother? why is he ſo ſad?
Rich. I cannot joy, untill I be reſolv'd
Where our right valiant Father is become.
I ſaw him in the Battaile range about,
And watcht him how he ſingled Clifford forth,
Me thought he bore him in the thickeſt troupe,
As doth a Lyon in a Heard of Neat,
Or as a Beare encompaſs'd round with Dogges:
Who having pincht a few, and made them cry,
The reſt ſtand all aloofe, and barke at him.
So far'd our Father with his Enemies,
So fled his Enemies my Warlike Father:
Me thinkes 'tis prize enough to be his Sonne.
See how the Morning opes her golden Gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious Sunne.
How well reſembles it the prime of Youth,
Trimm'd like a Yonker, prauncing to his Love?
Ed. Dazle mine eyes, or doe I ſee three Sunnes?
Rich. Three glorious Sunnes, each one a perfect Sunne,
Not ſeparated with the racking Clouds,
But ſever'd in a pale cleare-ſhining Skie.
See, ſee they joyne, embrace, and ſeeme to kiſſe,
As if they vow'd ſome League inviolable.
Now are they but one Lampe, one Light, one Sunne:
In this, the Heaven figures ſome event.
Edw. 'Tis wondrous ſtrange,
The like yet never heard of.
I thinke it cites us (Brother) to the field,
That wee, the Sonnes of brave Plantagenet,
Each one already blazing by our meedes,
Should notwithſtanding joyne our Lights together,
And over-ſhine the Earth, as this the World.
What ere it bodes, hence-forward will I beare
Vpon my Targuet three faire ſhining Sunnes.
Rich. Nay, beare three Daughters:
By your leave, I ſpeake it,
You love the Breeder better then the Male.

Enter one blowing.

But what art thou, whoſe heavy Lookes fore-tell
Some dreadfull ſtory hanging on thy Tongue?
Meſſ. Ah, one that was a wofull looker on
When as the Noble Duke of Yorke was ſlaine,
Your Princely Father, and my loving Lord.
Edward. Oh ſpeake no more, for I have heard too much.
Rich. Say how he dy'de, for I will heare it all.
Meſſ. Environed he was with many foes
And ſtood againſt them, as the hope of Troy
Againſt the Greekes, that would have entred Troy.
But Hercules himſelfe muſt yeeld to oddes:
And many ſtroakes, though with a little Axe,
Hewes downe and fells the hardeſt-tymber'd Oake.
By many hands your Father was ſubdu'd,
But onely ſlaught'red by the irefull Arme
Of un-relenting Clifford, and the Queene:
Who crown'd the gracious Duke in high deſpight,
Laugh'd in his face: and when with griefe he wept,
The ruthleſſe Queene gave him, to dry his Cheeke,
A Napkin, ſteeped in the harmeleſſe blood
Of ſweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford ſlaine:
And after many ſcornes, many foule taunts,
They tooke his Head, and on the Gates of Yorke
They ſet the ſame, and there it doth remaine,
The ſaddeſt ſpectacle that ere I view'd.
Edw. Sweet Duke of Yorke, our Prop to leane upon,
Now thou art gone, wee have no Staffe, no Stay.
Oh Clifford, boyſt'rous Clifford, thou haſt ſlaine
The flowre of Europe, for his Chevalry,
And trecherouſly haſt thou vanquiſht him,
For hand to hand he would have vanquiſht thee.
Now my Soules Pallace is become a Priſon:
Ah, would ſhe breake from hence, that this my body

Might in the ground be cloſed up in reſt:
For never henceforth ſhall I joy againe:
Never, oh never ſhall I ſee more joy.

Rich. I cannot weepe: for all my bodies moyſture
Scarſe ſerves to quench my Furnace-burning heart:
Nor can my tongue unloade my hearts great burthen,
For ſelfe-ſame winde that I ſhould ſpeake withall,
Is kindling coales that fires all my breſt,
And burnes me up with flames, that tears would quench.
To weepe, is to make leſſe the depth of greefe:
Teares then for Babes; Blowes, and Revenge for mee.
Richard, I beare thy name, Ile venge thy death,
Or dye renowned by attemping it.

Ed. His name that valiant Duke hath left with thee:
His Dukedome, and his Chaire with me is left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that Princely Eagles Bird,
Shew thy deſcent by gazing 'gainſt the Sunne:
For Chaire and Dukedome, Throne and Kingdome ſay,
Either that is thine, or elſe thou wer't not his.

March. Enter Warwicke, Marqueſſe Mountacute, and their Army.

Warwick. How now faire Lords? What fare ? What newes abroad?

Rich. Great Lord of Warwicke, if we ſhould recompt
Our balefull newes, and at each words deliverance
Stab Poniards in our fleſh, till all were told,
The words would adde more anguiſh then the wounds.
O valiant Lord, the Duke of Yorke is ſlaine.

Edw. O Warwicke, Warwicke, that Plantagenet
Which held thee deerely, as his Soules Redemption,
Is by the ſterne Lord Clifford done to death.

VVar. Ten dayes ago, I drown'd theſe newes in teares,
And now to adde more meaſure to your woes,
I come to tell you things ſith then befalne.
After the bloody Fray at Wakefield fought,
Where your brave Father breath'd his lateſt gaſpe,
Tydings, as ſwiftly as the Poſtes could runne,
Were brought me of your Loſſe, and his Depart.
I then in London, keeper of the King,
Muſter'd my Soldiers, gathered flockes of Friends,
Marcht toward S. Albons, to intercept the Queene,
Bearing the King in my behalfe along:
For by my Scouts, I was advertiſed
That ſhe was comming with a full intent
To daſh our late Decree in Parliament,
Touching King Henries Oath, and your Succeſsion:
Short Tale to make, we at S. Albons met,
Our Battailes joyn'd, and both ſides fiercely fought:
But whether 'twas the coldneſſe of the King,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike Queene,
That robb'd my Soldiers of their heated Spleene.
Or whether 'twas report of her ſucceſſe,
Or more then common feare of Cliffords Rigour,
Who thunders to his Captives, Blood and Death,
I cannot judge: but to conclude with truth,
Their Weapons like to Lightning, came and went:
Our ſouldiers like the Night-Owles lazie flight,
Or like a lazie Threſher with a Flaile,
Fell gently downe, as if they ſtrucke their Friends.
I cheer'd them up with juſtice of our Cauſe,
With promiſe of high pay, and great Reward:
But all in vaine, they had no heart to fight,
And we (in them) no hope to win the day,
So that we fled: the King unto the Queene,
Lord George, your Brother, Norfolke, and my Selfe,
In haſte, poſt haſte, are come to joyne with you:
For in the Marches heere we heard you were,
Making another Head, to fight againe.

Ed. Where is the Duke of Norfolke, gentle Warwick?
And when came George from Burgundy to England?

VVar. Some ſix miles off the Duke is with the Soldiers;
And for your Brother he was lately ſent
From your kinde Aunt Dutcheſſe of Burgundy,
With ayde of Souldiers to this needfull Warre.

Rich. 'Twas oddes belike, when valiant Warwick fled;
Oft have I heard his praiſes in Purſuite,
But n'ere till now, his Scandall of Retire.

VVar. Nor now my Scandall Richard, doſt thou heare:
For thou ſhalt know this ſtrong right hand of mine,
Can plucke the Diadem from faint Henries head,
And wring the awefull Scepter from his Fiſt,
Were he as famous, and as bold in Warre,
As he is fam'd for Mildneſſe, Peace, and Prayer.

Rich. I know it well Lord Warwick, blame me not,
Tis love I beare thy glories makes me ſpeake:
But in this troublous time, what's to be done?
Shall wee go throw away our Coates of Steele,
And wrap our bodies in blacke mourning Gownes,
Numb'ring our Ave-Maries with our Beads?
Or ſhall we on the Helmets of our Foes
Tell our Devotion with revengefull Armes?
If for the laſt, ſay I, and to it Lords.

War. Why therefore Warwick came to ſeek you out,
And therefore comes my Brother Mountague:
Attend me Lords, the proud inſulting Queene,
With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland,
And of their Feather, many moe proud Birds,
Have wrought the eaſie-melting King, like Wax.
He ſwore conſent to your Succeſſion,
His Oath enrolled in the Parliament.
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To fruſtrate both his Oath, and what beſide
May make againſt the houſe of Lancaſter.
Their power (I thinke) is thirty thouſand ſtrong:
Now, if the helpe of Norfolke, and my ſelfe,
With all the Friends that thou brave Earle of March,
Among'ſt the loving Welſhmen can'ſt procure,
Will but amount to five and twenty thouſand,
Why Via, to London will we march,
And once againe, beſtride our foaming Steeds,
And once againe cry Charge upon our Foes,
But never once againe turne backe and flye.

Rich. I, now me thinks I heare great Warwick ſpeak;
Ne're may he live to ſee a Sun-ſhine day,
That cries Retire, if Warwicke bid him ſtay.

Ed. Lord Warwick, on thy ſhoulder will I leane,
And when thou failſt (as God forbid the houre)
Muſt Edward fall, which perill heaven forefend.

War. No longer Earle of March, but Duke of Yorke:
The next degree, is Englands Royall Throne:
For King of England ſhalt thou be proclaim'd
In every Burrough as we paſſe along,
And he that throwes not up his cap for joy,
Shall for the Fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward, valiant Richard Mountague:
Stay we no longer, dreaming of Renowne,
But ſound the Trumpets, and about our Taske.

Rich. Then Clifford, were thy heart as hard as Steele,
As thou haſt ſhewne it flinty by thy deeds,
I come to pierce it, or to give thee mine.

Edw. Then ſtrike up Drums, God and S. George for us.

Enter a Meſſenger.

War. How now?what newes?

Meſ. The Duke of Norfolke ſends you word by me,
The Queene is comming with a puiſſant Hoaſt,
And craves yonr company,for ſpeedy counſell.

War. Why then it ſorts,brave Warriors,let's away.

Exeunt omnes.

Enter the King,the Queene, Clifford, Northumberland and Yong Prince, with Drumme and Trumpetes.

Que. Welcome my Lord, to this brave town of York,
Yonders the head of that Arch-enemy,
That ſought to be incompaſt with your Crowne.
Doth not the object cheere your heart,my Lord.

K. I,as the rockes cheare them that feare their wrack,
To ſee this ſight, it irkes my very ſoule:
With-hold revenge(deere God)'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly have I infring'd my Vow.

Clif. My gracious Liege,this too much lenity
And harmfull pitty muſt be layd aſide:
To whom do Lyons caſt their gentle Lookes?
Not to the Beaſt,that would uſurpe their Den.
Whoſe hand is that the Forreſt Beare doth licke?
Not his that ſpoiles her yong before her face.
Who ſcapes the lurking Serpents mortall ſting?
Not he that ſets his foot upon her backe.
The ſmalleſt Worme will turne,being troden on,
And Doves will pecke in ſafegard of their Brood.
Ambitious Yorke,did levell at thy Crowne,
Thou ſmilling,while he knit his angry browes.
He but a Duke,would have his Sonne a King,
And raiſe his iſſue like a loving Sire,
Thou Being a King,bleſt with a goodly ſonne,
Did'ſt yeeld conſent to diſinherit him:
Which argued thee a moſt unloving Father.
Vnreaſonable Creatures feed their young,
And though mans face be fearefull to their eyes,
Yet in protection of their tender ones,
Who hath not ſeene them even with thoſe wings,
Which ſometime they have us'd with fearfull flight,
Make warre with him that climb'd unto their neſt,
Offering their owne lives in their yongs defence?
For ſhame,my Liege,make them your Preſident:
Were it not pitty that this goodly Boy
Should looſe his Birth-right by his Fathers fault,
And long heereafter ſay unto his childe,
What my great Grandfather,and Grandſire got,
My careleſſe Father fondly gave away.
Ah,what a ſhame were this?Looke on the Boy,
And let his manly face, which promiſeth
Succeſſefull Fortune ſteele thy melting heart,
To hold thine owne,and leave thine owne with him.

King. Full well hath Clifford plaid the Orator,
Inferring arguments of mighty force:
But Clifford tell me,did'ſt thou never heare,
That things ill got,had ever bad ſucceſſe.
And happy alwayes was it for that Sonne,
Whoſe Father for his hoording went to hell:
Ile leave my Sonne my Vertuous deeds behinde,
And would my Father had left me no more:
For all the reſt is held at ſuch a Rate,
As brings a thouſand fold more care to keepe,
Then in poſſeſſion any jot of pleaſure.
Ah Coſin Yorke,would thy beſt Friends did know,
How it doth greeve me that thy head is heere.

Que. My Lord cheere up your ſpirits,our foes are nye,
And this ſoft courage makes your Followers faint:
You promiſt Knighthood to our forward ſonne,
Vnſheath your ſword,and dub him preſently.
Edward, kneele downe.

King. Edward Plantagenet,ariſe a Knight,
And learne this Leſſon,Draw thy Sword in right.

Prin. My gracious Father,by your Kingly leave,
Ile draw it as Apparant to the Crowne,
And in that quarrell,uſe it to the death.

Clif. Why that is ſpoken like a toward Prince.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Royall Commanders,be in readineſſe,
For with a Band of thirty thouſand men,
Comes Warwicke backing of the Duke of Yorke,
And in the Townes as they do march along,
Proclaimes him King,and many flye to him,
Darraigne your battell, they are at hand.

Clif. I would your Highneſſe would depart the field,
The Queene hath beſt ſucceſſe when you are abſent.

Qu. I good my Lord,and leave us to our Fortune.

King. Why,that's my fortune too,therefore Ile ſtay.

North. Be it with reſolution then to fight.

Prin. My Royall Father,cheere theſe Noble Lords,
And hearten thoſe that fight in your defence:
Vnſheath your Sword,good Father:Cry S. George.

March. Enter Edward,Warwicke,Richard, Clarence, Norfolke,Mountague,and Soldiers.

Ed. Now perjur'd Henry,wilt thou kneel for grace?
And ſet thy Diadem upon my head?
Or bide the mortall Fortune of the field.

Qu. Go rate thy Minions, proud inſulting Boy,
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in termes,
Before thy Soveraigne,and thy lawfull King?

Ed. I am his King,and he ſhould bow his knee:
I was adopted Heire by his conſent.
Since when,his Oath is broke:for as I heare,
You that are King,though he do weare the Crowne,
Have caus'd him by new Act of Parliament,
To blot out me,and put his owne Sonne in.

Clif. And reaſon too,
Who ſhould ſucceede the Father,but the Sonne?

Rich. Are you there Butcher?O,I cannot ſpeake.

Clif. I Crooke-back,here I ſtand to anſwer thee,
Or any he,the proudeſt of thy ſort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd yong Rutland,was it not?

Clif. I,and old Yorke,and yet not ſatisfied.

Rich. For Gods ſake Lords give ſignall to the fight.

War. What ſay'ſt thou Henry,
Wilt thou yeeld the Crowne?

Quee. Why how now long-tongu'd Warwick, dare (you ſpeake?
When you and I,met at S. Albons laſt,
Your legges did better ſervice then your hands.

War. Then 'twas my turne to fly,and now 'tis thine:

Clif. You ſaid ſo much before,and yet you fled.

War. 'Twas not your valor Clifford drove me thence,

Nor. No,nor your manhood that durſt make you ſtay.

Rich. Northumberland,I hold thee reverently,
Breake off the parley, for ſcarſe I can refraine
The execution of my big-ſwolne heart
Vpon that Clifford,that cruell Child-killer.

Clif. I ſlew thy Father,cal'ſt thou him a Child?

Rich. I like a Daſtard, and a treacherous Coward,
As thou didd'ſt kill our tender Brother Rutland,
But ere Sunſet, Ile make thee curſe the deed.
King. Have done with words (my Lords) and heare me ſpeake.
Qu. Defie them then, or els hold cloſe thy lips.
King. I prythee give no limits to my Tongue,
I am a King, and priviledg'd to ſpeake.
Clif. My Liege, the wound that bred this meeting heere,
Cannot be cur'd by Words, therefore be ſtill.
Rich. Then Executioner vnſheath thy ſword:
By him that made us all, I am reſolv'd,
That Cliffords Manhood, lyes upon his tongue.
Ed. Say Henry, ſhall I have my right, or no:
A thouſand men have broke their Faſts to day,
That ne're ſhall dine, unleſſe thou yeeld the Crowne.
War. If thou deny, their Blood upon thy head.
For Yorke in juſtice put's his Armour on.
Pr. Ed. If that be right, which Warwick ſaies is right,
There is no wrong, but every thing is right.
War. Who ever got thee, there thy Mother ſtands,
For well I wot, thou haſt thy Mothers tongue.
Qu. But thou art neither like thy Sire nor Damme,
But like a foule miſhapen Stygmaticke,
Mark'd by the Deſtinies to be avoided,
As venome Toades, or Lizards dreadfull ſtings.
Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with Engliſh gilt,
Whoſe Father beares the Title of a King,
(As if a Channell ſhould be call'd the Sea)
Sham'ſt thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy baſe-borne heart.
Ed. A wiſpe of ſtraw were worth a thouſand Crowns,
To make this ſhameleſſe Callet know her ſelfe:
Helen of Greece was fairer farre then thou,
Although thy Husband may be Menelaus;
And ne're was Agamemnons Brother wrong'd
By that falſe Woman, as this King by thee.
His Father revel'd in the heart of France,
And tam'd the King, and made the Dolphin ſtoope:
And had he match'd according to his State,
He might have kept that glory to this day.
But when he tooke a begger to his bed,
And grac'd thy poore Sire with his Bridall day,
Even then that Sun-ſhine brew'd a ſhowre for him,
That waſht his Fathers fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd ſedition on his Crowne at home:
For what hath broach'd this tumult but thy Pride?
Had'ſt thou bene meeke, our Title ſtill had ſlept,
And we in pitty of the Gentle King,
Had ſlipt our Claime, untill another Age.
Cla. But when we ſaw, our Sunſhine made thy Spring,
And that thy Summer bred us no increaſe,
We ſet the Axe to thy uſurping Roote:
And though the edge hath ſomething hit our ſelves,
Yet know thou, ſince we have begun to ſtrike,
Wee'l never leave, till we have hewne thee downe,
Or bath'd thy growing, with our heated bloods.
Ed. And in this reſolution, I defie thee,
Not willing any longer Conference,
Since thou denied'ſt the gentle King to ſpeake.
Sound Trumpets, let our bloody Colours wave,
And either Victory, or elſe a Grave.
Qu. Stay Edward.
Ed. No wrangling Woman, wee'l no longer ſtay,
Theſe words will coſt ten thouſand lives this day.
Exeunt omnes.

Alarum. Excurſions. Enter Warwicke.

War. Fore-ſpent with Toile, as Runners with a Race,
I lay me downe a little while to breath:
For ſtrokes receiv'd, and many blowes repaid,
Have robb'd my ſtrong knit ſinewes of their ſtrength,
And ſpight of ſpight, needs muſt I reſt a-while.

Enter Edward running.

Ed. Smile gentle heaven, or ſtrike ungentle death,
For this world frownes, and Edwards Sunne is clowded.
War. How now my Lord, what happe? what hope of good?

Enter Clarence.

Cla. Our hap is loſſe, our hope but ſad deſpaire,
Our rankes are broke, and ruine followes us.
What counſaile give you? whither ſhall we flye?
Ed. Bootleſſe is flight, they follow us with Wings,
And weake we are, and cannot ſhun purſuite.

Enter Richard.

Rich. Ah Warwicke, why haſt yͧ withdrawn thy ſelfe?
Thy Brothers blood the thirſty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the Steely point of Cliffords Launce:
And in the very pangs of death, he cryde,
Like to a diſmall Clangor heard from farre,
Warwicke, revenge; Brother revenge my death.
So underneath the belly of their Steeds,
That ſtain'd their Fetlockes in his ſmoaking blood,
The Noble Gentleman gave up the ghoſt.
War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:
Ile kill my Horſe becauſe I will not flye:
Why ſtand we like ſoft-hearted women heere,
Wayling our loſſes, whiles the Foe doth Rage,
And looke upon, as if the Tragedy
Were plaid in jeſt, by counterfetting Actors.
Heere on my knee, I vow to God above,
Ile never Pawſe againe, never ſtand ſtill,
Till either death hath cloſ'd theſe eyes of mine,
Or Fortune given me meaſure of Revenge.
Ed. Oh Warwicke, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chaine my ſoule to thine.
And ere my knee riſe from the Earths cold face,
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou ſetter up, and plucker downe of Kings,
Beſeeching thee (if with thy will it ſtands)
That to my Foes this body muſt be prey,
Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
And give ſweet paſſage to my ſinfull ſoule.
Now Lords, take leave untill we meete againe,
Where ere it be, in heaven, or in earth.
Rich. Brother,
Give me thy hand, and gentle Warwicke,
Let me embrace thee in my wearry armes:
I that did never weepe, now melt with wo,
That Winter ſhould cut off our Spring-time ſo.
War. Away, away:
Once more ſweet Lords farewell.
Cla. Yet let us altogether to our Troopes,
And give them leave to flye, that will not ſtay:
And call them Pillars that will ſtand to us:
And if we thrive, promiſe them ſuch rewards
As Victors weare at the Olympian Games.
This may plant courage in their quailing breaſts,
For yet is hope of Life and Victory:

Foreſlow no longer, make we hence amaine. Exeunt.

Excurſions. Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now Clifford, I have ſingled thee alone,
Suppoſe this arme is for the Duke of Yorke,
And this for Rutland, both bound to revenge,
Wer't thou inviron'd with a Brazen wall.

Clif. Now Richard, I am with thee heere alone,
This is the hand that ſtabb'd thy Father Yorke,
And this the hand, that ſlew thy Brother Rutland,
And here's the heart, that triumphs in their death,
And cheeres theſe hands, that ſlew thy Sire and Brother,
To execute the like upon thy ſelfe,
And ſo have at thee.

They Fight, Warwicke comes, Clifford flyes.

Rich. Nay Warwicke, ſingle out ſome other Chace,
For I my ſelfe will hunt this Wolfe to death. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter King Henry alone.

Hen. This battell fares like to the mornings Warre;
When dying clouds contend, with growing light,
What time the Shepheard blowing of his nailes,
Can neither call it perfect day, nor night.
Now ſwayes it this way, like a Mighty Sea,
Forc'd by the Tide, to combat with the Winde:
Now ſwayes it that way, like the ſelfe-ſame Sea,
Forc'd to retyre by fury of the Winde.
Sometime, the Flood prevailes; and then the Winde:
Now, one the better: then, another beſt;
Both tugging to be Victors, breſt to breſt:
Yet neither Conqueror, nor Conquered.
So is the equall poiſe of this fell Warre.
Heere on this Mole-hill will I ſit me downe,
To whom God will, there be the victory:
For Margaret my Queene, and Clifford too
Have chid me from the Battell: Swearing both,
They proſper beſt of all when I am thence.
Would I were dead, if Gods good will were ſo;
For what is in this world, but Greefe and Woe.
Oh God! me thinkes it were a happy life,
To be no better then a homely Swaine,
To ſit upon a hill, as I doe now,
To carve out Dialls queintly, point by point,
Thereby to ſee the Minutes how they runne:
How many makes the Houre full compleate,
How many Houres bring about the Day,
How many Dayes will finiſh up the Yeare,
How many Yeares, a Mortall man may live.
When this is knowne, then to divide the Times:
So many Houres, muſt I tend my Flocke;
So many Houres, muſt I take my Reſt:
So many Houres, muſt I Contemplate:
So many Houres, muſt I Sport my ſelfe;
So many Dayes, my Ewes have bene with yong:
So many weekes, ere the poore Fooles will Eane:
So many yeares, ere I ſhall ſheere the Fleece:
So Minutes, Houres, Dayes, Monthes, and Yeares,
Paſt over to the end they were created,
Would bring white haires, unto a Quiet grave.
Ah! what a life were this? How ſweet? how lovely?
Gives not the Hawthorne buſh a ſweeter ſhade
To Shepheards, looking on their ſilly Sheepe,
Then doth a rich Imbroider'd Canopy
To Kings, that feare their Subjects treachery?
Oh yes, it doth; a thouſand fold it doth.
And to conclude, the Shepherds homely Curds,
His cold thinne drinke out of his Leather Bottle,
His wonted ſleepe, under a freſh trees ſhade,
All which ſecure, and ſweetly he enjoyes,
Is farre beyond a Princes Delicates:
His Viands ſparkling in a Golden Cup,
His body couched in a curious bed,
When Care, Miſtruſt, and Treaſon waits on him,

Alarum. Enter a Sonne that hath kill'd his Father, at one doore: and a Father that hath kill'd his Sonne at another doore.

Son. Ill blowes the winde that profits no body,
This man whom hand to hand I ſlew in fight,
May be poſſeſſed with ſome ſtore of Crownes,
And I that (haply) take them from him now,
May yet (ere night) yeeld both my life and them
To ſome man elſe, as this dead man doth me.
Who's this? Oh God! It is my Fathers face,
Whom in this Conflict, I (unwares) have kill'd:
Oh heavy times! begetting ſuch Events.
From London, by the King was I preſt forth,
My Father being the Earle of Warwickes man,
Came on the part of Yorke; preſt by his Maiſter:
And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life,
Have by my hands, of Life bereaved him.
Pardon me God, I knew not what I did:
And pardon Father, for I knew not thee.
My Teares ſhall wipe away theſe bloody markes:
And no more words, til they have flow'd their fill.

King. O pitteous ſpectacle! O bloody Times!
Whiles Lyons warre, and battaile for their Dennes,
Poore harmleſſe Lambes abide their enmity.
Weepe wretched man: Ile ayde thee Teare for Teare,
And let our hearts and eyes, like Civill Warre,
Be blinde with teares, and break ore-charg'd with griefe

Enter Father, bearing of his Sonne.

Fa. Thou that ſo ſtoutly hath reſiſted me,
Give, me thy Gold, if thou haſt any Gold:
For I have bought it with an hundred blowes.
But let me ſee: Is this our Foe-mans face?
Ah, no, no, no, it is mine onely Sonne.
Ah Boy, if any life be left in thee,
Throw up thine eye: ſee, ſee, what ſhowres ariſe,
Blowne with the windie Tempeſt of my heart,
Vpon thy wounds, that killes mine Eye, and Heart.
O pitty God, this miſerable Age!
What Stragems? how fell? how Butcherly?
Erroneous, mutinous, and vnnaturall,
This deadly quarrell daily doth beget?
O Boy! thy Father gave thee life too ſoone,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

Ki. Woe above woe: griefe, more then common greefe;
O that my death would ſtay theſe ruthfull deeds:
O pitty, pitty, gentle heaven pitty:
The Red Roſe and the White are on his face,
The Fatall Colours of our ſtriving Houſes:
The one, his purple Blood right well reſembles,
The other his pale Cheekes (me thinkes) preſenteth:
Wither one Roſe, and let the other flouriſh:
If you contend, a thouſand lives muſt wither.

Son. How will my Mother, for a Fathers death
Take on with me, and n'ere be ſatisfi'd?

Fa. How will my Wife, for ſlaughter of my Sonne,
Shed ſeas of Teares, and ne're be ſatisfi'd?

King. How will the Country, for theſe wofull chances,

Miſ-thinke the King,and not be ſatiſfied?
Son. Was ever ſonne,ſo rew'd a Fathers death?
Fath. Was ever Father ſo bemoan'd his Sonne?
Hen. Was ever King ſo greev'd for Subjects woe?
Much is your ſorrow; Mine,ten times ſo much.
Son. Ile beare thee hence, where I may weepe my fill.
Fath. Theſe armes of mine ſhall be thy winding ſheet;
My heart(ſweet Boy)ſhall be thy Sepulcher,
For from my heart,thine Image ne're ſhall go.
My ſighing breſt,ſhall be thy Funerall bell;
And ſo obſequious will thy Father be,
Men for the loſſe of thee,having no more,
As Priam was for all his Valiant Sonnes,
Ile beare thee hence,and let them fight that will,
For I have murthered where I ſhould not kill. Exit.
Hen. Sad-hearted-men,much overgone with Care;
Heere ſits a King, more wofull then you are.

Alarums. Excurſions. Enter the Queen,the Prince,and Exeter.

Prin. Fly Father,flye:for all your Friends are fled.
And Warwicke rages like a chafed Bull:
Away,for death doth hold us in purſuite.
Que. Mount you my Lord,towards Barwicke poſt amaine:
Edward and Richard like a brace of Grey-hounds,
Having the fearfull flying Hare in ſight,
With fiery eyes,ſparkling for very wrath,
And bloody ſteele graſpt in their yrefull hands
Are at our backes,and therefore hence amaine.
Exet. Away:for vengeance comes along with them.
Nay,ſtay not to expoſtulate,make ſpeed,
Or elſe come after,Ile away before.
Hen. Nay take me with thee,good ſweet Exeter:
Not that I feare to ſtay,but love to goe
Whither the Queene intends. Forward,away. Exeunt.

Alowd alarum. Enter Clifford Wounded.

Clif. Heere burnes my Candle out;I,heere it dies,
Which whiles it laſted,gave King Henry light.
O Lancaſter! I feare thy overthrow,
More then my Bodies parting with my Soule:
My Love and Feare, glew'd many Friends to thee,
And now I fall. Thy tough Commixtures melt,
Impairing Henry, ſtrength'ning miſproud Yorke;
And whither flye the Gnats,but to the Sunne?
And who ſhines now,but Henries Enemies?
O Phœbus!had'ſt thou never given conſent,
That Phaeton ſhould checke thy fiery Steds,
Thy burning Carre never had ſcorch'd the earth.
And Henry,had'ſt thou ſway'd as Kings ſhould do,
Or as thy Father,and his Father did,
Giving no ground unto the houſe of Yorke,
They never then had ſprung like Sommer Flyes:
I,and ten thouſand in this luckleſſe Realme,
Had left no mourning Widdowes for our death,
And thou this day,had'ſt kept thy Chaire in peace.
For what doth cheriſh Weeds,but gentle ayre?
And what makes Robbers bold, but too much lenity?
Bootleſſe are Plaints,and Cureleſſe are my Wounds?
No way to flye,nor ſtrength to hold out flight:
The Foe is mercileſſe,and will not pitty:
For at their hands I have deſerv'd no pitty.
The ayre hath got into my deadly Wounds,
And much effuſe of blood,doth make me faint:
Come Yorke,and Richard,Warwicke, and the reſt,
I ſtab'd your Fathers boſomes;Split my breſt.

Alarum & Retreat. Enter Edward,Warwicke, Richard,and Souldiers,Montague,& Clarence.

Ed. Now breathe we Lords,good fortune bids us pauſe,
And ſmooth the frownes of War,with peacefull lookes:
Some Troopes purſue the bloody-minded Queene,
That led calme Henry,though he were a King,
As doth a Saile,fill'd with a fretting Guſt
Command an Argoſie to ſtemme the Waves:
But thinke you(Lords)that Clifford fled with them?
War. No,'tis impoſſible he ſhould eſcape:
(For though before his face I ſpeake the word)
Your Brother Richard markt him for the Grave.
And whereſoere he is,hee's ſurely dead. Clifford grones
Rich. Whoſe ſoule is that which takes hir heavy leave?
A deadly grone,like life and deaths departing.
See who it is.
Ed. And now the Battaile's ended,
If Friend or Foe,let him be gently uſed.
Rich. Revoke that doome of mercy,for 'tis Clifford,
Who not contented that he lopp'd the Branch
In hewing Rutland,when his leaves put forth,
But ſet his murth'ring knife unto the Roote,
From whence that tender ſpray did ſweetly ſpring,
I meane our Princely Father,Duke of Yorke.
War. From off the gates of Yorke, fetch down ÿ head,
Your Fathers head,which Clifford placed there:
In ſtead whereof,let this ſupply the roome,
Meaſure for meaſure,muſt be anſwered.
Ed. Bring forth that fatall Schreechowle to our houſe,
That nothing ſung but death,to us and ours:
Now death ſhall ſtop his diſmall threatning ſound,
And his ill-boading tongue, no more ſhall ſpeake.
War. I thinke his underſtanding is bereft:
Speake Clifford,doſt thou know who ſpeakes to thee?
Darke cloudy death ore-ſhades his beames of life,
And he nor ſees,nor heares us,what we ſay.
Rich. O would he did,and ſo(perhaps)he doth,
'Tis but his policy to counterfet,
Becauſe he would avoid ſuch bitter taunts
Which in the time of death he gave our Father.
Cla. If ſo thou think'ſt,
Vex him with eager Words.
Rich. Clifford,aske mercy,and obtaine no grace.
Ed. Clifford,repent in bootleſſe penitence.
VVar. Clifford, deviſe excuſes for thy faults.
Cla. While we deviſe fell Tortures for thy faults.
Rich. Thou didd'ſt love Yorke,and I am ſon to Yorke.
Edw. Thou pittied'ſt Rutland, I will pitty thee.
Cla. Where's Captaine Margaret,to fence you now?
VVar. They mocke thee Clifford,
Sweare as thou was't wont.
Ric. What,not an Oath?Nay then the world go's hard,
When Clifford cannot ſpare his Friends an oath:
I know by that he's dead,and by my Soule,
If this right hand would buy but two howres life,
That I(in all deſpight)might rayle at him,
This hand ſhould chop it off:& with the iſſuing Blood
Stifle the Villaine,whoſe unſtanched thirſt
Yorke,and yong Rutland could not ſatisfie.
VVar. I, but he's dead. Off with the Traitors head,
And reare it in the place your Fathers ſtand,
And now to London with Triumphant march,

There to be crowned Englands Royall King:
From whence, ſhall Warwicke cut the Sea to France,
And aske the Lady Bona for thy Queene:
So ſhalt thou ſinow both theſe Lands together,
And having France thy Friend, thou ſhalt not dread
The ſcattred Foe, that hopes to riſe agine:
For though they cannot greatly ſting to hurt,
Yet looke to have them buz to offend thine eares.
Firſt, will I ſee the Coronation,
And then to Brittany Ile croſſe the Sea,
To effect this marriage, ſo it pleaſe my Lord.
Ed. Even as thou wilt ſweet Warwicke, let it be:
For on thy ſhoulder do I builde my Seate;
And never will I undertake the thing
Wherein thy counſaile and conſent is wanting:
Richard, I will create thee Duke of Glouceſter,
And George of Clarence; Warwicke as our Selfe,
Shall do, and undo as him pleaſeth beſt.
Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence, George of Gloſter,
For Gloſters Dukedome is too ominous.
War. Tut, that's a fooliſh obſervation:
Richard, be Duke of Gloſter: Now to London,
To ſee theſe Honors in poſſeſſion. Exeunt.

Enter Sinklo, and Humfrey, with Croſſe-bowes in their hands.

Sink. Vnder this thicke growne brake, wee'l ſhrowd (our ſelves:
For through this Laund anon the Deere will come,
And in this covert will we make our Stand,
Culling the principall of all the Deere.
Hum. Ile ſtay above the hill, ſo both may ſhoot,
Sink. That cannot be, the noiſe of thy Croſſe-bow
Will ſcarre the Heard, and ſo my ſhoot is loſt:
Heere ſtand we both, and ayme we at the beſt:
And for the time ſhall not ſeeme tedious,
Ile tell thee what befell me on a day,
In this ſelfe-place, where now we meane to ſtand.
Sink. Heere comes a man, let's ſtay till he be paſt:

Enter the King with a Prayer booke.

Hen. From Scotland am I ſtolne even of pure love,
To greet mine owne Land with my wiſhfull ſight:
No Harry, Harry, 'tis no Land of thine,
Thy place is fill'd, thy Scepter wrung from thee,
Thy Balme waſht off, wherewith thou was Annointed:
No bending knee will call thee Cæſar now,
No humble ſuters preaſe to ſpeake for right:
No, not a man comes for redreſſe of thee:
For how can I helpe them, and not my ſelfe?
Sin. I, heere's a Deere, whoſe skin's a Keepers Fee:
This is the quondam King; Let's ſeize upon him.
Hen. Let me embrace the ſowre Adverſaries,
For Wiſe men ſay, it is the wiſeſt courſe.
Hum. Why linger we? Let us lay hands upon him.
Sink. Forbeare a-while, wee'l heare a little more.
Hen. My Queene and Son are gone to France for aid:
And (as I heare) the great Commanding Warwicke
Is thither gone, to crave the French Kings Siſter
To wife for Edward. If this newes be true,
Poore Queene, and Sonne, your labour is but loſt:
For Warwicke is a ſubtle Orator:
And Lewis a Prince ſoone wonne with moving words:
By this account then, Margaret may winne him,
For ſhe's a woman to be pittied much:
Her ſighes will make a batt'ry in his breſt,
Her teares will pierce into a Marble heart:
The Tyger will be milde, whiles ſhe doth mourne;
And Nero will be tainted with remorſe,
To heare and ſee her plaints, her Briniſh Teares.
I, but ſhee's come to begge, Warwicke to give:
Shee on his left ſide, craving ayde for Henry;
He on his right, asking a wife for Edward.
Shee Weepes, and ſayes, her Henry is depos'd:
He Smiles, and ſayes, his Edward is inſtaul'd;
That ſhe (poore Wretch) for greefe can ſpeake no more:
Whiles Warwicke tels his Title, ſmooths the Wrong,
Inferreth arguments of mighty ſtrength,
And in concluſion winnes the King from her,
With promiſe of his Siſter, and what elſe,
To ſtrengthen and ſupport King Edwards place.
O Margaret, thus 'twill be, and thou (poore ſoule)
Art then forſaken, as thou went'ſt forlorne.
Hum. Say, what art thou talk'ſt of Kings & Queens?
King. More then I ſeeme, and leſſe then I was born to:
A man at leaſt, for leſſe I ſhould not be:
And men may talke of Kings, and why not I?
Hum. I, but thou talk'ſt, as if thou wer't a King,
King. Why ſo I am (in Minde) and that's enough.
Hum. But if thou be a King, where is thy Crowne?
King. My Crowne is in my heart, not on my head:
Not deck'd with Diamonds, and Indian ſtones:
Nor to be ſeene: my Crowne, is call'd Content,
A Crowne it is, that ſildome Kings enjoy.
Hum. Well, if you be a King crown'd with Content,
Your Crowne Content, and you, muſt be contented
To go along with us. For (as we thinke)
You are the king, King Edward hath depos'd:
And we his ſubjects, ſworne in all Allegeance,
Will apprehend you, as his Enemy.
King. But did you never ſweare, and breake an Oath.
Hum. No, never ſuch an Oath, nor will not now.
King. Where did you dwell when I was K. of England?
Hum. Heere in this Countrey, where we now remaine.
King. I was annointed King at nine monthes old,
My Father, and my Grandfather were Kings:
And you were ſworne true Subjects unto me:
And tell me then, have you not broke your Oathes?
Si. No, for we were Subjects, but while you were king.
King. Why? Am I dead? Do I not breath a Man?
Ah ſimple men, you know not what you ſweare:
Looke, as I blow this Feather from my Face,
And as the Ayre blowes it to me againe,
Obeying with my winde when I do blow,
And yeelding to another, when it blowes,
Commanded alwayes by the greater guſt:
Such is the lightneſſe of you, common men.
But do not breake your Oathe, for of that ſinne,
My milde intreaty ſhall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the King ſhall be commanded,
And be you kings, command, and Ile obey.
Sink. We are true Subjects to the King,
King Edward.
King. So would you be againe to Henry,
If he were ſeated as King Edward is.
Sink. We charge you in Gods name & the Kings,
To go with us unto the Officers.
King. In Gods name lead, your Kings name be obeyd,
And what God will, that let your King performe,
And what he will, I humbly yeeld unto. Exeunt.

Enter K. Edward, Gloſter, Clarence, Lady Gray.

King. Brother of Gloſter, at S. Albons field

This Ladyes Husband, Sir Richard Grey, was ſlaine,
His Land then ſeiz'd on by the Conqueror,
Her ſuit is now, to repoſſeſſe thoſe Lands,
Which wee in Iuſtice cannot well deny,
Becauſe in Quarrell of the Houſe of Yorke,
The worthy Gentleman did loſe his Life.
Rich. Your Highneſſe ſhall doe well to graunt her ſuit:
It were diſhonor to deny it her.
King. It were no leſſe, but yet Ile make a pawſe.
Rich. Yea, is it ſo:
I ſee the Lady hath a thing to graunt,
Before the King will graunt her humble ſuit.
Cla. Hee knowes the Game, how true hee keepes the winde?
Rich. Silence.
King. Widow, we will conſider of your ſuit,
And come ſome other time to know our minde.
Wid. Right gracious Lord, I cannot brooke delay,
May it pleaſe your Highneſſe to reſolve me now,
And what your pleaſure is, ſhall ſatisfie me.
Rich. I Widow? then Ile warrant you all your Lands,
And if what pleaſes him, ſhall pleaſe you:
Fight cloſer, or good faith you'le catch a Blow.
Cla. I feare her not, unleſſe ſhe chance to fall.
Rich. God forbid that, for hee'le take vantages.
King. How many Children haſt thou, Widow ? tell me.
Cla. I thinke he meanes to begge a Child of her.
Rich. Nay then whip me: hee'le rather give her two.
Wid. Three, my moſt gracious Lord.
Rich. You ſhall have foure, if you'le be rul'd by him.
King. 'Twere pitty they ſhould loſe their Fathers Lands.
Wid. Be pittifull, dread Lord, and graunt it then.
King. Lords give us leave, Ile trye this Widowes wit.
Rich. I, good leave have you, for you will have leave,
Till Youth take leave, and leave you to the Cruch.
King. Now tell me, Madame, doe you love your Children?
Wid. I, full as dearely as I love my ſelfe.
King. And would you not doe much to doe them good?
Wid. To doe them good, I would ſuſtayne ſome harme.
King. Then get your Husbands Lands, to doe them good.
Wid. Therefore I came unto your Majeſty.
King. Ile tell you how theſe Lands are to be got.
Wid. So ſhall you bind me to your Highneſſe ſervice.
King. What ſervice wilt thou doe me, if I give them?
Wid. What you command, that reſts in me to doe.
King. But you will take exceptions to my Boone.
Wid. No, gracious Lord, except I cannot doe it.
King. I, but thou canſt doe what I meane to aske.
Wid. Why then I will doe what your Grace commands.
Rich. Hee plyes her hard, and much Raine weares the Marble.
Clar. As red as fire? nay then, her Wax muſt melt.
Wid. Why ſtoppes my Lord? ſhall I not heare my Taske?
King. An eaſie Taske, 'tis but to love a King.
Wid. That's ſoone perform'd, becauſe I am a Subject.
King. Why then, thy Husbands Lands I freely give thee.
Wid. I take my leave with many thouſand thanke.
Rich. The Match is made, ſhe ſeales it with a Curtſie.
King. But ſtay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I meane.
Wid. The fruits of Love, I meane, my loving Liege.
King. I, but I feare me in another ſence.
What Love, think'ſt thou, I ſue ſo much to get?
Wid. My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers,
That love which Vertue begges, and Vertue grauuts.
King. No, by my troth, I did not meane ſuch love.
Wid. Why then you meane not as I thought you did.
King. But now you partly may perceive my minde.
Wid. My minde will never graunt what I perceive
Your Higneſſe aymes at, if I ayme aright.
King. To tell thee plaine, I ayme to lye with thee.
Wid. To tell you plaine, I had rather lye in Priſon.
King. Why then thou ſhalt not have thy Husbands Lands.
Wid. Why then mine Honeſty ſhall be my Dower,
For by that loſſe, I will not purchaſe them.
King. Therein thou wrong'ſt thy Children mightily.
Wid. Herein your Highneſſe wrongs both them & me:
But mighty Lord, this merry inclination
Accords not with the ſadneſſe of my ſuit:
Pleaſe you diſmiſſe me, either with I, or no.
King. I, if thou wilt ſay I to my requeſt:
No, if thou do'ſt ſay No to my demand.
Wid. Then No, my Lord: my ſuit is at an end.
Rich. The Widow likes him not, ſhes knits her Browes.
Clarence. Hee is thee blunteſt Wooer in Chriſtendome.
King. Her Looks doe argue her replete with Modeſty,
Her Words doe ſhew her Wit incomparable,
All her perfections challenge Soveraignty,
One way, or other, ſhe is for a King,
And ſhee ſhall be my Love, or elſe my Queene.
Say, that King Edward take thee for his Queene?
Wid. 'Tis better ſaid then done, my gracious Lord:
I am a ſubject fit to jeaſt withall,
But farre unfit to be a Soveraigne.
King. Sweet Widow, by my State I ſweare to thee,
I ſpeake no more then what my Soule intends,
And that is, to enjoy thee for my Love.
Wid. And that is more then I will yeeld unto:
I know, I am too meane to be your Queene,
And yet too good to be your Concubine.
King. You cavill, Widow, I did meane my Queene.
Wid. 'Twill grieve your Grace, my ſonnes ſhould call you Father.
King. No more, then when my Daughters
Call thee Mother.
Thou art a Widow, and thou haſt ſome Children,
And by Gods Mother, I being but a Batchelor,
Have other-ſome. Why, 'tis a happy thing,
To be the Father unto many Sonnes:
Anſwer no more, for thou ſhalt be my Queene.
Rich. The Ghoſtly Father now hath done his Shrift.
Cla. When hee was made a Shriver, 'twas for ſhift.
King. Brothers, you muſe what Chat wee two have had.
Richard. The Widow likes it not, for ſhee lookes ſad.
King. You'ld thinke it ſtrange, if I ſhould marry her.
Cla. To whom my Lord?
King. Why Clarence, to my ſelfe.

Rich. That would be tenne dayes wonder at the leaſt.
Clar. That's a day longer then a Wonder laſts.
Rich. By ſo much is the Wonder in extremes.
King. Well, ieaſt on Brothers: I can tell you both,
Her ſuit is graunted for her Husbands Lands.

Enter a Noble man.

Nob. My gracious Lord, Henry your Foe is taken,
And brought your Priſoner to your Pallace Gate.
King. See that he be convey'd unto the Tower:
And goe wee Brothers to the man that tooke him,
To queſtion of his apprehenſion.
Widow goe you along: Lords uſe her honourably.
Exeunt.

Manet Richard.

Rich. I, Edward will uſe Women honourably.
Would he were waſted, Marrow, Bones, and all,
That from his Loynes no hopefull Branch may ſpring,
To croſſe me from the Golden time I looke for:
And yet, betweene my Soules deſire, and me,
The luſtfull Edwards Title buryed,
Is Clarence, Henry, and his Sonne young Edward,
And all the unlook'd-for Iſſue of their Bodies,
To take their Roomes, ere I can place my ſelfe:
A cold premeditation for my purpoſe.
Why then I doe but dreame on Soveraignty,
Like one that ſtands upon a Promontorie,
And ſpyes a farre-off ſhore, where he would tread,
Wiſhing his foot were equall with his eye,
And chides the Sea, that ſunders him from thence,
Saying hee'le lade it dry, to have his way:
So doe I wiſh the Crowne, being ſo farre off,
And ſo I chide the meanes that keepes me from it,
And ſo (I ſay) Ile cut the Cauſes off,
Flattering me with impoſſibilities:
My Eyes too quicke, my Heart o're-weenes too much,
Vnleſſe my Hand and Strength could equall them.
Well, ſay there is no Kingdome then for Richard:
What other Pleaſure can the World affoord?
Ile make my Heaven in a Ladies Lappe,
And decke my Body in gay Ornaments,
And 'witch ſweet Ladies with my Words and Lookes.
Oh miſerable Thought! and more unlikely,
Then to accompliſh twenty Golden Crownes.
Why Love forſwore me in my Mothers Wombe:
And for I ſhould not deale in her ſoft Lawes,
Shee did corrupt frayle Nature with ſome Bribe,
To ſhrinke mine Arme up like a wither'd Shrub,
To make an envious Mountaine on my Back,
Where ſits Deformity to mocke my Body;
To ſhape my Legges of an unequall ſize,
To diſ-proportion me in every part:
Like to a Chaos, or an un-lick'd Beare-whelpe,
That carryes no impreſſion like the Damme.
And am I then a man to be belov'd?
Oh monſtrous fault, to harbour ſuch a thought.
Then ſince this Earth affoords no Ioy to me,
But to command, to check, to o're-beare ſuch,
As are of better Perſon then my ſelfe:
Ile make my Heaven, to dreame upon the Crowne,
And whiles I live, t'account this World but Hell,
Vntill my miſ-ſhap'd Trunke, that beares this Head,
Be round impaled with a glorious Crowne.
And yet I know not how to get the Crowne,
For many Lives ſtand betweene me and home:
And I, like one loſt in a Thorny Wood,
That rents the Thornes, and is rent with the Thornes,
Seeking a way, and ſtraying from the way,
Not knowing how to finde the open Ayre,
But toyling deſperately to finde it out,
Torment my ſelfe, to catch the Engliſh Crowne:
And from that torment I will free my ſelfe,
Or hew my way out with a bloody Axe.
Why I can ſmile, and murther whiles I ſmile,
And cry, Content, to that which grieves my Heart,
And wet my Cheekes with artificiall Teares,
And frame my Face to all occaſions.
Ile drowne more Saylers then the Mermaid ſhall,
Ile ſlay more gazers then the Baſiliske,
Ile play the Orator as well as Neſtor,
Deceive more ſlyly then Vlyſſes could,
And like a Sinon, take another Troy.
I can adde Colours to the Camelion,
Change ſhapes with Proteus, for advantages,
And ſet the murtherous Machevill to Schoole.
Can I doe this, and cannot get a Crowne?
Tut, were it farther off, Ile plucke it downe. Exit.

Flouriſh.

Enter Lewis the French King, his Siſter Bona, his Admirall, call'd Bourbon: Prince Edward, Queene Margaret, and the Earle of Oxford. Lewis ſits, and riſeth up againe.

Lewis. Faire Queene of England, worthy Margaret,
Sit downe with us: it ill befits thy State,
And Birth, that thou ſhould'ſt ſtand, while Lewis doth ſit.
Mar. No, mighty King of France: now Margaret
Muſt ſtrike her ſaile, and learne a while to ſerve,
Where Kings command. I was (I muſt confeſſe)
Great Albions Queene, in former Golden dayes:
But now miſchance hath trod my Title downe,
And with diſ-honor layd me on the ground,
Where I muſt take like Seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble Seat conforme my ſelfe.
Lewis. Why ſay, faire Queene, whence ſprings this deepe deſpaire?
Mar. From ſuch a cauſe, as fills mine eyes with teares,
And ſtops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.
Lew. What ere it be, be thou ſtill like thy ſelfe,
And ſit thee by our ſide. Seats her by him.
Yeeld not thy necke to Fortunes yoake,
But let thy dauntleſſe minde ſtill ride in triumph,
Over all miſchance.
Be plaine, Queene Margaret, and tell thy griefe,
It ſhall be eas'd, if France can yeeld reliefe.
Mar. Thoſe gracious words
Revive my drooping thoughts,
And give my tongue-ty'd ſorrowes leave to ſpeake.
Now therefore be it knowne to Noble Lewis,
That Henry, ſole poſſeſſor of my Love,
Is, of a King, become a baniſht man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a Forlorne;
While prowd ambitious Edward, Duke of Yorke,
Vſurpes the Regall Title, and the Seat
Of Englands true anoynted lawfull King.
This is the cauſe that I, poore Margaret,
With this my Sonne, Prince Edward, Henries Heire,
Am come to crave thy iuſt and lawfull ayde:
And if thou faile us, all our hope is done.
Scotland hath will to helpe, but cannot helpe:

Our people, and our Peeres, are both miſ-led,
Our Treaſure ſeiz'd, our Souldiers put to flight,
And (as thou ſeeſt) our ſelves in heavy plight.
Lew. Renowed Queene,
With patience calme the Storme,
While we bethinke a meanes to breake it off.
Marg. The more we ſtay, the ſtronger growes our Foe.
Lew. The more I ſtay, the more Ile ſuccour thee.
Marg. O, but impatience waiteth on true ſorrow.
And ſee where comes the breeder of my ſorrow.

Enter Warwicke.

Lew. What's he approacheth boldly to our preſence?
Marg. Our Earle of Warwicke, Edwards greateſt friend.
Lewis. Welcome brave Warwicke, what beings thee to France? He deſcends. She ariſeth.
Marg. I, now begins a ſecond Storme to riſe,
For this is he that moves both Winde and Tyde.
Warw. From worthy Edward, King of Albion,
My Lord and Soveraigne, and thy vowed Friend,
I come (in Kindneſſe, and unfayned Love)
Firſt, to doe greetings to thy Royall Perſon,
And then to crave a League of Amity:
And laſtly, to confirme that Amity
With Nuptiall Knot, if thou vouchſafe to graunt
That vertuous Lady Bona, thy faire Siſter,
To Englands King, in lawfull Marriage.
Marg. If that goe forward, Henries hope is done.
Warw. And gracious Madam, Speaking to Bona.
In our Kings behalfe,
I am commanded, with your leave and favour,
Humbly to kiſſe you Hand, and with my Tongue
To tell the paſſion of my Soveraignes Heart;
Where Fame, late entring at his heedfull Eares,
Hath plac'd thy beauties Image, and thy Vertue.
Marg. King Lewis, and Lady Bona, heare me ſpeake,
Before you anſwer Warwicke. His demand
Springs not from Edwards well-meant honeſt Love,
But from Deceit, bred by Neceſſity:
For how can Tyrants ſafely governe home,
Vnleſſe abroad they purchaſe great allyance?
To prove him Tyrant, this reaſon may ſuffice,
That Henry liveth ſtill: but were he dead,
Yet here Prince Edward ſtands, King Henries Sonne.
Looke therefore Lewis, that by this League and Marriage
Thou draw not on thy Danger, and Dis-honor:
For though Vſurpers ſway the rule a while,
Yet Heavens are juſt, and Time ſuppreſſeth Wrongs.
War. Injurious Margaret.
Edw. And why not Queene?
War. Becauſe thy father Henry did uſurpe,
And thou no more art Prince, then ſhe is Queene.
Oxf. Then Warwicke diſanulls great Iohn of Gaunt,
Which did ſubdue the greateſt part of Spaine;
And after Iohn of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,
Whoſe Wiſdome was a Mirror to the wiſeſt:
And after that wiſe Prince, Henry the Fift,
Who by his Proweſſe conquered all France:
From theſe, our Henry lineally deſcends,
War. Oxford, how haps it in this ſmooth diſcourſe,
You told not, how Henry the Sixt hath loſt
All that, which Henry the Fift had gotten;
Me thinkes ehese Peeres of France ſhould ſmile at that.
But for the reſt: you tell a Pedigree
Of threeſcore and two yeeres, a ſilly time
To make preſcription for a Kingdomes worth.
Oxf. Why Warwicke, canſt thou ſpeake againſt thy Liege
Whom thou obeyd'ſt thirty and ſix yeeres,
And not bewray thy Treaſon with a bluſh?
War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler falſehood with a Pedigree?
For ſhame leave Henry, and call Edward King.
Oxf. Call him my King, by whoſe injurious doome
My elder Brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death? and more then ſo, my Father,
Even in the downe-fall of his mellow'd yeeres,
When Nature brought him to the doore of Death;
No Warwicke, no: while Life upholds this Arme,
This Arme upholds the Houſe of Lancaſter.
Warw. And I the houſe of Yorke.
Lew. Queene Margaret, Prince Edward, and Oxford
Vouchſafe at our requeſt, to ſtand aſide,
While I uſe further conference with Warwicke.
They ſtand aloofe.
Mar. Heavens grant, that Warwickes words bewitch him not.
Lew. Now Warwicke, tell me even upon thy conſcience
Is Edward your true King? for I were loth
To linke with him, that were not lawfull choſen.
Warw. Thereon I pawne my Credit, and mine Honor.
Lew. But is he gracious in the peoples eye?
War. The more, that Henry was unfortunate.
Lew. Then further: all diſſembling ſet aſide,
Tell me for truth, the meaſure of his love,
Vnto our Siſter Bona.
War. Such it ſeemes,
As may beſeeme a Monarch like himſelfe.
My ſelfe have often heard him ſay, and ſweare,
That this his Love was an externall Plant,
Whereof the Root was fixt in Vertues ground,
The Leaves and Fruit maintain'd with Beauties Sunne,
Exempt from Envy, but not from Diſdaine,
Vnleſſe the Lady Bona quit his paine.
Lew Now Siſter, let us heare your firme reſolve.
Bona. Your graunt, or your deny, ſhall be mine,
Yet I confeſſe, that often ere this day, Speaks to War.
When I have heard your Kings deſert recounted,
Mine eare hath tempted judgement to deſire.
Lew. Then Warwicke, this:
Our Siſter ſhall be Edwards.
And now forthwith ſhall Articles be drawne,
Touching the Ioynture that your King muſt make,
Which with her Dowry ſhall be counter-poys'd:
Draw neere, Queene Margaret, and be a witneſſe,
That Bona ſhall be Wife to the Engliſh King.
Prin. Edw. To Edward, but not to the Engliſh King.
Marg. Deceitfull Warwicke, it was thy device,
By this alliance to make voyd my ſuit:
Before thy comming, Lewis was Henries friend.
Lew. And ſtill is friend to him, and Margaret,
But if your Title to the Crowne be weake,
As may appeare by Edwards good ſucceſſe:
Then 'tis but reaſon, that I be releas'd
From giving ayde, which late I promiſed.
Yet ſhall you have all kindneſſe at my hand,
That your eſtate requires, and mine can yeeld.
Warw. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his eaſe;

Where having nothing, nothing can he loſe.
And as for you your ſelfe (our quondam Queene)
You have a Father able to maintaine you,
And better 'twere, you troubled him, then France.
Mar. Peace impudent, and ſhameleſſe Warwicke, Peace,
Proud ſetter up, and puller downe of Kings,
I will not hence, till with my Talke and Teares
(Both full of Truth) I make King Lewis behold
Thy ſlye conveyance, and thy Lords falſe love.
Poſte blowing a horn within.
For both of you are Birds of ſelfe-ſame Feather.
Lew. Warwicke, this is ſome poſte to us, or thee.
Enter a Poſte.
Poſte. My Lord Ambaſſador,
Theſe Letters are for you. Speaks to Warwicke.
Sent from your Brother Marqueſſe Mountague.
Theſe from our King, unto your Majeſty. To Lewis.
And Madam, theſe for you, To Margaret.
From whom, I know not.
They all reade their Letters.
Oxf. I like it well, that our faire Queene and Miſtris
Smiles at her newes, while Warwicke frownes at his.
Prince Edw. Nay marke how Lewis ſtampes as he were netled. I hope, all's for the beſt.
Lew. Warwicke, what are thy Newes?
And yours, faire Queene?
Mar. Mine ſuch, as fill my heart with unhop'd joyes.
War. Mine full of ſorrow, and hearts diſcontent.
Lew. What? has your King marryed the Lady Grey?
And now to ſooth your Forgery, and his,
Sends me a Paper to perſwade me Patience?
Is this th'Alliance that he ſeekes with France?
Dare he preſume to ſcorne us in this manner?
Mar. I told your Majeſty as much before:
This proveth Edwards Love, and Warwickes honeſty.
War. King Lewis, I here proteſt in ſight of heaven,
And by the hope I have of heavenly bliſſe,
That I am cleere from this miſdeed of Edwards;
No more my King, for he diſhonors me,
But moſt himſelfe, if he could ſee his ſhame.
Did I forget, that by the houſe of Yorke
My father came untimely to his death?
Did I let paſſe th'abuſe done to my Neece?
Did I impale him with the Regall Crowne?
Did I put Henry from his Native Right?
And am I guerdon'd at the laſt, with Shame?
Shame on himſelfe, for my Deſert is Honor.
And to repaire my Honor loſt for him,
I heere renounce him, and returne to Henry.
My Noble Queene, let former grudges paſſe,
And henceforth, I am thy true Servitour:
I will revenge his wrong to Lady Bona,
And replant Henry in his former ſtate.
Mar. Warwicke,
Theſe words have turn'd my Hate, to Love,
And I forgive, and quite forget old faults,
And joy that thou becom'ſt King Henries Friend.
War. So much his Friend, I, his unfained Friend,
That if King Lewis vouchſafe to furniſh us
With ſome few Bands of choſen Souldiors,
Ile undertake to Land them on our Coaſt,
And force the Tyrant from his ſeat by Warre.
'Tis not his new-made Bride ſhall ſuccour him,
And as for Clarence, as my Letters tell me,
He's very likely now to fall from him,
For matching more for wanton Luſt, then Honor,
Or then for ſtrength and ſafety of our Country.
Bona. Deere brother, how ſhall Bona be reveng'd,
But by thy helpe to this diſtreſſed Queene?
Mar. Renowned Prince, how ſhall Poore Henry live,
Vnleſſe thou reſcue him from foule deſpaire?
Bona. My quarrell, and this Engliſh Queens, are one.
War. And mine faire Lady Bona, joynes with yours.
Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Margarets.
Therefore at laſt, I firmely am reſolv'd
You ſhall have ayde.
Mar. Let me give humble thankes for all, at once.
Lew. Then Englands Meſſenger, returne in Poſte,
And tell falſe Edward, thy ſuppoſed King,
That Lewis of France, is ſending over Maskers
To revell it with him, and his new Bride.
Thou ſeeſt what's paſt, goe feare thy King withall.
Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower ſhortly,
I weare the Willow Garland for his ſake.
Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are layde aſide,
And I am ready to put Armor on.
War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore Ile un-Crowne him, er't be long.
There's thy reward, be gone. Exit Poſte.
Lew. But Warwicke,
Thou and Oxford, with fiue thouſand men
Shall croſſe the Seas, and bid falſe Edward battaile:
And as occaſion ſerves, this Noble Queene
And Prince, ſhall follow with a freſh Supply,
Yet ere thou goe, but anſwer me one doubt:
What Pledge have we of thy firme Loyalty?
War. This ſhall aſſure my conſtant Loyalty,
That if our Queene, and this young Prince agree,
Ile joyne mine eldeſt daughter, and my Ioy,
To him forthwith, in holy Wedlocke bands.
Mar. Yes, I agree, and thanke you for your Motion.
Sonne Edward, ſhe is Faire and Vertuous,
Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwicke,
And with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,
That onely Warwickes daughter ſhall be thine.
Pri. Ed. Yes, I accept her, for ſhe well deſerves it,
And heere to pledge my Vow, I give my hand.
He gives his hand to Warwicke.
Lew. Why ſtay we now? Theſe ſouldiers ſhalbe levied,
And thou Lord Bourbon, our High Admirall
Shalt waft them over with our Royall Fleete.
I long till Edward fall by Warres miſchance,
For mocking Marriage with a Dame of France.
Exeunt. Manet Warwicke.
War. I came from Edward as Ambaſſador,
But I returne his ſworne and mortall Foe:
Matter of Marriage was the charge he gave me,
But dreadfull Warre ſhall anſwer his demand.
Had he none elſe to make a ſtale but me?
Then none but I, ſhall turne his Ieſt to Sorrow,
I was the Cheefe that rais'd him to the Crowne,
And Ile be Cheefe to bring him downe againe:
Not that I pitty Henries miſery,
But ſeeke Revenge on Edwards mockery. Exit.

Enter Richard, Clarence, Somerſet, and Mountague.

Rich. Now tell me Brother Clarence, what thinke you
Of this new Marriage with the Lady Grey?
Hath not our Brother made a worthy choyce?
Clar. Alas, you know, 'tis farre from hence to France,

How could he ſtay till Warwicke made returne?
Som. My Lords, forbeare this talke: here comes the King.

Flouriſh.

Enter King Edward, Lady Grey, Pembrooke, Stafford, Haſtings: foure ſtand on one ſide, and foure on the other.

Rich. And his well-choſen Bride.
Clar. I mind to tell him plainly what I thinke.
King. Now brother of Clarence,
How like you our Choyce,
That you ſtand penſive, as halfe malecontent?
Clar. As well as Lewis of France,
Or the Earle of Warwicke,
Which are ſo weake of courage, and in judgement,
That they'le take no offence at our abuſe.
King. Suppoſe they take offence without a cauſe:
They are but Lewis and Warwicke, I am Edward,
Your King and Warwickes, and muſt have my will.
Rich. And ſhall have your will, becauſe our King:
Yet haſty Marriage ſeldome ptoveth well.
King. Yes Brother Richard, are you offended too?
Rich. Not I: no:
God forbid, that I ſhould wiſh them ſever'd,
Whom God hath joyn'd together:
I, and 'twere pitty, to ſunder them,
That yoake ſo well together.
King. Setting your ſkornes, and your miſlike aſide,
Tell me ſome reaſon, why the Lady Grey
Should not become my Wife, and Englands Queene?
And you too, Somerſet and Mountague,
Speake freely what you thinke.
Clar. Then this is mine opinion:
That King Lewis becomes your Enemy,
For mocking him about the Marriage
Of the Lady Bona.
Rich. And Warwicke, doing what you gave in charge,
Is now dis-honored by this New Marriage.
King, What, if both Lewis and Warwicke be appeas'd,
By ſuch invention as I can deviſe?
Mount. Yet, to have joyn'd with France in ſuch alliance,
Would more have ſtrength'ned this our Commonwealth
'Gainſt forraine ſtormes, then any home-bred Marriage.
Haſt. Why, knowes not Mountague, that of it ſelfe,
England is ſafe, if true within it ſelfe?
Moun. Yes, but the ſafer, when 'tis back'd with France.
Haſt. 'Tis better uſing France, then truſting France;
Let us be back'd with God, and with the Seas,
Which he hath giv'n for fence impregnable,
And with their helpes, onely defend our ſelves:
In them, and in our ſelves, our ſafety lyes.
Clar. For this one ſpeech, Lord Haſtings well deſerves
To have the Heire of the Lord Hungerford.
King. I, what of that? it was my will, and graunt,
And for this once, my Will ſhall ſtand for Law.
Rich. And yet me thinks, your Grace hath not done wel
To give the Heire and Daughter of Lord Scales
Vnto the Brother of your loving Bride;
She better would have fitted me, or Clarence:
But in your Bride you bury Brotherhood.
Clar. Or elſe you would not have beſtow'd the Heire
Of the Lord Bonvill on your new Wives Sonne,
And leave your Brothers to goe ſpeede elſewhere.
King. Alas, poore Clarence: is it for a Wife
That thou art malecontent? I will provide thee.
Clar. In chuſing for your ſelfe,
You ſhew'd your judgement:
Which being ſhallow, you ſhall give me leave
To play the Broker in mine owne behalfe;
And to that end, I ſhortly mind to leave you.
King. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be King.
And not be ty'd unto his Brothers will.
Lady Grey. My Lords, before it pleas'd his Majeſty
To raiſe my State to Title of a Queene,
Doe me but right, and you muſt all confeſſe,
That I was not ignoble of Deſcent,
And meaner then my ſelfe have had like fortune.
But as this Title honors me and mine,
So your diſlikes, to whom I would be pleaſing,
Doth cloud my joyes with danger, and with ſorrow.
King. My Love, forbeare to fawne upon their frownes:
What danger, or what ſorrow can befall thee,
So long as Edward is thy conſtant friend,
And their true Soveraigne, whom they muſt obey?
Nay, whom they ſhall obey, and love thee too,
Vnleſſe they ſeeke for hatred at my hands:
Which if they doe, yet will I keepe thee ſafe,
And they ſhall feele the vengeance of my wrath.
Rich. I heare, yet ſay not much, but thinke the more.

Enter a Poſte.

King. Now Meſſenger, what Letters, or what Newes from France?
Poſt. My Soveraigne Liege, no Letters, and few words,
But ſuch, as I (without your ſpeciall pardon)
Dare not relate.
King. Goe too, we pardon thee:
Therefore, in briefe, tell their words,
As neere as thou canſt gueſſe them.
What anſwer makes King Lewis, unto our Letters?
Poſt. At my depart, theſe were his very words:
Goe tell falſe Edward, the ſuppoſed King,
That Lewis of France is ſending over Maskers,
To revell it with him, and his new Bride.
King. Is Lewis ſo brave? belike he thinkes me Henry.
But what ſaid Lady Bona to my Marriage?
Poſt. Theſe were her words, utt'red with mild diſdaine:
Tell him, in hope he'll prove a Widower ſhortly,
Ile weare the Willow Garland for his ſake.
King. I blame not her, ſhe could ſay little leſſe:
She had the wrong. But what ſaid Henries Queene?
For I heard, that ſhe was there in place.
Poſt. Tell him (quoth ſhe)
My mourning Weedes are done,
And I am ready to put Armour on.
King. Belike ſhe minds to play the Amazon.
But what ſaid Warwicke to theſe injuries?
Poſt. He, more incens'd againſt your Majeſty,
Then all the reſt, diſcharg'd me with theſe words:
Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore Ile uncrowne him, er't be long.
Kin. Ha? durſt the Traytor breath out ſo prowd words?
Well, I will arme me, being thus fore-warn'd:
They ſhall have Warres, and pay for their preſumption.
But ſay, is Warwicke friends with Margaret?
Poſt. I, gracious Soveraigne,
They are ſo link'd in friendſhip,
That yong Prince Edwards marryes Warwicke Daughter.
Clar. Belike, the elder;
Clarence will have the yonger.

Now Brother King farewell, and ſit you faſt,
For I will hence to Warwickes other Daughter,
That though I want a Kingdome, yet in Marriage
I may not prove inferior to your ſelfe.
You that love me, and Warwicke, follow me.

Exit Clarence, and Somerſet followes.

Rich. Not I:
My thoughts ayme at a further matter:
I ſtay not for the love of Edward, but the Crowne.

King. Clarence and Somerſet both gone to Warwicke?
Yet am I arm'd againſt the worſt can happen:
And haſte is needfull in this deſp'rate caſe.
Pembrooke and Stafford, you in our behalfe
Goe levy men, and make prepare for Warre;
They are already, or quickly will be landed:
My ſelfe in perſon will ſtraight follow you.

Exeunt Pembrooke, aad Stafford.

But ere I goe, Haſtings and Mountague
Reſolve my doubt: you twaine, of all the reſt,
Are neere to Warwicke, by bloud, and by allyance:
Tell me, if you love Warwicke more then me;
If it be ſo, then both depart to him;
I rather wiſh you foes, then hollow friends.
But if you minde to hold your true obedience,
Give me aſſurance with ſome friendly Vow,
That I may never have you in ſuſpect.

Mount. So God helpe Mountague, as he proves true.

Haſt. And Haſtings, as he favours Edwards cauſe.

King. Now, brother Richard, will you ſtand by us?

Rich. I, in deſpight of all that ſhall withſtand you.

King. Why ſo: then am I ſure of Victory.
Now therefore let us hence, and loſe no howre,
Till we meet Warwicke, with his forraine powre.

Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke, and Oxford in England,
with French Souldiors.

Warw. Truſt me, my Lord, all hitherto goes well,
The common people by numbers ſwarme to us.

Enter Clarence, and Somerſet.

But ſee where Somerſet and Clarence comes:
Speake ſuddenly, my Lords, are wee all friends?

Clar. Feare not that, my Lord.

Warw. Then gentle Clarence, welcome unto Warwicke,
And welcome Somerſet: I hold it cowardize,
To reſt miſtruſtfull, where a Noble Heart
Hath pawn'd an open Hand, in ſigne of Love:
Elſe might I thinke, that Clarence, Edwards brother,
Were but a fained friend to our proceedings:
But welcome ſweet Clarence, my daughter ſhall be thine.
And now, what reſts? but in Nights Coverture,
Thy Brother being careleſſely encamp'd,
His Souldiors lurking in the Towne about,
And but attended by a ſimple Guard,
We may ſurprize and take him at our pleaſure,
Our Scouts have found the adventure very eaſie:
That as Vlyſſes, and ſtout Diomede,
With ſleight and manhood ſtole to Rheſus Tents,
And brought from thence the Thracian fatall Steeds;
So we, well cover'd with the Nights blacke Mantle,
At unawares may beat downe Edwards Guard,
And ſeize himſelfe: I ſay not, ſlaughter him,
For I intend but onely to ſurprize him.
You that will follow me to this attempt,
Applaud the Name of Henry, with your Leader.

They all cry, Henry.

Why then, let's on our way in ſilent ſort,
For Warwicke and his friends, God and Saint George.

Exeunt.

Enter three Watchmen to guard the Kings Tent.

1. Watch. Come on my Maſters, each man take his ſtand,
The King by this, is ſet him downe to ſleepe.

2. Watch. What, will he not to Bed?

1. Watch. Why, no: for he hath made a ſolemne Vow,
Never to lye and take his naturall Reſt,
Till Warwicke, or himſelfe, be quite ſuppreſt.

2. Watch. To morrow then belike ſhall be the day,
If Warwicke be ſo neere as men report.

3. Watch. But ſay, I pray, what Noble man is that,
That with the King here reſteth in his Tent?

1. Watch. 'Tis the Lord Haſtings, the Kings chiefeſt friend.

3. Watch. O, is it ſo? but why commands the King,
That his cheiſe followers lodge in Townes about him,
While he himſelfe keepes in the cold field?

2. Watch. 'Tis the more honour, becauſe more dangerous.

3. Watch. I, but give me worſhip, and quietneſſe,
I like it better then a dangerous honor.
If Warwicke knew in what eſtate he ſtands,
'Tis to be doubted he would waken him.

1. Watch. Vnleſſe our Halberds did ſhut up his paſſage.

2. Watch. I: wherefore elſe guard we his Royall Tent,
But to defend his Perſon from Night-foes?

Enter Warwicke, Clarence, Oxford, Somerſet,
and French Souldiers ſilent all.

War. This is his Tent, and ſee where ſtand his Guard:
Courage my Maſters: Honor now, or never:
But follow me, and Edward ſhall be ours.

1. Watch. Who goes there?

2. Watch. Stay, or thou dyeſt.

Warwicke and the reſt cry all, Warwicke, Warwicke, and ſet upon the Guard, who flye, crying, Arme, Arme,
Warwicke and the reſt following them.

The Drumme playing, and Trumpet ſounding.
Enter Warwicke, Somerſet, and the reſt, bringing the King out in his Gowne, ſitting in a Chaire: Richard and Haſtings flyes over the Stage.

Sem. What are they that flye there?

Warw. Richard and Haſtings, let them goe, heere is the Duke.

King Edw. The Duke?
Why Warwicke, when we parted,
Thou call'dſt me King.

Warw. I, but the caſe is alter'd.
When you diſgrace'd me in my Embaſſade,
Then I degraded you from being King,
And come now to create you Duke of Yorke.
Alas, how ſhould you governe any Kingdome,
That know not how to uſe Embaſſadors,
Nor how to be contented with one Wife,
Nor how to uſe your Brothers brotherly,
Nor how to ſtudy for the Peoples Welfare,
Nor how to ſhrowd your ſelfe from Enemies?

King Edw.

K. Edw. Yea, Brother of Clarence,
Art thou here too?
Nay then I ſee, that Edward needs muſt downe.
Yet Warwicke, in deſpight of all miſchance,
Of thee thy ſelfe, and all thy Complices,
Edward will alwayes beare himſelfe as King:
Though Fortunes mallice overthrow my State,
My minde exceeds the compaſſe of her Wheele.
War. Then for his mind, be Edward Englands King.

Takes off his Crowne.

But Henry now ſhall weare the Engliſh Crowne,
And be true King indeed: thou but the ſhadow.
My Lord of Somerſet, at my requeſt,
See that forthwith Duke Edward be convey'd
Vnto my Brother Arch-Biſhop of Yorke:
When I have fought with Pembrooke, and his fellowes,
Ile follow you, and tell what anſwer
Lewis and the Lady Bona ſend to him.
Now for a-while farewell good Duke of Yorke.
They leade him out forcibly.
K. Ed. What Fates impoſe, that men muſt needs abide;
It boots not to reſiſt both wind and tide. Exeunt.
Oxf. What now remaines my Lords for us to doe,
But march to London with our Souldiers?
War. I, that's the firſt thing that we have to doe,
To free King Henry from impriſonment,
And ſee him ſeated in the Regall Throne.
Exit.

Enter Rivers, and Lady Gray.

Riv. Madam, what makes you in this ſodain change?
Gray. Why Brother Rivers, are you yet to learne
What late misfortune is befalne King Edward?
Riv. What, loſſe of ſome pitcht battell
Againſt Warwicke?
Gray. No, but the loſſe of his owne Royall perſon.
Riv. Then is my Soveraigne ſlaine?
Gray. I almoſt ſlaine, for he is taken priſoner,
Either betrayed by falſhood of his Guard,
Or by his Foe ſurpriz'd at unawares:
And as I further have to underſtand,
Is new committed to the Biſhop of Yorke,
Fell Warwickes brother, and by that our Foe.
Riv. Theſe Newes I muſt confeſſe are full of griefe,
Yet gracious Madam, beare it as you may,
Warwicke may looſe, that now hath wonne the day.
Gray. Till then, faire hope muſt hinder lives decay:
And I the rather waine me from deſpaire
For love of Edwards Off-ſpring in my wombe:
This is it that makes me bridle my paſſion,
And beare with Mildneſſe my misfortunes croſſe:
I, I, for this I draw in many a teare,
And ſtop the riſing of blood-ſucking ſighes,
Leaſt with my ſighes or teares, I blaſt or drowne
King Edwards Fruite, true heyre to th'Engliſh Crowne.
Riv. But Madam,
Where is Warwicke then become?
Gray. I am inform'd that he comes towards London,
To ſet the Crowne once more on Henries head:
Gueſſe thou the reſt, Kings Edwards friend muſt downe.
But to prevent the Tyrants violence,
(For truſt not him that hath once broken faith)
Ile hence forthwith unto the Sanctuary,
To ſave (at leaſt) the heire of Edwards right:
There ſhall I reſt ſecure from force and fraud:
Come therefore let us flye, while we may flye,
If Warwicke take us, we are ſure to dye. Exeunt.

Enter Richard, Lord Haſtings, and Sir William Stanley.

Rich. Now my Lord Haſtings, and Sir William Stanley
Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither,
Into this cheefeſt Thicket of the Parke.
Thus ſtands the caſe: you know our King, my Brother,
Is priſoner to the Biſhop here, at whoſe hands
He hath good uſage, and great liberty,
And often but attended with weake guard,
Comes hunting this way to diſport himſelfe.
I have advertis'd him by ſecret meanes,
That if about this houre he make this way,
Vnder the colour of his uſuall game,
He ſhall here find his friends with Horſe and Men,
To ſet him free from his Captivity.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntſman with him.

Hunt. This way my Lord,
For this way lies the Game.
King Edw. Nay this way man,
See where the Huntſmen ſtand.
Now brother of Gloſter, Lord Haſtings, and the reſt,
Stand you thus cloſe to ſteale the Biſhops Deere?
Rich. Brother, the time and caſe, requireth haſt,
Your horſe ſtands ready at the Parke-corner,
King Ed. But whither ſhall we then?
Haſt. To Lyn my Lord,
And ſhip from thence to Flanders.
Rich. Well gueſt beleeve me, for that was my meaning.
King Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardneſſe.
Rich. But wherefore ſtay we? 'tis no time to talke.
King Edw. Huntſman, what ſay'ſt thou?
Wilt thou goe along?
Hunt. Better doe ſo, then tarry and be hang'd.
Rich. Come then away, lets ha no more adoe.
King Edw. Biſhop farewell,
Sheeld thee from Warwickes frowne,
And pray that I may re-poſſeſſe the Crowne. Exeunt.

Enter King Henry the ſixt, Clarence, Warwicke, Somerſet, young Henry, Oxford, Mountague, and Lieutenant.

King Hen. M. Lieutenant, now that God and Friends
Have ſhaken Edward from the Regall ſeate,
And turn'd my captive ſtate to liberty,
My feare to hope, my ſorrowes unto joyes,
At our enlargement what are thy due Fees?
Lieu. Subjects may challenge nothing of their Sou'rains
But, if an humble prayer may prevaile,
I then crave pardon of your Majeſty.
King Hen. For what, Lieutenant? For well vſing me?
Nay, be thou ſure, Ile well requite thy kindneſſe.
For that it made my impriſonment, a pleaſure:
I, ſuch a pleaſure, as incaged Birds
Conceive; when after many moody Thoughts,
At laſt, by Notes of Houſhold harmony,
They quite forget their loſſe of liberty.

But Warwicke, after God, thou ſet'ſt me free,
And chiefely therefore, I thanke God, and thee,
He was the Author, thou the inſtrument.
Therefore that I may conquer Fortunes ſpight,
By living low, where Fortune cannot hurt me,
And that the people of this bleſſed Land
May not be puniſht with my thwarting ſtarres,
Warwicke, although my head ſtill weare the Crowne,
I here reſigne my Government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.
War. Your Grace hath ſtill beene fam'd for vertuous,
And now may ſeeme as wiſe as vertuous,
By ſpying and avoiding Fortunes malice,
For few men rightly temper with the Starres:
Yet in this one thing let me blame your Grace,
For chuſing me, when Clarence is in place.
Clar. No Warwicke, thou art worthy of the ſway,
To whom the Heavens in thy Nativity,
Adjudg'd an Olive Branch, and Lawrell Crowne,
As likely to be bleſt in Peace and Warre:
And therefore I yeeld thee my free conſent.
Warw. And I chuſe Clarence onely for Protector.
King. Warwicke and Clarence, give me both your hands.
Now joyne your hands, and with your hands your hearts,
That no diſſention hinder Government:
I make you both Protectors of this Land,
While I my ſelfe will leade a private Life,
And in devotion ſpend my latter dayes,
To ſinnes rebuke, and my Creators praiſe.
Warw. What anſwers Clarence to his Soveraignes will?
Clar. That he conſents, if Warwicke yeeld conſent,
For on thy fortune I repoſe my ſelfe.
Warw. Why then, though loth, yet muſt I be content:
We'll yoake together, like a double ſhadow
To Henries Body, and ſupply his place;
I meane, in bearing weight of Government,
While he enjoyes the honor, and his eaſe.
And Clarence, now then it is more then needfull,
Forthwith that Edward be pronounc'd a Traytor,
And all his Lands and Goods confiſcated.
Clar. What elſe? and that Succeſſion be determined.
Warw. I, therein Clarence ſhall not want his part.
King. But with the firſt, of all your cheife affaires,
Let me intreat (for I command no more)
That Margaret your Queene, and my Sonne Edward,
Be ſent for, to returne from France with ſpeed:
For till I ſee them here, by doubtfull feare,
My joy of liberty is halfe eclips'd.
Clar. It ſhall be done, my Soveraigne, with all ſpeed.
King. My Lord of Somerſet, what Youth is that,
Of whom you ſeeme to have ſo tender care?
Somer. My Liege, it is young Henry, Earle of Richmond.
King. Come hither, Englands Hope:

Layes his Hand on his Head.

If ſecret Powers ſuggeſt but truth
To my divining thoughts,
This pretty Lad will prove our Countries bliſſe.
His lookes are full of peacefull Majeſty,
His head by nature fram'd to weare a Crowne,
His hand to wield a Scepter, and himſelfe
Likely in time to bleſſe a Regall Throne:
Make much of him, my Lords; for this is he
Muſt helpe you more, then you art hurt by me.

Enter a Poſte.

Warw. What newes, my friend?
Poſte. That Edward is eſcaped from your brother,
And fled (as he heares ſince) to Burgundy.
Warw. Vnſavory newes: but how made he eſcape?
Poſte. He was convey'd by Richard, Duke of Gloſter,
And the Lord Haſtings, who attended him
In ſecret ambuſh, on the Forreſt ſide,
And from the Biſhops Huntſmen reſcu'd him:
For Hunting was his dayly Exerciſe.
Warw. My Brother was too careleſſe of his charge.
But let us hence, my Soveraigne, to provide
A ſalve for any ſore, that may betide. Exeunt.

Manent Somerſet, Richmond, and Oxford.

Som. My Lord, I like not of this flight of Edwards;
For doubtleſſe, Burgundy will yeeld him helpe,
And we ſhall have more Warres befor't be long.
As Henries late preſaging Prophecy
Did glad my heart, with hope of this young Richmond:
So doth my heart miſ-give me, in theſe Conflicts,
What may befall him, to his harme and ours.
Therefore, Lord Oxford, to prevent the worſt,
Forthwith we'll ſend him hence to Brittany,
Till ſtormes be paſt of Civill Enmity.
Oxf. I: for if Edward re poſſeſſe the Crowne,
'Tis like that Richmond, with the reſt, ſhall downe.
Som. It ſhall be ſo: he ſhall to Brittany.
Come therefore, let's about it ſpeedily. Exeunt.

Enter Edward, Richard, Haſtings, and Souldiers.

Edw. Now brother Richard, Lord Haſtings, and the reſt,
Yet thus farre Fortune maketh us amends,
And ſayes, that once more I ſhall enterchange
My wained ſtate, for Henries Regall Crowne.
Well have we paſs'd, and now re-paſs'd the Seas,
And brought deſired helpe from Burgundy.
What then remaines, we being thus arriv'd
From Ravenſpurgh Haven, before the Gates of Yorke,
But that we enter, as into our Dukedome?
Rich. The Gates made faſt?
Brother, I like not this.
For many men that ſtumble at the Threſhold,
Are well fore-told, that danger lurkes within.
Edw Tuſh man, aboadments muſt not now affright us:
By faire or foule meanes we muſt enter in,
For hither will our friends repaire to us.
Haſt. My Liege, Ile knocke once more, to ſummon them.

Enter on the Walls, the Mayor of Yorke, and his Brethren.

Mayor. My Lords.
We were fore-warned of your comming,
And ſhut the Gates, for ſafety of our ſelves;
For now we owe allegeance unto Henry.
Edw. But, Maſter Mayor, if Henry be your King,
Yet Edward, at the leaſt, is Duke of Yorke.
Mayor. True, my good Lord, I know you for no leſſe.
Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my Dukedome,
As being well content with that alone.

Rich. But when the Fox hath once got in his Noſe,
He'll ſoone find meanes to make the Body follow.
Haſt. Why, Maſter Mayor, why ſtand you in a doubt?
Open the Gates, we are King Henries friends.
Mayor. I, ſay you ſo? the Gates ſhall then be opened.
He deſcends.
Rich. A wiſe ſtout Captaine, and ſoone perſwaded.
Haſt. The good old man would faine that all were well,
So 'twere not long of him: but being entred,
I doubt not I, but we ſhall ſoon perſwade
Both him, and all his Brothers, unto reaſon.

Enter the Mayor, and two Aldermen.
Edw. So, Maſter Mayor: theſe Gates muſt not be ſhut,
But in the Night, or in the time of Warre.
What, feare not man, but yeild me up the Keyes,
Takes his Keyes.
For Edward will defend the Towne, and thee,
And all thoſe friends, that deine to follow me.

March. Enter Mountgomery, with Drumme and Souldiers.
Rich. Brother, this is Sir John Mountgomery,
Our truſty friend, unleſſe I be deceiv'd.
Edwar. Welcome Sir Iohn: but why come you in Armes?
Mount. To helpe King Edward in his time of ſtorme,
As every loyall Subject ought to doe.
Edw. Thankes good Mountgomery:
But we now forget our Title to the Crowne,
And onely clayme our Dukedome,
Till God pleaſe to ſend the reſt.
Mount. Then fare you well, for I will hence againe,
I came to ſerve a King, and not a Duke:
Drummer ſtrike up, and let us march away.
The Drumme begins to March.
Edw. Nay ſtay, Sir Iohn, a while, and we'll debate
By what ſafe meanes the Crowne may be recover'd.
Mount. What talke you of debating? in few words,
If you'll not here proclaime your ſelfe our King,
Ile leave you to your fortune, and be gone,
To keepe them backe, that come to ſuccour you.
Why ſhall we fight, if you pretend no Title?
Rich. Why Brother, wherefore ſtand you on nice points?
Edw. When we grow ſtronger,
Then we'll make our Clayme:
Till then, 'tis wiſdome to conceale our meaning.
Haſt. Away with ſcrupulous Wit, now Armes muſt rule.
Ric. And feareleſſe minds clymbe ſooneſt unto Crowns.
Brother, we will proclaime you out of hand,
The bruit thereof will bring you many friends.
Edw. Then be it as you will: for 'tis my right,
And Henry but uſurpes the Diademe.
Mount. I, now my Soveraigne ſpeaketh like himſelfe,
And now will I be Edwards Champion.
Haſt. Sound Trumpet, Edward ſhall be here proclaim'd:
Come, fellow Souldier, make thou proclamation.
Flouriſh. Sound.
Soul. Edward the Fourth, by the Grace of God, King of England and France, and Lord of Ireland, &c.
Mount. And whoſoe're gainſayes King Edwards right,
By this I challenge him to ſingle fight.
Throwes downe his Gauntlet.
All. Long live Edward the Fourth.
Edw. Thankes brave Mountgomery,
And thankes unto you all:
If fortune ſerve me, Ile requite this kindneſſe.
Now for this Night, let's harbor here in Yorke:
And when the Morning Sunne ſhall raiſe his Carre
Above the Border of this Horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwicke, and his Mates;
For well I wot, that Henry is no Souldier.
Ah froward Clarence, how evill it beſeemes thee,
To flatter Henry, and forſake thy Brother?
Yet as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwicke.
Come on brave Souldiors: doubt not of the Day,
And that once gotten, doubt not of large Pay. Exeunt.

Enter the King, Warwicke, Mountague, Clarence, Oxford, and Somerſet.

War. What counſaile, Lords? Edward from Belgia,
With haſty Germanes, and blunt Hollanders,
Hath paſs'd in ſafety through the Narrow Seas,
And with his troupes doth march amaine to London,
And many giddy people flocke to him.
King. Let's levy men, and beat him backe againe.
Clar. A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which being ſuffer'd, Rivers cannot quench.
War. In Warwickſhire I have true-hearted friends,
Not mutinous in peace, yet bold in Warre,
Thoſe will I muſter up: and thou Sonne Clarence
Shalt ſtirre up in Suffolke, Norfolke, and in Kent,
The Knights and Gentlemen, to come with thee.
Thou brother Mountague, in Buckingham,
Northampton, and in Leiceſterſhire, ſhalt find
Men well enclin'd to heare what thou command'ſt.
And thou, brave Oxford, wondrous well belov'd,
In Oxfordſhire ſhalt muſter up thy friends.
My Soveraigne, with the loving Citizens,
Like to his Iland, gyrt in with the Ocean,
Or modeſt Dyan, circled with her Nymphs,
Shall reſt in London, till we come to him:
Faire Lords take leave, and ſtand not to reply.
Farewell my Soveraigne.
King. Farewell my Hector, and my Troyes true hope.
Clar. In ſigne of truth, I kiſſe your Highneſſe hand.
King. Well-minded Clarence, be thou fortunate.
Mount. Comfort, my Lord, and ſo I take my leave.
Oxf. And thus I ſeale my truth, and bid adieu.
King. Sweet Oxford, and my loving Mountague,
And all at once, once more a happy farewell.
War. Farewell, ſweet Lords, let's meet at Coventry.
Exeunt.
King. Here at the Pallace will I reſt a while.
Couſin of Exeter, what thinkes your Lordſhip?
Me thinkes, the Power that Edward hath in field,
Should not be able to encounter mine.
Exet. The doubt is, that he will ſeduce the reſt.
King. That's not my feare, my meed hath got me fame:
I have not ſtopt mine eares to their demands,
Nor poſted off their ſuites with ſlow delayes,
My pitty hath beene balme to heale their wounds,
My mildneſſe hath allay'd their ſwelling griefes,
My mercy dry'd their water-flowing teares.
I have not beene deſirous of their wealth,
Nor much oppreſt them with great Subſidies,
Nor forward of revenge, though they much err'd.
Then why ſhould they love Edward more then me?
No Exeter, theſe Graces challenge Grace:

And when the Lyon fawnes upon the Lambe,
The Lambe will never ceaſe to follow him.

Shout within, A Lancaſter, A Lancaſter.

Exe. Harke, hearke, my Lord, what Shouts are theſe?

Enter Edward and his Souldiers.

Edw. Seize on the ſhamefac'd Henry, beare him hence,
And once againe proclaime us King of England.
You are the Fount, that makes ſmall Brookes to flow,
Now ſtops thy Spring, my Sea ſhall ſucke them dry,
And ſwell ſo much the higher, by their ebbe.
Hence with him to the Tower, let him not ſpeake.

Exit with King Henry.

And Lords, towards Coventry bend we our courſe,
Where peremptory Warwicke now remaines:
The Sunne ſhines hot, and if we uſe delay,
Cold biting Winter marres our hop'd-for Hay.
Rich. Away betimes, before his forces joyne,
And take the great-growne Traytor unawares:
Brave Warriors, march amaine towards Coventry.

Exeunt.

Enter Warwicke, the Mayor of Coventry, two Meſſengers, and others upon the Walls.

War Where is the Poſt that came from valiant Oxford?
How farre hence is thy Lord, mine honeſt fellow?
Meſſ. 1. By this at Dunſmore, marching hitherward.
War. How farre off is our Brother Mountague?
Where is the Poſt that came from Mountague?
Meſſ. 2. By this at Daintry, with a puiſſant troope.

Enter Somervile.

War. Say Somervile, what ſayes my loving Sonne?
And by thy gueſſe, how nigh is Clarence now?
Somer. At Southam I did leave him with his forces,
And doe expect him here ſome two houres hence.
War. Then Clarence is at hand, I heare his Drumme.
Somer. It is not his, my Lord, heare Southam lyes:
The Drum you Honor heares, marcheth from Warwicke.
War. Who ſhould that be? belike unlook'd for friends.
Somer. They are at hand, and you ſhall quickly know.

Martch. Flouriſh. Enter Edward, Richard, and Souldiers.

Edw. Goe, Trumpet, to the Walls, and ſound a Parle.
Rich. See how the ſurly Warwicke mans the Wall.
War. Oh unbid ſpight, is ſportfull Edward come?
Where ſlept our Scouts, or how are they ſeduc'd,
That we could heare no newes of his repayre.
Edw. Now Warwicke, wilt thou ope the City Gates,
Speake gentle words, and humbly bend thy Knee,
Call Edward King, and at his hands begge Mercy,
And he ſhall pardon thee theſe Outrages?
War. Nay rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence,
Confeſſe who ſet thee up, and pluckt thee downe,
Call Warwicke Patron, and be penitent,
And thou ſhalt ſtill remaine the Duke of Yorke.
Rich. I thought at leaſt he would have ſaid the King,
Or did he make the Ieaſt againſt his will?
War. Is not a Dukedome, Sir, a goodly gift?
Rich, I, by my faith, for a poore Earle to give,
Ile doe thee ſervice for ſo good a gift.
Warw. 'Twas I that gave the Kingdome to thy Brother.
Edw. Why then 'tis mine, if but by Warwickes gift.
War. Thou art no Atlas for ſo great a weight:
And Weakeling, Warwicke takes his gift againe,
And Henry is my King, Warwicke his Subject.
Edw. But Warwickes King is Edwards Priſoner:
And gallant Warwicke, doe but anſwer this,
What is the Body, when the head is off?
Rich. Alas, that Warwicke had no more fore-caſt,
But whiles he thought to ſteale the ſingle Ten,
The King was ſlyly finger'd from the Decke:
You left poore Henry at the Biſhops Pallace,
And tenne to one you'll meet him in the Tower.
Edw. 'Tis even ſo, yet you are Warwicke ſtill.
Rich. Come Warwicke,
Take the time, kneele downe, kneele downe:
Nay when? ſtrike now, or elſe the Iron cooles.
War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,
And with the other, fling it at thy face,
Then beare ſo low a ſayle, to ſtrike to thee.
Edw. Sayle how thou canſt,
Have Winde and Tyde thy friend,
This hand, faſt wound about thy coale-blacke hayre,
Shall, whiles thy head is warme, and new cut off,
Write in the duſt this Sentence with thy blood,
Wind-changing Warwicke now can change no more.

Enter Oxford, with Drumme and Colours.

War. Oh chearefull Colours, ſee where Oxford comes.
Oxf. Oxford, Oxford, for Lancaſter.
Rich. The Gates are open, let us enter too.
Edw. So other foes may ſet upon our backes.
Stand we in good array: for they no doubt
Will iſſue out againe, and bid us battaile;
If not, the City being but of ſmall defence,
We'll quickly rowze the Traitors in the ſame.
War. Oh welcome Oxford, for we want thy helpe.

Enter Mountague, with Drumme and Colours.

Mount. Mountague, Mountague, for Lancaſter.
Rich. Thou and thy Brother both ſhall buy this Treaſon
Even with the deareſt blood your bodyes beare.
Edw. The harder matcht, the greater Victory,
My mind preſageth happy gaine, and Conqueſt.

Enter Somerſet, with Drumme and Colours.

Som. Somerſet, Somerſet, for Lancaſter.
Rich. Two of thy Name, both Dukes of Somerſet,
Have ſold their Lives unto the Houſe of Yorke,
And thou ſhalt be the third, if this Sword hold.

Enter Clarence, with Drumme and Colours.

War. And loe, where George of Clarence ſweepes along
Of force enough to bid his brother Battaile:
With whom, an upright zeale to right, prevailes
More then the nature of a Brothers love.
Come Clarence, come: thou wilt, if Warwicke call.
Clar. Father of Warwicke, know you what this meanes?
Looke here, I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruinate my Fathers Houſe,
Who gave his blood to lyme the ſtones together,
And ſet up Lancaſter. Why, troweſt thou, Warwicke,
That Clarence is ſo harſh, ſo blunt, unnaturall,
To bend the fatall inſtruments of Warre

Againſt his brother, and his lawfull King.
Perhaps thou wilt object my holy Oath:
To keepe that Oath, were more impiety,
Then Iephah, when he ſacrific'd his Daughter.
I am ſo ſorry for my Treſpas made,
That to deſerve well at my brothers hands,
I here proclaime my ſelfe thy mortall foe:
With reſolution, whereſoe're I meet thee,
(As I will meet thee, if thou ſtirre abroad)
To plague thee, for thy foule miſ-leading me.
And ſo, prowd-hearted Warwicke, I defie thee,
And to my brother turne my bluſhing Cheekes.
Pardon me Edward, I will make amends:
And Richard, doe not frowne upon my faults,
For I will henceforth be no more unconſtant.
Edw. Now welcome more, and ten times more belov'd
Then if thou never hadſt deſerv'd our hate.
Rich. Welcome good Clarence, this is Brother-like.
Warw. Oh paſſing Traytor, perjur'd and unjuſt.
Edw. What Warwicke,
Wilt thou leave the Towne, and fight?
Or ſhall we beat the Stones about thine Eares?
Warw. Alas, I am not coop'd here for defence:
I will away towards Barnet preſently,
And bid thee Battaile, Edward, if thou dar'ſt.
Edw. Yes Warwicke, Edward dares, and leads the way:
Lords to the field: Saint George, and Victory. Exeunt.
March. Warwicke and his company followes.

Alarum, and Excurſions. Enter Edward bringing forth Warwicke wounded.

Edw. So, lye thou there: dye thou, and dye our feare,
For Warwicke was a Bug that fear'd us all.
Now Mountague ſit faſt, I ſeeke for thee,
That Warwickes Bones may keepe thine company.
Exit.
War. Ah, who is nigh? come to me, freind, or foe,
And tell me who is Victor, Yorke, or Warwicke?
Why aske I that? my mangled body ſhewes,
My blood, my want of ſtrength, my ſicke heart ſhewes,
That I muſt yeeld my body to the Earth,
And by my fall, the conqueſt to my foe.
Thus yeelds the Cedar to the Axes edge,
Whoſe Armes gave ſhelter to the Princely Eagle,
Vnder whoſe ſhade the ramping Lyon ſlept,
Whoſe top-branch over-peer'd Ioves ſpreading Tree,
And kept low Shrubs from Winters pow'rfull Winde.
Theſe Eyes, that now are dim'd with Deaths black Veyle
Have beene as piercing as the Mid-day Sunne,
To ſearch the ſecret Treaſons of the World:
The Wrinckles in my Browes, now fill'd with blood,
Were lik'ned oft to Kingly Sepulchers:
For who liv'd King, but I could digge his Grave?
And who durſt ſmile, when Warwicke bent his Brow?
Loe, now my Glory ſmear'd in duſt and blood.
My Parkes, my Walkes, my Mannors that I had,
Even now forſake me; and of all my Lands,
Is nothing left me, but my bodies length.
Why, what is Pompe, Rule, Reigne, but Earth and Duſt?
And live we how we can, yet dye we muſt.

Enter Oxford and Somerſet.

Som. Ah Warwicke, Warwicke, wert thou as we are,
We might recover all our Loſſe againe:
The Queene from France hath brought a puiſſant power
Even now we heard the newes, ah, could'ſt thou flye.
Warw. Why then I would not flye. Ah Mountague,
If thou be there, ſweet brother, take my hand,
And with thy Lippes keepe in my Soule a while.
Thou lov'ſt me not: for, brother, if thou didſt,
Thy teares would waſh this cold congealed blood,
That glewes my Lippes, and will not let me ſpeake.
Come quickly Mountague, or I am dead,
Som. Ah Warwicke, Mountague hath breath'd his laſt,
And to the lateſt gaſpe, cry'd out for Warwicke:
And ſaid, Commend me to my valiant Brother.
And more he would have ſaid, and more he ſpoke,
Which ſounded like a Cannon in a Vault,
That mought not be diſtinguiſht: but at laſt,
I well might heare, delivered with a groane,
O farewell Warwicke.
War. Sweet reſt his Soule:
Flye Lords, and ſave your ſelves,
For Warwicke bids you all farewell, to meet in heaven.
Oxf. Away, away, to meet the Queenes great power.
Here they beare away his Body. Exeunt.

Flouriſh. Enter King Edward in triumph, with Richard, Clarence, and the reſt.

King. Thus farre our fortune keepes an upward courſe,
And we are grac'd with wreaths of Victory:
But in the midſt of this bright-ſhining Day,
I ſpy a blacke ſuſpicious threatning Cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious Sunne,
Ere he attaine his eaſefull Weſterne Bed:
I meane, my Lords, thoſe powers that the Queene
Hath rays'd in Gallia, have arrived our Coaſt,
And, as we heare, march on to fight with us.
Clar. A little gale will ſoone diſperſe that Cloud,
And blow it to the Source from whence it came,
Thy very Beames will dry thoſe Vapours up,
For every Cloud engenders not a Storme.
Rich. The Queene is valued thirty thouſand ſtrong,
And Somerſet, with Oxford, fled to her:
If ſhe have time to breathe, be well aſſur'd
Her faction will be full as ſtrong as ours.
King. We are advertis'd by our loving friends,
That they doe hold their courſe toward Tewksbury.
We having now the beſt at Barnet field,
Will thither ſtraight, for willingneſſe rids way;
And as we march, our ſtrength will be augmented:
In every County as we goe along,
Strike up the Drumme, cry courage, and away. Exeunt.

March. Enter the Queene, young Edward, Somerſet, Oxford, and Souldiers.

Qu. Great Lords, wiſe men ne'r ſit and waile their loſſe
But chearely ſeeke how to redreſſe their harmes.
What though the Maſt be now blowne over-boord,
The Cable broke, the holding-Anchor loſt,
And halfe our Saylors ſwallow'd in the flood?
Yet lives our Pilot ſtill. Is't meet, that he Should leave the Helme, and like a fearefull Lad,
With tearefull Eyes adde Water to the Sea,
And give more ſtrength to that which hath too much,
Whiles in his moane, the Ship ſplits on the Rocke,
Which induſtry and Courage might have ſav'd?
Ah what a ſhame, ah what a fault were this.
Say Warwicke was our Anchor: what of that?

And Mountague our Top-Maſt: what of him?
Our ſlaught'red friends, the Tackles: what of theſe?
Why is not Oxford here, another Anchor?
And Somerſet, another goodly Maſt?
The friends of France our Shrowds and Tacklings?
And though unskilfull, why not Ned and I,
For once allow'd the skilfull Pilots Charge?
We will not from the Helme, to ſit and weepe,
But keepe our Courſe (though the rough Winde ſay no)
From Shelves and Rocks, that threaten us with Wracke.
As good to chide the Waves, as ſpeake them faire.
And what is Edward, but a ruthleſſe Sea?
What Clarence, but a Quick-ſand of Deceit?
And Richard, but a raged fatall Rocke?
All theſe, the Enemies to our poore Barke.
Say you can ſwim, alas 'tis but a while:
Tread on the Sand, why there you quickly ſinke,
Beſtride the Rocke, the Tyde will waſh you off,
Or elſe you famiſh, that's a three-fold Death.
This ſpeake I (Lords) to let you underſtand,
If caſe ſome one of you would flye from us,
That there's no hop'd-for Mercy with the Brothers,
More then with ruthleſſe Waves, with Sands and Rocks.
Why courage then, what cannot be avoided,
'Twere childiſh weakeneſſe to lament, or feare.

Prin. Me thinkes a Woman of this valiant Spirit,
Should, if a Coward heard her ſpeake theſe words,
Infuſe his Breaſt with Magnanimity,
And make him, naked, foyle a man at Armes.
I ſpeake not this, as doubting any here:
For did I but ſuſpect a fearefull man,
He ſhould have leave to goe away betimes,
Leaſt in our need he might infect another,
And make him of like ſpirit to himſelfe.
If any ſuch be here, as God forbid,
Let him depart, before we neede his helpe.

Oxf. Women and Children of ſo high a courage,
And Warriors faint, why 'twere perpetuall ſhame.
Oh brave young Prince: thy famous Grandfather
Doth live againe in thee; long may'ſt thou live,
To beare his Image, and renew his Glories.

Som. And he that will not fight for ſuch a hope,
Goe home to Bed, and like the Owle by day,
If he ariſe, be mock'd and wondred at.

Que. Thankes gentle Somerſet, ſweet Oxford thankes.

Prince. And take his thankes, that yet hath nothing elſe.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Prepare you Lords, for Edward is at hand,
Ready to fight: therefore be reſolute.

Oxf. I thought no leſſe: it is his Policy,
To haſte thus faſt, to find us unprovided.

Som. But he's deceiv'd, we are in readineſſe.

Que. This cheares my heart, to ſee your forwardneſſe.

Oxf. Here pitch our Battaile, hence we will not budge.

March. Enter Edward, Richard, Clarence, and Souldiers.

Edw. Brave followers, yonder ſtands the thorny Wood
Which by the Heavens aſſiſtance, and your ſtrength,
Muſt by the Roots be hew'ne up yet ere Night.
I need not adde more fuell to your fire,
For well I wot, ye blaze, to burne them out:
Give ſignall to the fight, and to it Lords.

Qu. Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen, what I ſhould ſay,
My teares gaine-ſay: for every word I ſpeake,
Yee ſee I drinke the water of my eye.
Therefore no more but this: Henry your Soveraigne
Is Priſoner to the Foe, his State uſurp'd,
His Realme a ſlaughter-houſe, his Subjects ſlaine,
His Statutes cancell'd, and his Treaſure ſpent:
And yonder is the Wolfe, that makes this ſpoyle.
You fight in Iuſtice: then in Gods Name, Lords,
Be valiant, and give ſignall to the fight.

Alarum, Retreat, Excurſions. Exeunt.

Enter Edward, Richard, Queene, Clarence, Oxford, Somerſet.

Edw. Now here's a period of tumultuous Broyles.
Away with Oxford to Hames Caſtle ſtraight:
For Somerſet, off with his guilty Head.
Goe beare them hence, I will not heare them ſpeake.

Oxf. For my part, Ile not trouble thee with words.

Som. Nor I, but ſtoupe with patience to my fortune.

Exeunt.

Quee. So part we ſadly in this troublous World,
To meet with Ioy in ſweet Ieruſalem.

Edw. Is Proclamation made, That who finds Edward,
Shall have a high Reward, and he his Life?

Rich. It is, and loe where youthfull Edward comes.

Enter the Prince.

Edw. Bring forth the Gallant, let us heare him ſpeake.
What? can ſo young a Thorne begin to pricke?
Edward, what ſatisfaction canſt thou make,
For bearing Armes, for ſtirring up my ſubjects,
And all trouble thou haſt turn'd me to?

Prin. Speake like a Subject, prowd ambitions Yorke.
Suppoſe that I am now my Fathers Mouth,
Reſigne thy Chayre, and where I ſtand, kneele thou,
Whil'ſt I propoſe the ſelfe-ſame words to thee,
Which (Traytor) thou would'ſt have me anſwer to.

Quee. Ah, that thy Father had beene ſo reſolv'd.

Rich. That you might ſtill have worne the Petticoat,
And ne're have ſtolne the Breech from Lancaſter.

Princ. Let Æſop fable in a Winters Night,
His Curriſh Riddles ſorts not with this place.

Rich. By Heaven, Brat, Ile plague ye for that word.

Que. I thou waſt borne to be a plague to men.

Rich. For Gods ſake, take away this Captive Scold.

Princ. Nay, take away this ſcolding Crooke-backe, rather.

Edw. Peace wilfull Boy, or I will charme your tongue.

Clar. Vntutor'd Lad, thou art too malapert.

Prin. I know my duty, you are all undutifull:
Laſcivious Edward, and thou perjur'd George,
And thou miſ-ſhapen Dicke, I tell ye all,
I am your better, Traytors as ye are.
And thou uſurp'ſt my Fathers right and mine.

Edw. Take that, the likeneſſe of this Rayler here.

Stabs him.

Rich. Sprawl'ſt thou? take that, to end thy agony.

Rich. Stabs him.

Clar. And ther's for twitting me with perjury.

Clar. Stabs him.

Que. Oh, kill me too.

Rich. Marry, and ſhall. Offers to kill her.

Edw. Hold, Richard, hold, for we have done too much.

Rich. Why ſhould ſhe live, to fill the World with words?
Edw. What? doth ſhe ſwowne? uſe meanes for her recovery.
Rich. Clarence excuſe me to the King my Brother:
Ile hence to London on a ſerious matter,
Ere ye come there, be ſure to heare ſome newes.
Clar. What? what?
Rich. Tower, the Tower. Exit.
Que. Oh Ned, ſweet Ned, ſpeake to thy Mother Boy.
Can'ſt thou not ſpeake? O Traitors, Murtherers!
They that ſtabb'd Cæſar, ſhed no blood at all:
Did not offend, nor were not worthy Blame,
If this foule deed were by, to equall it.
He was a Man; this (in reſpect) a Child,
And Men, ne're ſpend their fury on a Child.
What's worſe then Murtherer, that I may name it?
No, no, my heart will burſt, and if I ſpeake,
And I will ſpeake, that ſo my heart may burſt.
Butchers and Villaines, bloody Canniballes,
How ſweet a Plant have you untimely cropt:
You have no children (Butchers) if you had,
The thought of them would have ſtirr'd up remorſe;
But if you ever chance to have a Child,
Looke in his youth to have him ſo cut off.
As deathſmen you have rid this ſweet young Prince.
King. Away with her, goe beare her hence perforce.
Que. Nay, never beare me hence, diſpatch me heere:
Here ſheath thy Sword, Ile pardon thee my death:
What? wilt thou not? Then Clarence doe it thou.
Clar. By heaven, I will not doe thee ſo much eaſe.
Qu. Good Clarence doe, ſweet Clarence do thou do it.
Cla. Did'ſt thou not heare me ſweare I would not do it?
Que. I but thou uſeſt to forſweare thy ſelfe.
'Twas ſin before, but now 'tis Charity.
What wilt thou not? Where is that divels butcher Richard
Hard favor'd Richard? Richard, where art thou?
Thou art not heere; Murther is thy Almeſdeed.
Petitioner for Blood, thou ne're put'ſt backe.
Edw. Away I ſay, I charge ye beare her hence.
Que. So come to you, and yours, as to this Prince.
Exit Queene.
Edw. Where's Richard gone.
Cla. To London all in poſt, and as I gueſſe,
To make a bloody Supper in the Tower?
Edw. He's ſodaine if a thing comes in his head.
Now march we hence, diſcharge the common ſort
With Pay and Thankes, and let's away to London,
And ſee our gentle Queene how well ſhe fares,
By this (I hope) ſhe hath a Sonne for me. Exit.

Enter Henry the ſixt, and Richard, with the Lieutenant on the Walls.

Rich. Good day, my Lord, what at your Booke ſo hard?
Hen. I my good Lord: my Lord I ſhould ſay rather,
'Tis ſinne to flatter, Good was little better:
Good Gloſter, and good devill, were alike,
And both prepoſterous: therefore, not Good Lord.
Rich. Sirrha, leave us to our ſelves, we muſt conferre.
Hen. So flyes the wreakleſſe ſhepherd from the Wolfe:
So firſt the harmeleſſe Sheepe doth yeeld his Fleece,
And next his Throate, unto the butchers Knife.
What Scene of death hath Roſſius now to Acte?
Rich. Suſpition alwayes haunts the guilty mind,
The Theefe doth feare each buſh an Officer,
Hen. The Bird that hath beene limed in a buſh,
With trembling wings miſdoubteth every buſh;
And I the hapleſſe Male to one ſweet Bird,
Have now the fatall Object in my eye,
Where my poore yong was limb'd, was caught, and kild.
Rich. Why what a peeviſh Foole was that of Creet,
That taught his Sonne the office of a Fowle,
And yet for all his wings, the foole was drown'd.
Hen. I Dedalus, my poore Boy Icarus,
Thy Father Minos, that deni'd our courſe,
The Sunne that ſear'd the wings of my ſweet Boy.
Thy Brother Edward, and thy ſelfe, the Sea
Whoſe envious Gulfe did ſwallow up his life:
Ah, kill me with thy Weapon, not with words,
My breſt can better brooke thy Daggers point,
Then can my eares that Tragicke Hiſtory.
But wherefore doſt thou come? Is't for my Life?
Rich. Think'ſt thou I am an Executioner?
Hen. A perſecutor I am ſure thou art,
If murthering Innocents be Executing,
Why then thou art an Executioner,
Rich. Thy Son I kill'd for his preſumption.
Hen. Hadſt thou bin kill'd, when firſt thou did preſume,
Thou had'ſt not liv'd to kill a Sonne of mine:
And thus I propheſie, that many a thouſand,
Which now miſtruſt no parcell of my feare,
And many an old mans ſigh, and many a Widdowes,
And many an Orphans water-ſtanding-eye,
Men for their Sonnes, Wives for their Husbands fate,
And Orphans, for their Parents timeles death,
Shall rue the houre that ever thou was't borne.
The Owle ſhriek'd at thy birth, an evill ſigne,
The Night-Crow cry'de, aboding luckleſſe time,
Dogs howl'd, and hiddeous Tempeſt ſhook down Trees:
The Raven rook'd her on the Chimnies top,
And chatt'ring Pies in diſmall Diſcords ſung:
Thy Mother felt more then a Mothers paine,
And yet brought forth leſſe then a Mothers hope,
To wit, an indigeſted deformed lumpe,
Not like the fruit of ſuch a goodly Tree.
Teeth had'ſt thou in thy head, when thou was't borne,
To ſignifie, thou cam'ſt to bite the world:
And if the reſt be true, which I have heard,
Thou cam'ſt———
Rich. Ile heare no more:
Dye Prophet in thy ſpeech, Stabs him.
For this (among'ſt the reſt) was I ordain'd.
Hen. I, and for much more ſlaughter after this,
O God forgive my ſinnes, and pardon thee. Dyes.
Rich. What? will the aſpiring blood of Lancaſter
Sinke in the ground? I thought it would have mounted.
See how my ſword weepes for the poore Kings death.
O may ſuch purple teares be alway ſhed
From thoſe that wiſh the downefall of our houſe.
If any ſparke of life be yet remaining,
Downe, downe to hell, and ſay I ſent thee thither.
Stabs him againe.
I that have neither pitty, love, nor feare,
Indeed 'tis true that Henrie told me of:
For I have often heard my Mother ſay,
I came into the world with my Legs forward.
Had I not reaſon (thinke ye) to make haſt,
And ſeeke their Ruine, that uſurp'd our Right?
The Midwife wonder'd, and the Women cride
O Ieſus bleſſe us, he is borne with teeth,

And ſo I was, which plainely ſignified,
That I ſhould ſnarle, and bite, and play the dogge:
Then ſince the Heavens have ſhap'd my body ſo,
Let hell make crook'd my Mind to anſwer it.
I have no brother, I am like no brother:
And this word [Love] which Gray-beards call Divine,
Be reſident in men like one another,
And not in me: I am my ſelfe alone.,
Clarence beware, thou keept'ſt me from the light,
But I will ſort a pitchy day for thee:
For I will buzze abroad ſuch Propheſies,
That Edward ſhall be fearefull of his life,
And then to purge his feare, Ile be thy death.
King Henry, and the Prince his Son are gone,
Clarence thy turne is next, and then the reſt,
Counting my ſelfe but bad, till I be beſt.
Ile throw thy body in another roome,
And Triumph Henry, in thy day of Doome. Exit.

Enter King, Queene, Clarence, Richard, Haſtings, Nurſe, and Attendants.

King. Once more we ſit in Englands Royall Throne,
Re-purchac'd with the Blood of Enemies:
What valiant Foe-men, like to Autumnes Corne,
Have we mow'd downe in tops of all their pride?
Three Dukes of Somerſet, threefold Renowne,
For hardy and undoubted Champions:
Two Cliffords, as the Father and the Sonne,
And two Northumberlands: two braver men,
Ne're ſpurr'd their Courſers at the Trumpets ſound.
With them, the two brave Beares, Warwicke and Mountague,
That in their Chaines fetter'd the Kingly Lyon,
And made the Forreſt tremble when they roar'd.
Thus have we ſwept Suſpition from our Seate,
And made our footſtoole of Security.
Come hither Beſſe, and let me kiſſe my Boy:
Yong Ned, for thee, thine Vnckles, and my ſelfe,
Have in our Armors watcht the Winter night,
Went all afoote in Summers ſcalding heate,
That thou might'ſt repoſſeſſe the Crowne in peace,
And of our Labours thou ſhalt reape the gaine.

Rich. Ile blaſt his Harveſt, if your head were laid,
For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This ſhoulder was ordain'd ſo thicke, to heave,
And heave it ſhall ſome waight, or breake my backe,
Worke thou the way, and that ſhalt execute.

King. Clarence and Gloſter, love my lovely Queene,
And kis your Princely Nephew Brothers both.

Clar. The duty that I owe unto your Majeſty,
I Seale upon the lips of this ſweet Babe.

Clar. Thankes Noble Clarence, worthy brother thanks.

Ri. And that I love the tree from whence thou ſprang'ſt
Witneſſe the loving kiſſe I give the Fruite:
To ſay the truth, ſo Iudas kiſt his maſter,
And cryed all haile, when as he meant all harme.

King. Now am I ſeated as my ſoule delights,
Having my Countries peace, and brothers loves.

Clar. What will your Grace have done with Margaret?
Reynard her Father, to the King of France
Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Ieruſalem,
And hither have they ſent it for her ranſome.

King. Away with her, and waft her hence to France:
And now what reſts, but that we ſpend the time
With ſtately Triumphes, mirthfull Comicke ſhewes,
Such as befits the pleaſure of the Court.
Sound Drummes and Trumpets, farewell ſowre annoy,
For heere I hope begins our laſting joy. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

⁂

The Tragedy of Richard the Third:

vvith the Landing of Earle Richmond, and the Battell at Boſworth Field.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloſter, ſolus.

NOw is the Winter of our Diſcontent,
Made glorious Summer by this Son of Yorke:
And all the clouds that lowr'd upon our houſe
In the deepe boſome of the Ocean buried.
Now are our browes bound with Victorious Wreathes,
Our bruiſed armes hung up for Monuments;
Our ſterne Alarums chang'd to merry Meetings;
Our dreadfull Marches, to delightfull Meaſures.
Grim-viſag'd Warre, hath ſmooth'd his wrinkled Front:
And now, in ſteed of mounting Barbed Steeds,
To fright the Soules of fearefull Adverſaries,
He capers nimbly in a Ladies Chamber,
To the laſcivious pleaſing of a Lute.
But I, that am not ſhap'd for ſportive trickes,
Nor made to court an amorous Looking-glaſſe:
I, that am Rudely ſtampt, and want loves Majeſty,
To ſtrut before a wanton ambling Nymph:
I, that am curtail'd of this faire Proportion,
Cheated of Feature by diſſembling Nature,
Deform'd, unfiniſh'd, ſent before my time
Into this breathing World, ſcarſe halfe made up,
And that ſo lamely and unfaſhionable,
That dogges barke at me, as I halt by them:
Why I (in this weake piping time of Peace)
Have no delight to paſſe away the time,
Vnleſſe to ſee my Shadow in the Sunne,
And deſcant on mine owne Deformity.
And therefore, ſince I cannot prove a Lover,
To entertaine theſe faire well ſpoken dayes,
I am determined to prove a Villaine,
And hate the idle pleaſures of theſe dayes.
Plots have I laide, Inductions dangerous,
By drunken Propheſies, Libels, and Dreames,
To ſet my Brother Clarence and the King
In deadly hate, the one againſt the other:
And if King Edward be as true and juſt,
As I am Subtle, Falſe, and Treacherous,
This day ſhould Clarence cloſely be mew'd up:
About a Propheſie, which ſayes that G,
Of Edwards heyres the murtherer ſhall be.
Dive thoughts downe to my ſoule, here Clarence comes.

Enter Clarence, and Brakenbury, guarded.

Brother, good day: What meanes this armed guard
That waites upon your Grace?

Cla. His Majeſtie tendring my perſons ſafety,
Hath appointed this Conduct, to convey me to th'Tower.

Rich. Vpon what cauſe?

Cla. Becauſe my name is George.

Rich. Alacke my Lord, that fault is none of yours:
He ſhould for that commit your Grandfathers.
O belike, his Majeſty hath ſome intent,
That you ſhould be new Chriſtned in the Tower.
But what's the matter Clarence, may I know?

Cla. Yea Richard, when I know: but I proteſt
As yet I do not: But as I can learne,
He hearkens after Propheſies and Dreames,
And from the Croſſe-row pluckes the letter G:
And ſayes, a Wizard told him, that by G,
His iſſue diſinherited ſhould be.
And for my name of George begins with G,
It followes in his thought that I am he.
Theſe (as I learne) and ſuch like toyes as theſe,
Hath moov'd his Highneſſe to commit me now.

Rich. Why this it is, when men are rul'd by Women:
'Tis not the King that ſends you to the Tower,
My Lady Grey his Wife, Clarence 'tis ſhe,
That tempts him to this harſh Extremity.
Was it not ſhe, and that good man of Worſhip,
Anthony Woodville her Brother there,
That made him ſend Lord Haſtings to the Tower?
From whence this preſent day he is delivered.
We are not ſafe Clarence, we are not ſafe.

Cla. By heaven, I thinke there is no man ſecure
But the Queenes Kindred, and night-walking Heralds,
That trudge betwixt the King, and Miſtris Shore.
Heard you not what an humble Suppliant
Lord Haſtings was, for his delivery?

Rich. Humbly complaining to her Deitie,
Got my Lord Chamberlaine his liberty.
Ile tell you what, I thinke it is our way,
If we will keepe in favour with the King,
To be her men, and weare her Livery:
The jealous ore-worne Widdow, and her ſelfe,
Since that our Brother dub'd them Gentlewomen,
Are mighty Goſſips in our Monarchy.

Bra. I beſeech your Graces both to pardon me,
His Majeſty hath ſtraightly given in charge,
That no man ſhall have private Conference
(Of what degree ſoever) with your Brother.

Rich. Even ſo, and pleaſe your Worſhip Brakenbury,
You may partake of any thing we ſay:
We ſpeake no Treaſon man; We ſay the King
Is wiſe and vertuous, and his Noble Queene
Well ſtrooke jn yeeres, faire and not jealious.
We ſay, that Shores Wife hath a pretty Foot,
A cherry Lip, a bonny Eye, a paſſing pleaſing tongue:
And that the Queenes Kindred are made gentle Folkes.
How ſay you ſir? can you deny all this?
Bra. With this (my Lord) my ſelfe have nought to doe.
Rich. Naught to doe with Miſtris Shore?
I tell thee Fellow, he that doth naught with her
(Excepting one) were beſt to doe it ſecretly alone.
Bra. What one, my Lord?
Rich. Her Husband Knave, would'ſt thou betray me?
Bra. I do beſeech your Grace
To pardon me, and withall forbeare
Your Conference with the Noble Duke.
Cla. We know thy charge Brakenbury, and will obey.
Rich. We are the Queenes abjects, and muſt obey.
Brother farewell, I will unto the King,
And whatſoere you will imploy me in,
Were it to call King Edwards Widdow, Siſter,
I will performe it to infranchiſe you.
Meane time, this deepe diſgrace of Brotherhood,
Touches me deeper then you can imagine.
Cla. I know it pleaſeth neither of us well.
Rich. Well, your impriſonment ſhall not be long,]
I will deliver you, or elſe lye for you:
Meane time have patience.
Cla. I muſt perforce: farewell. Exit Clar.
Rich. Go tread the path that thou ſhalt ne're return:
Simple plaine Clarence, I do love thee ſo,
That I will ſhortly ſend thy Soule to Heaven,
If Heaven will take the preſent at our hands,
But who comes heere? the new delivered Haſtings?

Enter Lord Haſtings.

Haſt. Good time of day unto my gracious Lord,
Rich. As much unto my good Lord Chamberlaine:
Well are you welcome to this open Ayre,
How hath your Lordſhip brook'd impriſonment?
Haſt. With patience (Noble Lord) as priſoners muſt:
But I ſhall live (my Lord) to give them thankes
That were the cauſe of my impriſonment.
Rich, No doubt, no doubt, and ſo ſhall Clarence too,
For they that were your Enemies, are his,
And have prevail'd as much on him, as you.
Haſt. More pitty, that the Eagles ſhould be mew'd,
Whiles Kites and Buzzards play at liberty.
Rich. What newes abroad?
Haſt. No newes ſo bad abroad, as this at home:
The King is ſickly, weake and melancholly,
And his Phyſitians feare him mightily.
Rich. Now by Saint Iohn, that newes is bad indeed.
O he hath kept an evill diet long,
And over-much conſum'd his Royall Perſon:
'Tis very greevous to be thought upon.
Where is he, in his bed?
Haſt. He is.
Rich. Go you before, and I will follow you.
Exit Haſtings.
He cannot live I hope, and muſt not dye,
Till George be pack'd with poſt-horſe up to Heaven.
Ile in to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With Lyes well ſteel'd with weighty arguments,
And if I faile not in my deepe intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live:
Which done, God take King Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to buſtle in.
For then, Ile marry Warwickes youngeſt daughter,
What though I kill'd her Husband, and her Father,
The readieſt way to make the Wench amends,
Is to become her husband and her Father:
The which will I, not all ſo much for love,
As for another ſecret cloſe intent,
By marrying her, which I muſt reach unto.
But yet I run before my horſe to Market:
Clarence ſtill breathes, Edward ſtill lives and reignes,
When they are gone, then muſt I count my gaines. Exit

Scæna Secunda.

Enter the Coarſe of Henrie the ſixt with Halberds to guard it,
Lady Anne being the Mourner.

Anne. Set downe, ſet downe your honorable load,
If Honor may be ſhrowded in a Herſe;
Whil'ſt I a-while obſeqviouſly lament
Th' untimely fall of Vertuous Lancaſter,
Poore key-cold Figure of a holy King,
Pale aſhes of the Houſe of Lancaſter;
Thou bloodleſſe Remnant of that Royall Blood,
Be it lawfull that I invocate thy Ghoſt,
To heare the Lamentations of poore Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy ſlaughtred Sonne,
Stab'd by the ſelfeſame hand that made theſe wounds.
Loe, in theſe windowes that let forth thy life,
I powre the helpleſſe Balme of my poore eyes.
O curſed be the hand that made theſe holes:
Curſed the heart, that had the heart to do it:
Curſed the Blood, that let this blood from hence:
More direfull hap betide that hated Wretch
That makes us wretched by the death of thee,
Then I can wiſh to Wolves, to Spiders, Toades,
Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives.
If ever he have Childe, Abortive be it,
Prodigeous, and untimely brought to light,
Whoſe ugly and unnaturall Aſpect
May fright the hopefull Mother at the view,
And that be Heyre to his unhappineſſe.
If ever he have Wife, let her be made
More miſerable by the death of him,
Then I am made by my young Lord, and thee.
Come now towards Chertſey with your holy Lode,
Taken from Paules, to be interred there.
And ſtill as you are weary of this waight,
Reſt you, whiles I lament King Henries Coarſe.

Enter Richard Duke of Gloſter.

Rich. Stay you that beare the Coarſe, & ſet it downe.
An. What blacke Magitian conjures up this Fiend,
To ſtop devoted charitable deeds?
Rich. Villains ſet downe the Corſe; or by S. Paul,
Ile make a Coarſe of him that diſobeyes.

Gen. My Lord ſtand backe, and let the Coffin paſſe.
Rich. Vnmanner'd Dogge,
Stand thou when I commaund:
Advance thy Halbert higher then my breſt,
Or by S. Paul Ile ſtrike thee to my Foote,
And ſpurne upon thee Begger for thy boldneſſe.
Anne. What do you tremble? are you all affraid?
Alas, I blame you not, for you are Mortall,
And Mortall eyes cannot endure the Divell.
Avant thou dreadfull miniſter of Hell;
Thou had'ſt but power over his Mortall body,
His ſoule thou canſt not have: Therefore be gone.
Rich. Sweet Saint, for Charity, be not ſo curſt.
An. Foule Divell,
For Gods ſake hence, and trouble us not,
For thou haſt made the happy earth thy Hell:
Fill'd it with curſing cries, and deepe exclaimes:
If thou delight to view thy heynous deeds,
Behold this patterne of thy Butcheries.
Oh Gentlemen, ſee, ſee dead Henries wounds,
Open their congeal'd mouthes, and bleed afreſh.
Bluſh, bluſh, thou lumpe of foule Deformitie:
For 'tis thy preſence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty Veines where no blood dwels.
Thy deeds inhumane and unnaturall,
Provokes this Deluge moſt unnaturall.
O God! which this Blood mad'ſt, revenge his death:
O Earth! which this Blood drink'ſt, revenge his death.
Either Heav'n with Lightning ſtrike the murth'rer dead.
Or Earth gape open wide, and eate him quicke,
As thou doſt ſwallow up this good Kings blood,
Which his Hell-govern'd arme hath butchered.
Rich. Lady, you know no Rules of Charity,
Which renders good for bad, Bleſſings for Curſes.
An. Villaine, thou know'ſt nor law of God nor Man,
No Beaſt ſo fierce, but knowes ſome touch of pitty.
Rich. But I know none, and therefore am no Beaſt,
An. O wonderfull, when divels tell the truth!
Rich. More wonderfull, when Angels are ſo angry:
Vouchſafe (divine perfection of a Woman)
Of theſe ſuppoſed Crimes, to give me leave
By circumſtance, but to acquit my ſelfe.
An. Vouchſafe (defus'd infection of a man)
Of theſe knowne evils, but to give me leave
By circumſtance, to curſe thy curſed Selfe.
Rich. Fairer then tongue can name thee, let me have
Some patient leyſure to excuſe my ſelfe.
An. Fouler then heart can thinke thee,
Thou can'ſt make no excuſe currant,
But to hang thy ſelfe.
Rich. By ſuch deſpaire, I ſhould accuſe my ſelfe.
An. And by deſpairing ſhalt thou ſtand excuſed,
For doing worthy Vengeance on thy ſelfe,
That did'ſt unworthy ſlaughter upon others.
Rich. Say that I ſlew them not.
An. Then ſay they were not ſlaine:
But dead they are, and divelliſh ſlave by thee.
Rich. I did not kill your Husband.
An. Why then he is alive.
Rich. Nay, he is dead, and ſlaine by Edwards hands.
An. In thy foule throat thou Ly'ſt,
Queene Margaret ſaw
Thy murd'rous Faulchion ſmoaking in his blood:
The which, thou once didd'ſt bend againſt her breſt,
But that thy Brothers beate aſide the point.
Rich. I was provoked by her ſland'rous tongue,
That laid their guilt, upon my guiltleſſe Shoulders.
An. Thou was't provoked by thy bloody minde,
That never dream'ſt on ought but butcheries:
Did'ſt thou not kill this King?
Rich. I graunt ye.
An. Do'ſt grant me Hedge-hogge,
Then God grant me too
Thou may'ſt be damned for that wicked deede:
O he was gentle, milde, and vertuous,
Rich. The better for the King of heaven that hath him.
An. He is in heaven where thou ſhalt never come.
Rich. Let him thanke me, that holpe to ſend him thither:
For he was fitter for that place then earth.
An. And thou unfit for any place but hell.
Rich. Yes one place elſe, if you will heare me name it.
An. Some dungeon.
Rich. Your Bed-chamber.
An. Ill reſt betide the chamber where thou lyeſt.
Rich. So will it Madam, till I lye with you.
An. I hope ſo.
Rich. I know ſo. But gentle Lady Anne,
To leave this keene encounter of our wits,
And fall ſomething into a ſlower method.
Is not the cauſer of the timeleſſe deaths
Of theſe Plantagenets, Henrie and Edward,
As blamefull as the Executioner?
An. Thou was't the cauſe, and moſt accurſt effect.
Rich. Your beauty was the cauſe of that effect:
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my ſleepe,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So I might live one houre in your ſweet boſome.
An. If I thought that, I tell thee Homicide,
Theſe Nayles ſhould rent that beauty from my Cheekes.
Rich. Theſe eyes could not endure ẏ beauties wrack,
You ſhould not blemiſh it, if I ſtood by;
As all the world is cheared by the Sunne,
So I by that: It is my day, my life.
An. Blacke night ore-ſhade thy day, & death thy life.
Rich. Curſe not thy ſelfe faire Creature,
Thou art both.
An. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.
Rich. It is a quarrell moſt unnaturall,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.
An. It is a quarrell juſt and reaſonable,
To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my Husband.
Rich. He that bereft the Lady of thy Husband,
Did it to helpe thee to a better husband.
An. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.
Rich. He lives, that loves thee better then he could.
An. Name him.
Rich. Plantagenet.
An. Why that was he.
Rich. The ſelfeſame name, but one of better Nature.
An. Where is he?
Heere: Spits at him.
Why doſt thou ſpit at me.
An. Would it were mortall poyſon, for thy ſake.
Rich. Never came poyſon from ſo ſweet a place.
An. Never hung poyſon on a fowler Toade.
Out of my ſight, thou doſt infect mine eyes.
Rich. Thine eyes (ſweet Lady) have infected mine.
An. Would they were Baſiliskes, to ſtrike thee dead.
Rich. I would they were, that I might dye at once:
For now they kill me with a living death.
Thoſe eyes of thine, from mine have drawne ſalt Teares;

Sham'd their Aſpects with ſtore of childiſh drops:
Theſe eyes, which never ſhed remorſefull teare,
No, when my Father Yorke, and Edward wept,
To heare the pittious moane that Rutland made
When black-fac'd Clifford ſhooke his ſword at him.
Nor when thy Warlike Father like a Childe,
Told the ſad ſtorie of my Fathers death,
And twenty times, made pauſe to ſob and weepe
That all the ſtanders by had wet their cheekes
Like Trees bedaſh'd with raine: In that ſad time,
My manly eyes did ſcorne an humble teare:
And what theſe ſorrowes could not thence exhale,
Thy Beauty hath, and made them blinde with weeping.
I never ſued to Friend, nor Enemy:
My Tongue could never learne ſweet ſmoothing word.
But now thy Beauty is propos'd my Fee,
My proud heart ſues, and prompts my tongue to ſpeake.
She lookes ſcornefully at him.
Teach not thy lip ſuch Scorne; for it was made
For kiſſing Lady, not for ſuch contempt.
If thy revengefull heart cannot forgive,
Loe heere I lend thee this ſharpe-pointed Sword,
Which if thou pleaſe to hide in this true breſt,
And let the ſoule fourth that adoreth thee,
I lay it naked to the deadly ſtroke,
And humbly begge the death upon my knee.
He layes his breſt open, ſhe offers at it with his ſword.
Nay do not pauſe: For I did kill King Henrie,
But 'twas thy Beauty that provoked me.
Nay now diſpatch: 'Twas I that ſtabb'd yong Edward,
But 'twas thy Heavenly face that ſet me on.
She fals the Sword.
Take up the ſword againe, or take up me.
An. Ariſe Diſſembler, though I wiſh thy death,
I will not be thy Executioner.
Rich. Then bid me kill my ſelfe, and I will do it.
An. I have already.
Rich. That was in thy rage:
Speake it againe, and even with thy word,
This hand, which for thy love, did kill thy Love,
Shall for thy love, kill a farre truer Love,
To both their deaths ſhalt thou be acceſſary.
An. I would I knew thy heart.
Rich. 'Tis figur'd in my tongue.
An. I feare me, both are falſe.
Rich. Then never Man was true.
An. Well, well, put up your Sword.
Rich. Say then my Peace is made.
An. That ſhalt thou know heereafter.
Rich. But ſhall I live in hope?
An. All men I hope live ſo.
Vouchſafe to weare this Ring.
Rich. Looke how thy Ring incompaſſeth my Finger,
Even ſo thy Breſt incloſeth my poore heart:
Weare both of them, for both of them are thine.
And if thy poore devoted Servant may
But beg one favour at thy gracious hand,
Thou doſt confirme his happyneſſe for ever.
An. What is it?
Rich. That it may pleaſe you leave theſe ſad deſignes,
To him that hath moſt cauſe to be a Mourner,
And preſently repayre to Crosbie Houſe:
Where (after I have ſolemnly interr'd
At Chertſey Monaſt'ry this Noble King,
And wet his Grave with my Repentant Teares)
I will with all expedient duty ſee you.
For divers unknowne Reaſons, I beſeech you,
Grant me this Boon.
An. With all my heart and much it joyes me too,
To ſee you are become ſo penitent.
Treſſel and Barkley, go along with me.
Rich. Bid me farewell.
An. 'Tis more then you deſerve:
But ſince you teach me how to flatter you,
Imagine I have ſaid farewell already.
Exit two with Anne.
Gent. Towards Chertſey, Noble Lord?
Rich. Now to White Friars, there attend my comming.
Exit Corſe.
Was ever woman in this humour Woo'd?
Was ever woman in this humor wonne?
Ile have her but I will not keepe her long.
What? I that kill'd her husband, and his Father,
To take her in her hearts extreameſt hate,
With curſes in her mouth, Teares in her eyes,
The bleeding witneſſe of my hatred by,
Having God, her Conſcience, and theſe bars againſt me,
And I no friends to backe my ſuite withall,
But the plaine Divell and diſſembling lookes?
And yet to winne her? All the world to nothing.
Hah!
Hath ſhe forgot already that brave Prince,
Edward, her Lord whom I (ſome three moneths ſince)
Stab'd in my angry mood, at Tewkesbery?
A ſweeter and a lovelier Gentleman,
Fram'd in the prodigallity of Nature:
Yong, Valiant, Wiſe, and (no doubt) right Royall,
The ſpacious word cannot againe afford:
And will ſhe abaſe her eyes on me,
That cropt the Golden prime of this ſweet Prince,
And made her Widdow to a wofull Bed?
On me, whoſe All not equals Edwards Moytie?
On me, that halts, and am miſhapen thus?
My Dukedome, to a Beggerly denier!
I do miſtake my perſon all this while:
Vpon my life ſhe findes (although I cannot)
My ſelfe to be a maru'llous proper man.
Ile be at Charges for a looking-glaſſe,
And entertaine a ſcore or two of Taylors,
To ſtudy faſhions to adorne my body:
Since I am crept in favour with my ſelfe,
I will maintaine it with ſome little coſt,
But firſt Ile turne yon fellow in his Grave,
And then returne lamenting to my Love.
Shine out faire Sunne, till I have bought a glaſſe,
That I may ſee my Shadow as I paſſe. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter the Queene Mother, Lord Rivers, and Lord Gray.

Riv. Have patience Madam, there's no doubt his Majeſty
Will ſoone recover his accuſtom'd health.
Gray. In that you brooke it ill, it makes him worſe,
Therefore for Gods ſake entertaine good comfort,
And cheere his Grace with quicke and merry eyes.
Qu. If he were dead, what would betide on me?

Gray. No other harme, but loſſe of ſuch a Lord.
Qu. The loſſe of ſuch a Lord, includes all harmes.
Gray. The Heavens have bleſt you with a goodly Son,
To be your Comforter, when he is gone.
Qu. Ah! he is yong; and his minority
Is put unto the truſt of Richard Glouſter,
A man that loves not me, nor none of you.
Riv. Is it concluded he ſhall be protector?
Qu. It is determin'd, not concluded yet:
But ſo it muſt be, if the King miſcarry.

Enter Buckingham and Derby.

Gray. Here comes the Lord of Buckingham & Derby.
Buc. Good time of day unto your Royall Grace.
Der. God make your Majeſty joyfull, as you have bin.
Qu. The Counteſſe Richmond, good my L. of Derby.
To your good prayer, will ſcarſely ſay, Amen.
Yet Derby, notwithſtanding ſhee's your wife,
And loves not me, be you good Lord aſſur'd,
I hate not you for her proud arrogance.
Der. I do beſeech you, either not beleeve
The envious ſlanders of her falſe Accuſers:
Or if ſhe be accus'd on true report,
Beare with her weakneſſe, which I thinke proceeds
From wayward ſickneſſe, and no grounded malice.
Qu. Saw you the King to day my Lord of Derby?
Der. But now the Duke of Buckingham and I,
Are come from viſiting his Majeſty.
Qu. What likelyhood of his amendment Lords?
Buc. Madam good hope, his Grace ſpeakes chearfully.
Qu. God grant him health, did you confer with him?
Buc. I Madam, he deſires to make attonement.
Betweene the Duke of Glouſter, and your Brothers,
And betweene them, and my Lord Chamberlaine,
And ſent to warne them to his Royall preſence.
Qu. Would all were well, but that will never be,
I feare our happineſſe is at the height.

Enter Richard.

Rich. They do me wrong, and I will not indure it,
Who is it that complaines unto the King,
That I (forſooth) am ſterne, and love them not?
By holy Paul, they love his Grace but lightly,
That fill his eares with ſuch diſſentious Rumors.
Becauſe I cannot flatter, and looke faire,
Smile in mens faces, ſmooth, deceive, and cogge,
Ducke with French nods, and Apiſh curteſie,
I muſt be held a rancorous Enemy.
Cannot a plaine man live, and thinke no harme,
But thus his ſimple truth muſt be abus'd,
With ſilken, ſlye, inſinuating Iackes?
Grey. To whom in all this preſence ſpeakes your Grace?
Rich. To thee, that haſt nor honeſty, nor Grace:
When have I injur'd thee? When done thee wrong?
Or thee? or thee? or any of your Faction?
A plague upon you all. His Royall Grace
(Whom God preſerve better then you would wiſh)
Cannot be quiet ſcarſe a breathing while,
But you muſt trouble him with lewd complaints.
Qu. Brother of Gloſter, you miſtake the matter:
The King on his owne Royall diſpoſition,
(And not provok'd by any Sutor elſe)
Ayming (belike) at your interior hatred,
That in your outward action ſhewes it ſelfe
Againſt my Children, Brothers, and my Selfe,
Makes him to ſend, that he may learne the ground.
Rich. I cannot tell, the world is growne ſo bad,
That Wrens make prey, where Eagles dare not pearch.
Since everie Iacke became a Gentleman,
There's many a gentle perſon made a Iacke.
Qu. Come, come, we know your meaning Brother Gloſter,
You envy my advancement, and my friends:
God grant we never may have neede of you.
Rich. Meane time, God grants that I have need of you.
Our Brother is impriſon'd by your meanes,
My ſelfe diſgrac'd, and the Nobilitie
Held in contempt, while great Promotions
Are daily given to ennoble thoſe
That ſcarſe ſome two dayes ſince were worth a Noble.
Qu. By him that rais'd me to this carefull height,
From that contented hap which I injoy'd.
I never did incenſe his Majeſtie
Againſt the Duke of Clarence, but have bin
An earneſt advocate to plead for him.
My Lord you do me ſhamefull injurie,
Falſely to draw me in theſe vile ſuſpects.
Rich. You may deny that you were not the meane
Of my Lord Haſtings late impriſonment.
Riv. She may my Lord, for——
Rich. She may Lord Rivers, why who knowes not ſo?
She may do more ſir then denying that:
She may helpe you to many faire preferments,
And then deny her ayding hand therein,
And lay thoſe Honors on your high deſert.
What may ſhe not, ſhe may, I marrie may ſhe,
Riv. What marrie may ſhe?
Rich. What marrie may ſhe? Marrie with a King,
A batcheller, and a handſome ſtripling too,
I wis your Grandam had a worſer match.
Qu. My Lord of Glouſter, I have too long borne
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter ſcoffes:
By heaven, I will acquaint his Majeſtie
Of thoſe groſſe taunts that oft I have endur'd.
I had rather be a Countrie ſervant maide
Then a great Queene, with this condition,
To be ſo baited, ſcorn'd, and ſtormed at,
Small joy have I in being Englands Queene.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. And leſned be that ſmall, God I beſeech him,
Thy honor, ſtate, and ſeate, is due to me.
Rich. What? threat you me with telling of the King?
I will avouch't in preſence of the King:
I dare adventure to be ſent to th' Tower.
'Tis time to ſpeake,
My paines are quite forgot.
Margaret. Out Divell,
I do remember them too well:
Thou kill'dſt my Husband Henrie in the Tower,
And Edward my poore Son, at Tewkesbury.
Rich. Ere you were Queene,
I, or your Husband King:
I was a packe-horſe in his great affaires:
A weeder out of his proud Adverſaries,
A liberall rewarder of his Friends,
To royalize his blood, I ſpent mine owne.
Margaret. I and much better blood
Then his, or thine.

Rich. In all which time, you and your Husband Grey
Were factious, for the houſe of Lancaſter;
And Rivers, ſo were you: was not your Husband,
In Margarets Battaile, at Saint Albons, ſlaine?
Let me put in your mindes, if you forget
What you have beene ere this, and what you are:
Withall, what I have beene and what I am.
Q.M. A murth'rous Villaine, and ſo ſtill thou art.
Rich. Poore Clarence did forſake his Father Warwicke,
I, and forſwore himſelfe (which Ieſu pardon.)
Q.M. Which God revenge.
Rich. To fight on Edwards partie, for the Crowne,
And for his meede, poore Lord, he is mewed up:
I would to God my heart were Flint, like Edwards,
Or Edwards ſoft and pittifull, like mine;
I am too childiſh fooliſh for this World.
Q.M. High thee to Hell for ſhame, & leave this World
Thou Cacodemon, there thy Kingdome is.
Riv. My Lord of Gloſter: in thoſe buſie dayes,
Which here you urge, to prove us Enemies,
We follow'd then our Lord, our Soveraigne King,
So ſhould we you, if you ſhould be our King.
Rich. If I ſhould be? I had rather be a Pedler:
Farre be it from my heart, the thought thereof.
Qu. As little joy (my Lord) as you ſuppoſe
You ſhould enjoy, were you this Countries King,
As little joy you may ſuppoſe in me,
That I enjoy, being the Queene thereof.
Q.M. A little joy enjoyes the Queene thereof,
For I am ſhe and altogether joyleſſe:
I can no longer hold me patient.
Heare me, you wrangling Pyrates that fall out,
In ſharing that which yon have pill'd from me:
Which of you trembles not, that lookes on me?
If not, that I am Queene, you bow like Subjects;
Yet that by you depos'd, you quake like Reblls.
Ah gentle Villaine doe not turne away.
Rich. Foule wrinckled Witch, what mak'ſt thou in my (ſight?
Q.M. But repetition of what thou haſt marr'd,
That will I make, before I let thee goe.
Rich. Wert thou not baniſhed on paine of death?
Q.M. I was: but I doe find more paine in baniſhment,
Then death can yeeld me here, by abode.
A Husband and a Sonne thou ow'ſt to me,
And thou a Kingdome; all of you allegeance:
This Sorrow that I have, by right is yours,
And all the Pleaſures you uſurpe are mine.
Rich. The Curſe my Noble Father layd on thee,
When thou didſt Crown his Warlike Brows with Paper,
And with thy ſcornes drew'ſt rivers from his eyes,
And then to dry them, gav'ſt the Duke a Clowt,
Steep'd in the faultleſſe blood of prettie Rutland:
His Curſes then, from bitterneſſe of Soule,
Denounc'd againſt thee, are falne upon thee:
And God, not we, hath plagu'd thy bloody deed.
Qu. So juſt is God, to right the innocent.
Haſt. O, 'twas the fouleſt deed to ſlay that Babe,
And the moſt mercileſſe that ere was heard of.
Riv. Tyrants themſelves wept when it was reported.
Dorſ. No man but prophecied revenge for it.
Buck. Northumberland, then preſent wept to ſee it.
Q.M. What? were you ſnarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turne you al your hatred now on me?
Did Yorkes dread Curſe prevaile ſo much with Heaven,
That Henries death, my lovely Edwards death,
Their Kingdomes loſſe, my wofull baniſhment,
Should all but anſwere for that peeviſh brat?
Can curſes pierce the Cloudes and enter Heaven?
Why then give way dull Cloudes to my quicke Curſes.
Though not by warre, by Surfet dye your King,
As ours by Murther, to make him a King.
Edward thy Sonne, that now is Prince of Wales,
For Edward our Sonne that was Prince of Wales,
Dye in his youth, by like untimely violence.
Thy ſelfe a Queene, for me that was a Queene.
Out-live thy glorie, like my wretched ſelfe:
Long may'ſt thou live, to waile thy Childrens death,
And ſee another, as I ſee thee thee now,
Deck'd in thy Rights, as thou art ſtall'd in mine.
Long dye thy happie dayes, before thy death,
And after many length'ned howres of griefe,
Dye neither Mother, Wife, nor Englands Queene.
Rivers and Dorſet, you were ſtanders by,
And ſo waſt thou, Lord Haſtings, when my Sonne
Was ſtab'd with bloody Daggers: God, I pray him,
That none of you may live his naturall age,
But by ſome unlook'd accident cut off.
Rich. Have done thy Charme, yͧ hatefull wither'd Hagge.
Q.M. And leave out thee? ſtay Dog, for yͧ ſhalt heare me.
If Heaven have any grievous plague in ſtore,
Exceeding thoſe that I can wiſh upon thee,
O let them keepe it, till thy ſinnes be ripe,
And then hurle downe their indignation
On thee, the troubler of the poore Worlds peace.
The worme of Conſcience ſtill begnaw thy Soule,
Thy Friends ſuſpect for Traytors while thou liv'ſt,
And take deepe Traytors for thy deareſt Friends;
No ſleepe cloſe up that deadly Eye of thine,
Vnleſſe it be while ſome tormenting Dreame
Affrights thee with a Hell of ougly Divells.
Thou elviſh mark'd, abortive rooting Hogge,
Thou that waſt ſeal'd in thy Nativitie
The ſlave of Nature, and the Sonne of Hell:
Thou ſlander of thy heavie Mothers Wombe,
Thou loathed Iſſue of thy Fathers Loynes,
Thou Ragge of Honor, thou deteſted.
Rich. Margaret.
Q.M. Richard. Rich. Ha.
Q.M. I call thee not.
Rich. I cry thee mercie then: for I did thinke,
That thou hadſt call'd me all theſe bitter names.
Q.M. Why ſo I did, but look'd for no reply.
Oh let me make the Period to my Curſe.
Rich. 'Tis done by me, and ends in Margaret.
Q. Thus have you breath'd your curſe againſt your ſelf.
Q.M. Poore painted Queen, vain flouriſh of my fortune,
Why ſtrew'ſt thou Sugar on that Bottel'd Spider,
Whoſe deadly Web enſnareth thee about?
Foole, foole, thou whet'ſt a Knife to kill thy ſelfe:
The day will come, that thou ſhalt wiſh for me,
To helpe thee curſe this poyſonous Bunch-backt Toade.
Haſt. Falſe boding Woman, end thy franticke Curſe,
Leaſt to thy harme, thou move our patience.
Q.M. Foule ſhame upon you, you have all mov'd mine.
Ri. Were you wel ſerv'd, you would be taught your duty.
Q.M. To ſerve me well, you all ſhould doe me duty,
Teach me to be your Qeene, and you my Subjects:
O ſerve me well, and teach your ſelves that duty.
Dorſ. Diſpute not with her, ſhe is lunaticke.
Q.M. Peace maſter Marqueſſe, you are malapert,
Your fire-new ſtampe of Honor is ſcarce currant.

O that your young Nobilitie can judge
What 'twere to loſe it, and be miſerable.
They that ſtand high, have many blaſts to ſhake them,
And if they fall, they daſh themſelves to peeces.
Rich. Good counſaile marry, learne it, learne it Mar-queſſe.
Dor. It touches you my Lord, as much as me.
Rich. I, and much more: but I was borne ſo high:
Our ayerie buildeth in the Cedars top,
And dallies with the winde, and ſcornes the Sunne.
Mar. And turnes the Sun to ſhade: alas, alas,
Witneſſe my Sonne now in the ſhade of death,
Whoſe bright out-ſhining beames, thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternall Darkeneſſe folded up.
Your ayery buildeth in our ayeries Neſt:
O God that ſeeſt it do not ſuffer it,
As it is wonne with blood, loſt be it ſo.
Buc. Peace, peace for ſhame: If not for Charity.
Mar. Vrge neither charity, nor ſhame to me:
Vncharitably with me have you dealt,
And ſhamefully my hopes (by you) are butcher'd.
My Charity is outrage, Life my ſhame,
And in that ſhame, ſtill live my ſorrowes rage.
Buc. Have done, have done.
Mar. O Princely Buckingham, Ile kiſſe thy hand,
In ſigne of League and amity with thee:
Now faire befall thee, and thy Noble houſe:
Thy Garments are not ſpotted with our blood:
Nor thou within the compaſſe of my curſe.
Buc. Nor no one heere: for Curſes never paſſe
The lips of thoſe that breathe them in the ayre.
Mar. I will not thinke but they aſcend the sky,
And there awake Gods gentle ſleeping peace.
O Buckingham, take heede of yonder dogge:
Looke when he fawnes, he bites; and when he bites,
His venom tooth will rankle to the death:
Have not to do with him, beware of him,
Sinne, death, and hell have ſet their markes on him,
And all their Miniſters attend on him.
Rich. What doth ſhe ſay, my Lord of Buckingham?
Buc. Nothing that I reſpect my gracious Lord.
Mar. What doſt thou ſcorne me
For my gentle counſell?
And ſooth the divell that I warne thee from.
O but remember this another day:
When he ſhall ſplit thy very heart with ſorrow:
And ſay (poore Margaret) was a Propheteſſe:
Live each of you the ſubjects to his hate,
And he to yours, and all of you to Gods. Exit.
Buc. My haire doth ſtand an end to heare her curſes.
Riv. And ſo doth mine, I muſe why ſhe's at liberty.
Rich. I cannot blame her, by Gods holy mother,
She hath had too much wrong, and I repent
My part thereof, that I have done to her.
Mar. I never did her any to my knowledge.
Rich. Yet you have all the vantage of her wrong:
I was too hot, to doe ſome body good,
That is too cold in thinking of it now:
Marry as for Clarence, he is well repayed:
He is frank'd up to fatting for his paines,
God pardon them, that are the cauſe thereof.
Riv. A vertuous, and a Chriſtian like concluſion,
To pray for them that have done ſcath to us.
Rich. So do I ever, being well adviſ'd.
Speakes to himſelfe.
For had I curſt now, I had curſt my ſelfe.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madam, his Majeſty doth call for you,
And for your Grace, and yours my gracious Lord.
Qu. Catesby I come, Lords will you go with me.
Riv. We wait upon your Grace.
Exeunt all but Gloſter.
Rich. I do the wrong, and firſt begin to brawle.
The ſecret Miſcheefes that I ſet abroach,
I lay unto the greevous charge of others.
Clarence, whom I indeede have caſt in darkneſſe,
I do beweepe to many ſimple Gulls,
Namely to Derby, Haſtings, Buckingham,
And tell them 'tis the Queene, and her Allies,
That ſtirre the King againſt the Duke my Brother.
Now they beleeve it, and withall whet me
To be reveng'd on Rivers, Dorſet, Grey.
But then I ſigh, and with a peece of Scripture,
Tell them that God bids us doe good for evill:
And thus I cloathe my naked Villanie
With odde old ends, ſtolne forth of holy Writ,
And ſeeme a Saint, when moſt I play the divell.

Enter two murtherers.

But ſoft, heere come my executioners,
How now my hardy ſtout reſolved Mates,
Are you now going to diſpatch this thing?
Vil. We are my Lord, and come to have the Warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.
Rich. Well thought upon, I have it heere about me:
When you have done, repayre to Crosby place;
But ſirs be ſodaine in the execution,
Withall obdurate, do not heare him pleade;
For Clarence is well ſpoken, and perhappes
May move your hearts to pitty, if you marke him.
Vil. Tut, tut, my Lord, we will not ſtand to prate,
Talkers are no good dooers, be aſſur'd:
We go to uſe our hands, and not our tongues.
Rich. Your eyes drop Mill-ſtones, when Fooles eyes fall Teares.
I like you Lads, about your buſineſſe ſtraight.
Go, go, diſpatch.
Vil. We will my Noble Lord.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Clarence and Keeper.

Keep. Why lookes your Grace ſo heavily to day?
Cla. O, I have paſt a miſerable night,
So full of fearefull Dreames, of ugly ſights,
That as I am a Chriſtian faithfull man,
I would not ſpend another ſuch a night
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy dayes:
So full of diſmall terror was the time.
Keep. What was your dream my Lord, I pray you tel me.
Cla. Me thoughts that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to croſſe to Burgundy,
And in my company my Brother Glouſter,
Who from my Cabin tempted me to walke,
Vpon the Hatches: There we look'd toward England,
And cited up a thouſand heavy times,

During the warres of Yorke and Lancaſter
That had befalne us us. As he pac'd along
Vpon the giddy footing of the Hatches,
Me thought that Gloſter ſtumbled, and in falling
Strooke me (that thought to ſtay him) over-boord,
Into the tumbling billowes of the maine.
O Lord, me thought what paine it was to drowne,
What dreadfull noyſe of water in mine eares,
What ſights of ugly death within mine eyes.
Me thoughts, I ſaw a thouſand fearefull wrackes:
A thouſand men that fiſhes gnaw'd upon:
Wedges of Gold, great Anchors, heapes of Pearle,
Ineſtimable Stones, unvalewed Iewels,
All ſcatterred in the bottome of the Sea:
Some lay in dead-mens Sculles, and in the holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in ſcorne of eyes) reflecting Gemmes,
That woo'd the ſlimy bottome of the deepe,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay ſcattred by.

Keep. Had you ſuch leyſure in the time of death,
To gaze upon theſe ſecrets of the deepe?

Cla. Me thought I had, and often did I ſtrive
To yeeld the Ghoſt: but ſtill the envious Flood
Stop'd in my ſoule, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vaſt, and wand'ring ayre:
But ſmother'd it within my panting bulke,
Who almoſt burſt, to belch it in the Sea.

Keep. Awak'd you not in this ſore Agony?

Clar. No, no, my dreame was lengthen'd after life.
O then, began the Tempeſt to my Soule,
I paſt (me thought) the Melancholly flood,
With that ſowre Ferrie-man which Poets write of,
Vnto the Kingdome of perpetuall Night.
The firſt that there did greet my Stranger-ſoule,
Was my great Father-in-law renowned Warwicke,
Who ſpake alowd: What ſcourge for Perjurie,
Can this darke Monarchy afford falſe Clarence?
And ſo he vaniſh'd. Then came wand'ring by,
A Shadow like an Angell, with bright hayre
Dabbel'd in blood, and he ſhriek'd out alowd
Clarence is come, falſe, fleeting, perjur'd Clarence,
That ſtabb'd me in the field by Tewkesbury:
Seize on him Furies, take him unto Torment.
With that (me thought) a Legion of foule Fiends
Inviron'd me, and howled in mine eares
Such heddeous cries, that with the very Noiſe,
I (trembling) wak'd, and for a ſeaſon after,
Could not beleeve, but that I was in Hell,
Such terrible Impreſſion made my Dreame.

Keep. No marvell Lord, though it affrighted you,
I am affraid (me thinkes) to heare you tell it.

Cla. Ah Keeper, Keeper, I have done theſe things
(That now give evidence againſt my Soule)
For Edwards ſake, and ſee how he requites me.
O God! if my deepe prayres cannot appeaſe thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my miſdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath in me alone:
O ſpare my guiltleſſe Wife, and my poore children.
Keeper, I prythee ſit by me a-while,
My ſoule is heavy, and I faine would ſleepe.

Keep. I will my Lord, God give your Grace good reſt.

Enter Brakenbury the Lievtenant.

Bra. Sorrow breakes Seaſons, and repoſing houres,
Makes the Night Morning, and the Noon-tide night:
Princes have but their Titles for their Glories,
An outward Honor, for an inward Toyle,
And for unfelt Imaginations
They often feele a world of reſtleſſe Cares:
So that betweene their Titles, and low name,
There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Enter two Murtherers.

1. Mur. Ho, who's heere?

Bra. What would'ſt thou Fellow? And how camm'ſt thou hither.

2. Mur. I would ſpeake with Clarence, and I came hither on my Legges.

Bra. What ſo breefe?

1. 'Tis better (Sir) then to be tedious:
Let him ſee our Commiſſion, and talke no more. Read

Bra. I am in this, commanded to deliver
The Noble Duke of Clarence to your hands.
I will not reaſon what is meant heereby,
Becauſe I will be guiltleſſe from the meaning.
There lies the Duke aſleepe, and there the Keyes.
Ile to the King, and ſignifie to him,
That thus I have reſign'd to you my charge. Exit.

1 You may ſir, 'tis a point of wiſedome:
Fare you well.

2 What, ſhall we ſtab him as he ſleepes.

1 No: hee'l ſay 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Why he ſhall never wake, untill the great Iudgement day.

1 Why then he'l ſay, we ſtab'd him ſleeping.

2 The urging of that word Iudgement, hath bred a kinde of remorſe in me.

1 What? art thou affraid?

2 Not to kill him, having a Warrant.
But to be damn'd for killing him, from the which
No Warrant can defend me.

1 I thought thou had'ſt bin reſolute.

2 So I am, to let him live.

1 Ile backe to the Duke of Glouſter, and tell him ſo.

2 Nay, I prythee ſtay a little:
I hope this paſſionate humor of mine, will change,
It was wont to hold me but while one tels twenty.

1 How do'ſt thou feele thy ſelfe now?

2 Some certaine dregges of conſcience are yet within me.

1 Remember our Reward, when the deed's done.

2 Come, he dies: I had forgot the Reward.

1 Where's thy conſcience now.

2 O, in the Duke of Gloſters purſe.

1 When he opens his purſe to give us our Reward, thy Conſcience flyes out.

2 'Tis no matter, let us goe: 'There's few or uone will entertaine it.

1 What if it come to thee againe?

2 Ile not meddle with it, it makes a man a Coward: A man cannot ſteale, but it accuſeth him: A man cannot Sweare, but it Checkes him: A man cannot lye with his Neighbours Wife, but it detects him. 'Tis a bluſhing ſhamefac'd ſpirit, that mutinies in a mans boſome: It filles a man full of Obſtacles. It made me once reſtore a Purſſe of Gold that (by chance) I found: It beggars any man that keepes it: It is turn'd out of Townes and Cities for a dangerous thing, and every man that means to live well, endevours to truſt to himſelfe, and live without it.

1. 'Tis even now at my elbow, perſwading me not to kill the Duke.
2, Take the divell in thy minde, and beleeve him not:
He would inſinuate with thee but to make thee ſigh.
1 I am ſtrong fram'd, he cannot prevaile with me.
2 Spoke like a tall man, that reſpects thy reputation.
Come, ſhall we fall to worke?
1 Take him on the Coſtard, with the hiltes of thy Sword, and then throw him into the Malmeſey-Butte in the next roome.
2 O excellent device; and make a ſop of him.
1 Soft, he wakes.
2 Strike.
1 No, we'll reaſon with him.
Cla. Where art thou Keeper? Give me a cup of wine.
2 You ſhall have Wine enough my Lord anon.
Clar. In Gods name, what art thou?
1 A man, as you are.
Clar. But not as I am Royall.
1 Nor you as we are, Loyall.
Cla. Thy voyce is thunder, but thy lookes are humble.
1 My voyce is now the Kings, my lookes mine owne.
Cla. How darkly, and how deadly doeſt thou ſpeake?
Your eyes doe menace me: why looke you pale?
Who ſent you hither? Wherefore doe you come?
2 To, to, to——
Cla. To murther me?
Both. I, I.
Clar. You ſcarſely have the hearts to tell me ſo,
And therefore cannot have the hearts to doe it.
Wherein my friends have I offended you?
1 Offended us you have not, but the King.
Clar. I ſhall be reconcil'd to him againe.
2 Never my Lord, therefore prepare to dye.
Clar. Are you drawne forth among a world of men
To ſlay the innocent? What is my offence?
Where is the Evidence that doth accuſe me?
What lawfull Queſt have given their Verdict up
Vnto the frowning Iudge? Or who pronounc'd
The bitter ſentence of poore Clarence death?
Before I be convict by courſe of Law,
To threaten me with death, is moſt unlawfull.
I charge you, as you hope for any goodneſſe,
That you depart, and lay no hands on me:
The deed you undertake is damnable.
1 What we will doe we doe upon command.
2 And he that hath commanded, is our King.
Cla. Erroneous Vaſſals, the great King of Kings
Hath in the Table of his Law commanded
That thou ſhall doe no murther. Will you then
Spurne at his Edict, and fulfill a Mans?
Take heed: for he holds Vengeance in his hand
To hurle upon their heads that breake his Law.
2 And that ſame Vengeance doth he hurle on thee,
For falſe forſwearing, and for murther too:
Thou did'ſt receive the Sacrament, to fight
In quarrell of the Houſe of Lancaſter.
1 And like a Traitor to the name of God,
Did'ſt breake that Vow, and with thy treacherous blade,
Vnrip'ſt the Bowels of thy Sou'raignes Sonne.
2 Whom thou was't ſworne to cheriſh and defend.
1 How canſt thou urge Gods dreafull Law to us,
When thou haſt broke it in ſuch deere degree?
Clar. Alas! for whoſe ſake did I that ill deed?
For Edward, for my Brother, for his ſake.
He ſends you not to murther me for this:
For in that ſinne, he is as deepe as I:
If God will be avenged for the deed,
O know you yet, he doth it publiquely,
Take not the quarrell from his powrefull arme:
He needs no indirect, or lawleſſe courſe,
To cut off thoſe that have offended him.
1 Who made thee then a bloudy miniſter,
When gallant ſpringing brave Plantagenet,
That Princely Novice was ſtrucke dead by thee?
Cla. My Brothers love, the Divell, and my Rage.
1 Thy Brothers Love, our Duty, and thy Faults,
Provoke us hither now, to ſlaughter thee.
Cla. If you doe love my Brother, hate not me:
I am his brother, and I love him well.
If you are hyr'd for meed, go backe againe,
And I will ſend you to my Brother Glouſter:
Who ſhall reward you better for my life,
Then Edward will for tydings of my death.
2 You are deceiv'd,
Your Brother Glouſter hates you.
Cla. Oh no, he loves me, and he holds me deere:
Go you to him from me.
1 I ſo we will.
Cla. Tell him, when that our Princely Father Yorke
Bleſt his three Sonnes with his victorious Arme,
He little thought of this divided Friendſhip:
Bid Glouſter thinke on this, and he will weepe.
1 I Milſtones, as he leſſoned us to weepe.
Cla. O do not ſlander him, for he is kinde.
1 Right, as Snow in Harveſt:
Come, you deceive your ſelfe,
'Tis he that ſends us to deſtroy you heere.
Cla. It cannot be, for he bewept my Fortune,
And hugg'd me in his armes, and ſwore with ſobs,
That he would labour my delivery.
1 Why ſo he doth, when he delivers you
From this earths thraldome, to the joyes of heaven.
2 Make peace with God, for you muſt die my Lord.
Cla. Have you that holy feeling in your ſoules,
To counſaile me to make my peace with God,
And are you yet to your owne ſoules ſo blinde,
That you wil warre with God, by murd'ring me?
O ſirs conſider, they that ſet you on
To do this deede, will hate you for the deede.
2 What ſhall we do?
Cla. Relent, and ſave your ſoules:
Which of you, if you were a Princes ſonne,
Being pent from Liberty, as I am now,
If two ſuch murtherers as your ſelves came to you,
Would not intreat for life, as you would begge
Were you in my diſtreſſe,
1 Relent? no: 'Tis cowardly and womaniſh.
Cla. Not to relent, is beaſtly, ſavage, divelliſh.
My Friend, I ſpy ſome pitty in thy lookes:
O, if thine eye be not a flatterer,
Come thou on my ſide, and intreat for me,
A begging Prince, what begger pitties not?
2 Looke behinde you, my Lord.
Take that, and that, if all this will not do, Stabs him.
Ile drowne you in the Malmeſey-But within. Exit.
2 A bloody deed, and deſperately diſpatcht:
How faine (like Pilate) would I waſh my hands
Of this moſt greevous murther. Enter 1. Murtherer
1 How now? what mean'ſt thou that thou help'ſt me not? By heaven the Duke ſhall know how ſlacke you have beene.

2 I

2. Mur. I would he knew that I had ſav'd his brother;
Take thou the Fee, and tell him what I ſay,
For I repent me that the Duke is ſlaine. Exit.
1. Mur. So doe not I: goe Coward as thou art.
Well, Ile goe hide the body in ſome hole,
Till that the Duke give order for his buriall:
And when I have my meede, I will away;
For this will out, and then I muſt not ſtay. Exit.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Flouriſh.

Enter the King ſicke, the Queene, Lord Marqueſſe Dorſet, Rivers, Haſtings, Catesby, Buckingham, Woodvill.

King. Why ſo: now have I done a good dayes worke.
You Peeres, continue this united League:
I, every day expect an Embaſſage
From my Redeemer, to redeeme me hence.
And more to peace my ſoule ſhall part to heaven,
Since I have made my Friends at peace on earth.
Dorſet and Rivers, take each others hand,
Diſſemble not your hatred, Sweare your love.
Riv. By heaven, my ſoule is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I ſeale my true hearts Love.
Haſt. So thrive I, as I truly ſweare the like.
King. Take heed you dally not before your King,
Leſt he that is the ſupreme King of Kings
Confound your hidden falſhood, and award
Either of you to be the others end.
Haſt. So proſper I, as I ſweare perfect love.
Riv. And I, as I love Haſtings with my heart.
King. Madam, your ſelfe is not exempt from this:
Nor you Sonne Dorſet, Buckingham nor you;
You have beene factious one againſt the other.
Wife, love Lord Haſtings, let him kiſſe your hand,
And what you doe doe it unfeignedly.
Que. There Haſtings, I will never more remember
Our former hatred, ſo thrive I, and mine.
King. Dorſet, imbrace him:
Haſtings, love Lord Marqueſſe.
Dor. This interchange of love, I heere proteſt
Vpon my part, ſhall be inviolable.
Haſt. And ſo ſweare I.
King. Now Princely Buckingham, ſeale thou this league
With thy embracements to my wives Allies,
And make me happy in your unity.
Buc. When ever Buckingham doth turne his hate
Vpon your Grace, but with all dutious love,
Doth cheriſh you, and yours, God puniſh me
With hate in thoſe where I expect moſt love,
When I have moſt need to imploy a Friend,
And moſt aſſured that he is a Friend,
Deepe, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me: This doe I begge of heaven,
When I am cold in love, to you, or yours. Embrace.
King. A pleaſing Cordiall, Princely Buckingham
Is this thy Vow, unto my ſickely heart.
There wanteth now our brother Gloſter heere,
To make the bleſſed period of this peace.
Buc. And in good time,
Heere comes Sir Richard Ratcliffe, and the Duke.

Enter Ratcliffe, and Gloſter.

Rich. Good morrow to my Soveraigne King & Queene
And Princely Peeres, a happy time of day:
King. Happy indeed, as we have ſpent the day:
Gloſter, we have done deeds of Charity,
Made peace of enmity, faire love of hate,
Betweene theſe ſwelling wrong incenſed Peeres,
Rich. A bleſſed labour my moſt Soveraigne Lord:
Among this Princely heape, if any heere
By falſe intelligence, or wrong ſurmize
Hold me a Foe: if I unwillingly, or in my rage,
Haue ought committed that is hardly borne,
To any in this preſence, I deſire
To reconcile me to his friendly peace:
'Tis death to me to be at enmity:
I hate it, and deſire all good mens love,
Fird Madam, I intreate true peace of you,
Which I will purchaſe with my dutious ſervice.
Of you my Noble Coſin Buckingham,
If ever any grudge were lodg'd betweene us.
Of you and you, Lord Rivers and of Dorſet,
That all without deſert have frown'd on me:
Of you Lord Woodvill, and Lord Scales of you,
Dukes, Earles, Lords, Gentlemen, indeed of all.
I doe not know that Engliſhman alive,
With whom my ſoule is any jot at oddes,
More then the infant that is borne to night:
I thanke my God for my Humility.
Que. A holy day ſhall this be kept hereafter:
I would to God all ſtrifes were well compounded.
Ny Sovereigne Lord, I doe beſeech your Highneſſe
To take our brother Clarence to your Grace.
Rich. Why Madam, have I offred love for this,
To be ſo flowted in this Royall preſence?
Who knowes not that the gentle Duke is dead? They
You doe him injury to ſcorne his Coarſe. all ſtart.
King. Who knowes not he is dead?
Who knowes he is?
Que. All-ſeeing heaven, what a world is this?
Buc. Looke I ſo pale Lord Dorſet, as the reſt?
Dor. I my good Lord, and no man in the preſence,
But his red colour hath forſooke his cheekes.
King. Is Clarence dead? The order was reverſt.
Rich. But he (poore man) by your firſt order dyed,
And that a winged Mercury did beare:
Some tardy Cripple bare the Countermand,
That came too lagge to ſee him buried.
God grant, that ſome leſſe Noble, and leſſe Loyall,
Neerer in bloudy thoughts, and not in blood,
Deſerve not worſe then wretched Clarence did,
And yet goe currant from ſuſpition.

Enter Earle of Derby.

Der. A boone my Soveraigne for my ſervice done.
King. I prethee peace, my ſoule is full of ſorrow.
Der. I will not riſe, unleſſe your Highnes heare me.
King. Then ſay at once, what is it thou requeſts.
Der. The forfeit (Soveraigne) of my ſervants life,
Who ſlew to day a Riotous Gentleman,
Lately attendant on the Duke of Norfolke.
King. Have I a tongue to doome my Brothers death?
And ſhall that tongue give pardon to a ſlave?
My brother kill'd no man, his fault was Thought,
And yet his puniſhment was bitter death.

Who ſued to me for him? Who (in my wrath)
Kneel'd at my feet, and bid me be advis'd?
Who ſpoke of Brotherhood? who ſpoke in love?
Who told me how the poore ſoule did forſake
The mighty Warwicke, and did fight for me:
Who told me in the Field at Tewkesbury,
When Oxford had me downe, he reſcued me:
And ſaid deere Brother live, and be a King?
Who told me, when we both lay in the Field,
Frozen (almoſt) to death, how he did lap me
Even in his Garments, and did give himſelfe
(All thin and naked) to the numbe colde night?
All this from my Remembrance, brutiſh wrath
Sinfully pluckt, and not a man of you
Had ſo much grace to put it in my minde.
But when your Carters, or your waiting Vaſſalls
Have done a drunken Slaughter, aud defac'd
The precious Image of our deere Redeemer,
You ſtraight are on your knees for Pardon, pardon,
And I (unjuſtly too) muſt grant it you.
But for my Brother, not a man would ſpeake,
Nor I (ungracious) ſpeake unto my ſelfe
For him poore Soule. The proudeſt of you all,
Have beene beholding to him in his life:
Yet none of you, would once begge for his life.
O God! I feare thy juſtice will take hold
On me, and you; and mine, and yours for this.
Come Haſtings helpe me to my Cloſſet.
Ah poore Clarence. Exeunt ſome with K. & Queen.
Rich. This is the fruits of raſhnes: Markt you not,
How that the Kindred of the Queene
Look'd pale, when they did heare of Clarence death?
O! they did urge it ſtill unto the King,
God will revenge it. Come Lords will you goe,
To comfort Edward with our company?
Buc. We wait upon your Grace. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter the old Dutcheſſe of Yorke, with the two children of Clarence.

Edw. Good Grandam tell us, is our Father dead?
Duch. No Boy.
Daugh. Why do you weepe ſo oft? And beat your Breſt?
And cry, O Clarence, my unhappy Sonne?
Boy. Why do you looke on us, and ſhake your head,
And call us Orphans, Wretches, Caſtawayes,
If that our Noble Father were alive?
Dut. My pretty Coſins, you miſtake me both,
I do lament the ſickneſſe of the King,
As loath to loſe him, not your Fathers death:
It were loſt ſorrow to waile one that's loſt.
Boy. Then you conclude, (my Grandam) he is dead:
The King mine Vnckle is to blame for it.
God will revenge it, whom I will importune
With earneſt prayers, all to that effect.
Daugh. And ſo will I.
Dut. Peace children, peace, the King doth love you wel.
Incapable and ſhallow Innocents,
You cannot gueſſe who cauſ'd your Fathers death.
Boy. Grandam we can: for my good Vnkle Gloſter
Told me, the King provok'd to it by the Queene,
Deviſ'd impeachments to impriſon him;
And when my Vnckle told me ſo, he wept,
And pittyed me, and kindly kiſt my cheeke:
Bad me rely on him, as on my Father,
And he would love me deerely as a childe.
Dut. Ah! that deceit ſhould ſteale ſuch gentle ſhape,
And with a vertuous Vizor hide deepe vice.
He is my ſonne, I, and therein my ſhame,
Yet from my dugges, he drew not this deceit.
Boy. Thinke you my Vnkle did diſſemble Grandam?
Dut. I Boy.
Boy. I cannot thinke it. Harke, what noiſe is this?

Enter the Queene with her haire about her eares, Rivers & Dorſet after her.

Qu. Ah! who ſhall hinder me to waile and weepe?
To chide my Fortune, and torment my Selfe.
Ile joyne with blacke deſpaire againſt my Soule,
And to my ſelfe become an enemie.
Dut. What meanes this Scene of rude impatience?
Qu. To make an act of Tragicke violence.
Edward my Lord, thy Sonne, our King is dead.
Why grow the Branches, when the Roote is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their ſap?
If you will live, Lament: if dye, be breefe,
That our ſwift winged Soules may catch the Kings,
Or like obedient Subjects follow him,
To his new kingdome of ne're-changing night.
Dut. Ah, ſo much intereſt have I in thy ſorrow,
As I had Title in thy Noble Husband:
I have bewept a worthy Husbands death,
And liv'd with looking on his Images:
But now two Mirrors of his Princely ſemblance,
Are crack'd in pieces, by malignant death,
And I for comfort, have but one falſe Glaſſe,
That greeves me, when I ſee my ſhame in him.
Thou art a Widdow: yet thou art a Mother,
And haſt the comfort of thy Children left,
But death hath ſnatch'd my Husband from mine Armes,
And pluckt two Crutches from my feeble hands,
Clarence, and Edward. O, what cauſe have I,
(Thine being but a moity of my moane)
To over-go thy woes, and drowne my cries.
Boy. Ah Aunt! you wept not for your Fathers death:
How can we ayde you with our Kindred teares?
Daugh. Our fatherleſſe diſtreſſe was left unmoan'd,
Your widdow-dolour, likewiſe be unwept.
Qu. Give me no helpe in Lamentation,
I am not barren to bring forth complaints:
All Springs reduce their currents to mine eyes,
That I being govern'd by the waterie Moone,
May ſend forth plenteous teares to drowne the World.
Ah, for my Husband, for my deere Lord Edward.
Chil. Ah for our Father, for our deere Lord Clarence.
Dut. Alas for both, both mine Edward and Clarence.
Qu. What ſtay had I but Edward? and hee's gone.
Chil. What ſtay had we but Clarence? and he's gone.
Dut. What ſtayes had I but they? and they are gone.
Qu. Was never widdow had ſo deere a loſſe.
Chil. Were never Orphans had ſo deere a loſſe.
Dut. Was never Mother had ſo deere a loſſe.
Alas! I am the Mother of theſe Greefes.
Their woes are parcell'd, mine is generall.
She for an Edward weepes, and ſo do I:

I for a Clarence weepe, ſo doth not ſhe:
Theſe Babes for Clarence weepe, ſo doe not they.
Alas! you three, on me threefold diſtreſt:
Powre all your teares, I am your ſorrowes Nurſe,
And I will pamper it with Lamentation.
Dor. Comfort deere Mother, God is much diſpleas'd,
That you take with unthankfulneſſe his doing.
In common worldly things, 'tis call'd ungratefull,
With dull unwillingneſſe to repay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent:
Much more to be thus oppoſite with heaven,
For it requires the Royall debt it lent you.
Rivers. Madam, bethinke you like a carefull Mother
Of the young Prince your ſonne: ſend ſtraight for him,
Let him be Crown'd, in him your comfort lives.
Drowne deſperate ſorrow in dead Edwards grave,
And plant your joyes in living Edwards Throne.

Enter Richard, Buckingham, Derbie, Haſtings, and Ratcliffe.

Rich. Siſter have comfort, all of us have cauſe
To waile the dimming of our ſhining Starre:
But none can helpe our harmes by wayling them.
Madam, my Mother, I do cry you mercy,
I did not ſee your Grace. Humbly on my knee,
I crave your Bleſſing.
Dut. God bleſſe thee, and put meekeneſſe in thy breaſt,
Love Charity, Obedience, and true Dutie.
Rich. Amen, and make me die a good old man,
That is the butt-end of a Mothers bleſſing;
I marvell that her Grace did leave it out.
Buc. You clowdy-Princes, & hart-ſorowing-Peeres,
That beare this heavie mutuall loade of Moane,
Now cheere each other, in each others Love:
Though we have ſpent our Harveſt of this King,
We are to reape the harveſt of his Sonne.
The broken rancour of your high-ſwolne hates,
But lately ſplintred, knit, and joyn'd together,
Muſt gently be preſerv'd, cheriſht, and kept:
Me ſeemeth good, that with ſome little Traine,
Forthwith from Ludlow, the young Prince be fet
Hither to London, to be crown'd our King.
Rivers. Why with ſome little Traine,
My Lord of Buckingham?
Buc. Marry my Lord, leaſt by a multitude,
The new-heal'd wound of Malice ſhould breake out,
Which would be ſo much the more dangerous,
By how much the eſtate is greene, and yet ungovern'd.
Where every Horſe beares his commanding Reine,
And may direct his courſe as pleaſe himſelfe,
As well the feare of harme, as harme apparant,
In my opinion, ought to be prevented.
Rich. I hope the King made peace with all of us,
And the compact is firme, and true in me.
Riv. And ſo in me, and ſo (I thinke) in all,
Yet ſince it is but greene, it ſhould be put
To no apparant likelyhood of breach,
Which haply by much company might be urg'd:
Therefore I ſay with Noble Buckingham,
That it is meete ſo few ſhould fetch the Prince.
Haſt. And ſo ſay I.
Rich. Then be it ſo, and go we to determine
Who they ſhall be that ſtrait ſhall poſte to London.
Madam, and you my Siſter, will you go
To give your cenſures in this buſineſſe? Exeunt.

Manent Buckingham, and Richard.

Buc. My Lord, who ever journies to the Prince,
For Gods ſake let not us two ſtay at home:
For by the way, Ile ſort occaſion,
As Index to the ſtory we late talk'd of,
To part the Queenes proud Kindred from the Prince.
Rich. My other ſelfe, my Counſailes Conſiſtory,
My Oracle, My Prophet, my deare Coſin,
I, as a childe, will go by thy direction,
Toward London then, for wee'l not ſtay behinde. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter one Citizen at one doore, and another at the other.

1.Cit. Good morrow Neighbour, whither away ſo faſt?
2.Cit. I promiſe you I hardly know my ſelfe:
Heare you the Newes abroad?
1. Yes, the King is dead.
2. Ill newes byrlady, ſeldome comes the better:
I feare, I feare, 'twill prove a giddy world.

Enter another Citizen.

3. Neighbours, God ſpeed.
1. Give you good morrow ſir.
3. Doth the newes hold of good King Edwards death?
2. I ſir, it is too true, God helpe the while.
3. Then Maſters looke to ſee a troublous world.
1. No, no, by Gods good grace, his Son ſhall reigne.
3. Woe to that Land that's govern'd by a Childe.
2. In him there is a hope of Government.
Which in his nonage, counſell under him,
And in his full and ripened yeares, himſelfe
No doubt ſhall then, and till then governe well.
1. So ſtood the ſtate when Henry the ſixt
Was crown'd in Paris, but at nine months old.
3. Stood the State ſo? No, no, good friends, God wot
For then this Land was famouſly enrich'd
With politike grave Counſell; then the King
Had vertuous Vnkles to protect his Grace.
1. Why ſo hath this, both by his Father and Mother.
3. Better it were they all came by his Father:
Or by his Father there were none at all:
For emulation, who ſhall now be neereſt,
Will touch us all too neere, if God prevent not.
O full of danger is the Duke of Gloſter,
And the Queenes Sons, and Brothers, haught and proud:
And were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This ſickly Land, might ſolace as before.
1. Come, come, we feare the worſt: all will be well.
3. When Clouds are ſeen, wiſemen put on their cloakes;
When great leaves fall, then Winter is at hand;
When the Sun ſets, who doth not looke for night?
Vntimely ſtormes, make men expect a Dearth:
All may be well; but if God ſort it ſo,
'Tis more then we deſerve, or I expect.
2. Truly, the hearts of men are full of feare:
You cannot reaſon (almoſt) with a man,
That lookes not heavily, and full of dread.
3. Before the dayes of Change, ſtill is it ſo,
By a divine inſtinct, mens mindes miſtruſt

Purſuing danger:as by proofe wee ſee
The Water ſwell before a boyſt'rous ſtorme:
But leave it all to God, Whither away?
2 Marry we were ſent for to the Iuſtices.
3 And ſo was I:Ile beare you company. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Arch-biſhop, yong Yorke, the Queene,
and the Dutcheſſe.

Arch. Laſt night I heard they lay at Stony Stratford,
And at Northampton they do reſt to night:
To morrow,or next day,they will be heere.
Dut. I long with all my heart to ſee the Prince:
I hope he is much growne ſince laſt I ſaw him.
Qu. But I heare no,they ſay my ſonne of Yorke
Ha's almoſt overtane him in his growth.
Yor. I Mother,but I would not have it ſo.
Dut. Why my good Coſin,it is good to grow.
Yor. Grandam,one night as we did ſit at Supper,
My Vnkle Rivers talk'd how I did grow
More then my Brother. I,quoth my Vnkle Glouſter,
Small Herbes have grace,great Weeds do grow apace.
And ſince,me thinkes I would not grow ſo faſt,
Becauſe ſweet Flowres are ſlow,and Weeds make haſt.
Dut. Good faith,good faith,the ſaying did not hold
In him that did obiect the ſame to thee.
He was the wretched'ſt thing when he was yong,
So long a growing,and ſo leiſurely,
That if his rule were true,he ſhould be gracious.
Yor. And ſo no doubt he is,my gracious Madam.
Dut. I hope he is,but yet let Mothers doubt.
Yor. Now by my troth,if I had beene remembred,
I could have given my Vnckles Grace, a flout,
To touch his growth,neerer then he toucht mine.
Dut. How my yong Yorke,
I prythee let me heare it.
Yor. Marry (they ſay) my Vnkle grew ſo faſt,
That he could gnaw a cruſt at two houres old,
'Twas full two yeares ere I could get a tooth.
Grandam,this would have beene a byting Ieſt.
Dut. I prythee pretty Yorke,who told thee this?
Yor. Grandam,his Nurſe.
Dut. His Nurſe?why ſhe was dead,ere yͧ waſt borne.
Yor. If'twere not ſhe,I cannot tell who told me.
Qu. A parlous Boy:go to,you are too ſhrew'd.
Dut. Good Madam,be not angry with the Childe.
Qu. Pitchers have eares.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Arch. Heere comes a Meſſenger:What Newes?
Meſ. Such newes my Lord,as greeves me to report.
Qu. How doth the Prince?
Meſ. Well Madam,and in health.
Dut. What is thy Newes?
Meſ. Lord Rivers,and Lord Grey,
Are ſent to Pomfret,and with them,
Sir Thomas Vaughan,Priſoners.
Dut. Who hath committed them?
Meſ. The mighty Dukes,Glouſter and Buckingham.
Arch. For what offence?
Meſ. The ſumme of all I can,I have diſclos'd:
Why,or for what,the Nobles were committed,
Is all unknowne to me,my gracious Lord.
Qu. Aye me!I ſee the ruine of my Houſe:
The Tyger now hath ſeiz'd the gentle Hinde,
Inſulting Tiranny beginnes to Iutt
Vpon the innocent and aweleſſe Throne:
Welcome Deſtruction,Blood, and Maſſacre,
I ſee(as in a Map)the end of all.
Dut. Accurſed,and unquiet wrangling dayes,
How many of you have mine eyes beheld?
My Husband loſt his life,to get the Crowne,
And often up and downe my ſonnes were toſt,
For me to joy,and weepe,their gaine and loſſe.
And being ſeated,and Domeſticke broyles
Cleane over-blowne,themſelves(the Conquerors,)
Make warre upon themſelves, Brother to Brother;
Bloud to bloud,ſelfe againſt ſelfe:O prepoſterous
And franticke outrage,end thy damned ſpleene,
Or let me dye,to looke on earth no more.
Qu. Come,come my Boy,we will to Sanctuary.
Madam,farewell.
Dut. Stay,I will go with you.
Qu. You have no cauſe.
Arch. My gracious Lady go,
And thither beare your Treaſure and your Goods,
For my part,Ile reſigne unto your Grace
The Seale I keepe,and ſo betide it me,
As well I tender you,and all of yours.
Go,Ile conduct you to the Sanctuary. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

The Trumpets ſound.
Enter yong Prince, the Dukes of Glocester, and Buckingham,
Lord Cardinall,with others.

Buc. Welcome ſweet Prince to London,
To your Chamber.
Rich. Welcome deere Coſin,my thoughts Soveraigne
The weary way hath made you Melancholly.
Prin. No Vnkle,but our croſſes on the way,
Have made it tedious, weariſome, and heavy.
I want more Vnkles heere to welcome me.
Rich. Sweet Prince,the untainted vertue of your yeers
Hath not yet div'd into the Worlds deceit:
No more can you diſtinguiſh of a man,
Then of his outward ſhew, which God he knowes,
Seldome or never jumpeth with the heart.
Thoſe Vnkles which you want,were dangerous:
Your Grace attended to their Sugred words,
But look'd not on the poiſon of their hearts:
God keepe you from them,and from ſuch falſe Friends.
Prin. God keepe me from falſe Friends,
But they were none.
Rich. My Lord,the Major of London comes to greet you.

Enter Lord Major.

Lo. Major. God bleſſe your Grace, with health and happy dayes.
Prin. I thanke you, good my Lord,and thank you all:

I thought my Mother,and my Brother Yorke,
Would long,ere this,have met us on the way.
Fie,what a Slug is Haſtings,that he comes not
To tell us,whether they will come,or no.

Enter Lord Haſtings.

Buck. And in good time, heere comes the ſweating Lord.

Prince. Welcome,my Lord : what , will our Mother come?

Haſt. On what occaſion God he knowes,not I,
The Queeene your Mother,and your Brother Yorke,
Have taken Sanctuary:The tender Prince
Would faine have come with me,to meet your Grace,
But by his Mother was perforce with-held.

Buc. Fie,what an an indirect and peeviſh courſe
Is this of hers?Lord Cardinall will your Grace
Perſwade the Queene,to ſend the Duke of Yorke
Vnto his Princely Brother preſently?
If ſhe deny,Lord Haſtings you goe with him,
And from her jealous Armes pluck him perforce.

Car. My Lord of Buckingham,if my weake Oratory
Can from his Mother winne the Duke of Yorke,
Anon expect him here:but if ſhe be obdurate
To milde entreaties,God forbid
We ſhould infringe the holy Priviledge
Of bleſſed Sanctuary:not for all this Land,
Would I be guilty of ſo great a ſinne.

Buc. You are too ſenceleſſe obſtinate,my Lord,
Too ceremonious,and traditionall.
Weigh it but with the groſſeneſſe of this Age,
You breake not Sanctuary,in ſeizing him:
The benefit thereof is alwayes granted
To thoſe,whoſe dealings have deſerv'd the place,
And thoſe who have the wit to clayme the place:
This Prince hath neither claim'd it,nor deſerv'd it,
Therefore,in mine opinion,cannot have it.
Then taking him from thence,that is not there,
You breake no Priviledge,nor Charter there:
Oft have I heard of Sanctuary men,
But Sanctuary children,ne're till now.

Car. My Lord,you ſhall o're-rule my mind for once.
Come on,Lord Haſtings,will you goe with me?

Haſt. I goe,my Lord. Exit Cardinall and Haſtings.

Prin. Good Lords,make all the ſpeedy haſt you may.
Say, Vnckle Glocester,if our Brother come,
Where ſhall we ſojorne,till our Coronation?

Glo. Where it think'ſt beſt unto your Royall ſelfe.
If I may counſaile you,ſome day or two
Your Highneſſe ſhall repoſe you at the Tower:
Then where you pleaſe,and ſhall be thought moſt fit
For your beſt health,and recreation.

Prin. I doe not like the Tower,of any place:
Did Iulius Cæſar build that place,my Lord?

Buc. He did,my gracious Lord,begin that place,
Which ſince,ſucceeding Ages have re-edify'd.

Prin. Is it upon record?or elſe reported
Succeſſively from age to age,he built it?

Buc. Vpon record,my gracious Lord.

Prin. But ſay,my Lord,it were not regiſtred,
Methinkes the truth ſhould live from age to age,
As 'twere retayl'd to all poſterity,
Even to the generall ending day.

Glo. So wiſe,ſo young,they ſay doe never live long.

Prin. What ſay you,Vnckle?

Glo. I ſay,without Characters,Fame lives long.
Thus,like the formall Vice,Iniquity, aſide.
I moralize two meanings in one word.

Prin. That Iulius Cæſar was a famous man;
With what his Valour did enrich his Wit,
His Wit ſet downe,to make his Valour live:
Death makes no Conqueſt of his Conqueror,
For now he lives in Fame,though not in Life.
Ile tell you what,my Couſin Buckingham.

Buc. What,my gracious Lord?

Prin. And if I live untill I be a man,
Ile win our ancient Right in France againe,
Or dye a Souldier,as I liv'd a King.

Glo. Short Summers lightly have a forward Spring.

Enter young Yorke,Haſtings,and Cardinall.

Buck. Now in good time , heere comes the Duke of Yorke.

Prince. Richard of Yorke , how fares our Noble Brother?

Yor. Well,my deare Lord,ſo muſt I call you now.

Prin. I, Brother,to our griefe as it is yours:
Too late he dy'd,that might have kept that Title,
Which by his death hath loſt much Majeſty.

Glo. How fares our Couſin,Noble Lord of Yorke?

Yor. I thanke you,gentle Vnckle.O my Lord,
You ſaid,that idle Weeds are faſt in growth:
The Prince,my Brother, hath out-growne me farre.

Glo. He hath,my Lord.

Yor. And therefore is he idle?

Glo. Oh my faire Couſin,I muſt not ſay ſo.

Yor. Then he is more beholding to you,then I.

Glo. He may command me as my Soveraigne,
But you have power in me,as in a Kinſman.

Yor. I pray you,Vnckle,give me this Dagger.

Glo. My Dagger,little Couſin? with all my heart.

Prin. A Begger,Brother?

Yor. Of my kind Vnckle,that I know will give,
And being a Toy,it is no griefe to give.

Glo. A greater gift then that,Ile give my Couſin.

Yor. A greater gift?O,that's the Sword to it.

Glo. I,gentle Couſin,were it light enough.

Yor. O then I ſee,you will part but with light gifts,
In weightier things you'le ſay a Begger nay.

Glo. It is too weighty for your Grace to weare.

Yor. I weigh it lightly,were it heavier.

Glo. What,would you have my Weapon,little Lord?

Yor. I would that I might thanke you, as you call me.

Glo. How?

Yor. Little.

Prin. My Lord of Yorke will ſtill be croſſe in talke:
Vnckle,your Grace knowes how to beare with him.

Yor. You meane to beare me,not to beare with me:
Vnckle,my Brother mockes both you and me,
Becauſe that I am little,like an Ape,
He thinkes that you ſhould beare me on your ſhoulders.

Buc. With what a ſharpe provided wit he reaſons:
To mitigate the ſcorne he gives his Vnckle,
He prettily and aptly taunts himſelfe:
So cunning,and ſo young,is wounderfull.

Glo. My Lord,wilt pleaſe you paſſe along?
Myſelfe, and my good Couſin Buckingham,
Will to your Mother,to entreat of her
To meet you at the Tower,and welcome you.

Yor. What, will you goe unto the Tower, my Lord?
Prin. My Lord Protector will have it ſo.
Yor. I ſhall not ſleepe in quiet at the Tower.
Glo. Why, what ſhould you feare?
Yor. Marry, my Vnckle Clarence angry Ghoſt:
My Grandam told me he was murther'd there.
Prin. I feare no Vnckles dead.
Glo. Nor none that live, I hope.
Prin. And if they live, I hope I need not feare.
But come my Lord: and with a heavy heart,
Thinking on them, goe I unto the Tower.
Exeunt Prince, Yorke, Haſtings, and Dorſet.

Manent Richard, Buckingham, and Catesby.

Buc. Thinke you, my Lord, this little prating Yorke
Was not incenſed by his ſubtile Mother,
To taunt and ſcorne you thus opprobriouſly?
Glo No doubt, no doubt: Oh 'tis a perillous Boy,
Bold, quicke, ingenious, forward, capable:
Hee is all the Mothers, from the top to toe.
Buc. Well, let them reſt: Come hither Catesby,
Thou art ſworne as deepely to effect what we intend,
As cloſely to conceale what we impart:
Thou know'ſt our reaſons urg'd upon the way,
What think'ſt thou? is it not an eaſy matter,
To make William Lord Haſtings of our minde,
For the inſtallment of this Noble Duke
In the Seat Royall of this famous Ile?
Cates. He for his fathers ſake ſo loves the Prince,
That he will not be wonne to ought againſt him.
Buc. What think'ſt thou then of Stanley? Will not hee?
Cates: Hee will doe all in all as Haſtings doth.
Buc. Well then, no more but this:
Goe gentle Catesby, and as it were farre off,
Sound thou Lord Haſtings,
How he doth ſtand affected to our purpoſe,
And ſummon him to morrow to the Tower,
To ſit about the Coronation.
If thou do'ſt finde him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reaſons:
If he be leaden, ycie, cold, unwilling,
Be thou ſo too, and ſo breake off the talke,
And give us notice of his inclination:
For we to morrow hold divided Councels,
Wherein thy ſelfe ſhalt highly be employ'd.
Rich. Commend me to Lord William: tell him (Catesby)
His ancient Knot of dangerous Adverſaries
To morrow are let blood at Pomfret Caſtle,
And bid my Lord, for joy of this good newes,
Give Miſtreſſe Shore one gentle Kiſſe the more.
Buc. Good Catesby, goe effect this buſineſſe ſoundly.
Cates. My good Lords both, with all the heed I can.
Rich. Shall we heare from you, Catesby, ere we ſleepe?
Cates. You ſhall, my Lord.
Rich. At Crosby Houſe, there ſhall you find us both.
Exit Catesby.
Buc. Now, my Lord,
What ſhall wee doe, if wee perceive
Lord Haſtings will not yeeld to our Complots?
Rich. Chop off his Head:
Something wee will determine:
And looke when I am King, claime thou of me
The Earledome of Hereford, and all the moveables
Whereof the King, my Brother, was poſſeſt.
Buc. Ile claime that promiſe at your Graces hand.
Rich. And looke to have it yeelded with all kindneſſe.
Come, let us ſuppe betimes, that afterwards
Wee may digeſt our complots in ſome forme.
Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter a Meſſenger to the Doore of Haſtings.

Meſ. My Lord, my Lord.
Haſt. Who knockes?
Meſ. One from the Lord Stanley.
Haſt. What is't a Clocke?
Meſ. Vpon the ſtroke of foure.

Enter Lords Haſtings,

Haſt. Cannot my Lord Stanley ſleepe theſe tedious Nights?
Meſ. So it appeares, by that I have to ſay:
Firſt, he commends him to your Noble ſelfe.
Haſt. What then?
Meſ. Then certifies your Lordſhip, that this Night
He dreamt, the Bore had raſed off his Helme:
Beſides, he ſayes there are two Councels kept;
And that may be determin'd at the one,
Which may make you and him to rue at th'other.
Therefore he ſends to know your Lordſhips pleaſure,
If you will preſently take Horſe with him,
And with all ſpeed poſt with him toward the North,
To ſhun the danger that his Soule divines.
Haſt. Goe fellow, goe returne unto thy Lord,
Bid him not feare the ſeparated Councell:
His Honnor and my ſelfe are at the one,
And at the other, is my good friend Catesby;
Where nothing can proceede, that toucheth us,
Whereof I ſhall not have intelligence:
Tell him his Feares are ſhallow, without inſtance.
And for his Dreames, I wonder hee's ſo ſimple,
To truſt the mock'ry of unquiet ſlumbers.
To flye the Bore, before the Bore purſues,
Were to incenſe the Bore to follow us,
And make purſuit, where he did meane no chaſe.
Goe, bid thy Maſter riſe, and come to me,
And we will both together to the Tower,
Where he ſhall ſee the Bore will uſe us kindly.
Meſ. Ile goe, my Lord, and tell him what you ſay.
Exit.

Enter Catesby.

Cates. Many good morrowes to my Noble Lord.
Haſt. Good morrow Catesby, you are early ſtirring:
What newes, what newes, in this our tott'ring State?
Cates. It is a reeling World indeed, my Lord:
And I beleeve will never ſtand upright,
Till Richard weare the Garland of the Realme.
Haſt. How weare the Garland?
Doeſt thou meane the Crowne?
Cates. I, my good Lord.
Ha. Ile have this Crown of mine cut fró my ſhoulders,
Before Ile ſee the Crowne ſo foule miſ-plac'd:
But canſt thou gueſſe, that he doth ayme at it?

Cates. I,on my life,and hopes to find you forward,
Vpon his party,for the gaine thereof:
And thereupon he ſends you this good newes,
That this ſame very day your enemies,
The Kindred of the Queene,muſt dye at Pomfret.
Haſt. Indeed I am no mourner for that newes,
Becauſe they have beene ſtill my adverſaries:
But,that Ile give my voice on Richards ſide,
To barre my Maiſters Heires in true Deſcent,
God knowes I will not doe it,to the death.
Cates. God keepe your Lordſhip in that gracious minde.
Haſt. But I ſhall laugh at this a twelve-month hence,
That they which brought me in my Maiſters hate,
I live to looke upon their Tragedy.
Well Catesby,ere a fort-night make me older,
Ile ſend ſome packing,that yet thinke not on't.
Cates. 'Tis a vile thing to dye,my gracious Lord,
When men are unprepar'd,and looke not for it.
Haſt. O monſtrous,monſtrous!and ſo falls it out
With Rivers,Vaughan,Grey:and ſo 'twill doe
With ſome men elſe,that thinke themſelves as ſafe
As thou and I,who(as thou know'ſt)are deare
To Princely Richard,and Buckingham.
Cates. The Princes both make high account of you,
For they account his Head upon the Bridge.
Haſt. I know they doe,and I have well deſerv'd it.

Enter Lord Stanley.

Come on,come on,where is your Bore-ſpeare man?
Feare you the Bore,and goe ſo unprovided?
Stan. My Lord good morrow,good morrow Catesby:
You may jeaſt on,but by the holy Rood,
I doe not like theſe ſeverall Councels,I.
Haſt. My Lord,I hold my Life as deare as yours,
And never in my dayes,I doe proteſt,
Was it ſo precious to me,as 'tis now:
Thinke you,but that I know our ſtate ſecure,
I would be ſo triumphant as I am?
St. The Lords at Pomfret,when they rode from Londõ,
Were jocund,and ſuppos'd their ſtates were ſure,
And they indeed had no cauſe to miſtruſt:
But yet you ſee,how ſoone the Day o're-caſt.
This ſudden ſtab of Rancour I miſdoubt:
Pray God(I ſay)I prove a needleſſe Coward.
What,ſhall we toward the Tower?the day is ſpent.
Haſt. Come,come,have with you:
Wot you what,my Lord,
To day the Lords you talke of,are beheaded.
St. They,for their truth,might better wear their Heads,
Then ſome that have accus'd them, weare their Hats.
But come,my Lord,let's away.

Enter a Purſuivant.

Haſt. Goe on before,Ile talke with this good fellow.
Exit Lord Stanley,and Catesby.
How now,Sirrha?how goes the World with thee?
Purſ. The better,that your Lordſhip pleaſe to aske.
Haſt. I tell thee man,'tis better with me now,
Then when thou met'ſt me laſt,where now we meet:
Then was I going Priſoner to the Tower,
By the ſuggeſtion of the Queenes Allyes.
But now I tell thee(keepe it to thy ſelfe)
This day thoſe Enemies are put to death,
And I in better ſtate then ere I was.
Purſ. God hold it,to your Honors good content.
Haſt. Gramercy fellow:there drinke that for me.
Throwes him his Purſe.
Purſ. I thanke your Honor. Exit Purſuivant.

Enter a Prieſt.

Prieſt. Well met,my Lord,I am glad to ſee your Honor.
Haſt. I thanke thee,good Sir Iohn,with all my heart.
I am in your debt,for your laſt Exerciſe:
Come the next Sabboth,and I will content you.
Prieſt. Ile wait upon your Lordſhip.

Enter Buckingham.

Buc. What,talking with a Prieſt, Lord Chamberlaine?
Your friends at Pomfret,they doe need the Prieſt,
Your Honor hath no ſhriving worke in hand.
Haſt. Good faith,and when I met this holy man,
The men you talke of,came into my minde.
What,goe you toward the Tower?
Buc. I doe,my Lord,but long I cannot ſtay there:
I ſhall returne before your Lordſhip thence.
Haſt. Nay like enough,for I ſtay Dinner there.
Buc. And Supper too,although thou know'ſt it not.
Come,will you goe?
Haſt. Ile wait upon your Lordſhip. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Sir Richard Ratcliffe,with Halberds,carrying the Nobles to death at Pomfret.

Rivers. Sir Richard Ratcliffe,let me tell thee this,
To day ſhalt thou behold a Subject dy,
For truth,for Duty,and for Loyalty.
Grey. God bleſſe the Prince from all the Pack of you,
A Knot you are,of damned Blood-ſuckers.
Vaugh. You live, that ſhall cry woe for this heere-after.
Rat. Diſpatch,the limit of your Lives is out,
Riv. O Pomfret,Pomfret!O thou bloody Priſon!
Fatall and ominous to Noble Peeres:
Within the guilty Cloſure of thy Walls,
Richard the Second here was hackt to death:
And for more ſlander to thy diſmall Seat,
We give to thee our guiltleſſe blood to drinke.
Grey. Now Margarets Curſe is falne upon our Heads,
When ſhee exclaim'd on Haſtings,you,and I,
For ſtanding by,when Richard ſtab'd her Sonne.
Riv. Then curs'd ſhee Richard,
Then curs'd ſhee Buckingham,
Then cus'd ſhee Haſtings. Oh remember God,
To heare her prayer for them,as now for us:
And for my Siſter,and her Princely Sonnes,
Be ſatisfy'd,deare God,with our true blood,
Which,as thou know'ſt,unjuſtly muſt be ſpilt.
Rat. Make haſte,the houre of death is now expir'd.
Riv. Come Grey,come Vaughan, let us heere embrace,
Farewell,untill we meet againe in Heaven. Exeunt.

Scena

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Buckingham, Darby, Haſtings, Biſhop of Ely, Norfolke, Ratcliffe, Lovell, with others, at a Table.

Haſt. Now Noble Peeere, the cauſe why we are met,
Is to determine of the Coronation:
In Gods Name ſpeake, when is the Royall day?
Buc. Is all things ready for the Royall time?
Darb. It is, and wants but nomination.
Ely. To morrow then I judge a happy day.
Buc. Who knowes the Lord Protectors mind herein?
Who is moſt inward with the Noble Duke?
Ely. Your Grace, we thinke, ſhould ſooneſt know his minde.
Buc. We know each others Faces: for our Hearts,
He knowes no more of mine, then I of yours,
Or I of his, my Lord, then you of mine:
Lord Haſtings, you and he are neere in love.
Haſt. I thanke his Grace, I know he loves me well:
But for his purpoſe in the Coronation,
I have not ſounded him, nor he deliver'd
His gracious pleaſure any way therein:
But you, my Honorable Lord, may name the time,
And in the Dukes behalfe Ile give my Voice,
Which I preſume hee'le take in gentle part.

Enter Glouceſter.

Ely. In happy time, here comes the Duke himſelfe.
Rich. My Noble Lords, and Couſins all, good morrow:
I have beene long a ſleeper: but I truſt,
My abſence doth neglect no great deſigne,
Which by my preſence might have beene concluded.
Buc. Had you not come upon your Q my Lord,
William, Lord Haſtings, had pronounc'd your part;
I meane your Voice, for Crowning of the King.
Rich. Then my Lord Haſtings, no man might be bolder,
His Lordſhip knowes me well, and loves me well.
My Lord of Ely, when I was laſt in Holborne,
I ſaw good Strawberries in your Garden there,
I doe beſeech you, ſend for ſome of them.
Ely. Mary and will, my Lord, with all my heart.
Exit Biſhop.
Rich. Couſin of Buckingham, a word with you.
Catesby hath ſounded Haſtings in our buſineſſe,
And findes the teſty Gentleman ſo hot,
That he will loſe his Head, ere give conſent
His Maiſters Child, as worſhipfully he tearmes it,
Shall loſe the Royalty of Englands Throne.
Buc. Withdraw your ſelfe a while, Ile goe with you.
Exeunt.
Dar. We have not yet ſet downe this day of Triumph:
To morrow, in my judgement, is too ſudden,
For I my ſelfe am not ſo well provided,
As elſe I would be, were the day prolong'd.

Enter the Biſhop of Ely.

Ely. Where is my Lord, the Duke of Gloſter?
I have ſent for theſe Strawberries.
Ha. His Grace looks chearfully & ſmooth this morning,
There's ſome conceit or other likes him well,
When that he bids good morrow with ſuch ſpirit.
I thinke there's never a man in Chriſtendome
Can leſſer hide his love, or hate, then hee,
For by his Face ſtraight ſhall you know his Heart.
Darb. What of his Heart perceive you in his Face,
By any livelyhood he ſhew'd to day?
Haſt. Mary that with no man here he is offended:
For were he, he had ſhewne it in his Lookes.

Enter Richard, and Buckingham.

Rich. I pray you all, tell me what they deſerve,
That doe conſpire my death with divelliſh Plots
Of damned Witchcraft, and that have prevail'd
Vpon my Body with their Helliſh Charmes.
Haſt. The tender love I beare your Grace, my Lord,
Makes me moſt forward, in this Princely preſence,
To doome th'Offendors, whoſoe're they be:
I ſay, my Lord, they have deſerved death.
Rich. Then be your eyes the witneſſe of their evill,
Looke how I am bewitch'd: behold, mine Arme
Is like a blaſted Sapling, wither'd up:
And this is Edwards Wife, that monſtrous Witch,
Conſorted with that Harlot, Strumpet Shore,
That by their Witchcraft thus have marked me.
Haſt. If they have done this deed, my Noble Lord.
Rich. If? thou Protector of this damned Strumpet,
Talk'ſt thou to me of Ifts. thou art a Traytor,
Off with his Head; now by Saint Paul I ſweare,
I will not dine, untill I ſee the ſame.
Lovell and Ratcliffe, looke that it be done: Exeunt.
The reſt that love me, riſe, and follow me.

Manent Lovell and Ratcliffe, with the Lord Haſtings.

Haſt. Woe, woe for England, not a whit for me,
For I, too fond, might have prevented this:
Stanley did dreame, the Bore did rowſe our Helmes,
And I did ſcorne it, and diſdaine to flye:
Three times to day my Foot-Cloth-Horſe did ſtumble,
And ſtarted, when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to beare me to the ſlaughter-houſe.
O now I need the Prieſt, that ſpake to me:
I now repent I told the Purſuivant,
As too triumphing, how mine Enemies
To day at Pomfret bloodily were butcher'd,
And I my ſelfe ſecure, in grace and favour.
Oh Margaret, Margaret, now thy heavy Curſe
Is lighted on poore Haſtings wretched Head.
Ra. Come, come, diſpatch, the Duke would be at dinner:
Make a ſhort Shrift, he longs to ſee your Head.
Haſt. O momentary grace of mortall men,
Which we more hunt for, then the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in ayre of your good Lookes,
Lives like a drunken Sayler on a Maſt,
Ready with every Nod to tumble downe,
Into the fatall Bowels of the Deepe.
Lov. Come, come, diſpatch, 'tis bootleſſe to exclaime.
Haſt. O bloody Richard: miſerable England,
I prophecy the fearefull'ſt time to thee,
That ever wretched Age hath look'd upon.
Come, leade me to the Block, beare him my Head,
They ſmile at me, who ſhortly ſhall be dead.
Exeunt.

Enter Richard, and Buckingham, in rotten Armour, marvellous ill-favoured.

Richard. Come Couſin,
Canſt thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murther thy breath in middle of a word,
And then againe begin, and ſtop againe,
As if thou were diſtraught, and mad with terror?
Buc. Tut, I can counterfeit the deepe Tragedian,
Speake, and looke backe, and prie on every ſide,
Tremble and ſtart at wagging of a Straw:
Intending deepe ſuſpition, gaſtly Lookes:
Are at my ſervice, like enforced Smiles;
And both are ready in their Offices,
At any time to grace my Stratagemes.
But what, is Catesby, gone?
Rich. He is, and ſee he brings the Maior along.

Enter the Major, and Catesby.

Buck. Lord Major.
Rich. Looke to the Draw-Bridge there.
Buc. Hearke, a Drumme.
Rich. Catesby, o're-looke the Walls.
Buc. Lord Major, the reaſon we have ſent.
Rich. Looke back, defend three, here are Enemies.
Buc. God and our Innocency defend, and guard us.

Enter Lovell and Ratcliffe, with Haſtings Head.

Rich. Be patient, they are friends: Ratcliffe, and Lovell.
Lov. Here is the Head of that ignoble Traitor,
The dangerous and unſuſpected Haſtings.
Rich. So deare I lov'd the man, that I muſt weepe:
I tooke him for the plaineſt harmeleſſe Creature,
That breath'd upon the Earth, a Chriſtian:
Made him my Booke, wherein my Soule recorded
The Hiſtory of all her ſecret thoughts.
So ſmooth he daw b'd his Vice with ſhew of Vertue,
That his apparant open Guilt omitted,
I meane his Converſation with Shores Wife,
He liv'd from all attainder of ſuſpects.
Buc. Well, well, he was the coverſt ſheltred Traitor
That ever liv'd.
Would you imagine, or almoſt beleeve,
Wert not, that by great preſervation
We live to tell it, that the ſubtill Traitor
This day had plotted, in the Councell-Houſe,
To murther me, and my good Lord of Gloſter.
Ma. Had he done ſo?
Rich. What? thinke you we are Turkes, or Infidels?
Or that we would, againſt the forme of Law,
Proceed thus raſhly in the Villaines death,
But that the extreme perill of the caſe,
The Peace of England, and our Perſons ſafety,
Enforc'd us to this Execution.
Ma. Now faire befall you, he deſerv'd his death,
And your good Graces both have well proceeded,
To warne falſe Traitors from the like Attempts.
Buc. I never look'd for better at his hands,
After he once fell in with Miſtreſſe Shore:
Yet had we not determin'd he ſhould dye,
Vntill your Lordſhip came to ſee his end,
Which now the loving haſte of theſe our friends,
Something againſt our meanings, have prevented;
Becauſe, my Lord, I would have had you heard
The Traitor ſpeake, and timorouſly confeſſe
The manner and the purpoſe of his Treaſons:
That you might well have ſignify'd the ſame
Vnto the Citizens, who haply may
Miſconſter us in him, and waile his death.
Ma. But, my good Lord, your Graces words ſhall ſerve,
As well as I had ſeene, and heard him ſpeake:
And doe not doubt, right Noble Princes both,
But Ile acquaint our dutious Citizens
With all your juſt proceedings in this caſe.
Rich. And to that end we wiſh'd your Lordſhip here,
T'avoid the Cenſures of the carping World.
Bu. Which ſince you come too late of our intent,
Yet witneſſe what you heare we did intend:
And ſo, my good Lord Major, we bid farewell.
Exit Major.
Rich. Goe after, after, Couſin Buckingham.
The Major towards Guild-Hall hyes him in all poſte:
There, at your meeteſt vantage of the time,
Inferre the Baſtardy of Edwards Children:
Tell them, how Edward put to death a Citizen,
Onely for ſaying, he would make his Sonne
Heire to the Crowne, meaning indeed his Houſe,
Which, by the Signe thereof, was tearmed ſo.
Moreover, urge his hatefull Luxury,
And beaſtiall appetite in change of Luſt,
Which ſtretcht unto their Servants, Daughter, Wives,
Even where his raging eye, or ſavage heart,
Without controll, luſted to make a prey.
Nay for a need, thus farre come neere my Perſon:
Tell them, when that my Mother went with Child
Of that inſatiate Edward, Noble Yorke,
My Princely Father, then had Warres in France,
And by true computation of the time,
Found, that the Iſſue was not his begot:
Which well appeared in his Lineaments,
Being nothing like the Noble Duke, my Father:
Yet touch this ſparingly, as 'twere farre off,
Becauſe, my Lord, you know my Mother lives.
Buc. Doubt not, my Lord, Ile play the Orator,
As if the Golden Fee, for which I plead,
Were for my ſelfe: and ſo, my Lord, adue.
Rich. If you thrive wel, bring them to Baynards Caſtle,
Where you ſhall finde me well accompanied
With reverend Fathers, and well-learned Biſhops.
Buc. I goe, and towards three or foure a Clocke
Looke for the Newes that the Guild-Hall affords.
Exit Buckingham.
Rich. Goe Lovell with all ſpeed to Doctor Shaw,
Goe thou to Fryer Peuker, bid them both
Meet me within this houre at Baynards Caſtle. Exit.
Now will I goe to take ſome privy order,
To draw the Brats of Clarence out of ſight,
And to give order, that no manner perſon
Have any time recourſe unto the Princes. Exeunt.

Enter a Scrivener.

Scr. Here is the Indictment of the good Lord Haſtings,
Which in a ſet Hand fairely is engroſs'd,
That it may be to day read o're in Paules.
And marke how well the ſequell hangs together:
Eleven houres I have ſpent to write it over,
For yeſter-night by Catesby was it ſent me,
The Precedent was full as long a doing,
And yet within theſe five houres Haſtings liv'd,
Vntainted, unexamin'd, free, at liberty.
Here's a good World the while; who is ſo groſſe,
That cannot ſee this palpable device?

Yet who ſo bold,but ſayes he ſees it not?
Bad is the World,and all will come to nought,
When ſuch ill dealing muſt be ſeene in thought. Exit.

Enter Richard and Buckingham at ſeverall Doores.

Rich. How now,how now,what ſay the Citizens?
Buck. Now by the holy Mother of our Lord,
The Citizens are mum,ſay not a word.
Rich. Toucht you the Baſtardy of Edwards Children?
Buc. I did,with his Contract with Lady Lucy,
And his Contract by Deputy in France,
Th'unſatiate greedineſſe of his deſire,
And his enforcement of the City Wives,
His Tyranny for Trifles, his owne Baſtardy,
As being got,your Father then in France,
And his reſemblance,being not like the Duke.
Withall,I did inferre your Lineaments,
Being the right Idea of your Father,
Both in your forme,and Nobleneſſe of Minde:
Layd open all your Victories in Scotland,
Your Diſcipline in Warre, Wiſdome in Peace,
Your Bounty,Vertue,faire Humility:
Indeed,left nothing fitting for your purpoſe,
Vntoucht, or ſleightly handled in diſcourſe.
And when my Oratory drew toward end,
I bid them that did love their Countries good,
Cry,God ſave Richard,Englands Royall King.
Rich. And did they ſo?
Buc. No,ſo God helpe me,they ſpake not a word,
But like dumbe Statues,or breathing Stones,
Star'd each on other,and look'd deadly pale:
Which when I ſaw,I reprehended them,
And ask'd the Major,what meant this wilfull ſilence?
His anſwer was,the people were not uſed
To be ſpoke to,but by the Recorder.
Then he was urg'd to tell my Tale againe:
Thus ſayth the Duke,thus hath the Duke inferr'd,
But nothing ſpoke,in warrant from himſelfe.
When he had done,ſome followers of mine owne,
At lower end of the Hall,hurld up their Caps,
And ſome tenne voyces cry'd,God ſave King Richard:
And thus I tooke the vantage of thoſe few.
Thankes gentle Citizens,and friends,quoth I,
This generall applauſe,and chearefull ſhowt,
Argues your wiſdome,and your love to Richard:
And even here brake off,and came away.
Rich. What tongue-leſſe Blockes were they,
Would they not ſpeake?
Will not the Major then,and his Brethren,come?
Buc. The Major is here at hand:intend ſome feare,
Be not you ſpoke with,but by mighty ſuit:
And looke you get a Prayer-Booke in your hand,
And ſtand betweene two Church-men,good my Lord,
For on that ground Ile make a holy Deſcant:
And be not eaſily wonne to our requeſts,
Play the Maids part,ſtill anſwer nay,and take it.
Rich. I goe:and if you plead as well for them,
As I can ſay nay to thee for my ſelfe,
No doubt we bring it to a happy iſſue.
Buc. Go,go up to the Leads, the Lord Major knocks.

Enter the Major,and Citizens.

Welcome,my Lord,I dance attendance here,
I thinke the Duke will not be ſpoke withall.

Enter Catesby.

Buc. Now Catesby,what ſayes your Lord to my requeſt?
Cates. He doth entreat your Grace,my Noble Lord,
To viſit him to morrow,or next day:
He is within,with two right reverend Fathers,
Divinely bent to Meditation,
And in no Worldly ſuites would he be mov'd,
To draw him from his holy Exerciſe.
Buc. Returne,good Catesby,to the gracious Duke,
Tell him,my ſelfe,the Major and Aldermen,
In deepe deſignes,in matter of great moment,
No leſſe importing then our generall good,
Are come to have ſome conference with his Grace.
Cates. Ile ſignifie ſo much unto him ſtraight. Exit.
Buc. Ah ha,my Lord,this Prince is not an Edward,
He is not lulling on a lewd Love-Bed:
But on his Knees,at Meditation:
Not dallying with a Brace of Curtizans,
But meditating with two deepe Divines:
Not ſleeping,to engroſſe his idle Body,
But praying,to enrich his watchfull Soule.
Happy were England,would this vertuous Prince
Take on his Grace the Soveraignty thereof.
But ſure I feare we ſhall not winne him to it.
Major. Marry God defend his Grace ſhould ſay us nay.
Buc. I feare he will;here Catesby comes againe.

Enter Catesby.

Now Catesby,what ſayes his Grace?
Cates. He wonders to what end you have aſſembled
Such troopes of Citizens,to come to him.
His Grace not being warn'd thereof before:
He feares,my Lord,you meane no good to him.
Buc. Sorry I am,my Noble Couſin ſhould
Suſpect me,that I meane no good to him:
By Heaven,we come to him in perfit love,
And ſo once more returne,and tell his Grace. Exit.
When holy and devout Religious men
Are at their Beades,'tis much to draw them thence,
So ſweet is zealous Contemplation.

Enter Richard aloft,betweene two Biſhops.

Ma. See where his Grace ſtands,tween two Clergy mē.
Buc. Two Props of Vertue,for a Chriſtian Prince,
To ſtay him from the fall of Vanity:
And ſee a Booke of Prayer in his hand,
True Ornaments to know a holy man.
Famous Plantagenet,moſt gracious Prince,
Lend favourable eare to our requeſts,
And pardon us the interruption
Of thy Devotion,and right Chriſtian Zeale.
Rich. My Lord,there needes no ſuch Apology:
I doe beſeech your Grace to pardon me,
Who earneſt in the ſervice of God,
Deferr'd the viſitation of my friends.
But leaving this,what is your Graces pleaſure?
Buc. Even that (I hope) which pleaſeth God above,
And all good men,of this ungovern'd Ile.
Rich. I doe ſuſpect I have done ſome offence,
That ſemes diſgracious in the Cities eye,
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.

Buc. You have,my Lord:
Would it might pleaſe your Grace,
On our entreaties,to amend your fault.
Rich. Elſe wherefore breathe I in a Chriſtian Land.
*Buc.*Know then,it is your fault,that you reſigne
The Supreme Seat,the Throne Majeſticall,
The Sceptred Office of your Anceſtors,
Your State of Fortune,and your Deaw of Birth,
The Lineall Glory of your Royall Houſe,
To the corruption of a blemiſht Stock:
Whiles in the mildneſſe of your ſleepie thoughts,
(Which here we waken to our Countries good,)
The Noble Ile doth want his proper Limmes:
His Face defac'd with ſkarres of Infamy,
His Royall Stock grafft with ignoble Plants,
And almoſt ſhouldred in the ſwallowing Gulfe
Of darke Forgetfulneſſe,and deepe Oblivion.
Which to recure,we heartily ſolicite
Your gracious ſelfe to take on you the charge
And Kingly Governement of this your Land:
Not as Protector,Steward,Subſtitute,
Or lowly Factor,for anothers gaine;
But as ſucceſſively,from Blood to Blood,
Your Right of Birth,,your Empyry,your owne.
For this,conſorted with the Citizens,
Your very Worſhipfull and loving friends,
And by their vehement inſtigation,
In this juſt Cauſe come I to move your Grace.
Rich. I cannot tell,if to depart in ſilence,
Or bitterly to ſpeake in your reproofe,
Beſt fitteth my Degree,or your Condition.
For not to anſwer,you might haply thinke,
Tongue-ty'd Ambition,not replying,yeelded
To beare the Golden Yoake of Soveraigntie,
Which fondly you would here impoſe on me.
If to reprove you for this ſuit of yours,
So ſeaſon'd with your faithfull love to me,
Then on the other ſide I check'd my friends.
Therefore to ſpeake,and to avoid the firſt,
And then in ſpeaking,not to incurre the laſt,
Definitively thus I anſwer you.
Your love deſerves my thankes,but my deſert
Vnmeritable,ſhunnes your high requeſt.
Firſt,if all Obſtacles were cut away,
And that my Path were even to the Crowne,
As the ripe Revenue,and due of Birth:
Yet ſo much is my poverty of ſpirit,
So mighty,and ſo many my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my Greatneſſe,
Being a Barke to brooke no mighty Sea;
Then in my Greatneſſe covet to be hid,
And in the vapour of my Glory ſmother'd.
But God be thank'd,there is no need of me,
And much I need to helpe you,were there need:
The Royall Tree hath left us Royall Fruit,
Which mellow'd by the ſtealing howres of time,
Will well become the Seat of Majeſty,
And make us(no doubt)happy by his Reigne.
On him I lay that,you would lay on me,
The Right and Fortune of his happy Starres,
Which God defend that I ſhould wring from him.
Buc. My Lord, this argues Conſcience in your Grace,
But the reſpects thereof are nice,and triviall,
All circumſtances well conſidered.
You ſay,that Edward is your Brothers Sonne,
So ſay we too,but not by Edwards Wife:
For firſt was he contract to Lady Lucy,
Your Mother lives a Witneſſe to his Vow;
And afterward by ſubſtitute betroth'd
To Bona,Siſter to the King of France.
Theſe both put off,a poore Petitioner,
A Care-craſ'd Mother to a many Sonnes,
A Beauty-waining,and diſtreſſed Widow,
Even in the after-noone of her beſt dayes,
Made prize and purchaſe of his wanton Eye,
Seduc'd the pitch,and height of his degree,
To baſe declenſion,and loath'd Bigamie.
By her,in his unlawfull Bed,he got
This Edward, whom our Manners call the Prince.
More bitterly could I expoſtulate,
Save that for reverence to ſome alive,
I give a ſparing limit to my Tongue.
Then good,my Lord,take to your Royall ſelfe
This proffer'd benefit of Dignity:
If not to bleſſe us and the Land withall,
Yet to draw forth your Noble Anceſtry
From the corruption of abuſing times,
Vnto a Lineall true derived courſe.
Maior. Do good my Lord,your Citizens entreat you.
Buc. Refuſe not,mighty Lord, this proffer'd love.
Cates. O make them joyfull,grant their lawfull ſuit.
Rich Alas,why would you heape this Care on me?
I am unfit for State,and Majeſty:
I doe beſeech you take it not amiſſe,
I cannot,nor I will not yeeld to you.
Buc. If you refuſe it,as in love and zeale,
Loth to depoſe the Child-your Brothers Sonne,
As well we know your tenderneſſe of heart,
And gentle,kinde,effeminate remorſe,
Which we have noted in you to your Kindred,
And equally indeede to all Eſtates:
Yet know,where you accept our ſuit,or no,
Your Brothers Sonne ſhall never reigne our King,
But we will plant ſome other in the Throne,
To the diſgrace and downe-fall of your Houſe:
And in this reſolution here we leave you.
Come Citizens,we will entreat no more. Exeunt.
Cates. Call him againe,ſweet Prince,accept their ſuit:
If you deny them, all the Land will rue it.
Rich. Will you enforce me to a world of Cares?
Call them againe,I am not made of Stones,
But penetrable to your kinde entreaties,
Albeit againſt my Conſcience and my Soule.
Enter Buckingham,and the reſt.
Couſin of Buckingham,and ſage grave men,
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To beare her burthen,whether,I will or no,
I muſt have patience to endure the Load:
But if black Scandall,or foule-fac'd Reproach,
Attend the ſequell of your Impoſition,
Your meere enforcement ſhall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and ſtaynes thereof,
For God doth know,and you may partly ſee,
How farre I am from the deſire of this.
Maior. God bleſſe your Grace,wee ſee it,and will ſay it.
Rich. In ſaying ſo,you ſhall but ſay the truth.
Buc. Then I ſalute you with this Royall Title,
Long live King Richard, Englands worthy King.
All. Amen.
Buc. To morrow may it pleaſe you to be Crown'd?
Rich. Even when you pleaſe,for you will have it ſo.

Buc. To morrow then we will attend your Grace,
And ſo moſt joyfully we take our leave.
Rich. Come, let us to our holy Worke againe.
Farewell my Couſins, farewell gentle friends. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the Queene, Anne Ducheſſe of Glouceſter, the Ducheſſe of Yorke, and Marqueſſe Dorſet.

Duch. Yorke. Who meetes us heere?
My Neece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind Aunt of Gloſter?
Now, for my Life, ſhee's wandring to the Tower,
On pure hearts love, to greet the tender Prince.
Daughter, well met.
An. God give your Graces both a happy
And a joyfull time of day.
Qu. As much to you, good Siſter: whither away?
An. No farther then the Tower, and as I gueſſe,
Vpon the like devotion as your ſelves,
To gratulate the gentle Princes there.
Qu. Kind Siſter thankes, wee'le enter all together:

Enter the Lieutenant.

And in good time, here the Lieutenant comes.
Maiſter Lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the Prince, and my young Sonne of Yorke?
Lieu. Right well, deare Madame: by your patience,
I may not ſuffer you to viſit them,
The King hath ſtrictly charg'd the contrary.
Qu. The King? who's that?
Lieu. I meane, the Lord Protector.
Qu. The Lord protect him from that Kingly Title.
Hath be ſet bounds betweene their love, and me?
I am their Mother, who ſhall barre me from them?
Duch. Yorke. I am their Fathers Mother, I will ſee them.
An. Their Aunt I am in law, in love their Mother:
Then bring me to their ſights, Ile beare thy blame,
And take thy Office from thee, on my perill.
Lieu. No, Madame, no; I may not leave it ſo:
I am bound by Oath, and therefore pardon me.
Exit Lieutenant.

Enter Stanley.

Stan. Let me but meet you Ladies one howre hence,
And Ile ſalute your Grace of Yorke as Mother,
And reverend looker on of two faire Queenes.
Come Madame, you muſt ſtraight to Weſtminſter,
There to be crowned Richards Royall Queene.
Qu. Ah, cut my Lace aſunder,
That my pent heart may have ſome ſcope to beat,
Or elſe I ſwoone with this dead-killing newes.
An. Deſpightfull tidings, O unpleaſing newes.
Dorſ. Be of good cheare: Mother, how fares your Grace?
Qu. O Dorſet, ſpeake not to me, get thee gone,
Death and Deſtruction dogges thee at thy heeles,
Thy Mothers Name is ominous to Children.
If thou wilt out-ſtrip Death, goe croſſe the Seas,
And live with Richmond, from the reach of Hell.
Goe hye thee, hye thee from this ſlaughter-houſe,
Leſt thou encreaſe the number of the dead,
And make me dye the thrall of Margarets Curſe,
Nor Mother, Wife, nor Englands counted Queene.
Stan. Full of wiſe care, is this your counſaile, Madame:
Take all the ſwift advantage of the howres:
You ſhall have Letters from me to my Sonne,
In your behalfe, to meet you on the way:
Be not ta'ne tardy by unwiſe delay.
Duc. Yor. O ill diſperſing Winde of Miſery,
O my accurſed Wombe, the Bed of Death:
A Cockatrice haſt thou hatcht to the World,
Whoſe unavoided Eye is murtherous.
Stan. Come, Madame, come, I in all haſte was ſent.
An. And I with all unwillingneſſe will goe.
O would to God, that the incluſive Verge
Of Golden Mettall, that muſt round my Brow,
Were red hot Steele, to ſeare me to the Braines,
Anoynted let me be with deadly Venome,
And dye ere men can ſay, God ſave the Queene.
Qu. Goe, goe, poore ſoule, I envie not thy glory,
To feed my humor, wiſh thy ſelfe no harme.
An. No: why? When he that is my Husband now,
Came to me, as I follow'd Henries Corſe,
When ſcarce the blood was well waſht from his hands,
Which iſſued from my other Angell Husband,
And that deare Saint, which then I weeping follow'd:
O, when I ſay, I look'd on Richards Face,
This was my Wiſh: Be thou (quoth I) accurſt,
For making me, ſo young, ſo old a Widow:
And when thou wed'ſt, let ſorrow haunt thy Bed:
And be thy Wife, if any be ſo mad,
More miſerable, by the Life of thee,
Then thou haſt made me, by my deare Lords death.
Loe, ere I can repeat this Curſe againe,
Within ſo ſmall a time, my Womans heart
Groſſely grew captive to his honey words,
And prov'd the ſubject of mine owne Soules Curſe,
Which hitherto hath held mine eyes from reſt:
For never yet one howre in his Bed
Did I enjoy the golden deaw of ſleepe,
But with his timorous Dreames was ſtill awak'd.
Beſides, he hates me for my Father Warwicke,
And will (no doubt) ſhortly be rid of me.
Qu. Poore heart adieu, I pitty thy complaining.
An. No more, then with my ſoule I mourne for yours.
Dorſ. Farewell, thou wofull welcommer of glory.
Anne. Adieu, poore ſoule, that tak'ſt thy leave of it,
Duc. Yorke. Go to Richmond, to Dorſet, to Anne, to the Queene, and good fortune guide thee,
Go thou to Richard, and good Angels tend thee,
Go thou to Sanctuary, and good thoughts poſſeſſe thee;
I to my Grave, where peace and reſt lye with mee.
Eighty odde yeeres of ſorrow have I ſeene,
And each howres joy wrackt with a weeke of teene.
Qu. Stay, yet looke backe with me unto the Tower.
Pitty, you ancient Stones, thoſe tender Babes,
Whom Envie hath immur'd within your Walls,
Rough Cradle for ſuch little pretty ones,
Rude ragged Nurſe, old ſullen Play-fellow,
For tender Princes: uſe my Babies well;
So fooliſh Sorrowes bids your Stones farewell.
Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Sound a Sonnet. Enter Richard in pompe, Buckingham, Catesby, Ratcliffe, Lovel.

Rich. Stand all apart. Couſin of Buckingham.
Buck. My gracious Soveraigne.
Rich. Give me thy hand. Sound.
Thus high, by thy advice, and thy aſſiſtance,
Is King Richard ſeated:
But ſhall we weare theſe Glories for a day?
Or ſhall they laſt, and we rejoyce in them?
Buc. Still live they, and for ever let them laſt.
Rich. Ah Buckingham, now doe I play the Touch,
To try if thou be currant Gold indeed:
Young Edward lives, thinke now what I would ſpeake.
Buck. Say on my loving Lord.
Rich. Why Buckingham, I ſay I would be King.
Buc. Why ſo you are, my thrice-renowned Lord.
Rich. Ha? am I King? 'tis ſo: but Edward lives.
Buc. True, Noble Prince.
Rich. O bitter conſequence!
That Edward ſtill ſhould live true Noble Prince.
Couſin, thou waſt not wont to be ſo dull.
Shall I be plaine? I wiſh the Baſtards dead,
And I would have it ſuddenly perform'd.
What ſay'ſt thou now? ſpeake ſuddenly, be briefe.
Buc. Your Grace may doe your pleaſure.
Rich. Tut, tut, thou art all Ice, thy kindneſſe freezes:
Say, have I thy conſent, that they ſhall dye?
Bu. Give me ſome little breath, ſome pawſe, deare Lord,
Before I poſitively ſpeake in this:
I will reſolve you herein preſently. Exit Buck.
Cates. The King is angry, ſee he gnawes his Lippe.
Rich. I will converſe with Iron-witted Fooles,
And unreſpective Boyes: none are for me,
That looke into me with conſiderate eyes,
High-reaching Buckingham growes circumſpect.
Boy.
Page. My Lord.
Rich. Know'ſt thou not any, whom corrupting Gold
Will tempt unto a cloſe exploit of Death?
Page. I know a diſcontented Gentleman,
Whoſe humble meanes match not his haughty ſpirit:
Gold were as good as twenty Orators,
And will (no doubt) tempt him to any thing.
Rich. What is his Name?
Pag. His Name, my Lord, is Tirrell.
Rich. I partly know the man: goe call him hither,
Boy. Exit.
The deepe revolving witty Buckingham,
No more ſhall be the neighbor to my counſailes.
Hath he ſo long held out with me, untyr'd,
And ſtops he now for breath? Well, be it ſo.

Enter Stanley.

How now, Lord Stanley, what's the newes?
Stanley. Know my loving Lord, the Marqueſſe Dorſet
As I heare, is fled to Richmond,
In the parts where he abides.
Rich. Come hither Catesby, rumor it abroad,
That Anne my Wife is very grievous ſicke,
I will take order for her keeping cloſe.
Inquire me out ſome meane poore Gentleman,
Whom I will marry ſtraight to Clarence Daughter:
The Boy is fooliſh, and I feare not him.
Looke how thou dream'ſt: I ſay agine, give out,
That Anne, my Queene, is ſicke, and like to dye.
About it, for it ſtands me much upon
To ſtop all hopes, whoſe growth may dammage me.
I muſt be married to my Brothers Daughter,
Or elſe my Kingdome ſtands on brittle Glaſſe:
Murther her Brothers, aud then marry her,
Vncertaine way of gaine. But I am in
So farre in blood, that ſinne will pluck on ſinne,
Teare-falling Pitty dwells not in this Eye.

Enter Tyrrel.

Is thy Name Tyrrel?
Tir. James Tyrrel, and your moſt obedient ſubject.
Rich. Art thou indeed?
Tyr. Prove me, my gracious Lord.
Rich. Dar'ſt thou reſolve to kill a friend of mine?
Tyr. Pleaſe you:
But I had rather kill two enemies.
Rich. Why then thou haſt it: two deepe enemies,
Foes to my Reſt, and my ſweet ſleepes diſturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deale upon:
Tyrrel, I meane thoſe Baſtards in the Tower.
Tyr. Let me have open meanes to come to them,
And ſoone Ile rid you from the feare of them.
Rich. Thou ſing'ſt ſweet Muſique:
Hearke, come hither Tyrrel,
Goe by this token: riſe, and lend thine Eare, Whiſpers.
There is no more but ſo: ſay it is done,
And I will love thee, and preferre thee for it.
Tyr. I will diſpatch it ſtraight. Exit.

Enter Buckingham.

Buc. My Lord, I have conſider'd in my minde,
The late requeſt that you did ſound me in.
Rich. Well, let that reſt: Dorſet is fled to Richmond.
Buc. I heare the newes, my Lord.
Rich. Stanley, hee is your Wives Sonne: well, looke unto it.
Buc. My Lord, I clayme the gift, my due by promiſe,
For which your Honor and your Faith is pawn'd
Th'Earledome of Hereford, and the moveables,
Which you have promiſed I ſhall poſſeſſe.
Rich. Stanley looke to your Wife: if ſhe convey
Letters to Richmond, you ſhall anſwer it.
Buc. What ſayes your Highneſſe to my juſt requeſt?
Rich. I doe remember me, Henry the Sixt
Did prophecy, that Richmond ſhould be King,
When Richmond was a little peeviſh Boy.
A King perhaps.
Buc. May it pleaſe you to reſolve me in my ſuit.
Rich. Thou troubleſt me, I am not in the veine. Exit.
Buc. And is it thus? repayes he my deepe ſervice
With ſuch contempt? made I him King for this?
O let me thinke on Haſtings, and be gone
To Brecnock, while my fearefull Head is on. Exit.

Enter Tyrrel.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody Act is done,
The moſt arch deed of pittious maſſacre

That ever yet this Land was guilty of:
Dighton and Forreſt, whom I did ſuborne
To do this peece of ruthfull Butchery,
Albeit they were fleſht Villaines, bloudy Dogges,
Melted with tenderneſſe, and milde compaſſion,
Wept like to Children, in their deaths ſad Story.
O thus (quoth Dighton) lay the gentle Babes:
Thus, thus (quoth Forreſt) girdling one another
Within their Alablaſter innocent Armes:
Their lips were foure red Roſes on a ſtalke,
And in their Summer Beauty kiſt each other.
A Booke of Prayers on their pillow lay,
Which one (quoth Forreſt) almoſt chang'd my minde:
But oh the Divell, there the Villaine ſtopt:
When Dighton thus told on, we ſmothered
The moſt repleniſhed ſweet worke of nature,
That from the prime Creation ere ſhe framed.
Hence both are gone with Conſcience and Remorſe,
They could not ſpeake, and ſo I left them both,
To beare theſe tydings to the bloudy King.

Enter Richard.

And heere he comes. All health my Soveraigne Lord.
Ric. Kinde Tirrell, am I happy in thy Newes.
Tir. If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Beget your happineſſe, be happy then,
For it is done.
Rich. But did'ſt thou ſee them dead?
Tir. I did my Lord.
Rich. And buried gentle Tirrell?
Tir. The Chaplaine of the Tower hath buried them,
But where (to ſay the truth) I do not know.
Rich. Come to me Tirrell ſoone, and after Supper,
When thou ſhalt tell the proceſſe of their death.
Meane time, but thinke how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy deſire.
Farewell till then.
Tir. I humbly take leave.
Rich. The Sonne of Clarence have I pent up cloſe,
His daughter meanly have I matcht in marriage,
The Sonnes of Edward ſleepe in Abrahams boſome,
And Anne my wife hath bid this world good night.
Now for I know the Britaine Richmond aymes
At yong Elizabeth my Brothers daughter,
And by that knot lookes proudly on the Crowne,
To her go I, a jolly thriving wooer.

Enter Ratcliffe.

Rat. My Lord.
Rich. Good or bad newes, that thou com'ſt in ſo bluntly?
Rat. Bad news my Lord, Mourton is fled to Richmond,
And Buckingham backt with the hardy Welſhmen
Is in the field, and ſtill his power encreaſeth.
Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more neere,
Then Buckingham and his raſh levied Strength.
Come, I have learn'd, that fearfull commenting
Is leaden ſervitor to dull delay.
Delay leades impotent and Snaile-pac'd Beggery:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Ioves Mercury, and Herald for a King:
Go muſter men: My counſaile is my Sheeld,
We muſt be breefe, when Traitors brave the Field.
Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter old Queene Margaret.

Mar. So now proſperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death:
Heere in theſe Confines ſlily have I lurkt,
To watch the waining of mine enemies.
A dire induction, am I witneſſe to,
And will to France, hoping the conſequence
Will prove as bitter, blacke, and Tragicall.
Withdraw thee wretched Margaret, who comes heere?

Enter Dutcheſſe and Queene.

Qu. Ah my poore Princes! ah my tender Babes!
My unblowne Flowers, new appearing ſweets:
If yet your gentle ſoules flye in the Ayre,
And be not fixt in doome perpetuall,
Hover about me with your ayery wings,
And heare your mothers Lamentation.
Mar. Hover about her, ſay that right for right
Hath dim'd your Infant morne, to Aged night.
Dut. So many miſeries have craz'd my voyce,
That my woe-wearied tongue is ſtill and mute.
Edward Plantagenet, why art thou dead?
Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet,
Edward for Edward, payes a dying debt.
Qu. Wilt thou, O God, flye from ſuch gentle Lambs,
And throw them in the intrailes of the Wolfe?
Why didſt thou ſleepe, when ſuch a deed was done?
Mar. When holy Henry dyed, and my ſwee Sonne.
Dut. Dead life, blind ſight, poore mortall living ghoſt,
Woes Scene, Worlds ſhame, Graves due, by life uſurpt,
Breefe abſtract and record of tedious dayes,
Reſt thy unreſt on Englands lawfull earth,
Vnlawfully made drunke with innocent blood.
Qu. Ah that thou would'ſt aſſoone affoord a Grave,
As thou canſt yeeld a melancholly ſeate:
Then would I hide my bones, not reſt them heere,
Ah who hath any cauſe to mourne but wee?
Mar. If ancient ſorrow be moſt reverent,
Give mine the benefit of ſigneury,
And let my greefes frowne on the upper hand
If ſorrow can admit Society.
I had an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:
I had a Huſband, till a Richard kill'd him:
Thou had'ſt an Edward, till a Richard kill'd him:
Thou had'ſt a Richard, till a Richard kill'd him.
Dut. I had a Richard too, and thou did'ſt kill him;
I had a Rutland too, thou holp'ſt to kill him.
Mar. Thou had'ſt a Clarence too,
And Richard kill'd him.
From forth the kennell of thy wombe hath crept
A Hell-hound that doth hunt us all to death:
That Dogge, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To worry Lambes, and lap their gentle blood:
That foule defacer of Gods handy worke:
That reignes in gauled eyes of weeping ſoules:
That excellent grand Tyrant of the earth,
Thy wombe let looſe to chaſe us to our graves.
O upright, juſt, and true-diſpoſing God,
How do I thanke thee, that this carnall Curre

Preyes on the iſſue of his Mothers body,
And makes her Pue-fellow with others mone.
Dut. Oh Harries wife, triumph not in my woes:
God witneſſe with me, I have wept for thine.
Mar. Beare with me: I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill'd my Edward,
The other Edward dead, to quit my Edward:
Yong Yorke, he is but boote, becauſe both they
Matcht not the high perfection of my loſſe.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that ſtab'd my Edward,
And the beholders of this franticke play,
Th'adulterate Haſtings, Rivers, Vaughan, Gray,
Vntimely ſmother'd in their dusky Graves.
Richard yet lives, Hels blacke Intelligencer,
Onely reſerv'd their Factor, to buy ſoules,
And ſend then thither: But at hand, at hand
Inſues his pittious and unpittied end.
Earth gapes, Hell burnes, Fiends roare, Saints pray,
To have him ſodainly convey'd from hence:
Cancell his bond of life, deere God I pray,
That I may live and ſay, The Dogge is dead.
Qu. O thou did'ſt propheſie the time would come,
That I ſhould wiſh for thee to helpe me curſe
That bottel'd Spider, that foule bunch-back'd Toad.
Mar. I call'd thee then, vaine flouriſh of my fortune:
I call'd thee then, poore Shadow, painted Queene,
The preſentation of but what I was;
The flattering Index of a direfull Pageant;
One heav'd a high, to be hurl'd downe below:
A Mother onely mockt with two faire Babes;
A dreame of what thou waſt, a gariſh Flagge
To be the ayme of every dangerous Shot;
A ſigne of Dignity, a Breath, a Bubble:
A Queene in leaſt, onely to fill the Scene.
Where is thy Husband now? Where be thy Brothers?
Where be thy two Sonnes? Wherein doſt thou Ioy?
Who ſues, and kneeles, and ſayes, God ſave the Queene?
Where be the bending Peeres that flattered thee?
Where be the thronging Troopes that followed thee?
Decline all this, and ſee what now thou art.
For happy Wife, a moſt diſtreſſed Widdow:
For joyfull Mother, one that wailes the name:
For one being ſued to, one that humbly ſues:
For Queene, a very Caytiffe, crown'd with care:
For ſhe that ſcorn'd at me, now ſcorn'd of me:
For ſhe being feared of all, now fearing one:
For ſhe commanding all, obey'd of none.
Thus hath the courſe of Iuſtice whirl'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time,
Having no more but Thought of what thou waſt,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art,
Thou didſt uſurpe my place, and doſt thou not
Vſurpe the juſt proportion of my Sorrow?
Now thy proud Necke, beares halfe my burthen'd yoke,
From which, even heere I ſlip my wearied head,
And leave the burthen of it all, on thee.
Farewell Yorkes wife, and Queene of ſad miſchance,
Theſe Engliſh woes, ſhall make me ſmile in France.
Qu. O thou well skill'd in Curſes, ſtay a-while,
And teach me how to curſe mine enemies.
Mar. Forbeare to ſleepe the night, and faſt the day:
Compare dead happineſſe, with living woe:
Thinke that thy Babes were ſweeter then they were,
And he that ſlew them fowler then he is:
Bett'ring thy loſſe, makes the bad cauſer worſe,
Revolving this, will teach thee how to Curſe.
Qu. My word are dull, O quicken them with thine.
Mar. Thy woes will make them ſharpe,
And pierce like mine. Exit Margaret.
Dut. Why ſhould calamity be full of words?
Qu. Windy Atturnies to their Cliens Woes,
Ayery ſucceeders of inteſtine joyes,
Poore breathing Orators of miſeries,
Let them have ſcope, though what they will impart,
Helpe nothing els, yet do they eaſe the hart.
Dut. If ſo then, be not Tongue-ty'd: go with me,
And in the breath of bitter words, let's ſmother
My damned Son, that thy two ſweet Sonnes ſmother'd.
The Trumpet ſounds, be copious in exclaimes.

Enter King Richard, and his Traine.

Rich. Who intercepts me in my Expedition?
Dut. O ſhe, that might have intercepted thee
By ſtrangling thee in her accurſed wombe,
From all the ſlaughters (Wretch) that thou haſt done.
Qu. Hid'ſt thou that Forhead with a Golden Crowne
Where't ſhould be branded, if that right were right?
The ſlaughter of the Prince that ow'd that Crowne,
And the dyre death of my poore Sonnes, and Brothers.
Tell me thou Villaine-ſlave, where are my Children?
Dut. Thou Toad, thou Toade,
Where is thy Brother Clarence?
And little Ned Plantagenet his Sonne?
Qu. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Gray?
Dut. Where is kinde Haſtings?
Rich. A flouriſh Trumpets, ſtrike Alarum Drummes:
Let not the Heavens heare theſe Tell-tale women
Raile on the Lords Annointed. Strike I ſay.
Flouriſh. Alarums.
Either be patient, and intreat me ſayre,
Or with the clamorous report of Warre,
Thus will I drowne your exclamations.
Dut. Art thou my Sonne?
Rich. I, I thanke God, my Father, and your ſelfe.
Dut. Then patiently heare my impatience.
Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brooke the accent of reproofe.
Dut. O let me ſpeake.
Rich. Do then, but Ile not heare.
Dut. I will be milde, and gentle in my words.
Rich. And breefe (good Mother) for I am in haſt.
Dut. Art thou ſo haſty? I have ſtaid for thee
(God knowes) in torment and in agony.
Rich. And came I not at laſt to comfort you?
Dut. No by the holy Rood, thou know'ſt it well,
Thou cam'ſt on earth, to make the earth my Hell.
A greevous burthen was thy Birth to me,
Tetchy and wayward was thy Infancy.
Thy School-daies frightfull, deſp'rate, wilde, and furious,
Thy prime of Manhood, daring, bold, and venturous:
Thy Age confirm'd, proud, ſubtle, ſlye, and bloody,
More milde, but yet more harmfull; Kinde in hatred:
What comfortable houre canſt thou name,
That ever grac'd me with thy company?
Rich. Faith none, but Humfrey Hower,
That call'd your Grace
To Breakefaſt once, forth of my company.
If I be ſo diſgracious in your eye,
Let me martch on, and not offend you Madam.
Strike up the Drumme.
Dut. I prythee heare me ſpeake.

Rich. You ſpeake too bitterly.
Dut. Heare me a word:
For I ſhall never ſpeake to thee againe.
Rich. So.
Dut, Either thou wilt dye, by Gods juſt ordinance
Ere from this warre thou turne a Conqueror:
Or I with griefe and extreame Age ſhall periſh,
And never more behold thy face againe.
Therefore take with thee my moſt greivous Curſe,
Which in the day of Battell tyre thee more
Then all the compleat Armour that thou wear'ſt.
My Prayers on the adverſe party fight,
And there the little ſoules of Edwards Children,
Whiſper the Spirits of thine Enemies,
And promiſe them Succeſſe and Victory:
Bloudy thou art, bloudy will be thy end:
Shame ſerves thy life, and doth thy death attend. Exit.
Quee. Though far more cauſe, yet much leſſe ſpirit to Abides in me, I ſay Amen to her. (curſe
Rich. Stay Madam, I muſt talke a word with you.
Que. I have no more ſonnes of the Royall blood
For thee to ſlaughter. For my Daughters (Richard)
They ſhall be praying Nunnes, not weeping Queenes:
And therefore levell not to hit their lives.
Rich. You have a daughter call'd Elizabeth,
Vertuous and Faire, Royall and Gracious.
Quee. And muſt ſhe dye for this? O let her live,
And Ile corrupt her Manners, ſtaine her Beauty,
Slander my ſelfe, as falſe to Edwards bed:
Throw over her the vaile of infamy,
So ſhe may live unſcarr'd of bleeding ſlaughter,
I will confeſſe ſhe was not Edwards daughter.
Rich. Wrong not her Byrth, ſhe is a Royall Princeſſe.
Quee. To ſave her life, Ile ſay ſhe is not ſo.
Rich. Her life is ſafeſt onely in her byrth.
Quee. And onely in that ſafety, dyed her Brothers.
Rich. Loe at their Birth, good ſtarres were oppoſite.
Que. No, to their lives, ill friends were contrary.
Rich. All unavoyded is the doome of Deſtiny.
Que. True: when avoyded grace makes Deſtiny.
My Babes were deſtin'd to a fairer death,
If grace had bleſt thee with a fairer life.
Rich. You ſpeake as if that I had ſlaine my Coſins?
Quee. Coſins indeed, and by their Vnckle couzend,
Of Comfort, Kingdome, Kindred, Freedome, Life,
Whoſe hand ſoever lanch'd their tender hearts,
Thy head (all indirectly) gave direction.
No doubt the murd'rous Knife was dull and blunt,
Till it was whetted on thy ſtone-hard heart,
To revell in the Intrailes of my Lambes.
But that ſtill uſe of griefe, makes wilde griefe tame,
My tongue ſhould to thy eares not name my Boyes,
Till that my Nayles were anchor'd in thine eyes:
And I in ſuch a deſp'rate Bay of death,
Like a poore Barke, of ſailes and tackling reft,
Ruſh all to peeces on thy Rocky boſome.
Rich. Madam, ſo thrive I in my enterprize
And dangerous ſucceſſe of bloody warres,
As I intend more good to you and yours,
Then ever you and yours by me were harm'd.
Quee. What good is cover'd with the face of heaven,
To be diſcovered, that can doe me good?
Rich. Th'advancement of your children, gentle Lady
Quee. Vp to ſome Scaffold, there to loſe their heads.
Rich. Vnto the dignity and height of Fortune,
The high Imperiall Type of this earths glory.
Quee. Flatter my ſorrow with report of it:
Tell me, what State, what Dignity, what Honor,
Canſt thou deviſe to any child of mine.
Rich. Even all I have; I, and my ſelfe and all,
Will I withall indow a child of thine:
So in the Lethe of thy angry ſoule,
Thou drowne the ſad remembrance of thoſe wrongs,
Which thou ſuppoſeſt I have done to thee.
Quee. Be breife, leaſt that the proceſſe of thy kindneſſe
Laſt longer telling then thy kindneſſe date.
Rich. Then know,
That from my Soule, I love thy Daughter.
Quee. My daughters Mother thinkes it with her ſoule.
Rich. What doe you thinke?
Qu. That thou doſt love my daughter from thy ſoule
So from thy ſoules love didſt thou love her Brothers,
And from my hearts love, I doe thanke thee for it.
Rich. Be not ſo haſty to confound my meaning:
I meane that with my ſoule I love thy daughter,
And doe intend to make her Queene of England.
Qu. Well then, who doſt thou mean ſhallbe her King.
Rich. Even he that makes her Queene.
Who elſe ſhould be?
Quee. What, thou?
Rich. Even ſo: How thinke you of it?
Quee. How canſt thou wooe her?
Rich. That I would learne of you,
As one being beſt acquainted with her humour.
Quee. And wilt thou learne of me?
Rich. Madam, with all my heart.
Quee. Send to her by the man that ſlew her brothers,
A paire of bleeding hearts: thereon ingrave
Edward and Yorke, then haply will ſhe weepe:
Therefore preſent to her, as ſometime Margaret
Did to thy father, ſteept in Rutlands blood,
A hand-kerchiefe, which ſay to her did dreyne
The purple ſappe from her ſweet brothers body,
And bid her wipe her weeping eyes withall.
If this inducement move her not to love,
Send her a Letter of thy Noble deeds:
Tell her, thou mad'ſt away her Vnckle Clarence,
Her Vnckle Rivers, I (and for her ſake)
Mad'ſt quicke conveyance with her good Aunt Anne.
Rich. You mocke me Madam, this is not the way
To win your daughter.
Quee. There is no other way,
Vnleſſe thou could'ſt put on ſome other ſhape,
And not be Richard, that hath done all this.
Rich. Say that I did all this for love of her.
Que. Nay then indeed ſhe cannot chooſe but hate thee,
Having bought love, with ſuch a bloody ſpoile.
Rich. Looke what is done, cannot be now amended:
Men ſhall deale unadviſedly ſometimes,
Which after-houres gives leyſure to repent.
If I did take the Kingdome from your Sonnes,
To make amends, Ile give it to your daughter:
If I have kill'd the iſſue of your wombe,
To quicken your encreaſe, I will beget
Mine iſſue of your blood, upon your daughter:
A Grandams name is little leſſe in love,
Then is the doting Title of a Mother;
They are as Children but one ſtep below,
Even of your mettall, of your very blood:
Of all one paine, ſave for a night of groanes
Endur'd of her, for whom you bid like ſorrow.
Your Children were vexation to your youth,

But mine ſhall be a comfort to your Age,
The loſſe you have, is but a Sonne being King,
And by that loſſe, your Daughter is made Queene.
I cannot make you what amends I would,
Therefore accept ſuch kindneſſe as I can.
Dorſet your Sonne, that with a fearefull ſoule
Leads diſcontented ſteppes in Forraine ſoyle,
This faire Alliance, quickly ſhall call home
To high Promotions, and great Dignity.
The King that calles your beauteous daughter wife,
Familiarly ſhall call thy Dorſet, brother :
Againe ſhall you be Mother to a King :
And all the Ruines of diſtreſſefull Times,
Repair'd with double Riches of Content.
What? we have many goodly dayes to ſee :
The liquid drops of Teares that you have ſhed,
Shall come againe, tranform'd to Orient Pearle,
Advantaging their Love, with intereſt
Often-times double gaine of happineſſe.
Goe then (my Mother) to thy Daughter goe,
Make bold her baſhfull yeares, with your experience,
Prepare her eares to heare a Wooers Tale.
Put in her tender heart, th'aſpiring Flame
Of Golden Soveraignty : Acquaint the Princeſſe
With the ſweet ſilent houres of Marriage joyes ;
And when this Arme of mine hath chaſtiſed
The petty Rebell, dull-brain'd Buckingham,
Bound with Triumphant Garlands will I come,
And leade thy daughter to a Conquerors bed :
To whom I will retaile my Conqueſt wonne,
And ſhe ſhall be ſole Victoreſſe, Cæſars Cæſar.
Que. What were I beſt to ſay, her Fathers brother
Would be her Lord? Or ſhall I ſay her Vnkle?
Or he that ſlew her Brothers, and her Vnkles?
Vnder what Title ſhall I wooe for thee,
That God, the Law, my Honor, and her Love,
Can make ſeeme pleaſing to her tender yeeres?
Rich. Inferre faire Englands peace by this Alliance.
Qu. Which ſhe ſhall purchaſe with ſtill laſting warre.
Rich. Tell her, the King that may command, intreats.
Qu. That at her hands, which the kings King forbids
Rich. Say ſhe ſhall be a high and mighty Queene.
Qu. To vaile the Title, as her Mother doth.
Rich. Say I will love her everlaſtingly.
Qu. But how long ſhall that title ever laſt?
Rich. Sweetly in force, unto her faire lives end.
Qu. But how long fairely ſhall her ſweet life laſt?
Rich. As long as heaven and Nature lengthens it.
Qu. As long as hell and Richard likes of it.
Rich. Say, I her Soveraigne, am her Subject low.
Qu. But ſhe your Subject, lothes ſuch Soveraignty.
Rich. Be eloquent in my behalfe to her.
Qu. An honeſt tale ſpeeds beſt, being plainly told.
Rich. Then plainly to her, tell my loving tale.
Qu. Plaine and not honeſt, is too harſh a ſtyle.
Rich. Your Reaſons are too ſhallow, and to quicke.
Qu. O no, my Reaſons are too deepe and dead,
Too deepe and dead (poore Infants) in their graves,
Harpe on it ſtill ſhall I, till heart-ſtrings breake.
Rich. Harpe not on that ſtring Madam, that is paſt.
Now by my George, my Garter, and my Crowne.
Que. Prophan'd, diſhonor'd, and the third uſurpt.
Rich. I ſweare.
Que. By nothing, for this is no Oath:
Thy George prophan'd, hath loſt his Lordly honor ;
Thy Garter blemiſh'd, pawn'd his Kingly Vertue ;
Thy Crowne uſurp'd, diſgrac'd his Kingly Glory :
If ſomething thou would'ſt ſweare to be beleev'd,
Sweare then by ſomething, that thou haſt not wrong'd.
Rich. Then by my ſelfe.
Qu. Thy ſelfe, is ſelfe-miſus'd.
Rich. Now by the World.
Qu. 'Tis full of thy foule wrongs.
Rich. My Fathers death.
Qu. Thy life hath it diſhonor'd.
Rich. Why then, by Heaven.
Que. Heavens wrong is moſt of all :
If thou didd'ſt feare to breake an Oath with him,
The vnity the King my husband made,
Thou had'ſt not broken, nor my brothers died.
If thou had'ſt fear'd to breake an oath by him,
Th'imperiall mettall, circling now thy head,
Had grac'd the tender temples of my child,
And both the Princes had beene breathing heere,
Which now two tender Bed-folowes for duſt,
Thy broken Faith hath made the prey for Wormes.
What can'ſt thou ſweare by now?
Rich. The time to come.
Que. That thou haſt wronged in the time ore-paſt :
For I my ſelfe have many teares to waſh
Heereafter time, for time paſt, wrong'd by thee.
The Children live, whoſe Fathers thou haſt ſlaughter'd,
Vngovern'd youth, to waile it with their age :
The Parents live, whoſe Children thou haſt butcher'd,
Old barren Plants, to waile it with their Age.
Sweare not by time to come, for that thou haſt
Miſus'd ere vs'd, by times ill-vs'd repaſt.
Rich. As I intend to proſper, and repent ;
So thrive I in my dangerous Affaires
Of hoſtile Armes : My ſelfe, my ſelfe confound :
Heaven, and Fortune barre me happy houres :
Day, yeeld me not thy light ? nor Night, thy reſt.
Be oppoſite all Planets of good lucke
To my proceeding, if with deere hearts love,
Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beautious Princely daughter.
In her, conſiſts my happineſſe, and thine :
Without her, followes to my ſelfe, and thee,
Her ſelfe, the Land, and many a Chriſtian ſoule,
Death, Deſolation, Ruine, and Decay :
It cannot be avoyded, but by this :
It will not be avoyded, but by this.
Therefore deare Mother (I muſt call you ſo)
Be the Atturney of my love to her :
Pleade what I will be, not what I have beene ;
Not my deſerts, but what I will deſerve :
Vrge the Neceſſity and ſtate of times,
And be not peeviſh found, in great Deſignes.
Que. Shall I be tempted of the divell thus ?
Rich. I, if the Divell tempt you to doe good.
Que. Shall I forget my ſelfe, to be my ſelfe?
Rich. I, if your ſelfes remembrance wrong your ſelfe.
Que. Yet thou didſt kill my Children.
Rich. But in your daughters wombe I bury them.
Where in that Neſt of Spicery they will breed
Selves of themſelves, to your recomforture.
Que. Shall I goe win my daughter to thy will ?
Rich. And be a happy Mother by the deed.
Que. I goe, write to me very ſhortly,
And you ſhall underſtand from me her mind. Exit Qu.
Rich. Beare her my true loves kiſſe, and ſo farewell.
Relenting Foole, and ſhallow-changing Woman.

How now, what newes?

Enter Ratcliffe.

Ratc. Moſt mighty Soveraigne, on the Weſterne Coaſt
Rideth a puiſſant Navy: to our Shores
Throng many doubtfull hollow-hearted friends,
Vnarm'd, and unreſolv'd to beat them backe.
'Tis thought, that Richmond is their Admirall:
And there they hull, expecting but the ayde
Of Buckingham, to welcome them aſhore.
Ric. Some light-foot friend poſt to the Duke of Norfolke
Ratcliffe thy ſelfe, or Catesby, where is he?
Cat. Here, my good Lord.
Rich. Catesby, flye to the Duke.
Cat. I will, my Lord, with all convenient haſte,
Rich. Catesby come hither, poſte to Saliabury.
When thou com'ſt thither: Dull unmindfull Villaine.
Why ſtay'ſt thou here, and go'ſt not to the Duke?
Cat. Firſt, mighty Liege, tell me your highneſſe pleaſure
What from your Grace I ſhall deliver to him.
Rich. O true, good Catesby, bid him levy ſtraight
The greateſt ſtrength and power that he can make,
And meet me ſuddenly at Salisbury.
Cat. I goe. Exit.
Rat. What, may it pleſe you, ſhall I doe at Salisbury?
Rich. Why, what would'ſt thou doe there, before I goe?
Rat. Your highneſſe told me I ſhould poſte before.
Rich. My mind is chang'd:

Enter Lord Stanley.

Stanley, what newes with you?
Sta. None, good my Liege, to pleaſe you with the hearing,
Nor none ſo bad, but well may be reported.
Rich. Hoyday, a Riddle, neither good nor bad:
What need'ſt thou runne ſo many miles about,
When thou mayeſt tell thy tale the neereſt way?
Once more, what newes?
Stan. Richmond is on the Seas.
Rich. There let him ſinke, and be the Seas on him,
White-liver'd Runnagate, what doth he there?
Stan. I know not, mighty Soveraigne, but by gueſſe.
Rich. Well, as you gueſſe.
Stan. Stirr'd up by Dorſet, Buckingham, and Morton.
He makes for England, here to clayme the Crowne.
Rich. Is the Chayre empty? is the Sword unſway'd?
Is the King dead? the Empire unpoſſeſt?
What heire of Yorke is there alive, but we?
And who is Englands King, but great Yorkes heire?
Then tell me, what makes he upon the Seas?
Stan. Vnleſſe for that, my Liege, I cannot gueſſe.
Rich. Vnleſſe for that he comes to be your Liege,
You cannot gueſſe wherefore the Welchman comes.
Thou wilt revolt, and flye to him, I feare.
Stan. No, my good Lord, therefore miſtruſt me not.
Rich. Where is thy Power then, to beat him backe?
Where be thy Tenants, and thy followers?
Are they not now upon the Weſterne Shore,
Safe-conducting the Rebels from their Shippes?
Stanley. No, my good Lord, my friends are in the North.
Rich. Cold friends to me: what doe they in the North,
When they ſhould ſerve their Soveraigne in the Weſt?
Stan. They have not beene commanded, mighty King
Pleaſeth your Majeſty to give me leave,
Ile muſter up my friends, and meet your Grace,
Where, and what time your Majeſty ſhall pleaſe.
Rich. I, thou would'ſt be gone, to joyne with Richmond:
But Ile not truſt thee.
Stan. Moſt mighty Soveraigne,
You have no cauſe to hold my friendſhip doubtfull,
I never was, nor never will be falſe.
Rich. Goe then, and muſter men: but leave behind
Your Sonne George Stanley: looke your heart be firme,
Or elſe his heads aſſurance is but fraile.
Stan. So deale with him, as I prove true to you.
Exit Stanley.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My gracious Soveraigne, now in Devonſhire,
As I by friends am well advertiſed,
Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty Prelate,
Biſhop of Exeter, his elder Brother,
With many more Confederates, are in armes.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. In Kent, my Liege, the Guilfords are in Armes,
And every houre more Competitors
Flocke to the Rebels, and their power growes ſtrong.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. My Lord, the Army of great Buckingham.
Rich. Out on ye, Owles, nothing but Songs of Death,
He ſtriketh him.
There, take thou that, till thou bring better newes,
Meſſ. The newes I have to tell your Majeſty,
Is, that by ſudden Floods, and fall of Waters,
Buckinghams Army is diſpers'd and ſcatter'd,
And he himſelfe wandred away alone,
No man knowes whither.
Rich. I cry thee mercy;
There is my Purſe, to cure that Blow of thine.
Hath any well-adviſed friend proclaym'd
Reward to him that brings the Traytor in?
Meſſ. Such Proclamation hath beene made, my Lord.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Sir Thomas Lovell, and Lord Marqueſſe Dorſet,
'Tis ſaid, my Leige, in Yorkeſhire are in Armes:
But this good comfort bring I to your Highneſſe,
The Brittaine Navy is diſpers'd by Tempeſt.
Richmond in Dorſetſhire ſent out a Boat
Vnto the ſhore, to aske thoſe on the Bankes,
If they were his Aſſiſtants, yea, or no?
Who anſwer'd him, they came from Buckingham,
Vpon his party: he miſtruſting them,
Hoys'd ſayle, and made his courſe againe for Brittaine.
Rich. March on, march on, ſince we are up in Armes,
If not to fight with forraine Enemies,
Yet to beat downe theſe Rebels here at home.

Enter Catesby.

Cat. My Liege, the Duke of Buckingham is taken,
That is the beſt newes, that the Earle of Richmond

Is with a mighty power Landed at Milford,
Is colder Newes, but yet they muſt be told.
Rich. Away towards Salsbury, while we reaſon here,
A Royall battell might be wonne and loſt:
Some one take order Buckingham be brought
To Salsbury, the reſt march on with me. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Derby, and Sir Chriſtopher.

Der. Sir Chriſtopher, tell Richmond this from me,
That in the ſtye of the moſt deadly Bore,
My Sonne George Stanley is frankt up in hold:
If I revolt, off goes yong Georges head,
The feare of that, holds off my preſent ayde.
So get thee gone: commend me to thy Lord.
Withall ſay, that the Queene hath heartily conſented
He ſhould eſpouſe Elizabeth her daughter.
But tell me, where is Princely Richmond now?
Chri. At Penbroke, or at Hertford Weſt in Wales.
Der. What men of Name reſort to him.
Chri. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned Souldier,
Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir William Stanley,
Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, Sir Iames Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant Crew,
And many other of great name and worth:
And towards London doe they bend their power,
If by the way they be not ſought withall.
Der. Well hye thee to thy Lord: I kiſſe his hand,
My Letter will reſolve him of my minde.
Farewell. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Buckingham with Halberds, led to Execution.

Buc. Will not King Richard let me ſpeake with him?
Sher. No my good Lord, therefore be patient.
Buc. Haſtings, and Edwards children, Gray and Rivers,
Holy King Henry, and thy faire Sonne Edward,
Vaughan, and all that have miſcarried
By under-hand corrupted foule injuſtice,
If that your moody diſcontented ſoules,
Doe through the clowds behold this preſent houre,
Euen for revenge mocke my deſtruction.
This is All-ſoules day (Fellow) is it not?
Sher. It is.
Buc. Why then All-ſoules day, is my bodies doomſday
This is the day, which in King Edwards time
I wiſh'd might fall on me, when I was found
Falſe to his Children, and his Wives Allies.
This is the day, wherein I wiſht to fall
By the falſe Faith of him whom moſt I truſted.
This, this All-ſoules day to my fearfull Soule,
Is the determin'd reſpit of my wrongs:
That high All-ſeer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my fained Prayer on my head,
And given in earneſt, what I begg'd in jeſt.
Thus doth he force the ſwords of wicked men
To turne their owne points in their Maſters boſomes.
Thus Margarets curſe falles heavy on my necke:
When he (quoth ſhe) ſhall ſplit thy heart with ſorrow,
Remember Margaret was a Propheteſſe:
Come leade me Officers to the blocke of ſhame,
Wrong hath but wrong, and blame the due of blame.
Exeunt Buckingham with Officers.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Richmond, Oxford, Blunt, Herbert, and others, with drum and colours.

Richm. Fellowes in Armes, and my moſt loving Frends
Bruis'd underneath the yoake of Tyranny,
Thus farre into the bowels of the Land,
Have we marcht on without impediment;
And here receive we from our Father Stanley
Lines of faire comfort and encouragement:
The wretched, bloody, and uſurping Boare,
(That ſpoyl'd your Summer Fields, and fruitfull Vines)
Swilles your warm blood like waſh, & makes his trough
In your embowel'd boſomes: This foule Swine
Is now even in the Center of this Iſle,
Ne're to the Towne of Leiceſter, as we learne:
From Tamworth thither, is but one dayes march.
In Gods name cheerely on, couragious Friends,
To reape the Harveſt of perpetuall peace,
By this one bloody tryall of ſharpe Warre.
Oxf. Every mans Conſcience is a thouſand men,
To fight againſt this guilty Homicide.
Her. I doubt not but his Friends will turne to us.
Blun. He hath no friends, but what are friends for feare
Which in his deereſt need will flye from him.
Richm. All for our vantage, then in Gods name march,
True hope is ſwift, aud flyes with Swallowes wings,
Kings it makes Gods, and meaner creatures Kings.
Exeunt Omnes.

Enter King Richard in Armes with Norfolke, Ratcliffe, and the Earle of Surrey.

Rich. Here pitch our Tent, even here in Boſworth field;
My Lord of Surrey, why looke you ſo ſad?
Sur. My heart is ten times lighter then my lookes.
Rich. My Lord of Norfolke.
Nor. Heere moſt gracious Liege.
Rich. Norfolke, we muſt have knockes:
Ha, muſt we not?
Nor. We muſt both give and take my loving Lord.
Rich. Vp with my Tent, here will I lye to night,
But where to morrow? Well, all's one for that.
Who hath deſcried the number of the Traitors?
Nor. Six or ſeven thouſand is their utmoſt power.
Rich. Why our Battalia trebbles that account:
Beſides, the Kings name is a Tower of ſtrength,
Which they upon the adverſe Faction want.
Vp with the Tent: Come Noble Gentlemen,
Let us ſurvey the vantage of the ground.
Call for ſome men of ſound direction:

Let's lacke no Diſcipline, make no delay,
For Lords, to morrow is a buſie day. Exeunt.

Enter Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and Dorſet.

Rich. The weary Sunne, hath made a Golden ſet,
And by the bright Tract of his fiery Carre,
Gives token of a goodly day to morrow.
Sir William Brandon, you ſhall beare my Standard:
Give me ſome Inke and Paper in my Tent:
Ile draw the Forme and Modell of our Battaile,
Limit each Leader to his ſeverall Charge,
And part in juſt proportion our ſmall Power.
My Lord of Oxford, you Sir William Brandon,
And you Sir Walter Herbert ſtay with me:
The Earle of Pembroke keepes his Regiment;
Good Captaine Blunt, beare my goodnight to him,
And by the ſecond houre in the Morning,
Deſire the Earle to ſee me in my Tent:
Yet one thing more (good Captaine) doe for me;
Where is Lord Stanley quarter'd, doe you know?
Blunt. Vnleſſe I have miſtane his Colours much,
(Which well I am aſſur'd I have not done)
His Regiment lyes halfe a Mile at leaſt
South, from the mighty Power of the King.
Rich. If without perill it be poſſible,
Sweet Blunt, make ſome good meanes to ſpeak with him
And give him from me, this moſt needfull Note.
Blunt. Vpon my ſelfe, my Lord, Ile undertake it,
And ſo God give you quiet reſt to night.
Rich. Good night good Captaine Blunt:
Come Gentlemen,
Let us conſult upon to morrowes Buſineſſe;
Into my Tent, the Dew is rawe and cold.
They withdraw into the Tent.

Enter Richard, Ratcliffe, Norfolke, and Catesby.

Rich. What is't a Clocke?
Cat. It's Supper time my Lord, it's nine a Clocke.
King, I will not ſup to night,
Give me ſome Inke and Paper:
What, is my Beaver eaſier then it was?
And all my Armour laid into my Tent?
Cat. It is my Liege: and all things are in readineſſe.
Rich. Good Norfolke, hye thee to thy charge,
Vſe carefull Watch, chooſe truſty Centinels.
Nor. I goe my Lord.
Rich. Stir with the Larke to morrow, gentle Norfolke.
Nor. I warrant you my Lord. Exit.
Rich. Ratcliffe.
Rat. My Lord.
Rich. Send out a Purſuivant at Armes
To Stanleys Regiment: bid him bring his power
Before Sun-riſing, leaſt his Sonne George fall
Into the blind Cave of eternall night.
Fill me a Bowle of Wine: Give me a Watch,
Saddle white Surrey for the field to morow:
Look that my ſtaves be ſound, & not too heavy. Ratcliffe.
Rat. My Lord.
Rich. Saw'ſt the melancholly Lord Northumberland?
Rat. Thomas the Earle of Surrey, and himſelfe,
Much about Cockſhut time, from Troope to Troope
Went through the Army, chearing up the Souldiers.
King, So, I am ſatisfied: Give me a Bowle of Wine,
I have not that Alacrity of Spirit,
Nor cheere of Mind that I was wont to have.
Set it downe. Is Inke and Paper ready?
Rat. It is my Lord.
Rich. Bid my Guard watch. Leave me.
Ratcliffe, about the mid of night come to my Tent
And helpe to arme me. Leave me I ſay. Exit Ratcliffe.

Enter Derby to Richmond in his Tent.

Derb. Fortune, and Victory ſit on thy Helme.
Richm. All comfort that the darke night can affoord,
Be to thy perſon, Noble Father in Law.
Tell me, how fares our Noble Mother?
Der. I by Attourney, bleſſe thee from thy Mother,
Who prayes continually for Richmonds good:
So much for that. The ſilent houres ſteale on,
And flaky darkeneſſe breakes within the Eaſt.
In briefe, for ſo the ſeaſon bids us be,
Prepare thy Battell early in the Morning,
And put thy Fortune to th'Arbitrement
Of bloody ſtroakes, and mortall ſtaring Warre:
I, as I may, that which I would, I cannot,
With beſt advantage will deceive the time,
And ayde thee in this doubtfull ſhocke of Armes.
But on thy ſide I may not be too forward,
Leaſt being ſeene, thy Brother, tender George
Be executed in his fathers ſight.
Farewell: the leyſure, and the fearefull time
Cuts off the ceremonious Vowes of Love,
And ample enterchange of ſweet Diſcourſe,
Which ſo long ſundred Friends ſhould dwell upon:
God give us leyſure for theſe rites of Love.
Once more Adieu, be valiant, and ſpeed well.
Richm. Good Lords conduct him to his Regiment:
Ile ſtrive with troubled noyſe, to take a Nap,
Leſt leaden ſlumber peize me downe to morrow,
When I ſhould mount with wings of Victory:
Once more, good night kinde Lords and Gentlemen.
Exeunt. Manet Richmond.
O thou, whoſe Captaine I account my ſelfe,
Looke on my Forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruiſing Irons of wrath,
That they may cruſh downe with a heavy fall,
Th'uſurping Helmets of our Adverſaries:
Make us thy miniſters of Chaſticement,
That we may praiſe thee in thy victory:
To thee I do commend my watchfull ſoule,
Ere I let fall the windowes of mine eyes:
Sleeping, and waking, oh defend me ſtill. Sleepes.
Enter the Ghoſt of Prince Edward, Sonne to Henry the ſixt.
Gh. to Ri. Let me ſit heavy on thy ſoule to morrow:
Thinke how thou ſtab'ſt me in my prime of youth
At Teukesbury; Deſpaire therefore, and dye.
Ghoſt to Richm. Be chearefull Richmond,
For the wronged Soules
Of butcher'd Princes, fight in thy behalfe:
King Henries iſſue Richmond comforts thee.
Enter the Ghoſt of Henry the ſixt.
Ghoſt. When I was mortall, my Annointed body
By thee was punched full of holes;
Thinke on the Tower, and me: Deſpaire, and dye,
Henry the ſixt, bids thee deſpaire and dye.
To Richm. Vertuous and holy be thou Conqueror:
Harry that propheſied thou ſhould'ſt be King,
Doth comfort thee in ſleepe: Live, and flouriſh.

Enter the Ghoſt of Clarence.
Ghoſt. Let me ſit heavy in thy ſoule to morrow.
I that was waſh'd to death with Fulſome Wine:
Poore Clarence by thy guile betray'd to death:
To morrow in the battell thinke on me,
And fall thy edgeleſſe Sword, deſpaire and dye.
To Richm. Thou off-ſpring of the houſe of Lancaſter
The wronged heyres of Yorke doe pray for thee,
Good Angels guard thy battell, Live and Flouriſh.
Enter the Ghoſts of Rivers, Gray, and Vaughan.
Riv. Let me ſit heavy in thy ſoule to morrow,
Rivers, that dy'de at Pomfret: deſpaire, and dye.
Grey. Thinke upon Grey, and let thy ſoule deſpaire.
Vaugh. Thinke upon Vaughan, and with guilty feare
Let fall thy Lance, deſpaire and dye.
All to Richm. Awake,
And thinke our wrongs in Richards Boſome,
Will conquer. Awake, and win the day.
Enter the Ghoſt of Lord Haſtings.
Ghoſt. Bloody and guilty: guilty awake,
And in a bloody Battell end thy dayes.
Thinke on Lord Haſtings; deſpaire, and dye.
Haſt. To Richm. Quiet untroubled ſoule,
Awake, awake:
Arme, fight, and conquer, for faire Englands ſake.
Enter the Ghoſts of the two yong Princes.
Ghoſts. Dreame on thy Couſins
Smothered in the Tower:
Let us be laid within thy boſome Richard,
And weigh thee downe to ruine, ſhame, and death:
Thy Nephewes ſoule bids thee deſpaire and dye.
Ghoſts to Richm. Sleepe Richmond,
Sleepe in Peace, and wake in joy,
Good Angels guard thee from the Boares annoy,
Live, and beget a happy race of Kings.
Edwards unhappy Sonnes, doe bid thee flouriſh:
Enter the Ghoſt of Anne, his Wife.
Ghoſt to Rich. Richard, thy Wife,
That wretched Anne thy Wife,
That never ſlept a quiet houre with thee,
Now filles thy ſleepe with perturbations,
To morrow in the Battaile, thinke on me,
And fall thy edgeleſſe Sword, deſpaire and dye.
Ghoſt to Richm. Thou quiet ſoule,
Sleepe thou a quiet ſleepe:
Dreame of Succeſſe, and happy Victory,
Thy Adverſaries Wife doth pray for thee.
Enter the Ghoſts of Buckingham.
Ghoſt to Rich. The firſt was I
That help'd thee to the Crowne:
The laſt was I that felt thy Tyranny.
O, in the bataile thinke on Buckingham,
And dye in terror of thy guiltineſſe.
Dreame on, dreame on, of bloody deeds and death,
Fainting deſpaire; deſpairing yeeld thy breath.
Ghoſt to Richm. I dyed for hope
Ere I could lend thee Ayde;
But cheere thy heart, and be thou not diſmayde:
God, and good Angels fight on Richmonds ſide,
And Richard fall in height of all his pride.
Richard ſtarts out of his dreame.
Rich. Give me another horſe, bind up my Wounds:
Have mercy Ieſu. Soft, I did but dreame.
O coward Conſcience! how doſt thou afflict me?
The Lights burne blew. It is not dead midnight,
Cold fearefull drops ſtand on my trembling fleſh.
What? doe I feare my Selfe? There's none elſe by,
Richard loves Richard, that is, I am I.
Is there a Murtherer heere? No; Yes, I am:
Then flye? What from my ſelfe? Great reaſon: why?
Leſt I Revenge. What? my ſelfe upon my ſelfe?
Alacke, I love my ſelfe. Wherefore? For any good
That I my ſelfe, have done unto my ſelfe?
O no. Alas, I rather hate my ſelfe,
For hatefull Deeds committed by my ſelfe.
I am a villaine: yet I Lye, I am not.
Foole, of thy ſelfe ſpeake well: Foole doe not flatter.
My Conſcience hath a thouſand ſeverall Tongues,
And every Tongue brings in a ſeverall Tale,
And every Tale condemnes me for a Villaine;
Perjury, in the high'ſt Degree,
Murther, ſterne murther, in the dyr'ſt degree,
All ſeverall ſinnes, all us'd in each degree,
Throng all to'th' Barre, crying all, Guilty, Guilty,
I ſhall deſpaire, there is no Creatuees loves me;
And if I dye, no ſoule ſhall pitty me.
Nay, wherefore ſhould they? Since that I my ſelfe,
Finde in my ſelfe, no pitty to my ſelfe.
Me thought, the ſoules of all that I had murther'd
Came to my Tent, and every one did threat
To morrowes vengeance on the head of Richard.
Enter Ratcliffe.
Rat. My Lord.
King. Who's there?
Rat. Ratcliffe my Lord, 'tis I: the early Village Cocke
Hath twice done ſalutation to the Morne,
Your friends are up, and buckle on their Armour.
King. O Ratcliffe, I feare, I feare.
Ratc. Nay good my Lord, be not affraid of Shadows.
King. By the Apoſtle Paul, ſhadowes to night
Have ſtroke more terror to the ſoule of Richard.
Then can the ſubſtance of ten thouſand Souldiers
Armed in proofe, and led by ſhallow Richmond.
'Tis not yet neere day. Come goe with me,
Vnder our Tents; Ile play the Eaſe-dropper,
To heare if any meane to ſhrinke from me.
Exeunt Richard and Ratcliffe.

Enter the Lords to Richmond ſitting in his Tent.

Lords. Good morrow Richmond.
Rich. Cry you mercy Lords, and watchfull Gentlemen
That you have tane a tardy ſluggard heere?
Lords. How have you ſlept my Lord?
Rich. The ſweeteſt ſleepe,
And faireſt boading Dreames,
That ever entred in a drowſie head,
Have I ſince your departure had my Lords.
Me thought their ſoules, whoſe bodies Richard murther'd
Came to my Tent, and cried on Victory:
I promiſe you my heart is very jocond,
In the remembrance of ſo faire a dreame,
How farre into the Morning is it Lords?
Lord. Vpon the ſtroke of foure.
Rich. Why then 'tis time to Arme, and give direction.
His Oration to his Souldiers.
More then I have ſaid, loving Countrymen,
The leyſure and inforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell upon: yet remember this,

God, and our good cauſe, fight upon our ſide,
The Prayers of holy Saints and wronged ſoules,
Like high rear'd Bulwarkes, ſtand before our Faces,
(Richard except) thoſe whom we fight againſt,
Had rather have us winne, then him they follow.
For, what is he they follow? Truly Gentlemen,
A bloudy Tyrant, and a Homicide:
One rais'd in blood, and one in blood eſtabliſh'd;
One that made meanes to come by what he hath,
And ſlaughter'd thoſe that were the meanes to help him:
A baſe foule Stone, made precious by the ſoyle
Of Englands Chaire, where he is falſely ſet:
One that hath ever beene Gods Enemy.
Then if you fight againſt Gods Enemy,
God will in juſtice ward you as his Souldiers.
If you doe ſweare to put a Tyrant downe,
You ſleepe in peace, the Tyrant being ſlaine:
If you doe fight againſt your Countries Foes,
Your Countries Fat ſhall pay your paines the hyre.
If you ſtoe fight in ſafegard of your wives,
Your wives ſhall welcome home the Conquerors.
If you doe free your Children from the Sword,
Your Childrens Children quits it in your Age.
Then in the name of God and all theſe rights,
Advance your Standards, draw your willing Swords.
For me, the ranſome of my bold attempt,
Shall be this cold Corpes on the earth's cold face.
But if I thrive, the gaine of my attempt,
The leaſt of you ſhall ſhare his part thereof.
Sound Drummes and Trumpet boldly, and cheerefully,
God, and Saint George, Richmond, and Victory.

Enter King Richard, Ratcliffe, and Catesby.

Kin. What ſaid Northumberland as touching Richmond?
Ratc. That he was never trained up in Armes.
King. He ſaid the truth: and what ſaid Surrey then?
Ratc. He ſmil'd and ſaid, the better for our purpoſe.
King. He was in the right, and ſo indeed it is.
Tell the clocke there. Clockes strikes.
Give me a Kalender: who ſaw the Sunne to day?
Ratc. Not I my Lord.
King. Then he diſdaines to ſhine: for by the Booke
He ſhould have brav'd the Eaſt an houre agoe,
A blacke day will it be to ſomebody. Ratcliffe.
Ratc. My Lord.
King. The Sun will not be ſeene to day,
The sky doth frowne, and lowre upon our Army.
I would theſe dewy teares were from the ground.
Not ſhine to day? Why, what is that to me
More then to Richmond? For the ſelfe-ſame Heaven
That frownes on me, lookes ſadly upon him.

Enter Norfolke.

Nor. Arme, arme, my Lord: the foe vaunts in the field.
King. Come, buſtle, buſtle. Capariſon my horſe.
Call up Lord Stanley, bid him bring his power,
I will leade forth my Souldiers to the plaine,
And thus my Battell ſhall be ordred.
My foreward ſhal be drawne in length,
Conſiſting equally of Horſe and Foot:
Our Archers ſhall be placed in the mid'ſt;
Iohn Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Earle of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of the Foot and horſe.
They thus directed, we will follow
In the maine Battell, whoſe puiſſance on either ſide
Shall be well-wingd with our cheifeſt Horſe:
This, and Saint George to boote.
What think'ſt thou Norfolke?
Nor. A good direction warlike Soveraigne,
This found I on my Tent this Morning.

Iockey of Norfolke, be not ſo bold,
For Dickon thy maiſter is bought and ſold.

King. A thing deviſed by the Enemy.
Goe Gentlemen, every man to his Charge,
Let not our babling Dreames affright our ſoules:
For conſcience is a word that Cowards uſe,
Deviſ'd at firſt to keepe the ſtrong in awe,
Our ſtrong armes be our Conſcience, Swords our Law.
March on, joyne bravely, let us too't pell mell,
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.
What ſhall I ſay more then I have inferr'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withall,
A ſort of Vagabonds, Raſcals, Run-awayes,
A ſcum of Brittaines, and baſe Lackey Pezants,
Whom their o're-cloyed Country vomits forth
To deſperate Adventures, and aſſur'd Deſtruction.
You ſleeping ſafe, they bring you to unreſt:
You having Lands, and bleſt with beauteous wives,
They would reſtraine the one, diſtaine the other.
And who doth leade them, but a paltry Fellow?
Long kept in Britaine at our Mothers coſt,
A Milke-ſop, one that never in his life
Felt ſo much cold, as over ſhooes in Snow:
Let's whip theſe ſtraglers o're the Seas againe,
Laſh hence theſe over-weening Ragges of France,
Theſe famiſh'd Beggers, weary of their lives,
Who (but for dreaming on this fond exploit)
For want of meanes (poore Rats) had hang'd themſelves.
If we be conquered, let men conquer us,
And not theſe baſtard Brittaines, whom our Fathers
Have in their owne Land beaten, bobb'd, and thump'd,
And on Record, left them the heires of ſhame.
Shall theſe enjoy our Lands? lye with our Wives?
Raviſh our daughters? Drum afarre off.
Hearke, I heare their Drumme,
Right Gentlemen of England, fight boldly yeomen,
Draw Archers, draw your Arrowes to the head,
Spurre your proud Horſes hard, and ride in blood,
Amaze the welkin with your broken ſtaves.

Enter a Meſſenger.

What ſayes Lord Stanley, will he bring his power?
Meſ. My Lord, he doth deny to come.
King. Off with his ſonne Georges head.
Nor. My Lord, the Enemy is paſt the Marſh:
After the battaile, let George Stanley dye.
King. A thouſand hearts are great within my boſome.
Advance our Standards, ſet upon our Foes,
Onr Ancient word of Courage, faire Saint George
Inſpire us with the ſpleene of fiery Dragons:
Vpon them, Victory ſits on our helpes.

Alarum, excurſions. Enter Catesby.

Cat. Reſcue my Lord of Norfolke,
Reſcue, Reſcue:
The King enacts more wonders then a man,
Daring an oppoſite to every danger:
His horſe is ſlaine, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death:
Reſcue faire Lord, or elſe the day is loſt.

Alarums.

Enter Richard.

Rich. A horſe, a horſe, my Kingdome for a horſe.
Cate. Withdraw my Lord, Ile helpe you to a horſe.
Rich. Slave, I have ſet my life upon a caſt,
And I will ſtand the hazard of the Dye:
I thinke there be ſixe Richmonds in the field,
Five have I ſlaine to day, in ſtead of him.
A horſe, a horſe, my Kingdome for a horſe.

Alarum. Enter Richard and Richmond, they fight, Richard is ſlaine.

Retreat, and Flouriſh. Enter Richmond, Derby bearing the Crowne, with divers other Lords.

Richm. God and your Armes
Be prais'd Victorious Friends;
The day is ours, the bloudy Dogge is dead.
Der. Couragious Richmond,
Well haſt thou acquit thee: Loe,
Heere theſe long uſurped Royalties,
From the dead Temples of this bloudy Wretch,
Have I pluck'd off, to grace thy Browes withall.
Weare it, and make much of it.
Richm. Great God of Heaven, ſay Amen to all.
But tell me, is yong George Stanley living?
Der. He is my Lord, and ſafe in Leiceſter Towne,
Whither (if you pleaſe) we may withdraw us.
Richm. What men of name are ſlaine on either ſide?
Der. Iohn Duke of Norfolke, Walter Lord Ferris,
Sir Robert Brokenbury, and Sir William Brandon.
Richm. Interre their Bodies, as become their Births,
Proclaime a pardon to the Souldiers fled,
That in ſubmiſſion will returne to us,
And then as we have tane the Sacrament,
We will unite the White Roſe, and the Red.
Smile Heaven upon this faire Conjunction,
That long have frown'd upon their Enmity:
What Traitor heares me, and ſayes not Amen?
England hath long beene mad, and ſcarr'd her ſelfe;
The brother blindly ſhed the Brothers blood;
The father, raſhly ſlaughtered his owne Sonne;
The Sonnes compell'd, beene Butcher to the Sire:
All this divided Yorke and Lancaſter,
Divided, in their dire Diviſion.
O now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,
The true Succeeders of each Royall houſe,
By Gods faire ordinance, conjoyne together:
And let thy Heires (God if thy will be ſo)
Enrich the time to come, with Smooth-fac'd Peace,
With ſmiling Plenty, and faire Proſperous dayes.
Abate the edge of Traitors, Gracious Lord,
That would reduce theſe bloody dayes againe,
And make poore England weepe in Streames of Blood;
Let them not live to taſte this Lands increaſe,
That would with Treaſon, wound this faire Lands peace
Now Civill wounds are ſtopp'd, Peace lives agen;
That ſhe may long live here, God ſay, Amen. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Famous Hiſtory of the Life of King HENRY the Eight.

THE PROLOGVE.

I Come no more to make you laugh; Things now,
That beare a Weighty, and a Serious Brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of State and Woe:
Such Noble Scænes, as draw the Eye to flow
We now preſent. Thoſe that can Pitty, heere
May (if they thinke it well) let fall a Teare,
The Subject will deſerve it. Such as give
Their Money out of hope they may beleeve,
May heere ſind Truth too. Thoſe that come to ſee
Onely a ſhow or two, and ſo agree,
The Play may paſſe: If they be still, and willing,
Ile undertake may ſee away their ſhilling
Richly in two ſhort houres. Onely they
That come to heare a Merry, Bawdy Play,
A noyſe of Targets: Or to ſee a Fellow
In a long Motley Coate, garded with Yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. For gentle Hearers, know
To ranke our choſen Truth with ſuch a ſhow
As Foole, and Fight is, beſide forfeyting
Our owne Braines, and the Opinion that we bring
To make that onely true, we now intend,
Will leave us never an underſtanding Friend.
Therefore, for Goodneſſe ſake, and as you are knowne
The First and Happieſt Hearers of the Towne,
Be ſad, as we would make ye. Thinke ye ſee
The very Perſons of our Noble Story,
As they were Living: Thinke you ſee them Great,
And follow'd with the generall throng, and ſweat
Of thouſand Friends: then, in a moment, ſee
How ſoone this Mightineſſe, meets Miſery:
And if you can be merry then, Ile ſay,
A Man may weepe upon his Wedding day.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the Duke of Norfolke at one doore. At the other, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Aburgavenny.

Buckingham.
GOod morrow, and well met. How have yee
Since laſt we ſaw in France? (done
Norf. I thanke your Grace:
Heathfull, and ever ſince a freſh Admirer
Of what I ſaw there.
Buck. An untimely Ague
Staid me a Priſoner in my Chamber, when
Thoſe Sunnes of Glory, thoſe two Lights of Men
Met in the vale of Arde.
Nor. 'Twixt Guynes and Arde,
I was then preſent, ſaw them ſalute on Horſebacke,
Beheld them when they lighted, how they clung
In their Embracement, as they grew together,
Which had they,
What foure Thron'd ones cold have weigh'd
Such a compounded one?
Buck. All the whole time
I was my Chambers Priſoner.
Nor. Then you loſt
The view of earthly glory: Men might ſay
Till this time Pompe was ſingle, but now married
To one above it ſelfe. Each following day
Became the next dayes maſter, till the laſt
Made former Wonders, it's. To day the French,
All Clinquant all in Gold, like Heathens Gods
Shone downe the Engliſh; and to morrow, they Made Britaine, India: Every man that ſtood,
Shew'd like a Mine. Their Dwarfiſh Pages were
As Cherubins, all gilt: the Madams too,
Not us'd to toyle, did almoſt ſweat to beare
The Pride upon them, that their very labour
Was to them, as a Painting. Now this Maske
Was cry'de incompareable; and th'enſuing night
Made it a foole, and beggar. The two Kings
Equall in luſtre, were now beſt, now worſt
As preſence did preſent them: him in eye,
Still him in praiſe, and being preſent both,
'Twas ſaid they ſaw but one, and no Diſcerner
Durſt wagge his Tongue in cenſure, when theſe Sunnes
(For ſo they phraſe 'em) by their Heralds challeng'd
The Noble ſpirits to Armes, they did performe

Beyond thoughts Compaſſe, that former fabulous Story
Being now ſeene, poſſible enough, got credit
That Bevis was beleev'd.
Buc. Oh you goe farre.
Nor. As I beloug to worſhip, and affect
In honor, honeſty, the tract of ev'ry thing,
Would by a good Diſcourſer loſe ſome life,
Which Actions ſelfe, was tongue to.
Buc. All was Royall,
To the diſpoſing of it nought rebell'd,
Order gave each thing view. The Office did
Diſtinctly his full Function: who did guide,
I meane who ſet the Body, and the Limbes
Of this great Sport together?
Nor. As you gueſſe:
Once certes, that promiſes no Element
In ſuch a buſineſſe.
Buc. I pray you who, my Lord?
Nor. Al this was ordred by the good Diſcretion
Of the right Reverend Cardinall of Yorke.
Buc. The divell ſpeed him: No mans Pye is freed
From his Ambitious finger. What had he
To doe in theſe fierce Vanities? I wonder,
That ſuch a Keech can with his very bulke
Take up the Rayes o'th'beneficiall Sun,
And keepe it from the Earth.
Nor. Surely Sir,
There's in him ſtuffe, that put's him to theſe ends:
For being not propt by Aunceſtry, whoſe grace
Chalkes Succeſſors their way; nor call'd upon
For high feats done to'th'Crowne; neither Allied
To eminent Aſſiſtants; but Spider-like
Out of his ſelfe-drawing Web. O! gives us note,
The force of his owne merit makes his way
A guift that heaven gives for him, which buyes
A place next to the King.
Abur. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him: let ſome Graver eye
Pierce into that, but I can ſee his Pride
Peepe through each part of him: whence ha's he that,
If not from Hell? the divell is a Niggard,
Or ha's given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himſelfe.
Buc. Why the divell,
Vpon this French going out, tooke he upon him
(Without the privity o'th'King) t'appoint
Who ſhould attend on him? He makes up the File
Of all the Gentry; for the moſt part ſuch
To whom as grear a Charge, as little Honor
He meant to lay upon: and his owne Letter
The Honourable Boord of Councell, out
Muſt fetch him in, he Papers.
Abur. I doe know
Kinſmen of mine, three at the leaſt, that have
By this, ſo ſicken'd their Eſtates, that never
They ſhall abound as formerly.
Buc. O many
Have broke their backes with laying Mannors on 'em
For this great Iourney. What did this vanity
But miniſter communication of
A moſt poore iſſue.
Nor. Greevingly I thinke,
The Peace betweene the French and us, not valewes
The Coſt that did conclude it.
Buc. Every man,
After the hideous ſtorme that follow'd, was
A thing inſpir'd, and not conſulting, broke
Into a generall Propheſie; That this Tempeſt
Daſhing the Garment of this Peace, aboaded
The ſodaine breach on't.
Nor. Which is budded out,
For France hath flaw'd the League, and hath attach'd
Our Merchants goods at Burdeaux.
Abur. Is it therefore
Th'Ambaſſador is ſilenc'd?
Nor. Marry is't.
Abur. A proper Title of a Peace, and purchas'd
At a ſuperfluous rate.
Buc. Why all this Buſineſſe
Our Reverend Cardinall carried.
Nor. Like it your Grace,
The State takes notice of the private difference
Betwixt you, and the Cardinall. I adviſe you
(And take it from a heart, that wiſhes towards you Honor, and plenteous ſafety) that you reade
The Cardinals Malice, and his Potency
Together; To conſider further, that
What his high Hatred would effect, wants not
A Miniſter in his Power. You know his Nature,
That he's Revengefull; and I know, his Sword
Hath a ſharpe edge: It's long, and't may be ſaid
It reaches farre, and where 'twill not extend,
Thither he darts it. Boſome up my counſell,
You'll find it wholeſome. Loe, where comes that Rocke
That I adviſe your ſhunning.

Enter Cardinall Wolſey, the Purſe borne before him, certaine of the Guard, and two Secretaries with Papers: The Cardinall in his paſſage, fixeth his eye on Buckingham, and Buckingham on him, both full of diſdaine.

Car. The Duke of Buckinghams Surveyor? Ha?
Where's his Examination?
Secr. Here ſo pleaſe you.
Car. Is he in perſon, ready?
Secr. I, pleaſe your Grace.
Car. Well, we ſhall then know more, and Buckingha
Shall leſſen this bigge looke.
Exeunt Cardinall and his Traine.
Buc. This Butchers Curre is venom'd-mouth'd, and I
Have not the power to muzzle him, therefore beſt
Not wake him in his ſlumber. A Beggers booke,
Out-worths a Nobles blood.
Nor. What are you chaff'd?
Aske God for Temp'rance, that's th'appliance onely
Which your diſeaſe requires.
Buc. I reade in's lookes
Matter againſt me, and his eye revil'd
Me as his abject object, at this inſtant
He bores me with ſome tricke; He's gone to'th'King:
Ile follow, and out-ſtare him.
Nor. Stay my Lord,
And let your Reaſon with your Choller queſtion
What 'tis you goe about: to climbe ſteepe hilles
Requires ſlow pace at firſt. Anger is like
A full hot Horſe, who being allow'd his way
Selfe-mettle tyres him: Not a man in England
Can adviſe me like you: Be to your ſelfe,
As you would to your Friend.
Buc. Ile to the King,
And from a mouth of Honor, quite cry downe

This Ipſwich fellowes inſolence; or proclaime,
There's difference in no perſons.
Norf. Be adviſ'd;
Heat not a Furnace for your foe ſo hot
That it doe ſindge your ſelfe. We may out-runne
By violent ſwiftneſſe that which we run at;
And loſe by over-running: know you not,
The fire that mounts the liquor til't run ore,
In ſeeming to augment it, waſts it: be adviſ'd;
I ſay againe, there is no Engliſh ſoule
More ſtronger to direct you then your ſelfe:
If with the ſap of reaſon you would quench,
Or but allay the fire of paſſion.
Buc. Sir,
I am thankfull to you, and Ile goe along
By your preſcription: but this top-proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From ſincere motions, by intelligence,
And proofes as cleere as Founts in Iuly, when
We ſee each graine of gravell; I doe know
To be corrupt and treaſonous.
Norf. Say not treaſonous.
Buc. To th'King Ile ſay't, and make my vouch as ſtrong
As ſhore of Rocke: attend. This holy Foxe,
Or Wolfe, or both (for he is equall rav'nous
As he is ſubtile, and as prone to miſchiefe,
As able to perform't) his minde, and place
Infecting one another, yea reciprocally,
Only to ſhew his pompe, as well in France,
As here at home, ſuggeſts the King our Maſter
To this laſt coſtly Treaty: Th'enterview,
That ſwallowed ſo much treaſure, and like a glaſſe
Did breake ith'wrenching.
Norf. Faith, and ſo it did.
Buc. Pray give me favour Sir: This cunning Cardinal
The Articles o'th'Combination drew
As himſelfe pleas'd; and they were ratified
As he cride thus let be, to as much end,
As give a Crutch to th'dead. But our Count-Cardinall
Has done this, and 'tis well: for worthy Wolſey
(Who cannot erre) he did it. Now this followes,
(Which as I take it, is a kind of Puppy
To th'old dam Treaſon) Charles the Emperour,
Vnder pretence to ſee the Queene his Aunt,
(For twas indeed his colour, but he came
To whiſper Wolſey) here makes viſitation,
His feares were that the Interview betwixt
England and France, might through their amity
Breed him ſome prejudice; for from this League,
Peep'd harmes that menac'd him. He Privily
Deales with our Cardinall, and as I troa
Which I doe well; for I am ſure the Emperour
Paid ere he promis'd, whereby his Suit was granted
Ere it was ask'd. But when the way was made
And pav'd with gold: the Emperor thus deſir'd,
That he would pleaſe to alter the Kings courſe,
And breake the foreſaid peace. Let the King know
(As ſoone he ſhall by me) that thus the Cardinall
Does buy and ſell his honour as he pleaſes,
And for his owne advantage.
Nor. I am ſorry
To heare this of him; and could wiſh he were
Somthing miſtaken in't.
Buck. No, not a ſillable:
I doe pronounce him in that very ſhape
He ſhall appeare in proofe.

Enter Brandon, a Sergeant at Armes before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Brandon. Your Office Sergeant: execute it.
Sergeant. Sir,
My Lord the Duke of Buckingham, and Earle
Of Hertford, Stafford and Northumpton, I
Arreſt thee of high Treaſon, in the name
Of our moſt Soveraigne King.
Buc. Loe you my Lord,
The net has falne upon me, I ſhall periſh
Vnder device, and practiſe.
Bran. I am ſorry,
To ſee you tane from liberty, to looke on
The buſines preſent. 'Tis his highneſſe pleaſure
You ſhall to th'Tower.
Buck. It will helpe me nothing
To plead mine Innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit'ſt part, black. The will of Heav'n
Be done iu this and all things: I obey.
O my Lord Aburgany: Fare you well.
Bran. Nay, he muſt beare you company. The King
Is pleas'd you ſhall to th'Tower, till you know,
How he determines further.
Abur. As the Duke ſaid,
The will of heaven be done, and the Kings pleaſure
By me obey'd.
Bran. Here is a warrant from
The King, t'attach Lord Mountacute, and the bodies
Of the Dukes Confeſſor, Iohn de la Car,
One Gilbert Pecke, his Councellour.
Buck. So, ſo;
Theſe are the limbes o'th'Plot. no more I hope.
Bra. A Monke o'th'Chartreux.
Buck. O Michaell Hopkins.
Bra. He.
Buck. My Surveyor is falſe; The ore-great Cardinall
Hath ſhew'd him gold; my life is ſpand already:
I am the ſhadow of poore Buckingham,
Whoſe Figure even this inſtant Clowd puts on,
By Darkning my cleere Sunne. My Lords farewell. Exe.

Scæna Secunda.

Cornets. Enter King Henry, leaning on the Cardinalls ſhoulder: the Nobles, and Sir Thomas Lovell: the Cardinall places himſelfe under the Kings feete on his right ſide.

King. My life it ſelfe, and the beſt heart of it,
Thankes you for this great care: I ſtood i'th'levell
Of a full-charg'd confederacy, and give thankes
To you that choak'd it. Let be cal'd before us
That Gentleman of Buckinghams, in perſon,
Ile heare him his confeſſions juſtifie,
And point by point the Treaſons his Maiſter,
He ſhall againe relate.

A noyſe with crying roome for the Queene, uſher'd by the Duke of Norfolke. Enter the Queene, Norfolke and Suffolke: ſhe kneels. King riſeth from his State, takes her up, kiſſes and placeth her by him.

Quee. Nay, we muſt longer kneele; I am a Suitor.
King. Ariſe, and take place by us; halfe your Suit
Never name to us; you have halfe our power:

he

The other moity ere you aske is given,
Repeat your will, and take it.
Quee. Thanke your Majeſty
That you would love your ſelfe, and in that love
Not unconſidered leave your honor, nor
The dignity of your Office ; is the point
Of my Petition.
King. Lady mine proceed.
Quee. I am ſolicited not by a few,
And thoſe of true condition ; That your Subjects
Are in great grievance ; There have beene Commiſſions
Sent downe among 'em, which hath flaw'd the heart
Of all their Loyalties ; wherein, although
My good Lord Cardinall, they vent reproches
Moſt bitterly on you, as putter on
Of theſe exactions : yet the King, our Maſter (not
Whoſe Honor heaven ſhield from ſoile ; even he eſcapes
Language unmannerly ; yea, ſuch which breakes
The ſides of loyalty, and almoſt appeares
In lowd Rebellion.
Norf. Not almoſt appeares,
It doth appeare ; for, upon theſe Taxations,
The Clothiers all not able to maintaine
The many to them longing, have put off
The Spinſters, Carders, Fullers, Weavers, who
Vnfit for other life, compeld by hunger
And lacke of other meanes, in deſperate manner
Daring th'event to th'teeth, are all in uprore,
And danger ſerves among them.
King. Taxation ?
Wherein ? and what Taxation ? My Lord Cardinall,
You that are blam'd for it alike with us,
Know you of this Taxation ?
Card. Pleaſe you Sir,
I know but of a ſingle part in ought
Pertaines to th'State ; and front but in that file
Where othets tell ſteps with me.
Que. No, my Lord ?
You know no more then others ? But you frame
Things that are knowne alike, which are not wholſome
To thoſe which would not know them, and yet muſt
Perforce be their acquaintance. Theſe exactions
(Whereof my Soveraigne would have note) they are
Moſt peſtilent to th'hearing, and to beare 'em,
The Backe is Sacrifice to th'load ; They ſay
They are deviſ'd by you, or elſe you ſuffer
Too hard an exclamation.
King. Still Exaction :
The nature of it, in what kind let's know,
Is this Exaction ?
Que. I am much too venturous
In tempting of your patience, but am boldned
Vnder your promiſ'd pardon. The ſubjects griefe
Comes through Commiſſions, which compels from each
The ſixt part of his Subſtance, to be levied
Without delay ; and the pretence for this
Is nam'd, your warres in France : this makes bold mouths
Tongues ſpit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze
Allegeance in them ; their curſes now
Live where their prayers did : and it's come to paſſe,
This tractable obedience is a Slave
To each incenſed Will : I would your Highneſſe
Would give it quicke conſideration ; for
There is no primer baſeneſſe.
King. By my life,
This is againſt our pleaſure.
Card. And for me,
I have no further gone in this, then by
A ſingle voyce, and that not paſt me, but
By learned approbation of the Judges : if I am
Traduc'd by ignorant Tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor perſon, yet will be
The Chronicles of my doing : Let me ſay,
'Tis but the fate of Place, and the rough Brake
That Vertue muſt goe through : we muſt not ſtint
Our neceſſary actions, in the feare
To cope malicious Cenſurers, which ever,
As rau'nous Fiſhes doe a Veſſell follow
That is new trim'd ; but benefit no further
Then vainly longing. What we oft doe beſt,
By ſicke interpreters (once weake ones) is
Not ours, or not allow'd ; what worſt, as oft
Hitting a groſſer quality, is cride up
For our beſt Act : if we ſhall ſtand ſtill,
In feare our motion will be mock'd, or carp'd at,
We ſhould take roote here, where we ſit ;
Or ſit State Statues onely.
King. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themſelves from feare :
Things done without example, in their iſſue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a Preſident
Of this Commiſſion ? I beleeve, not any.
We muſt not rend our Subjects from our Lawes,
And ſticke them in our Will. Sixt part of each ?
A trembling Contribution ; why we take
From every Tree, lop, barke, and part o'th'Timber :
And though we leave it with a roote thus hackt,
The Ayre will drinke the Sap. To every County
Where this is queſtion'd, ſend our Letters, with Free pardon to each man that has deny'de
The force of this Commiſſion : pray looke too't ;
I put it to your care.
Card. A word with you.
Let there be Letters writ to every Shire,
Of the Kings grace and pardon : the greeved Commo
Hardly conceive of me. Let it be nois'd,
That through our Interceſſion, this Rovokement
And pardon comes : I ſhall anon adviſe you
Further in the proceeding. Exit S

Enter Surveyor.

Quee. I am ſorry, that the Duke of Buckingham
Is run in your diſpleaſure.
King. It grieves many :
The Gentleman is Learn'd, and a moſt rare Speaker,
To Nature none more bound, his trayning ſuch,
That he may furniſh and inſtruct great Teachers,
And never ſeeke for ayde out of himſelfe : yet ſee,
When theſe ſo Noble benefits ſhall prove
Not well diſpos'd, the mind growing once corrupt,
They turne to vicious formes, ten times more vgly
Then ever they were faire. This man ſo compleat,
Who was enrold 'mongſt wonders ; and when we
Almoſt with raviſh'd liſtning, could not find
His houre of ſpeech, a minute : He, (my Lady)
Hath into monſtrous habits put the Graces
That once were his, and is become as blacke,
As if beſmear'd in hell. Sit by Vs, you ſhall heare
(This was his Gentleman in truſt) of him
Things to ſtrike Honour ſad. Bid him recount
The fote-recited practiſes, whereof
We cannot feele too little, heare too much.

Ca

Card. Stand forth,& with bold ſpirit relate what you
Moſt like a careful Subject have collected
Out of the Duke of Buckingham.
Kin. Speake freely.
Sur. Firſt, it was uſuall with him; every day
It would infect his Speech: That if the King
Should without iſſue dye; hee'l carry it ſo
To make the Scepter his. Theſe very words
I've heard him utter to his Sonne in Law,
Lord Aburgany,to whom by oth he menac'd
Revenge upon the Cardinall.
Card. Pleaſe your Highneſſe,note
This dangerous conception in this point,
Not friended by his wiſh to your High perſon;
His will is moſt malignant, and it ſtretches
Beyond you to your friends.
Queen. My learned Lord Cardinall,
Deliver all with Charity.
Kin. Speake on;
How grounded he his Title to the Crowne
Vpon our faile; to this poynt haſt thou heard him,
At any time ſpeake ought?
Sur. He was brought to this,
By a vaine Propheſie of Nicholas Henton.
Kin. What was that Henton?
Sur. Sir, a Chartreux Fryer,
His Confeſſor, who fed him every minute
With words of Soveraignty.
Kin. How know'ſt thou this?
Sur. Not long before your Highneſſe ſped to France,
The Duke being at the Roſe, within the Pariſh
Saint Laurence Poultney, did of me demand
What was the ſpeech among the Londoners,
Concerning the French Iourney. I replide,
Men feare the French would prove perfidious
To the Kings danger: preſently, the Duke
Said, 'twas the feare indeed, and that he doubted
'Twould prove the verity of certaine words
Spoke by a holy Monke, that oft, ſayes he,
Hath ſent to me, wiſhing me to permit
Iohn de la Car, my Chaplaine, a choyce howre
To heare from him a matter of ſome moment:
Whom after under the Commiſſions Seale,
He ſollemnly had ſworne, that what he ſpoke
My Chaplaine to no Creature living, but
To me, ſhould utter, with demure Confidence,
This pauſingly enſu'de; neither the King nor's Heyres
(Tell you the Duke) ſhall proſper, bid him ſtrive
To the love o'th' Commonalty, the Duke
Shall governe England.
Queen. If I know you well,
You were the Dukes Surveyor, and loſt your Office
On the complaint o'th' Tenants; take good heed
You charge not in your ſpleene a Noble perſon,
And ſpoyle your Noble Soule; I ſay, take heed;
Yes, heartily beſeech you.
Kin. Let him on: Goe forward.
Sur. On my Soule, Ile ſpeake but truth.
I told my Lord the Duke, by th' Divels illuſions
The Monke might be deceiv'd, and that 'twas dangerous
For this to ruminate on this ſo farre, untill
It forg'd him ſome deſigne, which being beleev'd
It was much like to doe: He anſwer'd, Tuſh,
It can doe me no damage; adding further,
That had the King in his laſt Sickneſſe faild,
The Cardinals and Sir Thomas Lovels heads
Should have gone off.
Kin. Ha? What, ſo rancke? Ah, ha,
There's miſchiefe in this man; canſt thou ſay further?
Sir. I can my Liedge.
Kin. Proceed.
Sur. Being at Greenwich,
After your Highneſſe had reprov'd the Duke
About Sir William Blumer. (vant,
Kin. I remember of ſuch a time, being my ſworn ſer-
The Duke retein'd him his. But on: what hence?
Sur. If (quoth he) I for this had beene committed,
As to the Tower, I thought; I would have plaid
The Part my Father meant to act upon
Th' Vſurper Richard, who being at Salisbury,
Made ſuit to come in's preſence; which if granted,
(As he made ſemblance of his duty) would
Have put his knife into him.
Kin. A Gyant Traytor,
Card. Now Madam, may his Highneſſe live in freedome,
And this man out of Priſon.
Queen. God mend all. (ſay'ſt?
Kin. Ther's ſomthing more would out of thee; what
Sur. After the Duke his Father, with the knife
He ſtretch'd him, and with one hand on his dagger,
Another ſpread on's breaſt, mounting his eyes,
He did diſcharge a horrible Oath, whoſe tenor
Was, were he evill us'd, he would outgoe
His Father, by as much as a performance
Do's an irreſolute purpoſe.
Kin. There's his period,
To ſheath his knife in us: he is attach'd,
Call him to preſent tryall: if he may
Finde mercy in the Law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not ſeek't of us: By day and night
Hee's Traytor to th' height. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter L. Chamberlaine and L. Sandys.

L.Ch. Is't poſſible the ſpels of France ſhould juggle
Men into ſuch ſtrange Myſteries?
L.San. New cuſtomes,
Though they be never ſo ridiculous,
(Nay let 'em be unmanly) yet are follow'd.
L.Ch. As farre as I ſee, all the good our Engliſh
Have got by the late Voyage, is but meerely
A fit or two o'th' face, (but they are ſhrewd ones)
For when they hold 'em, you would ſweare directly
Their very noſes had been Councellours
To Pepin or Clotharius, they keepe State ſo.
L.San. They have all new legs,
And lame ones; one would take it,
That never ſee 'em pace before, the Spaven
A Spring-halt reign'd among 'em.
L.Ch. Death my Lord,
Their cloathes are after ſuch a Pagan cut too't,
That ſure th' have worne out Chriſtendome: how now?
What newes, Sir Thomas Lovell?

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell.

Lovell. Faith my Lord,
I heare of none but the new Proclamation,
That's clapt upon the Court Gate.

L.Cham. What is't for?
Lou. The reformation of our travel'd Gallants,
That fill the Court with quarrels, talke, and Taylors.
L.Cham. I'm glad 'tis there;
Now I would pray our Monſieurs
To thinke an Engliſh Courtier may be wiſe,
And never ſee the Louure.
Lou. They muſt eyther
(For ſo run the Conditions) leave thoſe remnants
Of Foole and Feather, that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance
Pertaining thereunto; as Fights and Fire-workes,
Abuſing better men then they can be
Out of a forreigne wiſedome, renouncing cleane
The faith they have in Tennis and tall Stockings,
Short bliſtred Breeches and thoſe types of Travell;
And underſtand againe like honeſt men,
Or pack to their old Playfellowes; there I take it,
They may Cum Privilegio, weare away
The Lag end of their lewdneſſe, and be laugh'd at.
L.San. 'Tis time to give him Phyſicke, their diſeaſes
Are growne ſo catching.
L.Cham. What a loſſe our Ladies
Will have of theſe trim vanities?
Lovell. I marry,
There will be woe indeed Lords, the ſlye whorſons
Have got a ſpeeding tricke to lay downe Ladies.
A French Song, and a Fiddle, ha's no Fellow.
L.San. The Divell fiddle 'em.
I am glad they are going,
For ſure there's no converting of 'em: now
An honeſt Country Lord as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plaine ſong,
And have an houre of hearing, and by'r Lady
Held currant Muſicke too.
L.Cham. Well ſaid Lord Sands,
Your Colts tooth is not caſt yet?
L.San. No my Lord,
Nor ſhall not while I have a ſtumpe.
L.Cham. Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a going?
Lou. To the Cardinals;
Your Lordſhip is a gueſt too.
L.Cham. O, 'tis true;
This night he makes a Supper and a great one,
To many Lords and Ladies; there will be
The Beauty of this Kingdome Ile aſſure you.
Lou. That Churchman
Beares a bounteous minde indeed,
A hand as fruitfull as the Land that feeds us,
His dewes fall every where.
L.Cham. No doubt hee's Noble;
He had a blacke mouth that ſaid other of him.
L.San. He may my Lord,
Ha's wherewithall in him;
Sparing would ſhew a worſe ſinne, then ill Doctrine.
Men of his way, ſhould be moſt liberall,
They are ſet heere for examples.
L.Cham. True they are ſo;
But few now give ſo great ones:
My Barge ſtayes;
Your Lordſhip ſhall along: Come, good Sir Thomas,
We ſhall be late elſe, which I would not be,
For I was ſpoke to, with Sir Henry Guilford
This night to be Comptrollers.
L.San. I am your Lordſhips. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Hoboies. A ſmall Table under a State for the Cardinall, a longer Table for the Gueſts. Then Enter Anne Bullen, and divers other Ladies, & Gentlemen, as Gueſts at one Doore; at another Doore enter Sir Henry Guilford.

S.Hen.Guilf. Ladyes,
A generall welcome from his Grace
Salutes ye all; This Night he dedicates
To faire content, and you: None heere he hopes
In all this Noble Bevy, has brought with her
One care abroad: he would have all as merry:
As firſt, good Company, good wine, good welcome,
Can make good people.

Enter L. Chamberlaine, L. Sands, and Lovell.

O my Lord, y'are tardy;
The very thought of this faire Company,
Clapt wings to me.
Cham. You are young Sir Harry Guilford.
San. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the Cardinall
But halfe my Lay-thoughts in him, ſome of theſe
Should finde a running Banket, ere they reſted,
I thinke would better pleaſe 'em: by my life,
They are a ſweet ſociety of faire ones.
Lov. O that your Lordſhip were but now Confeſſor,
To one or two of theſe.
San. I would I were,
They ſhould find eaſie penance,
Lov. Faith how eaſie?
San. As eaſie as a downe Bed would afford it.
Cham. Sweet Ladies will it pleaſe you ſit; Sir Harry
Place you that ſide, Ile take the charge of this:
His Grace is entring. Nay, you muſt not freeze,
Two women plac'd together, makes cold weather:
My Lord Sands, you are one will keepe 'em waking:
Pray ſit betweene theſe Ladies.
San. By my faith,
And thanke your Lordſhip: by your Leave ſweet Ladies
If I chance to talke a little wilde, forgive me:
I had it from my Father.
An.Bul. Was he mad Sir?
San. O very mad, exceeding mad, in love too;
But he would bite none, juſt as I doe now,
He would Kiſſe you Twenty with a breath.
Cham. Well ſaid my Lord:
So now y'are fairely ſeated: Gentlemen,
The pennance lyes on you; if theſe faire Ladies
Paſſe away frowning.
San. For my little Cure,
Let me alone.

Hoboyes. Enter Cardinall Wolſey, and takes his State.

Card. Y'are welcome my faire Gueſts; that noble Lady
Or Gentleman that is not freely merry
Is not my Fiend. This to confirme my welcome,
And to you all good health.
San. Your Grace is Noble,
Let me have ſuch a Bowle may hold my thankes,
And ſave me ſo much talking,
Card. My Lord Sands,

I am beholding to you: cheere your neighbour:
Ladies you are not merry; Gentlemen,
Whoſe fault is this?
San. The red wine firſt muſt riſe
In their faire cheekes my Lord, then we ſhall have 'em,
Talke us to ſilence.
An.Bu. You are a merry Gamſter
My Lord Sands.
San. Yes, if I make my play:
Heer's to your Ladiſhip, and pledge it Madam:
For 'tis to ſuch a thing.
An.B. You cannot ſhew me.

Drum and Trumpet, Chambers diſchargd.

San. I told your Grace, they would talke anon.
Card. What's that?
Cham. Looke out there, ſome of ye.
Card. What warlike voyce.
And to what end is this? Nay, Ladies, feare not;
By all the lawes of Warre y'are priviledg'd.

Enter a Servant.

Cham. How now, what is't?
Serv. A noble troupe of Strangers,
For ſo they ſeeme; th' have left their Barge and landed,
And hither make, as great Embaſſadors
From forraigne Princes.
Card. Good Lord Chamberlaine,
Go, give 'em welcome; you can ſpeake the French tongue
And pray receive 'em Nobly, and conduct 'em
Into our preſence, where this heaven of beauty
Shall ſhine at full upon them. Some attend him.

All riſe, and Tables remov'd.

You have now a broken Banket, but wee'l mend it.
A good diſgeſtion to you all; and once more
I ſhowre a welcome on ye: welcome all.

Hoboyes. Enter King and others as Maskers, habited like Shepheards, uſher'd by the Lord Chamberlaine. They paſſe directly before the Cardinall, and gracefully ſalute him.

A noble Company: what are their pleaſures?
Cham. Becauſe they ſpeak no Engliſh, thus they praid
To tell your Grace: That having heard by fame
Of this ſo Noble and ſo faire aſſembly,
This night to meet heere, they could doe no leſſe,
(Out of the great reſpect they beare to beauty)
But leave their Flockes, and under your faire conduct
Crave leave to view theſe Ladies, and entreat
An houre of Revels with 'em.
Card. Say, Lord Chamberlaine,
They have done my poore houſe grace:
For which I pay 'em a thouſand thankes,
And pray 'em take their pleaſures.

Chooſe Ladies, King and Anne Bullen.

King. The faireſt hand I ever touch'd: O Beauty,
Till now I never knew thee.

Muſicke, Dance.

Card. My Lord.
Cham. Your Grace.
Card. Pray tell 'em thus much from me:
There ſhould be one amongſt 'em by his perſon
More worthy this place then my ſelfe, to whom
(If I but knew him) with my love and duty
I would ſurrender it. Whiſper.
Cham. I will my Lord.
Card. What ſay they?
Cham. Such a one, they all confeſſe
There is indeed, which they would have your Grace
Find out, and he will take it.
Card. Let me ſee then,
By all your good leaves Gentlemen; heere Ile make
My royall choyce.
Kin. Ye have found him Cardinall,
You hold a faire Aſſembly; you doe well Lord:
You are a Churchman, or Ile tell you Cardinall,
I ſhould judge now unhappily.
Card. I am glad
Your Grace is growne ſo pleaſant.
Kin. My Lord Chamberlaine, prethee come hither, what faire Ladie's that?
Cham. An't pleaſe your Grace,
Sir Thomas Bullens Daughter, the Viſcount Rochford,
One of her Higheſſe women.
Kin. By Heaven ſhe is a dainty one. Sweet heart,
I were unmannerly to take you out,
And not to kiſſe you. A health Gentlemen,
Let it goe round.
Card. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the Banket ready
I'th' Privy Chamber?
Lov. Yes, my Lord.
Card. Your Grace
I feare, with dancing is a little heated.
Kin. I feare too much.
Card. There's freſher ayre my Lord,
In the next Chamber.
Kin. Lead in your Ladies ev'ry one: Sweet Partner,
I muſt not yet forſake you: Let's be merry,
Good my Lord Cardinall: I have halfe a dozen healths,
To drinke to theſe faire Ladies, and a meaſure
To lead 'em once againe, and then let's dreame
Who's beſt in favour. Let the Muſicke knock it.

Exeunt with Trumpets.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen at ſeverall Doores.

1. Whither away ſo faſt?
2. O, God ſave ye:
Ev'n to the Hall, to heare what ſhall become
Of the great Duke of Buckingham.
1. Ile ſave you
That labour Sir. All's now done but the Ceremony
Of bringing backe the Priſoner.
2. Were you there?
1. Yes indeed was I.
2. Pray ſpeake what ha's happen'd.
1. You may gueſſe quickly what.
2. Is he found guilty?
1. Yes truely is he,
And condemn'd upon't.
2. I am ſorry fort.
1. So are a number more.
2. But pray how paſt it?
1. Ile tell you in a little. The great Duke
Came to the Bar; where, to his accuſations
He pleaded ſtill not guilty, and alleadged
Many ſharpe reaſons to defeat the Law.
The Kings Atturney on the contrary,
Vrg'd on the Examinations, proofes, confeſſions

Of divers witneſſes, which the Duke deſir'd
To him brought viva voce to his face;
At which appear'd againſt him, his Surveyor,
Sir Gilbert Pecke his Chancellour, and Iohn Car,
Confeſſor to him, with that Divell Monke,
Hopkins, that made this miſchiefe.
2. That was he
That fed him with his prophecies.
1. The ſame,
All theſe accus'd him ſtrongly which he faine
Would have flung from him; but indeed he could not;
And ſo his Peeres upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high Treaſon. Much
He ſpoke, and learnedly for life: But all
Was either pittied in him, or forgotten.
2. After all this, how did he beare himſelfe?
1. When he was brought agen to th' Bar, to heare
His Knell rung out, his Iudgement, he was ſtir'd
With ſuch an Agony, he ſweat extreamly,
And ſomething ſpoke in choller, ill, and haſty:
But he fell to himſelfe againe, and ſweetly,
In all the reſt ſhew'd a moſt Noble patience.
2. I doe not thinke he feares death.
1. Sure he does not,
He never was ſo womaniſh, the cauſe
He may a little grieve at.
2. Certainly,
The Cardinall is the end of this.
1. Tis likely,
By all conjectures: Firſt Kildares Attendure;
Then Deputy of Ireland, who remov'd,
Earle Surrey was ſent thither, and in haſt too,
Leaſt he ſhould helpe his Father.
2. That tricke of State
Was a deepe envious one.
1. At his returne,
No doubt he will requite it; this is noted
(And generally) who ever the King favours,
The Cardinall inſtantly will finde imployment,
And farre enough from Court too.
2. All the Commons
Hate him perniciouſly, and o'my Conſcience
Wiſh him ten faddom deepe: This Duke as much
They love and doate on: call him bounteous Buckingham,
The Mirror of all courteſie.

Enter Buckingham from his Arraignment. Tipſtaves before him, the Axe with the edge towards him, Halberds on each ſide, accompanied with Sir Thomas Lovell; Sir Nicholas Vaux, Walter Sands, and common people, &c.

1. Stay there Sir,
And ſee the noble ruin'd man you ſpeake of.
2. Let's ſtand cloſe and behold him.
Buck. All good people,
You that thus have come to pitty me;
Heare what I ſay, and then goe home and loſe me.
I have this day receiu'd a Traitors judgement,
And by that name muſt dye; yet Heaven beare witneſſe,
And if I have a Conſcience, let it ſinke me,
Even as the Axe falls, if I be not faithfull.
The Law I beare no mallice for my death,
T'has done upon the premiſes, but juſtice:
But thoſe that ſought it, I could wiſh more Chriſtians:
(Be what they will) I heartily forgive 'em;
Yet let 'em looke they glorie not in miſchiefe;
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then, my guiltleſſe blood muſt cry againſt 'em.
For further life in this world I ne're hope,
Nor will I ſue, although the King have mercies
More then I dare make faults.
You few that lov'd me,
And dare be bold to weepe ſo Buckingham,
His Noble Friends and Fellowes; whom to leave
Is onely bitter to him, only dying:
Goe with me like good Angels to my end,
And as the long divorce of Steele fals on me,
Make of your Prayers one ſweet Sacrifice,
And lift my Soule to Heaven.
Leade on a Gods name.
Lovell. I doe beſeech your Grace, for charity
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid againſt me, now to forgive me frankly.
Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you
As I would be forgvien: I forgive all.
There cannot be thoſe numberleſſe offences
Gainſt me, that I cannot take peace with:
No blacke envy ſhall make my Grave.
Commend me to his Grace:
And if he ſpeake of Buckingham; pray tell him,
You met him halfe in Heaven: my vowes and prayers
Yet are the Kings; and till my Soule forſake,
Shall cry for bleſſings on him. May he live
Longer then I have time to tell his yeares;
Ever belov'd and loving, may his Rule be;
And when old Time ſhal leade him to his end,
Goodneſſe and he, fill up one Monument.
Lov. To th' water ſide I muſt conduct your Grace;
Then give my Charge up to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who undertakes you to your end.
Vaux. Prepare there,
The Duke is comming: See the Barge be ready,
And fit it with ſuch furniture as ſuites
The Greatneſſe of his perſon.
Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,
Let it alone; my ſtate now will but mocke me.
When I came hither, I was Lord High Conſtable,
And Duke of Buckingham: now, poore Edward Bohun;
Yet I am richer then my baſe Accuſers,
That never knew what Truth meant: I now ſeale it;
And with that bloud wil make 'em one day groane for't.
My noble Father Henry of Buckingham.
Who firſt rais'd head againſt Vſurping Richard,
Flying for ſuccour to his Servant Baniſter,
Being diſtreſt; was by that wretch betraid,
And without Tryall, fell; Gods peace be with him.
Henry the Seaventh ſucceeding, truly pittying
My Fathers loſſe; like a moſt Royall Prince
Reſtor'd me to my Honours: and out of ruines
Made my Name once more Noble. Now his Sonne,
Henry the Eight, Life, Honour, Name and all
That made me happy; at one ſtroke ha's taken
For ever from the World. I had my Tryall,
And muſt needs ſay a Noble one; which makes me
A little happier then my wretched Father:
Yet thus farre we are one in Fortunes, both
Fell by our Servants, by thoſe Men we lov'd moſt:
A moſt unnaturall and faithleſſe Service.
Heaven ha's an end in all: yet, you that heare me,
This from a dying man receive as certaine:
Where you are liberall of your loves and Counſels,
Be ſure you be not looſe; for thoſe you make friends,

And give your hearts to; when they once perceive
The leaſt rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found againe
But where they meane to ſinke ye: all good people
Pray for me, I muſt now forſake ye; the laſt houre
Of my long weary life is come upon me:
Farewell; and when you would ſay ſomething that is ſad,
Speake how I fell.
I have done; and God forgive me.
Exeunt Duke and Traine.
1. O, this is full of pitty; Sir, it cals
I feare, too many curſes on their heads
That were the Authors.
2. If the Duke be guiltleſſe,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can give you inckling
Of an enſuing evill, if it fall,
Greater then this.
1. Good Angels keepe it from us:
What may it be? you doe not doubt my faith Sir?
2. This Secret is ſo weighty, 'twill require
A ſtrong faith to conceale it.
1. Let me have it;
I doe not talke much.
2. I am confident;
You ſhall Sir: Did you not of late dayes heare
A buzzing of a Separation
Betweene the King and Katherine?
1. Yes, but it held not;
For when the King once heard it, out of anger
He ſent command to the Lord Mayor ſtraight
To ſtop the rumor; and allay thoſe tongues
That durſt diſperſe it.
2. But that ſlander Sir,
Is found a truth now: for it growes agen
Freſher then e're it was; and held for certaine
The King will venture at it. Either the Cardinall,
Or ſome about him neere, have out of malice
To the good Queene, poſſeſt him with a ſcruple
That will undoe her: To confirme this too,
Cardinall Campeius is arriv'd, and lately,
As all thinke for this buſineſſe.
1. 'Tis the Cardinall;
And meerely to revenge him on the Emperour,
For not beſtowing on him at his asking,
The Archbiſhopricke of Toledo, this is purpos'd.
2. I thinke
You have hit the marke; but is't not cruell,
That ſhe ſhould feele the ſmart of this: the Cardinall
Will have his will, and ſhe muſt fall.
1. 'Tis wofull.
Wee are too open heere to argue this:
Let's thinke in private more. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine, reading this Letter.

My Lord, the Horſes your Lordſhip ſent for, with all the care I had, I ſaw well choſen, ridden, and furniſh'd. They were young and handſome, and of the beſt breed in the North. When they were ready to ſet out for London, a man of my Lord Cardinalls, by Commiſſion, and maine power tooke 'em from me, with this reaſon: his maſter would be ſerv'd before a Subject, if not before the King, which ſtop'd our mouthes Sir.

I feare he will indeede; well, let him have them; hee will have all I thinke.

Enter to the Lord Chamberlaine, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke.

Norf. Well met my Lord Chamberlaine.
Cham. Good day to both your Graces.
Suff. How is the King imploy'd?
Cham. I left him Private,
Full of ſad thoughts and troubles.
Norf. What's the cauſe?
Cham. It ſeemes the Marriage with his Brothers Wife
Ha's crept too neere his Conſcience.
Suff. No, his Conſcience
Ha's crept too neere another Ladie.
Norf. Tis ſo;
This is the Cardinalls doing: The King-Cardinall,
That blinde Prieſt, like the eldeſt Sonne of Fortune,
Turnes what he liſt. The King will know him one day.
Suff. Pray God he doe,
Hee'l never know himſelfe elſe.
Norf. How holily he workes in all his buſineſſe,
And with what zeale? For now he has crackt the League
Between us & the Emperor (the Queens great Nephew)
He dives into the Kings Soule, and there ſcatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the Conſcience,
Feares, and deſpaires, and all theſe for his Marriage.
And out of all theſe, to reſtore the King,
He counſels a Divorce, a loſſe of her
That like a Iewell, ha's hung twenty yeares
About his necke, yet never loſt her luſtre;
Of her that loves him with that excellence,
That Angels love good men with: Even of her,
That when the greateſt ſtroke of Fortune falls
Will bleſſe the King: and is not this courſe pious?
Cham. Heaven keep me from ſuch counſel: tis moſt true,
Theſe newes are every where, every tongue ſpeakes 'em,
And every true heart weepes for't. All that dare
Looke into theſe affaires, ſee this maine end,
The French Kings Siſter. Heaven will one day open
The Kings eyes, that ſo long have ſlept upon
This bold bad man.
Suff. And free us from his ſlavery.
Norf. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance;
Or this imperious man will worke us all
From Princes into Pages: all mens honours
Lie like one lumpe before him, to be faſhion'd
Into what pitch he pleaſe.
Suff. For me, my Lords,
I love him not, nor feare him, there's my Creede:
As I am made without him, ſo Ile ſtand,
If the King pleaſe: his Curſes and his bleſſings
Touch me alike: th' are breath I not beleeve in.
I knew him, and I know him: ſo I leave him
To him that made him proud; the Pope.
Norf. Let's in;
And with ſome other buſineſſe, put the King
From theſe ſad thoughts, that work too much upon him:
My Lord, youle beare us company?
Cham. Excuſe me,
The King ha's ſent me otherwhere: Beſides
You'l finde a moſt unfit time to diſturbe him:
Health to your Lordſhips.

Norfolke. Thankes my Good Lord Chamberlaine.
Exit Lord Chamberlaine, and the King drawes the Curtaine and ſits reading penſively.
Suff. How ſad he lookes; ſure he is much afflicted.
Kin. Who's there? Ha?
Norff. Pray God he be not angry. (ſelves
Kin. Who's there I ſay? How dare you thruſt your
Into my private Meditations?
Who am I? Ha?
Norff. A gracious King, that pardons all offences
Malice ne're meant: Our breach of Duty this way,
Is buſineſſe of Eſtate; in which, wee come
To know your Royall pleaſure.
Kin. Ye are too bold:
Go to; Ile make ye know your times of buſineſſe:
Is this an howre for temporall affaires? Ha?
Enter Wolſey and Campeius with a Commiſſion.
Who's there? my good Lord Cardinall? O my Wolſey,
The quiet of my wounded Conſcience;
Thou art a cure fit for the King; you'r welcome
Moſt learned Reverend Sir, into our Kingdome,
Vſe us, and it: my good Lord, have great care,
I be not found a Talker.
Wol. Sir, you cannot;
I would your Grace would give us but an houre
Of private conference.
Kin. We are buſie; goe.
Nor. This Prieſt ha's no pride in him?
Suff. Not to ſpeake of:
I would not be ſo ſicke though for his place:
But this cannot continue.
Norf. If it doe, Ile venture one heave at him.
Suf. I another.
Exeunt Norfolke, and Suffolke.
Wol. Your Grace ha's given a Preſident of wiſedome
Above all Princes, in committing freely
Your ſcruple to the voyce of Chriſtendome:
Who can be angry now? What Envy reach you?
The Spaniard tide by blood and favour to her,
Muſt now confeſſe, if they have any goodneſſe,
The Tryall, juſt and Noble. All the Clearkes,
(I meane the learned ones in Chriſtian Kingdomes)
Have their free voyces. Rome (the Nurſe of Iudgement,
Invited by your Noble ſelfe hath ſent
One generall Tongue unto us. This good man,
This juſt and learned Prieſt, Cardinall Campeius
Whom once more, I preſent unto your Highneſſe.
Kin. And once more in mine armes I bid him welcome,
And thanke the holy Conclave for their loves,
They have ſent me ſuch a Man, I would have wiſh'd for.
Cam. Your Grace muſt needs deſerve all ſtrangers loves
You are ſo Noble: To your Highneſſe hand
I tender my Commiſſion; by whoſe vertue,
The Court of Rome commanding: You my Lord
Cardinall of Yorke, are joyn'd with me their Servant,
In the unparciall judging of this Buſineſſe. (ted
Kin. Two equall men: The Queene ſhall be acquain-
Forthwith for what you come. Where's Gardiner?
Wol. I know your Majeſty, ha's alwayes lov'd her
So deere in heart, not to deny her that
A Woman of leſſe Place might aske by Law;
Schollers allow'd freely to argue for her.
Kin. I, and the beſt ſhe ſhall have; and my favour
To him that does beſt, God forbid elſe: Cardinall,
Prethee call Gardiner to me, my new Secretary,
I find him a fit fellow.
Enter Gardiner.
Wol. Give me your hand: much joy & favour to you;
You are the Kings now.
Gard. But to be commanded
For ever by your Grace, whoſe hand ha's rais'd me.
Kin. Come hither Gardiner.
Walkes and whiſpers.
Camp. My Lord of Yorke, was not one Doctor Pace
In this mans place before him?
Wol. Yes, he was.
Camp. Was he not held a learned man?
Wol. Yes ſurely.
Camp. Beleeve me, there's an ill opinion ſpread then
Even of your ſelfe Lord Cardinall.
Wol. How? of me?
Camp. They will not ſticke to ſay, you envide him;
And fearing he would riſe (he was ſo vertuous)
Kept him a forraigne man ſtill, which ſo greev'd him;
That he ran mad, and dide.
Wol. Heav'ns peace be with him:
That's Chriſtian care enough: for living Murmurers,
There's places of rebuke. He was a Foole;
For he would needs be vertuous. That good Fellow,
If I command him followes my appointment,
I will have none ſo neere elſe. Learne this Brother,
We live not to be grip'd by meaner perſons.
Kin. Deliver this with modeſty to th' Queene.
Exit Gardiner.
The moſt convenient place, that I can thinke of
For ſuch receipt of Learning, is Blacke-Fryers:
There ye ſhall meete about this waighty buſineſſe.
My Wolſey, ſee it furniſh'd. O my Lord,
Would it not grieve an able man to leave
So ſweet a Bedfellow? But Conſcience, Conſcience;
O 'tis a tender place, and I muſte leave her. Exeunt

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Anne Bullen, and an old Lady.

An. Not for that neither; here's the pang that pinches.
His Highneſſe, having liv'd ſo long with her, and ſhe
So good a Lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce diſhonour of her; by my life,
She never knew harme-doing: Oh, now after
So many courſes of the Sun enthroaned,
Still growing in a Majeſty and pompe, the which
To leave, a thouſand fold more bitter, then
'Tis ſweet at firſt t'acquire. After this Proceſſe,
To give her the avaunt, it is a pitty
Would move a Monſter.
Old La. Hearts of moſt hard temper
Melt and lament for her,
An. Oh Gods will, much better
She ne're had knowne pompe; though't be temporall,
Yet if that quarrell, Fortune, do divorce
It from the bearer, 'tis a ſufferance, panging
As ſoule and bodies ſevering.
Old La. Alas poore Lady,
Shee's ſtranger now againe.
An. So much the more
Muſt pitty drop upon her; verily
I ſweare, tis better to be lowly borne,

And range with humble livers in Content,
Then to be perk'd up in a gliſtring griefe,
And weare a golden ſorrow.
Old L. Our content
Is our beſt having.
Anne. By my troth, and Maidenhead,
I would not be a Queene.
Old L. Beſhrew me, I would,
And venture Maidenhead for't, and ſo would you
For all this ſpice of your Hipocriſie;
You that have ſo faire parts of Woman on you,
Have (too) a Womans heart, which ever yet
Affected Eminence, Wealth, Soveraignty;
Which, to ſay ſooth, are Bleſſings; and which guifts
(Saving your mincing) the capacity
Of your ſoft Chivereil Conſcience, would receive,
If you might pleaſe to ſtretch it.
An. Nay, good troth.
Old L. Yes troth, & troth: you would not be a Qneen?
An. No, not for all the riches under Heaven.
Old L. Tis ſtrange; a three pence bow'd now would hire
Old as I am, to Queene it: but I pray you, (me,
What thinke you of a Dutcheſſe? Have you limbs
To beare that load of Title?
An. No in truth.
Old. L. Then you are weakly made, plucke off a little,
I would not be a young Count in your way,
For more then bluſhing comes to: If your backe
Cannot vouchſafe this burthen, 'tis too weake
Ever to get a Boy.
An. How you doe talke;
I ſweare againe, I would not be a Queene,
For all the world.
Old L, In faith for little England
You'l venture an emballing: I my ſelfe
Would for Carnarvanſhire, although there long'd
No more to th' Crowne but that: Lo, who comes here?

Enter Lord Chamberlaine. (know

L. Cham. Good morrow Ladies; what wer't worth to
The ſecret of your conference?
An. My good Lord,
Not your demand; it valewes not your asking:
Our Miſtris Sorrowes we were pittying.
Cham. It was a gentle buſineſſe and becomming
The action of good women, there is hope
All will be well.
An. Now I pray God, Amen.
Cham. You beare a gentle minde, & heav'nly bleſſings
Follow ſuch Creatures. That you may, faire Lady
Perceive I ſpeake ſincerely, and high notes
Tane of your many vertues; the Kings Majeſty
Commends his good opinion of you, to you; and
Doe's purpoſe honour to you no leſſe flowing,
Then Marchioneſſe of Pembrooke; to which Title,
A Thouſand pound a yeare, Annuall ſupport,
Out of his Grace, he addes.
An. I doe not know
What kinde of my obedience, I ſhould tender;
More then my All, is nothing: Nor my Prayers
Are not words duely hallowed; nor my Wiſhes
More worth then empty vanities: yet Prayers & Wiſhes
Are all I can returne. 'Beſeech your Lordſhip,
Vouchſafe to ſpeake my thankes, and my obedience,
As from a bluſhing Handmaid, to his Highneſſe;
Whoſe health and Royalty I pray for.
Cham. Lady;
I ſhall not faile t' approve the faire conceit
The King hath of you. I have perus'd her well,
Beauty and Honour in her are ſo mingled,
That they have caught the King: and who knowes yet
But from this Lady, may proceed a Iemme,
To lighten all this Ile? I'le to the King,
And ſay I ſpoke with you.
Exit Lord Chamberlaine.
An. My honour'd Lord.
Old L. Why this it is: See, ſee,
I have beene begging ſixteene yeares in Court
(Am yet a Courtier beggerly) nor could
Come pat betwixt too early, and too late
For any ſuit of pounds: and you, (oh fate)
A very freſh Fiſh heere; fye, fye, fye upon
This compel'd fortune: have your mouth fild up,
Before you open it.
An. This is ſtrange to me.
Old L. How taſts it? Is it bitter? Forty pence, no:
There was a Lady once (tis an old Story)
That would not be a Queene, that would ſhe not
For all the mud in Egypt; have you heard it?
An. Come you are pleaſant.
Old L. With your Theame, I could
O're-mount the Larke: The Marchioneſſe of Pembrooke?
A thouſand pounds a yeare, for pure reſpect?
No other obligation? by my Life,
That promiſes mo thouſands: Honours traine
Is longer then his fore-skirt; by this time
I know your backe will beare a Dutcheſſe. Say,
Are you not ſtronger then you were?
An. Good Lady,
Make your ſelfe mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on't. Would I had no being
If this ſalute my blood a jot; it faints me
To thinke what followes.
The Queene is comfortleſſe, and we forgetfull
In our long abſence: pray doe not deliver,
What heere y' have heard to her.
Old L. What doe you thinke me —— Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Trumpets, Sonnet, and Cornets.

Enter two Vergers, with ſhort ſilver wands; next them two Scribes in the habite of Doctors: after them, the Biſhop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Biſhops of Lincolne, Ely, Rocheſter, and S. Aſaph: Next them, with ſome ſmall diſtance, followes a Gentleman bearing the Purſe, with the great Seale, and a Cardinals Hat: Then two Prieſts, bearing each a Silver Croſſe: Then a Gentleman Uſher bareheaded, accompanied with a Sergeant at Armes, bearing a Silver Mace: Then two Gentlemen bearing two great Silver Pillers: After them, ſide by ſide, the two Cardinals, two Noble men, with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place under the Cloth of State. The two Cardinalls ſit under him as Iudges. The Queene takes place ſome diſtance from the King. The Biſhops place themſelves on each ſide the Court in manner of a Conſiſtory: Below them the Scribes. The Lords ſit next the Biſhops. The reſt of the Attendants ſtand in convenient order about the Stage.

Car. Whil'ſt our Commiſſion from Rome is read,
Let ſilence be commanded.
King. What's the need?
It hath already publiquely bene read,
And on all ſides th' Authority allow'd,
You may then ſpare that time.
Car. Bee't ſo, proceed.
Scri. Say, Henry K. of England, come into the Court.
Crier. Henry King of England, &c.
King. Heere.
Scribe. Say, Katherine Queene of England,
Come into the Court.
Cries. Katherine Queene of England, &c.
The Queene makes no anſwer, riſes out of her Chaire, goes about the Court, comes to the King, and kneeles at his Feete. Then ſpeakes.
Sir, I deſire you do me right and Iuſtice,
And to beſtow your pitty on me; for
I am a moſt poore Woman, and a ſtranger,
Borne out of your Dominions: having heere
No Iudge indifferent, nor no more aſſurance
Of equall Friendſhip and Proceeding. Alas Sir:
In what have I offended you? What cauſe
Hath my behaviour given to your diſpleaſure,
That thus you ſhould proceed to put me off,
And take your good grace from me? Heaven witneſſe,
I have bene to you a true and humble Wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in feare to kindle your Diſlike,
Yea, ſubject to your Countenance: Glad, or ſorry,
As I ſaw it inclin'd? when was the houre
I ever contradicted your Deſire?
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your Friends
Have I not ſtrove to love, although I knew
He were mine Enemy? What Friend of mine,
That had to him deriv'd your Anger, did I
Continue in my Liking? Nay, gave notice
He was from thence diſcharg'd? Sir, call to minde,
That I have beene your Wife, in this Obedience,
Vpward of twenty yeares, and have bene bleſt
With many Children by you. If in the courſe
And proceſſe of this time you can report,
And prove it too, againſt mine Honour aught;
My bond to Wedlocke, or my love and Duty
Againſt your Sacred Perſon; in Gods name
Turne me away: and let fowl'ſt Contempt
Shut doore upon me, and ſo give me up
To the ſharp'ſt kinde of Iuſtice. Pleaſe you, Sir,
The King your Father, was reputed for
A Prince moſt Prudent; and an excellent
And unmatch'd Wit, and Iudgement, Ferdinand
My Father, King of Spaine, was reckon'd one
The wiſeſt Prince, that there had reign'd, by many
A yeare before. It is not to be queſtion'd,
That they had gather'd a wiſe Councell to them
Of every Realme, that did debate this Buſineſſe,
Who deem'd our Marriage lawful. Wherefore I humbly
Beſeech you Sir, to ſpare me, till I may
Be by my Friends in Spaine, advis'd; whoſe Counſaile
I will implore. If not, i'th' name of God
Your pleaſure be fulfill'd.
Wol. You have heere Lady,
(And of your choice) theſe reverend Fathers, men
Of ſingular Integrity, and Learning;
Yea, the elect o'th' Land, who are aſſembled
To pleade your Cauſe. It ſhall be therefore bootleſſe,
That longer you deſire the Court, as well
For your owne quiet, as to rectifie
What is unſetled in the King.
Camp. His Grace
Hath ſpoken well, and juſtly: Therefore Madam,
It's fit this Royall Seſſion do proceed,
And that (without delay) their Arguments
Be now produc'd, and heard.
Qu. Lord Cardinall, to you I ſpeake.
Wol. Your pleaſure, Madam.
Qu. Sir, I am about to weepe; but thinking that
We are a Queene (or long have dream'd ſo) certaine
The daughter of a King, my drops of teares,
Ile turne to ſparkes of fire.
Wol. Be patient yet.
Qu. I will, when you are humble; Nay before,
Or God will puniſh me. I do beleeve
(Induc'd by potent Circumſtances) that
You are mine Enemy, and make my Challenge.
You ſhall not be my Iudge. For it is you
Have blowne this Coale, betwixt my Lord, and me;
(Which Gods dew quench) therefore, I ſay againe,
I utterly abhorre; yea, from my Soule
Refuſe you for my Iudge, whom yet once more
I hold my moſt malicious Foe, and thinke not
At all a Friend to truth.
Wol. I do profeſſe
You ſpeake not like your ſelfe: who ever yet
Have ſtood to Charity: and diſplayd th' effects
Of diſpoſition gentle, and of wiſdome,
Ore-topping womans powre. Madam, you do me wrong
I have no Spleene againſt you, nor injuſtice
For you, or any: how farre I have proceeded,
Or how farre further (Shall) is warranted
By a Commiſſion from the Conſiſtory;
Yea, the whole Conſiſtorie of Rome. You charge me,
That I have blowne this Coale: I do deny it,
The King is preſent: If it be knowne to him,
That I'gainſay my Deed, how may he wound,
And worthily my Falſehood, yea, as much
As you have done my Truth. If he know
That I am free of your Report, he knowes
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me, and the cure is to Remove theſe thoughts from you. The which before
His Highneſſe ſhall ſpeake in, I do beſeech
You (gracious Madam) to unthinke your ſpeaking,
And to ſay no more.
Quee. My Lord, my Lord,
I am a ſimple woman, much too weake
T'oppoſe your cunning. Y'are meek, & humble-mouth'd,
You ſigne your place, and Calling, in full ſeeming,
With Meekeneſſe and Humilitie: But your Heart
Is cramm'd with Arrogance, Spleene, and Pride.
You have by Fortune, and his Highneſſe favors,
Gone ſlightly o're lowe ſteppes, and now are mounted
Where Powres are your Retainers, and your words
(Domeſtickes to you) ſerve your will; as't pleaſe
Your ſelfe pronounce their Office. I muſt tell you,
You tender more your perſons Honor, then
Your high profeſſion Spirituall. That agen
I do refuſe you for my Iudge, and heere
Before you all, Appeale unto the Pope,
To bring my whole Cauſe 'fore his Holineſſe,
And to be judg'd by him.
She Curtſies to the King, and offers to depart.

Camp. The Queene is obſtinate,
Stubborne to Iuſtice, apt to accuſe it, and
Diſdainfull to be tride by't; tis not well.
Shee's going away.
Kin. Call her againe.
Crier. Katherine. Q. of England, come into the Court.
Gent. Vſh. Madam, you are cald backe.
Que. What need you note it? pray you keep your way,
When you are cald returne. Now the Lord helpe,
They vexe me paſt my patience, pray you paſſe on;
I will not tarry: no, nor ever more
Vpon this buſineſſe my appearance make,
In any of their Courts.
Exit Queene, and her Attendants.
Kin. Goe thy wayes Kate,
That man i'th' world, who ſhall report he ha's
A better Wife, let him in nought be truſted,
For ſpeaking falſe in that; Thou art alone
(If thy rare qualities, ſweet gentleneſſe,
Thy meekneſſe Saint-like, Wife-like Government,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Soveraigne and Pious, could ſpeake thee out)
The Queene of earthly Queenes: Shee's Noble borne:
And like her true Nobility, ſhe ha's
Carried her ſelfe towards me.
Wol. Moſt gracious Sir,
In humbleſt manner I require your Highneſſe,
That it ſhall pleaſe you to declare in hearing
Of all theſe eares (for where I am rob'd and bound,
There muſt I be unloos'd, although not there
At once, and fully ſatisfide) whether ever I
Did broach this buſines to your Highnes, or Laid any ſcruple in your way which might
Induce you to the queſtion on't: or euer
Have to you, but with thankes to God for ſuch
A Royall Lady, ſpake one, the leaſt word that might
Be to the prejudice of her preſent State,
Or touch of her good Perſon?
Kin. My Lord Cardinall,
I doe excuſe you; yea, upon mine Honour,
I free you from't: You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are ſo, but like the Village Curres,
Barke when their fellowes doe. By ſome of theſe
The Queene is put in anger; y'are excus'd:
But will you be more juſtifi'de? You ever
Have wiſh'd the ſleeping of this buſines, never deſir'd
It to be ſtir'd; but oft have hindred, oft
The paſſages made toward it; on my Honour,
I ſpeake my good Lord Cardinall to this point;
And thus farre cleare him.
Now, what mov'd me too't,
I will be bold with time and your attention: (too't:
Then marke th' inducement. Thus it came; give heede
My Conſcience firſt receiv'd a tenderneſſe,
Scruple, and pricke, on certaine Speeches utter'd
By th' Biſhop of Bayon, then French Embaſſador,
Who had beene hither ſent on the debating
And Marriage 'twixt the Duke of Orleance, and
Our Daughter Mary: I'th' Progreſſe of this buſineſſe,
Ere a determinate reſolution, hee
(I meane the Biſhop) did require a reſpite,
Wherein he might the King his Lord advertiſe,
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Reſpecting this our Marriage with the Dowager,
Sometimes our Brothers Wife. This reſpite ſhooke
The boſome of my Conſcience, enter'd me;
Yea with a ſplitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my Breaſt, which forc'd ſuch way,
That many maz'd conſiderings, did throng
And preſt in with this Caution. Firſt, me thought
I ſtood not in the ſmile of Heaven, who had Commanded Nature, that my Ladies wombe
If it conceiv'd a male-child by me, ſhould
Doe no more Offices of life too't; then
The Grave does to th' dead: For her Male Iſſue,
Or di'de where they were made, or ſhortly after
This world had ayr'd them. Hence I tooke a thought,
This was a Iudgement on me, that my Kingdome
(Well worthy the beſt Heyre o'th' World) ſhould not
Be glad in't by me. Then followes, that
I weigh'd the danger which my Realmes ſtood in
By this my Iſſues faile, and that gave to me
Many a groaning throw: thus hulling in
The wilde Sea of my Conſcience, I did ſteere
Toward this remedy, whereupon we are
Now preſent heere together: that's to ſay,
I meant to rectifie my Conſcience, which
I then did feele full ſicke, and yet not well,
By all the reverend Fathers of the Land,
And Doctors learn'd. Firſt I began in private,
With you my Lord of Lincolne; you remember
How under my oppreſſion I did reeke
When I firſt mov'd you.
B. Lin. Very well my Liedge.
Kin. I have ſpoke long, be pleas'd your ſelfe to ſay
How farre you ſatisfide me.
Lin. So pleaſe your Highneſſe,
The queſtion did at firſt ſo ſtagger me,
Bearing a ſtate of mighty moment in't,
And conſequence of dread, that I committed
The daringſt Counſaile which I had to doubt,
And did intreat your Highneſſe in this courſe,
Which you are running heere.
Kin. I then mov'd you,
My Lord of Canterbury, and got your leave
To make this preſent Summons unſolicited.
I left no reverend perſon in this Court,
But by particular conſent proceeded
Vnder your hands and Seales: therefore goe on,
For no diſlike i'th' world againſt the perſon
Of our good Queene; but the ſharpe thorny points
Of my alleged reaſons, drives this forward:
Prove but our Marriage lawfull, by my Life
And Kingly Dignity, we are contented
To weare our mortall State to come, with her,
(Katherine our Queene) before the primeſt Creature
That's Parragon'd o'th' World
Camp. So pleaſe your Highneſſe,
The Queene being abſent, 'tis a needfull fitneſſe,
That we adiourne this Court further day;
Meane while muſt be an earneſt motion
Made to the Queene to call backe her Appeale
She intends unto his holineſſe.
Kin. I may perceive
Theſe Cardinals trifle with me: I abhorre
This dilatory ſloth, and trickes of Rome.
My learn'd and welbeloved Servant Cranmer,
Prethee returne, with thy approach: I know,
My comfort comes along: breake up the Court;
I ſay, ſet on.
Exeunt, in manner as they enter'd.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Queene and her Women as at worke.

Queen. Take thy Lute wench,
My Soule growes ſad with troubles,
Sing, and diſperſe 'em if thou canſt: leave working:

SONG.

ORpheus with his Lute made Trees,
And the Mountaine tops that freeze,
Bow themſelves when he did ſing.
To his Muſicke, Plants and Flowers
Ever ſpring; as Sunne and Showres,
There had made a laſting Spring.
Every thing that heard him play,
Even the Billowes of the Sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by.
In ſweet Muſicke is ſuch Art,
Killing care, and griefe of heart,
Fall aſleepe, or hearing dye.

Enter a Gentleman.

Queen. How now?
Gent. And't pleaſe your Grace, the two great Cardinals
Wait in the preſence.
Queen. Would they ſpeake with me?
Gent. They wil'd me ſay ſo Madam.
Queen. Pray their Graces.
To come neere: what can be their buſineſſe
With me, a poore weake woman, falne from favour,
I doe not like their comming; now I thinke on't,
They ſhould be good men, their affaires are righteous,
But all Hoods, make not Monkes.

Enter the two Cardinalls, Wolſey & Campian.

Wolſ. Peace to your Highneſſe.
Queen. Your Graces find me heere part of a Houſwife,
(I would be all) againſt the worſt may happen:
What are your pleaſures with me, reverend Lords?
Wol. May it pleaſe you Noble Madam, to withdraw
Into your private Chamber; we ſhall give you
The full cauſe of our comming.
Queen. Speake it heere.
There's nothing I have done yet o' my Conſcience
Deſerves a Corner: would all other Women
Could ſpeake this with as free a Soule as I doe,
My Lords, I care not (ſo much I am happy
Above a number) if my actions
Were tri'de by ev'ry tongue, ev'ry eye ſaw 'em,
Envy and baſe opinon ſet againſt 'em,
I know my life ſo even. If your buſines
Seeke me out, and that way I am Wiſe in;
Out with it boldly: Truth loves open dealing.
Card. Tanta eſt erga te mentis integritas (Regina ſereniſſima.)
Queen. Good my Lord, no Latin;
I am not ſuch a Truant ſince my comming,
As not to know the Language I have liv'd in:
A ſtrange Tongue makes my cauſe more ſtrange, ſuſpitious:
Pray ſpeake in Engliſh; heere are ſome will thanke you,
If you ſpeake truth, for their poore Miſtris ſake;
Beleeve me ſhe ha's had much wrong. Lord Cardinall,
The willing'ſt ſinne I ever yet committed,
May be abſolv'd in Engliſh.
Card. Noble Lady,
I am ſorry my integrity ſhould breed,
(And ſervice to his Majeſty and you)
So deepe ſuſpition, where all faith was meant;
We come not by the way of Accuſation,
To taint that honour every good Tongue bleſſes;
Nor to betray you any way to ſorrow;
You have too much good Lady: But to know
How you ſtand minded in the waighty difference
Betweene the King and you, and to deliver
(Like free and honeſt men) our juſt opinions,
And comforts to your cauſe.
Camp. Moſt honour'd Madam,
My Lord of Yorke, out of his Noble nature,
Zeale and obedience he ſtill bore your Grace,
Forgetting (like a good man) your late Cenſure
Both of his truth and him (which was too farre)
Offers, as I doe, in a ſigne of peace,
His Service, and his Counſell.
Queen. To betray me.
My Lords, I thanke you both for your good wills,
Ye ſpeake like honeſt men, (pray God ye prove ſo)
But how to make ye ſodainly an Anſwere
In ſuch a point of weight, ſo neere mine Honour,
(More neere my Life I feare) with my weake wit;
And to ſuch men of gravity and learning;
In truth I know not. I was ſet at worke,
Among my Maids, full little (God knowes) looking
Either for ſuch men, or ſuch buſineſſe;
For her ſake that I have beene, for I feele
The laſt fit of my Greatneſſe; good your Graces
Let me have time and Councell for my Cauſe:
Alas, I am a Woman friendleſſe, hopeleſſe.
Wol. Madam,
You wrong the Kings love with theſe feares,
Your hopes and friends are infinite.
Queen. In England,
But little for my profit: can you thinke Lords,
That any Engliſh man dare give me Councell?
Or be a knowne friend 'gainſt Highneſſe pleaſure,
(Though he be growne ſo deſperate to be honeſt)
And live a Subject? Nay forſooth my friends,
They that muſt weigh out my afflictions,
They that my truſt muſt grow to, live not heere,
They are (as all my other comforts) far hence
In mine owne Country Lords.
Camp. I would your Grace
Would leave your greefes, and take my Counſell.
Queen. How Sir?
Camp. Put your maine cauſe into the Kings protection,
Hee's loving and moſt gracious. 'Twill be much,
Both for your Honour better, and your Cauſe:
For if the tryall of the Law o'retake ye,
You'l part away diſgrac'd.
Wol. He tels you rightly.
Queen. Ye tell me what ye wiſh for both, my ruine:
Is this your Chriſtian Councell? Out upon ye.
Heaven is above all yet; there ſits a Iudge,
That no King can corrupt.
Camp. Your rage miſtakes us.
Queen. The more ſhame for ye; holy men I thought ye,
Vpon my Soule two reverend Cardinall Vertues:
But Cardinall Sins, and hollow hearts I feare ye:
Mend 'em for ſhame my Lords: Is this your comfort?
The Cordiall that ye bring a wretched Lady?
A woman loſt among ye, laugh't at, ſcornd?
I will not wiſh ye halfe my miſeries,

I have more Charity. But ſay I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heavens ſake take heed, leaſt at once
The burthen of my ſorrowes, fall upon ye.
Car. Madam, this is a meere diſtraction,
You turne the good we offer, into envy.
Quee. Ye turne me into nothing. Woe upon ye,
And all ſuch falſe profeſſors. Would you have me
(If you have any Iuſtice, any Pitty,
If ye be any thing but Churchmens habits)
Put my ſicke cauſe into his hands, that hates me?
Alas, ha's baniſht me his bed already,
His Love, too long ago. I am old my Lords,
And all the fellowſhip I hold now with him
Is onely by Obedience. What can happen
To me, above this wretchedneſſe? All your Studies
Make me a Curſe, like this:
Camp. Your feares are worſe.
Qu. Have I liv'd thus long (let me ſpeake my ſelfe,
Since Vertue findes no friends) a Wife a true one?
A Woman (I dare ſay without Vainglory)
Never yet branded with ſuſpition?
Have I, with all my full Affections
Still met the King? Lov'd him next Heav'n? Obey'd him?
Bin (out of fondneſſe) ſuperſtitious to him?
Almoſt forgot my Prayres to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'Tis not well Lords.
Bring me a conſtant woman to her husband,
One that ne're dream'd a Ioy, beyond his pleaſure;
And to that Woman (when ſhe has done moſt)
Yet will I adde an honor; a great Patience.
Car. Madam, you wander from the good
We ayme at.
Quee. My Lord,
I dare not make my ſelfe ſo guilty,
To give up willingly that Noble Title
Your Maſter wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e're divorce my Dignities.
Card. Pray heare me.
Qu. Would I had never trod this Engliſh Earth,
Or felt the Flatteries that grow upon it:
Ye have Angels Faces; but Heaven knowes your hearts.
What ſhall become of me now, wretched Lady?
I am the moſt unhappy Woman living.
Alas (poore Wenches) where are now your Fortunes?
Shipwrack'd upon a Kingdome, where no Pitty,
No Friends, no Hope, no Kindred weepe for me?
Almoſt no Grave allow'd me? Like the Lilly
That once was Miſtris of the Field, and flouriſh'd,
Ile hang my head, and periſh.
Car. If your Grace
Could but be brought to know, our ends are honeſt,
You'ld feele more comfort. Why ſhold we (good Lady)
Vpon what cauſe wrong you? Alas, our Places,
The way of our Profeſſion is againſt it;
We are to Cure ſuch ſorrowes, not to ſowe 'em.
For goodneſſe ſake, conſider what you doe,
How you may hurt your ſelfe: I, utterly
Grow from the Kings Acquaintance, by this Carriage.
The hearts of Princes kiſſe Obedience,
So much they love it. But to ſtubborne Spirits,
They ſwell and grow, as terrible as ſtormes.
I know you have a Gentle, Noble temper,
A Soule as even as a Calme; Pray thinke us,
Thoſe we profeſſe, Peace-makers, Friends, and Servants.
Camp. Madam, you'l finde it ſo:
You wrong your Vertues
With theſe weake Womens feares. A Noble Spirit
As yours was, put into you, ever caſts
Such doubts as falſe Coine from it. The King loves you,
Beware you looſe it not: For us (if you pleaſe
To truſt us in your buſineſſe) we are ready
To uſe our utmoſt Studies, in your ſervice.
Qu. Do what ye will, my Lords:
And pray forgive me;
If I have us'd my ſelfe unmannerly,
You know I am a Woman lacking wit
To make a ſeemely anſwer to ſuch perſons.
Pray do my ſervice to his Majeſtie,
He ha's my heart yet, and ſhall have my Prayers
While I ſhall have my life. Come reverend Fathers,
Beſtow your Councels on me. She now begges
That little thought when ſhe ſet footing heere,
She ſhould have bought her Dignities ſo deere Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter the Duke of Norfolke, Duke of Suffolke, Lord Surrey, and Lord Chamberlaine.

Norf. If you will now unite in your Complaints,
And force them with a Conſtancy, the Cardinall
Cannot ſtand under them. If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promiſe,
But that you ſhall ſuſtaine moe new diſgraces,
With theſe you beare already.
Sur. I am joyfull
To meete the leaſt occaſion, that may give me
Remembrance of my Father-in-Law the Duke,
To be reveng'd on him.
Suf. Which of the Peeres
Have uncontemn'd gone by him, or at leaſt
Strangely neglected? When did he regard
The ſtampe of Nobleneſſe in any perſon
Out of himſelfe?
Cham. My Lords, you ſpeake your pleaſures:
What he deſerves of you and me, I know:
What we can do to him (though now the time Gives way to us) I much feare. If you cannot Barre his acceſſe to'th' King, never attempt
Any thing on him: for he hath a witchcraft
Over the King in's Tongue.
Nor. O feare him not,
His ſpell in that is out: the King hath found
Matter againſt him, that for ever marres
The Hony of his Language. No, he's ſetled
(Not to come off) in his diſpleaſure.
Sur. Sir,
I ſhould be glad to heare ſuch Newes as this
Once every houre.
Nor. Beleeve it, this is true.
In the Divorce, his contrarie proceedings
Are all unfolded: wherein he appeares,
As I would wiſh mine Enemy.
Sur. How came
His practiſes to light?
Suf. Moſt ſtrangely.
Sur. O how? how?
Suf. The Cardinals Letters to the Pope miſcarried,

And come to th' eye o'th' King, wherein was read
How that the Cardinall did intreat his Holineſſe
To ſtay the Iudgement o'th' Divorce; for if
It did take place, I do (quoth he) perceive
My King is tangled in affection, to
A Creature of the Queenes, Lady Anne Bullen.
Sur. Ha's the King this?
Suf. Beleeve it.
Sur. Will this worke?
Cham. The King in this perceives him, how he coaſts
And hedges his owne way. But in this point,
All his trickes founder, and he brings his Phyſicke
After his patients death; the King already
Hath married the faire Lady.
Sur. Would he had.
Suf. May you be happy in your wiſh my Lord,
For I profeſſe you have it.
Sur. Now all my joy
Trace the Conjunction.
Suf. My Amen too't.
Nor. All mens.
Suf. There's order given for her Coronation:
Marry this is yet but yong, and may be left
To ſome eares unrecounted. But my Lords
She is a gallant Creature, and compleate
In minde and feature, I perſwade me, from her
Will fall ſome bleſſing to this Land, which ſhall
In it be memoriz'd.
Sur. But will the King
Digeſt this Letter of the Cardinals?
The Lord forbid.
Nor. Marry Amen.
Suf. No, no:
There be moe Waſpes that buz about his Noſe,
Will make this ſting the ſooner. Cardinall Campeius,
Is ſtolne away to Rome, hath 'tane no leave,
Ha's left the cauſe to'th' King unhandled, and
Is poſted as the Agent of our Cardinall,
To ſecond all his plot. I do aſſure you,
The King cry'de Ha, at this.
Cham. Now God incenſe him,
And let him cry Ha, lowder.
Norf. But my Lord
When returnes Cranmer?
Suf. He is return'd in his opinions, which
Have ſatisfied the King for his Divorce,
Together with all famous Colledges
Almoſt in Chriſtendome: ſhortly (I beleeve)
His ſecond Marriage ſhall be publiſhd, and
Her Coronation. Katherine no more
Shall be call'd Queene, but Princeſſe Dowager,
And Widdow to Prince Arthur.
Nor. This ſame Cranmer's
A worthy Fellow, and hath tane much paine
In the Kings buſineſſe.
Suf. He ha's, and we ſhall ſee him
For it, an Arch-byſhop.
Nor. So I heare.
Suf. 'Tis ſo.

Enter Wolſey and Cromwell.

The Cardinall.
Nor. Obſerve, obſerve, hee's moody.
Car. The Packet Cromwell,
Gav't you the King?
Crom. To his owne hand, in's Bed-chamber.
Card. Look'd he o'th' inſide of the Paper?
Crom. Preſently
He did unſeale them, and the firſt he view'd,
He did it with a Serious minde: a heede
Was in his countenance. You he bade
Attend him heere this Morning.
Card. Is he ready to come abroad?
Crom. I thinke by this he is.
Card. Leave me a while. Exit Cromwell.
It ſhall be to the Dutches of Alanſon,
The French Kings Siſter; He ſhall marry her.
Anne Bullen? No: Ile no Anne Bullens for him,
There's more in't then faire Viſage. Bullen?
No, wee'l no Bullens: Speedily I wiſh
To heare from Rome. The Marchioneſſe of Penbroke?
Nor. He's diſcontented.
Suf. May be he heares the King
Does whet his Anger to him.
Sur. Sharpe enough,
Lord for thy Iuſtice.
Car. The late Queenes Gentlewoman?
A Knights Daughter
To be her Miſtris Miſtris? The Queenes, Queene?
This Candle burnes not cleere, 'tis I muſt ſnuffe it,
Then out it goes. What though I know her vertuous
And well deſerving? yet I know her for
A ſpleeny Lutheran, and not wholſome to
Our cauſe, that ſhe ſhould lye i'th' boſome of
Our hard rul'd King. Againe, there is ſprung up
An Heretique, an Arch-one; Cranmer, one
Hath crawl'd into the favour of the King,
And is his Oracle.
Nor. He is vex'd at ſomething.

Enter King, reading of a Scedule.

Sur. I would 'twer ſomething ẏ would fret the ſtring,
The Maſter-cord on's heart.
Suf. The King, the King.
King. What piles of Wealth hath he accumulated
To his owne portion? And what expence by 'th' houre
Seemes to flow from him? How, i'th' name of Thrift
Does he rake this together? Now my Lords,
Saw you the Cardinall?
Nor. My Lord, we have
Stood heere obſerving him. Some ſtrange Commotion
Is in his braine: He bites his lip and ſtarts,
Stops on a ſodaine, lookes upon the ground,
Then layes his finger on his Temple: ſtraight
Springs out into faſt gate, then ſtops againe,
Strikes his breſt hard, and anon, he caſts
His eye againſt the Moone: in moſt ſtrange Poſtures
We have ſeene him ſet himſelfe.
King. It may well be,
There is a mutiny in's mind. This morning,
Papers of State he ſent me, to peruſe
As I requir'd: and wot you what I found
There (on my Conſcience put unwittingly)
Forſooth an inventorie, thus importing
The ſeverall parcels of his Plate, his Treaſure,
Rich ſtuffes and Ornaments of Houſhold, which
I finde at ſuch proud Rate, that it out-ſpeakes
Poſſeſſion of a Subject.
Nor. It's heavens will,
Some Spirit put this paper in the Packet,
To bleſſe your eye withall.
King. If we did thinke

His Contemplations were above the earth,
And fixt on ſpirituall object, he ſhould ſtill
Dwell in his Muſings, but I am affraid
His Thinkings are below the Moone, not worth
His ſerious conſidering.

King takes his Seat, whiſpers Lovell, who goes to the Cardinall.

Car. Heaven forgive me,
Ever God bleſſe your Highneſſe.
King. Good my Lord,
You are full of Heavenly ſtuffe, and beare the Inventory,
Of your beſt Graces, in your minde; the which
You were now running o're: you have ſcarſe time
To ſteale from Spirituall leyſure, a briefe ſpan
To keepe your earthly Audit, ſure in that
I deeme you an ill Husband, and am glad
To have you therein my Companion.
Car. Sir,
For Holy Offices I have a time; a time
To thinke upon the part of buſineſſe, which
I beare i'th' State: and Nature does require
Her times of preſervation, which perforce
I her fraile ſonne, among'ſt my Brethren mortall,
Muſt give my tendance to.
King. You have ſaid well.
Car. And ever may your Highneſſe yoake together,
(As I will lend you cauſe) my doing well,
With my well ſaying.
King. 'Tis well ſaid agen,
And 'tis a kinde of good deede to ſay well,
And yet words are no deeds. My Father lov'd you,
He ſaid he did, and with his deed did Crowne
His word upon you. Since I had my Office,
I have kept you next my Heart, have not alone
Imploy'd you where high Profits might come home,
But par'd my preſent Havings, to beſtow
My Bounties upon you.
Car. What ſhould this meane?
Sur. The Lord increaſe this buſineſſe.
King. Have I not made you
The prime man of the State? I pray you tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you have found true:
And if you may confeſſe it, ſay withall
If you are bound to us, or no. What ſay you?
Car. My Soveraigne, I confeſſe your Royall graces
Showr'd on me daily, have bene more then could
My ſtudied purpoſes require, which went
Beyond all mans endeavors. My endeavors,
Have ever come too ſhort of my Deſires,
Yet fill'd with my Abilities: Mine owne ends
Have beene ſo, that evermore they pointed
To 'th' good of your moſt Sacred Perſon, and
The profit of the State. For your great Graces
Heap'd upon me (poore Vndeſerver) I
Can nothing render but Allegiant thankes,
My Prayres to heaven for you; my Loyalty
Which ever ha's, and ever ſhall be growing,
Till death (that Winter) kill it.
King. Fairely anſwer'd:
A Loyall, and obedient Subject is
Therein illuſtrated, the Honor of it
Does pay the Act of it, as i'th' contrary
The fowleneſſe is the puniſhment. I preſume,
That as my hand ha's open'd Bounty to you,
My heart drop'd Love, my powre rain'd Honor, more
On you, then any: So your Hand, and Heart,
Your Braine, and every Function of your power,
Should, notwithſtanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twer in Loves particular, be more
To me your Friend, then any.
Car. I do profeſſe,
That for your Highneſſe good, I ever labour'd
More then mine owne: that am, have, and will be (Though all the world ſhould cracke their duty to you,
And throw it from their Soule, though perils did
Abound, as thicke as thought could make 'em, and Appeare in formes more horrid) yet my Duty,
As doth a Rocke againſt the chiding Flood,
Should the approach of this wilde River breake,
And ſtand unſhaken yours.
King. 'Tis Nobly ſpoken;
Take notice Lords, he ha's a Loyall breſt,
For you have ſeene him open't. Read o're this,
And after this, and then to Breakfaſt with
What appetite you have.

Exit King, frowning upon the Cardinall, the Nobles throng after him ſmiling, and whiſpering.

Car. What ſhould this meane?
What ſodaine Anger's this? How have I reap'd it?
He parted Frowning from me, as if Ruine
Leap'd from his Eyes. So lookes the chafed Lyon
Vpon the daring Huntſman that has gall'd him:
Then makes him nothing. I muſt reade this paper:
I feare the Story of his Anger. 'Tis ſo:
This paper ha's undone me: 'Tis th' Accompt
Of all that world of Wealth I have drawne together
For mine owne ends, (Indeed to gaine the Popedome
And fee my Friends in Rome.) O Negligence!
Fit for a Foole to fall by: What croſſe Divell
Made me put this maine Secret in the Packet
I ſent the King? Is there no way to cure this?
No new device to beate this from his Braines?
I know 'twill ſtirre him ſtrongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in ſpight of Fortune
Will bring me off againe. What's this? To th' Pope?
The Letter (as I live) with all the Buſineſſe
I writ to's Holineſſe. Nay then, farewell:
I have touch'd the higheſt point of all my Greatneſſe,
And from that full Meridian of my Glory,
I haſte now to my Setting. I ſhall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the Evening,
And no man ſee me more.

Enter to Woolſey, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke, the Earle of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlaine.

Nor. Heare the Kings pleaſure Cardinall,
Who commands you
To render up the Great Seale preſently
Into our hands, and to Confine your ſelfe
To Aſher-houſe, my Lord of Wincheſters,
Till you heare further from his Highneſſe.
Car. Stay:
Where's your Commiſſion? Lords, words cannot carry
Authority ſo weighty.
Suf. Who dare croſſe 'em,
Bearing the Kings will from his mouth expreſſely?
Car. Till I finde more then will, or words to do it,
(I meane your malice) know, Officious Lords,
I dare, and muſt deny it. Now I feele
Of what courſe Mettle ye are molded, Envy;
How eagerly ye follow my Diſgraces

As if it fed ye, and how ſleeke and wanton
Ye appeare in every thing may bring my ruine?
Follow your envious courſes, men of Malice;
You have Chriſtian warrant for'em, and no doubt
In time will finde their fit Rewards. That Seale
You aske with ſuch a Violence, the King
(Mine, and your Maiſter) with his owne hand, gave me:
Bad me enjoy it, with the Place, and Honors
During my life; and to confirme his Goodneſſe,
Ti'de it by Letters Patents. Now, who'll take it?
Sur. The King that gave it.
Car. It muſt be himſelfe then.
Sur. Thou art a proud Traitor, Prieſt.
Car. Proud Lord, thou lyeſt:
Within theſe forty houres, Surrey durſt better
Have burnt that Tongue, then ſaide ſo.
Sur. Thy Ambition
(Thou Scarler ſinne) robb'd this bewailing Land
Of Noble Buckingham, my Father in-Law,
The heads of all thy Brother-Cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy beſt parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a haire of his. Plague of your policy,
You ſent me Deputy for Ireland,
Farre from his ſuccour; from the King, from all
That might have mercy on the fault, thou gav'ſt him:
Whil'ſt your great Goodneſſe, out of holy pitty,
Abſolv'd him with an Axe.
Wol. This, and all elſe
This talking Lord can lay upon my credit,
I anſwer, is moſt falſe. The Duke by Law
Found his deſerts. How innocent I was
From any private malice in his end,
His Noble Iury, and foule Cauſe can witneſſe.
If I lov'd many words, Lord, I ſhould tell you,
You have as little Honeſty, as Honor,
That in the way of Loyalty, and Truth,
Toward the King, my ever Royall Maiſter,
Dare mate a ſounder man then Surry can be,
And all that love his follies.
Sur. By my Soule,
Your long Coat (Prieſt) protects you,
Thou ſhould'ſt feele
My Sword i'th'life blood of thee elſe. My Lords,
Can ye endure to heare this Arrogance?
And from this Fellow? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus Iaded by a peece of Scarlet,
Farewell Nobility: let his Grace go forward,
And dare us with his Cap, like Larkes.
Car. All Goodneſſe
Is poiſon to thy Stomacke.
Sur. Yes, that goodneſſe
Of gleaning all the Lands wealth into one,
Into your owne hands (Card'nall) by Extortion:
The goodneſſe of your intercepted Packets
You writ to'th Pope, againſt the King: your goodneſſe
Since you provoke me, ſhall be moſt notorious.
My Lord of Norfolke, as you are truly Noble,
As you reſpect the common good, the State
Of our deſpis'd Nobility, our Iſſues,
(Who if he live, will ſcarſe be Gentlemen)
Produce the grand ſumme of his ſinnes, the Articles
Collected from his life. Ile ſtartle you
Worſe then the Sacring Bell, when the browne Wench
Lay kiſſing in your Armes, Lord Cardinall.
Car. How much me thinkes, I could deſpiſe this man,
But that I am bound in Charity againſt it.
Nor. Thoſe Articles, my Lord, are in the Kings hand:
But thus much, they are foule ones.
Wol. So much fairer
And ſpotleſſe, ſhall mine Innocence ariſe,
When the King knowes my Truth.
Sur. This cannot ſave you:
I thanke my Memory, I yet remember
Some of thoſe Articles, and out they ſhall.
Now, if you can bluſh, and cry guilty Cardinall,
You'l ſhew a little Honeſty.
Wol. Speake on Sir,
I dare your worſt Objections: If I bluſh,
It is to ſee a Nobleman want manners.
Sur. I had rather want thoſe, then my head;
Have at you.
Firſt, that without the Kings aſſent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a Legate, by which power
You maim'd the Iuriſdiction of all Biſhops.
Nor. Then, That in all you writ to Rome, or elſe
To Forraigne Princes, Ego & Rex meus,
Was ſtill inſcrib'd: in which you brought the King
To be your Servant.
Suf. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of King or Councell, when you went
Ambaſſador to the Emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders, the Great Seale.
Sur. Item, You ſent a large Commiſſion
To Gregory de Caſſado, to conclude
Without the Kings will, or the States allowance,
A League betweene hie Highneſſe, and Ferrara.
Suf. That out of meere Ambition, you have caus'd
Your holy-Hat to be ſtampt on the Kings Coine.
Sur. Then, that you have ſent innumerable ſubſtance,
(by what meanes got, I leave to your owne conſcience)
To furniſh Rome, and to prepare the wayes
You have for Dignities, to the meere undooing
Of all the Kingdome. Many more there are,
Which ſince they are of you, and odious,
I will not taint my mouth with.
Cham. O my Lord,
Preſſe not a falling man too farre: 'tis Vertue:
His faults lye open to the Lawes, let them
(Not you) correct him. My heart weepes to ſee him
So little, of his great Selfe.
Sur. I forgive him.
Suf. Lord Cardinall, the Kings further pleaſure is,
Becauſe all thoſe things you haue done of late
By your power Legantive within this Kingdome,
Fall into'th'compaſſe of a Premunire;
That therefore ſuch a Writ be ſued againſt you,
To forfeit all your Goods, Lands, Tenements,
Caſtles, and whatſoever, and to be
Out of the Kings protection. This is my Charge.
Nor. And ſo wee'l leave you to your Meditations
How to live better. For your ſtubborne anſwer
Abount the giuing backe the Great Seale to us,
The King ſhall know it, and (no doubt) ſhall thanke you.
So fare you well, my little good Lord Cardinall.
Exeunt all but Wolſey.
Wol. So farewell, to the little good you beare me.
Farewell? A long farewell to all my Greatneſſe.
This is the ſtate of Man; to day he puts forth
The tender Leaves of hopes, to morrow Bloſſomes,
And beares his bluſhing Honors thicke upon him:
The third day, comes a Froſt; a killing Froſt,
And when he thinkes, good eaſie man, full ſurely

His Greatneſſe is a ripening, nippes his roote,
And then he fals as I do. I have ventur'd
Like little wanton Boyes that ſwim on bladders:
This many Summers in a Sea of Glory,
But farre beyond my depth: my high-blowne Pride
At length broke under me, and now ha's left me
Weary, and old with Service, to the mercy
Of a rude ſtreame, that muſt for ever hide me.
Vaine pompe, and glory of this World, I hate ye,
I feele my heart new open'd. Oh how wretched
Is that poore man, that hangs on Princes favours?
There is betwixt that ſmile we would aſpire to,
That ſweet Aſpect of Princes, and their ruine,
More pangs, and feares then warres, or women have;
And when he falles, he falles like Lucifer,
Never to hope againe.

Enter Cromwell, ſtanding amazed.

Why how now Cromwell?
Crom. I have no power to ſpeake Sir.
Car. What, amaz'd
At my misfortunes? Can the Spirit wonder
A great man ſhould decline. Nay, and you weep
I am falne indeed.
Crom. How does your Grace.
Card. Why well:
Never ſo truly happy, my good Cromwell,
I know my ſelfe now, and I feele within me,
A peace above all earthly Dignities,
A ſtill, and quiet Conſcience. The King ha's cur'd me,
I humbly thanke his Grace: and from theſe ſhoulders
Theſe ruin'd Pillers, out of pitty, taken
A loade, would ſinke a Navy, (too much Honor.)
O 'tis a burden Cromwell, 'tis a burden
Too heavy for a man, that hopes for Heaven.
Crom. I am glad your Grace,
Ha's made that right uſe of it.
Card. I hope I have:
I am able now (me thinkes)
(Out of a Fortitude of Soule, I feele)
To endure more Miſeries, and greater farre
Then my Weake-hearted Enemies, dare offer.
What Newes abroad?
Crom. The heavieſt, and the worſt,
Is your diſpleaſure with the King.
Card. God bleſſe him.
Crom. The next is, that Sir Thomas Moore is choſen
Lord Chancellor, in your place.
Card. That's ſomewhat ſodain.
But he's a Learned man. May he continue
Long in his Highneſſe favour, and do Iuſtice
For Truths-ſake, and his Conſcience; that his bones,
When he ha's run his courſe, and ſleepes in Bleſſings,
May have a Tombe of Orphants teares wept on him.
What more?
Crom. That Cranmer is return'd with welcome;
Inſtall'd Lord Arch-byſhop of Canterbury.
Card. That's Newes indeed.
Crom. Laſt, that the Lady Anne,
Whom the King hath in ſecrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open, as his Queene,
Going to Chappell: and the voice is now
Onely about her Coronation.
Card. There was the waight that pull'd me downe.
O Cromwell,
The King ha's gone beyond me: All my Glories
In that one woman, I have loſt for ever.
No Sun, ſhall ever uſher forth mine Honors,
Or gilde againe the Noble Troopes that waighted
Vpon my ſmiles. Go get thee from me Cromwel,
I am a poore falne man, unworthy now
To be thy Lord, and Maiſter. Seeke the King
(That Sun, I pray may never ſet) I have told him,
What, and how true thou art; he will advance thee:
Some little memory of me, will ſtirre him
(I know his Noble Nature) not to let
Thy hopefull ſervice periſh too. Good Cromwell
Neglect him not; make uſe now, and prouide
For thine owne future ſafety.
Crom. O my Lord,
Muſt I then leave you? Muſt I needes forgo
So good, ſo Noble, and ſo true a Maiſter?
Beare witneſſe, all that have not hearts of Iron,
With what a ſorrow Cromwel leaves his Lord.
The King ſhall have my ſervice; but my prayers
For ever, and for ever ſhall be yours.
Card. Cromwel, I did not thinke to ſhed a teare
In all my Miſeries: But thou haſt forc'd me
(Out of thy honeſt truth) to play the Woman.
Let's dry our eyes: And thus farre heare me Cromwel,
And when I am forgotten, as I ſhall be,
And ſleepe in dull cold Marble, where no mention
Of me, more muſt be heard of: Say I taught thee;
Say Wolſey, that once trod the wayes of Glory,
And ſounded all the Depths, and Shoales of Honor,
Found thee a way (out of his wracke) to riſe in:
A ſure, and ſafe one, though thy Maiſter miſt it.
Marke but my Fall, and that that Ruin'd me:
Cromwel, I charge thee, fling away Ambition,
By that ſinne fell the Angels: how can man then
(The Image of his Maker) hope to win by it?
Love thy ſelfe laſt, cheriſh thoſe hearts that hate thee:
Corruption wins not more then Honeſty.
Still in thy right hand, carry gentle Peace
To ſilence envious Tongues. Be juſt, and feare not;
Let all the ends thou aym'ſt at, be thy Countries,
Thy Gods, and Truths. Then if thou fall'ſt (O Cromwell)
Thou fall'ſt a bleſſed Martyr.
Serve the King: And prythee leade me in:
There take an Inventory of all I have,
To the laſt peny, 'tis the Kings. My Robe,
And my Integrity to Heaven, is all,
I dare now call mine owne. O Cromwel, Cromwel
Had I but ſerv'd my God, with halfe the Zeale
I ſerv'd my King: he would not in mine Age
Have left me naked to mine Enemies.
Crom. Good Sir, have patience.
Card. So I have. Farewell
The Hopes of Court, my Hopes in Heaven do dwell.
Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.

1 Y'are well met once againe.
2 So are you.
1 You come to take your ſtand heere, and behold
The Lady Anne, paſſe from her Coronation.

2 'Tis all my buſineſſe. At our laſt encounter,
The Duke of Buckingham came from his Triall.
1 'Tis very true. But that time offer'd ſorrow,
This generall joy.
2 'Tis well: The Citizens
I am ſure have ſhewne at full their Royall minds,
As let'em have their rights, they are ever forward
In Celebration of this day with Shewes,
Pageants, and Sights of Honor.
1 Never greater,
Nor Ile aſſure you better taken Sir.
2 May I be bold to aske what that containes,
That Paper in your hands.
1 Yes, 'tis the Liſt
Of thoſe that claime their Offices this day,
By cuſtome of the Coronation.
The Duke of Suffolke is the firſt, and claimes
To be high Steward; Next the Duke of Norfolke,
He to be Earle Marſhall: you may reade the reſt.
1 I thanke you Sir: Had I not knowne thoſe cuſtomes,
I ſhould have beene beholding to your Paper:
But I beſeech you, what's become of Katherine
The Princeſſe Dowager? How goes her buſineſſe?
1 That I can tell you too. The Archbiſhop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned, and Reverend Fathers of his Order,
Held a late Court at Dunſtable; ſixe miles off
From Ampthill, where the Princeſſe lay, to which
She was often cyted by them, but appear'd not:
And to be ſhort, for not Appearance, and
The Kings late Scruple, by the maine aſſent
Of all theſe Learned men, ſhe was divorc'd,
And the late Marriage made of none effect:
Since which, ſhe was remov'd to Kymmalton,
Where ſhe remaines now ſicke.
2 Alas good Lady.
The Trumpets ſound: Stand cloſe,
The Queene is comming. Ho-boyes.

The Order of the Coronation.

1 A lively Flouriſh of Trumpets.
2 Then two Iudges.
3 Lord Chancelor, with Purſe and Mace before him.
4 Quirriſters ſinging. Muſicke
5 Maior of London, bearing the Mace. Then Garter, in his Coate of Armes, and on his head he wore a Gilt Copper Crowne.
6 Marqueſſe Dorſet, bearing a Scepter of Gold, on his head, a Demy Coronall of Gold. With him, the Earle of Surrey bearing the Rod of Silver with the Dove, Crowned with an Earles Coronet. Collars of Eſſes.
7 Duke of Suffolke, in his Robe of Eſtate, his Coronet on his head, bearing a long white Wand, as High Steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolke, with the Rod of Marſhalſhip, a Coronet on his head. Collars of Eſſes.
8 A Canopy, borne by foure of the Cinque-Ports, under it the Queene in her Robe, in her haire, richly adorned with Pearle, Crowned. On each ſide her, the Biſhops of London and Wincheſter.
9 The Old Dutcheſſe of Norfolke, in a Coronall of Gold, wrought with Flowers, bearing the Queenes Traine.
10 Certaine Ladies or Counteſſes, with plaine Circles of Gold, without Flowers.

Exeunt, firſt paſſing over the Stage in Order and State, and then, A great Flouriſh of Trumpets.

2 A Royall Traine beleeve me: Theſe I know:
Who's that that beares the Scepter?
1 Marqueſſe Dorſet,
And that the Earle of Surrey, with the Rod.
2 A bold brave Gentleman. That ſhould be
The Duke of Suffolke.
1 'Tis the ſame: high Steward.
2 And that my Lord of Norfolke?
1 Yes.
2 Heaven bleſſe thee,
Thou haſt the ſweeteſt face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a Soule, ſhe is an Angell;
Our King ha's all the Indies in his Armes,
And more, and richer, when he ſtraines that Lady,
I cannot blame his Conſcience.
1 They that beare
The Cloath of Honor over her, are foure Barons
Of the Cinque-Ports.
2 Thoſe men are happy,
And ſo are all, are neere her.
I take it, ſhe that carries up the Traine,
Is that old Noble Lady, Dutcheſſe of Norfolke.
1 It is, and all the reſt are Counteſſes.
2 Their Coronets ſay ſo. Theſe are Starres indeed,
And ſometimes falling ones.
2 No more of that.

Enter a third Gentleman.

1 God ſave you Sir. Where have you bin broiling?
3 Among the crow'd i'th'Abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more: I am ſtifled
With the meere rankneſſe of their joy.
2 You ſaw the Ceremony?
3 That I did.
1 How was it?
3 Well worth the ſeeing.
2 Good Sir, ſpeake it to us?
3 As well as I am able. The rich ſtreame
Of Lords, and Ladies, having brought the Queene
To a prepar'd place in the Quire, fell off
A diſtance from her; while her Grace ſate downe
To reſt a while, ſome halfe an houre, or ſo,
In a rich Chaire of State, oppoſing freely
The Beauty of her Perſon to the People.
Beleeve me Sir, ſhe is the goodlieſt Woman
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, ſuch a noyſe aroſe,
As the ſhrowdes make at Sea, in a ſtiffe Tempeſt,
As lowd, and to as many Tunes. Hats, Cloakes,
(Doublets, I thinke) flew up, and had their Faces
Bin looſe, this day they had beene loſt. Such joy
I never ſaw before. Great belly'd women,
That had not halfe a weeke to go, like Rammes
In the old time of Warre, would ſhake the preaſe
And make'em reele before'em. No man living
Could ſay this is my wife there, all were woven
So ſtrangely in one peece.
2 But what follow'd?
3 At length, her Grace roſe, and with modeſt paces
Came to the Altar, where ſhe kneel'd, and Saint-like
Caſt her faire eyes to Heaven, and pray'd devoutly.
Then roſe againe, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the Arch-byſhop of Canterbury,
She had all the Royall makings of a Queene;
As holy Oyle, Edward Confeſſors Crowne,
The Rod, and Bird of Peace, and all ſuch Emblemes
Laid Nobly on her: which perform'd, the Quire

With all the choyſeſt Muſicke of the Kingdome,
Together ſung Te Deum. So ſhe parted,
And with the ſame full State pac'd backe againe
To Yorke-Place, where the Feaſt is held.
1 Sir.
You muſt no more call it Yorke-place, that's paſt:
For ſince the Cardinall fell, that Titles loſt,
'Tis now the Kings, and call'd White-Hall.
3 I know it:
But 'tis ſo lately alter'd, that the old name
Is freſh about me.
2 What two Reverend Byſhops
Were thoſe that went on each ſide of the Queene?
3 Stokeley and Gardiner, the one of Wincheſter,
Newly preferr'd from the Kings Secretary:
The other London.
2 He of Winceſter
Is held no great good lover of the Archbiſhop,
The vertuous Cranmer.
3 All the Land knowes that:
How ever, yet there is no great breach, when it comes
Cranmer will finde a Friend will not ſhrinke from him.
2 Who may that be, I pray you.
3 Thomas Cromwell,
A man in much eſteeme with th'King, and truly
A worthy Friend. The King ha's made him
Maiſter o'th' Iewell Houſe,
And one already of the Privy Councell.
2 He will deſerve more.
3 Yes without all doubt.
Come Gentlemen ye ſhall go my way,
Which is to'th Court, and there ye ſhall be my Gueſts:
Something I can command. As I walke thither,
Ile tell ye more.
Both. You may command us Sir. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Katherine Dowager, ſicke, lead betweene Griffith, her Gentleman Vſher, and Patience
her Woman.

Grif. How do's your Grace?
Kath. O Griffith, ſicke to death:
My Legges like loaded Branches bow to'th' Earth,
Willing to leave their burthen: Reach a Chaire,
So now (me thinkes) I feele a little eaſe.
Did'ſt thou not tell me Griffith, as thou lead'ſt me,
That the great Childe of Honor, Cardinall Wolſey
Was dead?
Grif. Yes Madam: but I thinke your Grace
Out of the paine you ſuffer'd, gave no eare too't.
Kath. Pre'thee good Griffith, tell me how he dy'de.
If well, he ſtept before me happily
For my example.
Grif. Well, the voice goes Madam,
For after the ſtout Earle Northumberland
Arreſted him at Yorke, and brought him forward
As a man ſorely tainted, to his Anſwer,
He fell ſicke ſodainly, and grew ſo ill
He could not ſit his Mule.
Kath. Alas poore man.
Grif. At laſt, with eaſie Rodes he came to Leiceſter,
Lodg'd in the Abbey; where the reverend Abbot
With all his Covent, honorably receiv'd him;
To whom he gave theſe words. O Father Abbot,
An old man, broken with the ſtormes of State,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye:
Give him a little earth for Charity.
So went to bed; where eagerly his ſickneſſe
Purſu'd him ſtill, and three nights after this,
About the houre of eight, which he himſelfe
Foretold ſhould be his laſt, full Repentance,
Continuall Meditations, Teares, and Sorrowes,
He give his Honors to the world agen,
His bleſſed part to Heaven, and ſlept in peace.
Kath. So may he reſt,
His faults lye on him:
Yet thus farre Griffith, give me leave to ſpeake him,
And yet with Charity. He was a man
Of an unbounded ſtomacke, ever ranking
Himſelfe with Princes. One that by ſuggeſtion
Ty'de all the Kingdome. Symony, was faire play,
His owne Opinion was his Law. I'th' preſence
He would ſay untruths, and be ever double
Both in his words, and meaning. He was never
(But where he meant to Ruine) pittifull.
His Promiſes, were as he then was, Mighty:
But his performance, as he is now, Nothing:
Of his owne body he was ill, and gave
The Clergy ill example.
Grif. Noble Madam:
Mens evill manners, live in Braſſe, their Vertues
We write in Water. May it pleaſe your Highneſſe
To heare me ſpeake his good now?
Kath. Yes good Griffith,
I were malicious elſe.
Grif. This Cardinall.
Though from an humble Stocke, undoubtedly
Was faſhion'd to much Honor. From his Cradle
He was a Scholler, and a ripe, and good one:
Exceeding wiſe, faire ſpoken, and perſwading:
Lofty, and ſowre to them that lov'd him not:
But to thoſe men that ſought him, ſweet as Summer.
And though he were unſatisfied in getting,
(Which was a ſinne) yet in beſtowing, Madam,
He was moſt Princely: Ever witneſſe for him
Thoſe twinnes of Learning, that he rais'd in you,
Ipſwich and Oxford: one of which, fell with him,
Vnwilling to out-live the good that did it.
The other (though unfiniſh'd) yet ſo famous,
So excellent in Art, and ſtill ſo riſing,
That Chriſtendome ſhall ever ſpeake his Vertue.
His Overthrow, heap'd Happineſſe upon him:
For then, and not till then, he felt himſelfe,
And found the Bleſſedneſſe of being little.
And to adde greater Honors to his Age
Then man could give him; he dy'de, fearing God.
Kath. After my death, I wiſh no other Herald,
No other ſpeaker of my living Actions,
To keepe mine Honor, from Corruption,
But ſuch an honeſt Chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I moſt hated Living, thou haſt made me
With thy Religious Truth, and Modeſty,
(Now in his Aſhes) Honor: Peace be with him.
Patience, be neere me ſtill, and ſet me lower.
I have not long to trouble thee. Good Griffith,
Cauſe the Muſitians play me that ſad note
I nam'd my Knell; whil'ſt I ſit meditating

On that Cœleſtiall Harmony I go too.

Sad and ſolemne Muſicke.

Grif. She is aſleepe: Good wench, let's ſit down quiet,
For feare we wake her. Softly, gentle Patience.

The Viſion.

Enter ſolemnely tripping one after another, ſixe Perſonages, clad in white Robes, wearing on their heades Garlands of Bayes, and golden Vizards on their faces, Branches of Bayes or Palme in their hands. They firſt Conge unto her, then Dance: and at certaine Changes, the firſt two hold a ſpare Garland over her Head, at which the other foure make reverend Curtſies. Then the two that held the Garland, deliver the ſame to the other next two, who obſerue the ſame order in their Charges, and holding the Garland over her head. Which done, they deliver the ſame Garland to the laſt two: who likewiſe obſerve the ſame Order. At which (as it were by inſpiration) ſhe makes (in her ſleepe) ſignes of rejoycing, & holdeth up her hands to heaven. And ſo, in their Dancing vaniſh, carrying the Garland with them. The Muſicke continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?
And leave me heere in wretchedneſſe, behinde ye?
Grif. Madam, we are heere.
Kath. It is not you I call for,
Saw ye none enter ſince I ſlept?
Grif. None, Madam.
Kath. No? Saw you not even now a bleſſed Troope
Invite me to a Banquet, whoſe bright faces
Caſt a thouſand beames upon me, like the Sun?
They promis'd me eternall Happineſſe,
And brought me Garlands (Griffith) which I feele
I am not worthy yet to weare: I ſhall aſſuredly.
Grif. I am moſt joyfull Madam, ſuch good dreames
Poſſeſſe your Fancy.
Kath. Bid the Muſicke leave,
They are harſh and heavy to me. Muſicke ceaſes.
Pati. Do you note
How much her Grace is alter'd on the ſodaine?
How long her face is drawne? How pale ſhe lookes,
And of an earthy cold? Marke her eyes?
Grif. She is going Wench. Pray, pray.
Pat. Heaven comfort her.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. And't like your Grace——
Kat. You are a ſawcy Fellow,
Deſerve we no more Reverence?
Grif. You are too blame,
Knowing ſhe will not looſe her wonted Greatneſſe
To uſe ſo rude behaviour. Go to, kneele.
Meſ. I humbly do entreat your Highneſſe pardon,
My haſt made me unmannerly. There is ſtaying
A Gentleman ſent from the King, to ſee you.
Kath. Admit him entrance Griffith. But this Fellow
Let me ne're ſee againe. Exit Meſſeng.

Enter Lord Capuchius.

If my ſight faile not,
You ſhould be Lord Ambaſſador from the Emperor,
My Royall Nephew, and your name Capuchius.
Cap. Madam the ſame. Your Servant.
Kath. O my Lord,
The Times and Titles now are alter'd ſtrangely
With me, ſince firſt you knew me.
But I pray you,
What is your pleaſure with me?
Cap. Noble Lady,
Firſt mine owne ſervice to your Grace, the next
The Kings requeſt, that I would viſit you,
Who greeves much for your weakneſſe, and by me
Sends you his Princely Commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.
Kath. O my good Lord, that comfort comes too late,
'Tis like a Pardon after Execution;
That gentle Phyſicke given in time, had cur'd me:
But now I am paſt all Comforts heere, but Prayers.
How does his Highneſſe?
Cap. Madam, in good health.
Kath. So may he ever do, and ever flouriſh,
When I ſhall dwell with Wormes, and my poore name
Baniſh'd the Kingdome. Patience, is that Letter
I caus'd you write, yet ſent away?
Pat. No Madam.
Kath. Sir, I moſt humbly pray you to deliver
This to my Lord the King.
Cap. Moſt willingly Madam.
Kath. In which I have commended to his goodneſſe
The Modell of our chaſte loves: his yong daughter,
The dewes of Heaven fall thicke in Bleſſings on her,
Beſeeching him to give her vertuous breeding.
She is yong, and of a Noble modeſt Nature,
I hope ſhe will deſerve well; and a little
To love her for her Mothers ſake: that lov'd him:
Heaven knowes how deerely.
My next poore Petition
Is, that his Noble Grace would have ſome pittie
Vpon my wretched women, that ſo long
Have follow'd both my Fortunes, faithfully,
Of which there is not one, I dare avow
(And now I ſhould not lye) but will deſerve
For Vertue, and true Beauty of the Soule,
For honeſty, and decent Carriage
A right good Huſband (let him be a Noble)
And ſure thoſe men are happy that ſhall have'em.
The laſt is for my men, they are the pooreſt,
(But poverty could never draw'em from me)
That they may have their wages, duly paid'em,
And ſomething over to remember me by.
If Heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life
And able meanes, we had not parted thus.
Theſe are the whole Contents, and good my Lord,
By that you love the deereſt in this world,
As you wiſh Chriſtian peace to ſoules departed,
Stand theſe poore peoples Friend, and urge the King
To do me this laſt right.
Cap. By Heaven I will.
Or let me looſe the faſhion of a man.
Kath. I thanke you honeſt Lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his Highneſſe:
Say his long trouble now is paſſing
Out of this world. Tell him in death I bleſt him
(For ſo I will) mine eyes grow dimme. Farewell
My Lord. Griffith farewell. Nay Patience,
You muſt not leave me yet. I muſt to bed,
Call in more women. When I am dead, good Wench,
Let me be us'd with Honor; ſtrew me over
With Maiden Flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaſte Wife, to my Grave: Embalme me,
Then lay me forth (although unqueen'd) yet like
A Queene, and Daughter to a King enterre me.
I can no more.

Exeunt leading Katherine.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, a Page with a Torch before him, met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gard. It's one a clocke Boy, is't not.
Boy. It hath ſtrooke.
Gard. Theſe ſhould be houres ſor neceſſities,
Not for delights: Times to repayre our Nature
With comforting repoſe, and not for us
To waſte theſe times. Good houre of night Sir Thomas:
Whether ſo late?
Lov. Came you from the King, my Lord?
Gar. I did Sir Thomas, and left him at Primero
With the Duke of Suffolke.
Lov. I muſt to him too
Before he go to bed. Ile take my leave.
Gar. Not yet Sir Thomas Lovell: what's the matter?
It ſeemes you are in haſt: and if there be
No great offence belongs too't, give your Friend
Some touch of your late buſineſſe: Affaires that walke
(As they ſay Spirits do) at midnight, have
In them a wilder Nature, then the buſineſſe
That ſeekes diſpatch by day.
Lou. My Lord, I love you;
And durſt commend a ſecret to your eare
Much waightier then this worke. The Queens in Labor
They ſay in great Extremity, and fear'd
Shee'l with the Labour, end.
Gar. The fruite ſhe goe with
I pray for heartily, that it may finde
Good time, and live: but for the Stocke Sir Thomas,
I wiſh it grubb'd up now.
Lov. Me thinkes I could
Cry the Amen, and yet my Conſcience ſayes
Shee's a good Creature, and ſweet-Lady do's
Deſerve our better wiſhes.
Gar. But Sir, Sir.
Heare me Sir Thomas, y'are a Gentleman
Of mine owne way. I know you Wiſe, Religious,
And let me tell you, it will ne're be well,
'Twill not Sir Thomas Lovell, tak't of me,
Till Cranmer Cromwell, her two hands, and ſhee
Sleepe in their Graves.
Lov. Now Sir, you ſpeake of two
The moſt remark'd ith' Kingdome: as for Cromwel,
Beſide that of the Iewell-Houſe, is made Maiſter
O'th' Rolles, and the Kings Secretary. Further Sir,
Stands in the gap and Trade of moe Preferments,
With which the Lime will loade him. Th'Archbyſhop
Is the Kings hand, and tongue, and who dare ſpeake
One ſyllable againſt him?
Gar. Yes, yes. Sir Thomas,
There are that Dare, and I my ſelfe have ventur'd
To ſpeake my minde of him: and indeed this day,
Sir (I may tell it you) I thinke I have Incenſt the Lords o'th' Councell, that he is
(For ſo I know he is, they know he is)
A moſt Arch-Heretique, a Peſtilence
That does infect the Land: with which, they moved
Have broken with the King, who hath ſo farre
Given eare to our Complaint, of his great Grace.
And Princely Care, fore-ſeeing thoſe fell Miſchiefes,
Our Reaſons layd before him, hath commanded
To morrow Morning to the Councell Boord
He be convented. He's a ranke weed Sir Thomas,
And we muſt root him out. From your Affaires
I hinder you too long: Good night, Sir Thomas.

Exit Gardiner and Page.

Lov. Many good nights, my Lord, I reſt your ſervant.

Enter King and Suffolke.

King. Charles, I will play no more to night,
My mindes not on't, you are too hard for me.
Suf. Sir, I did never win of you before.
King. But litle Charles,
Nor ſhall not when my Fancies on my play.
Now Lovel, from the Queene what is the Newes,
Lov. I could not perſonally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman,
I ſent your Meſſage, who return'd her thankes
In the great'ſt humbleneſſe, and deſir'd your Highneſſe
Moſt hartily to pray for her.
King. What ſay'ſt thou? Ha?
To pray for her? What, is ſhe crying out?
Lov. So ſaid her woman. and that her ſuffrance made
Almoſt each pang, a death.
King. Alas good Lady.
Suf. God ſafely quit her of her Burthen, and
With gentle Travaile, to the gladding of
Your Higneſſe with an Heire.
King. 'Tis midnight Charles,
Prythee to bed, and in thy Prayers remember
Th'eſtate of my poore Queene. Leave me alone,
For I muſt thinke of that, which company
Would not be friendly to.
Suf. I wiſh your Higneſſe
A quiet night, and my good Miſtris will Remember in my Prayers.
King. Charles good night. Exit Suffolke.
Well Sir, what followes?

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Den. Sir, I haue brought my Lord the Arch-byſhop,
As you commanded me.
Kin. Ha? Canterbury?
Den. I my good Lord
Kin. Tis true: where is he Denny?
Den. He attends your Highneſſe pleaſure.
Kin. Bring him to Vs.
Lou. This is about that, which the Byſhop ſpake,
I am happily come hither.

Enter Cranmer and Denny.

King. Avoid the Gallery. Lovel ſeemeth to ſtay.
Ha? I have ſaid. Be gone.

Exeunt Lovell and Denny.

Cran. I am fearefull: Wherefore frownes he thus?
Tis his Aſpect of Terror. All's not well.
Kin. How now my Lord?
You do deſire to know wherefore
I ſent for you.
Cran. It is my duty
T'attend your Highneſſe pleaſure.
Kin. Pray you ariſe
My good and gracious Lord of Canterbury:
Come, you and I muſt walke a turne together:
I have Newes to tell you.
Come, come, give me your hand.
Ah my good Lord, I greeve at what I ſpeake,
And am right ſorry to repeat what followes.
I have, and moſt unwillingly of late

Heard many greevous. I do ſay my Lord
Greevous complaints of you; which being conſider'd,
Have mov'd Vs, and our Councell, that you ſhall
This Morning come before us, where I know
You cannot with ſuch freedome purge your ſelfe,
But that till further Triall, in thoſe Charges
Which will require your Anſwer, you muſt take
Your patience to you, and be well-contented
To make your houſe our Towre: you, a Brother of us
It fits we thus proceed, or elſe no witneſſe
Would come againſt you.
Cran. I humbly thanke your Highneſſe,
And am right glad to catch this good occaſion
Moſt throughly to be winnowed, where my Chaffe
And Corne ſhall flye aſunder. For I know
There's none ſtands under more calumnious tongues,
Then I my ſelfe, poore man.
Kin. Stand up, good Canterbury,
Thy Truth, and thy Integrity is rooted
In us thy Friend. Give me thy hand, ſtand up,
Prythee let's walke. Now by my Holydame,
What manner of man are you? My Lord, I look'd
You would have given me your Petition, that
I ſhould have tane ſome paines, to bring together
Your ſelfe, and your Accuſers, and to have heard you
Without indurance further.
Cran. Moſt dread Liege,
The good I ſtand on, is my Truth and Honeſty:
If they ſhall faile, I with mine Enemies
Will triumph o're my perſon, which I waigh not,
Being of thoſe Vertues vacant. I feare nothing
What can be ſaid againſt me.
Kin. Know you not
How your ſtate ſtands i'th'world, with the whole world?
Your Enemies are many, and not ſmall; their practiſes
Muſt beare the ſame proportion, and not ever
The Iuſtice and the Truth o'th'queſtion carries
The dew o'th'Verdict with it; at what eaſe
Might corrupt mindes procure, Knaves as corrupt
To ſweare againſt you: Such things have bene done.
You are Potently oppos'd, and with a Malice
Of as great Size. Weene you of better lucke,
I meane in periur'd Witneſſe, then your Maiſter,
Whoſe Miniſter you are, whiles heere he liv'd
Vpon this naughty Earth? Go to, go to,
You take a Precipice for no leape of danger,
Ane wooe your owne deſtruction.
Cran. God, and your Majeſty
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me.
Kin. Be of good cheere,
They ſhall no more prevaile, then we give way to:
Keepe comfort to you, and this Morning ſee
You do appeare before them. If they ſhall chance
In charging you with matters, to commit you:
The beſt perſwaſions to the contrary
Faile not to uſe; and with what vehemency
Th'occaſion ſhall inſtruct you. If intreaties
Will render you no remedy, this Ring
Deliver them, and your Appeale to us
There make before them. Looke, the goodman weeps:
He's honeſt on mine Honor. Gods bleſt Mother,
I ſweare he is true-hearted, and a ſoule
None better in my Kingdome. Get you gone,
And do as I have bid you. Exit Cranmer.
He ha's ſtrangled all his Language in his teares.

Enter Olde Lady.

Gent. within. Come backe: what meane you?
Lady. Ile not come backe, the tydings that I bring
Will make my boldneſſe, manners. Now good Angels
Fly o're thy Royall head, and ſhade thy perſon
Vnder their bleſſed wings.
Kin. Now by thy lookes
I geſſe thy Meſſage. Is the Queene deliver'd?
Say I, and of a boy.
Lady. I, I my Liege;
And of a lovely Boy: the God of heaven
Both now, and ever bleſſe her: 'Tis a Gyrle
Promiſes Boyes heereafter. Sir, your Queene
Deſires your Viſitation, and to be
Acquainted with this ſtranger; 'tis as like you,
As Cherry, is to Cherry.
King. Lovell.
Lov. Sir.
King. Give her an hundred Markes.
Ile to the Queene. Exit King.
Lad. An hundred Markes? By this light, Ile ha more.
An ordinary Groome is for ſuch payment.
I will have more, or ſcold it out of him.
Said I for this, the Gyrle was like to him? Ile
Have more, or elſe unſay't: and now, while 'tis hot,
Ile put it to the iſſue. Exit Lady.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Cranmer, Archbyſhop of Canterbury.

Cran. I hope I am not too late, and yet the Gentleman
That was ſent to me from the Councell, pray'd me
To make great haſt. All faſt? What meanes this? Hoa?
Who waites there? Sure you know me?

Enter Keeper.

Keep. Yes; my Lord:
But yet I cannot helpe you.
Cran. Why?
Keep. Your Grace muſt waight till you be call'd for.

Enter Doctor Buts.

Cran. So.
Buts. This is a Peice of Malice: I am glad
I came this way ſo happily. The King
Shall underſtand it preſently. Exit Buts.
Cran. 'Tis Buts.
The Kings Phyſitian, as he paſt along
How earneſtly he caſt his eyes upon me:
Pray heaven he ſound not my diſgrace: for certaine
This is of purpoſe laid by ſome that hate me,
(God turne their hearts, I never ſought their malice)
To quench mine Honor; they would ſhame to make me
Wait elſe at doore: a follow Councellor
'Mong Boyes, Groomes, and Lackeyes. But their pleaſures
Muſt be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King, and Buts, at a Windowe above.

Buts. Ile ſhew your Grace the ſtrangeſt ſight.
King. What's that Buts?

Buts

Butts. I thinke your Highneſſe ſaw this many a day.
Kin. Body a me: where is it?
But. There my Lord:
The high promotion of his Grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his State at dore 'mongſt Purſevants,
Pages, and Foot-boyes.
Kin. Ha? 'Tis he indeed.
Is this the Honour they doe one another?
'Tis well there's one above 'em yet; I had thought
They had parted ſo much honeſty among'em,
At leaſt good manners; as not thus to ſuffer
A man of his Place, and ſo neere our favour
To dance attendance on their Lordſhips pleaſures,
And at the dore too, like a Poſt with Packets:
By holy Mary (Butts) there's knavery;
Let'em alone, and draw the Curtaine cloſe:
We ſhall heare more anon.

A Councell Table brought in with Chayres and Stooles, and placed under the State. Enter Lord Chancellour, places himſelfe at the upper end of the Table, on the left hand: A Seate being left void above him, as for Canterburies Seate. Duke of Suffolk, Duke of Norfolke, Surrey, Lord Chamberlaine, Gardiner, ſeat themſelves in Order on each ſide. Cromwell at lower end, as Secretary.

Chan. Speake to the buſineſſe, M. Secretary;
Why are we met in Councell?
Crom. Pleaſe your Honours,
The chiefe cauſe concernes his Grace of Canterbury.
Gard. Ha's he had knowledge of it?
Crom. Yes.
Norf. Who waits there?
Keep. Without my Noble Lords?
Gard. Yes.
Keep. My Lord Arſhibiſhop:
And ha's done halfe an houre to know your pleaſures.
Chan. Let him come in.
Keep. Your Grace may enter now.

Cranmer approches the Councell Table.

Chan. My good Lord Archbiſhop, I'm very ſorry
To ſit heere at this preſent, and behold
That Chayre ſtand empty: But we all are men
In our owne natures fraile, and capable
Of our fleſh, few are Angels; out of which frailty
And want of wiſedome, you that beſt ſhould teach us,
Have miſdemean'd your ſelfe, and not a little:
Toward the King firſt, then his Lawes, in filling
The whole Realme, by your teaching & your Chaplaines
(For ſo we are inform'd) with new opinions,
Divers and dangerous; which are Hereſies;
And not reform'd, may prove pernicious.
Gard. Which Reformation muſt be ſodaine too
My Noble Lords, for thoſe that tame wild Horſes,
Pace'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But ſtop their mouthes with ſtubborn Bits & ſpurre'em,
Till they obey the mannage. If wee ſuffer
Out of our eaſineſſe and childiſh pitty
To one mans Honour, this contagious ſickneſſe;
Farewell all Phyſicke: and what followes then?
Commotions, uprores, with a generall Taint
Of the whole State: as of late dayes our neighbours,
The upper Germany can deerely witneſſe:
Yet freſhly pittied in our memories.
Cran. My good Lords; Hitherto, in all the Progreſſe
Both of my Life and Office, I have labour'd,
And with no little ſtudy, that my teaching
And the ſtrong courſe of my Authority,
Might goe one way, and ſafely; and the end
Was ever to doe well: nor is there living,
(I ſpeake it with a ſingle heart, my Lords)
A man that more deteſts, more ſtirres againſt,
Both in his private Conſcience, and his place,
Defacers of a publique peace then I doe:
Pray Heaven the King may never find a heart
With leſſe Allegeance in it. Men that make
Envy, and crooked malice, nouriſhment;
Dare bite the beſt. I doe beſeech your Lordſhips,
That in this caſe of Iuſtice, my Accuſers,
Be what they will, may ſtand forth face to face,
And freely urge againſt me.
Suff. Nay, my Lord,
That cannot be; you are a Counſellor,
And by that vertue no man dare accuſe you.
Gard. My Lord, becauſe we have buſines of more moment,
We will be ſhort with you. 'Tis his Highneſſe pleaſure
And our conſent, for better tryall of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower,
Where being but a private man againe,
You ſhall know many dare accuſe you boldly,
More then (I feare) you are provided for.
Cran. Ah my good Lord of Wincheſter: I thanke you,
You are alwayes my good Friend, if your will paſſe,
I ſhall both finde your Lordſhip, Iudge and Iuror,
You are ſo mercifull. I ſee your end,
'Tis my undoing. Love and meekeneſſe, Lord
Become a Churchman, better then Ambition:
Win ſtraying Soules with modeſty againe,
Caſt none away. That I ſhall clere my ſelfe,
Lay all the weight ye can upon my patience,
I make as little doubt as you doe conſcience,
In doing dayly wrongs. I could ſay more,
But reverence to your calling, makes me modeſt.
Gard. My Lord, my Lord, you are a Sectary,
That's the plaine truth; your painted gloſſe diſcovers
To men that underſtand you, words and weakneſſe.
Crom. My Lord of Wincheſter, y'are a little,
By your good favour, too ſharpe; Men ſo Noble,
How ever faulty, yet ſhould finde reſpect
For what they have beene: 'tis a cruelty,
To load a falling man.
Gard. Good M. Secretary,
I cry your Honour mercy; you may worſt
Of all this Table ſay ſo.
Crom. Why my Lord?
Gard. Doe not I know you for a Favourer
Of this new Sect? ye are not ſound.
Crom. Not ſound?
Gard. Not ſound I ſay.
Crom. Would you were halfe ſo honeſt:
Mens prayers then would ſeeke you, not their feares.
Gard. I ſhall remember this bold Language.
Crom. Doe.
Remember your bold life too.
Cham. This is too much;
Forbeare for ſhame my Lords.
Gard. I have done.
Crom. And I.
Cham. Then thus for you my Lord, it ſtands agreed
I take it, by all voyces: That forthwith,
You be convaid to th' Tower a Priſoner;
There to remaine till the Kings further pleaſure
Be knowne unto us: are you all agreed Lords.

All. We are.
Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I muſt needs to th'Tower my Lords?
Gard. What other,
Would you expect? You are ſtrangely troubleſome:
Let ſome o'th'Guard be ready there.

Enter the Guard.

Cran. For me?
Muſt I goe like a Traitor thither?
Gard. Receive him,
And ſee him ſafe i'th'Tower.
Cran. Stay good my Lords,
I have a little yet to ſay. Looke there my Lords,
By vertue of that Ring, I take my cauſe
Out of the gripes of cruell men, and give it
To a moſt Noble Iudge, the King my Maiſter.
Cham. This is the Kings Ring.
Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.
Suff. 'Tis the right Ring, by Heav'n: I told ye all,
When we firſt put this dangerous ſtone a rowling,
'Twold fall upon our ſelves.
Norf. Doe you thinke my Lords
The King will ſuffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?
Cham. Tis now too certaine,
How much more is his Life in valve with him?
Would I were fairely out on't.
Crom. My mind gave me,
In ſeeking tales and Informations
Againſt this man, whoſe honeſty the Divell
And his diciples onely envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burnes ye: now have at ye.

Enter King frowning on them, takes his Seate.

Gard. Dread Soveraigne:
How much are we bound to Heaven,
In dayly thankes, that gave us ſuch a Prince;
Not onely good and wiſe, but moſt religious:
One that in all obedience, makes the Church
The cheefe ayme of his Honour, and to ſtrengthen
That holy duty out of deare reſpect,
His Royall ſelfe in Iudgement comes to heare
The cauſe betwixt her, and this great offender.
Kin. You were ever good at ſodaine Commendations
Biſhop of Winchester. But know I come not
To heare ſuch flattery now, and in my preſence,
They are too thin, and baſe to hide offences,
To me you cannot reach. You play the Spaniell,
And thinke with wagging of your tongue to win me:
But whatſoere thou tak'ſt me for; I'm ſure
Thou haſt a cruell Nature and a bloody.
Good man ſit downe: Now let me ſee the proudeſt
Hee, that dares moſt, but wag his finger at thee.
By all that's holy, he had better ſtarve,
Then but once thinke his place becomes thee not.
Sur. May it pleaſe your Grace; ——
Kin. No Sir, it doe's not pleaſe me,
I had thought, I had had men of ſome underſtanding,
And wiſedome of my Councell; but I finde none:
Was it diſcretion Lords, to let this man,
This good man (few of you deſerue that Title)
This honeſt man, wait like a lowſie Foot-boy
At Chamberdore? and one, as great as you are?
Why, what a ſhame was this? Did my Commiſſion
Bid ye ſo farre forget your ſelves? I gave ye
Power, as he was a Counſellour to try him,
Not as a Groome: There's ſome of ye, I ſee,
More out of Malice then Integrity,
Would trye him to the utmoſt, had ye meane,
Which ye ſhall never have while I live.
Chan. Thus farre
My moſt dread Soveraigne, may it like your Grace,
To let my tongue excuſe all. What was purpos'd
Concerning his Impriſonment, was rather
(If there be faith in men) meant for his Tryall,
And faire purgation to the world then malice,
I'm ſure in me.
Kin. Well, well my Lords reſpect him.
Take him, and uſe him well; hee's worthy of it.
I will ſay thus much for him, if a Prince
May be beholding to a Subject; I
Am for his love and ſervice, ſo to him.
Make me no more adoe, but all embrace him;
Be friends for ſhame my Lords: My Lord of Canterbury
I have a Suite which you muſt not deny mee.
That is, a faire young Maid that yet wants Baptiſme,
You muſt be Godfather, and anſwere for her.
Cran. The greateſt Monarch now alive may glory
In ſuch an honour: how may I deſerve it,
That am a poore and humble Subject to you?
Kin. Come, come my Lord, you'd ſpare your ſpoones;
You ſhall have two noble Partners with you: the olde Ducheſſe of Norfolke, and Lady Marqueſſe Dorset? will theſe pleaſe you?
Once more my Lord of Winchester, I charge you
Embrace, and love this man.
Gard. With a true heart,
And Brothers love I doe it.
Cran. And let Heaven
Witneſſe how deare, I hold this Confirmation.
Kin. Good Man, thoſe joyfull teares ſhew thy true (heart,
The common voice I ſee is verified
Of thee, which ſayes thus: Doe my Lord of Canterbury
A ſhrewd turne, and hee's your friend for ever:
Come Lords, we trifle time away: I long
To have this young one made a Chriſtian.
As I have made ye one Lords, one remaine:
So I grow ſtronger, you more Honour gaine. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Noyſe and Tumult within: Enter Porter and his man.

Port. You'l leave your noiſe anon ye Raſcals: doe you take the Court for Pariſh Garden: ye rude Slaves, leave your gaping.

Within. Good M. Porter I belong to th'Larder.

Por. Belong to th'Gallowes, and be hang'd ye Rogue, Is this a place to roare in? Fetch me a dozen Crab-tree ſtaves, and ſtrong ones; theſe are but ſwitches to 'em: Ile ſcratch your heads; you muſt be ſeeing Chriſtenings? Do you looke for Ale, and Cakes heere, you rude Raskalls?

Man. Pray Sir be patient; 'tis as much impoſſible,
Vnleſſe wee ſweepe'em from the dore with Cannons,
To ſcatter'em, as 'tis to make'em ſleepe
On May-day Morning, which will never be:
We may is well puſh againſt Powles as ſtirre'em.
Por. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man. Alas I know not, how gets the Tide in?
As much as one ſound Cudgell of foure foote,
(You ſee the poore remainder) could diſtribute,
I made no ſpare Sir.
Port. You did nothing Sir.
Man. I am not Sampſon, nor Sir Guy, nor Colebrand,
To mow'em downe before me: but if I ſpar'd any
That had a head to hit, either young or old,
He or ſhe, Cuckold or Cuckold-maker;
Let me ne're hope to ſee a Chine againe,
And that I would not for a Cow, God ſave her.
With. Do you heare M, Porter?
Port. I ſhall be with you preſently, good M. Puppy.
Keepe the dore cloſe Sirha.
Man. What would you have me doe?
Por. What ſhould you doe,

But knock'em downe by th'dozens? Is this More fields to muſter in? Or have wee ſome ſtrange Indian with the great Toole, come to Court, the women ſo beſiege us? Bleſſe me, what a fry of Fornication is at dore? On my Chriſtian Conſcience this one Chriſtening will beget a thouſand, here will be Father, God-father, and all together.

Man. The Spoones will be the bigger Sir: There is a fellow ſomewhat neere the doore, he ſhould be a Braſier by his face, for o' my conſcience twenty of the Dog-dayes now reigne in's Noſe; all that ſtand about him are under the Line, they need no other pennance: that Fire-Drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his Noſe diſcharged againſt mee; hee ſtands there like a Morter-piece to blow us. There was a Habberdaſhers Wife of ſmall wit, neere him, that rail'd upon me, till her pinck'd porrenger ſell off her head, for kindling ſuch a combuſtion in the State. I miſt the Meteor once, and hit that Woman, who cryed out Clubbes, when I migth ſee from farre, ſome forty Truncheoners draw to her ſuccour, which were the hope o'th'Strond where ſhe was quartered; they fell on, I made good my place; at length they came to th'broome ſtaffe to me, I defide'em ſtill, when ſodainly a File of Boyes behind'em, looſe ſhot, deliver'd ſuch a ſhowre of Pibbles, that I was faine to draw mine Honour in, and let'em win the Worke, the Divell was amongſt'em I thinke ſurely.

Por. Theſe are the youths that thunder at a Playhouſe, and fight for bitten Apples, that no Audience but the tribulation of Tower Hill, or the Limbes of Limehouſe, their deare Brothers are able to endure. I have ſome of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance theſe three dayes; beſides the running Banquet of two Beadles, that is to come.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine.

Cham. Mercy o'me: what a Multitude are heere?
They grow ſtill too; from all Parts they are comming,
As if we kept a Faire heere? Where are theſe Porters?
Theſe lazy knaves? Y'have made fine hand fellowes?
Theres a trim rabble let in: are all theſe
Your faithfull friends o'th'Suburbs? We ſhall have Great ſtore of roome no doubt, left for the Ladies,
When they paſſe backe from the Chriſtening?
Por. And't pleaſe your Honour,
We are but men, and what ſo many may doe,
Not being torne a pieces, we have done:
An Army cannot rule'em.
Cha. As I live,
If the King blame me for't; Ile lay ye all
By th'heeles, and ſodainly: and on your heads
Clap round Fines for neglect. y'are lazy knaves,
And heere ye lye baiting of Bombards, when
Ye ſhould doe Service. Harke the Trumpets ſound,
Th'are come already from the Chriſtening,
Go breake among the preaſſe, and finde a way out
To let the Troope paſſe fairely; or Ile finde
A Marſhallſey, ſhall hold ye play theſe two Monthes.
Por. Make way there, for the Princeſſe.
Man. You great fellow,
Stand cloſe up, or Ile make your head ake.
Por. You i'th'Chamblet, get up o'th'raile,
Ile pecke you o're the pales elſe. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Trumpets ſounding: Then two Aldermen, L. Maior, Garter, Crammer, Duke of Norfolke with his Marſhals Staffe, Duke of Suffolke, two Noblemen, bearing great ſtanding Bowles for the Chriſtening Guifts: Then foure Noblemen bearing a Canopy, under which the Dutcheſſe of Norfolke, Godmother, bearing the Childe rickly habited in a Mantle, &c. Traine borne by a Lady: Then followes the Marchioneſſe Dorſet, the other Godmother, and Ladies. The Troope paſſe once about the Stage, and Garter ſpeakes.

Gart. Heaven
From thy endleſſe goodneſſe, ſend proſperous life,
Long, and ever happy, to the high and Mighty
Princeſſe of England Elizabeth.

Flouriſh. Enter King and Guard.

Cran. And to your Royall Grace, & the good Queene,
My Noble Partners, and my ſelfe thus pray
All comfort, joy in this moſt gracious Lady,
Heaven ever laid up to make Parents happy,
May hourely fall upon ye.
King. Thanke you good Lord Archbiſhop:
What is her Name?
Cran. Elizabeth.
Kin. Standup Lord,
With this Kiſſe, take my Bleſſing: God protect thee,
Into whoſe hand, I give thy Life.
Cran. Amen.
Kin. My Noble Goſſips, y'have beene too Prodigall;
I thanke ye heartily: So ſhall this Lady,
When ſhe ha's ſo much Engliſh.
Cran. Let me ſpeake Sir,
For Heaven now bids me; and the words I utter,
Let none thinke Flattery; for they'l finde'em Truth.
This Royall Infant, Heaven ſtill move about her;
Though in her Cradle; yet now promiſes
Vpon this Land a thouſand thouſand Bleſſings,
Which Time ſhall bring to ripeneſſe: She ſhall be,
(But few now living can behold that goodneſſe)
A Patterne to all Princes living with her,
And all that ſhall ſucceed: Saba was never
More covetous of Wiſedome, and faire Vertue
Then this pure Soule ſhall be. All Princely Graces
That mould up a mighty Piece as this is,
With all the Vertues that attend the good,
Shall ſtill be doubled on her. Truth ſhall Nurſe her,

Holy and Heavenly thoughts ſtill Counſell her:
She ſhall be lov'd and fear'd. Her owne ſhall bleſſe her;
Her Foes ſhake like a Field of beaten Corne,
And hang their heads with ſorrow:
Good growes with her.
In her dayes, Every Man ſhall eate in ſafety,
Vnder his owne Vine what he plants; and ſing
The merry Songs of Peace to all his Neighbours.
God ſhall be truly knowne, and thoſe about her,
From her ſhall read the perfect way of Honour,
And by thoſe claime their greatneſſe, not by Blood.
Nor ſhall this peace ſleepe with her: But as when
The Bird of Wonder dyes, the Mayden Phœnix,
Her Aſhes new create another Heyre,
As great in admiration as her ſelfe.
So ſhall ſhe leave her Bleſſedneſſe to One,
(When Heaven ſhal cal her from this clowd of darknes)
Who, from the ſacred Aſhes of her Honour
Shall Star-like riſe, as great in fame as ſhe was,
And ſo ſtand fix'd. Peace, Plenty, Love, Truth, Terror,
That were the Servants to this choſen Infant,
Shall then be his, and like a Vine grow to him;
Where ever the bright Sunne of Heaven ſhall ſhine,
His Honor, and the greatneſſe of his name,
Shall be, and make new Nations. He ſhall flouriſh,
And like a Mountaine Cedar, reach his branches,
To all the Plaines about him: Our Childrens Children
Shall ſee this, and bleſſe Heaven.

Kin. Thou ſpeakeſt wonders.

Cran. She ſhall be to the happineſſe of England,
An aged Princeſſe; many dayes ſhall ſee her,
And yet no day without a deed to Crowne it.
Would I had knowne no more: But ſhe muſt dye,
She muſt, the Saints muſt have her; yet a Virgin,
A moſt unſpotted Lilly ſhall ſhe paſſe
To th'ground, and all the World ſhall mourne her.

Kin. O Lord Archbiſhop
Thou haſt made me now a man, never before
This happy Child, did I get any thing.
This Oracle of comfort, ha's ſo pleas'd me,
That when I am in Heaven, I ſhall deſire
To ſee what this Child does, and praiſe my Maker.
I thanke ye all. To you my good Lord Maior,
And you good Brethren, I am much beholding:
I have receiv'd much Honour by your preſence,
And ye ſhall find me thankfull. Leade the way Lords,
Ye muſt all ſee the Queene, and ſhe muſt thanke ye,
She will be ſicke els. This day, no man thinke
'Has buſineſſe at his houſe; for all ſhall ſtay:
This little-One ſhall make it Holy-day. Exeunt.

THE EPILOGVE.

Tis ten to one, this Play can never pleaſe
All that are heere: Some come to take their eaſe,
And ſleepe an Act or two; but thoſe we feare
W'have frighted with our Trumpets: ſo 'tis cleare,
They'l ſay it's naught. Others to heare the City
Abus'd extreamly, and to cry that's witty,
Which we have not done neither; that I feare
All the expected good w'are like to heare,
For this Play at this time, is onely in
The mercifull conſtruction of good women,
For ſuch a one we ſhew'd 'em: If they ſmile,
And ſay 'twill doe; I know within a while,
All the beſt men are ours; for 'tis ill hap,
If they hold, when their Ladies bid 'em clap.

FINIS.

The Prologue.

IN Troy there lyes the Scæne: from Jles of Greece
The Princes Orgillous, their high blood chaf'd,
Have to the Port of Athens ſent their ſhippes
Fraught with the miniſters and inſtruments
Of cruell Warre: Sixty and nine that wore
Their Crownets Regall, from th'Athenian Bay
Put forth toward Phrygia, and their vow is made
To ranſacke Troy, within whoſe ſtrong Jmmures
The raviſh'd Helen, Menelaus Queene,
With wanton Paris ſleepes, and that's the Quarrell.
To Tenedos they come,
And the deepe-drawing Barkes doe there diſgorge
Their Warlike frautage: now on Dardan Plaines
The freſh and yet unbruiſed Greekes doe pitch
Their brave Pavillions. Priams ſix-gated City,
Dardan and Timbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenonidus with maſſy Staples
And correſponſiue and fulfilling Bolts
Stirre up the Sonnes of Troy.
Now Expectation tickling skittiſh ſpirits,
On one and other ſide, Troian and Greeke,
Sets all on hazard. And hither am J come,
A Prologue arm'd, but not in confidence
Of Authors pen, or Actors voyce; but ſuited
Jn like conditions, as our Argument;
To tell you (faire Beholders) that our Play
Leapes ore the vaunt and firſtlings of thoſe broyles,
Beginning in the middle: ſtarting thence away,
To what may be digeſted in a Play:
Like, or find fault, doe as your pleaſures are,
Now good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of Warre.

THE TRAGEDIE OF
Troylus and Creſsida.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Pandarus and Troylus.

Troylus.

CAll here my Varlet, Ile unarme againe.
Why ſhould I warre without the wals of Troy
That finde ſuch cruell battell here within?
Each Troian that is maſter of his heart,
Let him to field, Troylus alas hath none.

Pan. Will this geere ne're be mended?

Troy. The Greekes are ſtrong, and ſkilfull to their ſtrength,
Fierce to their ſkill, and to their fierceneſſe Valiant:
But I am weaker then a womans teare:
Tamer then ſleepe, fonder then ignorance;
Leſſe valiant then the Virgin in the night,
And skilleſſe as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: For my part, Ile not meddle nor make no farther. He that will have a Cake out of the Wheate, muſt needes tarry the grinding.

Troy. Have I not tarried?

Pan. I the grinding; but you muſt tarry the boulting.

Troy. Have I not tarried?

Pan. I the boulting; but you muſt tarry the leav'ning.

Troy. Still have I tarried.

Pan. I, to the leavening: but heeres yet in the word hereafter, the Kneading, the making of the Cake, the heating of the Oven, and the Baking; nay, you muſt ſtay the cooling too, or you may chance to burne your lips.

Troy. Patience her ſelfe, what Godddeſſe ere ſhe be,
Doth leſſer blench at ſufferance, then I doe:
At Priams Royall Table I ſit;
And when faire Creſſid comes into my thoughts,
So (Traitor) then ſhe comes, when ſhe is thence.

Pan. Well:
She look'd yeſternight fairer, then ever I ſaw her looke,
Or any woman elſe.

Troy. I was about to tell thee, when my heart,
As wedged with a ſigh, would rive in twaine,
Leaſt Hector, or my father ſhould perceive me:
I have (as when the Sunne doth light a-ſcorne)
Buried this ſigh, in wrinkle of a ſmile:
But ſorrow, that is couch'd in ſeeming gladneſſe,
Is like that mirth, Fate turnes to ſudden ſadneſſe.

Pan. And her haire were not ſomewhat darker then Helens, well goe to, there were no more compariſon betweene the Women. But for my part ſhe is my Kinſwoman, I would not (as they tearme it) praiſe it, but I would ſome-body had heard her talke yeſterday as I did: I will not diſpraiſe your ſiſter Caſſandra's wit, but——

Troy. Oh Pandarus! I tell thee Pandarus;
When I doe tell thee, there my hopes lye drown'd:
Reply not in how many Fadomes deepe
They lye indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Creſſids love. Thou anſwer'ſt ſhe is Faire,
Powr'ſt in the open Vlcer of my heart,
Her Eyes, her Haire, her Cheeke, her Gate, her Voyce,
Handleſt in thy diſcourſe. O that her Hand
(In whoſe compariſon, all whites are Inke)
Writing their owne reproach; to whoſe ſoft ſeizure,
The Cignets Downe is harſh, and ſpirit of Senſe
Hard as the palme of Ploughman. This thou tel'ſt me;
As true thou tel'ſt me, when I ſay I love her:
But ſaying thus, inſtead of Oyle and Balme,
Thou lai'ſt in every gaſh that love hath given me,
The Knife that made it.

Pan. I ſpeake no more then truth.

Troy. Thou do'ſt not ſpeake ſo much.

Pan. Faith, Ile not meddle in't. Let her be as ſhe is, if ſhe be faire, 'tis the better for her: and ſhe be not, ſhe ha's the mends in her owne hands.

Troy. Good Pandarus; How now Pandarus?

Pan. I have had my Labour for my travell, ill thought on of her, and ill thought on of you: Gone betweene and betweene, but ſmall thankes for my labour.

Troy. What art thou angry Pandarus? what with me?

Pan. Becauſe ſhe's Kinne to me, therefore ſhe's not ſo faire as Helen, and ſhe were not kin to me, ſhe would be as faire on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not and ſhe were a Blacke-a-Moore, 'tis all one to me.

Troy. Say I ſhe is not faire?

Pan. I doe not care whether you doe or no. She's a Foole to ſtay behind her Father: Let her to the Greekes, and ſo Ile tell her the next time I ſee her: for my part, Ile meddle nor make no more i'th' matter.

Troy. Pandarus?

Pan. Not I.

Troy. Sweet Pandarus.

Pan. Pray you ſpeake no more to me, I will leave all as I found it, and there an end. Exit Pand.

Sound Alarum.

Tro. Peace you ungracious Clamors, peace rude ſounds,
Fooles on both ſides, Helen muſt needs be faire,
When with your bloud you daily paint her thus.

I cannot fight upon this Argument:
It is too ſtarv'd a ſubject for my Sword,
But Pandarus: O gods! How doe you plague me?
I cannot come to Creſſid but by Pandar,
And he's as teachy to be woo'd to woe,
As ſhe is ſtubborne, chaſt, againſt all ſuite.
Tell me Apollo for thy Daphnes Love
What Creſſid is, what Pandar, and what we:
Her bed is India, there ſhe lyes, a Pearle,
Betweene our Ilium, and where ſhe reſides
Let it be cald the mild and wandring flood,
Our ſelfe the Merchant, and this ſayling Pandar,
Our doubtfull hope, our convoy and our Barke.

Alarum. Enter Æneas.

Æne. How now Prince Troylus?
Wherefore not afield?

Troy. Becauſe not there; this womans anſwer ſorts,
For womaniſh it is to be from thence:
What newes Æneas from the field to day?

Æne. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Troy. By whom Æneas?

Æne. Troylus by Menelaus.

Troy. Let Paris bleed, 'tis but a ſcar to ſcorne.
Paris is gor'd with Menelaus horne. Alarum.

Æne. Hearke what good ſport is out of Towne to day.

Troy. Better at home, if would I might were may;
But to the ſport abroad, are you bound thither?

Æne. In all ſwift haſt.

Troy. Come goe we then together. Exeunt.

Enter Creſſid and her man.

Cre. Who were thoſe went by?

Man. Queene Hecuba, and Hellen.

Cre. And whither goe they?

Man. Vp to the Eaſterne Tower,
Whoſe height commands as ſubject all the vale,
To ſee the battell; Hector whoſe patience,
Is as a Vertue fixt, to day was mov'd:
He chides Andromache, and ſtrooke his Armorer,
And like as there were husbandry in Warre
Before the Sunne roſe, he was harneſt light,
And to the field goe's he; where every flower
Did as a Prophet weepe what it foreſaw,
In Hectors wrath.

Cre. What was his cauſe of anger?

Man. The noiſe goe's this;
There is among the Greekes,
A Lord of Troyan blood, Nephew to Hector,
They call him Ajax.

Cre. Good; and what of him?

Man. They ſay he is a very man per ſe and ſtands alone.

Cre. So doe all men, unleſſe they are drunke, ſicke, or have no legges.

Man. This man Lady, hath rob'b many beaſts of their particular additions, he is as valiant as the Lyon, churliſh as the Beare, ſlow as the Elephant: a man into whom nature hath ſo crowded humors, that his valour is cruſht into folly, his folly ſauced with diſcretion: there is no man hath a vertue, that he hath not a glimpſe of, nor any man an attaint, but he carries ſome ſtaine of it. He is melancholy without cauſe and merry againſt the haire, he hath the joynts of every thing, but every thing ſo out of joynt, that he is a gowty Briareus, many hands and no uſe; or purblinded Argus, all eyes and no ſight.

Cre. But how ſhould this man that makes me ſmile, make Hector angry?

Man. They ſay he yeſterday cop'd Hector in the battell and ſtrooke him down, the diſdaine & ſhame whereof, hath ever ſince kept Hector faſting and walcing.

Enter Pandarus.

Cre. Who comes here?

Man. Madam, your Vncle Pandarus.

Cre. Hectors a gallant man.

Man. As may be in the world Lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cre. Good morrow Vnckle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow Cozen Creſſid: what doe you talke of? good morrow Alexander: how doe you Cozen? when were you at Illium?

Cre. This morning Vncle.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hector arm'd and gone ere ye came to Illium? Helen was not up? was ſhe?

Cre. Hector was gone, but Hellen was not up.

Pan. E'ene ſo; Hector was ſtirring early.

Cre. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cre. So he ſayes here.

Pan. True he was ſo; I know the cauſe too, heele lay about him to day I can tell them that, and there's Troylus will not come farre behind him, let them take heede of Troylus; I can tell them that too.

Cre. What is he angry too?

Pan. Who Troylus?
Troylus is the better man of the two.

Cre. Oh Iupiter; there's no compariſon.

Pan. What not betweene Troylus and Hector? doe you know a man if you ſee him?

Cre. I, if I ever ſaw him before and knew him.

Pan. Well I ſay Troylus is Troylus.

Cre. Then you ſay as I ſay,
For I am ſure he is not Hector.

Pan. No nor Hector is not Troylus in ſome degrees.

Cre. 'Tis juſt, to each of them he is himſelfe.

Pan. Himſelfe? alas poore Troylus I would he were.

Cre. So he is.

Pan. Condition I had gone bare-foote to India.

Cre. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himſelfe? no? he's not himſelfe, would a were himſelfe; well, the gods are above, time muſt friend or end: well Troylus well, I would my heart were in her body; no, Hector is not a better man then Troylus.

Cre. Excuſe me,

Pan. He is elder.

Cre. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th'others not come too't, you ſhall tell me another tale when th'others come too't: Hector ſhall not have his will this yeere.

Cre. He ſhall not neede it if he have his owne.

Pan. Nor his qualities.

Cre. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cre. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgement Neece; Hellen her ſelfe ſwore th'other day, that Troylus for a browne favour (for ſo 'tis I muſt confeſſe) not browne neither.

Cre. No, but browne.

Pan. Faith to ſay truth, browne and not browne.

Cre. To ſay the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cre. Why Paris hath colour inough.

Pan. So he has.

Cre. Then Troylus ſhould have too much, if ſhe prais'd him above, his complexion is higher then his, he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praiſe for a good complexion. I had as lieve Hellens golden tongue had commended Troylus for a copper noſe.

Pan. I ſweare to you.
I thinke Hellen loves him better then Paris.

Cre. Then ſhe's a merry Greeke indeed.

Pan. Nay I am ſure ſhe does, ſhe came to him th'other day into the compaſt window, and you know he has not paſt three or foure haires on his chinne.

Cre. Indeed a Tapſters Arithmetique may ſoone bring his particulars therein, to a totall.

Pand. Why he is very yong, and yet will he within three pound lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cre. Is he ſo young a man, and ſo old a lifter?

Pan. But to proove to you that Hellen loves him, ſhe came and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin.

Cre. Iuno have mercy, how came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know 'tis dimpled,
I thinke his ſmyling becomes him better then any man in all Phrigia.

Cre. Oh he ſmiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cre. Oh yes, and 'twere a clow'd in Autumne.

Pan. Why goe to then, but to prove to you that Hellen loves Troylus.

Cre. Troylus will ſtand to the
Proofe, if youle proove it ſo.

Pan. Troylus? why he eſteemes her no more then I eſteeme an addle egge.

Cre. If you love an addle egge as well as you love an idle head, you would eate chickens i'th'ſhell.

Pan. I cannot chuſe but laugh to thinke how ſhe tickled his chin, indeed ſhe has a marvel's white hand I muſt needs confeſſe.

Cre. Without the racke.

Pan. And ſhe takes upon her to ſpye a white haire on his chinne.

Cre. Alas poore chin? many a wart is richer.

Pand. But there was ſuch laughing, Queene Hecuba laught that her eyes ran ore.

Cre. With Milſtones.

Pan. And Caſſandra laught.

Cre. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run ore too?

Pan. And Hector laught.

Cre. At what was all this laughing?

Pand. Marry at the white haire that Hellen ſpied on Troylus chin.

Cre. And t'had beene a greene haire, I ſhould have laught too.

Pand. They laught not ſo much at the haire, as at his pretty anſwer.

Cer. What was his anſwer?

Pan. Quoth ſhe, here's but two and fifty haires on your chinne; and one of them is white.

Cre. This is her queſtion.

Pand. That's true, make no queſtion of that: two and fifty haires quoth hee, and one white, that white haire is my Father, and all the reſt are his Sonnes. Iupiter quoth ſhe, which of theſe haires is Paris my husband? The forked one quoth he, pluckt out and give it him: but there was ſuch laughing, and Hellen ſo bluſht, and Paris ſo chaft, and all the reſt ſo laught, that it paſt.

Cre. So let it now,
For is has beene a great wile going by.

Pan. Well Cozen,
I told you a thing yeſterday, thinke on't.

Cre. So I doe.

Pand. Ile be ſworne 'tis true, he will weepe you an 'twere a man borne in Aprill. Sound a retreate.

Cre. And Ile ſpring up in his teares, an 'twere a nettle againſt May.

Pan. Harke they are comming from the field, ſhall we ſtand up here and ſee them, as they paſſe toward Illium? good Neece doe, ſweet Neece Creſſida.

Cre. At your pleaſure.

Pan. Heere, heere, here's an excellent place, here we may ſee moſt bravely, Ile tell you them all by their names, as they paſſe by, but marke Troylus above the reſt.

Enter Æneas.

Cre. Speake not ſo low'd.

Pan. That's Æneas, is not that a brave man, he's one of the flowers of Troy I can tell you, but marke Troylus, you ſhall ſee anon.

Cre. Who's that? Enter Antenor.

Pan. That's Antenor, he has a ſhrew'd wit I can tell you, and he's a man good inough, he's one o'th ſoundeſt judgement in Troy whoſoever, and a proper man of perſon: when comes Troylus? Ile ſhew you Troylus anon, if he ſee me, you ſhall ſee him nod at me.

Cre. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You ſhall ſee.

Cre. If he doe, the rich ſhall have more.

Enter Hector.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, looke you, that there's a fellow. Goe thy way Hector, there's a brave man Neece, O brave Hector! Looke how he lookes? there's a countenance; iſt not a brave man?

Cre. O brave man!

Pan. Is a not? It does a mans heart good, looke you what hackes are on his Helmet, looke you yonder, doe you ſee? Looke you there? There's no jeſting, laying on, tak't off, who will, as they ſay, there be hackes.

Cre. Be thoſe with ſwords?

Enter Paris.

Pan. Swords, any thing he cares not, and the divell, come to him, it's all one, by Godslid it does ones heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris: looke yee yonder Neece, iſt not a gallant man too, iſt not? Why this is brave now: who ſaid he came hurt home to day? He's not hurt, why this will doe Hellens heart good now, ha? Would I could ſee Troylus now, you ſhall Troylus anon.

Cre. Whoſe that?

Enter Hellenus.

Pan. That's Hellenus, I marvell where Troylus is, that's Hellenus, I thinke he went not forth to day: that's Hellenus.

Cre. Can Hellenus fight Vncle?

Pan. Hellenus no: yes heele fight indifferent well, I marvell where Troylus; harke, doe you not heare the people cry Troylus? Hellenus is a Prieſt.

Cre. What ſneaking fellow comes yonder?

Enter Troylus.

Pan. Where? Yonder? That's Diæphobus. 'Tis Troylus! There's a man Neece, hem; Brave Troylus the Prince of Chivalry.

Cre. Peace, for ſhame peace.

Pand. Marke him, note him: O brave Troylus: looke well upon him Neece, looke you how his Sword is bloudied, and his Helme more hackt then Hectors, and how he lookes, and how he goes, O admirable youth! he ne're ſaw three and twenty. Goe thy way Troylus, goe thy way, had I a ſiſter were a Grace, or a daughter a Goddeſſe, he ſhould take his choyce. O admirable man! Paris? Paris is durt to him, and I warrant, Hellen to change, would give money to boot.

Enter common Souldiers.

Cre. Heere come more.

Pan. Aſſes, fooles, dolts, chaffe and bran, chaffe and bran; porredge after meat. I could live and dye i'th'eyes of Troylus. Ne're looke, ne're looke; the Eagles are gone, Crowes and Dawes, Crowes and Dawes: I had rather be ſuch a man as Troylus, then Agamemnon, and all Greece.

Creſ. There is among the Greekes Achilles, a better man then Troylus.

Pan. Achilles? a Dray-man, a Porter, a very Camell.

Cre. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well? Why have you any diſcretion? have you any eyes? Doe you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good ſhape, diſcourſe, manhood, learning, genteneſſe, vertue, youth, liberality, and ſo forth: the Spice, and ſalt that ſeaſons a man?

Cre. I, a minc'd man, and then to be bak'd with no Date in the pye, for then the mans dates out.

Pan. You are ſuch another woman, one knowes not at what ward you lye.

Creſ. Vpon my backe, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my ſecrecy, to defend mine honeſty; my Maske, to defend my beauty, and you to defend all theſe: and at all theſe wards I lye, at a thouſand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cre. Nay Ile watch you for that, and that's one of the cheefeſt of them too; if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I tooke the blow, unleſſe it ſwell paſt hiding, and then is paſt watching.

Enter Boy.

Pan. Your are ſuch another.

Boy. Sir, my Lord would inſtantly ſpeake with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your owne houſe.

Pan. Good Boy tell him I come, I doubt he be hurt. Fare ye well good Neece.

Creſ. Adieu Vnkle.

Pan. Ile be with you Neece by and by.

Creſ. To bring Vnkle.

Pan. I, a token from Troylus.

Creſ. By the ſame token, you are a Bawd. Exit Pand.

Words, vowes, gifts, teares, and loves full ſacrifice,
He offers in anothers enterpriſe:
But more in Troylus thouſand fold I ſee,
Then in the glaſſe of Pandar's praiſe may be;
Yet hold I off. Women are Angels wooing,
Things won are done, the ſoules joy lyes in dooing:
That ſhe belov'd, knowes nought, that knowes not this:
Men prize the thing ungain'd, more then it is.
That ſhe was never yet, that ever knew
Love goe ſo ſweet, as when deſire did ſue:
Therefore this maxime out of love I teach;
Atchievement, is command: ungain'd, beſeech.
That though my hearts Contents firme love doth beare,
Nothing of that ſhall from mine eyes appeare. Exit.

Sonet. Enter Agamemnon, Neſtor, Vlyſſes, Diomedes, Menelaus, with others.

Agam. Princes:
What griefe hath ſet the Iaundies on your cheekes?
The ample propoſition that hopes makes
In all deſignes, begun on earth below
Fayles in the promiſt largeneſſe: checkes and diſaſters
Grow in the veines of actions higheſt rear'd.
As knots by the conflux of meeting ſap,
Infect the ſound Pine, and diverts his Graine
Tortive and errant from his courſe of growth.
Nor Princes, is it matter new to us,
That we come ſhort of our ſuppoſe ſo farre,
That after ſeven yeares ſiege, yet Troy walles ſtand,
Sith every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have Record, triall did draw
Bias and thwart, not anſwering the ayme.
And that unbodied figure of the thought
That gave't ſurmiſed ſhape. Why then (you Princes)
Doe you with cheekes abaſh'd, behold our workes,
And thinke them ſhame, which are (indeed) nought elſe
But the protractive trials of great Iove,
To finde perſiſtive conſtancy in men?
The fineneſſe of which Mettall is not ſound
In Fortunes love: for then, the Bold and Coward,
The Wiſe and foole, the Artiſt, and un-read,
The hard and ſoft, ſeeme all affin'd, and kin.
But in the Wind and Tempeſt of her frowne,
Diſtinction with a lowd and powrefull fan,
Puffing at all, winnowes the light away;
And what hath maſſe, or matter by it ſelfe,
Lies rich in Vertue, and unmingled.

Neſt. With due Obſervance of thy godly ſeat,
Great Agamemnon, Neſtor ſhall apply
Thy lateſt words.
In the reproofe of Chance,
Lies the true proofe of men: The Sea being ſmooth,
How many ſhallow bauble Boates dare ſaile
Vpon her patient breſt, making their way
With thoſe of Noble bulke?
But let the Ruffian Boreas once enrage
The gentle Thetis, and anon behold
The ſtrong ribb'd Barke through liquid mountains cut's
Bounding betweene the two moyſt Elements
Like Perſeus Horſe. Where's then the ſawcy Boate,
Whoſe weake untimber'd ſides but even now
Co-rival'd Greatneſſe? Either to harbour fled,
Or made a Toſte for Neptune. Even ſo,
Doth valours ſhew, and valours worth divide
In ſtormes of Fortune.
For, in her ray and brightneſſe,
The Heard hath more annoyance by the Brize
Then by the Tyger: But, when the ſplitting winde
Makes flexible the knees of knotted Oakes,
And flyes fled under ſhade, why then
The thing of Courage,
As rowz'd with rage, with rage doth ſympathize,
And with an accent tun'd in ſelfe-ſame key,
Retyres to chiding Fortune.

Vliſ. Agamemnon.
Thou great Commander, Nerve, and Bone of Greece,
Heart of our Numbers, ſoule, and onely ſpirit,
In whom the tempers, and the mindes of all
Should be ſhut up; Heare what Vliſſes ſpeakes,
Beſides th'applauſe and approbation
The which (moſt mighty) for thy place and may,

And thou moſt reverend for thy ſtretcht-out life,
I give to both your ſpeeches: which were ſuch,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold up high in Braſſe: and ſuch againe
As venerable Neſtor (hatch'd in Silver)
Should with a bond of ayre, ſtrong as the Axletree
On which the Heavens ride, knit all Greekes eares
To his experienc'd tongue: yet let it pleaſe both (Thou Great, and Wiſe) to heare Vliſſes ſpeake.
Aga. Speake Prince of Ithaca, and be't of leſſe expect;
That matter needleſſe of importleſſe burthren
Divide thy lips: then we are confident
When ranke Therſites opes his Maſticke jawes,
We ſhall heare Muſicke, Wit, and Oracle.
Vliſ. Troy yet upon his baſis had beene downe,
And the great Hectors ſword had lack'd a Maſter
But for theſe inſtances.
The ſpecialty of Rule hath beene neglected;
And looke how many Grecian Tents do ſtand
Hollow upon this Plaine, ſo many hollow Factions.
When that the Generall is not like the Hive,
To whom the Forragers ſhall all repaire,
What Hony is expected? Degree being vizarded,
Th'unworthieſt ſhewes as fairely in the Maske.
The Heavens themſelves, the Planets, and this Center,
Obſerve degree, priority, and place,
Inſiſture, courſe, proportion, ſeaſon, forme,
Office, and cuſtome, in all line of Order:
And therefore is the glorious Planet Sol
In noble eminence, enthron'd and ſphear'd
Amid ſt the other, whoſe med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill Aſpects of Planets evill,
And poſts like the Command'ment of a King,
Sans checke, to good and bad. But when the Planets
In evill mixture to diſorder wander,
What Plagues, and what portents, what mutiny?
What raging of the Sea? ſhaking of Earth?
Commotion in the Windes? Frights, changes, horrors,
Divert, and cracke, rend and deracinate
The unity, and married calme of States
Quite from their fixure? O, when degree is ſhak'd,
(Which is the Ladder to all high deſignes)
The enterprize is ſicke. How could Communities,
Degrees in Schooles, and brother-hoods in Cities,
Peacefull Commerce from dividable ſhores,
The primogenitive, and due of Byrth,
Prerogative of Age, Crownes, Scepters, Lawrels,
(But by degree) ſtand in Authentique place?
Take but degree away, un-tune that ſtring,
And hearke what Diſcord followes: each thing meets
In meere oppugnancy. The bounded Waters,
Should lift their boſomes higher then the Shores,
And make a ſoppe of all this ſolid Globe:
Strength ſhould be Lord of imbecility,
And the rude Sonne ſhould ſtrike his father dead:
Force ſhould be right, or rather, right and wrong,
(Betweene whoſe endleſſe jarre, juſtice reſides)
Should looſe their names, and ſo ſhould juſtice too.
Then every thing includes it ſelfe in Power,
Power into Will, Will into Appetite,
And Appetite (an univerſall Wolfe,
So doubly ſeconded with Will, and Power)
Mnſt make perforce an univerſall prey,
And laſt, eate up himſelfe.
Great Agamemnon;
This Chaos, when degree is ſuffocate,
Followes the choaking:
And this neglection of Degree, is it
That by a pace goes backward in a purpoſe
It hath to climbe. The Generall's diſdain'd
By him one ſtep below; he, by the next,
That next, by him beneath: ſo every ſtep
Exampled by the firſt pace that is ſicke
Of his Superiour, growes to an envious Feaver
Of pale, and bloodleſſe Emulation.
And 'tis this Feaver that keepes Troy on foote,
Not her owne ſinewes. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakeneſſe lives, not in her ſtrength.
Neſt. Moſt wiſely hath Vlyſſes here diſcover'd
The Feaver, whereof all our power is ſicke.
Aga. The Nature of the ſickeneſſe found (Vlyſſes)
What is the remedy?
Vlyſſ. The great Achilles, whom Opinion crownes,
The ſinew, and the fore-hand of our Hoſte,
Having his eare full of his ayery Fame,
Growes dainty of his worth, and in his Tent
Lyes mocking our deſignes. With him, Patroclus,
Vpon a lazy Bed, the live-long day
Breakes ſcurrill Ieſts,
And with ridiculous and aukward action,
(Which Slanderer, he imitation call's)
He Pageants us. Sometime great Agamemnon,
Thy topleſſe deputation he puts on;
And like a ſtrutting Player, whoſe conceit
Lies in his Ham-ſtring, and doth thinke it rich
To heare the wooden Dialogue and ſound
'Twixt his ſtretcht footing, and the Scaffolage,
(Such to-be-pitted, and ore-reſted ſeeming
He acts thy Greatneſſe in:) and when he ſpeakes,
'Tis like a Chime a mending. With tearmes unſquar'd,
Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Wound ſeeme Hyperboles. At this fuſty ſtuffe,
The large Achilles (on his preſt-bed lolling)
From his deepe Cheſt, laughes out a lowd applauſe,
Cries excellent, 'tis Agamemnon juſt.
Now play me Neſtor; hum, and ſtroke thy beard
As he, being dreſt to ſome Oration,
That's done, as neere as the extreameſt ends
Of paralels; as like, as Vulcan and his wife,
Yet good Achilles ſtill cryes excellent,
'Tis Neſtor right. Now play him (me) Patroclus,
Arming to anſwer in a night-Alarme,
And then (forſooth) the faint defects of Age
Muſt be the Scene of myrth, to cough, and ſpit,
And with a palſie fumbling on his Gorget,
Shake in and out the Rivet: and at this ſport
Sir Valour dies; cries, O enough Patroclus,
Or, give me ribs of Steele, I ſhall ſplit all
In pleaſure of my ſpleene. And in this faſhion,
All our abilityes, gifts, natures, ſhapes,
Severalls and generalls of grace exact,
Atchievments, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or ſpeech for truce,
Succeſſe or loſſe, what is, or is not, ſerves
As ſtuffe for theſe two, to make paradoxes.
Neſt. And in the imitation of theſe twaine,
Who (as Vlyſſes ſayes) Opinion crownes
With an Imperiall voyce, many are infect:
Ajax is growne ſelfe-will'd, and beares his head
In ſuch a reyne, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles, and keepes his Tent like him;
Makes factious Feaſts, railes on our ſtate of Warre

Bold as an Oracle, and ſets Therſites
A ſlave (whoſe Gall coines ſlanders like a Mint,)
To match us in compariſons with durt,
To weaken and diſcredit our expoſure,
How ranke ſoever rounded in with danger.
Vlyſ. They taxe our Policy, and call it Cowardice,
Count Wiſedome as no member of the Warre,
Fore-ſtall preſcience, and eſteeme no acte
But that of hand: The ſtill and mentall parts,
That doe contrive how many hands ſhall ſtrike
When fitneſſe calls them on, and know by meaſure
Of their obſervant toyle, the Enemies waight,
Why this hath not a fingers dignity:
They call this Bed-worke, Mapp'ry, Cloſſet-Warre:
So that the Ramme that batters downe the wall,
For the great ſwing and rudeneſſe of his poize,
They place before his hand that made the Engine,
Or thoſe that with the fineneſſe of their ſoules,
By Reaſon guide his execution.
Neſt. Let this be granted, and Achilles horſe
Makes many Thetis ſonnes. Tucket
Aga. What Trumpet? Looke Menelaus.
Men. From Troy. Enter Æneas.
Aga. What would you 'fore our Tent?
Æne. Is this great Agamemnons Tent, I pray you?
Aga. Even this.
Æne. May one that is a Herald, and a Prince,
Doe a faire meſſage to his Kingly eares?
Aga. With ſurety ſtronger then Achilles arme,
'Fore all the Greekiſh heads, which with one voyce
Call Agamemnon Head and Generall.
Æne. Faire leave, and large ſecurity. How may
A ſtranger to thoſe moſt Imperiall lookes,
Know them from eyes of other Mortals?
Aga. How?
Æne. I: I aske, that I might waken reverence,
And on the cheeke be ready with a bluſh
Modeſt as morning, when ſhe coldly eyes
The youthfull Phœbus:
Which is that God in office guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon.
Aga. This Troyan ſcornes us, or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious Courtiers.
Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonnaire; unarm'd,
As bending Angels: that's their Fame, in peace:
But when they would ſeeme Souldiers, they have galles,
Good armes, ſtrong joynts, true ſwords, and Ioves accord
Nothing ſo full of heart. But peace Æneas,
Peace Troyan, lay thy finger on thy lips,
The worthineſſe of praiſe diſtaines his worth:
If that he prais'd himſelfe, bring the praiſe forth,
What the repining enemy commends,
That breath fame blowes, that praiſe ſole pure tranſcends
Aga. Sir, you of Troy, call you your ſelfe Æneas?
Æne. I Greeke, that is my name.
Aga. What's your affayre I pray you?
Æne. Sir pardon, 'tis for Agamemnons eares.
Aga. He heares nought privatly
That comes from Troy.
Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whiſper him,
I bring a Trumpet to awake his eare,
To ſet his ſence on the attentive bent,
And then to ſpeake.
Aga. Speake frankely as the winde,
It is not Agamemnons ſleeping houre;
That thou ſhalt know Troyan he is awake,
He tels thee ſo himſelfe.
Æne. Trumpet blow loud.
Send thy braſſe voyce through all theſe lazy Tents;
And every Greeke of mettle, let him know,
What Troy meanes fairely, ſhall be ſpoke alowd.
The Trumpets ſound.
We have great Agamemnon, heere in Troy,
A Prince call'd Hector, Priam is his Father:
Who in this dull and long-continew'd Truce
Is ruſty growne, He bad me take a Trumpet,
And to this purpoſe ſpeake: Kings, Princes, Lords;
If there be one among'ſt the fayr'ſt of Greece,
That holds his Honor higher then his eaſe,
That ſeekes his praiſe, more then he feares his perill,
That knowes his Valour, and knowes not his feare,
That loves his Miſtris more then in confeſſion,
(With truant vowes to her owne lips he loves)
And dare avow her Beauty, and her Worth,
In other armes then hers: to him this Challenge.
Hector, in view of Troyans, and of Greekes,
Shall make it good, or doe his beſt to doe it.
He hath a Lady, wiſer, fairer, truer,
Then ever Greeke did compaſſe in his armes,
And will to morrow with his Trumpet call,
Midway betweene your Tents, and walles of Troy,
To rowze a Grecian that is true in love.
If any come, Hector ſhall honour him:
If none, he'll ſay in Troy when he retyres,
The Grecian Dames are ſun-burnt, and not worth
The ſplinter of a Lance: Even ſo much.
Aga. This ſhall be told our Lovers, Lord Æneas.
If none of them have ſoule in ſuch a kind,
We left them all at home: But we are Souldiers,
And may that Souldier a meere recreant prove,
That meanes not, hath not, or is not in love:
If then one is, or hath, or meanes to be,
That one meets Hector, if none, Ile be he.
Neſ. Tell him of Neſtor, one that was a man
When Hectors Grandſire ſuckt; he is old now,
But if there be not in our Grecian mould,
One Noble man, that hath one ſparke of fire
To anſwer for his Love; tell him from me,
Ile hide my Silver beard in a Gold Beaver,
And in my Vantbrace put this wither'd brawne,
And meeting him, will tell him, that my Lady
Was fayrer then his Grandame, and as chaſte
As may be in the world: his youth in flood,
Ile pawne this truth with my three drops of blood.
Æne. Now heavens forbid ſuch ſcarſity of youth.
Vliſ. Amen.
Aga. Faire Lord Æneas,
Let me touch your hand:
To our Pavillion ſhall I leade you firſt:
Achilles ſhall have word of this intent,
So ſhall each Lord of Greece from Tent to Tent;
Your ſelfe ſhall Feaſt with us before you goe,
And finde the welcome of a Noble Foe. Exeunt.
Manent Vliſſes, and Neſtor.
Vliſ. Neſtor.
Neſ. What ſayes Vlyſſes?
Vliſ. I have a young conception in my braine,
Be you my time to bring it to ſome ſhape.
Neſt. What is't?
Vliſ. This 'tis:
Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the ſeeded Pride
That hath to this maturity blowne up

In ranke Achilles, muſt or now be cropt,
Or (ſhedding) breed a Nurſery of like evill
To over-bulke us all.
Neſt. Well, and how?
Vliſ. This challenge that the gallant Hector ſends,
How ever it is ſpred in generall name,
Relates in purpoſe onely to Achilles.
Neſt. The purpoſe is perſpicuous even as ſubſtance,
Whoſe groſſeneſſe little charracters ſumme up,
And in the publication make no ſtraine,
But that Achilles, were his braine as barren
As bankes of Lybia, though (Apollo knowes)
'Tis dry enough, will with great ſpeede of judgement,
I, with celerity, finde Hectors purpoſe
Pointing on him.
Vliſ. And wake him to the anſwer, thinke you?
Neſt. Yes, 'tis moſt meet; whom may you elſe oppoſe
That can from Hector bring his Honor off,
If not Achilles; though't be a ſportfull Combate,
Yet in this triall, much opinion dwels.
For heere the Troyans taſte our deer'ſt repute
With their fin'ſt Pallate: and truſt to me Vlyſſes,
Our imputation ſhall be oddely poiz'd
In this wilde action. For the ſucceſſe
(Although particular) ſhall give a ſcantling
Of good or bad, unto the Generall:
And in ſuch Indexes, although ſmall prickes
To their ſubſeqvent Volumes, there is ſeene
The baby figure of the Gyant-maſſe
Of things to come at large. It is ſuppos'd,
He that meets Hector, iſſues from our choyſe;
And choyſe being mutuall acte of all our ſoules,
Makes Merit her election, and doth boyle
As 'twere, from forth us all: a man diſtill'd
Out of our Vertues; who miſcarrying,
What heart from hence receives the conq'ring part
To ſteele a ſtrong opinion to themſelves
Which entertain'd, Limbes are his inſtruments,
In no leſſe working, then are Swords and Bowes
Directive by the Limbes.
Vliſ. Give pardon to my ſpeech:
Therefore 'tis meet, Achilles meet not Hector:
Let us (like Merchants) ſhew our fowleſt Wares,
And thinke perchance they'll ſell: if not,
The luſter of the better yet to ſhew,
Shall ſhew the better. Doe not conſent,
That ever Hector and Achilles meete:
For both our Honour, and our Shame in this,
Are dogg'd with two ſtrange Followers.
Neſt. I ſee them not with my old eyes: what are they?
Vliſ. What glory our Achilles ſhares from Hector,
(Were he not proud) we all ſhould weare with him:
But he already is too inſolent,
And we were better parch in Affricke Sunne,
Then in the pride and ſalt ſcorne of his eyes,
Should he ſcape Hector faire. If he were foyld,
Why then we did our maine opinion cruſh
In taint of our beſt man. No, make a Lott'ry,
And by device let blockiſh Ajax draw
The ſort to fight with Hector: Among our ſelves,
Give him allowance as the worthier man,
For that will phyſicke the great Myrmidon
Who broyles in lowd applauſe, and make him fall
His Creſt, that prouder then blew Iris bends.
If the dull brainleſſe Ajax come ſafe off,
Wee'll dreſſe him up in voyces, if he faile,
Yet goe we under our opinion ſtill,
That we have better men. But hit or miſſe,
Our projects life this ſhape of ſence aſſumes,
Ajax imploy'd, pluckes downe Achilles Plumes.
Neſt. Now Vlyſſes, I begin to relliſh thy advice,
And I will give a taſte of it forthwith
To Agamemnon, goe we to him ſtraight;
Two Curres ſhall tame each other, Pride alone
Muſt tarre the Maſtiffes on, as 'twere their bone. Exeunt.

Enter Ajax, and Therſites.

Aja. Therſites?

Ther. Agamemnon, how if he had Biles (full) all over generally.

Aja. Therſites?

Ther. And thoſe Byles did runne, ſay ſo; did not the Generall run, were not that a botchy core?

Aja. Dogge.

Ther. Then there would come ſome matter from him: I ſee none now.

Aja. Thou Bitch-Wolfes-Sonne, canſt thou not heare? Feele then. Strikes him.

Ther, The plague of Greece upon thee thou Mungrell beefe-witted Lord.

Aja. Speake then you whinid'ſt leavenſpeake, I will beate thee into handſomneſſe.

Ther. I ſhall ſooner raile thee into wit and holineſſe: but I thinke thy horſe will ſooner con an Oration, then thou learne a prayer without booke: Thou canſt ſtrike, canſt thou? A red Murren o'th thy Iades trickes.

Ajv. Toads ſtoole, learne me the Proclamation.

Ther. Doeſt thou thinke I have no ſence thou ſtrik'ſt me thus?

Aja. The Proclamation.

Ther. Thou art proclam'd a foole, I thinke.

Aja. Doe not Porpentine, doe not: my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didſt itch from head to foot, and I had the ſcratching of thee, I would make thee the lothſom'ſt ſcab in Greece.

Aja. I ſay the Proclamation.

Ther. Thou grumbleſt and raileſt every houre on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatneſſe, as Cerberus is at Proſerpina's beauty. I, that thou bark'ſt at him.

Aja. Miſtreſſe Therſites.

Ther. Thou ſhould'ſt ſtrike him.

Aja. Cobloſe.

Ther. He would pun thee into ſhivers with his fiſt, as a Sailor breakes a bisket.

Aja. You horſon Curre. Ther. Doe, doe.

Aja. Thou ſtoole for a Witch.

Ther. I, doe, doe, thou ſodden-witted Lord: thou haſt no more braine then I have iu mine elbowes: An Aſinico may tutor thee. Thou ſcurvey valiant Aſſe, thou art here but to threſh Troyans, and thou art bought and ſold among thoſe of any wit, like a Barbarian ſlave. If thou uſe to beat me, I will begin at thy heele, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels thou.

Aja. You dogge.

Ther. You ſcurvy Lord.

Aja. You Curre.

Ther. Mars his Ideot: do rudeneſſe, doe Camell, do, do.

Enter Achilles, and Patroclus.

Achil. Why how now Ajax? wherefore do you this? How now Therſites? what's the matter man?

Ther. You ſee him there, doe you?

Achil. I, what's the matter.

Ther. Nay looke upon him.

Achil. So I doe: what's the matter?

Ther. Nay but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why I doe ſo.

Ther. But yet you looke not well upon him: for who ſome ever you take him to be, he is Ajax.

Achil. I know that foole.

Ther. I, but that foole knowes not himſelfe.

Ajax. Therefore I beate thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit he utters: his evaſions have eares thus long. I have bobb'd his Braine more then he has beate my bones: I will buy nine Sparrowes for a peny, and his Piamater is not worth the ninth part of a Sparrow. This Lord (Achilles) Ajax who weares his wit in his belly, and his guttes in his head, Ile tell you what I ſay of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I ſay this Ajax——

Achil. Nay good Ajax.

Ther. Has not ſo much wit.——

Achil. Nay I muſt hold you.

Ther. As will ſtop the eye of Helens Needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace foole.

Ther. I would have peace and quietneſſe, but the foole will not: he there, that he, looke you there.

Ajax. O thou damn'd Curre, I ſhall——

Achil. Will you ſet you wit to a Fooles?

Ther. No I warrant you, for a fooles will ſhame it.

Pat. Good words Therſites.

Achil. What's the quarrell?

Ajax. I bad thee vile Owle, goe learne me the tenure of the Proclamation, and he railes upon me.

Ther. I ſerve thee not.

Ajax. Well, goe to, goe to.

Ther. I ſerve heere voluntary.

Achil, Your laſt ſervice was ſufferance, 'twas not voluntary, no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was heere the voluntary, and you as under an Impreſſe.

Ther. E'ne ſo, a great deale of your wit too lyes in your ſinnewes, or elſe there be Liars: Hector ſhall have a great catch, if he knocke out either of your braines, he were as good cracke a fuſty nut with no kernell.

Achil. What with me too Therſites?

Ther. There's Ulyſſes, and old Neſtor, whoſe Wit was mouldy ere their Grandſirs had nailes on their toes, yoke you like draft-Oxen, and make you plough up the waire.

Achil. What? what?

Ther. Yes good ſooth, to Achilles, to Ajax, to——

Ajax. I ſhall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter, I ſhall ſpeake as much as thou afterwards.

Pat. No more words Therſites.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles Brooch bids me, ſhall I?

Achil. There's for you Patroclus.

Ther. I will ſee you hang'd like Clotpoles ere I come any more to your Tents; I will keepe where there is wit ſtirring, and leave the faction of fooles. Exit.

Pat. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry this Sir is proclaim'd through al our hoſt,
That Hector by the fift houre of the Sunne,
Will with a Trumpet, 'twixt our Tents and Troy
To morrow morning call ſome Knight to Armes,
That hath a ſtomacke, and ſuch a one that dare
Maintaine I know not what: 'tis traſh. Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell? who ſhall anſwer him?

Achil. I know not, 'tis put to Lottry: otherwiſe
He knew his man.

Aja. O meaning you, I will goe learne more of it. Exit.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troylus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After ſo many houres, lives, ſpeeches ſpent,
Thus once againe ſayes Neſtor from the Greekes,
Deliver Helen, and all damage elſe
(As honour, loſſe of time, travaile, expence,
Wounds, friends, and what elſe deere that is conſum'd
In not diſgeſtion of this cormorant Warre)
Shall be ſtroke off. Hector, what ſay you too't.

Hect. Though no man leſſer feares the Greekes then I,
As farre as touches my particular: yet dread Priam,
There is no Lady of more ſofter bowels,
More ſpungy, to ſucke in the ſenſe of feare,
More ready to cry out, who knowes what followes
Then Hector is: the wound of peace is ſurety,
Surety ſecure: but modeſt doubt is cal'd
The Beacon of the wiſe: the tent that ſearches
To'th'bottome of the worſt. Let Helen goe.
Since the firſt ſword was drawne about this queſtion,
Every tythe ſoule 'mongſt many thouſand diſmes,
Hath beene as deere as Hellen: I meane of ours:
If we have loſt ſo many tenths of ours
To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us
(Had it our name) the valew of one ten;
What merit's in that reaſon which denies
The yeelding of her up?

Troy. Fye, fie, my Brother;
Weigh you the worth and honour of a King
(So great as our dread Father) in a Scale
Of common Ounces? Will you with Counters ſumme
The paſt proportion of his infinite?
And buckle in a waſte moſt fathomleſſe,
With ſpannes and inches ſo diminutive,
As feares and reaſons? Fye for godly ſhame?

Hel. No marvell though you bite ſo ſharpe at reaſons,
You are empty of them, ſhould not our father
Beare the great ſway of his affaires with reaſons,
Becauſe your ſpeech hath none that tells him ſo?

Troy. You are for dreames and ſlumbers brother Prieſt,
You furre your gloves with reaſon: here are your reaſons
You know an enemy intends you harme.
You know, a ſword imploy'd is perillous,
And reaſon flyes the object of all harme,
Who marvels then when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his ſword, if he doe ſet
The very wings of reaſon to his heeles:
Or like a Starre diſorb'd. Nay, if we talke of reaſon,
And flye like chidden Mercury from Iove,
Let's ſhut our gates and ſleepe: Manhood and Honor
Shold have hard hearts, would they but fat their thoughts
With this cramm'd reaſon: reaſon and reſpect,
Makes Lovers pale, and luſty hood deject.

Hect. Brother, ſhe is not worth
What ſhe doth coſt the holding.

Troy. What's aught, but as 'tis valew'd?

Hect. But value dwels not in particular will,
It holds his eſtimate and dignity
As well, wherein 'tis precious of it ſelfe,
As in the prizer: 'Tis made Idolatry,
To make the ſervice greater then the god,
And the will dotes that is inclineable
To what infectiouſly it ſelfe affects,
Without ſome image of th'affected merit.

Troy. I take to day a Wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;

My will enkindled by mine eyes and eares,
Two traded Pylots 'twixt the dangerous ſhores
Of Will, and Iudgement. How may I avoyde
(Although my will diſtaſte what it elected)
The Wife I choſe, there can be no evaſion
To blench from this, and to ſtand firme by honour.
We turne not backe the Silkes upon the Merchant
When we have ſpoyl'd them; nor the remainder Viands
We doe not throw in unreſpective place,
Becauſe we now ate full. It was thought meete
Paris ſhould doe ſome vengeance on the Greekes;
Your breath of full conſent bellied his Sailes,
The Seas and Windes (old Wranglers) tooke a Truce,
And did him ſervice; he touch'd the Ports deſir'd,
And for an old Aunt whom the Greekes held Captive,
He brought a Grecian Queen, whoſe youth & freſhneſſe
Wrinkles Apolloes, and makes ſtale the morning.
Why keepe we her? the Grecians keepe our Aunt:
Is ſhe worth keeping? Why ſhe is a Pearle,
Whoſe price hath launch'd above a thouſand Ships,
And turn'd Crown'd Kings to Merchants.
If you'll avouch, twas wiſedome Paris went,
(As you muſt needs, for you all cride, Go, goe:)
If you'll confeſſe, he brought home Noble prize,
(As you muſt needs, for you all clapt your hands)
And cride ineſtimable; why doe you now
The iſſue of your proper Wiſedomes rate,
And doea deed that Fortune never did?
Begger the eſtimation which you priz'd,
Richer then Sea and Land? O Theft moſt baſe!
That we have ſtolne what we doe feare to keepe.
But Theeves unworthy of a thing ſo ſtolne,
That in their Country did them that diſgrace,
We feare to warrant in our Native place.

Enter Caſſandra with her haire about her eares.

Caſ. Cry Troyans, cry.
Priam. What noyſe? what ſhreeke is this?
Troy. 'Tis our mad ſiſter, I doe know her voyce.
Caſ. Cry Troyans.
Hec. It is Caſſandra.
Caſ. Cry Troyans cry; lend me ten thouſand eyes;
And I will fill them with Propheticke teares.
Hec. Peace ſiſter, peace.
Caſ. Virgins, and Boyes; mid-age and wrinkled old,
Soft infancy, that nothing can but cry,
Adde to my clamour: let us pay betimes
A moity of that maſſe of moane to come.
Cry Troyans cry, practiſe your eyes with teares,
Troy muſt not be, nor goodly Illion ſtand,
Our fire-brand Brother Paris burnes us all.
Cry Troyans cry, a Helen and a woe;
Cry, cry, Troy burnes, or elſe let Helen goe. Exit.
Hec. Now youthfull Troylus, doe not theſe hie ſtrains
Of divination in our Siſter, worke
Some touches of remorſe? Or is your bloud
So madly hot, that no diſcourſe of reaſon,
Nor feare of bad ſucceſſe in a bad cauſe,
Can qualifie the ſame?
Troy. Why brother Hector,
We may not thinke the juſtneſſe of each acte
Such, and no other then event doth forme it,
Nor once deject the courage of our minds;
Becauſe Caſſandra's mad, her brainſicke raptures
Cannot diſtaſte the goodneſſe of a quarrell,
Which hath our ſeverall Honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd, then all Priams ſonnes,
And Iove forbid there ſhould be done among'ſt us
Such things as might offend the weakeſt ſpleene,
To fight for, and maintaine.
Par. Elſe might the world convince of levity,
As well my under-takings as your counſels:
But I atteſt the gods, your full conſent
Gave wings to my propenſion, and cut off
All feares attending on ſo dire a project.
For what (alas) can theſe my ſingle armes?
What propugnation is in one mans valour
To ſtand the puſh aud enmity of thoſe
This quarrell would excite? Yet I proteſt,
Were I alone to paſſe the difficulties,
And had as ample power, as I have will,
Paris ſhould ne're retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the purſuite.
Pri. Paris, you ſpeake
Like one be-ſotted on your ſweet delights;
You have the Hony ſtill, but theſe the Gall,
So to be valiant, is no praiſe at all.
Par. Sir, I propoſe not meerely to my ſelfe,
The pleaſures ſuch a beauty brings with it:
But I would have the ſoyle of her faire Rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.
What Treaſon were it to the ranſack'd Queene,
Diſgrace to your great worths, and ſhame to me,
Now to deliver her poſſeſſion up
On termes of baſe compulſion? Can it be,
That ſo degenerate a ſtraine as this,
Should once ſet foot in your generous boſomes?
There not the meaneſt ſpirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or ſword to draw,
When Helen is defended: nor none ſo Noble,
Whoſe life were ill beſtow'd, or death unfam'd,
Where Helen is the ſubject. Then (I ſay)
Well may we fight for her, whom we know well,
The worlds large ſpaces cannot paralell;
Hect. Paris and Troylus, you have both ſaid well;
And on the cauſe and queſtion now in hand,
Have gloz'd, but ſuperficially; not much
Vnlike young men, whom Ariſtotle thought
Vnfit to heare Morall Philoſophy,
The Reaſons you alledge, doe more conduce
To the hot paſſion of diſtemp'red blood,
Then to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong: For pleaſure, and revenge,
Have eares more deafe then Adders, to the voyce
Of any true deciſion. Nature craves
All dues be rendred to their Owners; now
What neerer debt in all humanity,
Then Wife is to the Husband? If this law
Of Nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great mindes of partiall indulgence,
To their benummed wills reſiſt the ſame,
There is a Law in each well-ordred Nation,
To curbe thoſe raging appetites that are
Moſt diſobedient and refractory.
If Helen then be wife to Sparta's King
(As it is knowne ſhe is) theſe Morall Lawes
Of Nature, and of Nation, ſpeake alowd
To haue her backe return'd. Thus to perſiſt
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Hectors opinion

Is this in way of truth: yet nere the leſſe,
My ſpritely brethren, I propend to you
In reſolution to keepe Helen ſtill;
For 'tis a cauſe that hath no meane dependance,
Vpon our joynt and ſeverall dignities.

Troy. Why? there you toucht the life of our deſigne:
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Then the performance of our heaving ſpleenes,
I would not wiſh a drop of Troian blood,
Spent more in her defence. But worthy Hector,
She is a theame of honor and renowne,
A ſpurre to valiant and magnanimous deeds,
Whoſe preſent courage may beate downe our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize us.
For I preſume brave Hector would not loſe
So rich advantage of a promiſ'd glory,
As ſmiles upon the fore-head of this action,
For the wide worlds revenew.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant off-ſpring of great Priamus,
I have a roiſting challenge ſent among'ſt
The dull and factious nobles of the Greekes,
Will ſtrike amazement to their drowſie ſpirits,
I was advertiz'd, their Great generall ſlept,
Whil'ſt emulation in the army crept:
This I preſume will wake him. Exeunt.

Enter Therſites ſolus.

Now now Therſites? what loſt in the Labyrinth of thy fury? ſhall the Elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beates me, and I raile at him: O worthy ſatisfaction, would it were otherwiſe: that I could beate him, whil'ſt he rail'd at me: Sfoote, Ile learne to conjure and raiſe Divels, but Ile ſee ſome iſſue of my ſpitefull execrations. Then ther's Achilles, a rare Enginer. If Troy be not taken till theſe two undermine it, the wals will ſtand till they fall of themſelves, O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Iove the King of gods: and Mercury, looſe all the Serpentine craft of thy Caduceus, if thou take not that little little leſſe then little wit from them that they have, which ſhort-arm'd ignorance it ſelfe knowes, is ſo abundant ſcarſe, it will not in circumvention deliver a Fly from a Spider, without drawing the maſſie Irons and cutting the web: after this, the vengeance on the whole Camp, or rather the bone-ach, for that me thinkes is the curſe dependant on thoſe that warre for a placket. I have ſaid my prayers and divell, envy, ſay Amen: What ho? my Lord Achilles?

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Therſites. Good Therſites come in and raile.

Ther. If I could have remembred a guilt counterfeit, thou would'ſt not have ſlipt out of my contemplation, but it is no matter, thy ſelfe upon thy ſelfe. The common curſe of mankind, folly and ignorance be thine in great revenew; heaven bleſſe thee from a Tutor, and Diſcipline come not neere thee. Let thy blod be thy direction till thy death, then if ſhe that layes thee out ſayes thou art a faire coarſe, Ile be ſworne and ſworne upon't ſhe never ſhrowded any but Lazars, Amen. Wher's Achilles?

Patr. What art thou devout? waſt thou in a prayer?

Ther. I, the heavens heare me.

Enter Achilles.

Achiel. Who's there?

Patr. Therſites, my Lord.

Achil. Where, where, art thou come? why my cheeſe, my digeſtion, why haſt thou not ſerv'd thy ſelfe into my Table, ſo many meales? Come, what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy Commander Achilles; then tell me Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr, Thy Lord Therſites: then tell me I pray thee, what's thy ſelfe?

Ther. Thy knower Patroclus: then tell me Patroclus what art thou?

Patr. Thou maiſt tell that know'ſt.

Achil. O tell, tell.

Ther. Ile decline the whole queſtion: Agamemnon commands Achilles, Achilles is my Lord, I am Patroclus knower, and Patroclus is a foole.

Patro. You raſcall.

Ther. Peace foole, I have not done.

Achil. He is a priviledg'd man, proceede Therſites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole, Achilles is a foole, Therſites is a foole, and as aforeſaid, Patroclus is a foole.

Achil. Derive this: come?

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole to offer to command Achilles, Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon, Therſites is a foole to ſerve ſuch a foole: and Patrolus is a foole poſitiue.

Patr. Why am I a foole?

Enter Agamemnon, Vliſſes, Neſtor, Diomedes, Ajax, and Chalcas.

Ther. Make that demand to the Creator, it ſuffiſes me thou art. Looke you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, Ile ſpeake with no body: come in with me Therſites. Exit.

Ther. Heere is ſuch patchery, ſuch jugling, and ſuch knavery: all the argument is a Cuckold and a Whore, a good quarrell to draw emulations factions, and bleed to death upon: Now the dry Sarpego on the ſubject, and Warre and Lechery confound all.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his Tent, but ill diſpoſ'd my Lord.

Agam. Let it be knowne to him that we are here:
He ſent our Meſſengers, and we lay by
Our appertainments, viſiting of him:
Let him be told of, leaſt perchance he thinke
We dare not move the queſtion of our place,
Or know not what we are.

Pat. I ſhall ſo ſay to him.

Vliſ. We ſaw him at the opening of his Tent,
He is not ſicke.

Aia. Yes, Lyon ſicke, ſicke of a proud heart: you may call it Melancholly if you will favour the man, but by my head, 'tis pride; but why, why, let him ſhow us the cauſe? A word my Lord.

Neſ. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him?

Vliſ. Achilles hath inveigled his Foole from him.

Neſ. Who, Therſites.

Vliſ. He.

Neſ. Then will Ajax lacke matter, if he have loſt his Argument.

Vliſ. No, you ſee he is his argument that has his argument Achilles,

Neſ. All the better, their fraction is more our wiſh then their faction; but it was a ſtrong counſell that a Foole could diſunite.

Vliſ. The amity that wiſedome knits not, folly may eaſily vntie. Enter Patroclus.

Heere

Here comes Patroclus.
Neſ. No Achilles with him?
Vliſ. The Elephant hath joynts, but none for curteſie;
His legges are legges for neceſſity, not for flight.
Patro. Achilles bids me ſay, he is much ſorry:
If any thing more then your ſport and pleaſure,
Did move your greatneſſe, and this noble State,
To call upon him; he hopes it is no other,
But for your health, and your diſgeſtion ſake;
An after Dinners breath.
Aga. Heare you Patroclus:
We are too well acquainted with theſe anſwers:
But his evaſion wing'd thus ſwift with ſcorne,
Cannot outflye our apprehenſions.
Much attribute he hath, and much the reaſon,
Why we aſcribe it to him, yet all his vertues,
(Not vertuouſly of his owne part beheld)
Doe in our eyes, begin to loſe their gloſſe;
And like faire Fruit in an unholſome diſh,
Are like to rot untaſted; goe and tell him,
We come to ſpeake with him; and you ſhall not ſinne,
If you doe ſay, we thinke him over proud,
And under honeſt: in ſelfe aſſumption greater (ſelfe.
Then in the note of iudgement: and worthier then him-
Here tends the ſavage ſtrangeneſſe he puts on,
Diſguiſe the holy ſtrength of their command:
And under write in an obſerving kind
His humorous predominance, yea watch
His pettiſh lines, his ebs, his flowes, as if
The paſſage and whole carriage of this action
Rode on his tyde. Goe tell him this, and adde,
That if he over-hold his price ſo much,
Wee'll none of him; but let him, like an Engin
Not portable, lye under this report.
Bring action hither, this cannot goe to warre:
A ſtirring Dwarfe, we doe allowance give,
Before a ſleeping Gyant: tell him ſo.
Pat. I ſhall, and bring his anſwer preſently.
Aga. In ſecond voyce wee'll not be ſatisfied,
We come to ſpeake with him, Vliſſes enter you.
Exit Vliſſes.
Ajax. What is he more then another?
Aga. No more then what he thinkes he is.
Ajax. Is he ſo much, doe you not thinke, he thinkes himſelfe a better man then I am?
Aga. No queſtion.
Ajax. Will you ſubſcribe his thought, and ſay he is?
Aga. No, Noble Ajax, you are as ſtrong, as valiant, as wiſe, no leſſe noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.
Ajax. Why ſhould a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what it is.
Aga. Your mind is the cleerer Ajax, and your vertues the fairer; he that is proud, eates up himſelfe; Pride is his owne Glaſſe, his owne trumpet, his owne Chronicle, and what ever praiſes it ſelfe but in the deed, devoures the deede in the praiſe,
Enter Vlyſſes.
Ajax. I doe hate a proud man, as I hate the ingendring of Toades.
Neſt. Yet he loves himſelfe: is't not ſtrange?
Vliſ. Achilles will not to the field to morrow,
Aga. What's his excuſe?
Vliſ. He doth relye on none,
But carries on the ſtreame of his diſpoſe,
Without obſervance or reſpect of any,
In will peculiar, and in ſelfe admiſſion.
Aga. Why, will he not upon our faire requeſt,
Vntent his perſon, and ſhare the ayre with us?
Vliſ. Things ſmall as nothing, for requeſts ſake onely
He makes important: poſſeſt he is with greatneſſe,
And ſpeakes not to himſelfe, but with a pride
That quarrels at ſelfe-breath. Imagin'd wroth
Holds in his bloud ſuch ſwolne and hot diſcourſe,
That twixt his mentall and his active parts,
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
And batters gainſt it ſelfe; what ſhould I ſay?
He is ſo plaguy proud, that the death tokens of it,
Cry no recovery.
Aga. Let Ajax goe to him.
Deare Lord, goe you and greete him in his Tent;
'Tis ſaid he holds you well, and will be led
At your requeſt a little from himſelfe.
Vliſ. O Agamemnon, let it not be ſo.
Wee'le conſecrate the ſteps that Ajax makes,
When they goe from Achilles; ſhall the proud Lord,
That baſtes his arrogance with his owne ſeame,
And never ſuffers matter of the world,
Enter his thoughts: ſave ſuch as doe revolue
And ruminate himſelfe. Shall he be worſhipt,
Of that we hold an Idoll, more then he?
No, this thrice worthy and right valiant Lord,
Muſt not ſo ſtaule his Palme, nobly acquir'd,
Nor by my will aſſubiugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is: by going to Achilles,
That were to enlard his fat already, pride,
And adde more Coleſto Cancer, when he burnes
With entertaining great Hiperion.
This L. goe to him? Iupiter forbid,
And ſay in thunder, Achilles goe to him.
Neſt. O this is well, he rubs the veine of him.
Dio. And how his ſilence drinkes up this applauſe.
Aja. If I goe to him, with my armed fiſt, Ile paſh him ore the face.
Aga. O no, you ſhall not goe.
Aja. And a be proud with me, ile pheſe his pride: let me goe to him.
Vliſ. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrell.
Aja. A paultry inſolent fellow.
Neſt. How he deſcribes himſelfe.
Aja. Can he not be ſociable?
Vliſ. The Raven chides blackneſſe.
Aja. Ile let his humors blood.
Aga. He will be the Phyſitian that ſhould be the patient.
Aja. And all men were a my minde.
Vliſ. Wit would be out of faſhion.
Aja. A ſhould not beare it ſo, a ſhould eate Swords firſt: ſhall pride carry it?
Neſt. And 'twould, you'ld carry halfe.
Vliſ. A would, have ten ſharres.
Aja. I will knede him, Ile make him ſupple, he's not yet through warme.
Neſt. Force him with praiſes, poure in, poure in: his ambition is dry.
Vliſ. My L. you feede too much on this diſlike.
Neſt. Our noble Generall, doe not doe ſo.
Dio. You muſt prepare to fight without Achilles.
Vliſ. Why, 'tis this naming of him doth him harme.
Heere is a man, but 'tis before his face,
I will be ſilent.
Neſt. Wherefore ſhould you ſo?

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Vliſ. 'Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Aia. A horſon dog, that ſhall palter thus with us, would he were a Troian.

Neſt. What a vice were it in Aiax now——

Vliſ. If he were proud.

Dio. Or covetous of praiſe.

Vliſ. I, or ſurly borne.

Dio. Or ſtrange, or ſelfe affected.

Vl. Thank the heavens L, thou art of ſweet compoſure;
Prayſe him that got thee, ſhe that gave thee ſucke:
Fame be thy Tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice fam'd beyond, beyond all erudition;
But he that diſciplin'd thy armes to fight,
Let Mars devide Eternity in twaine,
And give him halfe, and for thy vigor,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yeelde
To ſinnowie Aiax: I will not praiſe thy wiſedome,
Which like a bourne, a pale, a ſhore confines
Thy ſpacious and dilated parts; here's Neſtor
Inſtructed by the Antiquary times:
He muſt, he is, he cannot but be wiſe.
But pardon Father Neſtor, were your dayes
As greene as Aiax, and your braine ſo temper'd,
You ſhould not have the eminence of him,
But he as Aiax.

Aia. Shall I call you Father?

Vliſ. I my good Sonne.

Dio. Be rul'd by him Lord Aiax.

Vliſ. There is no tarrying here, the Hart Achilles
Keepes thicker: pleaſe it our Generall:
To call together all this ſtate of warre,
Freſh Kings are come to Troy; to morrow
We muſt with all our maine of power ſtand faſt:
And here's a Lord, (come Knights from Eaſt to Weſt,
And cull their flowre,) Aiax ſhall cope the beſt.

Ag. Goe we to Counſaile, let Achilles ſleepe;
Light Botes may ſaile ſwift, though greater bulkes draw deepe. Exeunt. Muſicke ſounds within.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant.

Pan. Friend, you, pray you a word: Doe not you follow the yong Lord Paris?

Ser. I ſir, When he goes before me.

Pan. You depend upon him I meane?

Ser. Sir, I doe depend upon the Lord.

Pan. You depend upon a noble Gentleman: I muſt needes praiſe him.

Ser. The Lord be praiſed.

Pa. You know me, doe you not?

Ser. Faith ſir, ſuperficially.

Pa. Friend know me better, I am the Lord Pandarus.

Ser. I hope I ſhall know your honour better.

Pa. I doe deſire it.

Ser. You are in the ſtate of Grace?

Pa. Grace, not ſo friend, honour and Lordſhip are my title: What Muſique is this?

Ser. I doe but partly know ſir: it is Muſicke in parts.

Pa. Know you the Muſitians.

Ser. Wholly ſir.

Pa. Who play they to?

Ser. To the hearers ſir.

Pa. At whoſe pleaſure friend?

Ser. At mine ſir, and theirs that love Muſicke.

Pa. Command, I meane friend.

Ser. Who ſhall I command ſir?

Pa. Friend, we underſtand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whoſe requeſt doe theſe men play?

Ser. That's too't indeede ſir: marry ſir, at the requeſt of Paris my L. who's there in perſon; with him the mortall Venus, the heart blood of beauty, loves inviſible ſoule.

Pa. Who? my Coſin Creſſida.

Ser. No, ſir, Helen, could you not finde out that by her attributes?

Pa. It ſhould ſeeme fellow, that thou haſt not ſeen the Lady Creſſida. I come to ſpeake with Paris from the Prince Troylus: I will make a complementall aſſault upon him, for my buſineſſe ſeethes.

Ser. Sodden buſineſſe, there's a ſtewed phraſe indeede.

Enter Paris and Helena.

Pan. Faire be to you my Lord, and to all this faire conpany: faire deſires in all faire meaſure fairely guide them, eſpecially to you faire Queene, faire thoughts bee your faire pillow.

Hel. Deere L. you are full of faire words.

Pan. You ſpeake your faire pleaſure ſweet Queene: faire Prince, here is good broken Muſicke.

Par. You have broken it cozen: and by my life you ſhall make it whole againe, you ſhall peece it out with a peece of your performance. Nel. he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truely Lady no.

Hel. O ſir.

Pan. Rude in ſooth, in good ſooth very rude.

Paris. Well ſaid my Lord: well, you ſay ſo in fits,

Pan. I have buſineſſe to my Lord, deere Queene: my Lord will you vouchſafe me a word?

Hel. Nay, this ſhall not hedge us out, weele heare you ſing certainely.

Pan. Well ſweete Queene you are pleaſant with mee, but, marry thus my Lord, my deere Lord, and moſt eſteemed friend your brother Troylus.

Hel. My Lord Pandarus, hony ſweete Lord,

Pan. Go to ſweete Queene, goe to.
Commends himſelfe moſt affectionately to you.

Hel. You ſhall not bob us out of our melody:
If you doe, our melancholly upon your head.

Pan. Sweete Queene, ſweete Queene, that's a ſweete Queene I faith——

Hel. And to make a ſweet Lady ſad, is a ſowre offence.

Pan. Nay, that ſhall not ſerve your turne, that ſhall it not in truth la. Nay, I care not for ſuch words, no, no. And my Lord he deſires you, that if the King call for him at Supper, you will make this excuſe.

Hel, My Lord Pandarus?

Pan. What ſayes my ſweete Queene, my very, very ſweete Queene?

Par. What exploit's in hand, were ſups he to night?

Hel. Nay but my Lord?

Pan. What ſayes my ſweete Queene? my cozen will fall out with you.

Hel. You muſt not know where he ſups.

Pan. With my diſpoſer Creſſida.

Pan. No, no; no ſuch matter, you are wide, come your diſpoſer is ſicke.

Par. Well, Ile make excuſe.

Pan. I good my Lord: why ſhould you ſay Creſſida? no, your poore diſpoſer's ſicke.

Par. I ſpie.

Pan. You ſpie, what doe you ſpie? come, give me an Inſtrument now ſweete Queene.

Hel. Why this is kindly done?

Pan. My Neece is horrible in love with a thing you have ſweet Queene.

Hel. She ſhall have it my Lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pand. Hee? no ſh eele none of him, they two are twaine.

Hel. Falling in after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, Ile heare no more of this, Ile ſing you a ſong now.

Hel. I, I, prethee now: by my troth ſweet Lord thou haſt a fine fore-head.

Pan. I you may, you may.

Hel. Let thy ſong be love: this love will undoe us all. Oh Cupid, Cupid, Cupid.

Pan. Love? I that it ſhall yfaith.

Par. I, good now love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth it begins ſo.

Love, love, nothing but love, ſtill more:
For O loves Bow,
Shootes both Bucke and Doe:
The Shaft confounds not that it wounds,
But tickles ſtill the ſore:
Theſe Lovers cry, oh ho they dye;
Yet that which ſeemes they wound to kill,
Doth turne oh ho, to ha ha he:
So dying love lives ſtill,
O ho a while, but ha ha ha;
O ho grones out for ha ha ha—hey ho.

Hel. In love yfaith to the very tip of the noſe.

Par. He eates nothing but doves love, and that breeds hot bloud, and hot bloud begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deedes, and hot deedes is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? Hot bloud, hot thoughts, and hot deedes, why they are Vipers, is Love a generation of Vipers?
Sweete Lord whoſe a field to day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Anthenor, and all the gallantry of Troy. I would faine have arm'd to day, but my Nell would not have it ſo.
How chance my brother Troylus went not?

Hel. He hangs the lippe at ſomething; you know all Lord Pandarus?

Pan. Not I hony ſweete Queene: I long to heare how they ſped to day:
Youle remember your brothers excuſe?

Par. To a hayre.

Pan. Farewell ſweete Queene.

Hel. Commend me to your Neece.

Pan. I will ſweete Queene. Sound a retreat.

Par. They're come from fielde: let us to Priams Hall
To greete the warriors. Sweet Hellen, I muſt wooe you,
To helpe unarme our Hector: his ſtubborne buckles,
With theſe your white enchanting fingers toucht,
Shall more obey then to the edge of Steele,
Or force of Greekiſh ſinewes, you ſhall doe more
Then all the Iland Kings, diſarme great Hector.

Hel. 'Twill make us proud to be your ſervant Paris:
Yea what he ſhall receive of us in duetie,
Gives us more palme in beauty then we have:
Yea overſhines our ſelfe.
Sweete above thought I love thee. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Troylus Man.

Pan. How now, where's thy Maſter, at my Couzen Creſſidas?

Man. No ſir, he ſtayes for you to conduct him thither.

Enter Troylus.

Pan. O here he comes: How now, how now?

Troy. Sirra walke off.

Pan. Have you ſeene my Couſin?

Troy. No Pandarus: I ſtalke about her doore
Like a ſtrange ſoule upon the Stigian bankes
Staying for waftage. O be thou my Charon,
And give me ſwift tranſportance to thoſe fields,
Where I may wallow in the Lilly beds
Propos'd for the deſerver. O gentle Pandarus,
From Cupids ſhoulder plucke his painted wings,
And flye with me to Creſſid.

Pan. Walke here ith' Orchard, Ile bring her ſtraight.

Exit Pandarus.

Troy. I am giddy; expectation whirles me round,
Th' imaginary reliſh is ſo ſweete,
That it inchants my ſence: what will it be
When that the watry pallats taſte indeede
Loves thrice reputed Nectar? Death I feare me
Sounding deſtruction, or ſome joy too fine,
Too ſubtile, potent, and too ſharpe in ſweetneſſe,
For the capacitie of my ruder powers;
I feare it much, and I doe feare beſides,
That I ſhall looſe diſtinction in my joyes,
As doth a battaile, when they charge on heapes
The enemy flying. Enter Pandarus.

Pan. Shee's making her ready, ſheele come ſtraight; you muſt be witty now, ſhe does ſo bluſh & fetches her winde ſo ſhort, as if ſhe were fraid with a ſprite: Ile fetch her; it is the pretrieſt villaine, ſhe fetches her breath ſo ſhort as a new tane Sparrow. Exit Pand.

Troy. Even ſuch a paſſion doth embrace my boſome:
My heart beates thicker then a feavorous pulſe,
And all my powers doe their beſtowing looſe,
Like vaſſalage at unawarres encountring
The eye of Majeſty.

Enter Pandarus and Creſſida.

Pan. Come, come, what neede you bluſh?
Shames a babie; here ſhe is now, ſweare the oathes now to her, that you have ſworne to me. What are you gone againe, you muſt be watcht ere you be made tame, muſt you? come your wayes, come your wayes, and you draw backward weele put you i'th fiels: why do you not ſpeak to her? Come draw this curtaine, & let's ſee your picture. Alaſſe the day, how loath you are to offend day light? and 'twere darke you'ld cloſe ſooner. So, ſo, rub on, and kiſſe the miſtreſſe; how now, a kiſſe in fee-farme? build there Carpenter; the ayre is ſweete. Nay, you ſhall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The Faulcon, as the Tercell, for all the Ducks ith River: go to, go to.

Troy. You have bereft me of all words Lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts; give her deedes: but ſheele bereave you 'oth' deeds too, if ſhee call your activity in queſtion: what billing againe? here's in witneſſe whereof the Parties interchangeably. Come in, come in, Ile go get a fire. Exit Pand.

Creſ. Will you walke in my Lord?

Troy. O Creſſida, how often have I wiſht me thus?

Creſ. Wiſht my Lord? the gods grant? O my Lord.

Troy. What ſhould they grant? what makes this pretty abruption: what too curious dreg eſpies my ſweet Lady in the fountaine of our love?

Creſ. More dregs then water, if my teares have eyes.

Troy. Feares make divels of Cherubins, they never ſee truely.

Creſ. Blind feare, that ſeeing reaſon leads, findes ſafer footing, then blinde reaſon, ſtumbling without feare: to feare the worſt, oft cures the worſe.

Troy. Oh let my Lady apprehend no feare,
In all Cupids Pageant there is preſented no monſter.

Creſ. Nor nothing monſtrous neither?

Troy. Nothing but their undertakings, when we vow to weepe ſeas, live in fire, eate rockes, tame Tygers, thinking it harder for our Miſtreſſe to deviſe impoſition inough, then for us to undergoe any difficultie impoſed. This is the monſtruoſitie in love (Lady,) that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd; that the deſire is boundleſſe, and the act a ſlave to limit.

Creſ. They ſay all lovers ſweare more performance then they are able, and yet reſerve a[illegible] ability that they never performe: vowing more then the perfection of ten; and diſcharging leſſe then the tenth part of one. They that have the voyce of Lyons, and the act of Hares: are they not monſters?

Troy. Are there ſuch? ſuch are not we: Praiſe us as we are taſted, allow us as we prove: our head ſhall goe bare till merit crowne it: no perfection in reverſion ſhall have a praiſe in preſent: wee will not name deſert before his birth, and being borne his addition ſhall be humble: few words to faire faith. Troylus ſhall be ſuch to Creſſid, as what envy can ſay worſt, ſhall be a mocke for his truth; and what truth can ſpeake trueſt, not truer then Troylus.

Creſ. Will you walke in my Lord?

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. What bluſhing ſtill? have you not done talking yet?

Creſ. Well Vnckle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thanke you for that: if my Lord get a Boy of you, youle give him me: be true to my Lord, if he flinch, chide me for it.

Troy. You know now your hoſtages: your Vnckles word and my firme faith.

Pan. Nay, Ile give my word for her too: our kindred though they be long ere they are wooed, they are conſtant being wonne: they are Burres I can tell you, they'le ſticke where they are throwne.

Creſ. Boldneſſe comes to me now, and brings mee heart: Prince Troylus, I have lov'd you night and day, for many weary moneths.

Troy. Why was my Creſſid then ſo hard to win?

Creſ. Hard to ſeeme won: but I was won my Lord
With the firſt glance that ever: pardon me,
If I confeſſe much you will play the tyrant:
I love you now, but not till now ſo much
But I might maſter it; in faith I lye:
My thoughts were like unbrideled children, growne
Too head-ſtrong for their mother: ſee we fooles,
Why have I blab'd? who ſhall be true to us
When we are ſo unſecret to our ſelves?
But though I lov'd you well, I wooed you not,
And yet good faith I wiſht my ſelfe a man;
Or that the women had mens priviledge
Of ſpeaking firſt. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue,
For in this rapture I ſhall ſurely ſpeake
The thing I ſhall repent: ſee, ſee, your ſilence
Comming in dumbneſſe, from my weakeneſſe drawes
My ſoule of counſell from me. Stop my mouth.

Troy. And ſhall, albeit ſweete Muſicke iſſues thence.

Pan. Pretty yfaith.

Creſ. My Lord I doe beſeech you pardon me,
'Twas not my purpoſe thus to beg a kiſſe:
I am aſham'd; O Heavens, what have I done!
For this time will I take my leave my Lord.

Troy. Your leave ſweet Creſſid?

Pan. Leave! and you take leave till to morrow morning.

Creſ. Pray you content you.

Troy. What offends you Lady?

Creſ. Sir mine owne company.

Troy. You cannot ſhun your ſelfe.

Creſ. Let me goe and try:
I have a kinde of ſelfe reſides with you:
But an unkinde ſelfe, that it ſelfe will leave,
To be anothers foole. Where is my wit?
I would be gone: I ſpeake I know not what.

Troy. Well know they what they ſpeake, that ſpeake ſo wiſely.

Creſ. Perchance my Lord, I ſhew more craft then love,
And fell ſo roundly to a large confeſſion,
To Angle for your thoughts: but you are wiſe,
Or elſe you love not: for to be wiſe and love,
Exceedes mans might, that dwels with gods above.

Troy. O that I thought it could be in a woman:
And if it can, I will preſume in you,
To feede for aye her lampe and flames of love,
To keepe her conſtancie in plight and youth,
Out-living beauties outward, with a minde
That doth renew ſwifter then blood decaies:
Or that perſwaſion could but thus convince me,
That my integritie and truth to you,
Might be affronted with the match and waight
Of ſuch a winnowed puritie in love:
How were I then up-lifted! but alas,
I am as true, as truths ſimplicitie,
And ſimpler then the infancie of truth.

Creſ. In that Ile warre with you.

Troy. O vertuous fight,
When right with right wars, who ſhall be moſt right?
True ſwaines in love, ſhall in the world to come
Approve their truths by Troylus: when their rimes,
Full of proteſt, of oath and big compare
Want ſmiles: truth tir'd with iteration,
As true as ſteele, as plantage to the Moone:
As Sunne to day, as Turtle to her mate:
As Iron to Adamant: as Earth to th' Center:
Yet after all compariſons of truth,
(As truths authenticke author to be cited)
As true as Troylus, ſhall crowne up the Verſe,
And ſanctifie the numbers.

Creſ. Prophet may you be:
If I be falſe, or ſwerve a haire from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot it ſelfe:
When water-drops have worne the ſtones of Troy;
And blinde oblivion ſwallow'd Cities up;
And mightie States characterleſſe are grated
To duſtie nothing; yet let memory,
From falſe to falſe, among falſe Maides in love,
Vpbraid my falſehood, when they'ave ſaid as falſe,
As Aire, as Water, as Winde, as ſandie earth;
As Foxe to Lambe; as Wolfe to Heifers Calfe;
Pard to the Hinde, or Stepdame to her Sonne;
Yea, let them ſay, to ſticke the heart of falſehood,

As falſe as Creſſid.

Pand. Go to, a bargaine made: ſeale it, ſeale it, Ile be the witneſſe, here I hold your hand: here my Couſins, if ever you prove falſe one to another, ſince I have taken ſuch paines to bring you together, let all pittifull goers betweene be cal'd to the worlds end after my name: call them all Panders; let all conſtant men be Troyluſſes, all falſe women Creſſids, and all brokers betweene, Panders: ſay, Amen.

Troy. Amen.

Creſſ. Amen.

Pan. Amen.

Whereupon I will ſhew you a Chamber, which bed, becauſe it ſhall not ſpeake of your prettie encounters, preſſe it to death: away.

And Cupid grant all tong-tide Maidens heere,
Bed, Chamber, and Pander, to provide this geere. Exeunt.

Enterr Vlyſſes, Diomedes, Neſtor, Agamemnon,
Menelaus and Calcas.

Cal. Now Princes for the ſervice I have done you,
Th'advantage of the time prompts me aloud,
To call for recompence: appeare it to your minde,
That through the ſight I beare in things to love,
I have abandon'd Troy, left my poſſeſſion,
Incur'd a Traytors name, expos'd my ſelfe,
From certaine and poſſeſt conveniences,
To doubtfull fortunes, ſequeſtring from me all
That time, acquaintance, cuſtome and condition,
Made tame, and moſt familiar to my nature:
And here to doe you ſervice am become,
As new into the world, ſtrange, unacquainted.
I doe beſeech you, as in way of taſte,
To give me now a little benefit:
Out of thoſe many regiſtred in promiſe,
Which you ſay, live to come in my behalfe.

Agam. What would'ſt thou of us Troyan? make demand?

Cal. You have a Troian priſoner, cal'd Anthenor,
Yeſterday tooke: Troy holds him very deere.
Oft have you (often have you, thankes therefore)
Deſir'd my Creſſid in right great exchange.
Whom Troy hath ſtill deni'd: but this Anthenor,
I know is ſuch a wreſt in their affaires,
That their negotiations all muſt ſlacke,
Wanting his mannage: and they will almoſt,
Give us a Prince of blood, a Sonne of Priam,
In change of him. Let him be ſent great Princes,
And he ſhall buy my Daughter: and her preſence,
Shall quite ſtrike off all ſervice I have done,
In moſt accepted paine.

Aga. Let Diomedes beare him,
And bring us Creſſid hither: Calcas ſhall have
What he requeſts of us: good Diomed
Furniſh you fairely for this enterchange;
Withall bring word, if Hector will to morrow
Be anſwer'd in his challenge. Ajax is ready.

Dio. This ſhall I undertake, and 'tis a burthen
Which I am proud to beare. Exit.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus in their Tent.

Vliſ. Achilles ſtands i'th entrance of his Tent;
Pleaſe it our Generall to paſſe ſtrangely by him,
As if he were forgot: and Princes all,
Lay negligent and looſe regard upon him;
I will come laſt, 'tis like hee'l queſtion me,
Why ſuch unplauſive eyes are bent? why turn'd on him?
If ſo, I have deriſion medicinable,
To uſe betweene your ſtrangeneſſe and his pride,
Which his owne will ſhall have deſire to drinke;
It may doe good, pride hath no other glaſſe
To ſhow it ſelfe, but pride: for ſupple knees,
Feede arrogance, and are the proud mans fees.

Agam. Weele execute your purpoſe, and put on
A forme of ſtrangeneſſe as we paſſe along,
So doe each Lord, and either greete him not,
Or elſe diſdainfully, which ſhall ſhake him more,
Then if not lookt on. I will leade the way.

Achil. What comes the Generall to ſpeake with me?
You know my minde, Ile fight no more 'gainſt Troy.

Aga. What ſayes Achilles, would he ought with us?

Neſ. Would you my Lord ought with the Generall?

Achil. No.

Neſ. Nothing my Lord.

Aga. The better.

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How doe you? how doe you?

Achi. What does the Cuckold ſcorne me?

Ajax. How now Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow Ajax?

Ajax. Ha.

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. I, and good next day too. Exeunt.

Achil. What meane theſe fellowes? know they not Achilles?

Patr. They paſſe ſtrangely: they were us'd to bend,
To ſend their ſmiles before them to Achilles:
To come as humbly as they us'd to creepe to holy Altars.

Achil. What am I poore of late?
'Tis certaine, greatneſſe once falne out with fortune,
Muſt fall out with men too: what the declin'd is,
He ſhall as ſoone reade in the eyes of others,
As feele in his owne fall: for men like butter-flies,
Shew not their mealie wings, but to the Summer;
And not a man for being ſimple man,
Hath any honor; but honor'd by thoſe honours
That are without him; as place, riches, favour,
Prizes of accident, as oft as merit:
Which when they fall (as being ſlippery ſtanders)
The love that leand on them as ſlippery too,
Doth on plucke downe another, and together
Dye in the fall, But 'tis not ſo with me;
Fortune and I are friends, I doe enjoy
At ample point all that I did poſſeſſe,
Save theſe mens lookes: who do me thinkes finde out
Something not worth in me ſuch rich beholding,
As they have often given. Here is Vliſſes,
Ile interrupt his reading: how now Vliſſes?

Vliſ. Now great Thetis Sonne.

Achil. What are you reading?

Vliſ. A ſtrange fellow here
Writes me, that man, how dearely ever parted,
How much in having, or without, or in,
Cannot make boaſt to have that which he hath;
Nor feeles not what he owes, but by reflection:
As when his vertues ſhining upon others,
Heate them, and they retort that heate againe
To the firſt giver.

Achil. This is not ſtrange Vliſſes:
The beautie that is borne here in the face,
The bearer knowes not, but commends it ſelfe,
Not going from it ſelfe: but eye to eye oppos'd,

Salutes each other with each others forme.
For ſpeculation turnes not to it ſelfe,
Till it hath travail'd and is married there
Where it may ſee it ſelfe; this is not ſtrange at all.
Vliſ. I doe not ſtraine it at the poſition,
It is familiar; but at the Authors drift,
Who in his circumſtance, expreſſy proves
That no man is the Lord of any thing,
(Though in and of him there is much conſiſting,)
Till he communicate his parts to others:
Nor doth he of himſelfe know them for ought,
Till he behold them formed in th' applauſe,
Where they are extended: who like an arch reverb'rates
The voice againe; or like a gate of ſteele,
Fronting the Sunne, receives and renders backe
His figure, and his heate. I was much rapt in this,
And apprehended here immediately
The unknowne Ajax;
Heavens what a man is there? a very Horſe, (are
That has he knowes not what Nature, what things there
Moſt abject in regard, and deare in uſe.
What things againe moſt deere in the eſteeme,
And poore in worth: now ſhall we ſee to morrow,
An act that very chance doth throw upon him?
Ajax renown'd? O heavens, what ſome men doe,
While ſome men leave to doe!
How ſome men creepe in skittiſh fortunes hall,
Whiles others play the Ideots in her eyes:
How one man eates into anothers pride,
While pride is feaſting in his wantonneſſe
To ſee theſe Grecian Lords; why, even already,
They clap the lubber Ajax on the ſhoulder,
As if his foote were on brave Hectors breſt,
And great Troy ſhrinking.
Achil. I doe beleeve it:
For they paſt by me, as miſers doe by beggars,
Neither gave to me good word, nor good looke:
What are my deedes forgot?
Vliſ. Time hath (my Lord) a wallet at his backe,
Wherein he puts almes for oblivion:
A great ſiz'd monſter of ingratitudes:
Thoſe ſcraps are good deedes paſt,
Which are devour'd as faſt as they are made,
Forgot as ſoone as done: perſeverance, deere my Lord,
Keepes honour bright: to have done, is to hang
Quite out of faſhion, like a ruſtie male,
In monumentall mockrie: take the inſtant way,
For honor travels in a ſtraight ſo narrow,
Where one but goes a breaſt, keepe then the path:
For emulation hath a thouſand Sonnes,
That one by one purſue; if you give way,
Or hedge aſide from the direct forth right;
Like to an entred Tyde, they all ruſh by,
And leave you hindmoſt;
Or like a gallant Horſe falne in firſt ranke,
Lye there for pavement to the abject, neere
Ore-run and trampled on: then what they doe in preſent,
Though leſſe then yours in paſt, muſt ore-top yours:
For time is like a faſhionable Hoſte,
That ſlightly ſhakes his parting Gueſt by th' hand;
And with his armes out-ſtretcht, as he would flye,
Graſpes in the commer: the welcome ever ſmiles,
And farewels goes out ſighing: O let not vertue ſeeke
Remuneration for the thing it was: for beautie, wit,
High birth, vigor of bone, deſert in ſervice,
Love, friendſhip, charity, are ſubjects all
To envious and calumniating time:
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin:
That all with one conſent praiſe new borne gaudes,
Though they are made and moulded of things paſt,
And goe to duſt, that is a little gilt,
More laud then gilt oreduſted.
The preſent eye praiſes the preſent object:
Then marveile not thou great and compleat man,
That all the Greeees begin to worſhip Ajax;
Since things in motion 'gin to catch the eye,
Then what not ſtirs: the cry went out on thee,
And ſtill it might, and yet it may againe,
If thou wouldſt not entombe thy ſelfe alive,
And caſe thy reputation in thy Tent;
Whoſe glorious deedes, but in theſe fields of late,
Made emulous miſſions 'mongſt the gods themſelves,
And drave great Mars to faction.
Achil. Of this my privacie,
I have ſtrong reaſons.
Vliſ. But 'gainſt your privacie.
The reaſons are more potent and heroycall:
'Tis knowne Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priams daughters.
Achil. Ha? knowne?
Vliſ. Is that a wonder?
The providence that's in a watchfull State,
Knowes almoſt every graine of Plutoes gold;
Findes bottome in th' uncomprehenſive deepes;
Keepes place with thought; and almoſt like the gods,
Does thoughts unvaile in their dumbe cradles:
There is a myſterie (with whom relation
Durſt never meddle) in the ſoule of ſtate;
Which hath an operation more divine,
Then breath or pen can give expreſſure to:
All the commerce that you have had with Troy,
As perfectly is ours, as yours, my Lord.
And better would it fit Achilles much,
To throw downe Hector then Polixena.
But it muſt grieve young Pirrhus now at home,
When fame ſhall in her Iland ſound her trumpe;
And all the Greekiſh Girles ſhall tripping ſing,
Great Hectors ſiſter did Achilles winne;
But our great Ajax bravely beate downe him.
Farewell my Lord: I as your lover ſpeake;
The foole ſlides ore the Ice that you ſhould breake.
Patr. To this effect Achilles have I mov'd you;
A woman impudent and manniſh growne,
Is not more loth'd, then an effeminate man,
In time of action: I ſtand condemn'd for this;
They thinke my little ſtomacke to the warre,
And your great love to me, reſtraines you thus:
Sweete, rouſe your ſelfe; and the weake wanton Cupid
Shall from your necke unlooſe his amorous fould,
And like a dew-drop from the Lyons mane,
Be ſhooke to ayrie ayre.
Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?
Patr. I, and perhaps receive much honor by him.
Achil. I ſee my reputation is at ſtake,
My fame is ſhrewdly gored.
Patr. O then beware:
Thoſe wounds heale ill, that men doe give themſelves:
Omiſſion to doe what is neceſſary,
Seales a commiſſion to a blanke of danger,
And danger like an ague ſubtly taints
Even then when we ſit idely in the ſunne.
Achil. Goe call Therſites hither ſweet Patroclus,

Ile ſend the foole to Ajax, and deſire him
T'invite the Troyan Lords after the Combat
To ſee us here unarm'd: I have a womans longing,
An appetite that I am ſicke withall,
To ſee great Hector in the weedes of peace; Enter Therſi.
To talke with him, and to behold his viſage,
Even to my full of view. A labour-ſav'd.

Ther. A wonder.

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and downe the field, asking for himſelfe.

Achll. How ſo?

Ther. Hee muſt fight ſingly to morrow with Hector, and is ſo prophetically proud of an heroicall cudgelling, that he raves in ſaying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why he ſtalkes up and downe like a Peacock, a ſtride and a ſtand: ruminates like an hoſteſſe, that hath no Arithmetique but her braine to ſet downe her reckoning: bites his lip with a politique regard, as who ſhould ſay, there were wit in his head and twoo'd out; and ſo there is: but it lyes as coldly in him, as fire in a flint, which will not ſhew without knocking. The mans undone for ever; for if Hector breake not his necke i'th' combat, heele break't himſelfe in vaine-glory. Hee knowes not me: I ſaid, good morrow Ajax; And hee replyes, thankes Agamemnon. What thinke you of this man, that takes me for the Generall? Hee's growne a very land-fiſh, languageleſſe, a monſter: a plague of opinion, a man may weare it on both ſides like a leather Ierkin.

Achil. Thou muſt be my Ambaſſador to him Therſites.

Ther. Who, I: why, heele anſwer no body: he profeſſes not anſwering; ſpeaking is for beggers: he weares his tongue in's armes: I will put on his preſence; let Patroclus make his demands to me, you ſhall ſee the Pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him Patroclus; tell him, I humbly deſire the valiant Ajax, to invite the moſt valorous Hector, to come unarm'd to my Tent, and to procure ſafe conduct for his perſon, of the magnauimious and moſt illuſtrious, ſixe or Seaven times honour'd Captaine, Generall of the Grecian Armie Agamemnon, &c. doe this.

Patro. Iove bleſſe great Ajax.

Ther. Hum.

Patr. I come fom the worthy Achilles.

Ther. Ha?

Patr. Who moſt humbly deſires you to invite Hector to his Tent.

Ther. Hum.

Patr. And to procure ſafe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. I my Lord.

Ther. Ha?

Patr. What ſay you too't.

Ther. God buy you with all my heart.

Patr. Your anſwer ſir.

Ther. If to morrow be a faire day, by eleven a clocke it will goe one way or other; howſoever, he ſhall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your anſwer ſir.

Ther. Fare you well with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out a tune thus: what muſicke will be in when Hector has knockt out his braines, I know not: but I am ſure none, unleſſe the Fidler Apollo get his ſinewes to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou ſhalt beare a Letter to him ſtraight.

Ther. Let me carry another to his Horſe; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My minde is troubled like a Fountaine ſtir'd,
And I my ſelfe ſee not the bottome of it.

Ther. Would the Fountaine of your minde were cleere againe, that I might water an Aſſe at it: I had rather be a Ticke in a Sheepe, then ſuch a valiant ignorance.

Enter at one doore Æneas with a Torch, at another
Paris, Deiphobus, Anthenor, Diomed the Grecian, with Torches.

Patr. See hoa, who is that there?

Deiph. It is the Lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the Prince there in perſon?
Had I ſo good occaſion to lye long
As you Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly buſineſſe,
Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Diom. That's my minde too: good morrow Lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greeke Æneas, take his hand,
Witneſſe the proceſſe of your ſpeech within;
You told how Diomed, in a whole weeke by dayes
Did haunt you in the Field.

Æne. Health to you valiant ſir;
During all queſtion of the gentle truce:
But when I meete you arm'd, as blacke defiance,
As heart can thinke, or courage execute.

Diom. The one and other Diomed embraces,
Our blouds are now in calme; and ſo long health:
But when contention, and occaſion meete,
By Iove, Ile play the hunter for thy life,
With all my force, purſuite and pollicy.

Æne. And thou ſhalt hunt a Lyon that will flye
With his face backward, in humaine gentleneſſe:
Welcome to Troy; now by Anchiſes life,
Welcome indeede: by Venus hand I ſweare,
No man alive can love in ſuch a ſort,
The thing he meanes to kill, more excellently.

Diom. We ſimpathize. Iove let Æneas live
(If to my ſword his fate be not the glory)
A thouſand compleat courſes of the Sunne,
But in mine emulous honor let him dye:
With every joynt a wound, and that to morrow.

Æne. We know each other well.

Dio. We doe, and long to know each other worſe.

Par. This is the moſt, deſpightful'ſt gentle greeting;
The nobleſt hatefull love, that ere I heard of.
What buſineſſe Lord ſo early?

Æue. I was ſent for to the King; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpoſe meets you; it was to bring this Greek
To Calcha's houſe: and there to render him,
For the enfreed Anthenor, the faire Creſſid:
Lets have your company; or if you pleaſe,
Haſte there before us, I conſtantly doe thinke
(Or rather call my thought a certaine knowledge)
My brother Troylus lodges there to night.
Rouſe him, and give him note of our approach,
With the whole quality whereof, I feare
We ſhall be much unwelcome.

Æne. That I aſſure you:
Troylus had rather Troy were borne to Greece,
Then Creſſid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no helpe:
The bitter diſpoſition of the time will have it ſo
On Lord, weele follow you.
Æne. Good morrow all. Exit Æneas
Par. And tell me noble Diomed; faith tell me true,
Even in the ſoule of ſound good fellowſhip,
Who in your thoughts merits faire Helen moſt?
My ſelfe, or Menelaus?
Diom. Both alike.
He merits well to have her, that doth ſeeke her,
Not making any ſcruple of her ſoylure,
With ſuch a hell of paine, and world of charge.
And you as well to keepe her, that defend her,
Not pallating the taſte of her diſhonour,
With ſuch a coſtly loſſe of wealth and friends:
He like a puling Cuckold, would drinke up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed peece:
You like a letcher, out of whoriſh loynes,
Are pleaſ'd to breede out your inheritors:
Both merits poyz'd, each weighs no leſſe nor more,
But he as he, which heavier for a whore.
Par. You are too bitter to your country-woman.
Dio. Shee's bitter to her country: heare me Paris,
For every falſe drop in her baudy veines,
A Grecians life hath ſunke: for every ſcruple
Of her contaminated carrion weight,
A Troian hath beene ſlaine. Since ſhe could ſpeake,
She hath not given ſo many good words breath,
As for her Greekes and Troians ſuffred death.
Par. Faire Diomed, you doe as chapmen doe,
Diſpraiſe the thing that you deſire to buy:
But we in ſilence hold this vertue well;
Weele not commend, what we intend to ſell.
Here lyes our way. Exeunt.

Enter Troylus and Creſſida.

Troy. Deere, trouble not your ſelfe: the morne is cold.
Creſ. Then ſweet my Lord, Ile call my Vnckle down;
He ſhall unbolt the Gates.
Troy. Trouble him not:
To bed, to bed; ſleepe kill thoſe pretty eyes,
And give as ſoft attachment to thy ſences,
As Infants empty of all thought.
Creſ. Good morrow then.
Troy. I prithee now to bed.
Creſ. Are you a weary of me?
Troy. O Creſſida! but that the buſie day
Wak't by the Larke, hath rouz'd the ribald Crowes,
And dreaming night will hide our eyes no longer:
I would not from thee.
Creſ. Night hath beene too briefe. (ſtayes,
Troy. Beſhrew the witch! with venemous wights ſhe
As hidiouſly as hell; but flies the graſpes of love,
With wings more momentary, ſwifter then thought:
You will catch colde and curſe me.
Creſ. Prithee tarry, you men will never tarry;
O fooliſh Creſſid, I might have ſtill held off,
And then you would have tarried. Hearke ther's one up.
Pand. within. What's all the doores open here?
Troy. It is your Vnckle. Enter Pandarus.
Creſ. A peſtilence on him: now will he be mocking:
I ſhall have ſuch a life
Pan. How now, how now? how goe maiden-heads?
Heare you Maide: wher's my cozin Creſſid?
Creſ. Go hang your ſelf, you naughty mocking Vnckle:
You bring me to doe—and then you floute me too.
Pan. To do what? to do what? let her ſay what:
What have I brought you to doe?
Creſ. Come, come, beſhrew your heart: youle nere be good, nor ſuffer others.
Pan. Ha, ha: alas poore wretch: a poore Chipochia, haſt not ſlept to night? would he not (a naughty man) let it ſleepe: a bug-beare take him. One knocks.
Creſ. Did not I tell you? would he were knockt ith' head. Who's that at doore? good Vncke goe and ſee.
My Lord, come you againe into my Chamber:
You ſmile and mocke me, as if I meant naughtily.
Troy. Ha, ha.
Cre. Come you are deceiv'd, I thinke of no ſuch thing.
How earneſtly they knocke: pray you come in. Knocke.
I would not for halfe Troy have you ſeene here. Exeunt.
Pan. Who's there? what's the matter? will you beate downe the doore? How now, what's the matter?
Æne. Good morrow Lord, good morrow.
Pan. Who's there, my Lord Æneas? by my troth I know you not: what newes with you ſo early?
Æne. Is not Prince Troylus here?
Pan. Here? what ſhould he doe here?
Æne. Come he is here, my Lord, doe not deny him:
It doth import him much to ſpeake with me.
Pan. Is he here ſay you? 'tis more than I know, Ile be ſworne: For my owne part I came in late: what ſhould he doe here?
Æne. Who, nay then: Come, come, youle doe him wrong, ere y'are ware: youle be ſo true to him, to bee falſe to him: Doe not you know of him, but yet goe fetch him hither, goe.

Enter Troylus.

Troy. How now, what's the matter?
Æne. My Lord, I ſcarce have leiſure to ſalute you,
My matter is ſo raſh: there is at hand,
Paris your brother, and Deiphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Anthenor
Deliver'd to us, and for him forth-with,
Ere the firſt ſacrifice, within this houre,
We muſt give up to Diomedes hand
The Lady Creſſida.
Troy. Is it concluded ſo?
Æne. By Priam, an the generall ſtate of Troy,
They are at hand, and ready to affect it,
Troy. How may atchievements mocke me;
I will goe meete them: and my Lord Æneas,
We met by chance: you did not find me here.
Æne. Good, good, my Lord, the ſecrets of nature
Have not more gift in taciturnity. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Creſſid.

Pan. Is't poſſible? no ſooner got but loſt: the divell take Anthenor; the yong Prince will goe mad: a plague upon Anthenor; I would they had brok's necke.
Creſ. How now? what's the matter? who was heere?
Pan. Ah, ha!
Creſ. Why ſigh you ſo profoundly? where's my Lord? gone? tell me ſweet Vnckle, what's the matter?
Pan. Would I were as deepe under the earth as I am above.
Creſ. O the gods! what's the matter?
Pan. Prethee get thee in: would thou hadſt ne're been borne; I knew thou would'ſt be his death. O poore Gentleman: a plague upon Anthenor.

Creſ. Good Vnckle I beſeech you, on my knees, I beſeech you what's the matter?
Pan. Thou muſt be gone wench, thou muſt be gone; thou art chang'd for Anthenor: thou muſt to thy Father, and be gone from Troylus: 'twill be his death: 'twill be his baine, he cannot beare it.
Creſ. O you immortall gods! I will not goe.
Pan. Thou muſt.
Creſ. I will not Vnckle: I have forgot my Father:
I know no touch of conſanguinitie:
No kin, no love, no bloud, no ſoule, ſo neere me,
As the ſweet Troylus: O you gods divine!
Make Creſſids name the very crowne of falſhood!
If ever ſhe leave Troylus: time, and death,
Do to this body what extremitie you can;
But the ſtrong baſe and building of my love,
Is as the very Center of the earth,
Drawing all things to it. I will goe in and weepe.
Pan. Doe, doe.
Creſ. Teare my bright haire, and ſcratch my praiſed cheekes,
Cracke my cleere voyce with ſobs, and breake my heart
With ſounding Troylus. I will not goe from Troy. Exeunt.

Enter Paris, Troylus, Æneas, Deiphobus, Anthenor and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the houre prefixt
Of her deliverie to this valiant Greeke
Comes faſt upon: good my brother Troylus,
Tell you the Lady what ſhe is to doe,
And haſt her to the purpoſe.
Troy. Walke in to her houſe:
Ile bring her to the Grecian preſently;
And to his hand, when I deliver her,
Thinke it an Altar, and thy brother Troylus
A Prieſt, there offring to it his heart.
Par. I know what 'tis to love,
And would, as I ſhall pitty, I could helpe.
Pleaſe you walke in, my Lords. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Creſſid.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.
Creſ. Why tell you me of moderation?
The griefe is fine, full perfect that I taſte,
And no leſſe in a ſenſe as ſtrong
As that which cauſeth it. How can I moderate it?
If I could temporiſe with my affection,
Or brew it to a weake and colder pallat,
The like alaiment could I give my griefe:
My love admits no qualifying croſſe: Enter Troylus.
No more my griefe, in ſuch a precious loſſe.
Pan. Here, here, here, he comes, a ſweet ducke.
Creſ. O Troylus, Troylus!
Pan. What a paire of ſpectacles is here? let me embrace too: oh heart, as the goodly ſaying is; O heart, heavie heart, why ſitteſt thou without breaking? where he anſwers againe; becauſe thou canſt not eaſe thy ſmart by friendſhip, nor by ſpeaking: there was never a truer rime; let us caſt away nothing, for we may live to have neede of ſuch a Verſe: we ſee it, we ſee it: how now Lambs?
Troy. Creſſid: I love thee in ſo ſtrange a puritie;
That the bleſt gods, as angry with my fancie,
More bright in zeale, then the devotion which
Cold lips blow to their Deities: take thee from me.
Creſ. Have the gods envie?
Pan. I, I, I, I, 'tis too plaine a caſe.
Creſ. And is it true, that I muſt goe from Troy?
Troy. A hatefull truth.
Creſ. What, and from Troylus too?
Troy. From Troy, and Troylus.
Creſ. Iſt poſſible?
Troy. And ſodainely, where injurie of chance
Puts backe leave-taking, juſtles roughly by
All time of pauſe; rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoyndure: forcibly prevents
Our lockt embraſures; ſtrangles our deere vowes,
Even in the birth of our owne laboring breath.
We two that with ſo many thouſand ſighes
Did buy each other, muſt poorely ſell our ſelves,
With the rude brevitie and diſcharge of our
Injurious time; now with a robbers haſte
Crams his rich theeverie up, he knowes not how.
As many farewels as be ſtars in heaven,
With diſtinct breath, and conſign'd kiſſes to them,
He fumbles up a looſe adiew:
And ſcants us with a ſingle famiſht kiſſe,
Diſtaſting with the ſalt of broken teares, Enter Æneas.
Æneas within. My Lord, is the Lady ready?
Troy. Hearke, you are call'd: ſome ſay the genius ſo
Cries, come to him that inſtantly muſt dye.
Bid them have patience: ſhe ſhall come anon.
Pan. Where are my teares? raine, to lay this winde, or my heart will be blowne up by the root.
Creſ. I muſt then to the Grecians?
Troy. No remedy.
Creſ. A wofull Creſſid 'mong'ſt the merry Greekes.
Troy. When ſhall we ſee againe?
Heare me my love: be thou but true of heart.
Creſ. I true? how now? what wicked deeme is this?
Troy. Nay, we muſt uſe expoſtulation kindly,
For it is parting from us:
I ſpeake not, be thou true, as fearing thee:
For I will throw my Glove to death himſelfe,
That there's no maculation in thy heart:
But be thou true, ſay I, to faſhion in
My ſequent proteſtation: be thou true,
And I will ſee thee.
Creſ. O you ſhall be expos'd, my Lord to dangers
As infinite, as imminent: but Ile be true.
Troy. And Ile grow friend with danger;
Weare this Sleeve.
Creſ. And you this Glove.
When ſhall I ſee you?
Troy. I will corrupt the Grecian Centinels,
To give thee nightly viſitation.
But yet be true.
Creſ. O heavens: be true againe?
Troy. Heare why I ſpeake it; Love:
The Grecian youths are full of qualitie,
Their loving well compos'd, with guift of nature,
Flowing and ſwelling ore with Arts and exerciſe:
How novelties may move, and parts with perſon.
Alas, a kinde of godly jealouſie;
Which I beſeech you call a vertuous ſinne:
Makes me affraid.
Creſ. O heavens, you loue me not!
Troy. Dye I a villaine then:
In this I doe not call your faith in queſtion
So mainely as my merit: I cannot ſing,
Nor heele the high Lavolt; nor ſweeten talke:
Nor play at ſubtill games; faire vertues all;

To which the Grecians are moſt prompt and pregnant :
But I can tell that in each grace of theſe,
There lurkes a ſtill and dumb-diſcourſive divell,
That tempts moſt cunningly : but be not tempted.
Creſ. Doe not thinke I will :
Troy. No, but ſomething may be done that we will not:
And ſometimes we are divels to our ſelves,
When we wil tempt the frailtie of our powers,
Preſuming on their changefull potencie.
Æneas within. Nay, good my Lord?
Troy. Come kiſſe, and let us part.
Paris within. Brother Troylus?
Troy. Good brother come you hither,
And bring Æneas and the Grecian with you.
Creſ. My Lord, will you be true? Exit.
Troy. Who I? alas it is my vice, thy fault :
Whiles other fiſh with craft for great opinion,
I, with great truth, catch meere ſimplicitie;
Whil'ſt ſome with cunning guild their copper crownes,
With truth and plainneſſe I doe weare mine bare.

Enter the Greekes.

Feare not my truth; the morrall of my wit
Is plaine and true, ther's all the reach of it.
Welcome ſir Diomed, here is the Lady
Which for Antenor, we deliver you.
At the port (Lord) Ile give her to thy hand,
And by the way poſſeſſe thee what ſhe is.
Entreate her faire; and by my ſoule, faire Greeke,
If ere thou ſtand at mercy of my Sword,
Name Creſſid, and thy life ſhall be as ſafe
As Priam is in Illion?
Diom. Faire Lady Creſsid,
So pleaſe you, ſave the thankes this Prince expects :
The luſtre in your eye, heaven in your cheeke,
Pleades your faire viſage, and to Diomed
You ſhall be miſtreſſe, and command him wholly.
Troy. Grecian, thou doſt not uſe me courteouſly,
To ſhame the ſeale of my petition towards,
I praiſing her. I tell thee Lord of Greece:
She is as farre high ſoaring o're thy praiſes,
As thou unworthy to be cal'd her ſervant :
I charge thee uſe her well, even for my charge :
For by the dreadfull Pluto, if thou doeſt not,
(Though the great bulke Achilles be thy guard)
Ile cut thy thy throate.
Diom. Oh be not mov'd Prince Troylus;
Let me be priviledg'd by my place and meſſage,
To be a ſpeaker free; when I am hence,
Ile anſwer to my luſt : and know my Lord;
Ile nothing doe on charge: to her owne worth
She ſhall be priz'd : but that you ſay be't ſo;
Ile ſpeake it in my ſpirit and honor, no.
Troy. Come to the Port. Ile tell thee Diomed,
This brave, ſhall oft make thee to hide thy head :
Lady, give me your hand, and as we walke,
To our owne ſelves bend we our needefull talke.

Sound Trumpet.

Par. Harke, Hectors Trumpet.
Æne. How have we ſpent this morning
The Prince muſt thinke me tardy and remiſſe,
That ſwore to ride before him in the field.
Par. 'Tis Troylus fault : come, come, to field with him.
Exeunt.
Dio. Let us make ready ſtraight.
Æne. Yea, with a bridegroomes freſh alacritie
Let us addreſſe to tend on Hectors heeles :
The glory of our Troy doth this day lye
On his faire worth, and ſingle Chivalry.

Enter Ajax armed, Achilles, Patroclus, Agamemnon, Menelaus, Vliſſes, Neſtor, Calcas, &c.

Aga. Here art thou in apointment freſh and faire
Anticipating time. With ſtarting courage,
Give with thy Trumpet a lowd note to Troy
Thou dreadfull Ajax, that the appauled aire
May pierce the head of the great Combatant,
And hale him hither.
Aja. Thou, Trumpet, ther's my purſe;
Now cracke thy lungs and ſplit thy braſen pipe :
Blow villaine, till thy ſphered Bias cheeke
Out-ſwell the collicke of puſt Aquilon :
Come, ſtretch thy cheſt, and let thy eyes ſpout bloud :
Thou bloweſt for Hector.
Vliſ. No Trumpet anſwers.
Achil. 'Tis but early dayes, Enter Dio. Creſ.
Aga. Is not young Diomed with Calcas daughter?
Vliſ. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gate,
He riſes on the toe : that ſpirit of his
In aſpiration lifts him from the earth.
Aga. Is this the Lady Creſsid?
Dio. Even ſhe.
Aga. Moſt deerely welcome to the Greekes, ſweete Lady.
Neſt. Our Generall doth ſalute you with a kiſſe.
Vliſ. Yet is your kindeneſſe but particular; 'twere better ſhe were kiſt in generall.
Neſt. And very courtly counſell : Ile begin. So much for Neſtor.
Achil. Ile take that winter from you lips : faire Lady Achilles bids you welcome.
Mene. I had good argument for kiſſing once.
Patro. But that's no argument for kiſſing now;
For thus pop't Paris in his hardiment.
Vliſ. Oh deadly gall, and theame of all our ſcornes,
For which we looſe our heads, to gild his hornes.
Patro. The firſt was Menelaus kiſſe, this mine :
Patroclus kiſſes you.
Mene. Oh this is trim.
Patr. Paris and I kiſſe evermore for him.
Mene. Ile have my kiſſe ſir : Lady by your leave.
Creſ. In kiſſing doe you render, or receive.
Patr. Both take and give.
Creſ. Ile make my match to live,
The kiſſe you take is better then you give : therefore no kiſſe.
Mene. Ile give you boote, Ile give you three for one.
Creſ. You are an odde man, give even, or give none.
Mene. An odde man Lady, every man is odde.
Creſ. No, Paris is not; for you know 'tis true,
That you are odde, and he is even with you.
Mene You fillip me a'th' head.
Creſ. No, Ile be ſworne.
Vliſ. It were no match, your naile againſt his horne :
May I ſweet Lady beg a kiſſe of you?
Creſ. You may.
Vliſ. I doe deſire it.
Creſ. Why begge then?
Vliſ. Why then for Venus ſake, give me a kiſſe;
When Hellen is a maid againe, and his———
Creſ. I am your debtor, claime it when 'tis due.

Vliſ. Never's

Vlyſ. Never's my day, and then a kiſſe of you.
Diom. Lady a word, Ile bring you to your Father.
Neſt. A woman of quicke ſence.
Vlyſ. Fie, fie, upon her:
Ther's language in her eye, her cheeke, her lip;
Nay, her foote ſpeakes, her wanton ſpirites looke out
At every joynt, and motive of her body:
Oh theſe encounters ſo glib of tongue,
That give a coaſting welcome ere it comes;
And wide unclaſpe the tables of their thoughts,
To every tickling reader: ſet them downe,
For ſluttiſh ſpoyles of opportunitie;
And daughters of the game. Exeunt.

Enter all of Troy, Hector, Paris, Æneas, Helenus, and Attendants.

All. The Troians Trumpet.
Aga. Yonder comes the troope.
Æne. Haile all you ſtate of Greece: what ſhall be done
To him that victorie commands? or doe you purpoſe,
A victor ſhall be knowne: will you the Knights
Shall to the edge of all extremitie
Purſue each other; or ſhall be devided
By any voice, or order of the field: Hector bad aske?
Aga. Which way would Hector have it?
Æne. He cares not, hee'le obey conditions.
Aga. 'Tis done like Hector, but ſecurely done,
A little proudly, and great deale diſpriſing
The Knight oppos'd.
Æne. If not Achilles ſir, what is your name?
Achil. If not Achilles, nothing.
Æne. Therefore Achilles: but what ere, know this,
In the extremity of great and little:
Valour and pride excell themſelves in Hector;
The one almoſt as infinite as all;
The other blanke as nothing: weigh him well:
And that which lookes like pride, is curteſie:
This Ajax is halfe made of Hectors bloud,
In love whereof, halfe Hector ſtayes at home:
Halfe heart, halfe hand, halfe Hector, comes to ſeeke
This blended Knight, halfe Troian, and halfe Greeke.
Achil. A maiden battaile then? O I perceive you.
Aga. Here is ſir, Diomed: goe gentle Knight,
Stand by our Ajax: as you and Lord Æneas
Conſent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the uttermoſt,
Or elſe a breach: the Combatants being kin,
Halfe ſtints their ſtrife, before their ſtrokes begin.
Vlyſ. They are oppos'd already,
Aga. What Troian is that ſame that lookes ſo heavy?
Vliſ. The youngeſt Sonne of Priam;
And a true Knight; they call him Troylus;
Not yet mature, yet matchleſſe, firme of word,
Speaking in deedes, and deedeleſſe in his tongue;
Not ſoone provok't, nor being provok't, ſoone calm'd;
His heart and hand both open, and both free
For what he has, he gives; what thinkes, he ſhewes;
Yet gives he not till judgement guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impaire thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector in his blaze of wrath ſubſcribes
To tender objects; but he, in heate of action
Is more vindicative then jealous love.
They call him Troylus; and on him erect,
A ſecond hope, as fairely built as Hector.
Thus ſaies Æneas, one that knowes the youth,
Even to his inches: and with private ſoule,
Did in great Illion thus tranſlate him to me. Alarum.
Aga. They are in action.
Neſt. Now Ajax hold thine owne.
Troy. Hector, thou ſleep'ſt, awake thee.
Aga. His blowes are wel diſpos'd there Ajax. trũpets
Diom. You muſt no more. ceaſe.
Æne. Princes enough, ſo pleaſe you.
Aja. I am not warme yet, let us fight againe.
Diom. As Hector pleaſes.
Hect. Why then will I no more:
Thou art great Lord, my Fathers ſiſters Sonne;
A couſen german to great Priams ſeede:
The obligation of our bloud forbids
A gorie emulation 'twixt us twaine:
Were thy commixion, Greeke and Troian ſo,
That thou could'ſt ſay, this hand is Grecian all,
And this is Troian: the ſinewes of this Legge,
All Greeke, and this all Troy: my Mothers bloud
Runs on the dexter cheeke, and this ſiniſter
Bounds in my fathers: by Iove multipotent,
Thou ſhould'ſt not beare from me a Greekiſh member
Wherein my ſword had not impreſſure made
Of our ranke feud: but the juſt gods gainſay,
That any drop thou borrwd'ſt from thy mother,
My ſacred Aunt, ſhould by my mortall Sword
Be drained. Let me embrace thee Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou haſt luſty armes;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus,
Cozen, all honor to thee.
Aja. I thanke thee Hector:
Thou art too gentle, and too free a man:
I came to kill thee Cozen, and beare hence
A great addition, earned in thy death.
Hect. Not Neoptolemus ſo mirable,
On whoſe bright creſt, fame with her lowd'ſt (O yes)
Cries, This is he; could promiſe to himſelfe,
A thought of added honor, torne from Hector.
Æne. There is expectance here from both the ſides,
What further you will doe?
Hect. Wee'le anſwere it:
The iſſue is embracement: Ajax, farewell,
Ajax. If I might in entreaties finde ſucceſſe,
As ſeld I have the chance; I would deſire
My famous Couſin to our Grecian Tents.
Diom. 'Tis Agamemnons wiſh, and great Achilles
Doth long to ſee unarm'd the valiant Hector.
Hec. Æneas, call my brother Troylus to me:
And ſignifie this loving enterview
To the expectors of our Troian part:
Deſire them home. Give me thy hand, my Couſin:
I will goe eate with thee, and ſee your Knights.

Enter Agamemnon and the reſt.

Aja. Great Agamemnon comes to meete us here.
Hec. The worthieſt of them, tell me name by name:
But for Achilles, mine owne ſerching eyes
Shall finde him by his large and portly ſize.
Aga. Worthy of Armes: as welcome as to one,
That would be rid of ſuch an enemy.
But that's no welcome: underſtand more cleere
What's paſt and what's to come, is ſtrew'd with huskes
And formeleſſe ruine of oblivion:
But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias drawing:
Bids thee with moſt divine integritie,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.
Hec. I thanke thee moſt imperious Agamemnon.

Aga. My well-fam'd Lord of Troy, no leſſe to you.
Men. Let me confirme my Princely brothers greeting,
You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.
Hect. Whom muſt we anſwer?
Æne. The Noble Menelaus.
Hect. O, you my Lord, by Mars his gauntlet thanks,
Mocke not, that I affect th' untraded Oath,
Your quondam wife ſweares ſtill by Venus Glove
Shee's well, but bad me not commend her to you.
Men. Name her not now ſir, ſhe's a deadly Theame.
Hec. O pardon, I offend.
Neſt. I have (thou gallant Troyan) ſeene thee oft
Labouring for deſtiny, make cruell way
Through rankes of Greekiſh youth: and I have ſeen thee
As hot as Perſeus, ſpurre thy Phrygian Steed,
And ſeene thee ſcorning forfeits and ſubduments,
When thou haſt hung thy advanced ſword i'th' ayre,
Not letting it decline on the declined:
That I haue ſaid unto my ſtanders by,
Loe Iupiter is yonder, dealing life.
And I have ſeene thee pauſe, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greekes have hem'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wreſtling. This have I ſeene,
But this thy countenance (ſtill lockt in ſteele)
I never ſaw till now. I knew thy Grandſire,
And once fought with him; he was a Souldier good,
But by great Mars (the captaine of us all,)
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee,
And (worthy Warrior) welcome to our Tents.
Æne. 'Tis the old Neſtor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee good old Chronicle,
That haſt ſo long walk'd hand in hand with time:
Moſt reverend Neſtor, I am glad to claſpe thee.
Ne. I would my armes could match thee in contention
As they contend with thee in courteſie.
Hec. I would they could.
Neſt. Ha? by this white beard I'ld fight with thee to morrow. Well, welcom, welcome: I have ſeen the time.
Vlyſ. I wonder now, how yonder City ſtands,
When we have here her Baſe and pillar by us.
Hec. I know your fevour Lord Vlyſſes well.
Ah ſir, there's many a Greeke and Troyan dead;
Since firſt I ſaw your ſelfe, and Diomed
In Illion, on your Greekiſh Embaſſie.
Vlyſ. Sir, I foretold you then what would enſue,
My propheſie is but halfe his journey yet;
For yonder wals that partly front your towne,
Yond Towers, whoſe wanton tops do buſſe the clouds,
Muſt kiſſe their owne feet.
Hec. I muſt not beleeve you:
There they ſtand yet: and modeſtly I thinke,
The fall of every Prygian ſtone will coſt
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crownes all,
And that old common Arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.
Vlyſ. So to him we leave it.
Moſt gentle, and moſt valiant Hector, welcome;
After the Generall, I beſeech you next
To feaſt with me, and ſee me at my Tent.
Achil. I ſhall foreſtall thee Lord Vlyſſes, thou:
Now Hector I have fed mine eyes on thee,
I have with exact view perus'd thee Hector,
And quoted joynt by joynt.
Hec. Is this Achilles?
Achil. I am Achilles.
Hec. Stand faire I prythee, let me looke on thee.
Achil. Behold thy fill.
Hec. Nay, I have done already.
Achil. Thou are too breefe, I will the ſecond time,
As I would buy thee, view thee, limbe by limbe.
Hec. O like a booke of ſport thou'lt reade me ore:
But there's more in me then thou underſtand'ſt.
Why doeſt thou ſo oppreſſe me with thine eye?
Achil. Tell me you Heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I deſtroy him? Whether there, or there, or there,
That I may give the locall wound a name,
And make diſtinct the very breach, where-out
Hectors great ſpirit flew. Anſwer me heavens.
Hec. It would diſcredit the bleſt gods, proud man,
To anſwer ſuch a qneſtion: Stand again:
Think'ſt thou to catch my life ſo pleaſantly,
As to prenominate in nice conjecture
Where thou wilt hit me dead?
Achil. I tell thee yea.
Hec. Wert thou the Oracle to tell me ſo,
I'ld not beleeve thee: henceforth guard thee well,
For Ile not kill thee there, nor there, nor there,
But by the forge that ſtythied Mars his helme,
Ile kill thee every where, yea, ore and ore.
You wiſeſt Grecians, pardon me this bragge,
His inſolence drawes folly from my lips,
But Ile endevour deeds to match theſe words,
Or may I never ——
Aiax. Do not chafe thee Coſin:
And you Achilles, let theſe threats alone
Till accident, or purpoſe bring you too't.
You may have every day enough of Hector
If you have ſtomacke. The generall ſtate I feare,
Can ſcarſe intreat you to be odde with him.
Hec. I pray you let us ſee you in the field;
We have had pelting Warres ſince you refus'd
The Grecians cauſe.
Achil. Doſt thon intreat me Hector?
To morrow do I meete thee fell as death,
To night, all Friends.
Hec. Thy hands upon that match.
Aga. Firſt, all you Peeres of Greece go to my Tent,
There in the full convive you: Afterwards,
As Hectors leaſure, and your bounties ſhall
Concurre together, ſeverally intreat him.
Beate lowd the Taborines, let the Trumpets blow.
That this great Souldier may his welcome know. Exeunt.
Troy. My Lord Vlyſſes, tell me I beſeech you,
In what place of the Field doth Calcas keepe?
Vlyſ. At Menelaus Tent, moſt princely Troylus,
There Diomed doth feaſt with him to night,
Who neither lookes on heaven, nor on earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the faire Creſſid.
Troy. Shall I (ſweet Lord) be bound to thee ſo much,
After we part from Agamemnons Tent,
To bring me thither?
Vlyſ. You ſhall command me ſir:
As gentle tell me, of what Honour was
This Creſſida in Troy, had ſhee no Lover there
That walles her abſence?
Troy. O ſir, to ſuch as boaſting ſhew their ſcarres,
A mocke is due: will you walke on my Lord?
She was belov'd, ſhe lov'd; ſhe is, and dooth.
But ſtill ſweet Love is food for Fortunes tooth. Exeunt.

Enter Acilles, and Partroclus.

Achil. Ile heat his blood with Greekiſh wine to night,

Which with my Semitar Ile coole to morrow:
Patroclus, let us Feaſt him to the hight.

Pat. Heere comes Therſites. Enter Therſites.

Achil. How now, thou core of Envy?
Thou cruſty batch of Nature, what's the newes?

Ther. Why thou picture of what thou ſeem'ſt, & Idoll of Ideot-worſhippers, here's a Letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, Fragment?

Ther. Why thou full diſh of Foole, from Troy.

Pat. Who keepes the Tent now?

Ther. The Surgeons box, or the patients wound.

Patr. Well ſaid adverſity, and what need theſe tricks?

Ther. Prythee be ſilent boy, I profit not by thy talke, thou art thoug[illegible]t to be Achilles male Varlot.

Patro. Male Varlot you Rogue? What's that?

Ther. Why his maſculine Whore. Now the rotten diſeaſes of the South, guts-griping Ruptures, Catarres, Loades a gravell i'th' backs, Lethargies, cold Palſies, and the like, take and take againe, ſuch prepoſterous diſcoveries.

Pat. Why thou damnable box of envy thou, what mean'ſt thou to curſe thus?

Ther. Do I curſe thee?

Patr. Why no, you ruinous But, you whorſon indiſtinguiſhable Curre.

Ther. No? why art thou then exaſperate, thou idle, immateriall skeine of Sleyd ſilke; thou greene Sarcenet flap for a ſore eye, thou toſſell of a Prodigals purſe thou: Ah how the poore world is peſtred with ſuch water-flies, diminutiues of Nature.

Pat. Out gall.

Ther. Finch Egge.

Ach. My ſweet Patroclus, I am th' warted quite
From my great purpoſe in to morrowes battell:
Heere is a Letter from Queene Hecuba,
A token from her daughter, my faire Love,
Both taxing me, and gaging me to keepe
An Oath that I have ſworne. I will not breake it,
Fall Greeke, faile Fame, Honor or go, or ſtay,
My maior vow lyes heere; this Ile obay:
Come, come Therſites, helpe to trim my Tent,
This night in banquetting muſt all be ſpent.
Away Patroclus. Exit.

Ther. With to much bloud, and too little Brain, theſe two may run mad: but if with too much braine, and too little blood, they do, Ile be a curer of madmen. Heere's Agamemnon, an honeſt fellow enough, and one that loves Quailes, but he has not ſo much Braine as eare-wax; and the goodly transformation of Iupiter there his Brother, the Bull, the primative Statue, and oblique memoriall of Cuckolds, a thrifty ſhooing-horne in a chaine, hanging at his Brothers legge, to what forme but that he is, ſhould wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turne him to: to an Aſſe were nothing, hee is both Aſſe and Oxe; to an Oxe were nothing, hee is both Oxe and Aſſe: to be a Dogge, a Mule, a Cat, a Fitchew, a Toade, a Lizard, an Owle, a Puttocke, or a Herring without a Roe, I would not care: but to be Menelaus, I would conſpire againſt Deſtiny. Aske me not what I would be, if I were not Therſites: for I care not to bee the lowſe of a Lazar, so I were not Menelaus. Hoy-day ſpirits and fires.

Enter Hector, Ajax, Agamemnon, Vlyſſes, Neſtor, Diomed, with Lights.

Aga. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No yonder 'tis, there where we ſee the light.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Enter Achilles.

Vlyſ. Heere comes himſelfe to guide you?

Achil. Welcome brave Hector, welcome Princes all.

Agam. So now faire Prince of Troy, I bid goodnight,
Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and goodnight to the Greeks generall.

Men. Good night my Lord.

Hect. Goodnight ſweet Lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: ſweet quoth-a? ſweet ſinke, ſweet ſure.

Achil. Goodnight and welcom, both at once, to thoſe that go, or tarry.

Aga. Goodnight.

Achil. Old Neſtor tarries, and you too Diomed,
Keepe Hector company an houre, or two.

Dio. I cannot Lord, I have important buſineſſe,
The tide whereof is now, goodnight great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

Vlyſ. Follow his Torch, he goes to Chalcas Tent,
Ile keepe you company.

Troy. Sweet ſir, you honour me.

Hect. And ſo good night.

Achil. Come, come, enter my Tent. Exeunt.

Ther. That ſame Diomed's a falſe-hearted Rogue, a moſt unjuſt Knave; I will no more truſt him when hee leeres, then I will a Serpent when he hiſſes: he will ſpend his mouth & promiſe, like Brabler the Hound; but when he performes, Aſtronomers foretell it, that it is prodigious, there will come ſome change: the Sunne borrowes of the Moone when Diomed keepes his word. I will rather leave to ſee Hector, then not to dogge him: they ſay, he keepes a Troyan Drab, and uſes the Traitour Chalcas his tent. Ile after —— Nothing but Letcherie? All incontinent Varlets. Exeunt.

Enter Diomed.

Dio. What are you up here ho? ſpeake?

Chal. Who cals?

Dio. Diomed, Chalcas (I thinke wher's you Daughter?

Chal. She comes to you.

Enter Troylus and Vliſſes.

Vliſ. Stand where the Torch may not diſcover us.

Enter Creſſid.

Troy. Creſſid come forth to him.

Dio. How now my charge?

Creſ. Now my ſweet gardian: hearke a word with you.

Troy. Yea, ſo familiar?

Vliſ. She will ſing any man at firſt ſight.

Ther. And any man may finde her, if he can take her life: ſhe's noted.

Dio. Will you remember?

Creſ. Remember? yes.

Dio. Nay, but doe then; and let your minde be coupled with your words.

Troy. What ſhould ſhe remember?

Vliſ. Liſt?

Creſ. Sweet hony Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery.

Dio. Nay then.

Creſ. Ile tell you what.

Dio. Fo, fo, come tell a pin, you are a forſworne—

Creſ. In faith I cannot: what would you have me do?

Ther. A jugling tricke, to be ſecretly open.

Dio. What did you ſweare you would beſtow on me?

Creſ. I prethee doe not hold me to mine oath.
Bid me doe any thing but that ſweet Greeke.

Dio. Good night.
Troy. Hold patience.
Vliſ. How now Troian?
Creſ. Diomed.
Dio. No,no,good night: Ile be your foole no more.
Troy. Thy better muſt.
Creſ. Hearke one word in your eare.
Troy. O plague and madneſſe!
Vliſ. You are moved Prince,let us depart I pray you,
Leſt your diſpleaſure ſhould enlarge it ſelfe
To wrathfull tearmes:this place is dangerous;
The time right deadly: I beſeech you goe.
Troy. Behold,I pray you.
Vliſ. Nay, good my Lord goe off:
You flow to great diſtraction: come my Lord?
Troy. I pray thee ſtay?
Vliſ. You have not patience,come.
Troy. I pray you ſtay? by hell and all hells torments,
I will not ſpeake a word.
Dio. And ſo good night.
Creſ. Nay,but you part in anger.
Troy. Doth that grieve thee? O withered truth!
Vliſ. Why,how now Lord?
Troy. By Iove I will be patient.
Creſ. Gardian? why Greeke?
Dio. Fo,fo,adew,you palter.
Creſ. In faith I doe not:come hither once againe.
Vliſ. You ſhake my Lord at ſomething; will you goe?
You will breake out.
Troy. She ſtroakes his cheeke.
Vliſ. Come,come.
Troy. Nay ſtay,by Iove I will not ſpeake a word.
There is betweene my will,and all offences,
A guard of patience; ſtay a little while.
Ther. How the divell Luxury with his fat rumpe and Potato finger,tickles theſe together: frye lechery,frye,
Dio. But will you then?
Creſ. In faith I will goe;never truſt me elſe.
Dio. Give me ſome token for the ſurety of it.
Creſ. Ile fetch you one.
Vliſ. You have ſworne patience.
Troy. Feare me not ſweete Lord:
I will not be my ſelfe,nor have cognition
Of what I feele:I am all patience. Enter Creſſid.
Ther. Now the pledge,now,now,now.
Creſ. Here Diomed,keepe this Sleeve.
Troy. O beauty! where is thy Faith?
Vliſ. My Lord.
Troy. I will be patient,outwardly I will.
Creſ. You looke upon that Sleeve? behold it well:
He lov'd me:O falſe wench: give't me againe.
Dio. Whoſe was't?
Creſ. It is no matter now I have't againe.
I will not meete with you to morrow night:
I prythee Diomed viſite me no more.
Ther. Now ſhe ſharpens: well ſaid Whetſtone.
Dio. I ſhall have it.
Creſ. What,this?
Dio. I that.
Creſ. O all you gods! O pretty,pretty pledge;
Thy Maiſter now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me,and ſighes,and takes my Glove,
And gives memoriall dainty kiſſes to it;
As I kiſſe thee.
Dio. Nay,doe not ſnatch it from me.
Creſ. He that takes that,takes my heart withall.
Dio. I had your heart before,this followes it.
Troy. I did ſweare patience.
Creſ. You ſhall not have it Diomed: faith you ſhall not
Ile giue you ſomething elſe.
Dio. I will have this: whoſe was it?
Creſ. It is no matter.
Dio. Come tell me whoſe it was?
Creſ. Twas one that lov'd me better then you will,
But now you have it,take it.
Dio. Whoſe was it?
Creſ. By all Dianas waiting women yonder,
And by her ſelfe,I will not tell you whoſe.
Dio. To morrow will I weare it on my Helme,
And grieve his ſpirit that dares not challenge it.
Tro. Wert thou the divell,and wor'ſt it on thy horne,
It ſhould be challeng'd.
Creſ. Well,well,tis done,tis paſt;and yet it is not:
I will not keepe my word.
Dio. Why then farewell,
Thou never ſhalt mocke Diomed againe.
Creſ. You ſhalt not goe:one cannot ſpeake a word,
But it ſtrait ſtarts you.
Dio. I doe not like this fooling.
Ther. Nor I by Pluto: but that that likes not me, pleaſes me beſt.
Dio. What ſhall I come? the houre.
Creſ. I, come:O Iove! doe,come:I ſhall be plagu'd.
Dio. Farewell till then. Exit.
Creſ. Good night? I prythee come:
Troylus farewell? one eye yet lookes on thee,
But with my heart,the other eye,doth ſee.
Ah poore our ſexe;this fault in us I finde:
The errour of our eye,directs our minde.
What errour leads,muſt erre:O then conclude,
Mindes ſwai'd by eyes,are full of turpitude. Exit.
Ther. A proofe of ſtrength ſhe could not publiſh more;
Vnleſſe ſhe ſay,my minde is now turn'd whore.
Vliſ. Al's done my Lord.
Troy. It is.
Vliſ. Why ſtay we then?
Troy. To make a recordation to my ſoule
Of every ſyllable that here was ſpoke:
But if I tell how theſe two did coact;
Shall I not lie, in publiſhing a truth?
Sith yet there is a credence in my heart:
An eſperance ſo obſtinately ſtrong,
That doth invert that reſt of eyes and eares;
As if thoſe organs had deceptious functions,
Created onely to calumniate.
Was Creſſid here?
Vliſ. I cannot conjure Trojan,
Troy. She was not ſure.
Vliſ. Moſt ſure ſhe was.
Troy. Why my negation hath no taſte of madneſſe?
Vliſ. Nor mine my Lord: Creſſid was here but now.
Troy. Let it not be beleev'd for womanhood:
Thinke we had mothers; doe not give advantage
To ſtubborne Criticks,apt without a theame
For depravation,to ſquare the generall ſex
By Creſſids rule. Rather thinke this not Creſſid.
Vliſ. What hath ſhe done Prince,that can ſoyle our mothers?
Troy. Nothing at all, unleſſe that this were ſhe.
Ther. Will he ſwagger himſelfe out on's owne eyes?
Troy. This ſhe? no,this is Diomeds Creſsida:
If beauty have a ſoule,this is not ſhe:

If ſoules guide vowes; if vowes are ſanctimony;
If ſanctimony be the gods delight:
If there be rule in unity it ſelfe,
This is not ſhe: O madneſſe of diſcourſe!
That cauſe ſets up, with; and againſt thy ſelfe,
By foule authority: where reaſon can revolt
Without perdition, and loſſe aſſume all reaſon,
Without revolt. This is, and is not Creſſid:
Within my ſoule, there doth conduce a fight
Of this ſtrange nature, that a thing inſeparate,
Divides more wider then the skie and earth:
And yet the ſpacious bredth of this diviſion,
Admits no Orifece for a point as ſubtle,
As Ariachnes broken woofe to enter:
Inſtance, O inſtance! ſtrong as Plutoes gates:
Creſſid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven;
Inſtance O inſtance, ſtrong as heaven it ſelfe:
The bonds of heaven are ſlipt, diſſolv'd, and loos'd:
And with another knot five finger tied,
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love:
The fragments, ſcraps, the bits, and greacy reliques,
Of her ore-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Vliſ. May worthy Troylus be halfe attached
With that which here his paſſion doth expreſſe?

Troy. I Greeke, and that ſhall be divulged well
In Characters, as red as Mars his heart
Inflam'd with Venus; never did yong man fancy
With ſo eternall, and ſo fixt a ſoule.
Hearke Greek: as much as I doe Creſſida love;
So much by weight, hate I her Diomed,
That Sleeve is mine, that heele beare in his Helme:
Were it a Caske compos'd by Vulcans skill,
My Sword ſhould bite it: Not the dreadfull ſpout,
Which Shipmen doe the Hurricano call,
Conſtring'd in maſſe by the almighty Fenne,
Shall dizzie with more clamour Neptunes eare
In his diſcent; then ſhall my prompted ſword,
Falling on Diomed.

Ther. Heele tickle it for his concupy.

Troy. O Creſſid! O falſe Creſſid! falſe, falſe, falſe:
Let all untruths ſtand by thy ſtained name,
And theyle ſeeme glorious.

Vliſ. O containe your ſelfe:
Your paſſion drawes eares hither.

Enter Æneas.

Æn. I have beene ſeeking you this houre my Lord:
Hector by this is arming him in Troy.
Aiax your Guard, ſtales to conduct yon home.

Troy. Have with you Prince: my curteous Lord adew:
Farewell revolted faire: and Diomed,
Stand faſt, and weare a Caſtle on thy head.

Vli. Ile bring you to the Gates.

Troy. Accept diſtracted thankes.

Exeunt Troylus, Æneas, and Vlyſſes.

Ther. Would I could meete that roague Diomed, I would croke like a Raven: I would bode, I would bode: Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore: the Parrot will not do more for an Almond, then he for a commodious drab: Lechery, lechery, ſtill warres and lechery, nothing elſe holds faſhion. A burning divell take them. Exit.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my Lord ſo much ungently temper'd,
To ſtop his eares againſt admoniſhment?
Vnarme, unarme, and doe not fight to day.

Hect. You traine me to offend you: get you gone.
By the everlaſting gods, Ile goe.

And. My dreames will ſure prove ominous to the day.

Hect. No more I ſay. Enter Caſſandra.

Caſ. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here ſiſter, arm'd, and bloudy in intent:
Comfort with me in loud and deere petition:
Purſue we him on knees: for I have dreampt
Of bloudy turbulence; and this whole night
Hath nothing beene but ſhapes, and formes of ſlaughter.

Caſ. O, tis true.

Hect. Ho? bid my Trumpet ſound.

Caſ. No notes of ſally, for the heavens, ſweet brother.

Hect. Begon I ſay: the gods have heard me ſweare.

Caſ. The gods are deafe to hot, and peeviſh vowes;
They are polluted offrings, more abhord
Then ſpotted Livers in the ſacrifice.

And. O be perſwaded, doe not count it holy,
To hurt by being juſt; it is as lawfull:
For we would count give much to as violent thefts,
And rob in the behalfe of charity.

Caſ. It is the purpoſe that makes ſtrong the vowe;
But vowes to every purpoſe muſt not hold:
Vnarme ſweete Hector.

Hect. Hold you ſtill I ſay;
Mine honour keepes the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds deere, but the deere man
Holds honor farre more precious-deere, then life.

Enter Troylus.

How now yong man? mean'ſt thou to fight to day?

And. Caſſandra, call my father to perſwade.

Exit Caſſandra.

Hect. No faith yong Troylus; doffe thy harneſſe youth:
I am to day ith' vaine of Chivalry?
Let grow thy Sinews till their knots be ſtrong;
And tempt not yet the bruſhes of the warre.
Vnarme thee, goe, and doubt thou not brave boy,
Ile ſtand to day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Troy. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you;
Which better fits a Lyon, then a man.

Hect. What vice is that? good Troylus chide me for it.

Troy. When many times the captive Grecian fals,
Even in the fanne and winde of your faire Sword:
You bid them riſe, and live.

Hect. O tis faire play.

Troy. Fooles play, by heaven Hector.

Hec. How now? how now?

Troy. For th'love of all the gods
Let's leave the Hermit Pitty with our Mothers;
And when we have our Armors buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our ſwords,
Spur them to ruefull worke, reine them from ruth.

Hect. Fie ſavage, fie.

Troy. Hector, then tis warres.

Hec. Troylus, I would not have you fight to day.

Troy. Who ſhould with-hold me?
Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars,
Beckning with fiery truncheon my retire;
Not Priamus, and Hecuba on knees;
Their eyes ore-galled with recourſe of teares;
Nor you my brother, with your true ſword drawne
Oppos'd to hinder me, ſhould ſtop my way:
But by my ruine.

Enter Priam and Caſſandra.

Caſ. Lay hold upon him Priam, hold him faſt:
He is thy crutch; now if thou looſe thy ſtay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,

Fall all together.
Priam. Come Hector, come, goe backe:
Thy wife hath dreampt: thy mother hath had viſions;
Caſſandra doth foreſee; and I my ſelfe,
Am like a Prophet ſuddenly enrapt,
to tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore come backe.
Hect. Æneas is a field,
And I do ſtand engag'd to many Greekes,
Even in the faith of valour, to appeare
This morning to them.
Priam. I, but thou ſhalt not goe,
Hect. I muſt not breake my faith:
You know me dutifull, therefore deare ſir,
Let me not ſhame reſpect; but give me leave
To take that courſe by yonr conſent and voice,
Which you doe here forbid me, Royall Priam.
Caſ. O Priam, yeelde not to him.
And. Doe not deere father.
Hect. Andromache I am offended with you:
Vpon the love you beare me, get you in.
Exit Andromache.
Troy. This fooliſh, dreaming, ſuperſtitious girle,
Makes all theſe bodements.
Caſſ. O farewell, deere Hector:
Looke how thou dieſt; looke how thy eye turnes pale:
Looke how thy wounds doe bleede at many vents:
Hearke how Troy roares; ho Hecuba cries out;
How poore Andromache ſhrils her dolour forth;
Behold diſtraction, frency, and amazement,
Like witleſſe Antickes one another meete,
And all cry Hector, Hectors dead: O Hector!
Troy. Away.
Caſ. Farewell: yes, ſoft: Hector I take my leave;
Thou do'ſt thy ſelfe, and all our Troy deceive. Exit.
Hec. You are amaz'd, my Liege, at her exclaime:
Goe in and cheere the Towne, weele forth and fight:
Doe deedes of praiſe, and tell you them at night.
Priam. Farewell: the gods with ſafety ſtand about thee.
Alarum.
Troy. They are at it, hearke: proud Diomed, beleeve
I come to looſe my arme, or winne my ſleeve.

Enter Pandar.

Pad. Doe you heare my Lord? do you heare?
Troy. What now?
Pand. Here's a Letter come from yond poore girle.
Troy. Let me reade.

Pand. A whorſon tiſicke, a whorſon raſcally tiſicke, ſo troubles me: and the fooliſh fortune of this girle, and what one thing, what another, that I ſhall leave you one o'th's dayes; and I have a rheume in mine eyes too; and ſuch an ache in my bones: that unleſſe a man were curſt, I cannot tell what to thinke on't. What ſayes ſhe there?

Troy. Words, words, meere words, no matter from the heart:
Th'effect doth operate another way.
Goe winde to winde, there turne and change together:
My love with words and errors ſtill ſhe feedes;
But edifies another with her deedes.
Pand. Why, but heare you?
Troy. Hence brother lacky; ignomy and ſhame
Perſue thy life, and live aye with thy name.
Alarum.
Exeunt.

Enter Therſites in excurſion.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another, Ile goe looke on: that diſſembling abhominable varlet Diomede, has got that ſame ſcurvy, doting, fooliſh yong knaves Sleeve of Troy, there in his Helme: I would faine ſee them meet; that, that ſame yong Troian aſſe, that loves the whore there, might ſend that Greekiſh whore-maiſterly villaine, with the Sleeve, backe to the diſſembling luxurious drabbe, of a ſleeveleſſe errant. O'th'tother ſide, the pollicy of thoſe crafty ſwearing raſcals; that ſtole old Mouſe-eaten dry cheeſe, Neſtor: and that ſame dog-foxe Vliſſes is not prov'd worth a Black-berry. They ſet me up in pollicy, that mungrill curre Aiax, againſt that dogge of as bad a kinde, Achilles. And now is the curre Aiax prouder then the curre Achilles, and will not arme to day. Whereupon, the Grecians began to proclaime barbariſme; and pollicy growes into an ill opinion.

Enter Diomed and Troylus.

Soft, heere comes Sleeve, and th'other.
Troy. Flye not: for ſhould'ſt thou take the River Stix,
I would ſwim after.
Diom. Thou do'ſt miſcall retire:
I doe not flye; but advantagious care
Withdrew me from the oddes of multitude:
Haye at thee?
Ther: Hold thy whore Grecian: now for thy whore
Troian: Now the Sleeve, now the Sleeve.
Enter Hector.
Hect. What art thou Greek? art thou for Hectors match?
Art thou of bloud, and honour?

Ther. No, no: I am a raſcall: a ſcurvy railing knave: a very filthy roague.

Hec. I doe beleeve thee, live.

Ther. God a mercy, that thou wilt beleeve me; but a plagve breake thy necke---for frighting me: what's become of the wenching rogues? I thinke they have ſwallowed one another. I would laugh at that miracle---yet in a ſort, lechery eates it ſelfe: Ile ſeeke them.
Exit.

Enter Diomed and Servant.

Dia. Goe, goe, my ſervant, take thou Troylus Horſe;
Preſent the faire Steede to my Lady Creſſid:
Fellow, commend my ſervice to her beauty:
Tell her, I have chaſtis'd the amourous Troyan.
And am her Knight by proofe.
Ser. I goe my Lord. Enter Agamemnon.
Aga. Renew, renew, the fierce Polidamus
Hath beare downe Menon: baſtard Margarelon
Hath Doreus priſoner.
And ſtands Coloſſus-wiſe waving his beame,
Vpon the paſhed courſes of the Kings:
Epiſtropus and Cedus, Polixines is ſlaine:
Amphimacus, and Thoas deadly hurt:
Patroclus tane or ſlaine, and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruiſed; the dreadfull Sagittary
Appauls our numbers, haſte we Diomed
To re-enforcement, or we periſh all.
Enter Neſtor.
Neſt, Goe beare Patroclus body to Achilles,
And bid the ſnaile-pac'd Aiax arme for ſhame,
There is a thouſand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathe his Horſe,
And there lacks worke: anon he's there a foote,
And there they flye or dye, like ſcaled ſculs,

Before the belching Whale;then is he yonder,
And there the ſtraying Greekes,ripe for his edge,
Fall downe before him,like the mowers ſwath;
Here,there,and every where, he leaves and takes;
Dexterity ſo obaying appetite,
That what he will he does,and does ſo much,
That proofe is call'd impoſsibility.

Enter Vlyſſes.

Vliſ. Oh,courage,courage Princes:great Achilles
Is arming,weeping,curſing,vowing vengeance;
Patroclus wounds have rouz'd his drowzie bloud,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
That noſeleſſe,handleſſe,hackt and chipt, come to him;
Crying on Hector. Aiax hath loſt a friend,
And foames at mouth,and he is arm'd,and at it:
Roaring for Troylus; who hath done to day,
Mad and fantaſticke execution;
Engaging and redeeming of himſelfe,
With ſuch a careleſſe force,and forceleſſe care,
As if that luck in very ſpight of cunning,bad him win al.

Enter Aiax.

Aia Troylus,thou coward Troylus. Exit.

Dio. I,there,there.

Neſt. So,ſo,we draw together. Exit.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector?
Come,come,thou boy-queller, ſhew thy face:
Know what it is to meete Achilles angry.
Hector,wher's Hector? I will none but Hector. Exit.

Enter Aiax.

Aia. Troylus,thou coward Troylus,ſhew thy head.

Enter Diomed.

Diom. Troylus,I ſay, wher's Troylus?

Aia. What would'ſt thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Aia. Were I the Generall,
Thou ſhould'ſt have my office,
Ere that correction:Troylus I ſay,what Troylus?

Enter Troylus.

Troy. Oh tritour Diomed!
Turne thy falſe face thou traytor,
And pay thy life thou oweſt me for my horſe.

Dio. Ha,art thou there?

Aia. Ile fight with him alone,ſtand Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize,I will not looke upon.

Troy. Come both you cogging Greekes, have at you both. Exit Troylus.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea Troylus? O well fought my yongeſt Brother.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now doe I ſee thee;have at thee Hector.

Hect. Pauſe if thou wilt.

Achil. I doe diſdaine thy curteſie,proud Troian;
Be happy that my armes are out of uſe:
My reſt and negligence befriend thee now,
But thou anon ſhalt heare of me againe:
Till when,goe ſeeke thy fortune.

Hect. Fare thee well:
I would have beene much more a freſher man,
Had I expected thee:how now my Brother?

Enter Troylus.

Troy. Aiax hath tane Æneas;ſhall it be?
No,by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He ſhall not carray him:Ile be tane too,
Or bring him off:Fate heare me what I ſay;
I wreake not,though thou end my life to day. Exit.

Enter one in Armour.

Hect. Stand,ſtand,thou Greeke,
Thou art a goodly marke:
No? wilt thou not? I like thy armour well,
Ile fruſh it,and unlocke the rivets all,
But Ile be maiſter of it:wilt thou not beaſt abide?
Why then flye on,Ile hunt thee for thy hide. Exit.

Enter Achilles with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me you my Myrmidons:
Marke what I ſay;attend me where I wheele:
Strike not a ſtroake,but kepe your ſelves in breath;
And when I have the bloudy Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about:
In felleſt manner execute your armes
Follow me ſirs,and my proceeding eye;
It is decree, Hector the great muſt dye. Exit.

Enter Therſites,Menelaus,and Paris

Ther. The Cuckold and the Cuckold-maker are at it: now bull,now dogge,lowe; Paris lowe; now my double hen'd ſparrow; low Paris, lowe; the bull has the game: ware hornes ho?

Exit Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Baſtard.

Baſt. Turne ſlave and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Baſt. A Baſtard Sonne of Priams.

Ther. I am a Baſtard too, I love Baſtards, I am a Baſtard begot,Baſtard inſtructed, Baſtard in minde, Baſtard in valour,in every thing illegitimate, one Beare will not bite another, and wherefore ſhould one Baſtard? take heede, the quarrel's moſt ominous to us:if the Sonne of a whore fight for a whore,he tempts judgement: farewell Baſtard:

Baſt. The divell take the coward. Exeunt.

Enter Hector.

Hec. Moſt putrified core ſo faire without:
Thy goodly armour thus hath coſt thy life.
Now is my dares worke done;Ile take good breath:
Reſt Sword,thou haſt thy fill of bloud and death.

Enter Achilles and his Myrmidons.

Achil. Looke Hector how the Sunne begins to ſet:
How ugly night comes breathing at his heeles,
Even with the vaile and darking of the Sunne.
To cloſe the day up, Hectors life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd,for goe this vantage Greeke.

Achil. Strike fellowes ſtrike,this is the man I ſeeke.
So Illion fall thou:now Troy ſinke downe:
Here lyes thy heart,thy ſinewes,and thy bone.
On Myrmidons,cry you all a maine,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector ſlaine. Retreat.
Hearke,a retreat upon our Grecian part.

Gree. The Troian Trumpets ſounds the like my Lord.

Achi. The dragon wing of night ore-ſpreds the earth
And ſtickler-like the Armies ſeperates
My halfe ſupt Sword,that frankly would have fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty bitt:thus goes to bed.
Come,tye his body to my horſes tayle:
Along the field,I will the Troian traile. Exeunt.

Sound Retreat. Shout.

Enter Agamemnon, Aiax, Menelaus,Neſter,
Diomed,and the reſt marching.

Aga. Hearke,hearke,what ſhout is that?

Neſt. Peace Drums.

Sold. Achilles, Achilles, Hector's ſlaine, Achilles.
Dio. The bruite is Hector's ſlaine, and by Achilles.
Aia. If it be ſo, yet bragleſſe let it be:
Great Hector was a man as good as he.
Agam. Martch patiently along; let one be ſent
To pray Achilles ſee us at our Tent.
If in his death the gods have us befriended,
Great Troy is ours, and our ſharpe wars are ended.
Exeunt.

Enter Æneas, Paris, Anthenor and Deiphobus.

Æne. Stand hoe, yet are we maiſters of the field,
Never goe home; here ſtarve we out the night.

Enter Troylus.

Troy. Hector is ſlaine.
All Hector? the gods forbid.
Tory. Hee's dead: and at the murtherers Horſes taile,
In beaſtly ſort, drag'd through the ſhamefull Field,
Frowne on you heavens, effect your rage with ſpeede:
Sit gods upon your throanes: and ſmile at Troy.
I ſay at once, let your briefe plagues be mercy,
And linger not our ſure deſtructions on,
Æne. My Lord, you doe diſcomfort all the Hoſte.
Troy. You underſtand me not, that tell me ſo:
I doe not ſpeake of flight, of feare, of death,
But dare all imminence that gods and men,
Addreſſe their dangers in. Hector is gone:
Who ſhall tell Priam ſo? or Hecuba's
Let him that will a ſcreechoule aye be call'd,
Goe in to Troy, and ſay there, Hector's dead:
There is a word will Priam turne to ſtone;
Make wels, and Niobes of the maides and wives;
Coole ſtatues of the youth: and in a word,
Scarre Troy out of it ſelfe. But martch away,
Hector is dead: there is no more to ſay.
Stay yet: you vile abhominable Tents,
Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plaines:
Let Titan riſe as early as he dare,
Ile through, and through you; & thou great ſiz'd coward:
No ſpace of Earth ſhall ſunder our two hates,
Ile haunt thee, like a wicked conſcience ſtill,
That mouldeth goblins ſwift as frenſies thoughts.
Strike a free martch to Troy, with comfort goe:
Hope of revenge, ſhall hide our inward woe.

Enter Pandarus.

Pand. But heare you? heare you?
Troy. Hence brother, lacky, ignomy, and ſhame
Perſue thy life, and live aye with thy name. Exeunt.

Pa. A goodly medcine for mine a kingbones: oh world, world, world! thus is the poore agent diſpiſde: Oh traitours and bawdes; how earneſtly are you ſet aworke, and how ill requited? why ſhould our indevour be ſo deſir'd, and the performance ſo loath'd? What Verſe for it? what inſtance for it? let me ſee

Full merrily the humble Bee doth ſing,
Till he hath loſt his hony, and his ſting.
And being once ſubdu'd in armed taile,
Sweete hony, and ſweete notes together faile.
Good traders in the fleſh, ſet this in your painted cloathes
As many as be heere of Panders hall,
Your eyes halfe out, weepe out at Pandar's fall:
Or if you cannot weepe, yet give ſome grones;
Though not for me, yet for your akingbones:
Brethren and ſiſters of the hold-dore trade,
Some two months hence, my will ſhall here be made:
It ſhould be now, but that my feare is this:
Some galled Gooſe of Wincheſter would hiſſe:
Till then, Ile ſweare, and ſeeke about for eaſes;
And at that time bequeath you my diſeaſes. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Tragedy of Coriolanus.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Fnter a Company of Mutinous Citizens, with Staves, Clubs, and other weapons.

1. Citizen.

BEfore we proceed any further, heare me ſpeake.

All. Speake, ſpeake.

1. Cit. You are all reſolv'd rather to dy then to famiſh?

All. reſolv'd, reſolv'd.

1. Cit. Firſt you know, Caius Martius is chiefe enemy to the people.

All. We know't.

1. Cit. Let us kill him, and wee'l have Corne at our owne price. Is't a Verdict?

All. No more talking on't, Let it be done, away, away

2. Cit. One word, good Citizens

1. Cit. We are accounted poore Citizens, the Patricians good: what Authority ſurfets one, would releeve us, If they would yeelde us but the ſuperfluity while it were wholſome, we might gueſſe they releeved us humanely: But they thinke we are too deere, the leannes that afflicts us, the obiect of our miſery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance, our ſufferance is againe to them. Let us revenge this with our Pikes, ere we become Raks. For the Gods know, I ſpeake this in hunger for Bread, not in thirſt for Revenge.

2. Cit. Would you proceede eſpecially againſt Caius Martius.

All. Againſt him firſt: He's a very dog to the Commonalty.

2. Cit. Conſider you what Services he ha's done for his Country?

1. Cit. Very well, and could be content to give him good report for't, but that hee payes himſelfe with beeing proud.

All. Nay, but ſpeake not maliciouſly.

1. Cit. I ſay unto you, what he hath done Famouſly, he didit to that end: though ſoft conſcienc'd men can be content to ſay it was for his Countrey, he did it to pleaſe his Mother, and to be partly proud, which he is, even to the altitude of his vertue.

2. Cit. What he cannot helpe in his Nature, you account a Vice in him: You muſt in no way ſay he is couetous.

1. Cit. If I muſt not, I neede not be barren of Accuſations he hath faults (with ſurplus) to tyre in repitition.

Showts within.

What ſhowts are thoſe? The other ſide a'th City is riſen: why ſtay we prating heere? To th'Capitoll.

All, Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft, who comes heere?

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa, one that hath alwayes lov'd the people.

1 Cit. He's one honeſt enough, would al the reſt were ſo.

Men. What workes my Countrimen in hand?
Where go you with your Bats and Clubs? The matter
Speake I pray you.

2 Cit. Our buſines is not unknowne to th'Senat, they have had inkling this fortnight what we intend to do, w^{ch} now wee'l ſhew em in deeds: they ſay poore Suiters have ſtrong breaths, they ſhal know we have ſtrong arms too.

Men. Why Maiſters, my good Friends, mine honeſt
Neigbours, will you undo your ſelves?

2 Cit. We cannot Sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you Friends, moſt charitable care
Have the Patricians of you for your wants.
Your ſuffering in this dearth, you may as well
Strike at the Heaven with your ſtaves, as lift them
Againſt the Roman State, whoſe courſe will on
The way it takes: cracking ten thouſand Curbes
Of more ſtrong linkd aſunder, then can ever
Appeare in your impediment. For the Dearth,
The Gods, not the Patricians make it, and
Your knees to them (not armes) muſt helpe. Alacke,
You are tranſported by Calamity
Thether, where more attends you, and you ſlander
The Helmes o'th State; who care for you like Fathers,
When you curſe them, as Enemies.

2 Cit. Care for us? True indeed, they nere car'd for us yet. Suffer us to famiſh, and their Store-houſes cramm'd with Graine: Make Edicts for Vſury, to ſupport Vſurers; repeale daily any wholſome Act eſtabliſhed againſt the rich, and provide more piercing Statutes daily, to chaine up and reſtraine the poore. If the Warres eate us not uppe, they will, and ther's all the love they beare us.

Men. Either you muſt
Confeſſe your ſelves wondrous Malicious,
Or be accus'd of Folly. I ſhall tell you
A pretty Tale, it may be you have heard it,
But ſince it ſerves my purpoſe, I will venture
To ſcale't a little more.

2 Cit. Well,
Ile heare it Sir: yet you muſt not thinke
To fobbe off our diſgrace with a tale:
But and't pleaſe you deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the bodies members
Rebell'd againſt the Belly; thus accus'd it:
That onely like a Gulfe it did remaine

I'th midd'ſt a th'body, idle and unactive,
Still cubbording the Viand, never bearing
Like labour with the reſt, where th'other Inſtruments
Did ſee, and heare, deviſe, inſtruct, walke, feele,
And mutually participate, did miniſter
Vnto the appetite; and affection common
Of the whole body, the Belly anſwer.

2 Cit. Well ſir, what anſwer made the Belly.

Men. Sir, I ſhall tell you with a kinde of Smile,
Which ne're came from the Lungs, but even thus:
For looke you I may make the belly Smile,
As well as ſpeake, it tantingly replyed
To'th'diſcontented Members, the mutinous parts
That envied his receite: even ſo moſt fitly,
As you maligne our Senators, for that
They are not ſuch as you.

2 Cit. Your Bellies anſwer: What
The Kingly crown'd head the vigilant eye,
The Counſailor Heart, the Arme our Souldier,
Our Steed the Legge, the Tongue our Trumpeter;
With other Muniments and petty helpes
In this our Fabricke, if that they————

Men. What then? Foreme, this Fellow ſpeakes.
What then? What then?

2 Cit. Should by the Cormorant belly be reſtrain'd,
Who is the ſinke a th'body.

Men. Well, what then?

2 Cit. The former Agent, if they did complaine,
What could the Belly anſwer?

Men. I will tell you,
If you'l beſtow a ſmall (of what you have little)
Patience awhile; you'ſt heare the Bellies anſwer.

2 Cit. Y'are long about it.

Men. Note me this good Friend;
Your moſt grave Belly was deliberate,
Not raſh like his Accuſers and thus anſwered
True is it my Incorporate Friends (quoth he)
That I receive the generall Food at firſt
Which you do live upon: and fit it is,
Becauſe I am the Store-houſe, and the Shop
Of the whole Body. But, if you do remember,
I ſend it through the Rivers of your blood
Even to the Court, the Heart, to th'ſeate o'th'Braine,
And through the Crankes and Offices of man,
The ſtrongeſt Nerves, and ſmall inferiour Veines
From me receive that naturall competency
Whereby they live. And though that all at once
(You my good Friends, this ſayes the Belly) marke me.

2 Cit. I ſir, well, well.

Men. Though all at once, cannot
See what I do deliver out to each,
Yet I can make my Awdit up, that all
From me do backe receive the Flowre of all,
And leave me but the Bran. What ſay you toot?

2 Cit. It was an anſwer, how apply you this?

Men. The Senators of Rome, are this good Belly,
And you the mutinous Members: For examine
Their Counſailes, and their Care; diſgeſt things rightly,
Touching the Weale a'th Common, you ſhall finde
No publique benefit which you receive
But it proceeds, or comes from them to you,
And no way from your ſelves. What do you thinke?
You, the great Toe of this Aſſembly?

2 Cit. I the great Toe? Why the great Toe?

Men. For that being one o'th loweſt, baſeſt, pooreſt
Of this moſt wiſe Rebellion, thou goeſt formoſt:
Thou Raſcall, that art worſt in blood to run,
Lead'ſt firſt to win ſome vantage.
But make you ready your ſtiffe bats and clubs,
Rome, and her Rats, are at the point of battell,
The one ſide muſt have baile.

Enter Caius Martius.

Hayle, Noble Martius.

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter you diſſentious rogues
That rubbing the poore Itch of your Opinion,
Make your ſelves Scabs.

2 Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to thee, will flatter
Beneath abhorring. What would you have, you Curres,
That like nor Peace, nor Warre? The one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that truſts to you,
Where he ſhould finde you Lyons, findes you Hares:
Where Foxes, Geeſe you are: No ſurer, no,
Then is the coale of fire upon the Ice,
Or Hailſtone in the Sun. Your Vertue is,
To make him worthy, whoſe offence ſubdues him,
And curſe that Iuſtice did it. Who deſerves Greatneſſe,
Deſerves your Hate: and your Affections are
A ſickmans Appetite; who deſires moſt that
Which would encreaſe his evill. He that depends
Vpon your favours, ſwimmes with finnes of Leade,
And hewes downe Oakes, with ruſhes. Hang ye: truſt ye?
With every Minute you do change a Minde,
And call him Noble, that was now your Hate:
Him vilde, that was your Garland. What's the matter,
That in theſe ſeverall places of the City,
You cry againſt the Noble Senate, who
(Vnder the Gods) keepe you in awe, which elſe
Would feede on one another? What's their ſeeking?

Men. For Corne at their owne rates, whereof they ſay
The City is well ſtor'd.

Men. Hang'em: They ſay?
They'l ſit by th'fire, and preſume to know
Whats done i'th Capitoll: Who's like to riſe,
Who thrives, and who declines: Side factions, & give out
Conjecturall Marriages, making parties ſtrong,
And feebling ſuch as ſtand not in their liking,
Below their cobled Shooes. They ſay thers grain enough?
Would the Nobility lay aſide their ruth,
And let me uſe my Sword, I'de make a Quarry
With thouſands of theſe quarter'd ſlaves, as high
As I could picke my Lance.

Men. Nay theſe are almoſt thoroughly perſwaded:
For though abundantly they lacke diſcretion
Yet are they paſſing Cowardly. But I beſeech you,
What ſayes the other Troope?

Mar. They are diſſolv'd: Hang em;
They ſaid they were an hungry, ſigh'd forth Proverbes
That Hunger-broke ſtone wals: that dogges muſt eate
That meate was made for mouths. That the gods ſent not
Corne for the Richmen onely: With theſe ſhreds
They vented their Complainings, which being anſwer'd
And a petition granted them, a ſtrange one,
To breake the heart of generoſity,
And make bold power looke pale, they threw their caps
As they would hang them on the hornes a'th Moone,
Shooting their Emulation.

Men. What is graunted them?

Mar. Five Tributes to defend their vulgar wiſdoms
Of their owne choice. One's Iunius Brutus,
Sicinius velutus, and I know not. Sdeath,

The able ſhould have firſt unroo'ſt the City
Ere ſo prevail'd with me;it will in time
Win upon power,and throw forth greater Theames
For Inſurrections arguing.
Menen. This is ſtrange.
Mar. Go get you home you Fragments:

Enter a Meſſenger haſtily.

Meſ. Where's Caius Martius?
Mar. Heere:whats the matter?
Meſ. The newes is ſir,the Volcies are in Armes.
Mar. I am glad on't,then we ſhall ha meanes to vent
Our muſty ſuperfluity. See our beſt Elders.

Enter Sicinius Velutus, Annius Brutus Cominius,Titus Lartius,with other Senatours.

1. Sen. Martius tis true,that you have lately told us,
The Volces are in Armes.
Mar. They have a Leader,
Tullus Auffidius that will put you toot:
I ſinne in ennying his Nobility:
And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wiſh me onely he.
Com. You have fought together?
Mar. Were halfe to halfe the world by the'ares,& he Vpon my party,Ide revolt to make
Onely my warres with him. He is a Lion
That I am proud to hunt.
1. Sen. Then worthy Martius,
Attend upon Cominius to theſe Warres.
Com. It is your former promiſe.
Mar. Sir it is,
And I am conſtant:Titus Lucius, thou
Shalt ſee me once more ſtrike at Tullus face.
What art thou ſtiffe? Stand'ſt out?
Tit. No Caius Martius,
Ile leane upon one Crutch,and fight with tother;
Ere ſtay behinde this Buſineſſe.
Men. Oh true-bred.
Sen. Your company to'th'Capitoll,where I know
Our greateſt Friends attend us.
Tit. Lead you on:Follow Cominius, we muſt followe
you,right worthy you Priority.
Com. Noble Martius.
Sen. Hence to your homes,be gone.
Mar. Nay let them follow,
The Volces have much Corne:take theſe Rats thither,
To gnaw their Garners. Worſhipfull Mutiners,
Your valour puts well forth:Pray follow. Exeunt.
Citizens ſteale away. Manent Sicin,& Brutus.
Sicin. Was ever man ſo proud as is this Martius?
Bru. He has no equall.
Sic. When we were choſen Tribunes for the people.
Bru. Mark'd you his lip and eyes.
Sic. Nay,but his taunts.
Bru. Being mov'd,he will not ſpare to gird the Gods.
Sic. Bemocke the modeſt Moone.
Bru. The preſent Warres devoure him,he is growne
Too proud to be ſo valiant.
Sicin. Such a Nature,tickled with good ſucceſſe,diſdaines the ſhadow which he treads on at noone, but I do wonder, his inſolence can brooke to be commanded under Cominius?
Bru. Fame,at the which he aymes,
In whom already he is well grac'd,cannot
Better he held,nor more attain'd then by
A place below the firſt:for what miſcarries
Shall be the Generals fault,though he performe
To th'vtmoſt of a man,and giddy cenſure
Will then cry out of Martius:Oh,if he
Had borne the buſineſſe.
Sic. Beſides, if things go well,
Opinion that ſo ſtickes on Martius,ſhall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.
Bru. Come:halfe all Cominius Honors are to Martius
Though Martius earn'd them not:and all his faults
To Martius ſhall be Honors,though indeed
In ought he merit not.
Sic. Let's hence,and heare
How the diſpatch is made,and in what faſhion
More then his ſingularity,he goes
Vpon this preſent Action.
Bru. Let's along. Exeunt.

Enter Tullus Auffidius with Senators of Coriolus.

1. Sen. So,your opinion is Auffidius.
That they of Rome are entred in our Counſailes,
And know how we proceede,
Auf. Is it not yours?
What ever haw bin thought one in this State
That could be brought to bodily act,ere Rome
Had circumuention:tis notfoure dayes gone
Since I heard thence,theſe are the words,I thinke
I have the Letter heere:yes,heere it is;
They have preſt a power,but it is not knowne
Whether for Eaſt or Weſt:the Death is great,
The people Mutinous:And it is rumour'd
Cominius, Martius your old Enemy
(Who is of Rome worſe hated then of you)
And Titus Lartius,a moſt valiant Roman,
Theſe three leade on this Preparation
Whether tis bent:moſt likely,tis for you:
Conſider of it.
1. Sen Our Armie's in the Field:
We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To anſwer us.
Auf. Nor did you thinke it folly,
To keepe your great pretences vayl'd, till when
They needs muſt ſhew themſelves,which in the hatching
It ſeem'd appear'd to Rome. By the diſcovery,
We ſhall be ſhortned in our ayme, which was
To take in many Townes,ere (almoſt)Rome
Should know we were a-foot.
2. Sen. Noble Auffidius,
Take your commiſſion,hye you to your Bands,
Let us alone to guard Coriolus
If they ſet downe before's:for the remove
Bring up your Army:but(I thinke)you'l finde
Th'have not prepar'd for us.
Auf. O doubt not that,
I ſpeake from Certainties. Nay more,
Some parcels of their Power are forth already,
And onely hitherward. I leave your Honors.
If we, and Caius Martius chance to meete,
Tis ſworne betweene us,we ſhall ever ſtrike
Till one can do no more.
All. The Gods aſsiſt you.
Auf. And keepe your Honors ſafe.
1. Sen. Farewell.
2. Sen. Farewell.
All. Farewell. Exeunt omnes

Enter Volumnia and Virgilia, mother and wife to Martius: They ſet them downe on two lowe ſtooles and ſowe.

Volu. I pray you daughter ſing, or expreſſe your ſelfe in a more comfortable ſort: If my Sonne were my Huſband, I ſhould freelier rejoyce in that abſence wherein he wonne Honor, then in the embracements of his Bed, where he would ſhew moſt love. When yet hee was but tender-bodied, and the onely Sonne of my womb; when youth with comelineſſe pluck'd all gaze his way; when for a day of Kings entreaties, a Mother ſhould not ſel him an houre from her beholding; I conſidering how Honour would become ſuch a perſon, that it was no better then Picture-like to hang by th'wall, if renowne made it not ſtirre, was pleas'd to let him ſeeke danger, where he was like to finde fame: To a cruell Warre I ſent him, from whence he return'd, his browes bound with Oake. I tell thee Daughter, I ſprang not more in joy at firſt hearing he was a Man-child, then now in firſt ſeeing he had proved himſelfe a man.

Virg. But had he died in the Buſineſſe Madame, how then?

Volum Then his good report ſhould have beene my Sonne, I therein would have found iſſue. Heare me profeſſe ſincerily, had I a dozen ſons each in my love alike, and none leſſe deere then thine, and my good Martius, I had rather had eleven dye Nobly for their Countrey, then one voluptuouſly ſurfet out of Action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to viſit you.
Virg. Beſeech you give me leave to retire my ſelfe.
Volum. Indeed you ſhall not:
Me thinkes, I heare hither your Husbands Drumme:
See him plucke Auffidius downe by th'haire:
(As children from a Beare) the Voices ſhunning him:
Me thinke, I ſee him ſtampe thus, and call thus,
Come on you Cowards, you were got in feare
Though you were borne in Rome; his bloody brow
With his mail'd hand, then wiping, forth he goes
Like to a Harveſt man, whats task'd to mote
Or all, or looſe his hyre.
Virg. His bloody Brow? Oh Iupiter, no blood.
Volum. Away you Foole; it more becomes a man
Then gilt his Trophy. The breſts of Hecuba
When ſhe did ſuckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Then Hectors forhead, when it ſpit forth blood
At Grecian ſwordes Contending: tell Valeria
We are fit to bid her welcome. Exit Gent.
Vir. Heavens bleſſe my Lord from fell Auffidius.
Vol. Hee'l beat Auffidius head below his knee,
And treade upon his necke.

Enter Valeria with an Vſher, and a Gentlewoman.

Val. My Ladies both good day to you.
Vol. Sweet Madam.
Vir. I am glad to ſee your Ladyſhip.
Val. How do you both? You are manifeſt houſe-keepers. What are you ſowing heere? A fine ſpotte in good faith. How does your little Sonne?
Vir. I thanke your Lady-ſhip: Well good Madam.
Vol. He had rather ſee the ſwords, and heare a Drum, then looke upon his Schoolmaſter.
Val. A my word the Fathers Sonne: Ile ſweare tis a very pretty boy. A my troth, I look'd upon him a Wenſday halfe an houre together: ha's ſuch a confirm'd countenance. I ſaw him run after a gilded Butterfly, and when he caught it, he let it go againe, and after it againe, and over and over he comes, and up againe: catcht it againe: or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how twas, he did ſo ſet his teeth, and teare it. Oh, I warrant how he mammockt it.
Vol. One on's Fathers moods.
Val. Indeed la, tis a Noble childe.
Virg. A Cracke Madam.
Val. Come, lay aſide your ſtitchery, I muſt have you play the idle Huſwife with me this after noone.
Virg. No (good Madam)
I will not out of doores.
Val. Not out of doores?
Volum. She ſhall, the ſhall.
Vir. Indeed no, by your patience; Ile not over the threſhold, till my Lord returne from the Warres.
Val. Fye, you confine your ſelfe moſt unreaſonably: Come, you muſt go viſit the good Lady that lyes in.
Virg. I will wiſh her ſpeedy ſtrength, and viſite her with my prayers: but I cannot go thither.
Volum. Why I pray you.
Vlug. Tis not to ſave labour, nor that I want love.
Val. You would be another Penelope: yet they ſay, all the yearne ſhe ſpun in Vlyſſes abſence, did but fill Athica full of Mothes. Come, I would your Cambrick were ſenſible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pitty. Come you ſhall go with us.
Virg. No good Madam, pardon me, indeed I will not foorth.
Val. In truth la go with me, and Ile tell you excellent uewes of your Husband.
Vir. Oh good Madam, there can be none yet.
Val. Verily I do not ieſt with you: there came newes from him laſt night.
Vir. Indeed Madam.
Val. In earneſt it's true; I heard a Senatour ſpeake it. Thus it is: the Volcies have an Army forth, againſt whom Cominius the Generall is gone, with one part of our Romane power. Your Lord, and Titus Lartius, are ſet down before their City Cariolus, they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it breefe Warres. This is true on mine Honor, and ſo I pray go with us.
Vir. Give me excuſe good Madame, I will obey you in every thing heereafter.
Vol. Let her alone Lady, as ſhe is now:
She will but diſeaſe our better mirth.
Val. In troth I thinke ſhe would:
Fare you well then. Come good ſweet Lady.
Prythee Virgilia turne thy ſolemneſſe out a doore,
And go along with us.
Virg. No
At a word Madam; Indeed I muſt not,
I wiſh you much mirth.
Val. Well, then farewell. Exeunt Ladies.

Enter Martius, Titus Lartius, with Drumme and Colours, with Captaines and Souldiers, as before the City Coriolus: to them a Meſſenger.

Mart. Yonder comes Newes:
A Wager they have met.
Lar. My horſe to yours, no.
Mar. Tis done.
Lar. Agreed.

Mar. Say, ha's our Generall met the Enemy?
Meſſ. They lye in view, but have not ſpoke as yet.
Lart. So, the good Horſe is mine.
Mart. Ile buy him of you.
Lart. No, Ile not ſel, nor give him: Lend you him I wil
For halfe a hundred yeares: Summon the Towne.
Mar. How farre off lie theſe Armies?
Meſſ. Within this mile and halfe.
Mar. Then ſhall we heare their Larum, & they Ours.
Now Mars, I prythee make us quicke in worke,
That we with ſmoaking ſwords may march from hence
To helpe our fielded Friends. Come, blow thy blaſt.

They Sound a Parley: Enter two Senators with others on the Walles of Corialus.

Tullus Auffidius, is he within your Walles?
1. Senat. No, nor a man that feares you leſſe then he,
That's leſſer then a little: Drum a farre off.
Hearke, our Drummes
Are bringing forth our youth: Wee'l breake our Walles
Rather then they ſhall pound us up our Gates,
Which yet ſeeme ſhut, we have but pin'd with Ruſhes,
They'le open of themſelves. Harke you, farre off
Alarum farre off.
There is Auffidius. Liſt what worke he makes Among'ſt your cloven Army.
Mar. Oh they are at it
Lar. Their noiſe be our inſtruction. Ladders hoa.

Enter the Army of the Volces.

Mar. They feare us not, but iſſue for'h their City.
Now put your Shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more proofe then Shields.
Advance brave Titus,
They do diſdaine us much beyond our Thoughts,
Which maks me ſweat with wrath. Come on my follows
He that retires, Ile take him for a Volce,
And he ſhall feele mine edge.
Alarum, the Romans are beat back to their Trenches
Enter Martius Curſing.
Mar. All the contagion of the South, light on you,
You ſhames of Rome: you Heard of Byles and Plagues
Plaiſter you o're, that you may be abhorr'd
Farther then ſeene, and one infect another
Againſt the Winde a mile: you ſoules of Geeſe,
That beare the ſhapes of men, how have you run
From Slaves, that Apes would beate; Pluto and Hell,
All hurt behinde, backes red, and faces pale
With flight and agued feare, mend and charge home,
Or by the fires of heaven, Ile leave the Foe,
And make my Warres on you: Looke too't: Come on,
If you'l ſtand faſt, wee'l beate them to their Wives,
As they us to our Trenches followed.
Another Alarum, and Martius followes them to gates, and is ſhut in.
So, now the gates are ope: now prove good Seconds,
Tis for the followers, Fortune widens them,
Not for the flyers: Marke me, and do the like.
Enter the Gates.
1. Sol. Foole-hardineſſe, not I.
2. Sol. Nor I.
1. Sol. See they have ſhut him in. Alarum continues
All. To th'pot I warrant him. Enter Titus Lartius.
Tit. What is become of Martius?
All. Slaine (Sir) doubtleſſe.
1. Sol. Following the Flyers at the very heeles,
With them he enters: who upon the ſodaine
Clapt to their Gates, he is himſelfe alone,
To anſwer all the City.
Lar. Oh Noble Fellow!
Who ſenſibly out-dares his ſenceleſſe Sword,
And when it bowes, ſtand'ſt up: Thou art left Martius,
A Carbuncle intire: as big as thou art
Weare not ſo rich a Iewell. Thou was't a Souldier
Even to Calves wiſh, not fierce and terrible
Onely in ſtrokes, but with thy grim lookes, and
The Thunder-like percuſſion of thy ſounds
Thou mad'ſt thine enemies ſhake, as if the World
Were feavourous, and did tremble.

Enter Martius bleeding, aſſaulted by the Enemy.

1. Sol. Looke Sir.
Lar. O tis Martius.
Let's fetch him off, or make remaine alike.
They fight, and all enter the City.
Enter certaine Romanes with ſpoiles.
1. Rom. This will I carry to Rome.
2. Rom. And I this.
3. Rom. A Murrain on't, I tooke this for Silver. Exeunt.
Alarum continues ſtill a-farre off.
Enter Martius, and Titus with a Trumpet.
Mar. See heere theſe movers, that do prize their hours
At a crak'd Drachme: Cuſhions, Leaden Spoones,
Irons of a Doit, Dublets that Hangmen would
Bury with thoſe that wore them. Theſe baſe ſlaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, packe up, downe with them.
And harke, what noiſe the Generall makes: To him
There is the man of my ſoules hate, Auffidius,
Piercing our Romanes: Then Valiant Titus take
Convenient Numbers to make good the City,
Whil'ſt I with thoſe that have the ſpirit, will haſte
To helpe Cominius.
Lar. Worthy Sir, thou bleed'ſt,
Thy exerciſe hath bin too violent,
For a ſecond courſe of Fight.
Mar. Sir, praiſe me not:
My worke hath yet not warm'd me. Fare you well:
The blood I drop, is rather Phyſicall
Then dangerous to me. To Auffidius thus, I will appeare
Lar. Now the faire Goddeſſe Fortune, (and fight.
Fall deepe in love with thee, and her great charmes
Miſguide thy Oppoſers ſwords, Bold Gentleman:
Proſperity be thy Page.
Mar. Thy Friend no leſſe.
Then thoſe ſhe placeth higheſt: So farewell.
Lar. Thou worthieſt Martius,
Go ſound thy Trumpet in the Market place,
Call thither all the Officers a'th' Towne,
Where they ſhall know our minde. Away. Exeunt.
Enter Cominius as it were in retire, with ſoldiers.
Com. Breath you my friends, wel fought, we are come
Like Romans, neither fooliſh in our ſtands, (off,
Nor Cowardly in retire: Beleeve me Sirs,
We ſhall be charg'd againe. Whiles we have ſtrooke
By interims and conveying guſts, we have heard
The Charges of our Friends. The Roman Gods,
Leade their ſucceſſes, as we wiſh our owne,
That both our powers, with ſmiling Fronts encountring,
May give you thankfull Sacrifice. Thy Newes?
Enter a Meſſenger.
Meſ. The Citizens of Coriolus have yſſued,
And given to Lartius and to Martius Battaile:

I ſaw our party to their Trenches driven,
And then I came away.
Com. Though thou ſpeakeſt truth,
Me thinkes thou ſpeak'ſt not well. How long is't ſince?
Meſ. Above an houre, my Lord.
Com. Tis not a mile: brieſely we heard their drummes.
How could'ſt thou in a mile confound an houre,
And bring thy Newes ſo late?
Meſ. Spies of the Volces
Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheele
Three or foure miles about, elſe had I ſir
Halfe an houre ſince brought my report.

Enter Martius.

Com. Whoſe yonder,
That doe's appeare as he were Flead? O Gods,
He has the ſtampe of Martius, and I have
Before time ſeene him thus.
Mar. Come I too late?
Com. The Shepherd knowes not Thunder frō a Taber,
More then I know the ſound of Martius Tongue
From every meaner man.
Mar. Come I too late?
Com. I, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your owne.
Mar. Oh! let me clip ye
I Armes as ſound, as when I woo'd in heart;
As merry, as when our Nuptiall day was done,
And Tapers burnt to Bedward.
Com Flower of Warriors, how i't with Titus Lartius?
Mar. As with a man buſied about Decrees:
Condemning ſome to death, and ſome to exile,
Ranſoming him, or pittying, threatning th'other;
Holding Coriolus in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning Grey-hound in the Leaſh,
To let him ſhip at will.
Com. Where is that Slave,
Which told me they had beate you to your Trenches?
Where is he? Call him hither.
Mar. Let him alone,
He did informe the truth: but for our Gentlemen,
The common file, (a plague-Tribunes for them)
The Mouſe ne're ſhunn'd the Cat, as they did budge
From Raſcals worſe then they.
Com. But how prevail'd you?
Mar. Will the time ſerve to tell, I do not thinke:
Where is the enemy? Are you Lords a th' Field?
If not, why ceaſe you till you are ſo?
Com. Martius, we have at diſadvantage fought,
And did retyre to win our propoſe.
Mar. How lies their Battell? Know you on what ſide
They have plac'd their men of truſt?
Com. As I gueſſe Martius,
Their Bands I'th Vaward are the Antients
Of their beſt truſt: O're them Auffidius,
Their very heart of Hope.
Mar. I do beſeech you,
By all the Battailes wherein we have fought,
By th'Blood we have ſhed together,
By th'Vowes we have made
To endure Friends, that you directly ſet me
Againſt Auffidius, and his Antiats,
And that you not delay the preſent (but Filling the aire with Swords advanc'd) and Darts,
We prove this very houre.
Com. Though I could wiſh,
You were conducted to a gentle Bath,
And Balmes applyed to you, yet dare I never
Deny your asking, take your choice of thoſe
That beſt can ayde your action.
Mar. Thoſe are they
That moſt are willing; if any ſuch be heere;
(As it were ſinne to doubt) that love this painting
Wherein you ſee me ſmear'd, if any feare
Leſſen his perſon, then an ill report:
If any thinke, brave death out-weighes bad life,
And that his Countries deerer then himſelfe,
Let him alone: Or ſo many ſo minded,
Wave thus to expreſſe his diſpoſition,
And follow Martius.
They all ſhout and wave their ſwords, take him up in their Armes, and caſt up their Caps.
Oh me alone, make you a ſword of me:
If theſe ſhewes be not outward which of you
But is foure Volces? None of you, but is Able to beare againſt the great Auffidius
A Shiels, as hard as his. A certaine number
(Though thankes to all) muſt I ſelect from all:
The reſt ſhall beare the buſineſſe in ſome other fight
(As cauſe will be obey'd:) pleaſe you to Martch,
And foure ſhall quickly draw out my Command,
Which men are beſt inclin'd.
Com. Martch on my Fellowes:
Make good this oſtentation, and you ſhall
Divide in all, with us. Exeunt.

Titus Lartius, having ſet a guard upon Coriolus, going with Drum and Trumpet toward Cominius, and Caius Martius, Enters with a Lieutenant, other Souldiours, and a Scout.

Lar. So, let the Ports be guarded; keepe your Duties
As I have ſet them downe. If I do ſend, diſpatch
Thoſe Centuries to our ayd, the reſt will ſerve
For a ſhort holding, if we looſe the Field,
We cannot keepe the Towne.
Lieu. Feare not our care Sir.
Lar. Hence; and ſhut your gates upon's:
Our Guider come, to th'Roman Campe conduct us. Exit.
Alarum, as in Battaile.

Enter Martius and Auffidius at ſeverall doores.

Mar. Ile fight with none but thee, for I do hate thee
Worſe then a Promiſe-breaker.
Auf. We hate alike:
Not Affrike ownes a Serpent I abhorre
More then thy Fame and Envy: Fix thy foot.
Mar. Let the firſt Budger dye the others Slave,
And the Gods doome him after.
Auf. If I flye Martius, hollow me like a Hare.
Mar. Within theſe three houres Tullus
Alone I fought in your Coriolus walles,
And made what worke I pleas'd: Tis not my blood,
Wherein thou ſeeſt me maskt, for thy Revenge
Wrench up thy power to th'higheſt.
Auf. Wer't thou the Hector,
That was the whip of your bragg'd Progeny,
Thou ſhould'ſt not ſcape me heere.
Heere they fight, and certaine Volces come in the ayde of Auffid. Martius fights til they be driven in breathles.
Officious and not valiant, you have ſham'd me
In your condemned Seconds.

Flouriſh. Alarum. A Retreat is ſounded. Enter at one Doore Cominius,with the Romanes: At another Doore Martius,with his Arme in a Scarfe.

Com. If I ſhould tell thee o're this thy dayes Worke,
Thou't not beleeve thy deeds:but Ile report it,
Where Senators ſhall mingle teares with ſmiles,
Where great Patricians ſhall attend,and ſhrug,
I'th'end admire:where Ladies ſhall be frighted,
And gladly quak'd,heare more: where the dull Tribunes,
That with the fuſty Plebeans,hate thine Honors,
Shall ſay againſt their hearts,We thanke the Gods
Our Rome hath ſuch a Souldier.
Yet cam'ſt thou to a Morſell of this Feaſt,
Having fully din'd before.

Enter Titus with his Power,from the Purſuit.

Titus Lartius. Oh Generall:
Here is the Steed,wee the Capariſon:
Hadſt thou beheld——
Mar. Pray now,no more:
My Mother,who ha's a Charter to extoll her Bloud,
When ſhe do's praiſe me,grieves me:
I have done as you have done,that's what I can,
Induc'd as you have beene,that's for my Countrey:
He that ha's but effected his good will,
Hath overta'ne mine Act.
Com. You ſhall not be the Grave of your deſerving,
Rome muſt know the value of her owne:
Twere a Concealement worſe then a Theft,
No leſſe then a Traducement,
To hide your doings,and to ſilence that,
Which to the ſpire,and top of praiſes vouch'd,
Would ſeeme but modeſt:therefore I beſeech you,
In ſigne of what you are,not to reward
What you have done,before our Army heare me.
Mar. I have ſome Wounds upon me,and they ſmart
To heare themſelves remembred.
Com. Should they not:
Well might they feſter 'gainſt Ingratitude,
And tent themſelves with death:of all the Horſes,
Whereof we have ta'ne good, and good ſtore of all,
The Threaſure in this field atchieved,and City,
We render you the Tenth,to be ta'ne forth,
Before the common diſtribution,
At your onely choiſe.
Mar. I thanke you Generall:
But cannot make my heart conſent to take
A Bribe,to pay my Sword:I doe refuſe it,
And ſtand upon my common part with thoſe,
That have beheld the doing.

A long flouriſh. They all cry, Martius,Martius, caſt up their Caps and Launces:Cominius and Lartius ſtand bare.

Ma. May theſe ſame Inſtruments,which you prophane.
Never ſound more:when Drums and Trumpets ſhall
I'th'field prove flatterers,let Cours and Cities be
Made all of falſe-fac'd ſoothing:
When Steele growes ſoft,as the Paraſites Silke,
Let him be made an Overture for th'Warres:
No more I ſay,for that I have not waſh'd
My Noſe that bled,or foyl'd ſome debile Wretch,
Which without note,here's many elſe have done,
You ſhoot me forth in acclamations hyperbolicall,
As if I lov'd my little ſhould be dieted
In prayſes,ſawc'ſt with Lies.
Com. Too modeſt are you:
More cruell to your good report,then gratefull
To us,that give you truly:by your patience,
If againſt your ſelfe you be incens'd,wee'le put you
(Like one that meanes his proper harme)in Manacles,
Then reaſon ſafely with you:Therefore be it knowne,
As to us,to all the World,That Caius Martius
Weares this Warres Garland:in token of the which,
My Noble Steed,knowne to the Campe,I give him,
With all his trim belonging;and from this time,
For what he did before Coriolus,call him,
With all th'applauſe and Clamor of the Hoaſt.
Marcus Caius Coriolanus. Beare th'ddition Nobly ever?
Flouriſh. Trumpets ſound,and Drums.
Omnes. Marcus Caius Coriolanus.
Mar. I will goe waſh:
And when my Face is faire,you ſhall perceive
Whether I bluſh,or no:howbeit,I thanke you.
I meane to ſtride your Steed,and at all times
To under-creſt your good Addition,
To th'faireneſſe of my power.
Com. So,to our Tent:
Where ere we doe repoſe us, we will write
To Rome of our ſucceſſe:you Titus Lartius
Muſt to Coriolus backe,ſend us to Rome
The beſt,with whom we may articulate,
For their owne good,and ours.
Lar. I ſhall,my Lord.
Mar. The Gods begin to mocke me:
I that now refus'd moſt Princely gifts,
Am bound to begge of my Lord Generall.
Com. Tak't,tis yours:what is't?
Mar. I ſometime lay here in Coriolus,
At a poore mans houſe:he us'd me kindly.
He cry'd to me:I ſaw him Priſoner:
But then Auffidius was within my view,
And Wrath o're-whelm'd my pitty:I requeſt you
To give my poore Hoſt freedome.
Com. Oh well begg'd:
Were he the Butcher of my Sonne,he ſhould
Be free,as is the Winde:deliver him,Titus.
Lart. Martius,his Name.
Mar. By Iupiter forgot:
I am weary,yea my memory is tyr'd:
Have we no Wine here?
Com. Goe we to our Tent:
The bloud upon your Viſage dryes,tis time
It ſhould be lookt to:come. Exeunt.

A flouriſh. Cornets. Enter Tullus Auffidius bloudy,with two or three Souldiers.

Au. The Towne is ta'ne.
Soul. Twill be deliver'd backe on good Condition.
Auf. Condition?
I would I were a Roman,for I cannot,
Being a Volce,be,that I am. Condition?
What good Condition can a Treaty finde
I'th'part that is at mercy?five times,Martius,
I have fought with thee;ſo often haſt thou beat me:
And would'ſt doe ſo,I thinke,ſhould we encounter

And often as we eate. By the Elements,
If ere againe I meet him beard to beard,
He's mine, or I am his: Mine Emulation
Hath not that honor in't it had: For where
I thought to cruſh him in an equall Force,
True Sword to Sword: Ile potche at him ſome way,
Or wrath, or Craft may get him.

Sol. He's the divell.

Auf. Bolder, though not ſo ſubtle: my valors poiſon'd,
With onely ſuffring ſtaine by him: for him
Shall flye out of it ſelfe, nor ſleepe, nor ſanctuary,
Being naked, ſicke; nor Phane, nor Capitoll,
The Prayers of Prieſts, nor times of Sacrifice:
Embarquements all of Fury, ſhall lift up
Their rotten Priveledge, and Cuſtome 'gainſt
My hate to Martius. Where I finde him, were it
At home, upon my brothers Guard, even there
Againſt the hoſpitable Canon, would I
Waſh my fierce hand in's heart. Goe you to th'City,
Learne how 'tis held, and what they are that muſt
Be Hoſtages for Rome.

Sol. Will not you goe?

Auf. I am attended at the Cyprus grove. I pray you
('Tis South the City Mils) bring me word thither
How the world goes: that to the pace of it
I may ſpurre on my journey.

Sol. I ſhall ſir.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Menenius with the two Tribunes of the people, Sicinius & Brutus.

Men. The Augurer tels me, we ſhall have Newes to night.

Bru. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Martius.

Sicin. Nature teaches Beaſts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the Wolfe love?

Sicin. The Lambe.

Men. I, to devour him, as the hungry Plebeians would the Noble Martius.

Bru. He's a Lambe indeed, that baes like a Beare.

Men. He's a Beare indeed, that lives like a Lambe. You two are old men, tell me one thing that I ſhall aske you.

Both. Well ſir.

Men. In what enormity is Martius poore in, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He's poore in no one fault, but ſtor'd withall.

Sicin. Eſpecially in Pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boaſt.

Men. This is ſtrange now: Doe you two know, how you are cenſured here in the City, I meane of us a'th right hand File, doe you?

Both. Why? how are we cenſur'd?

Men. Becauſe you talke of Pride now, will you not be angry?

Both. Well, well ſir, well.

Men. Why 'tis no great matter; for a very little theefe of Occaſion, will rob you of a great deale of Patience: Give your diſpoſitions the reines, and be angry at your pleaſures (at the leaſt) if you take it as a pleaſure to you, in being ſo; you blame Martius for being proud.

Brut. We doe it not alone, ſir.

Men. I know you can doe very little alone, for your helpes are many, or elſe your actions would grow wondrous ſingle: your abilities are too Infant-like, for doing much alone. You talke of Pride: Oh, that you could turne your eyes toward the Napes of your neckes, and make but an interiour ſurvey of your good ſelves. Oh that you could!

Both. What then ſir?

Men. Why then you ſhould diſcover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, teſty Magiſtrates (alias Fooles) as any in Rome.

Sicin. Menenius, you are knowne well enough too.

Men. I am knowne to be a humorous Patritian, and one that loves a cup of hot Wine, with not a drop of alaying Tiber in't: Said, to be ſomething imperfect in favouring the firſt complaint, haſty and Tinder-like upon, to triviall motion: One, that converſes more with the Buttocke of the night, then with the forehead of the morning. What I thinke, I utter, and ſpend my malice in my breath. Meeting two ſuch Weales men as you are (I cannot call your Licurguſſes) if the drinke you give me, touch my Palat adverſly, I make a crooked face at it. I can ſay, your Worſhippes have deliver'd the matter well, when I finde the Aſſe in compound, with the Major part of your ſyllables. And though I muſt be content to beare with thoſe, that ſay you are reverend grave, yet they lye deadly, that tell you have good faces; if you ſee this in the Map of my Microcoſme, followes it that I am known well enough too? What harme can your beeſome Conſpectuities gleane out of this Charracter, if I be knowne well enough too?

Bru. Come ſir come, we know you wll enough.

Men. You know neither me, your ſelves, nor any thing: you are ambitious, for poore knaves cappes and legges: you weare out a good wholeſome Forenoone, in hearing a cauſe betweene an Orendge wife, and a Forſet-ſeller, and then rejourne the Controverſie of three-pence to a ſecond day of Audience. When you are hearing a matter betweene party and party, if you chance to bee pinch'd with the Coſſicke: you make faces like Mummers, ſet up the bloody Flagge againſt all Patience, and in roaring for a Chamber-pot, diſmiſſe the Controverſie bleeding, the more intangled by your hearing: All the peace you make in their Cauſe, is calling both the parties Knaves. You are a payre of ſtrange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well underſtood to be a perfecter gyber for the Table, then a neceſſary Bencher in the Capitoll.

Men. Our very Prieſts muſt become Mockers, if they ſhall encounter ſuch ridiculous Subjects as you are, when you ſpeake beſt unto the purpoſe. It is not worth the wagging of your Beards, and your Beards deſerve not ſo honorable a grave, as to ſtuffe a Botchers Cuſhion, or to be intomb'd in an Aſſes Packe-ſaddle; yet you muſt bee ſaying, Martius is proud: who in a cheape eſtimation, is worth all your predeceſſors, ſince Deucalion, though peradventure ſome of the beſt of 'em were hereditary hangmen. God den to your Worſhips, more of your converſation would infect my braine, being the Heardſmen of the Beaſtly Plebeians. I will be bold to take my leave of you.

Brutus, and Sicinius. Aſide.

Enter Volumnia, and Valeria.

How now (my as faire as Noble)Ladyes, and the Moone were ſhe Earthly, no Nobler; whither doe you follow your Eyes ſo faſt?

Volum. Honorable Menenius, my Boy Martius approches: for the love of Iuno let's goe.

Menen. Ha? Martius comming home?

Volum. I, worthy Menenius, and with moſt proſperous approbation.

Menen., Take my Cappe Iupiter, and I thanke thee: hoo, Martius comming home?

2. Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Volum. Looke, here's a Letter from him, the State hath another, his Wife another, and (I thinke) there's one at home for you.

Menen. I will make my very houſe reele to night:
A Letter for me?

Virgil. Yes certaine, there's a Letter for you, I ſaw't.

Menen. A Letter for me? it gives me an Eſtate of ſeven yeeres health; in which time, I will make a Lippe at the Phyſician: The moſt ſoveraigne Preſcription in Galen, is but Emperickqutique; and to this Preſervative, of no better report then a Horſe-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded?

Virgil. Oh no, no, no.

Volum. Oh, he is wounded, I thanke the gods for't.

Menen. So doe I too, if it be not too much: brings a Victorie in his Pocket? the wounds become him.

Volum. On's Browes: Menenius, he comes the third time home with the Oaken Garland.

Menen. Ha's he diſciplin'd Auffidius ſoundly?

Volum. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Auffidius got off.

Menen. And 'twas time for him too, Ile warrant him that: and he had ſtay'd by him, I wold not have beene ſo fiddious'd, for all the Cheſts in Coriolus, and the Gold that's in them. Is the Senate poſſeſt of this?

Volum. Good Ladies let's goe. Yes, yes, yes: The Senate ha's Letters from the Generall, wherein he gives my Sonne the whole Name of the Warre: he hath in this action out-done his former deeds doubly.

Valer. In troth, there's wondrous things ſpoke of him.

Menen. Wondrous: I, I warrant you, and not without his true purchaſing.

Virgil. The gods grant them true.

Volum. True? pow waw.

Mene. True? Ile be ſworne they are true: where is he wounded, God ſave your good Worſhips? Martius is comming home: he ha's more cauſe to be prowd: where is he wounded?

Volum. Ith' Shoulder, and ith' left Arme: there will be large Cicatrices to ſhew the People, when he ſhall ſtand for his place: he received in the repulſe of Tarquin ſeven hurts ith' Body.

Men. One ith' Necke, and two ith' Thigh, there's nine that I know,

Volum. He had, before this laſt Expedition, twenty five Wounds upon him.

Men, Now it's twenty ſeven; every gaſh was an Enemies Grave, Hearke, the Trumpets.

A ſhowt, and Flouriſh.

Volum. Theſe are the Vſhers of Martius:
Before him, he carryes Noyſe;
And behinde him, he leaves Teares:
Death, that darke Spirit, in's nervy Arme doth lye,
Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men dye.

A Sonet. Trumpets ſound.
Enter Cominius the Generall, and Titus Lartius: betweene them Coriolanus, crown'd with an Oaken Garland, with Captaines and Souldiers, and a Herauld.

Hera. Know Rome, that all alone Martius did fight
Within Coriolus Gates: where he hath wonne,
With Fame, a Name to Martius Caius:
Theſe in honor followes Martius Caius, Coriolanus.
Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus.

Sound. Flouriſh.

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus,

Corio. No more of this, it does offend my heart; pray now no more.

Com. Looke, Sir, your Mother.

Corio. Oh! you have, I know, petition'd all the gods for my proſperity. Kneeles.

Volum. Nay, my good Souldier, up:
My gentle Martius, worthy Caius,
And by deed-atchieving Honor newly nam'd,
What is it (Coriolanus) muſt I call thee?
But oh, thy Wife.

Corio. My gracious ſilence, hayle:
Would'ſt thou have laugh'd, had I come Coffin'd home,
That weep'ſt to ſee me triumph? Ah my deare,
Such eyes the Widowes in Coriolus weare,
And Mothers that lacke Sonnes.

Men. Now the gods Crowne thee.

Com. And live you yet? Oh my ſweet Lady, pardon.

Volum. I know not where to turne.
Oh welcome home: and welcome Generall,
And y'are welcome all.

Men. A hundred thouſand Welcomes:
I could weepe, and I could laugh,
I am light, and heavy; welcome:
A Curſe begin at very root on's heart,
That is not glad to ſee thee.
You are three, that Rome ſhould dote on:
Yet by the faith of men, we have
Some old Crab-trees here at home,
That will not be grafted to your Relliſh.
Yet welcome Warriors:
We call a Nettle, but a Nettle;
And the faults of fooles, but folly.

Com. Ever right.

Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Hera. Give way there, and goe on.

Cor. Your Hand, and yours?
Ere in our owne houſe I doe ſhade my head,
The good Patricians muſt be viſited,
From whom I have receiv'd not onely greetings,
But with them, change of honors.

Volum. I have lived,
To ſee inherited my very Wiſhes,
And the Buildings of my Fancy:
Onely there's one thing wanting,
Which (I doubt not) but our Rome
Will caſt upon thee.

Cor. Know, good Mother,
I had rather be their ſervant in my way,
Then ſway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitoll. Flouriſh. Cornets.

Exeunt in State, as before.

Enter Brutus and Sicinius.

Bru. All tongues ſpeake of him, and the bleared ſights
Are ſpectacled to ſee him. Your pratling Nurſe
Into a rapture lets her Baby cry,
While ſhe chats him: the Kitchin Malkin pinnes
Her richeſt Lockram 'bout her reechy necke,
Clambring the Walls to eye him:
Stalls, Bulkes, Windowes, are ſmother'd up,
Leades fill'd, and Ridges hors'd
With variable Complexions; all agreeing
In earneſtneſſe to ſee him: ſeld-ſhowne Flamins
Doe preſſe among the popular Throngs, and puffe
To winne a vulgar ſtation: our veyl'd Dames
Commit the Warre of White and Damaske
In their nicely gawded Cheekes, toth' wanton ſpoyle
Of Phœbus burning Kiſſes: ſuch a poother,
As if that whatſoever God, who leades him,
Were ſlyly crept into his humane powers,
And gave him gracefull poſture.

Sicin. On the ſuddaine, I warrant him Conſull.

Bru. Then our Office may, during his power, goe ſleepe.

Sici. He cannot temp'rately tranſport his honors,
From where he ſhould begin, and end, but will
Loſe thoſe he hath wonne.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sicin. Doubt not,
The Commoners, for whom we ſtand, but they
Vpon their ancient mallice, will forget
With the leaſt cauſe, theſe his new honors,
Which that he will give them, make I as little queſtion,
As he is prowd to doo't.

Bru. I heard him ſweare
Were he to ſtand for Conſull, never would he Appeare i'th' Market place, nor on him put
The Naples Veſture of humility,
Nor ſhewing (as the manner is) his Wounds
Toth' people, begge their ſtinking Breaths.

Sici. 'Tis right.

Bru. It was his word:
Oh he would miſſe it, rather then carry it,
But by the ſuite of the Gentry to him,
And the deſire of the Nobles.

Sici. I wiſh no better, then have him hold that purpoſe, and to put it in execution.

Bru. 'Tis moſt like he will.

Sici. It ſhall be to him then, as our good wills; a ſure deſtruction.

Bru. So it muſt fall out
To him, or our Authorities, for an end.
We muſt ſuggeſt the People, in what hatred
He ſtill hath held them: that to's power he would
Have made them Mules, ſilenc'd their Pleaders,
And diſproportioned their Freedomes; holding them,
In humane Action, and Capacity,
Of no more Soule, nor fitneſſe for the world,
Then Cammels in their Warre, who have their Provand
Onely for bearing Burthens, and ſore blowes
For ſinking under them.

Sici. This (as you ſay) ſuggeſted,
At ſome time, when his ſoaring inſolence
Shall teach the People, which time ſhall not want,
If he be put upon't, and that's as eaſie,
As to ſet Dogges on Sheepe, will be his fire
To kindle their dry Stubble: and their Blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Bru. What's the matter?

Meſſ. You are ſent for to the Capitall:
'Tis thought, that Martius ſhall be Conſuil:
I have ſeene the dumbe men throng to ſee him,
And the blind to heare him ſpeak: Matrons flong Gloves,
Ladies and Maids their Scarffes, and Handkerchers,
Vpon him as he paſs'd: the Nobles bended
As to Ioves Statue, and the Commons made
A Shower, and Thunder, with their Caps, and Showts:
I never ſaw the like.

Bru. Let's to the Capitoll,
And carry with us eares and eyes forth' time,
But hearts for the event.

Sici. Have with you. Exeunt.

Enter two Officers, to lay Cuſhions, as it were,
in the Capitall.

1. Off. Come, come, they are almoſt here: how many ſtand for Conſulſhips?

2. Off. Three, they ſay: but 'tis thought of every one Ccriolanus will carry it.

1. Off. That's a brave fellow: but he's vengeance prowd, and loves not the common people.

2. Off. 'Faith, there hath beene many great men that, have flatter'd the people, who ne're loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: ſo that if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground. Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love, or hate him, manifeſts the true knowledge he ha's in their diſpoſition, and out of his Noble careleſneſſe lets them plainely ſee't.

1. Off. If he did not care whether he had their love, or no, he waved indifferently, 'twixt doing them neither good, nor harme: but he ſeekes their hate with greater devotion, then they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone, that may fully diſcover him their oppoſite. Now to ſeeme to affect the mallice and diſpleaſure of the People, is as bad, as that which he diſlikes, to flatter them for their love.

2. Off. He hath deſerved worthily of his Countrey, and his aſcent is not by ſuch eaſie degrees as thoſe, who having beene ſupple and courteous to the People, Bonnetted, without any further deed, to have them at all into their eſtimation, and report: but he hath ſo planted his honors in their Eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their Tongues to be ſilent, and not confeſſe ſo much, were a kinde of ingratefull injury: to report otherwiſe, were a Mallice, that giving it ſelfe the Lye, would plucke reproofe and rebuke from every Eare that heard it.

1. Off. No more of him, he's a worthy man: make way, they are comming.

A Sonnet. Enter the Patricians, and the Tribunes of the People, Lictors before them; Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius the Conſull: Sicinius and Brutus take their places by themſelves: Coriolanus ſtands.

Men. Having determin'd of the Volces,
And to ſend for Titus Lartius: it remaines,
As the maine Point of this our after-meeting,

To gratifie his Noble ſervice; that hath
Thus ſtood for his Country. Therefor pleaſe you;
Moſt reverend and grave Elders, to deſire
The preſent Conſull, and laſt Generall,
In onr well-found Succeſſes, to report
A little of that worthy Worke, perform'd
By Martius Caius Coriolanus : whom
We met here, both to thanke, and to remember,
With honors like himſelfe.

1. Sen. Speake, good Cominius :
Leave nothing out for length, and make us thinke
Rather our ſtates defective for requitall,
Then we to ſtretch it out. Maſters a'th'People,
We doe requeſt your kindeſt eare : and after
Your loving motion toward the common Body,
To yeeld what paſſes here.

Sicin, We are convented upon a pleaſing Treaty, and have hearts inclinable to honor and advance the Theame of our Aſſembly.

Bru. Which the rather we ſhall be bleſt to doe, if he remember a kinder value of the People, then he hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men, That's off, that's off : I would you rather had been ſilent : Pleaſe you to heare Cominius ſpeake?

Bru. Moſt willingly : but yet my Caution was more pertinent then the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your People, bnt tye him not to be their Bedfellow : Worthy Cominius ſpeake.

Coriolanus riſes, and offers to goe away.

Nay, keepe your place.

Senat. Sir Coriolanus : uever ſhame to heare
What you have Nobly done.

Corio. Your honors pardon :
I had rather have my Wounds to heale againe,
Then heare ſay how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope my words dis-bench'd you not?

Corio. No Sir : yes oft,
When blowes have made me ſtay, I fled from words.
You ſooth'd not, therefore hurt not : but your people,
I love them as they weigh———

Men. Pray now ſit downe.

Corio. I had rather have one ſcratch my Head i'th'Sun,
When the Alarum were ſtruck, then idly ſit
To heare my Nothings monſter'd. Exit Coriolanus.

Men. Maſters of the People,
Your multiplying Spawne, how can he flatter?
That's thouſand to one good one, when you now ſee
He had rather venture all his Limbes for honor,
Then on ones Eares to heare it. Proceed Cominius.

Com. I ſhall lacke voyce : the deeds of Coriolanus
Sould not be utter'd feebly : it is held,
That Valour is the chiefeſt Vertue, And
Moſt dignifies the haver : if it be,
The man I ſpeake of, cannot in the World
Be ſingly counter-poys'd. At ſixteene yeeres,
When Tarquin made a Head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the marke of others : our then Dictator,
Whom with all praiſe I point at, ſaw him fight,
When with his Amazonian Shinne he drove
The brizled Lippes before him : he beſtrid
An o're-preſt Roman, and i'th' Conſuls view
Slew three Oppoſers : Tarquins ſelfe he met,
And ſtrucke him on his Knee : in that dayes feates,
When he might act the Woman in the Scene,
He prov'd beſt man i'th'field, and for his meed
Was Brow-bound with the Oake. His Pupil-age
Man-entred thus, he wated like a Sea,
And in the brunt of ſeventeene Battailes ſince,
He lurcht all Swords o'th Garland : for this laſt,
Before, and in Coriolus, let me ſay
I cannot ſpeake him home : he ſtopt the flyers;
And by his rare example made the Coward
Turne terror into ſport : as Waves before
A Veſſell under ſayle, ſo men obey'd,
And fell below his Stem : his Sword (Deaths ſtampe)
Where it did marke, it tooke from face to foot :
He was a thing of Blood, whoſe every motion
Was trim'd with dying Cryes : alone he entred
The mortall Gate o'th'City, which he painted
With ſhunleſſe defamy : aydeleſſe came off.
And with a ſudden re-inforcement ſtrucke
Cariolus like a Planet : now all's this,
When by and by the dinne of Warre gan pierce
His ready ſence : then ſtraight his doubled ſpirit
Requickned what in fleſh was fatigate,
And to the Battaile came he, where he did
Runne recking o're the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetuall ſpoyle; and till we call'd
Both field and Citty ours, he never ſtood
To eaſe his breſt with painting.

Men. Worthy man.

Senat. Hee cannot but with meaſure fit the honors which we deviſe him.

Com. Our ſpoyles he kickt at,
And look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common Mucke o'th World : he covets leſſe
Then Miſery it ſelfe would give, rewards his deeds
With doing them, and is content
To ſpend the time, to end it.

Men. He's righe Noble, let him be call'd for:

Senat. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appeare.

Enter Coriolanus.

Men. The Senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd to make thee Conſull.

Corio. I doe owe them ſtill my life, and Services.

Men. It then remaines, that you doe ſpeake to the People.

Corio. I doe beſeech you,
Let me o're-leape that cuſtome : for I cannot
Put on the Gowne, ſtand naked, and entreat them
For my Wounds ſake, to give their ſufferage :
Pleaſe you that I may paſſe this doing.

Sicin. Sir, the People muſt have their Voyces,
Neither will they bate one jot of Ceremony.

Men, Put them not too't :
Pray you goe fit you to the Cuſtome,
And take to you, as your Predeceſſors have,
Your honor with your forme.

Corio. It is a part that I ſhall bluſh in acting,
And might well be taken from the People.

Bru. Marke you that.

Corio. To brag unto them, thus I did, and thus
Shew them th'unaking Skarres, which I ſhould hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hyre
Of their breath onely.

Men. Doe not ſtand upon't :
We recommend to you Tridunes of the People
Our purpoſe to them, and to our Noble Conſull
Wiſh we all Ioy, and honor

Senat. To Coriolanus come all joy and honor:

Flouriſh Cornets.

Then Exeunt. Manet Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. You ſee how he intends to uſe the people.

Sicin. May they perceive's intent: he will require them
As if he did contemne what he requeſted,
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come, we'll informe them
Of our proceedings heere on th'Market place,
I know they doe attend us.

Enter ſeven or eight Citizens.

1. Cit. Once if he doe require our voyces, we ought not to deny him,

2. Cit. We may Sir if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in our ſelves to doe it, but it is a power that we have no power to doe: For, if he ſhew us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into thoſe wounds, and ſpeake for them: So if he tell us his Noble deeds, we muſt alſo tell him our noble acceptance of them.. Ingratitude is monſtrus, and for the multitude to be ingratefull, were to make a Monſter of the multitude; of the which, we being members, ſhould bring our ſelves to be monſtrous members,

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of a little helpe will ſerve: for once we ſtood up about the Corne, he himſelfe ſtucke not to call us the many-headed Multitude.

3 Cit. We have beene call'd ſo of many, not that our heads are ſome browne, ſome blacke, ſome Abram, ſome bald; but that our wits are ſo diverſly Coulord; and truely I thinke, if all our wits were to iſſue out of one Scull, they would ſlye Eaſt, Weſt, North, South, and their conſent of one direct way, ſhould be at once to all the points a'th Compaſſe.

2 Cit. Thinke you ſo? Which way doe you judge my wit would flye.

3 Cit. Nay your wit will not ſo ſoone out as another mans will, 'tis ſtrongly wedg'd up in a blockehead: but if it were at liberty, 'twould ſure Southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To looſe it ſelfe in a Fogge, where being three parts melted away with rotten Dewes, the forth would returne for Conſcience ſake, to helpe to get thee a Wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your trickes, you may, you may.

3 Cit. Are you all reſolv'd to give your voyces? But thats no matter, the greater part carries it, I ſay. If he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus in a gowne of Humility, with Menenius.

Heere he comes, and in the Gowne of humility, marke his behaviour: we are not to ſtay al together, but to come by him where he ſtands, by ones, by twoes, by & threes. He's to make his requeſts by particulars, wherein every one of us ha's a ſingle Honor, in giving him our owne voyces with our owne tongues, therefore follow me, and Ile direct you how you ſhall goe by him.

All. Content, content.

Men. Oh Sir, you are not right; have you not knowne
The worthieſt men have don't?

Corio. What muſt I ſay, I pray Sir?
Plague upon't, I cannot bring
My tongue to ſuch a pace. Looke Sir, my wounds,
I got them in my Countries Service, when
Some certaine of your Brethren roar'd, and ranne
From th'noiſe of our owne Drummes.

Men. Oh me the gods, you muſt not ſpeake of that,
You muſt deſire them to thinke upon you,

Corio. Thinke upon me? Hang 'em,
I would they would forget me, like the Vertues
Which our Divines loſe by em.

Men. You'll marre all,
Ile leave you: Pray you ſpeake to em, I pray you
In wholſome manner. Exit.

Enter three of the Citizens.

Corio. Bid them waſh their Faces,
And keepe their teeth cleane: So heere comes a brace,
You know the cauſe (Sir) of my ſtanding heere.

3 Cit. We do Sir, tell us what hath brought you too't.

Corio. Mine owne deſert.

2. Cit. Your owne deſert.

Corio. I, no mine owne deſire.

3 Cit. How not your owne deſire?

Corio. No Sir 'twas never my deſire yet to trouble the poore with begging.

3 Cit. You muſt thinke if we give you any thing, we hope to gaine by you.

Corio. Well then I pray, your price a'th Conſulſhip.

1 Cit. The price is, to aske it kindly,

Corio. Kindly ſir, I pray let me ha't: I have wounds to ſhew you, which ſhall be yours in private: your good voyce Sir, what ſay you?

2 Cit. You ſhall ha't worthy Sir.

Corio. A match Sir, theres in all two worthy voyces begg'd: I have your Almes, Adieu.

3 Cit. But this is ſomething odde.

2 Cit. And twere to give againe: but tis no matter.

Exeunt. Enter two other Citizens.

Corio. Pray you now, if it may ſtand with the tune of your voyces, that I may be Conſull, I have heere the Cuſtomary Gowne.

1. You have deſerved Nobly of your Country, and you have not deſerved Nobly.

Corio. Your Ænigma.

1. You have beene a ſcourge to her enemies, you have bin a Rod to her Friends, you have not indeed loved the Common people.

Corio. You ſhould account me the more Vertuous, that I have not bin common in my Love, I will ſir flatter my ſworne Brother the people to earne a deerer eſtimation of them, 'tis a condition they account gentle: & ſince the wiſedome of their choyce, is rather to have my hat, then my heart, I will practice the inſinuating nod, and be off to them moſt counterfetly, that is ſir, I will counterfet the bewichment of ſome popular man, and give it bountifull to the deſires: Therefore beſeech you, I may be Conſull.

2 We hope to find you our friend: and therefore give you our voyces heartily.

1 You have received many wounds for your Countrey.

Corio. I will not Seale your knowledge with ſhewing them. I will make much of your voyces, and ſo trouble you no farther.

Both. The gods give you joy Sir heartily.

Corio. Moſt ſweet Voyces:
Better it is to dye, better to ſterve,
Then crave the hire, which firſt we doe deſerve.
Why in this Woolviſh gowne ſhould I ſtand heere,
To begge of Hob and Dicke, that does appeere

Their needleſſe Vouches: Cuſtome calls me too't.
What Cuſtome wills in all things, ſhould we doo't?
The Duſt on antique Time would lye unſwept,
And mountainous Error be too highly heapt,
For Truth to o're-peere. Rather then foole it ſo,
Let the high Office and the Honor goe
To one that would doe thus. I am halfe through,
The one part ſuffered, the other will I doe.

Enter three Citizens more.

Here come moe Voyces.
Your Voyces? for your Voyces I have fought,
Watcht for your Voyces: for your Voyces, beare
Of Wounds, two dozen odde: Battailes thrice ſix
I have ſeene, and heard of: for your voyces,
Have done many things, ſome leſſe, ſome more:
Your Voyces? indeed I would be Conſull.

1 Cit. He ha's done Nobly, and cannot goe without any honeſt mans Voyce.

2 Cit. Therefore let him be Conſull: the Gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people.

All. Amen, Amen. God ſave thee, Noble Conſull.

Corio. Worthy Voyces.

Enter Menenius, with Brutus and Sicinius.

Men. You have ſtood your Limitation:
And the Tribunes endue you with the Peoples Voyce,
Remaines, that in th'Officiall Markes inveſted,
You anon doe meet the Senate.

Corio. Is this done?

Sici. The Cuſtome of Requeſt you have diſcharg'd:
The People doe admit you and are ſummon'd
To meet anon, upon your approbation.

Corio. Where? at the Senate-houſe?

Sici. There, Coriolanus.

Corio. May I change theſe Garments?

Sicin. You may Sir.

Cori. That Ile ſtraight do: and knowing my ſelfe againe
Repayre toth'Senate-houſe.

Men. Ile keepe you company. Will you along?

Bru. We ſtay here for the People.

Sicin. Fare you well. Exeunt Coriol. and Men.
He ha's it now: and by his Lookes, me thinkes,
'Tis warme at's heart.

Bru. With a proud heart he wore his humble Weeds:
Will you diſmiſſe the People?

Enter the Plebeians.

Sici. How now, my Maſters, have you choſe this man?

1 Cit. He ha's our Voyces, Sir.

Bru. We pray the Gods, he may deſerve your loves.

2. Cit. Amen, Sir: to my poore unworthy notice,
He mock'd us, when he begg'd our Voyces.

3. Cit. Certainely, he flowted us downe-right.

1. Cit. No, 'tis his kind of ſpeech, he did not mocke us.

2. Cit. Not one amongſt us, ſave your ſelfe, but ſayes.
He us'd us ſcornefully: he ſhould have ſhew'd us
His Markes of Merit, Wounds receiv'd for's Countrey.

Sicin. Why ſo he did, I am ſure.

All. No, no; no man ſaw 'em.

3. Cit. He ſaid he had Wounds,
Which he could ſhew in private:
And with his Hat, thus waving it in ſcorne,
I would be Conſull, ſayes he: aged Cuſtome,
But by your Voyces, will not ſo permit me.
Your Voyces therefore: when we granted that,
Here was, I thanke you for your Voyces, thanke you
Your moſt ſweet Voyces: now you have left your Voyces
I have no further with you. Was not this mockery?

Sicin. Why either were you ignorant to ſee't?
Or ſeeing it, of ſuch Childiſh friendlineſſe,
To yeeld your Voyces?

Bru. Could you not have told him,
As you were leſſon'd: When he had no Power,
But was a petty ſervant to the State,
He was your Enemy, ever ſpake againſt
Your Liberties, and the Charters that you beare
I'th' Body of the Weale: and now arriving
A place of Potency, and ſway o'th' State
If he ſhould ſtill malignantly remaine
Faſt Foe toth' Plebeij, your Voyces might
Be Curſes to your ſelves. You ſhould have ſaid,
That as his worthy deeds did clayme no leſſe
Then what he ſtood for: ſo his gracious nature
Would thinke upon you, for your Voyces, and Tranſlate his Mallice towards you, into Love,
Standing your friendly Lord.

Sicin. Thus to have ſaid,
As you were fore-adviſ'd, had toucht his Spirit,
And try'd his inclination: from him pluckt,
Either his gracious Promiſe, which you might
As cauſe had call'd you up, have held him to;
Or elſe it would have gall'd his ſurly nature;
Which eaſily endures not Article,
Tying him to ought, ſo putting him to Rage,
You ſhould have ta'ne th'advantage of his Choller,
And paſs'd him unelected.

Bru. Did you perceive,
He did ſollicite you in free Contempt.
When he did need your Loves: and doe you thinke,
That his Contempt ſhall not be bruſing to you,
When he hath power to cruſh? Why, had your Bodyes
No heart among you? Or had you Tongues, to cry
Againſt the Rectorſhip of judgement?

Sicin. Have you, ere now, deny'd the asker:
And now againe, of him that did not aske, but mocke,
Beſtow your ſu'd-for Tongues?

3. Cit. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2. Cit. And will deny him:
Ile have five hundred Voyces of that ſound,

1. Cit. I twice five hundred, & their friends, to piece 'em

Bru. Get you hence inſtantly, and tell thoſe friends,
They have choſe a Conſull, that will from them take
Their Liberties, make them of no more Voyce
Then Dogges, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to doe ſo.

Sicin. Let them aſſemble: and on a ſafer jugement,
All revoke your ignorant election: Enforce his Pride,
And his old Hate unto you: beſides, forget not
With what Contempt he wore the humble Weed,
How in his Suit he ſcorn'd you: but your Loves,
Thinking upon his Services, tooke from you
Th'apprehenſion of his preſent portance,
Which moſt gibingly, ungravely, he did faſhion
After the inveterate Hate he beares you.

Bru. Lay a fault on us, your Tribunes,
That we labour'd (no impediment betweene)
But that you muſt caſt your Election on him.

Sici. Say you choſe him, more after our commandment,
Then as guided by your owne true affections, and that
Your minds pre-occupi'd with what you rather muſt do
Then what you ſhould made you againſt the graine
To Voyce him Conſull. Lay the fault on us.

Bru. I, ſpare us not: Say, we read Lectures to you,
How youngly he began to ſerve his Country,
How long continued, and what ſtocke he ſprings of,
The Noble houſe o'th'Martians: from whence came
That Ancus Martius, Numaes Daughters Sonne:
Who after great Hoſtilius here was King,
Of the ſame houſe Publius and Quintus were,
That our beſt Water, brought by Conduits hither,
And Nobly nam'd, ſo twice being Cenſor,
Was his great Anceſtor.

Sici. One thus deſcended,
That hath beſide well in his perſon wrought,
To be ſet high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances: but you have found,
Skaling his preſent, bearing with his paſt,
That he's your fixed enemy; and revoke
Your ſuddaine approbation.

Bru. Say you ne're had don't,
(Harpe on that ſtill) but by our putting on:
And preſently, when you have drawne your number,
Repaire toth'Capitoll,

All We will ſo: almoſt all repent in their election.

Exeunt Plebeians.

Bru. Let them goe on:
This Mutiny were better put in hazard,
Then ſtay paſt doubt, for greater:
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refuſall, both obſerve and anſwer
The vantage of his anger.

Sicin. Toth'Capitoll, come:
We will be there before the ſtreame o'th'People:
And this ſhall ſeeme, as partly 'tis, their owne,
Which we have goaded on-ward. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, all the Gentry, Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators.

Corio. Tullus Auffidius then had made new head.

Larti. He had my Lord, and that it was which caus'd
Our ſwifter Compoſition.

Corio. So then the Volces ſtand but as at firſt,
Ready when time ſhall prompt them, to make roade
Vpon's againe.

Com. They are worne (Lord Conſull) ſo,
That we ſhall hardly in our ages ſee
Their Banners wave againe.

Corio. Saw you Auffidius?

Larti. On ſafegard he came to me, and did curſe
Againſt the Volces, for they had ſo vildly
Yeelded the Towne: he is retyred to Antium.

Corio. Spoke he of me?

Larti. He did, my Lord.

Corio. How? what?

Larti. How often he had met you Sword to Sword:
That of all things upon the Earth, he hated
Your perſon moſt: That he would pawne his fortunes
To hopeleſſe reſtitution, ſo he might Be call'd your Vanquiſher.

Corio. At Antium lives he?

Larti. At Antium.

Corio. I wiſh I had a cauſe to ſeeke him there,
To oppoſe his hatred fully. Welcome home.

Enter Sicinius, and Brutus.

Behold, theſe are the Tribunes of the People,
The Tongues o'th'Common Mouth, I doe deſpiſe them:
For they doe pranke them in Authority,
Againſt all Noble ſufferance.

Sicin. Paſſe no further.

Corio. Hah? what is that?

Bru. It will be dangerous to goe on-No further.

Corio. What makes this change?

Men. The matter?

Com. Hath he not paſs'd the Noble, and the Commons?

Bru. Cominius, no.

Corio. Have I had Childrens Voyces?

Senat. Tribunes give way, he ſhall toth'Market place,

Bru. The People are incens'd againſt him.

Sicin. Stop, or all will fall in broyle.

Corio. Are theſe your heard?
Muſt theſe have Voyces, that can yeeld them now,
And ſtraight diſclaim their tongs? what are your Offices
You being their Mouthes, why rule you not their Teeth?
Have you not ſet them on?

Men. Be calme, be calme.

Corio It is a purpos'd thing, and growes by Plot,
To curbe the will of the Nobility:
Suffer't, and live with ſuch as cannot rule,
Nor ever will be ruled.

Bru. Call't not a Plot:
The People cry you mockt them: and of late,
When Corne was given them gratis, you repin'd,
Scandal'd the Suppliants: for the People, call'd them
Time-pleaſers, flatterers, foes to Nobleneſſe.

Corio. Why this was knowne before.

Bru. Not to them all.

Corio. Have you informd them ſithence?

Bru. How? I informe them?

Com. You are like to doe ſuch buſineſſe.

Bru. Not unlike each way to better yours.

Corio. Why then ſhould I be Conſull? by yond Clouds
Let me deſerve ſo ill as you, and make me
Your fellow tribune.

Sicin. You ſhew too much of that,
For which the People ſtirre: if you will paſſe
To where you are bound, you muſt enquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler ſpirit,
Or never be ſo Noble as a Conſull,
Nor yoake with him for Tribune.

Men. Lets be calme.

Com. The People are abus'd: ſet on, this paltring
Becomes not Rome: nor ha's Coriolanus
Deſerv'd this ſo diſhonourd Rub, layd falſely
I'th plaine Way of his Merit.

Corio. Tell me of Corne! this was my ſpeech,
And I will ſpeak't againe.

Men. Not now, not now.

Senat. Not in this heat, Sir, now.

Corio. Now as I live, I will.
My Nobler friends, I crave their pardons:
For the mutable ranke-ſented Meyny,
Let them regard me, as I doe not flatter,
And therein behold themſelves: I ſay againe,
In ſoothing them, we nouriſh 'gainſt our Senate
The Cockle of Rebellion, Inſolence, Sedition,
Which we our ſelves have plowed for, ſowd, & ſcatterd,
By mingling them with us, the honor'd Number,
Who lacke not Vertue, no, nor Power, but that
Which they have given to Beggers.

Men. Well, no more.

Senat. No more words, we beſeech you.

Corio. How? no more?

As for my Country, I have ſhed my blood,
Not fearing outward force: So ſhall my Lungs
Coine words till their decay, againſt thoſe Meazels
Which we diſdaine ſhould Tetter us, yet ſought
The very way to catch them.
Bru. You ſpeake a'th'people, as if you were a god,
To puniſh; Not a man of of their infirmity.
Sicin. 'Twere well we let the people know't.
Men. What, what? his Choller?
Cor. Choller? Were I as patient as the midnight ſleep
By Iove, twould be my minde.
Sicin. It is a minde that ſhall remaine a poiſon
Where it is: not poyſon any further.
Corio. Shall remaine?
Heare you this Triton of the Minnowes? Marke you
His abſolute Shall?
Com. 'Twas from the Cannon.
Corio. Shall? O God! but moſt unwiſe Patricians: why
You grave, but wreakleſſe Senators, have you thus
Given Hidra heere to chooſe an Officer,
That wirh his peremptory Shall, being but
The horne, and noiſe o'th'Monſters, wants not ſpirit
To ſay, he'll turne your Current in a ditch,
And make your Channell his? if he have power,
Then vale your ignorance: if none, awake
Your dangerous Lenity: if you are Learn'd,
Be not as common Fooles; if you are not,
Let them have Cuſhions by you. You are Plebeians,
If they be Senators: and they are no leſſe,
When both your voyces blended, the great'ſt taſte
Moſt pallates theirs. They chooſe their Magiſtrate,
And ſuch a one as he, who puts his Shall,
His popular Shall, againſt a graver Bench
Then ever frown'd in Greece. By Iove himſelfe,
It makes the Conſuls baſe; and my ſoule akes
To know, when two Authorities are up,
Neither Supreame; how ſoone confuſion
May enter 'twixt the gap of Both, and take
The one by th'other.
Com. Well, on to'th'Market place.
Com. Who ever gave that Counſell, to give forth
The Corne a'th'Store-houſe gratis, as twas us'd
Sometime in Greece.
Men. Well, well, no more of that.
Cor. Though there the people had more abſolute powre
I ſay the noriſht diſobedience: fed, the ruin of the State.
Bru. Why ſhall the people give
One that ſpeakes thus, their voyce?
Corio. Ile give my Reaſons,
More worthie then their Voyces. They know the Corne
Was not our recompence, reſting well aſſur'd
They ne're did ſervice for't; being preſt to'th'Warre,
Even when the Navell of the State was touch'd,
They would not thred the Gates: This kind of Service
Did not deſerve Corne gratis. Being i'th'Warre,
Thare Mutinies and Revolts, wherein they ſhew'd
Moſt Valour ſpoke not for them. Th'Accuſation
Which they have often made againſt the Senate,
All cauſe unborne, could never be the Native
Of our ſo franke Donation. Well, what then?
How ſhall this Boſome-multiplied, digeſt
The Senates Courteſie? Let deeds expreſſe
What's like to be their words. We did requeſt it,
We are the greater pole, and in true feare
They gave us our demands. Thus we debaſe
The Nature of our Seats, and make the Rabble
Call our Cares, Feares; which will in time
Breake ope the Lockes a'th'Senate, and bring in
The Crowes to pecke the Eagles.
Men. Come enough.
Bru. Enough, with over meaſure.
Corio. No, take more.
What may be ſworne by, both Divine and humane,
Seale what I end withall. This double worſhip,
Whereon part do's diſdaine with cauſe, the other
Inſult without all reaſon: where Gentry, Title, wiſedome
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of generall ignorance, it muſt omit:
Reall Neceſſities, and give way the while
To unſtable Slightneſſe: Purpoſe ſo barr'd, it followes,
Nothing is done to purpoſe. Therefore beſeech you,
You that will be leſſe fearefull, then diſcreet,
That love the Fundamentall part of State
More then you doubt the change of't: That preferre
A Noble life, before a Long, and Wiſh,
To jumpe a Body with a dangerous Phyſicke,
That's ſure of death without it: at once plucke out
The Multitudinous Tongue, let them not licke
The ſweet which is their poyſon. Your diſhonor
Mangles true judgement, and bereaves the State
Of that Integrity which ſhould becom't:
Not having the power to doe the good it would
For th'ill which doth controul't.
Bru. Has ſaid enough.
Sicin. Ha's ſpoken like a Traitor, and ſhall anſwer
As Traitors doe.
Corio. Thou wretch, deſpight ore-whelme thee:
What ſhould the people doe with theſe bald Tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience failes
To'th'greater Bench, in a Rebellion:
When what's not meet, but what muſt be, was Law,
Then were they choſen: in a better houre,
Let what is meet, be ſaid it muſt be meet,
And throw their power i'th'duſt.
Bru. Manifeſt treaſon.
Sicin. This a Conſull? No.

Enter an Ædile.

Bru. The Ediles hoe; Let him be apprehended:
Sicin. Goe call the people, in whoſe name my Selfe
Attach thee as a Traitorous Innovator:
A Foe to'th'publike Weale. Obey I charge thee,
And follow to thine anſwer.
Corio. Hence old Goat.
All. We'll Surety him.
Com. Ag'd ſir, hands off.
Corio. Hence rotten thing, or I ſhall ſhake thy bones
Out of thy Garments.
Sicin: Helpe ye Citizens.

Enter a rabble of Plebians with the Ædiles.

Men. On both ſides more reſpect.
Sicin. Heere's he, that would take from you all your power.
Bru. Seize him Ædiles.
All. Downe with him, downe with him.
2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons:

They all buſtle about Coriolanus.

Tribunes, Patricians, Citizens: what hoe:
Sicinius, Brutus, Coriolanus, Citizens.
All. Peace, peace, peace, ſtay, hold, peace.
Men. What is about to be? I am out of Breath,
Confuſions ne're, I cannot ſpeake. You Tribunes
To'th'people: Coriolanus, patience: ſpeake good Sicinius.

Sicin. Heare me, People peace.
All. Let's heare our Tribune: peace, ſpeake, ſpeake, ſpeake.
Sici. You are at point to loſe your Liberties:
Martius would have all from you; Martius,
Whom late you have nam'd for Conſull.
Men. Fye, fie, fie, this is the way to kindle, not to quench.
Sena. To unbuild the City, and to lay all flat.
Sici. What is the Citty, but the People?
All. True, the People are the City.
Bru. By the conſent of all, we were eſtabliſh'd the Peoples Magiſtrates.
All. You ſo remaine.
Men. And ſo are like to doe.
Com. That is the way to lay the Citty flat,
To bring the Roofe to the Foundation,
And bury all, which yet diſtinctly raunges
In heapes, and piles of Ruine.
Sicin. This deſerves death.
Bru. Or let us ſtand to our Authority,
Or let us loſe it: we doe here pronounce,
Vpon the part o'th' People, in whoſe power
We were elected theirs, Martius is worthy
Of preſent Death.
Sicin. Therefore lay hold of him:
Beare him toth' Rocke Tarpeian, and from thence
Iuto deſtruction caſt him.
Bru. Ædiles ſeize him.
All Ple. Yeeld Martius, yeeld.
Men. Heare me one word, 'beſeech you Tribunes, heare me but a word.
Ædiles. Peace, peace.
Men. Be that you ſeeme, truly your Countries friend,
And temp'rately proceed to what you would
Thus violently redreſſe.
Bru. Sir, thoſe cold wayes,
That ſeeme like prudent helpes, are very poyſonous,
Where the Diſeaſe is violent. Lay hands upon him,
And beare him to the Rocke. Corio. drawes his Sword.
Corio. No, Ile dye here:
There's ſome among you have beheld me fighting,
Come try upon your ſelves, what you have ſeene me.
Men. Downe with that Sword, Tribunes withdraw a while.
Bru. Lay hands upon him.
Men. Helpe Martius, helpe: you that be noble, helpe him young and old.
All. Downe with him, downe with him. Exeunt.
In this Mutiny, the Tribunes, the Ædiles, and the People are beat in.
Men. Goe, get you to our Houſe: be gone, away,
All will be naught elſe.
2. Senat. Get you gone.
Com. Stand faſt, we have as many friends as enemies.
Men. Shall it be put to that?
Sena. The gods forbid:
I prethee noble friend, home to thy houſe,
Leave us to cure this Cauſe.
Men. For tis a Sore upon us.
You cannot Tent your ſelfe. begon, 'beſeech you.
Com. Come Sir, along with us.
Men. I would they were Barbarians, as they are,
Though in Rome litter'd: not Romans, as they are not,
Though calved i'th' Porch o'th' Capitoll:
Be gone, put not your worthy Rage into your Tongue,
One time will owe another.
Com. On faire ground, I could beat forty of them.
Men. I could my ſelfe take up a Brace o'th' beſt of them, yea, the two Tribunes.
Com. But now t's oddes beyond Arithmeticke,
And Manhood is call'd Foolry, when it ſtands
Againſt a falling Fabricke. Will you hence,
Before the Tagge returne? whoſe Rage doth rend
Like interrupted Waters, and o're-beare
What they are us'd to beare.
Men. Pray you be gone:
Ile try whether my old Wit be in requeſt
With thoſe that have but little: this muſt be patcht
With Cloth of any Colour.
Com. Nay, come away. Exeunt Coriolanus and Cominius.
Patri: This man ha's marr'd his fortune.
Men. His nature is too noble for the World:
He would not flatter Neptune for his Trident,
Or Iove, for's power to thunder: his heart's his Mouth:
What his breſt forges, that his tongue muſt vent,
And being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the Name of death. A Noiſe within.
Here's goodly worke.
Patri. I would they were a bed.
Men. I would they were in Tyber.
What the vengeance, could he not ſpeake 'em faire?
Enter Brutus, and Sicinius with the rabble againe.
Sicin. Where is this Viper,
That would depopulate the city, & be every man himſelf.
Men. You worthy Tribunes.
Sicin. He ſhall be throwne downe the Tarpeian rocke
With rigorous hands: he hath reſiſted Law,
And therefore Law ſhall ſcorne him further Triall
Then the ſeverity of the publike Power,
Which he ſo ſets at naught.
1 Cit. He ſhall well know the Noble Tribunes are
The peoples mouths, and we their hands.
All. He ſhall ſure out.
Men. Sir, ſir. Sicin. Peace.
Men. Do nor cry havocke, where you ſhould but hunt
With modeſt warrant.
Sicin. Sir, how com'ſt that you have holpe
To mske this reſcue?
Men. Heare me ſpeake? As I doe know
The Conſuls worthineſſe, ſo can I name his Faults.
Sicin. Conſull? what Conſull?
Men. The Conſull Coriolanus.
Bru. He Conſull.
All. No, no, no, no, no.
Men. If by the Tribunes leave,
And yours good people,
I may be heard, I would crave a word or two,
The which ſhall turne you to no further harme,
Then ſo much loſſe of time.
Sicin. Speake briefely then,
For we are peremptory to diſpatch
This Viporous Traitor: to eject him hence
Were but one danger, and to keepe him heere
Our certaine death: therefore it is decreed,
He dyes to night.
Meu. Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome, whoſe gratitude
Towards her deſerved Children, is enroll'd
In Ioves owne Booke, like an unnaturall Dam
Should now eate up her owne.

Sicin. He's a Diſeaſe that muſt be cut away.
Men. Oh he's a Limbe, that ha's but a Diſeaſe
Mortall, to cut it off: to cure it, eaſie.
What ha's he done to Rome, that's worthy death?
Killing our Enemies, the blood he hath loſt
(Which I dare vouch, is more then that he hath
By many an Ounce) he dropp'd it for his Country:
And what is left, to looſe it by his Countrey,
Were to us all that doo't, and ſuffer it
A brand to th'end a'th World.
Sicin, This is cleane kamme,
Bru. Meerely awry:
When he did loue his Country, it honour'd him.
Men. The ſervice of the foote
Being once gangren'd, is not then reſpected
For what before it was.
Bru. We'll heare no more:
Purſue him to his houſe, and plucke him thence,
Leaſt his infection being of caching nature,
Spread further.
Men. One word more, one word:
This Tiger-footed-rage, when it ſhall find
The harme of unskan'd ſwiftneſſe; will (too late)
Tye Leaden pounds too's heeles. Proceed by Proceſſe,
Leaſt parties (as he is belov'd) breake out,
And ſacke great Rome with Romanes.
Bru. If it were ſo?
Sici. What doe ye talke?
Have we not had a taſte of his Obedience?
Our Ediles ſmot: our ſelves reſiſted come.
Men. Conſider this: He ha's beene bred i'th'Warres
Since a could draw a Sword, and is ill-ſchool'd
In boulted Language: Meale and Bran together
He throwes without diſtinction. Give me leave,
Ile goe to him, aud undertake to bring him in peace,
Where he ſhall anſwer by a lawfull Forme
(In peace) to his utmoſt perill.
1. Sen. Noble Tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other courſe
Will prove too bloudy: and the end of it,
Vnknowne to the beginning.
Sic. Noble Menenius, be you then as the peoples officer:
Maſters, lay downe your Weapons.
Bru. Goe not home.
Sici. Meet on the Market place: we'll attend you there
Where if you bring not Martius, we'll proceede
In our firſt way.
Men. Ile bring him to you.
Let me deſire your company: he muſt come,
Or what is worſt will follow.
Sena. Pray you let's to him. Exeunt Omnes.

Enter Coriolanus with Nobles.

Corio. Let them pull all about mine eares, preſent me
Death on the Wheele, or at wilde Horſes heeles,
Or pile ten hilles on the Tarpeian Rocke,
That the precipitation might downe ſtretch
Below the beame of ſight; yet will I ſtill
Be thus to them.

Enter Volumnia.

Noble. You doe the Nobler.
Corio. I muſe my Mother
Do's not approue me further, who was wont
To call them Wollen Vaſſailes, things created
To buy and ſell with Groats, to ſhew bare heads
In Congregations, to yawne, be ſtill, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance ſtood up
To ſpeake of Peace, or Warre, I talke of you,
Why did you wiſh me milder? Would you have me
Falſe to my Nature? Rather ſay, I play
The man I am.
Volum. Oh ſir, ſir, ſir.
I would have had you put your power well on
Before you had worne it out.
Corio. Let goe.
Vol. You might have beene enough the man you are,
With ſtriving leſſe to be ſo. Leſſer had beene
The things of your diſpoſitions, if
You had not ſhew'd them how ye were diſpos'd
Ere they lack'd power to croſſe you.
Corio. Let them hang.
Volum. I, and burne too.

Enter Menenius with the Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have bin too rough, ſomething too rough: you muſt returne, and mend it.
Sen. There's no remedy,
Vnleſſe by not ſo doing, our good City
Cleave in the midd'ſt, and periſh.
Volum. Pray be counſail'd;
I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a braine, that leads my uſe of Anger
To better vantage.
Meno. Well ſaid, Noble woman:
Before he ſhould thus ſtoope to'th'heart, but that
The violent fit a'th'time craves it as Phyſicke
For the whole State; I would put mine Armour on,
Which I can ſcarſely beare.
Corio. What muſt I doe?
Men. Returne to th'Tribunes.
Corio. Well, what then? what then?
Men. Repent, what you have ſpoke.
Corio. For them, I cannot doe it to the Gods,
Muſt I then doo't to them?
Volum. You are too abſolute,
Though therein you can never be too Noble,
But when extremities ſpeake. I have heard you ſay,
Honor and Policy, like unſever'd friends,
I'th'Warre doe grow together: Grant that, and tell me
In Peace, what each of them by th'other looſe,
That they combine not there?
Corio. Tuſh, tuſh.
Men. A good demand.
Volum. If it be honor in your Warres, to ſeeme
The ſame you are not, which for your beſt ends
You adopt your policy: How is it leſſe or worſe
That it ſhall hold Companionſhip in Peace
With honor, as in Warre; ſince that to both
It ſtands in like requeſt.
Corio. Why force you this?
Volum. Becauſe, that
Now it lyes you on to ſpeake to th'people:
Not by your owne inſtruction, nor by'th'matter
Which your heart prompts you to, but with ſuch words
That are but roated in your Tougue;
Though but Baſtards, and Syllables
Of no allowance, to your boſomes truth.
Now, this no more diſhonors you at all,
Then to take in a Towne with gentle words,
Which elſe would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood,
I would diſſemble with my Nature, where
My fortunes and my Friends at ſtake, requir'd
I ſhould doe ſo in honor. I am in this

Your Wife, your Sonne: Theſe Senators, the Nobles,
And you, will rather ſhew our generall Lowts,
How you can frowne, then ſpend a fawne upon'em,
For the inheritance of their loves, and ſafegard
Of what that want might ruine.
Men. Noble Lady,
Come goe with us, ſpeake faire: you may ſalve ſo,
Not what is dangerous preſent, but the loſſe
Of what is paſt.
Volum. I prethee now, my Sonne,
Goe to them, with this Bonnet in thy hand,
And thus farre having ſtretcht it (here be with them)
Thy Knee buſſing the ſtones: for in ſuch buſineſſe
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th'ignorant
More learned then the eares, waving thy head,
Which often thus correcting thy ſtout heart,
Now humble as the ripeſt Mulberry,
That will not hold the handling: or ſay to them,
Thou art their Souldier, and being bred in broyles
Haſt not the ſoft way, which thou do'ſt confeſſe
Were fit for thee to uſe, as they to clayme,
In asking their good loves, but thou wilt frame
Thy ſelfe (forſooth) hereafter theirs ſo farre,
As thou haſt power and perſon.
Men. This but done,
Even as ſhe ſpeakes, why their hearts were yonrs:
For they have Pardons, being ask'd, as free,
As words to little purpoſe.
Volum. Prethee now,
Goe, and be rul'd: although I know thou hadſt rather
Follow thine Enemy in a fiery Gulfe,
Then flatter him in a Bower, Enter Cominius,
Here is Cominius.
Com. I have beene i'th'Market place; and Sir 'tis fit
You make ſtrong party, or defend your ſelfe
By calmeneſſe, or by abſence: all's in anger.
Men. Onely faire ſpeech.
Com. I thinke 'twill ſerve, if he can thereto frame his ſpirit.
Volum. He muſt and will:
Prethee now ſay you will, and goe about it.
Corio. Muſt I goe ſhew them my unbarb'd Sconce?
Muſt I with my baſe Tongue give to my Noble heart
A Lye, that it muſt beare well? I will doo't:
Yet were there but this ſingle Plot, to looſe
This Mould of Martius, they to duſt ſhould grinde it,
And throw't againſt the Winde. Toth'Market place:
You have put me now to ſuch a part, which never
I ſhall diſcharge toth' Life.
Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.
Volum. I prethee now ſweet Son, as thou haſt ſaid
My praiſes made thee firſt a Souldier: ſo
To have my praiſe for this, performe a part
Thou haſt not done before.
Corio. Well, I muſt doo't:
Away my diſpoſition, and poſſeſſe me
Some Harlots ſpirit: My throat of Warre be turn'd,
Which quier'd with my Drumme into a Pipe,
Small as an Eunuch, or the Virgin voyce
That Babies lull a-ſleepe: The ſmiles of Knaves
Tent in my cheekes, and Schoole-boyes Teares take up
The Glaſſes of my ſight: A Beggars Tongue
Make motion through my Lips, and my Arm'd knees
Who bow'd but in my Stirrop, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an Almes. I will not doo't,
Leaſt I ſurceaſe to honor mine owne truth,
And by my bodies action, teach my Mind
A moſt inherent Baſeneſſe.
Volum. At thy choyce then:
To begge of thee, it is my more diſ-honor,
Then thou of them. Come all to ruine, let
Thy Mother rather feele thy Pride, then feare
Thy dangerous Stoutneſſe: for I mocke at death
With as bigge heart as thou. Doe as thou liſt,
Thy Valiantneſſe was mine, thou ſuck'ſt it from me:
But owne thy Pride thy ſelfe.
Corio. Pray be content:
Mother, I am going to the Market place:
Chide me no more. Ile Mountebanke their Loves,
Cogge their hearts from them, and come home belov'd
Of all the Trades in Rome. Looke, I am going:
Commend me to my Wife, Ile returne Conſull,
Or never truſt to what my Tongue can doe
I'th way of Flattery further.
Volum. Doe your will. Exit Volumnia.
Com. Away, the Tribunes doe attend you: arme your (ſelfe
To anſwer mildely: for they are prepar'd
With Accuſations, as I heare more ſtrong
Then are upon you yet.
Corio. The word is, Mildely. Pray you let us goe,
Let them accuſe me by invention: I
Will anſwere in mine Honor.
Men. I, but mildly.
Corio. Well mildly be it then, Mildly. Exeunt.

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Bru. In this point charge him home, that he affects
Tyrannicall power: if he evade us there,
Inforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the Spoile got on the Antiats
Was ne're diſtributed: What, will he come?

Enter an Edile.

Edile. He's comming.
Bru. How accompanied?
Edil. With old Menenius, and thoſe Senators
That alwayes favour'd him.
Sicin. Haue you a Catalogue
Of all the Voices that we have procur'd, ſet downe by'th (Pole?
Edil. I have: 'tis ready,
Sicin. Have you collected them by Tribes?
Edil. I have: 'tis ready
Sicin. Aſſemble preſently the people hither:
And when they heare me ſay, it ſhall be ſo,
I'th'right and ſtrength a'th' Commons: be it either
For death, for Fine, or Baniſhment, then let them
If I ſay Fine, cry Fine; if Death, cry Death,
Inſiſting on the old prerogative
And power i'th Truth a'th Cauſe.
Edile. I ſhall informe them.
Bru. And when ſuch time they have begun to cry,
Let them not ceaſe, but with a dinne confus'd
Inforce the preſent Execution
Of what we chance to Sentence.
Edil. Verywell.
Sicin. Make them be ſtrong, and ready for this hint
When we ſhall hap to giv't them.
Bru. Goe about it,
Put him to Choller ſtraite, he hath beene us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his worth
Of contradiction. Being once chaft, he cannot
Be rein'd againe to Temperance; then he ſpeakes

What's in his heart, and that is there which lookes
With us to breake his necke.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, and Cominius, with others.

Sicin. Well, heere he comes.
Men. Calmely, I doe beſeech you.
Corio. I, as an Hoſtler, that for th'pooreſt peece
Will beare the Knave by'th Volume:
Th'honor'd goddes
Keepe Rome in ſafty, and the Chaires of juſtice
Supplied with worthy men, plant love amongſt you,
Through our large Temples with the ſhewes of peace
And not our ſtreets with Warre.
1 Sen. A men, Amen.
Mene. A Noble wiſh.

Enter the Edile with the Plebeians.

Sicin. Draw neere ye people.
Edile. Liſt to your Tribunes. Audience;
Peace I ſay.
Corio. Firſt heare me ſpeake.
Both Tri. Well, ſay: Peace hoe.
Crrio. Shall I be charg'd no further then this preſent?
Muſt all determine heere?
Sici. I doe demand,
If you ſubmit you to the peoples voyces,
Allow their Officers, and are content
To ſuffer lawfull Cenſure for ſuch faults
As ſhall be prov'd upon you.
Corio. I am content,
Mene. Loe Citizens, he ſayes he is Content:
The warlike Service he ha's done, conſider; Thinke
Vpon the wounds his body beares, which ſhew
Like Graves i'th holy Church-yard.
Corio. Scratches with Briars, ſcarres to move
Laughter onely.
Men. Conſider further:
That when he ſpeakes not like a Citizen,
You find him like a Souldier: doe not take
His rougher Actions for malicious ſounds:
But as I ſay, ſuch as become a Soldier,
Rather then envy you.
Com. Well, well, no more.
Corio. What is the matter,
That being paſt for Conſull with full voyce:
I am ſo diſhonour'd, that the very houre
You take it off againe?
Sici. Anſwer to us.
Corio. Say then: 'tis true, I ought ſo.
Sici, We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all ſeaſon'd Office, and to winde
Your ſelfe into a power tyrannicall,
For which you are a Traitor to the people.
Corio. How? Traytor?
Mene. Nay temperately: your promiſe.
Corio. The fires i'th'loweſt hell, Fould in the people:
Call me their Traitor, thou injurious Tribune.
Within thine eyes ſate twenty thouſand deaths
In thy hands clutcht: as many Millions in Thy lying tongue, both numbers. I would ſay
Thou lyeſt unto thee, with a voyce as free,
As I doe pray the gods.
Sicin. Marke you this people?
All. To'th'Rocke with him.
Sicin. Peace:
We neede not put new matter to his charge:
What you have ſeene him doe, and heard him ſpeake:
Beating your Officers, curſing your ſelves,
Oppoſing Lawes with ſtroakes, and here defying
Thoſe whoſe great power muſt try him,
Even this ſo criminall, and in ſuch capitall kinde,
Deſerves th'extreameſt death.
Bru. But ſince he hath ſerv'd well for Rome.
Corio. What doe you prate of Service?
Brut. I talke of that, that know it.
Corio. You?
Mene. Is this the promiſe that you made your mother?
Com. Know, I pray you.
Corio. Ile know no further:
Let them pronounce the ſteepe Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, Fleaing, pent to linger
But with a graine a day, I would not buy
Their mercy, at the price of one faire word,
Nor checke my Courage for what they can give,
To have't with ſaying, Good morrow.
Sicin. For that he ha's
(As much as in him lyes) from time to time
Envi'd againſt the people; ſeeking meanes
To plucke away their power: as now at laſt,
Given Hoſtile ſtrokes, and that not in the preſence
Of dreaded juſtice, but on the Miniſters
That doe diſtribute it. In the name a'th'people,
And in the power of us the Tribunes, we (Ev'n from this inſtant) baniſh him our City
In perill of precipitation
From off the Rocke Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates. I'th'peoples name,
I ſay it ſhall be ſo.
All. It ſhall be ſo, it ſhall be ſo: let him away:
He's baniſh'd, and it ſhall be ſo.
Com. Heare me my Maſters, and my common friends.
Sicin. He's ſentenc'd: No more hearing.
Com. Let me ſpeake:
I have beene Conſull, and can ſhew from Rome
Her Enemies markes upon me. I doe loue
My Countries good, with a reſpect more tender,
More holy, and profound, then mine owne life,
My deere Wives eſtimate, her wombes encreaſe,
And treaſure of my Loynes; then if I would Speake that.
Sicin. We know your drift. Speake what?
Bru. There's no more to be ſaid, but he is baniſh'd
As Enemy to the people, and his Countrey.
It ſhall be ſo.
All. It ſhall be ſo, it ſhall be ſo.
Corio. You common cry of Curs, whoſe breath I hate,
As reeke a'th'rotten Fennes: whoſe Loves I prize,
As the dead Carkaſſes of unburied men,
That doe corrupt my Ayre: I baniſh you,
And heere remaine with your uncertainty.
Let every feeble Rumor ſhake your hearts:
Your Enemies, with nodding of their Plumes
Fan you into deſpaire: Have the power ſtill
To baniſh your Defenders, till at length
Your ignorance (which findes not tilll it feeles,
Making but reſervation of your ſelves,
Still your owne Foes) deliver you
As moſt abated Captives, to ſome Nation
That wonne you without blowes, deſpiſing
For you the City. Thus I turne my backe;
There is a world elſewhere.

Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, with Cumalijs.
They all ſhout, and threw up their Caps.

Edile. The peoples Enemy is gone, is gone.
All. Our enemy is baniſh'd, he is gone: Hoo, oo.
Sicin. Go ſee him out at Gates, and follow him
As he hath follow'd you, with all deſpight
Give him deſerv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the City.
All. Come, come, lets ſee him out at the gates, come:
The gods preſerve our Noble Tribunes, come. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Coriolanus, Volumnia, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius with the yong Nobility of Rome.

Corio. Come leave your teares: a brief farwel: the beaſt
With many heads butts me away. Nay Mother,
Where is your ancient Courage? You were us'd
To ſay, Extreamity was the trier of ſpirits,
That common chances, common men could beare,
That when the Sea was calme, all Boates alike
Shew'd Maſterſhip in floating. Fortunes blowes,
When moſt ſtrooke home, being gentle wounded, craves
A Noble cunning. You were us'd to load me
With Precepts that would make invincible
The heart that conn'd them.
Virg. Oh heavens! O heavens!
Corio. Nay, I prythee woman.
Vol. Now the Red Peſtilence ſtrike all Trades in Rome,
And Occupations periſh.
Corio. What, what, what:
I ſhall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay Mother,
Reſume that ſpirit, when you were wont to ſay,
If you had beene the Wife of Hercules,
Six of his Labours youl'd have done, and ſav'd
Your husband ſo much ſweate. Cominius,
Droope not, Adieu: Farewell my Wife, my Mother,
Ile do well yet. Thou old and and true Menenius,
Thy teares are ſalter then a yonger mans,
And venomous to thine eyes. My (ſometime) Generall,
I have ſeene the Sterne, and thou haſt oft beheld
Heart-hardning ſpectacles. Tell theſe ſad women,
'Tis fond to waile inevitable ſtrokes,
As 'tis to laugh at'em. My Mother, you wot well
My hazards ſtill have beene your ſolace, and
Beleev't not lightly, though I goe alone
Like to a lonely Dragon, that his Fenne
Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more then ſeene: your Sonne
Will or exceed the Common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice.
Volum. My firſt ſonne,
Whither will you go? Take good Cominius
With thee a while: Determine on ſome courſe
More then a wilde expoſture, to each chance
That ſtarts i'th' way before thee.
Corio. O the gods!
Com. Ile follow thee a Moneth, deviſe with thee
Where thou ſhalt reſt, that thou may'ſt heare of us,
And we of thee. So if the time thruſt forth
A cauſe for thy Repeale, we ſhall not ſend
O're the vaſt world, to ſeeke a ſingle man,
And looſe advantage, which doth ever coole
Ih' abſence of the needer.
Corio. Fare ye well:
Thou haſt yeares upon thee, and thou art too full
Of the warres ſurfets, to go rove with one
That's yet unbruis'd: bring me but out at gate.
Come my ſweet wife, my deereſt Mother, and
My Friends of Noble touch: when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and ſmile. I pray you come:
While I remaine above the ground, you ſhall
Heare from me ſtill, and never of me ought
But what is like me formerly.
Menen. That's worthily
As any eare can heare. Come, let's not weepe,
If I could ſhake off but one ſeven yeeres
From theſe old armes and legges, by the good gods
Il'd with thee every foot.
Corio. Give me thy hand, come. Exeunt.

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus, with the Edile.

Sicin. Bid them all home, he's gone: aod wee'l no further,
The Nobility are vexed, whom we ſee have ſided
In his behalfe.
Brut. Now we have ſhewne our power,
Let us ſeeme humbler after it is done,
Then when it was a dooing.
Sicin. Bid them home: ſay their great enemy is gone,
And they, ſtand in their ancient ſtrength.
Brut. Diſmiſſe them home. Here comes his Mother.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Menenius.

Sicin. Let's not meet her.
Brut. Why?
Sicin. They ſay ſhee's mad.
Brut. They have tane note of us: keepe on your way.
Volum. Oh y'are well met:
Th' hoorded plague a'th' gods requit your love.
Menen. Peace, peace, be not ſo loud.
Volum. If that I could for weeping, you ſhould heare,
Nay, and you ſhall heare ſome. Will you be gone?
Virg. You ſhall ſtay too: I would I had the power
To ſay ſo to my Husband.
Sicin. Are you mankinde?
Volum. I foole, is that a ſhame, Note but this Foole,
Was not a man my Father? Had'ſt thou Foxſhip
To baniſh him that ſtrooke more blowes for Rome
Then thou haſt ſpoken words.
Sicin. Oh bleſſed Heavens!
Volum. Moe Noble blowes, then ever thou wiſe words.
And for Romes good Ile tell thee what: yet goe:
Nay but thou ſhalt ſtay too: I would my Sonne
Were in Arabia, and thy Tribe before him,
His good Sword in his hand.
Sicin. What then?
Virg. What then? Hee'ld make an end of thy poſterity.
Volum. Baſtards, and all.
Good man, the Wounds that he does beare for Rome!
Menen. Come, come, peace.
Sicin. I would he had continued to his Country
As he began, and not unknit himſelfe
The noble knot he made.
Bru. I would he had.
Volum. I would he had? 'Twas you incenſt the rable.
Cats, that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of thoſe Myſteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know.
Brut. Pray let's go.
Volum. Now pray ſir get you gone.
You have done a brave deede: Ere you go, heare this:
As farre as doth the Capitoll exceede
The meaneſt houſe in Rome; ſo farre my Sonne

This Ladies Husband heere ; this (do you ſee)
Whom you have baniſh'd, does exceed you all.

Bru. Well, well, wee'l leave you.

Sicin. Why ſtay you to be baited
With one that wants her Wits. Exit Tribunes.

Volum. Take my Prayers with you.
I would the Gods had nothing elſe to do,
But to confirme my Curſſes. Could I meete 'em
But once a day, it would unclogge my heart
Of what lyes heavy too't.

Mene. You have told them home,
And by my troth you have cauſe : you'l ſuppe with me.

Volum. Angers my Meate : I ſuppe upon my ſelfe,
And ſo ſhall ſterve with Feeding : Come, let's go,
Leave this faint-puling, and lament as I do,
In Anger, Iuno-like : Come, come, come. Exeunt

Mene. Fie, fie, fie. Exit.

Enter a Roman, and a Volce.

Rom. I know you well ſir, and you know me : your name I thinke is Adrian.

Volce. It is ſo ſir, truly I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman, and my Services are as you are againſt 'em. Know you me yet.

Volce. Nicanor: no,

Rom. The ſame ſir,

Volce. You had more Beard when I laſt ſaw you, but your Favour is well appeard by your Tongue- What's the Newes in Rome : I have a Note from the Volcean ſtate to finde you out here. You have well ſaved mee a dayes journey.

Rom. There hath beene in Rome ſtraunge Inſurrections : The people, againſt the Senatours, Patricians, and Nobles.

Vol. Hath bin ; is it ended then? Our ſtate thinks not ſo,they are in a moſt warlike preparation,&,hope to come upon them, in the heate of their diviſion

Rom. The maine blaze of it is paſt, but a ſmall thing would make it flame againe. For the Nobles receive ſo to heart, the Baniſhment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptneſſe,to take all power from the people, and to plucke from them their Tribunes for ever. This lyes glowing I can tell you,and is almoſt mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus Baniſht ?

Rom. Baniſh'd ſir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence Nicanor.

Rom. The day ſerves well for them now. I have heard it ſaide, the fitteſt time to corrupt a mans Wife, is when ſhee's falne out with her Husband. Your Noble Tullus Auffidius will appeare well in theſe Warres, his great Oppoſer Coriolanus being now in no requeſt of his countrey.

Volce. He cannot chooſe : I am moſt fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you. You have ended my Buſineſſe, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I ſhall betweene this and Supper, tell you moſt ſtrange things from Rome : all tending to the good of their Adverſaries. Have you an Army ready ſay you ?

Val. A moſt Royall one. The Centurions, and their charges diſtinctly billetted already in th' entertainment, and to be on foot at an houres warning.

Rom. I am joyfull to heare of their readineſſe, and am the man I thinke, that ſhall ſet them in preſent Action. So ſir, heartly well met, and moſt glad of your Company.

Volce. You take my part from me ſir, I have the moſt cauſe to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well let us go together. Exeunt.

Enter Coriolanus in meane Apparell, Diſguiſd, and muffled.

Corio. A goodly City is this Antium. Citty,
'Tis I that made thy Widdowes : Many an heyre
Of theſe faire Edifices for my Warres
Have I heard groane, and drop : Then know me not,
Leaſt that thy Wives with Spits, an Boyes with ſtones
In puny Battell ſlay me. Save you ſir.

Enter a Citizen.

Cit. And you.

Corio. Direct me, if it be your will, where great Auffidius lies : Is he in Antium ?

Cit. He is and Feaſts the Nobles of the State, at his houſe this night.

Corio. Which is his houſe, beſeech you?

Cit. This heere before you.

Corio. Thanke you ſir, farewell. Exit Citizen
Oh World, thy ſlippery turnes ! Friends now faſt ſworn,
Whoſe double boſomes ſeene weare on heart,
Whoſe Houres, whoſe Bed, whoſe Meale and Exerciſe
Are ſtill together : who Twine (as 'twere) in Love,
Vnſeparable, ſhall within this houre,
On a diſſention of a Doit, breake out
To birtereſt Enmity : So felleſt Foes,
Whoſe paſſions, and whoſe Plots have broke their ſleepe
To take the one the other, by ſome chance,
Some tricke not worth an Egge, ſhall grow deere friends
And inter-joyne their yſſues. So with me,
My Birth-lace have I, and my lover upon
This Enemie Towne Ile enter, if he ſlay me
He does faire Iuſtice : if he give me way,
Ile do his Country Service, Exit.

Muſicke playes. Enter a Servingman.

1 Ser. Wine, Wine, Wine : What ſervice is heere? I thinke our Fellowes are a ſleepe.

Enter another Serving man.

2 Ser. Where's Cotus: my M. cals for him: Cotus. Exit

Enter Coriolanus.

Corio. A goodly houſe :
The Feaſt ſmels : but I appeare not like a Gueſt.

Enter the firſt Servingman.

1. Ser. What would you have Friend? whence are you?
Here's no place for you : Pray go to the doore ? Exit.

Corio. I have deſerv'd no better entertainment, in being Coriolanus. Enter ſecond Servant.

2 Ser. Whence are you ſir ? Ha's: the Porter his eyes in his head, that he gives enterance to ſuch Companions? Pray get you out.

Corio. Away.

2 Ser. Away? Get you away.

Corio. Now th' troubleſome.

2 Ser. Are you ſo brave : Ile have you talkt with anon

Enter 3 Servingman, the 1 meets him.

3 What Fellowes this?

1 A ſtrange one as ever I look'd on : I cannot get him out o'th houſe : Prythee call my Maſter to him.

3 What have you to do here fellow ? Pray you avoid the houſe.

Corio. Let me but ſtand, I will not hurt your Harth,

3 What are you.

Corio. A Gentleman.

3 A maru'llous poore one.

Corio. True, ſo I am,

3 Pray you poore Gentleman, take up ſome other ſtation,

tion heere's no place for you, pray you avoid : Come,

Corio. Follow your Function, go, and batten on colde bits. Puſhes him away from him.

3 What you will not? Prythee tell my Maſter what a ſtrange Gueſt he ha's here.

2 And I ſhall. Exit ſecond Servingman.

3 Where dwel'ſt thou?

Corio. Vnder the Canopy.

3 Vnder the Canopy?

Corio. I.

3 Where's that?

Corio. I'th City of Kites and Crowes:

3 I'th City of Kites and Crowes. What an Aſſe it is, then thou dwel'ſt with Dawes too?

Corio. No, I ſerve not thy Maſter.

3 How ſir? Do you meddle with my Maſter?

Corio. I, tis an honeſter ſervice, then to meddle with thy Miſtris: Thou prat'ſt, and prat'ſt, ſerve with thy trencher: Hence. Beates him away

Enter Auffidius with the Servingman.

Auf. Where is this Fellow?

2 Here ſir, I'de have beaten him like a dogge, but for diſturbing the Lords within.

Auf. Whence com'ſt thou? What woldſt yͧ? Thy name?
Why ſpeak'ſt not? Speake man: what's thy name?

Corio. If Tullus not yet thou know'ſt me, and ſeeing me, doſt not thinke me for the man I am, neceſſitie commands me name my ſelfe.

Auf. What is thy name?

Corio. A name unmuſicall to the Volcians eares,
And harſh in ſound to thine.

Auf. Say, what's thy name?
Thou haſt a Grim appearance, and thy Face
Beares a Commanne in't: Though thy Tackles torne,
Thou ſhew'ſt a noble Veſſell: What's thy name?

Corio. Prepare thy brow to frowne: knowſt yͧ me yet?

Auf. I know thee not? Thy Name?

Corio. My name is Caius Matius, who hath done
To thee particularly, and to all the Volces
Great hurt and Miſchiefe: thereto witneſſe may
My Surname Coriolanus. The painefull Service,
The extreame Dangers, and the droppes of Blood
Shed for thy thankleſſe Country are requitted:
But with that Surname, a good memorie
And witneſſe of the Malice and Diſpleaſure
Which thou could'ſt beare me, only that name remaines.
The Cruelty and Envy of the people.
Permitted by our daſtard Nobles, who
Have all forſooke me, hath devour'd the reſt:
And ſuffer'd me by th' voyce of Slaves to be
Hoop'd out of Rome. Now this extremity,
Hath brought me to thy Harth, not out of hope
(Miſtake me not) to ſave my life: for if
I had fear'd death, of all the Men i'th' World
I would have voided thee. But in meere ſpight
To be full quit of thoſe my baniſhers,
Stand I before thee heere: Then if thou haſt
A heart of wreak in thee, that wilt revenge
Thine owne particular wrongs, and ſtop thoſe maimes
Of ſhame ſeene through thy Country, ſpeed thee ſtraight
And make my] miſery ſerve thy turne: So uſe it,
That my revengefull Serviſes may prove
As benefits to thee- For I will fight
Againſt my Cankred Country, with the ſpleene
Of all the under Fiends. But if ſo be,
Thou dar'ſt not this and that to prove more Fortunes
Th'art tyr'd, then in a word, I alſo am
Longer to live moſt wearie: and preſent
My throat to thee, and to thy Ancient Malice:
Which not to cut, would ſhew thee but a Foole,
Since I have ever followed thee with hate,
Drawne Tunnes of Blood out of thy Countries breſt,
And cannot live but to thy ſhame, unleſſe
It be to doe thee ſervice.

Auf. Oh Martius, Martius;
Each word thou haſt ſpoke, hath weeded from my heart
A roote of Ancient Envy. If Iupiter
Should from yond clowd ſpeake divine things,
And ſay 'tis true; I'de not beleeve them more
Then thee all-Noble Martius. Let me twine
Mine armes about that body, where againſt
My grained Aſh an hundred times hath broke,
And ſcarr'd the Moone with ſplinters: heere I cleep
The Anvile of my Sword, and do conteſt
As hotly, and as Nobly with thy Love,
As ever in Ambitious ſtrength, I did
Contend againſt thy Valour. Know thou firſt,
I lov'd the Maid I married: never man
Sigh'd truer breath. But that I ſee thee heere
Thou Noble thing, more dances my rapt heart,
Then when I firſt my wedded Miſtris ſaw
Beſtrid my Threſhold. Why, thou Mars I tell thee,
We have a Power on foote: and I had purpoſe
Once more to hew thy Target from thy Brawne,
Or looſe mine Arme for't: Thou haſt beate me out
Twelve ſeverall times, and I have nightly ſince
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thy ſelfe and me:
We have beene downe together in my ſleepe,
Vnbuckling Helmes, fiſting each others Throat,
And wak'd halfe dead with nothing. Worthy Marcius
Had we no other quarrell elſe to Rome, but that Thou art thence Baniſh'd, we would muſter all
From twelve, to ſeventie: and powring Warre
Into the bowels of ungratefull Rome,
Like a bold Flood o're-beate. Oh come, go in,
And take our Friendly Senators by 'th' hands
Who now are heere, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepar'd againſt your Territories,
Though not for Rome it ſelfe.

Corio. You bleſſe me Gods.

Auf. Therefore moſt abſolute Sir, if thou wilt have
The leading of thine owne Revenges, take
Th' one halfe of my Commiſſion, and ſet downe
As beſt thou art experienc'd, ſince thou know'ſt
Thy Countries ſtrength and weakneſſe, thine own waies
Whether to knocke againſt the Gates of Rome,
Or rudely viſit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere deſtroy. But come in,
Let me comment thee firſt, to thoſe that ſhall
Say yea to thy deſires. A thouſand welcomes,
And more a Friend then ere an Enemie,
Yet Martius that was much. Your hand: moſt welcome.
Exeunt.

Enter two of the Servingmen.

1 Heere's a ſtrange alteration?

2 By my hand, I had thought to have ſtroken him with a Cudgell, and yet my minde gave me, his cloathes made a falſe report of him.

1 What an Arme he has, he turn'd me about with his finger and his thumbe, as one would ſet up a Top.

2 Nay, I knew by his face that there was ſome-thing in him. He had ſir, a kinde of face me thought. I cannot tell how to terme it.

1 He had ſo, looking as it were, would I were hang'd but I thought there was more in him, then I could think.

2. So did I, Ile be ſworne: He is ſimply the rareſt man i'th' world.

1 I thinke he is: but a greater ſoldier then he,
You wot one.

2 Who my Maſter?

1 Nay, it's no matter for that.

2 Worth ſix on him.

1 Nay not ſo neither: but I take him to be the greater Souldiour.

2 Faith looke you, one cannot tell how to ſay that: for the defence of a Towne, our Generall is excellent.

1 I, and for an aſſault too.

Enter the third Servingman.

3 Oh Slaves, I can tell you Newes, News you Raſcals

Both. What, what, what? Let's partake.

3 I would not be a Roman of all Nations; I had as live be a condemn'd man.

Both. Wherefore? Wherefore?

3 Why here's he that was wont to thwacke our Generall, Caius Martius.

1 Why do you ſay, thwacke our Generall?

3 I do not ſay thwacke our Generall, but he was alwayes good enough for him

2 Come we are fellowes and friends: he was ever too hard for him, I have heard him ſay ſo himſelfe.

1 He was too hard for him directly, to ſay the Troth on't before Coriolus; he ſcotcht him, and notcht him like a Carbinado.

2 And hee had bin Cannibally given, hee might have boyld and eaten him too.

1 But more of thy Newes.

3 Why he is ſo made on heere within, as if he were Son and Heire to Mars, ſet at upper end o'th' Table: No queſtion askt him by any of the Senators, but they ſtand bald before him. Our Generall himſelfe makes a Miſtris of him, Sanctifies himſelfe with's hand, and turnes up the white o'th' eye to his diſcourſe. But the bottome of the Newes is, our Generall is cut i'th' middle, & but one halfe of what he was yeſterday. For the other ha's halfe, by the intreaty and grant of the whole Table. Hee'l go hee ſayes, and ſole the Porter of Rome Gates by th'eares. He will mowe all downe before him, and leave his paſſage poul'd.

2 And he's as like to do't as any man I can imagine.

3 Doo't? he will doo't: for look you ſir, he has as many Friends as Enemies: which Friends ſir as it were, durſt not (looke you ſir) ſhew themſelves (as we terme it) his Friends, whileſt he's in Directitude.

1 Directitude? Whats that?

3 But when they ſhall ſee ſir, his Creſt up againe, and the man in blood, they will out of their Burroughes (like Conies after Raine) and revell all with him.

1 But when goes this forward?

3 To morrow, to day, preſently, you ſhall have the Drum ſtrooke up this afternoone: 'Tis as it were a parcel of their Feaſt, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Why then we ſhall have a ſtirring World againe: This peace is nothing, but to ruſt Iron, encreaſe Taylors, and breed Ballad-makers.

1 Let me have Warre ſay I, it exceeds peace as farre as day do's night: It's ſprightly walking, audible, and full of Vent. Peace, is a very Apoplexy, Lethargie, mull'd, deafe, ſleepe, inſenſible, a getter of more baſtard Children, then warres a deſtroyer of men.

2 'Tis ſo, and as warres in ſome ſort may bee ſaide to be a Raviſher, ſo it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of Cuckolds.

1 I, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Reaſon, becauſe they then leſſe neede one another: The Warres for my money. I hope to ſee Romanes as cheape as Volcians. They are riſing, they are riſing.

Both. In, in, in, in. Exeunt.

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus.

Sicin. We heare not of him, neither need we feare him,
His remedies are tame, the preſent peace,
And quietneſſe of the people, which before
Were in wilde hurry. Heere do we make his Friends
Bluſh, that the world goes well: who rather had,
Though they themſelves did ſuffer by't, behold
Diſſentious numbers peſtring ſtreets, then ſee
Our Tradeſmen ſinging in their ſhops, and going
About their Functions friendly.

Enter Menenius.

Bru. We ſtood too't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sicin. 'Tis he, 'tis he: O he is grown moſt kind of late;
Haile Sir. Mene. Haile to you both.

Sicin. Your Coriolanus is not much miſt, but with his Friends: the Common wealth doth ſtand, and ſo would do, were he more angry at it.

Mene. All's well, and might have beene much better, if he could have temporiz'd.

Sicin. Where is he, heare you?

Mene. Nay I heare nothing:
His Mother and his wife, heare nothing from him.

Enter three or foure Citizens.

All. The Gods preſerve you both.

Sicin. Gooden our Neighbours,

Bru. Gooden to you all, gooden to you all.

1 Our ſelves, our wives, and children, on our knees,
Are bound to pray for you both.

Sicin. Live, and thrive.

Bru. Farewell kinde Neighbours:
We wiſht Coriolanus had lov'd you as we did.

All. Now the Gods keepe you.

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. Exeunt Citizens

Sicin. This is a happier, and more comely time,
Then when theſe Fellowes ran about the ſtreets,
Crying Confuſion.

Bru. Caius Martius was
A worthy Officer i'th' Warre, but Inſolent,
O're come with pride, Ambitious, paſt all thinking
Selfe-loving.

Sicin. And affecting one ſole Throne, without aſſiſtãce

Mene. I thinke not ſo.

Sicin. We ſhould by this to all our Lamentation,
If he had gone forth Counſell, found it ſo.

Bru. The Gods have well prevented it, and Rome
Sits ſafe and ſtill, without him.

Enter an Ædile.

Ædile. Worthy Tribunes,
There is a Slave whom we have put in priſon,
Reports the Volces with two ſeverall Powers
Are entred in the Roman Territories,
And with the deepeſt malice of the Warre,
Deſtroy, what lies before 'em.

Mene. 'Tis Auffidius,
Who hearing of our Martius Baniſhment,
Thruſts forth his hornes againe into the world
Which were In-ſhell'd, when Martius ſtood for Rome,

And durſt not once peepe out.
Sicin. Come, what talke you of Martius.
Bru. Go ſee this Rumorer whipt, it cannot be,
The Volces dare breake with us.
Mene. Cannot be?
We have record, that very well it can,
And three examples of the like, hath beene
Within my Age. But reaſon with the fellow
Before you puniſh him, where he heard this,
Leaſt you ſhall chance to whip your Information,
And beate the Meſſenger, who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.
Sicin. Tell not me: I know this cannot be.
Bru. Not poſſible.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. The Nobles in great earneſtneſſe are going
All to the Senate-houſe: ſome newes is comming
That turnes their Countenances.
Sicin. 'Tis this Slave:
Go whip him fore the peoples eyes: His raiſing,
Nothing but his report.
Meſ. Yes worthy Sir,
The Slaves report is ſeconded, and more
More fearfull is deliver'd.
Sicin. What more fearefull?
Meſ. It is ſpoke freely out of many mouths,
How probable I do not know, that Martius
Ioyn'd with Auffidius, leads a power 'gainſt Rome,
And vowes Revenge as ſpacious, as betweene
The yong'ſt and oldeſt thing.
Sicin. This is moſt likely.
Bru. Rais'd onely, that the weaker ſort may wiſh
Good Martius home againe.
Sicin. The very tricke on't.
Mene. This is unlikely,
He, and Auffidius can no more attone
Then violent'ſt Contrariety.

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſ. You are ſent for to the Senate:
A fearefull Army, led by Caius Martius,
Aſſociated with Auffidius Rages
Vpon our Territories, and have already
O're-borne their way, conſum'd with fire, and tooke
What lay before them.

Enter Cominius.

Com. Oh you have made good worke.
Mene. What newes? What newes?
Com. You have holp to raviſh your owne daughters, &
To melt the City Leades upon your pates,
To ſee your Wives diſhonour'd to your Noſes.
Mene. What's the newes? What's the newes?
Com. Your Temples burned in their Ciment, and
Your Franchiſes, whereon you ſtood, confin'd
Into an Augors boare.
Mene. Pray now the newes:
You have made faire worke I feare me: pray your newes,
If Martius ſhould be joyn'd with Volceans.
Com. If? He is their God, he leads them like a thing
Made by ſome other Deity then Nature,
That ſhapes man Better: and they follow him
Againſt us Brats, with no leſſe Confidence,
Then Boyes purſuing Summer Butter-flies,
Or Butchers killing Flyes.
Mene. You have made good worke,
You and your Apron men: you, that ſtood ſo much
Vpon the voyce of occupation, and
The breath of Garlike-eaters.
Com. Hee'l ſhake your Rome about your eares.
Mene. As Herculus did ſhake downe Mellow Fruite:
You have made faire worke.
Bru. But is this true ſir?
Com. I, and you'l looke pale
Before you finde it other. All the Regions
Do ſmilingly Revolt, and who reſiſts
Are mock'd for valiant Ignorance,
And periſh conſtant Fooles: who is't can blame him?
Your Enemies and his, finde ſomething in him.
Mene. We are all undone, unleſſe
The Noble man have mercy.
Com. Who ſhall aske it?
The Tribunes cannot doo't for ſhame; the people
Deſerve ſuch pitty of him, as the Wolfe
Doe's of the Shepheards: For his beſt Friends, if they Should ſay be good to Rome, they charg'd him, even
As thoſe ſhould do that had deſerv'd his hate,
And therein ſhew'd like Enemies.
Me. 'Tis true, if he were putting to my houſe, the brand
That ſhould conſume it, I have not the face
To ſay, beſeech you ceaſe. You have made faire hands,
You and your Crafts, you have crafted faire.
Com. You have brought
A Trembling upon Rome, ſuch as was never
S'incapeable of helpe:
Tri. Say not, we brought it.
Mene. How? Was't we? We lov'd him,
But like Beaſts, and Cowardly Nobles,
Gave way unto your Cluſters, who did hoote
Him out o'th' Citty.
Com. Bvt I feare
They'l roare him in againe. Tullus Auffidius,
The ſecond name of men, obeyes his points
As if he were his Officer: Deſperation,
Is all the policy, Strength, and Defence
That Rome can make againſt them.

Enter a Troope of Citizens.

Mene. Heere come the Cluſters.
And is Auffidius with him? You are they
That made the Ayre unwholſome, when you caſt
Your ſtinking, greaſie Caps, in hooting
At Coriolanus Fxile. How he's comming,
And not a haire upon a Souldiers head
Which will not prove a whip: As many Coxcombes
As you threw Caps up, will he tumble downe,
And pay you for your voyces. 'Tis no matter,
If he could burne us all into one coale,
We have deſerv'd it.
Omnes. Faith, we heare fearfull Newes.
1 Cit. For mine owne part,
When I ſaid baniſh him, I ſaid 'twas pitty.
2 And ſo did I.
2 And ſo did I: and to ſay the truth, ſo did very many of us, that we did we did for the beſt, and though we willingly conſented to his Baniſhment, yet it was againſt our will.
Com. Y'are goodly things, you Voyces.
Mene. You have made you good worke
You and your cry. Shal's to the Capitoll?
Com. Oh I, what elſe? Exeunt both
Sicin. Go Maſters get you home, be not diſmaid,
Theſe are a Side, that would be glad to have
This true, which they ſo ſeeme to feare. Go home,
And ſhew no ſigne of Feare.

1 Cit. The Gods bee good to us: Come Maſters let's home, I ever ſaid we were i'th wrong, when we baniſh'd him.

2 Cit. So did we all, But come, let's home. Exit. Cit.

Bru. I do not like this Newes.

Sicin. Nor I.

Bru. Let's to the Capitoll: would halfe my wealth
Would by this for a lye.

Sicin. Pray let's go. Exeunt Tribunes.

Enter Auffidius with his Lievtenant.

Auf. Do they ſtill flye to'th Roman?

Lieu. I do not know what Witchcraft's in him: but
Your Soldiers uſe him as the grace 'fore meate,
Their talke at Table, and their Thankes at end,
And you are darkned in this action Sir,
Even by your owne.

Auf. I cannot helpe it now,
Vnleſſe by uſing meanes I lame the foote,
Of our deſigne. He beares himſelfe more proudly,
Even to my perſon, then I thought he would
When firſt I did embrace him. Yet his Nature
In that's no Changeling, and I muſt excuſe
What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wiſh Sir,
(I meane for your perticular) you had not
Ioynd in Commiſſion with him: but either have borne
The action of your ſelfe, or elſe to him, had left it ſoly.

Auf. I underſtand thee well, and be thou ſure
When he ſhall come to his account, he knowes not
What I can urge againſt him, although it ſeemes
And ſo he thinkes, and is no leſſe apparant
To th' vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairely:
And ſhewes good Husbandry for the Volcean State,
Fights Dragon-like, and does atcheeve as ſoone
As draw his Sword: yet he hath left undone
That which ſhall breake his necke, or hazard mine.
When ere we come to our account.

Leiu. Sir, I beſeech you, think you he'l carry Rome?

Auf. All places yeeld to him ere he ſits downe,
And the Nobility of Rome are his:
The Senator and patricians love him too:
The tribunes are no Soldiers: and their people
Will be as raſh in the repeale, as haſty
To expell him thence. I thinke hee'l be to Rome
As is the Aſpray to the Fiſh, who takes it
By Soveraignty of Nature. Firſt, he was
A Noble ſervant to them, but he could not Carry his Honors even: whether 'was Pride
Which out of dayly Fortune ever taints
The happy man; whether defect of judgement,
To faile in the diſpoſing of thoſe chances
Which he was Lord of: or whether Nature,
Not to be other then one thing, not mooving
From th' Caske to th' Cuſhion: but commanding peace
Even with the ſame auſterity and garbe,
As he controll'd the warre. But one of theſe
(As he hath ſpices of them all) not all,
For I dare ſo farre free him, made him fear'd,
So hated, and ſo baniſh'd: but he ha's a Merit
To choake it in the utt'rance: So our Vertues,
Lie in th' interpretation of the time,
And power unto it ſelfe moſt commendable,
Hath not a Tombe ſo evident as a Chaire
T' extoll what it hath done.
One fire drives out one fire; one Naile, one Naile;
Rights by rights fouler, ſtrengths by ſtrengths do faile.
Come let's away: when Caius Rome is thine,
Thou art poor'ſt of al; then ſhortly art thou mine. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus,
the two Tribunes, with others.

Menen. No, Ile not go: you heare what he hath ſaid
Which was ſometime his Generall: who loved him
In a moſt deere particular. He call'd me Father:
But what o'that? Go you that baniſh'd him
A mile before his Tent, fall downe and kneele
The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd
To heare Cominius ſpeake, Ile keepe at home.

Com. He would not ſeeme to know me.

Menen. Do you heare?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:
I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not anſwer to: Forbad all Names,
He was a kinde of Nothing, Titleleſſe,
Till he had forg'd himſelfe a name a'th' fire
Of burning Rome.

Menen. Why ſo: you have made good worke:
A paire of Tribunes, that have wrack'd for Rome,
To make Coales cheape: A Noble memory.

Com. I minded him, how Royall 'twas to pardon
When it was leſſe expected. He replyed
It was a bare petition of a State
To one whom they had puniſh'd.

Menen. Very well, could he ſay leſſe?

Com. I offered to awaken his regard
For's private Friends. His anſwere to me was
He could not ſtay to picke them, in a pile
Of noyſome muſty Chaffe. He ſaid, 'twas folly
For one poore graine or two, to leave unburnt
And ſtill to noſe th' offence.

Menen. For one poore graine or two?
I am one of thoſe: his Mother, Wife, his Childe,
And this brave Fellow too: we are the Graines,
You are the muſty Chaffe, and you are ſmelt
Above the Moone. We muſt be burnt for you.

Sicin. Nay, pray be patient: If you refuſe your ayde
In this ſo never-needed helpe, yet do not Vpbraid's with our diſtreſſe. But ſure if you
Would be your Countries Pleader, your good tongue
More then the inſtant Armie we can make Might ſtop our Countryman.

Menen. No: Ile not meddle.

Sicin. Pray you go to him.

Menen. What ſhould I do?

Bru. Onely make triall what your Love can do,
For Rome, towards Martius.

Mene. Well, and ſay that Martius returne me,
As Cominius is return'd, unheard: what then?
But as a diſcontented Friend, griefe-ſhot
With his unkindneſſe. Say't be ſo?

Sicin. Yet your good will
Muſt have that thankes from Rome, after the meaſure
As you intended well.

Meve. Ile undertak't:
I thinke hee'l heare me. Yet to bite his lip,
And humme at good Cominius, much unhearts me.

He was not taken well, he had not din'd,
The Veines unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We powt upon the Morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have ſtufft
Theſe Pipes, and theſe Conveyances of our blood
With Wine and Feeding, we have ſuppler Soules
Then in our Prieſt-like Faſts: therefore Ile watch him
Till he be dieted to my requeſt,
And then Ile ſet upon him.

Bru. You know the very rode into his kindneſſe,
And cannot loſe your way.

Mene. Good faith Ile prove him,
Speed how it will. I ſhall ere long, have knowledge
Of my ſucceſſe. Exit.

Com. Hee'l never heare him.

Sicin. Not.

Com. I tell you, he doe's ſit in Gold, his eye
Red as 'twould burne Rome: and his Injury
The Gaoler to his pitty. I kneel'd before him,
'Twas very faintly he ſaid Riſe: diſmiſt me
Thus with his ſpeechleſſe hand. What he would do
He ſent in writing after me: what he would not,
Bound with an Oath to yeeld to his conditions:
So that all hope is vaine, unleſſe his Noble Mother,
And his Wife, who (as I heare) meane to ſolicite him
For mercy to his Country: therefore let's hence,
And with our faire intreaties haſt them on. Exeunt.

Enter Menenius to the Watch or Guard.

1 Wat. Stay: whence are you.

2. Wat. Stand, and go backe.

Mo. You guard like men, 'tis well. But by your leave,
I am an Officer of State, & come to ſpeake with Coriolanus.

1 From whence? Mene. From Rome.

1 You may not paſſe, you muſt returne: our Geuerall will no more heare from thence.

2 You'l ſee your Rome embrac'd with fire, before
You'l ſpeake with Coriolanus.

Mene. Good my Friends,
If you have heard your Generall talke of Rome,
And of his Friends there, it is Lots to Blankes,
My name hath touch't your eares: it is Menenius.

1 Be it ſo, go back: the vertue of your name,
Is not heere paſſable.

Mene. I tell thee Fellow,
Thy Generall is my Lover: I have beene
The booke of his good Acts, whence men have read
His Fame unparalell'd, happely amplified:
For I have ever verified my Friends,
(Of whom hee's cheefe) with all the ſize that verity
Would without lapſing ſuffer: Nay, ſometimes,
Like to a Bowle upon a ſubtle ground
I have tumbled paſt the throw: and in his praiſe
Have (almoſt) ſtampt the Leaſing. Therefore Fellow,
I muſt have leave to paſſe.

1 Faith Sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalfe, as you have uttered words in your owne, you ſhould not paſſe heere: no, though it were as vertuous to lye, as to live chaſtly. Therefore go backe.

Men. Prythee fellow, remember my name is Menenius, alwayes factionary on the party of your Generall.

2 Howſoever you have bin his Lier, as you ſay you have, I am one that telling true under him, muſt ſay you cannot paſſe. Therefore go backe.

Mene. Ha's he din'd can'ſt thou tell? For I would not ſpeake with him, till after dinner.

1 You are a Roman, are you?

Mene. I am as thy Generall is.

1 Then you ſhould hate Rome, as he do's. Can you, when you have puſht out your gates, the very Defender of them, and in a uiolent populer ignorance, given your enemy your ſhield, thinke to front his revenges with the eaſie groanes of old women, the Virginall Palms of your daughters, or with the palſied interceſſion of ſuch a decay'd Dotant as you ſeeme to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire, your City is ready to flame in, with ſuch weake breath as this? No, you are deceiv'd, therefore backe to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemn'd, our Generall has ſworne you out of repreeve and pardon.

Mene. Sirra, if the Captaine knew I were heere,
He would uſe me with eſtimation.

1 Come, my Captaine knowes you not.

Mene. I meane thy Generall.

1 My Generall cares not for you. Backe I ſay, go: leaſt I let forth your halfe pinte of blood. Backe, that's the utmoſt of your having, backe.

Mene. Nay but Fellow, Fellow.

Enter Coriolanus with Auffidius.

Corio. What's the matter?

Mene, Now you Companion: Ile ſay an arrant for you: you ſhall know now that I am in eſtimation: you ſhall perceive, that a Iacke gardant cannot office me from my Son Coriolanus, gueſſe but my entertainment with him: if thou ſtand'ſt not i'th ſtate of hanging, or of ſome death more long in Spectatorſhip, and crueller in ſuffering, behold now preſently, and ſwoond for what's to come upon thee. The glorious Gods ſit in hourely Synod about thy particular proſperity, and love thee no worſe then thy old Father Menenius do's. O my Son, my Son! thou art preparing fire for us: looke thee, heere's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee: but being aſſured none but my ſelfe could moue thee, I have beene blowne out of your Gates with ſighes: and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary Countrimen. The good Gods aſſwage thy wrath, and turne the dregs of it, upon this Varlet heere: This, who like a blocke hath denyed my acceſſe to thee.

Corio. Away.

Mene. How? Away?

Corio. Wife, Mother, Child, I know not. My affaires
Are Servanted to others: Though I owe
My revenge properly, my remiſſion lies
In Volcean breſts. That we have beene familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulneſſe ſhall poiſon rather
Then pitty: Note how much, therefore be gone.
Mine eares againſt your ſuites, are ſtronger then
Your gates againſt my force. Yet for I loved thee,
Take this along, I writ it for thy ſake,
And would have ſent it. Another word Menenius,
I will not heare thee ſpeake. This man Auffidius
Was my belov'd in Rome: yet thou behold'ſt.

Auf. You keepe a conſtant temper. Exeunt.

Manent the Guard and Meneuius.

1 Now ſir, is your name Menenius?

2 'Tis a ſpell you ſee of much power:
You know the way home againe.

1 Do you heare how we are ſhent for keeping your greatneſſe backe?

2 What cauſe do you thinke I have to ſwoond?

Mene. I neither care for th' world, nor your Generall: for ſuch things as you, I can ſcarſe thinke ther's any, y'are ſo ſlight. He that hath a will to dye by himſelfe, feares it not from another : Let your Generall do his worſt. For you, bee that you are, long ; and your miſery encreaſe with your age. I ſay to you, as I was ſaid to, Away. Exit.

1. A Noble Fellow I warrant him,

2 The worthy Fellow is our General. He's the Rocke,
The Oake not to be winde-ſhaken. Exit Watch.

Enter Coriolanus and Auffidius.

Corio. We will before the walls of Rome to morrow
Set downe our Hoaſt. My partner in this Action,
You muſt report to th' Volcian Lords, how plainly
I have borne this Buſineſſe.

Auf. Onely their ends you have reſpected.
Stopt your eares againſt the generall ſuite of Rome:
Never admitted a privat whiſper, no not with ſuch friends
That thought them ſure of you.

Corio. This laſt old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I have ſent to Rome,
Lov'd me, above the meaſure of a Father,
Nay godded me indeed. Their lateſt refuge
Was to ſend him : for whoſe old love I have
(Though I ſhew'd ſowrely to him) once more offer'd
The firſt Conditions which they did refuge,
And cannot now accept, to grace him onely,
That thought he could do more : A very little
I have yeelded to. Freſh Embaſſes, and Suites,
Nor from the State, nor private friends heereafter
Will I lend eare to. Ha ? what ſhout is this? Shout within.
Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
In the ſame time 'tis made ? I will not.

Enter Virgilia, Volumnia, Valeria, yong Martius; with Attendants.

My wife comes formoſt, then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunke was fram'd, and in her hand
The Grandchilde to her blood. But out affection,
All bond and priviledge of nature breake;
Let it be Vertuous to be Obſtinate.
What is that Curt'ſie worth ? Or thoſe Doves' eyes,
Which can make Gods forſworne ? I melt and am not
Of ſtronger earth then others : my Mother bowes,
As if Olympus to a Mole-hill ſhould
In ſupplication Nod : and my young Boy
Hath an aſpect of interceſſion, which
Great Nature cries, Deny not. Let the Volces
Plough Rome, and harrow Italy, Ile never
Be ſuch a Goſling to obey inſtinct : but ſtand
As if a man were Author of himſelf, & knew no other kin

Virgil. My Lord and Husband.

Corio. Theſe eyes are not the ſame I wore in Rome.

Virg. The ſorrow that delivers us thus chang'd,
Makes you thinke ſo.

Corio. Like a dull Actor now, I have forgot my part,
And I am out, even to a full Diſgrace. Beſt of my Fleſh,
Forgive my Tyranny : but do not ſay,
For that forgive our Romans. O a kiſſe
Long as my Exile, ſweet as my Revenge !
Now by the jealous Queene of Heaven, that kiſſe
I carried from thee deare; and my true Lippe
Hath Virgin'd it ere ſince. You Gods, I pray,
And the moſt Noble Mother of the world
Leave unſaluted : Sinke my knee i'th' earth; Kneeles
Of thy deepe duty, more impreſſion ſhew
Then that of common Sonnes.

Volum. Oh ſtand up bleſt!
Whil'ſt with no ſofter Cuſhion then the Flint
I kneele before thee, and unproperly
Shew duty as miſtaken, all this while,
Betweene the Childe, and Parent.

Corio. What's this ? your knees to me ?
To your Corrected Sonne?
Then let the Pibbles on the hungry beach
Fillop the Starres : Then, let the mutinous windes
Strike the proud Cedars 'gainſt the fiery Sun :
Murd'ring Impoſſibility, to make
What cannot be, ſlight worke.

Volum. Thou art my Warriour, I hope to frame thee
Do you know this Lady ?

Corio. The Noble Siſter of Publicola;
The Moone of Rome : Chaſte as the Iſicle
That's curdied by the Froſt, from pureſt Snow,
And hangs on Dians Temple : Deere Valeria.

Volum. This is a poore Epitome of yours,
Which by th' interpretation of full time,
May ſhew like all your ſelfe.

Corio. The God of Souldiers :
With the conſent of ſupreame Iove, informe
Thy thoughts with Nobleneſſe, that thou mayſt prove
To ſhame unvulnerable, and ſtrike i'th Warres
Like a great Sea-marke ſtanding every flaw,
And ſaving thoſe that eye thee,

Volum. Your knee, Sirrah.

Corio. That's my brave Boy.

Volum. Even he, your wife, this Ladie, and my ſelfe,
Are Sutors to you.

Corio. I beſeech you peace :
Or if you'ld aske remember this before ;
The thing I have forſworne to graunt, may never
Be held by you denials. Do not bid me
Diſmiſſe my Soldiers, or capitulate
Againe, with Romes Mechanickes. Tell me not
Wherein I ſeeme unnaturall : Deſire not t'allay
My Rages and Revenges, with your colder reaſons.

Volum. Oh no more, no more :
You have ſaid you will not grant us any thing :
For we have nothing elſe to aske, but that
Which you deny already : yet we will aske,
That if you faile in our requeſt, the blame
May hang upon your hardneſſe, therefore heare us.

Cario. Auffidius, and you Volces marke, for wee'l
Heare nought from Rome in private. Your requeſt ?

Volum. Should we be ſilent & not ſpeak, our Raiment
And ſtate of Bodies would bewray what life
We have led ſince thy Exile. Thinke with thy ſelfe,
How more unfortunate then living women
Are we come hither ; ſince that thy ſight, which ſhould
Make our eies flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,
Conſtraines them weepe, and ſhake with feare & ſorow,
Making the Mother, wife, and Childe to ſee,
The Sonne, the Husband, and the Father tearing
His Countries Bowels out ; and to poore we
Thine enmities moſt capitall : Thou barr'ſt us
Our prayers to the Gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy. For how can we?
Alas ! how can we, for our Country pray ?
Whereto we are bound, together with thy victory :
Whereto we are bound : Alacke, or we muſt looſe
The Countrie our deere Nurſe, or elſe thy perſon
Our comfort in the Country. We muſt finde
An evident Calamity, though we had
Our wiſh, which ſide ſhould win. For either thou
Muſt as a Forraine Recreant be led
With Manacles through our ſtreets, or elſe
Triumphantly treade on thy Countries ruine,

And beare the Palme, for having bravely ſhed
Thy Wife and Childrens blood: For my ſelfe, Sonne,
I purpoſe not to waite on Fortune, till
Theſe warres determine: if I cannot perſwade thee,
Rather to ſhew a Noble grace to both parts,
Then ſeeke the end of one; thou ſhalt no ſooner
March to aſſault thy Country, then to treade
(Truſt too't, thou ſhalt not) on thy Mothers wombe
That brought thee to this world.

Virg. I, and mine, that brought you forth this boy,
To keepe your name living to time.

Boy. A ſhall not tread on me: Ile run away
Till I am bigger, but then Ile fight.

Corio. Not of a womans tenderneſſe to be,
Requires nor Childe, nor womans face to ſee:
I have ſate too long.

Volum. Nay, go not from us thus:
If it were ſo, that our requeſt did tend
To ſave the Romanes, thereby to deſtroy
The Volces whom you ſerve, you might condemne us
As poyſonous of your Honour. No, our ſuite
Is that you reconcile them: While the Volces
May ſay, this mercy we have ſhew'd: the Romanes,
This we receiv'd, and each in either ſide
Give the All-haile to thee, and cry be Bleſt
For making up this peace. Thou know'ſt (great Sonne)
The end of Warres uncertaine: but this certaine,
That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou ſhalt thereby reape, is ſuch a name
Whoſe repetition will be dogg'd with Curſes:
Whoſe Chronicle thus writ, The man was Noble,
But with his laſt Attempt, he wip'd it out:
Deſtroy'd his Country, and his name remaines
To th' inſuing Age, abhorr'd. Speake to me Son:
Thou haſt affected the five ſtraines of Honor,
To imitate the graces of the Gods.
To teare with Thunder the wide Cheekes a'th' Ayre,
And yet to change thy Sulphure with a Boult.
That ſhould but rive an Oake. Why do'ſt not ſpeake?
Think'ſt thou it honourable for a Noble man
Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, ſpeake you:
He cares not for your weeping. Speake thou Boy,
Perhaps thy childiſhneſſe will move him more
Then can our Reaſons. There is no man in the world
More bound to's Mother, yet here he let's me prate
Like one i'th' Stockes. Thou haſt never in thy life,
Shew'd thy deere Mother any curteſie,
When ſhe (poore Hen) fond of no ſecond brood,
Ha's cluck'd thee to the Warres, and ſafely home
Loden with Honour. Say my Requeſt's unjuſt,
And ſpurne me backe: But, if it be not ſo
Thou art not honeſt, and the Gods will plague thee
That thou reſtrain'ſt from me the Duty, which
To a Mothers part belongs. He turnes away:
Down Ladies: let us ſhame him with our knees
To his ſur-name Coriolanus longs more pride
Then pitty to our Prayers. Downe: an end,
This is the laſt. So, we will home to Rome,
And dye among our Neighbours: Nay, behold's,
This Boy that cannot tell what he would have,
But kneeles, and holds up hands for fellowſhip,
Doe's reaſon our Petition with more ſtrength
Then thou haſt to deny't. Come, let us go:
This Fellow had a Volcean to his Mother:
His Wife is in Coriolus, and his Childe
Like him by chance: yet give us our diſpatch:
I am huſht untill our City be a fire, & then Ile ſpeak a little

Holds her by the hand ſilent.

Corio. O Mother, Mother!
What have you done? Behold, the Heavens do ope,
The Gods looke downe, and this unnaturall Scene
They laugh at. Oh my Mother, Mother: Oh!
You have wonne a happy Victory to Rome.
But for your Sonne, beleeve it: Oh beleeve it,
Moſt dongerouſly you have with him prevail'd,
If not moſt mortall to him. But let it come:
Auffidius, though I cannot make true Warres,
Ile frame convenient peace. Now good Auffidius,
Were you in my ſteed, would you have heard
A mother leſſe? or granted leſſe Auffidius?

Auf. I was mou'd withall.

Corio. I dare be ſworne you were:
And ſir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to ſweat compaſſion. But (good ſir)
What peace you'l make, adviſe me: For my part,
Ile not to Rome, Ile backe with you, and pray you
Stand to me in this cauſe. O Mother! Wife!

Auf. I am glad thou haſt ſet thy mercy, & thy Honor
At difference in thee: Out of that Ile worke
My ſelfe a former Fortune.

Corio. I by and by; But we will drinke together:
And you ſhall beare
A better witneſſe backe then words, which we
On like conditions, will haue counter-ſeal'd.
Come enter with us: Ladies you deſerve
To have a Temple built you: All the Swords
In Italy, and her Confederate Armes
Could not have made this peace. Exeunt.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.

Mene. See you yon'd Coin a'th Capitol, yon'd corner (ſtone?

Sicin. Why what of that?

Mene. If it be poſſible for you to diſplace it with your little finger, there is ſome hope the Ladies of Rome, eſpecially his Mother, may prevaile with him. But I ſay, there is no hope in't, our throats are ſentenc'd, and ſtay upon execution.

Sicin. Is't poſſible, that ſo ſhort a time can alter the condition of a man.

Mene. There is difference between a Grub & a Butterſly, yet your Butterfly was a Grub: this Martius, is growne from Man to Dragon: He has wings, hee's more then a creeping thing.

Sicin. He lov'd his Mother deerely.

Mene. So did he me: and he no more remembers his Mother now, then an eight yeare old horſe. The tartneſſe of his face, ſowres ripe Grapes. When he walks, he moves like an Engine, and the ground ſhrinkes before his Treading. He is able to pierce a Corſlet with his eye: Talkes like a knell, and his hum is a Battery. He ſits in his State as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finiſht with his bidding. He wants nothing of a God but Eternitie, and a Heaven to Throne in.

Sicin. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Mene. I paint him in the Character. Mark what mercy his Mother ſhall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, then there is milke in a male-Tyger, that ſhall our poore City finde: and all this is long of you.

Sicin. The Gods be good unto us.

Mene. No, in ſuch a caſe the Gods will not be good unto us. When we baniſh'd him, we reſpected not them: and he returning to breake our necks, they reſpect not us.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Sir, if you'ld ſave your life flye to your Houſe,
The Plebeians have got your Fellow Tribune,
And hale him up and downe; all ſwearing, if
The Romane Ladies bring not comfort home,
They'l give him death by Inches.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Sicin. What's the Newes? (prevayl'd,
Meſ. Good Newes, good newes, the Ladies have
The Volcians are diſlodg'd, and Martius gone:
A merrier day did never yet greet Rome,
No, not th' expulſion of the Tarquins.
Sicin. Friend, art thou certaine this is true?
Is't moſt certaine.
Meſ. As certaine as I know the Sun is fire:
Where have you lurk'd that you make doubt of it:
Ne're through an Arch ſo hurried the blowne Tide
As the recomforted through th' gates. Why harke you?

Trumpets, Hoboyes, Drums beate, altogether.

The Trumpets, Sack-buts, Pſalteries and Fifes,
Tabors, and Symboles, and the ſhowting Romans,
Make the Sunne dance. Hearke you. A ſhout within
Mene. This is good Newes:
I will go meete the Ladies. This Volumna,
Is worth of Conſuls, Senators, Patricians,
A City full: Of Tribunes ſuch as you,
A Sea and Land full: you have pray'd well to day:
This Morning, for ten thouſand of your throates,
I'de not have given a doit. Harke, how they joy.

Sound ſtill with the Shouts.

Sicin. Firſt, the Gods bleſſe you for your tydings:
Next, accept my thankefulneſſe.
Meſ. Sir, we have all great cauſe to give great thanks.
Sicin. They are neere the City.
Meſ. Almoſt at point to enter.
Sicin. Wee'l meet them, and helpe the joy. Exeunt.

Enter two Senators, with Ladies, paſſing over the Stage, with other Lords.

Sena. Behold our Patronneſſe, the life of Rome:
Call all your Tribes together, praiſe the Gods,
And make triumphant fires, ſtrow Flowers before them:
Vnſhoot the noiſe that baniſh'd Martius;
Repeale him, with the welcome of his Mother:
Cry welcome Ladies, welcome.
All. Welcome Ladies, welcome. Exeunt.

A Flouriſh with Drummes & Trumpets.

Enter Tullus Auffidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the Lords a'th' City, I am heere:
Deliver them this Paper: having read it,
Bid them repaire to th' Market place, where I
Even in theirs, and in the Commons eares
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuſe;
The City Ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends t'appeare before the People, hoping
To purge himſelfe with words. Diſpatch.

Enter 3 or 4 Conſpirators of Auffidius Faction.

Moſt Welcome.
1.Con. How is it with our Generall?
Auf. Even ſo, as with a man by his owne Almes impoyſon'd, and with his Charity ſlaine.
2.Con. Moſt Noble Sir, If you do hold the ſame intent
Wherein you wiſht us parties: Wee'l deliver you
Of your great danger.
Auf. Sir, I cannot tell,
We muſt proceed as we do finde the People.
3.Con. The people will remaine uncertaine, whil'ſt
'Twixt you there's difference: but the fall of either
Makes the Survivor heyre of all.
Auf. I know it:
And my pretext to ſtrike at him, admits
A good conſtruction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine Honor for his truth: who being ſo heighten'd,
He watered his new Plants with dewes of Flatterie,
Seducing ſo my Friends: and to this end,
He bow'd his Nature, never knowne before,
But to be rough, unſwayable, and free.
3.Conſp. Sir, his ſtoutneſſe
When he did ſtand for Conſull, which he loſt
By lacke of ſtooping,
Auf. That I would have ſpoke of:
Being baniſh'd for't, he came unto my Harth,
Preſented to my knife his Throat: I tooke him,
Made him joynt-ſervant with me: Gave him way
In all his owne deſires: Nay, let him chooſe
Out of my Files, his projects, to accompliſh
My beſt and freſheſt men, ſervd his diſignements
In mine owne perſon: hope to reape the Fame
Which he did end all his; and tooke ſome pride
To do my ſelfe this wrong; Till at the laſt
I ſeem'd his Follower, nor Partner; and
He wadg'd me with his Countenance, as if
I had bin Mercenary.
1.Con. So he did my Lord:
The Army marveyled at it, and in the laſt,
When he had carried Rome, and that we look'd
For no leſſe Spoile, then Glory.
Auf. There was it:
For which my ſinewes ſhall be ſtretcht upon him,
At a few drops of Womens rhewme, which are
As cheape as Lies; he ſold the Blood and Labour
Of our great Action; therefore ſhall he dye,
And Ile renew me in his fall. But hearke,

Drummes and Trumpets ſounds, with great
ſhowts of the people.

1.Con. Your Native Towne you enter'd like a Poſte,
And had no welcomes home, but he returnes
Splitting the Ayre with noyſe,
2.Con. And patient Fooles,
Whoſe children he hath ſlaine, their baſe throats teare
With giving him glorie.
3.Con. Therefore at your vantage,
Ere he expreſſe himſelfe, or move the people
With what he would ſay, let him feele your Sword:
Which he will ſecond, when he lies along
After your way. His Tale pronounc'd, ſhall bury
His Reaſons, with his Body.
Auf. Say no more. Heere come the Lords,

Enter the Lords of the City.

All Lords. You are moſt welcome home.
Auf. I have not deſerv'd it.
But worthy Lords, have you with heede peruſed
What I have written to you?
All. We have.
1.Lord. And greeve to heare't:
What faults he made before the laſt, I thinke
Might have found eaſie Fines: But there to end
Where he was to begin, and give away
The benefit of our Levies, anſwering us
With our owne charge: making a Treatie, where
There was a yeelding; this admits no excuſe.

Auf. He approaches, you ſhall heare him.
Enter Coriolanus marching with Drumme, and Colours. The Commoners being with him.
Corio. Haile Lords, I am return'd your Souldier:
No more infected with my countries love
Then when I parted hence: but ſtill ſubſiſting
Vnder your great Command. You are to know,
That proſperouſly I have attempted, and
With bloody paſſage led your Warres, even to
The gates of Rome: Our ſpoiles we have brought home
Doth more then counterpoize a full third part
Thee charges of the Action. We have made peace
With no leſſe Honour to the Antiates
Then ſhame to th' Romaines. And we heare deliver
Subſcrib'd by'th' Conſuls, and Patricians,
Together with the Seale a'th Senat, what
We have compounded on.
Auf. Read it not Noble Lords,
But tell the Traitor in the higheſt degree
He hath abus'd your Powers.
Corio. Traitor? How now?
Auf. I Traitor, Martius.
Corio, Martius?
Auf. I Martius, Caius Martius: Do'ſt thou thinke
Ile grace thee with that Robbery, thy ſtolne name
Coriolanus in Corioles?
You Lords and Heads a'th' State, perfidiouſly
He ha's betray'd your buſineſſe, and given up
For certaine drops of Salt, your City Rome:
I ſay your City to his Wife and Mother,
Breaking his Oath and Reſolution, like
A twiſt of rotten Silke, never admitting
Counſaile a'th' warre: But at his Nurſes teares
He whin'd and roar'd away your Victorie,
That Pages bluſh'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wond'ring each at others.
Corio. Hear'ſt thou Mars?
Auf. Name not the God, thou boy of Teares.
Corio. Ha?
Aufid. No more.
Corio. Meaſureleſſe Lyar thou haſt made my heart
Too great for what containes it. Boy? Oh Slave,
Pardon me Lords, 'tis the firſt time that ever
I was forc'd to ſcoul'd. Your judgements my grave Lords
Muſt give this Curre the Lye: and his owne Notion,
Who weares my ſtripes impreſt upon him, that
Muſt beare my beating to his Grave, ſhall joyne
To thruſt the Lye unto him.
1 Lord. Peace both, and heare me ſpeake.
Corio. Cut me too peeces Volces men and Lads,
Staine all your edges on me. Boy, falſe Hound:
If you have writ your Annales true, 'tis there,
That like an Eagle in a Dove-coat, I
Flatter'd your Volcians in Coriolus.
Alone I did it, Boy!
Auf. Why Noble Lords,
Will you be put in minde of his blinde Fortune,
Which was your ſhame, by this unholy Braggart?
'Fore your owne eyes, and eares?
All Conſp. Let him dye for't.
All People. Teare him to peeces, do it preſently:
He kill'd my Sonne, my daughter, he kill'd my Coſine
Marcus, he kill'd my Father.
2 Lord. Peace hoe: no outrage, peace:
The man is Noble, and his Fame folds in
This Orbe o'th' earth: His laſt offences to us
Shall have Iudicious hearing. Stand Auffidius,
And trouble not the peace.
Corio. O that I had him, with ſix Auffidiuſſes, or more:
His Tribe to uſe my lawfull Sword.
Auf. Inſolent Villaine.
All Conſp. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.
Draw both the Conſpirators, and kils Martius, who falles, Auffidius ſtands on him.
Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.
Auf. My Noble Maſters, heare me ſpeake.
1. Lord. O Tullus.
2. Lord. Thou haſt done a deed, whereat
Valour will weepe.
3. Lord. Tread not upon him Maſters, all be quiet,
Put up your Swords.
Auf. My Lords.
When you ſhall know (as in this Rage
Provok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger
Which this mans life did owe you, you'l rejoyce
That he is thus cut off. Pleaſe it your Honours
To call me to your Senate, Ile deliver
My ſelfe your loyall Servant, or endure
Your heavieſt Cenſure.
1. Lord. Beare from hence his body,
And mourne you for him. Let him be regarded
As the moſt Noble Coarſe, that ever Herald
Did follow to his Vrne.
2. Lord. His owne impatience,
Takes from Auffidius a great part of blame:
Let's make the Beſt of it.
Auf My Rage is gone,
And I am ſtrucke with ſorrow. Take him up:
Helpe three a'th' chiefeſt Souldiers; Ile be one.
Beate thou the Drumme that it ſpeake mournfully:
Traile your ſteele Pikes. Though in this City hee
Hath widdowed and unchilded many a one,
Which to this houre bewaile the Injury.
Yet hee ſhall have a Noble memory. Aſſiſt.
Exeunt bearing the Body of Martius. A dead March Sounded.

FINIS.

The Lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter the Tribunes and Senators aloſt. And then enter Saturninus and his Followers at one doore, and Baſſianus and his Followers at the other, with Drum & Colours.

Saturninus.

NOble Patricians, Patrons of my right,
Defend the juſtice of my Cauſe with Armes.
And Country-men, my loving Followers,
Pleade my Succeſſive Title with your Swords.
I was the firſt borne Sonne, that was the laſt
That wore the Imperiall Diadem of Rome:
Then let my Fathers Honours live in me,
Nor wrong mine Age with this indignitie.

Baſſianus. Romaines, Friends, Followers,
Favovrers of my Right:
If ever Baſſianus, Caſars Sonne,
Were gracious in the eyes of Royall Rome,
Keepe then this paſſage to the Capitoll:
And ſuffer not Diſhonour to approach
Th' Imperiall Seate to Vertue: conſecrate
To Iuſtice, Continence, and Nobility:
But let Deſert in pure Election ſhine;
And Romanes, fight for Freedome in your Choice.

Enter Marcus Andronicus aloſt with the Crowne.

Princes, that ſtrive by Factions, and my Friends,
Ambitiouſly for Rule and Emperie:
Know, that the people of Rome for whom we ſtand
A ſpeciall Party, have by Common voyce
In Election for the Romane Emperie,
Choſen Andronicus, Sur-named Pius,
For many good and great deſerts to Rome.
A Nobler man, a braver Warriour,
Lives not this day within the City Walles.
He by the Senate is accited home
From weary Warres againſt the barbarous Gothes,
That with his Sonnes (a terror to our Foes)
Hath yoak'd a Nation ſtrong, train'd up in Armes.
Ten yeares are ſpent, ſince firſt he undertooke
This Cauſe of Rome, and chaſticed with armes
Our Enemies pride. Five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his Valiant Sonnes
Iu Coffins from the Field.
And now at laſt, laden with Honours Spoyles,
Returnes the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flouriſhing in Armes.
Let us intreat, by Honour of his Name
Whom (worthily) yon would have now ſucceede,
And in the Capitoll and Senates right,
Whom you pretend to honor and adore,
That you withdraw you, and abate your Strength,
Diſmiſſe your Followers, and as Suiters ſhould,
Pleade your Deſerts in Peace and Humbleneſſe.

Saturnine. How fayre the Tribune ſpeakes,
To calme my thoughts.

Baſſia. Marcus Andronicus, ſo I do aſſie
In thy uprightneſſe and Integrity:
And ſo I Love and honor thee, and thine,
Thy Noble Brother Titus, and his Sonnes,
And Her (to whom my thoughts are humbled all)
Gracious Lavinia, Romes rich Ornament,
That I will heere diſmiſſe my loving Friends:
And to my Fortunes, and the Peoples Favour,
Commit my Cauſe in ballance to be weigh'd,

Ex. Souldiers.

Saturnine. Friends, that have beene
Thus forward in my Right,
I thanke you all, and heere Diſmiſſe you all,
And to the Love and Favour of my Countrey,
Commit my Selfe, my Perſon, and the Cauſe:
Rome, be as juſt and gracious nnto me,
As I am confident and kinde to thee.
Open the Gates, and let me in.

Baſſia. Tribunes, and me, a poore Competitor.

They go up into the Senat houſe.

Enter a Captaine.

Cap. Romanes make way: the good Andronicus,
Patron of Vertue, Romes beſt Champion,
Succeſſefull in the Battailes that he fights,
With Honour and with Fortune is return'd,
From whence he circumſcribed with his Sword,
And brought to yoke the Enemies of Rome.

Sound Drummes and Trumpets. And then enter two of Titus Sonnes; After them, two men bearing a Coffin covered with blacke, then two other Sonnes. After them, Titus Andronicus, and then Tamora the Queene of Gothes, & her two Sonnes Chiron and Demetrius, with Aaron the Mooore, and others, as many as can bee: They ſet downe the Coffin, and Titus ſpeakes.

Andronicus. Haile Rome:
Victorious in thy Mourning Weedes:

Loe as the Barke that hath diſcharg'd his fraught,
Returnes with precious lading to the Bay,
From whence at firſt ſhe weigh'd her Anchorage:
Commeth Andronicus bound with Lawrell bowes,
To reſalute his Country with his teares,
Teares of true joy for his returne to Rome,
Thou great defender of this Capitoll,
Stand gracious to the Rites that we intend.
Romaines, of five and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
Halfe of the number that King Priam had,
Behold the poore remaines alive and dead!
Theſe that Surviue, let Rome reward with Love:
Theſe that I bring unto their lateſt home,
With buriall amongſt their Aunceſtors.
Heere Gothes have given me leave to ſheath my Sword:
Titus unkinde, and careleſſe of thine owne,
Why ſuffer'ſt thou thy Sonnes unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadfull ſhore of Stix?
Make way to lay them by their Bretheren.

They open the Tombe.

There greete in ſilence as the dead are wont,
And ſleepe in peace, ſlaine in your Countries warres:
O ſacret receptacle of my joyes,
Sweet Cell of vertue and Nobility,
How many Sonnes of mine haſt thou in ſtore,
That thou wilt never render to me more?
Luc. Give us the proudeſt priſoner of the Gothes,
That we may hew his limbes, and on a pile
Ad manus fratrum, ſacrifice his fleſh:
Before this earthly priſon of their bones,
That ſo the ſhadowes be not unappeas'd,
Nor we diſturb'd with prodigies on earth.
Tit. I give him you, the Nobleſt that Surviues,
The eldeſt Son of this diſtreſſed Queene.
Tam. Stay Romaine Bretheren, gracious Conqueror,
Victorious Titus, true the teares I ſhed,
A Mothers teares in paſſion for her ſonne:
And if thy Sonnes were ever deere to thee,
Oh thinke my ſonnes to be as deere to mee.
Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome
To beautifie thy Triumphs, and returne
Captive to thee, and to thy Romaine yoake,
But muſt my Sonnes be ſlaughtred in the ſtreetes,
For Valiant doings in their Countries cauſe?
O! If to fight for King and Common-weale,
Were piety in thine, it is in theſe:
Andronicus, ſtaine not thy Tombe with blood.
Wilt thou draw neere the nature of the Gods?
Draw neere them then in being mercifull,
Sweet mercy is Nobilities true badge,
Thrice Noble Titus, ſpare my firſt borne ſonne,
Tit. Patient your ſelfe Madam, and pardon me.
Theſe are the Brethren, whom you Gothes behold
Alive and dead, and for their Bretheren ſlaine,
Religiouſly they aske a ſacrifice;
To this your ſonne is markt, and die he muſt,
T'appeaſe their groaning ſhadowes that are gone.
Luc. Away with him, and make a fire ſtraight,
And with our Swords upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbes till they be cleane conſum'd.

Exit Sonnes with Alarbus.

Tam. O cruell irreligious piety.
Chi. Was ever Scythia halfe ſo barbarous?
Dem. Oppoſe me Scythia to ambitious Rome,
Alarbus goe to reſt, and we ſurvive,
To tremble under Titus threatning lookes,
Then Madam ſtand reſolv'd, but hope withall,
The ſelfe ſame Gods that arm'd the Queene of Troy
With opportunity of ſharpe revenge
Vpon the Thracian Tyrant in his Tent,
May favour Tamora the Queene of Gothes,
(When Gothes were Gothes, and Tamora was Queene)
To quit the bloody wrongs upon her foes.

Enter the Sonnes of Andronicus againe.

Luc. See Lord and Father, how we have perform'd
Our Romaine rites, Alarbus limbs are lopt,
And intrals feede the ſacrifizing fire,
Whoſe ſmoke like in cenſe doth perfume the skie.
Remaineth nought but to interre our Brethren,
And with low'd Larums welcome them to Rome.
Tit. Let it be ſo, and let Andronicus
Make this his lateſt farewell to their ſoules.

Then Sound Trumpets, and lay the Coffus in the Tombe.

In peace and Honour reſt you heere my Sonnes,
Romes readieſt Champions, repoſe you heere in reſt,
Secure from worldly chances and miſhaps:
Heere lurks no Treaſon, heere no envie ſwels,
Heere grow no damned grudges, heere no ſtormes,
No noiſe, but ſilence and Eternall ſleepe,
In peace and Honour reſt you heere my Sonnes,

Enter Lavinia.

Lav. In peace and Honour, live Lord Titus long,
My Noble Lord and Father, live in Fame:
Loe at this Tombe my tributary teares,
I'render for my Bretherens Obſequies:
And at thy feete I kneele, with teares of joy
Shed on the earth for thy returne to Rome.
O bleſſe me heere with thy victorious hand,
Whoſe Fortune Romes beſt Citizens applau'd.
Tit. Kind Rome,
That haſt thus lovingly reſerv'd
The Cordiall of mine age to glad my hart,
Lavinia live, out-live thy Fathers dayes:
And Fames eternall date for vertues praiſe.
Mar. Long live Lord Titus, my beloved brother,
Gracious Triumpher in the eyes of Rome.
Tit. Thankes Gentle Tribune,
Noble brother Marcus.
Mar. And welcome. Nephews from ſuccesfull wars,
You that ſurviue and you that ſleepe in Fame:
Faire Lords your Fortunes are all alike in all,
That in your Countries ſervice drew your Swords.
But ſafer Triumph is this Funerall Pompe,
That hath aſpir'd to Solons Happines,
And Triumphs over chaunce in honours bed.
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
Whoſe friend in juſtice thou haſt ever bene,
Send thee by me their Tribune and their truſt,
This Palliament of white and ſpotleſſe Hue,
And name thee in Election for the Empire,
With theſe our late deceaſed Emperours Sonnes:
Be Candidatus then, and put it on,
And helpe to ſet a head on headleſſe Rome.
Tit. A better head her Glorious body fits,
Then his that ſhakes for age and feebleneſſe:

What ſhould I d'on this Robe and trouble you,
Be choſen with proclamations to day,
To morrow yeeld up rule, reſigne my life,
And ſet abroad new buſineſſe for you all.
Rome I have bene thy Souldier forty yeares,
And led my Countries ſtrength ſucceſſefully,
And buried one, and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
Knighted in Field, ſlaine manfully in Armes,
In right and Service of their Noble Country:
Give me a ſtaffe of Honour for mine age,
But not a Scepter to controule the world,
Vpright he held it Lords, that held it laſt.

Mar. Titus, thou ſhalt obtaine and aske the Empiry.

Sat. Proud and ambitious Tribune can'ſt thou tell?

Titus. Patience Prince Saturninus.

Sat. Romaines do me right.
Patricians draw your Swords, and ſheath them not
Till Saturninus be Romes Emperour:
Andronicus would thou wert ſhipt to hell,
Rather then rob me of the peoples hearts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That Noble minded Titus meanes to thee.

Tit. Content thee Prince, I will reſtore to thee
The peoples hearts, and weane them from themſelves.

Baſs. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee
But Honour thee, and will doe till I die:
My Faction if thou ſtrengthen with thy Friend?
I will moſt thankefull be, and thankes to men
Of Noble mindes, is Honourable Meede.

Tit. People of Rome, and Noble Tribunes heere,
I aske your voices and your Suffrages,
Will you beſtow them friendly on Andronicus?

Tribu. To gratifie the good Andronicus,
And Gratulate his ſafe returne to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes I thanke you, and this ſure I make,
That you Create your Emperours eldeſt ſonne,
Lord Saturnine, whoſe Vertues will I hope,
Reflect on Rome as Tytans Rayes on earth,
And ripen Iuſtice in this Common-weale:
Then if you will elect by my adviſe,
Crowne him, and ſay: Long live our Emperour.

Mar. An. With Voices and applauſe of every ſort,
Patricians and Plebieans we Create
Lord Saturninus Romes Great Emperour.
And ſay, Long live our Emperour Saturnine.

A long Flouriſh till they come downe.

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy Favours done,
To us in our Election this day,
I give thee thankes in part of thy Deſerts,
And will with Deeds requite thy gentleneſſe;
And for an Onſet Titus to advance
Thy Name, and Honourable Family,
Lavinia will I make my Empreſſe,
Romes Royall Miſtris, Miſtris of my heart
And in the Sacred Pantheon her eſpouſe:
Tell me Andronicus doth this motion pleaſe thee?

Tit. It doth my worthy Lord, and in this match,
I hold me Highly Honoured of your Grace,
And heere in ſight of Rome, to Saturnine,
King and Commander of our Common-weale,
The Wide-worlds Emperour, do I Conſecrate,
My Sword, my Chariot, and my Priſoners,
Preſents well Worthy Romes Imperiall Lord:
Receive them then, the Tribute that I owe,
Mine Honours Enſignes humbled at my feete.

Sat. Thankes Noble Titus, Father of my life,
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts
Rome ſhall record, and when I do forget
The leaſt of theſe unſpeakable Deſerts,
Romans forget your Fealty to me.

Tit. Now Madame are you priſoner to an Emperour,
To him that for your Honour and your State,
Will uſe you Nobly and your followers.

Sat. A goodly Lady, truſt me of the Hue
That I would chooſe, were I to chooſe a new:
Cleere up Faire Queene that cloudy countenance,
Though chance of warre
Hath wrought this change of cheere,
Thou com'ſt not to be made a ſcorne in Rome:
Princely ſhall be thy uſage every way.
Reſt on my word, and let not diſcontent
Daunt all your hopes: Madam he comforts you,
Can you make you Greater then the Queene of Gothes?
Lavinia you are not diſpleas'd with this?

Lau. Not I my Lord, ſith true Nobility,
Warrants theſe words in Princely curteſie.

Sat. Thankes ſweete Lavinia, Romans let us goe:
Ranſomleſſe heere we ſet our Priſoners free,
Proclaime our Honors Lords with Trumpe and Drum.

Baſs. Lord Titus by your leave, this Maid is mine.

Tit. How ſir? Are you in earneſt then my Lord?

Baſs. I Noble Titus, and reſolu'd withall,
To doe my ſelfe this reaſon, and this right.

Marc. Suum cuique, is our Romane Iuſtice,
This Prince in Iuſtice ceazeth but his owne.

Luc. And that he will and ſhall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Traytors avant, where is the Emperours Guarde?
Treaſon my Lord, Lavinia is ſurpris'd.

Sat. Surpris'd, by whom?

Baſs. By him that juſtly may
Beare his Betroth'd, from all the world away.

Mut, Brothers helpe to convey her hence away,
And with my Sword Ile keepe this doore ſafe.

Tit. Follow my Lord, and Ile ſoone bring her backe.

Mut. My Lord you paſſe not heere.

Tit. What villaine Boy, bar'ſt me my way in Rome?

Mut. Helpe Lucius helpe. He kils him.

Luc. My Lord you are unjuſt, and more then ſo,
In wrongfull quarrell, you have ſlaine your ſon.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he are any ſonnes of mine.
My ſonnes would never ſo diſhonour me.
Traitor reſtore Lavinia to the Emperour.

Luc. Dead if you will, but not to be his wife,
That is anothers lawfull promiſt Love.

Enter aloſt the Emperour with Tamora and her two ſonnes and Aaron the Moore.

Emp. No Titus, no, the Emperour needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy ſtocke:
Ile truſt by Leiſure him that mocks me once.
Thee never: nor thy Trayterous haughty ſonnes,
Confederates all, thus to diſhonour me.
Was there none els in Rome to make a ſtale of
But Saturnine? Full well Andronicus
Agree theſe Deeds, with that proud bragge of thine,
That ſaid'ſt, I beg'd the Empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monſtrous, what reproachfull words are theſe?

Sat. But goe thy wayes, goe give that changing peece,
To him that flouriſht for her with his Sword:
A Valiant ſonne in-law thou ſhalt enjoy:
One, fit to bandy with thy lawleſſe Sonnes,

To ruffle in the Common-wealth of Rome.
Tit. Theſe words are Razors to my wounded heart.
Sat. And therefore lovely Tamora Queene of Gothes,
That like the ſtately Phœbe mong'ſt her Nimphs
Doſt over-ſhine the Gallant'ſt Dames of Rome,
If thou be pleas'd with this my ſodaine choiſe,
Behold I chooſe thee Tamora for my Bride,
And will Create thee Empreſſe of Rome.
Speake Queene of Goths doſt thou applaud my choiſe?
And heere I ſweare by all the Romaine Gods,
Sith Prieſt and Holy-water are ſo neere,
And Tapers burne ſo bright, and every thing
In readineſſe for Hymeneus ſtand,
I will not reſalute the ſtreets of Rome,
Or climbe my Pallace, till from forth this place,
I leade eſpous'd my Bride along with me,
Tamo. And heere in ſight of heaven to Rome I ſweare,
If Saturnine advance the Queene of Gothes,
She will a Hand-maid be to his deſires,
A loving Nurſe, a Mother to his youth.
Sat. Aſcend Faire Queene,
Panthean Lords, accompany
Your Noble Emperour and his lovely Bride,
Sent by the heavens for Prince Saturnine,
Whoſe wiſedome hath her Fortune Conquered,
There ſhall we Conſummate our Spouſall rites.
Exeunt omnes,
Tit. I am not bid to waite upon this Bride:
Titus when wer't thou wont to walke alone,
Diſhonoured thus and Challenged of wrongs?

Enter Marcus and Titus Sonnes.

Mar. O Titus ſee! O ſee what thou haſt done!
In a bad quarrell, ſlaine a Vertuous ſonne.
Tit. No fooliſh Tribune, no: No ſonne of mine,
Nor thou, nor theſe Confederates in the deed,
That hath diſhonoured all our Family,
Vnworthy brother, and unworthy Sonnes.
Luc. But let us give him buriall as becomes:
Give Mutius buriall with our Bretheren.
Tit. Traitors away, he reſt's not in this Tombe:
This Monument five hunreth yeares hath ſtood,
Which I have Sumptuouſly re-edified:
Heere none but Souldiers, and Romes Servitors,
Repoſe in Fame: None baſely ſlaine in braules,
Bury him where you can, he comes not heere.
Mar. My Lord this is impiety in you,
My Nephew Mutius deeds do plead for him,
He muſt be buried with his bretheren.
Titus two Sonnes ſpeakes.
And ſhall, or him we will accompany.
Ti. And ſhall! What villaine was it ſpake that word?
Titus ſonne ſpeakes.
He that would vouch'd it in any place but heere.
Tit, What would you bury him in my deſpight?
Mar. No Noble Titus but intreat of thee,
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.
Tit. Marcus, Even thou haſt ſtroke upon my Creſt,
And with theſe Boyes mine Honour thou haſt wounded,
My foes I doe repute you every one.
So trouble me no more, but get you gone.
1. Son. He is not himſelfe, let us withdraw.
2. Son. Not I tell Mutius bones be buried.
The Brother and the ſonnes kneele.
Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plea'd.
2. Son. Father, and in that name doth nature ſpeake.
Tit. Speake thou no more if all the reſt will ſpeede.
Mar. Renowned Titus more then halfe my ſoule.
Luc. Deare Father, ſoule and ſubſtance of us all.
Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to interre
His Noble Nephew heere in vertues neſt,
That died in Honour and Lavinia's cauſe.
Thou art a Romaine, be not barbarous:
The Greekes upon adviſe did bury Aiax
That ſlew himſelfe: And Laertes ſonne,
Did graciouſly plead for his Funerals:
Let not young Mutius then that was thy joy,
Be bar'd his entrance heere.
Tit. Riſe Marcus, riſe,
The diſmall'ſt day is this that ere I ſaw,
To be diſhonored by my Sonnes in Rome:
Well, bury him, and bury me the next.
They put him in the Tombe.
Luc. There lie thy bones ſweet Mutius with thy Till we with Trophees do adorne thy Tombe. (friends
They all kneele and ſay.
No man ſhed teares for Noble Mutius,
He lives in Fame, that di'd in vertues cauſe. Exit.
Mar. My Lord to ſtep out of theſe ſudden dumps,
How comes it that the ſubtile Queene of Gothes,
Is of a ſodaine thus advanc'd in Rome?
Ti. I know not Marcus: but I know it is,
(Whether by deviſe or no) the heavens can tell,
Is ſhe not then beholding to the man,
That brought her for this high good turne ſo farre?
Yes, and will Nobly him remunerate.

Flouriſh.
Enter the Emperor, Tamora, and her two ſons, with the Moore at one doore. Enter at the other doore Baſsianus and Lavinia with others.

Sat. So Baſsianus, you have plaid your prize,
God give you joy ſir of your Gallant Bride.
Baſ. And you of yours my Lord: I ſay no more,
Nor wiſh no leſſe, and ſo I take my leave.
Sat. Traitor, if Rome have law, or we have power,
Thou and thy Factiou ſhall repent this Rape.
Baſ. Rape call you it my Lord, to ſeiſe my owne,
My true betrothed Love, and now my wife?
But let the lawes of Rome determine all,
Meane while I am poſſeſt of that is mine.
Sat. Tis good ſir: you are very ſhort with us,
But if we live, weele be as ſharpe with you.
Baſ. My Lord, what I have done as beſt I may,
Anſwere I muſt, and ſhall do with my life,
Onely thus much I give your Grace to know,
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,
This Noble Gentleman Lord Titus heere,
Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd,
That in the reſcue of Lavinia,
With his owne hand did ſlay his youngeſt Son,
In zeale to you and highly mov'd to wrath,
To be controul'd in that he frankly gave:
Receive him then to favour Saturnine,
That hath expre'ſt himſelfe in all his deeds,
A Father and a friend to thee, and Rome.
Tit. Prince Baſsianus leave to plead my Deeds,
Tis thou, and thoſe, that have diſhonoured me,
Rome and the righteous heavens be my judge,
How I have lov'd and Honour'd Saturnine.
Tam. My worthy Lord if ever Tamora,

Were gratious in thoſe Princely eyes of thine,
Then heare me ſpeake indifferently for all:
And at my ſute (ſweet) pardon what is paſt.
Sat. What Madam, be diſhonoured openly,
And baſely put it up without revenge?
Tam. Not ſo my Lord,
The Gods of Rome for-fend,
I ſhould be Authour to diſhonour you,
But on mine honour dare, I undertake
For good Lord Titus innocence in all:
Whoſe fury not diſſembled ſpeakes his griefes:
Then at my ſute looke graciouſly on him,
Looſe not ſo noble a friend on vaine ſuppoſe,
Nor with ſowre lookes afflict his gentle heart.
My Lord, be rul'd by me, be wonne at laſt,
Diſſemble all your griefes and diſcontents,
You are but newly planted in your Throne,
Leaſt then the people, and Patricians too,
Vpon a juſt ſurvey take Titus, part,
And ſo ſupplant us for ingratitude,
Which Rome reputes to be a hainous ſinne.
Yeeld at intreats, and then let me alone:
Ile finde a day to maſſacre them all,
And race their faction, and their familie,
The cruell Father, and his trayt'rous ſonnes,
To whom I ſued for my deare ſonnes life.
And make them know what tis to let a Queene
Kneele in the ſtreetes, and beg for grace in vaine.
Come, come, ſweet Emperour, (come Andronicus)
Take up this good old man, and cheere the heart,
That dies in tempeſt of thy angry frowne.
Sat. Riſe Titus, riſe,
My Empreſſe hath prevail'd.
Tit. I thanke your Majeſty,
And her my Lord.
Theſe words, theſe lookes,
Infuſe new life in me.
Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily:
And muſt adviſe the Emperour for his good,
This day all quarrels die Andronicus.
And let it be mine honour good my Lord,
That I have reconcil'd your friends and you,
For you Prince Baſſianus, I have paſt
My word and promiſe to the Emperour,
That you will be more milde and tractable.
And feare not Lords:
And you Lavinia,
By my adviſe all humbled on your knees,
You ſhall aske pardon of his Majeſty.
Son. We doe,
And vow to heaven, and to his Highnes,
That what we did, was mildly, as we might,
Tendring our ſiſters honour and our owne.
Mar. That on mine honour heere I do proteſt.
Sat. Away and talke not, trouble us no more.
Tam. Nay, nay,
Sweet Emperour, we muſt all be friends,
The Tribune and his Nephews kneele for grace,
I wil not be denied, ſweet heart looke back.
Sat. Marcus,
For thy ſake and thy brothers heere,
And at my lovely Tamora's intreats,
I doe remit theſe young mens haynous faults.
Stand up: Lavinia, though you left me like a churle,
I found a friend, and ſure as death I ſware,
I would not part a Batchellour from the Prieſt.
Come, if the Emperours Court can feaſt two Brides,
You are my gueſt Lavinia, and your friends:
This day ſhall be a Love-day Tamora.
Tit. To morrow and it pleaſe your Majeſty,
To hunt the Panther and the Heart with me,
With horne and Hound,
Weele give your Grace Bon jour.
Sat. Be it ſo Titus, and Gramercy too. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Aron alone.

Aron. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus toppe,
Safe out of Fortunes ſhot, and ſits aloft,
Secure of Thunders cracke or lightning flaſh,
Advanc'd above pale envies threatning reach:
As when the golden Sunne ſalutes the morne,
And having gilt the Ocean with his beames,
Gallops the Zodiacke in his gliſtering Coach,
And over-lookes the higheſt piering hills:
So Tamora.
Vpon her wit doth earthly honour waite,
And vertue ſtoopes and trembles at her frowne.
Then Aron arme the heart, and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy Emperiall Miſtris,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Haſt priſoner held, fettred in amorous chaines,
And faſter bound to Arons charming eyes,
Then is Prometheus ti'de to Caucaſus.
Away with ſlaviſh weedes, and idle thoughts,
I will be bright and ſhine in Pearle and Gold,
To waite upon this new made Empreſſe,
To waite ſaid I? To wanton with this Queene,
This Goddeſſe, this Samiramis, this Queene,
This Syren, that will charme Romes Saturnine,
And ſee his ſhipwracke, and his Common weales.
Holla, what ſtorme is this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius braving.

Dem. Chiron thy yeeres want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners to intru'd where I am grac'd,
And may for ought thou know'ſt affected be.
Chi. Demetrius, thou doo'ſt over-weene in all,
And ſo in this, to beare me downe with braves,
Tis not the difference of a yeere or two
Makes me leſſe gracious, or thee moore fortunate:
I am as able, and as fit, as thou,
To ſerve, and to deſerve my Miſtris grace,
And that my ſword upon thee ſhall approve,
And plead my paſſions for Lavinia's love.
Ar. Clubs, clubs, theſe lovers will not keep the peace.
Dem. Why Boy, although our mother (unadviſed)
Gave you a daunſing Rapier by your ſide,
Are you ſo deſperate growne to threat your friends?
Goe to: have your Lath glued within your ſheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.
Chi. Meane while ſir, with the little ſkill I have,
Full well ſhalt thou perceive how much I dare.
Dem. I Boy, grow ye ſo brave? They drawe.
Ar. Why now Lords?
So nere the Emperours Pallace dare you draw.

And maintaine ſuch a quarrell openly?
Full well I wote,the ground of all this grudge.
I would not for a million of Gold,
The cauſe were knowue to them it moſt concernes.
Nor would your noble mother for much more
Be ſo diſhonored in the Court of Rome.
For ſhame put up.
Dem. Not I, till I have ſheath'd
My rapier in his boſome,and withall
Thruſt theſe reprochfull ſpeeches downe his throat,
That he hath breath'd in my diſhonour heere.
Chi. For that I am prepar'd,and full reſolv'd,
Foule ſpoken Coward,
That thundreſt with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing dar'ſt performe.
Ar. A way I ſay.
Now by the Gods that warlike Gothes adore,
This pretty brable will undoo us all:
Why Lords,and thinke you not how dangerous
It is to ſet upon a Princes right?
What is Lavinia then become ſo looſe,
Or Baſſianus ſo degenerate,
That for her love ſuch quarrels may be broacht,
Without controulement,Iuſtice,or revenge?
Young Lords beware,and ſhould the Empreſſe know,
This diſcord ground,the muſicke would not pleaſe.
Chi. I care not I,knew ſhe and all the world,
I love Lavinia more then all the world.
Dem. Youngling,
Learne thou to make ſome meaner choiſe,
Lavinia is thine elder brothers hope.
Ar. Why are ye mad?Or know ye not in Rome,
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brooke Competitors in love?
I tell you Lords,you doe but plot your deaths,
By this deviſe.
Chi. Aron,a thouſand deaths would I propoſe,
To atchieve her whom I do love.
Ar. To atchieve her,how?
Dem. Why,mak'ſt thou it ſo ſtrange?
Shee is a woman,therefore may be woo'd
Shee is a woman,therefore may be wonne,
Shee is Lavinia therefore muſt be lov'd.
What man,more water glideth by the Mill
Then wots the Miller of,and eaſie it is
Of a cut loafe to ſteale a ſhive we know:
Though Baſſianus be the Emperours brother,
Better then he have yet worne Vulcans badge.
Ar. I, and as good as Saturninus may.
Dem. Then why ſhould he diſpaire that knowes to court it
With words,faire lookes,and liberality:
What haſt not thou full often ſtrucke a Doe,
And borne her cleanly by the Keepers noſe?
Ar. Why then it ſeemes ſome certaine ſnatch or ſo
Would ſerve your turnes.
Chi. I ſo the turne were ſerved:
Dem. Aron thou haſt hit it.
Ar. Would you had hit it too,
Then ſhould not we be tir'd with this adoo:
Why harke yee,harke yee,and are you ſuch fooles,
To ſquare for this? Would it offend you then?
Chi. Faith not me.
Dem. Nor me,ſo I were one.
Ar For ſhame be friends,and joyne for that you iar:
Tis pollicy,and ſtratageme muſt doe
That you affect,and ſo muſt you reſolue,
That what you cannot as you would atchieve,
You muſt perforce accompliſh as you may:
Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaſt
Then this Lavinia, Baſsianus love,
A ſpeedier courſe this lingring languiſhment
Muſt we purſue,and I have found the path:
My Lords, a ſolemne hunting is in hand.
There will the lovely Roman Ladies troope:
The Forreſt walkes are wide and ſpacious,
And many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kinde for rape and villainy:
Single you thither then this dainty Doe.
And ſtrike her home by force,if not by words:
This way or not at all,ſtand you in hope.
Come,come,our Empreſſe with her ſacred wit
To villainy and vengeance conſecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend,
And ſhe ſhall file our engines with adviſe,
That will not ſuffer you to ſquare your ſelves,
But to your wiſhes height advance you both.
The Emperours Court is like the houſe of Fame,
The pallace full of tongues,of eyes,of eares:
The Woods are ruthleſſe, dreadfull,deafe,and dull:
There ſpeake,and ſtrike brave Boyes,& take your turnes.
There ſerve your luſts,ſhadow'd from heavens eye,
And revell in Lavinia's Treaſury.
Chi. Thy counſell Lad ſmells of no cowardiſe.
Dem. Sifas aut nefas, till I finde the ſtreames,
To coole this heat,a Charme to calme their fits,
Per Stigia,per manes Vehor. Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus and his three ſonnes, making a noiſe with hounds and hornes,and Marcus.

Tit. The hunt is up,the morne is bright and gray,
The fields are fragrant,and the Woods are greene,
Vncouple heere,and let us make a bay,
And wake the Emperour,and his lovely Bride,
And rouze the Prince,and ring a hunters peale,
That all the Court may eccho with the noiſe.
Sonnes let it be your charge,as it is ours,
To attend the Emperours perſon carefully:
I have bene troubled in my ſleepe this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inſpir'd.

Winde Hornes.

Heere a cry of houndes,and winde hornes in a peale,then Enter Saturninus,Tamora,Baſsianus , Lavinia,Chiron,Demetrius,and their Attendans.

Ti. Many good morrowes to your Majeſty,
Madam to you as many and as good.
I promiſed your Grace,a Hunters peale.
Sat. And you have rung it luſtily my Lords,
Some what too earely for new married Ladies.
Baſ. Lavinia,how ſay you?
Lau. I ſay no:
I have bene awake two houres and more.
Sat. Come on then,horſe and Chariots let us have,
And to our ſport:Madam, now ſhall ye ſee,
Our Romaine hunting.
Mar. I have dogges my Lord,
Will rouze the proudeſt Panther in the Chaſe,
And clime the higheſt Promontory top.
Tit. And I have horſe will follow where the game
Makes away,and runne like Swallowes ore the plaine

Dem. Chiron we hunt not we, with Horſe nor Hound,
But hope to plucke a dainty Do to ground. Exeunt.

Enter Aron alone.

Ar. He that had wit, would thinke that I had none,
To bury ſo much Gold under a Tree,
And never after to inherit it.
Let him that thinks ~~of me~~ ſo abjectly,
Know that this Gold muſt coine a ſtratageme,
Which cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent peece of villany:
And ſo repoſe ſweet Gold for their unreſt,
That have their Almes out of the Empreſſe Cheſt.

Enter Tamora to the Moore.

Tam. My lovely Aron,
Wherefore look'ſt thou ſad,
When every thing doth make a Gleefull boaſt?
The Birds chaunt melody on every buſh,
The Snake lies rolled in the cheare full Sunne,
The greene leaves quiver, with the cooling winde,
And make a cheker'd ſhadow on the ground:
Vnder their ſweet ſhade, Aron let us ſit,
And whil'ſt the babling Eccho mock's the Hounds,
Replying ſhrilly to the well tun'd-Hornes,
As a double hunt were heard at once,
Let us ſit downe, and marke their yelping noiſe:
And after conflict, ſuch as was ſuppos'd.
The wandring Prince and Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy ſtorme they were ſurpris'd,
And Curtain'd with a Counſaile-keeping Cave,
We may each wreathed in the others armes,
(Our paſtimes done) poſſeſſe a Golden ſlumber,
Whiles Hounds and Hornes, and ſweet Melodious Birds
Be unto us, as is a Nurſes Song
Of Lullaby, to bring her Babe aſleepe.

Ar. Madame,
Though Venus governe your deſires,
Saturne is Dominator over mine:
What ſignifies my deadly ſtanding eye,
My ſilence, and my Cloudy Melancholy,
My fleece of Woolly haire, that now uncurles,
Even as an Adder when ſhe doth unrowle
To do ſome fatall execution?
No Madam, theſe are no Veneriall ſignes,
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood, and revenge, are Hammering in my head,
Harke Tamora, the Empreſſe of my Soule,
Which never hopes more heaven, then reſts in thee,
This is the day of Doome for Baſſianus;
His Philomel muſt looſe her tongue to day,
Thy Sonnes make Pillage of her Chaſtity,
And waſh their hands in Baſſianus blood.
Seeſt thou this Letter, take it up I pray thee,
And give the King this fatall plotted Scrowle,
Now queſtion me no more, we are eſpied,
Heere comes a parcell of our hopefull Booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives deſtruction.

Enter Baſſianus and Lavinia.

Tam. Ah my ſweet Moore:
Sweeter to me then life.

Ar. No more great Empreſſe, Baſſianus comes,
Be croſſe with him, and Ile goe fetch thy Sonnes
To backe thy quarrell what ſo ere they be.

Baſ. Whom have we heere?
Romes Royall Empreſſe,
Vnfurniſht of our well beſeeming troop?
Or is it Dian habited like her,
Who hath abandoned her holy Groves,
To ſee the generall Hunting in this Forreſt?

Tam. Sawcy controller of our private ſteps:
Had I the power, that ſome ſay Dian had,
Thy Temples ſhould be planted preſently.
With Hornes, as was Acteons, and the Hounds
Should drive upon his new transformed limbes,
Vnmannerly Intruder as thou art.

Lau. Vnder your patience gentle Empreſſe,
Tis thought you have a goodly gift in Horning,
And to be doubted, that your Moore and you
Are ſingled forth to try experiments:
Iove ſhelld your husband from his Hounds to day,
Tis pitty they ſhould take him for a Stag.

Baſ. Beleeve me Queene, your ſwarth Cymmerian,
Doth make your Honour of his bodies Hue,
Spotted, deteſted, and abhominable.
Why are you ſequeſtred from all your traine?
Diſmounted from your Snow-white goodly Steed,
And wandred hither to an obſcure plot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moore,
If foule deſire had not conducted you?

Lau. And being intercepted in your ſport,
Great reaſon that my Noble Lord, be rated
For Saucineſſe, I pray you let us hence,
And let her joy her Raven coloured love,
This valley fits the purpoſe paſſing well.

Baſ. The King my brother ſhall have notice of this.

Lau. I, for theſe ſlips have made him noted long,
Good King, to be ſo mightily abuſed.

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius.

Dem. How now deere Soveraigne
And our gracious Mother,
Why doth your Highnes looke ſo pale and wan?

Tam. Have I not reaſon thinke you to looke pale?
Theſe two have tic'd me hither to this place,
A barren, deteſted vale you ſee it is.
The Trees (though Sommer) yet forlorne and leane,
Ore-come with Moſſe, and balefull Miſſelto.
Heere never ſhines the Sunne, heere nothing breeds,
Vnleſſe the nightly Owle, or fatall Raven:
And when they ſhew'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, heere at dead time of the night,
A thouſand Fiends, a thouſand hiſſing Snakes,
Ten thouſand ſwelling Toades, as many Vrchins,
Would make ſuch fearefull and confuſed cries,
As any mortall body hearing it,
Should ſtraite fall mad, or elſe die ſuddenly.
No ſooner had they told this helliſh tale,
But ſtrait they told me they would binde me heere,
Vnto the body of a diſmall yew,
And leave me to this miſerable death.
And then they call'd me foule Adultereſſe,
Laſcivious Goth, and all the bittereſt tearmes
That ever eaſe did heare to ſuch effect.
And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed:
Revenge it, as you love your Mothers life,
Or be ye not henceforth cal'd my Children.

Dem. This is a witneſſe that I am thy Sonne. Sab him.

Chi. And this for me,
Strook home to ſhew my ſtrength.

Lau. I come Semiramis, nay Barbarous Tamora,

For no name fits thy nature but thy owne.
Tam. Give me thy poygnard: you ſhal know my boyes
Your Mothers hand ſhall right your Mothers wrong.
Dem. Stay Madam heere is more belongs to her,
Firſt thraſh the Corne, then after burne the ſtraw:
This Minion ſtood upon her chaſtity,
Vpon her Nuptiall vow, her loyalty.
And with that painted hope ſhe braves your Mightineſſe,
And ſhall ſhe carry this unto her grave?
Chi. And if ſhe doe,
I would I were an Eunuch.
Drag hence her husband to ſome ſecret hole,
And make his dead Trunke-Pillow to our luſt.
Tam. But when ye have the hony ye deſire,
Let not this Waſpe out-live us both to ſting.
Chi. I warrant you Madam we will make that ſure:
Come Miſtris, now perforce we will enjoy,
That nice-preſerued honeſty of yours.
Lav. Oh Tamora, thou bear'ſt a woman face.
Tam. I will not heare her ſpeake, away with her.
Lav. Sweet Lords intreat her heare me but a word.
Dem. Liſten faire Madam, let it be your glory
To ſee her teares, but be your heart to them,
As unrelenting flint to drops of raine.
Lav. When did the Tigers young-ones teach the dam?
O doe not learne her wrath, ſhe taught it thee,
The milke thou ſuck'ſt from her did turne to Marble,
Even at thy Teat thou had'ſt thy Tyranny,
Yet every Mother breeds not Sonnes alike,
Do thou intreat her ſhew a woman pitty.
Chi. What,
Would'ſt thou have me prove my ſelfe a baſtard?
Lau. Tis true,
The Raven doth not hatch a Larke,
Yet have I heard, Oh could I finde it now,
The Lion mov'd with pitty, did indure
To have his Princely pawes par'd all away.
Some ſay, that Ravens foſter forlorne children,
The whil'ſt their owne birds famiſh in their neſts:
Oh be to me though thy hard heart ſay no,
Nothing ſo kind but ſomething pittifull.
Tam. I know not what it meanes, away with her.
Lav. Oh let me teach thee for my Fathers ſake,
That gave thee life when well he might have ſlaine thee:
Be not obdurate, open thy deafe eares.
Tam. Had'ſt thou in perſon nere offended me,
Even for his ſake am I now pittileſſe:
Remember Boyes I powr'd forth teares in vaine,
To ſave your brother from the ſacrifice,
But fierce Andronicus would not relent,
Therefore away with her, and uſe her as you will,
The worſe to her, the better lov'd of me.
Lau. Oh Tamora,
Be call'd a gentle Queene,
And with thine owne hands kill me in this place,
For tis not life that I have beg'd ſo long,
Poore I was ſlaine, when Baſsianus dy'd.
What beg'ſt thou then? fond woman, let me go?
Lav. Tis preſent death I beg, and one thing more,
That woman hood denies my tongue to tell:
Oh keepe me from their worſe then killing luſt,
And tumble me into ſome loathſome pit,
Where never mans eye may behold my body,
Doe this, and be a charitable murderer.
Tam. So ſhould I rob my ſweet Sonnes of their fee,
No, let them ſatisfie their luſt on thee.
Dem. Away,
For thou haſt ſtaid us heere too long.
Lau. No grace.
No woman hood? Ah beaſtly creature,
The blot and enemy to our generall name,
Confuſion all——
Chi. Nay then Ile ſtop your mouth:
Bring thou her husband,
This is the Hole where Aron bid us hide him. Exeunt.
Tam. Farewell my Sonnes, ſee that you make her ſure,
Nere let my heart know merry cheere indeed,
Till all the Andronici be made away:
Now will I hence to ſeeke my lovely Moore,
And let my ſpleenefull Sonnes this Trull defloure. Exit.

Enter Aron with two of Titus Sonnes.

Aron. Come on my Lords, the better foote before,
Straight will I bring you to the lothſome pit,
Where I eſpied the Panther faſt aſleepe.
Quin. My ſight is very dull what ere it bodes.
Mar. And mine I promiſe you, were it not for ſhame,
Well could I leave our ſport to ſleepe a while.
Quin. What art thou fallen?
What ſubtile Hole is this,
Whoſe mouth is covered with Rude growing Briers,
Vpon whoſe leaves are drops of new-ſhed-blood,
As freſh as mornings dew diſtil'd on flowers,
A very fatall place it ſeemes to me:
Speake Brother haſt thou hurt thee with the fall?
Mar. Oh Brother,
With the diſmal'ſt object
That ever eye with ſight made heart lament.
Ar. Now will I fetch the King to finde them heere,
That he thereby may have a likely gheſſe,
How theſe were they that made away his brother.
Exit Aron.
Mar. Why doſt not comfort me and helpe me out,
From this unhallow'd and blood-ſtained Hole?
Quin. I am ſurpriſed with an uncouth feare,
A chilling ſweat ore-runs my trembling joynts,
My heart ſuſpects more then mine eye can ſee.
Mar. To prove thou haſt a true divining heart,
Aron and thou looke downe into this den,
And ſee a fearefull ſight of blood and death.
Quin. Aron is gone,
And my compaſſionate heart
Will not permit mine eyes, once to behold
The thing where at it trembles by ſurmiſe:
Oh tell me how it is, for nere till now
Was I a child, to feare I know not what.
Mar. Lord Baſsianus lies embrewed heere,
All on a heape like to the ſlaughtred Lambe,
In this deteſted, darke, blood-drinking pit.
Quin. If it be darke, how dooſt thou know 'tis he?
Mar. Vpon his blody finger he doth weare
A precious Ring, that lightens all the Hole:
Which like a Taper in ſome Monument,
Doth ſhine upon the dead mans earthly cheekes,
And ſhewes the ragged intrailes of the pit:
So pale did ſhine the Moone on Piramus,
When he by night lay bath'd in Maiden blood:
O Brother helpe me with thy fainting hand,
If feare hath made the faint, as mee it hath,
Out of this fell devouring receptacle,
As hatefull as Cocitus miſtie mouth.
Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may helpe thee out,

Or wanting ſtrength to doe thee ſo much good,
I may be pluckt into the ſwallowing wombe,
Of this deepe pit, poore Baſsianus grave:
I have no ſtrength to plucke thee to the brinke.
Mar. Nor I no ſtrength to clime without thy helpe.
Quin. Thy hand once more, I will not looſe againe,
Till thou art heere aloft, or I below,
Thou can'ſt not come to me, I come to thee. Boths fall in.

Enter the Emperour, Aron the Moore.

Sat. Along with me, Ile ſee what hole is heere,
And what he is that now is leapt into i .
Say, who art thou that lately did'ſt deſcend,
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?
Mar. The unhappy ſonne of old Andronicus,
Brought hither in a moſt unlucky houre,
To finde thy brother Baſſianus dead.
Sat. My brother dead I know thou doſt but jeſt,
He and his Lady both are at the Lodge,
Vpon the North-ſide of this pleaſant Chaſe,
Tis not an houre ſince I left him there.
Mar. We know not where you left him all alive,
But out alas, heere have we found him dead.

Enter Tamora, Andronicus, and Lucius.

Tam. Where is my Lord the King?
Sat. Heere Tamora, though griev'd with killing griefe.
Tam. Where is thy brother Baſsianus?
Sat. Now to the bottome doſt thou ſearch my wound,
Poore Baſsianus heere lies murthered.
Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatall writ,
The complot of this timeleſſe Tragedy,
And wonder greatly that mans face can fold,
In pleaſing ſmiles ſuch murderous Tyranny.
She giveth Saturnine a Letter.

Saturninus reads the Letter.

And if we miſſe to meete him hanſomely,
Sweet huntſman. Baſſianus tis we meane,
Doe thou ſo much as dig the grave for him,
Thou know'ſt our meaning, looke for thy reward
Among the Nettles at the Elder tree:
Which over-ſhades the mouth of that ſame pit:
Where we decreed to bury Baſſianus,
Doe this and purchaſe us thy laſting friends.

Sat. Oh Tamora, was ever heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the Elder tree,
Looke ſirs, if you can finde the huntſman out,
That ſhould have murthered Baſſianus heere.
Ar. My gracious Lord heere is the bag of Gold.
Sat. Two of thy whelpes, fell Curs of bloody kind
Have heere bereft my brother of his life:
Sirs drag them from the pit unto the priſon,
There let them bide untill we have devis'd
Some never heard-of tortering paine for them.
Tam. What are they in this pit,
Oh wondrous thing!
How eaſily murder is diſcovered?
Tit. High Emperour, npon my feeble knee,
I beg this boone, with teares, not lightly ſhed,
That this fell fanlt of my accurſed Sonnes,
Accurſed, if the faults be prou'd in them.
Sat. If it be prov'd? you ſee it is apparant,
Who found this Letter, Tamora was it you?
Tam. Andronicus himſelfe did take it up.
Tit. I did my Lord,
Yet let me be their baile.
For by my Fathers reverent Tombe I vow
They ſhall be ready at your Highnes will,
To anſwere their ſuſpition with their lives.
Sat. Thou ſhalt not baile them, ſee thou follow me:
Some bring the murthered body, ſome the murtherers,
Let them not ſpeake a word, the guilt is plaine,
For by my ſoule, were there worſe end then death,
That end upon them ſhould be executed.
Tam. Andronicus I will entreat the King,
Feare not thy Sonnes, they ſhall do well enough.
Tit. Come Lucius come,
Stay not to talke with them. Exeunt.

Enter the Empreſſe Sonnes, with Lavinia, her hands cut off and her tongue cut out, and raviſht.

Dem. So now goe tell and if thy tongue can ſpeake,
Who t'was that cut thy tongue and raviſht thee.
Chi. Write downe thy mind, bewray thy meaning ſo,
And if thy ſtumpes will let thee play the Scribe.
Dem. See how with ſignes and tokens ſhe can ſcowle.
Chi. Goe home,
Call for ſweet water, waſh thy hands.
Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to waſh.
And ſo let's leave her to her ſilent walkes.
Chi. And t'were my cauſe, I ſhould goe hang my ſelfe.
Dem. If thou had'ſt hands to helpe thee knit the cord.
Exeunt.

Winde Hornes.

Enter Marcus from hunting to Lavinia.

Who is this, my Neece that flies away ſo faſt?
Coſen a word, where is your husband?
If I do dreame, would all my wealth would wake me,
If I do wake, ſome Planet ſtrike me downe,
That I may ſlumber in eternall ſleepe.
Speake gentle Neece, what ſterne ungentle hands
Hath lopt, and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, thoſe ſweet Ornaments
Whoſe circkling ſhadows, Kings have ſought to ſleep in
And might not gaine ſo great a happines
As halfe thy Love: Why doeſt not ſpeake to me?
Alas, a Crimſon river of warme blood,
Like to a bubling fountaine ſtir'd with winde,
Doth riſe and fall betweene thy Roſed lips,
Comming and going with thy hony breath.
But ſure ſome Tereus hath defloured thee,
And leaſt thou ſhould'ſt detect them, cut thy tongue,
Ah, now thou turn'ſt away thy face for ſhame:
And notwith ſtanding all this loſſe of blood,
As from a Conduit with their iſſuing Spouts,
Yet doe thy cheekes looke red as Titans face,
Bluſhing to be encountred with a Cloud,
Shall I ſpeake for thee? ſhall I ſay tis ſo?
Oh that I knew thy hart, and knew the beaſt
That I might raile at him to eaſe my mind.
Sorrow concealed, like an Oven ſtopt,
Doth burne the heart to Cinders where it is.
Faire Philomela ſhe but loſt her tongue,
And in a tedious Sampler ſowed her minde.
But lovely Neece, that meane is cut from thee,
A craftier Tereus haſt thou met withall,
And he hath cut thoſe pretty fingers off,

That could have better ſowed then Philomel.
Oh had the monſter ſeene thoſe Lilly hands,
Tremble like Aſpen leaves upon a Lute,
And make the ſilken ſtrings delight to kiſſe them,
He would not then have toucht them for his life.
Or had he heard the heavenly Harmony,
Which that ſweet tongue hath made:
He would have dropt his knife and fell aſleepe,
As Cerberus at the Thracian Poets feete.
Come,let us goe,and make thy father blinde,
For ſuch a ſight will blinde a fathers eye.
One houres ſtorme will drowne the fragrant meades,
What, will whole months of teares thy Fathers eyes?
Doe not draw backe,for we will mourne with thee:
Oh could our morning eaſe thy miſery. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Iudges and Senatours with Titus two ſonnes bound, paſſing on the Stage to the place of execution, and Titus going before pleading.

Ti. Heare me grave fathers,noble Tribunes ſtay,
For pitty of mine age,whoſe youth was ſpent
In dangerous warres,whilſt you ſecurely ſlept:
For all my blood in Romes great quarrell ſhed,
For all the froſty nights that I have watcht,
And for theſe bitter teares, which now you ſee,
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheekes,
Be pittifull to my condemned Sonnes,
Whoſe ſoules are not corrupted as tis thought:
For two and twenty ſonnes I never weept,
Becauſe they died in honours lofty bed.
Andronicus lyeth downe,and the Iudges paſſe by him.
For theſe,theſe Tribunes,in the duſt I write
My harts deepe languor,and my ſoules ſad teares:
Let my teares ſtench the earths dry appetite.
My ſonnes ſweet blood,will make it ſhame and bluſh:
O earth ! I will be friend thee more with raine Exeunt.
That ſhall diſtill from theſe two ancient ruines,
Then youthfull Aprill ſhall with all his ſhowres
In ſummers drought:Ile drop upon thee ſtill,
In Winter with warme teares Ile melt the ſnow
And keepe eternall ſpring-time on thy face,
So thou refuſe to drinke my deare ſonnes blood.

Enter Lucius, with his weapon drawne.

Oh reverent Tribunes,oh gentle aged men,
Vnbinde my ſonnes,reverſe the doome of death,
And let me ſay(that never wept before)
My teares are now prevaling Oratours.
Lu. Oh noble father,you lament in vaine,
The Tribunes heare you not,no man is by,
And you recount your ſorrowes to a ſtone.
Tit. Ah Lucius for thy brothers let me plead,
Grave Tribunes,once more I intreat of you.
Lu. My gracious Lord, no Tribune heares you ſpeake.
Tit. Why tis no matter man,if they did heare
They would not marke me:oh if they did heare
They would not pitty me.
Therefore I tell my ſorrowes bootles to the ſtones.
Who though they cannot anſwere my diſtreſſe,
Yet in ſome ſort they are better then the Tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale;
When I doe weepe,they humbly at my feete
Receive my teares,and ſeeme to weepe with me,
And were they but attired in grave weedes,
Rome could afford no Tribune like to theſe.
A ſtone is as ſoft waxe,
Tribunes more hard then ſtones:
A ſtone is ſilent,and offendeth not,
And Tribunes with their tongues doome men to death.
But wherefore ſtand'ſt thou with thy weapon drawne?
Lu. To reſcue my two brothers from their death,
For which attempt the Iudges have pronounc'ſt
My everlaſting doome of baniſhment.
Ti. O happy man,they have befriended thee:
Why fooliſh Lucius,doſt thou not perceive
That Rome is but a wildernes of Tigers?
Tigers muſt prey,and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine:how happy art thou then,
From theſe devourers to be baniſhed?
But who comes with our brother Marcus heere?

Enter Marcus and Lavinia.

Mar. Titus,prepare thy noble eyes to weepe,
Or if not ſo,thy noble heart to breake:
I bring conſuming ſorrow to thine age.
Ti. Will it conſume me?Let me ſee it then.
Mar. This was thy daughter.
Ti. Why Marcus ſo ſhe is.
Lu. Aye me this object kils me.
Ti. Faint-harted boy,ariſe and looke upon her,
Speake my Lavinia,what accurſed hand
Hath made thee handleſſe in thy Fathers ſight?
What foole hath added water to the Sea?
Or brought a faggot to bright burning Troy?
My griefe was at the light before thou cam'ſt,
And now like Nylus it diſdaineth bounds:
Give me a ſword,Ile chop off my hands too,
For they have fought for Rome,and all in vaine:
And they have nur'ſt this woe,
In feeding life:
In bootleſſe prayer have they bene held up,
And they have ſerv'd me to effectleſſe uſe.
Now all the ſervice I require of them,
Is that the one will helpe to cut the other:
Tis well Lavinia, that thou haſt no hands,
For hands to do Rome ſervice,is but vaine.
Lu. Speake gentle ſiſter, who hath martyr'd thee?
Mar. O that delightfull engine of her thoughts,
That blab'd them with ſuch pleaſing eloquence,
Is torne from forth that pretty hollow cage,
Where like a ſweet mellodious bird it ſung,
Sweet varied notes inchanting every eare.
Luc. Oh ſay thou for her,
Who hath done this deed?
Mar. Oh thus I found her ſtraying in the Parke,
Seeking to hide herſelfe as doth the Deare
That hath recev'd ſome unrecuring wound.
Tit. It was my Deare,
And he that wounded her,
Hath hurt me more,then had he kild me dead:
For now I ſtand as one upon a Rocke,
Inviron'd with a wilderneſſe of Sea.
Who makes the waxing tide,
Grow wave by wave,

Expecting ever when ſome envious ſurge,
Will in his briniſh bowels ſwallow him.
This way to death my wretched ſonnes are gone:
Heere ſtands my other ſonne, a baniſht man,
And heere my brother weeping at my woes.
But that which gives my ſoule the greateſt ſpurne,
Is deere Lavinia, deerer then my ſoule.
Had I but ſeene thy picture in this plight,
It would have madded me. What ſhall I doe?
Now I behold thy lively body ſo?
Thou haſt no hands to wipe away thy teares,
Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyr'd thee;
Thy husband he is dead, and for his death
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.
Looke Marcus, ah ſonne Lucius looke on her:
When I did name her brothers, then freſh teares
Stood on her cheekes, as doth the hony dew,
Vpon a gathred Lillie almoſt withered,
Mar. Perchance ſhe weepes becauſe they kil'd her husband,
Perchance becauſe ſhe knowes him innocent.
Tit. If they did kill thy husband then be joyfull,
Becauſe the law hath tane revenge on them.
No, no, they would not doe ſo foule a deede,
Witnes the ſorrow that their ſiſter makes.
Gentle Lavinia let me kiſſe thy lips,
Or make ſome ſignes how I may do thee eaſe:
Shall thy good Vncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou and I ſit round about ſome Fountaine,
Looking all downewards to behold our cheekes
How they are ſtain'd in meadows, yet not dry
With miery ſlime left on them by a flood:
And in the Fountaine ſhall we gaze ſo long,
Till the freſh taſte be taken from that cleerenes,
And made a brine pit with our bitter teares?
Or ſhall we cut away our hands like thine?
Or ſhall we bite our tongues, and in dumbe ſhewes
Paſſe the remainder of our hatefull dayes?
What ſhall we doe? Let us that have our tongues
Plot ſome deviſe of further miſeries
To make us wondred at in time to come.
Lu. Sweet Father ceaſe your teares, for at your griefe
See how my wretched ſiſter ſobs and weeps.
Ma. Patience deere Neece, good Titus drie thine eyes.
Tit. Ah Marcus, Marcus, Brother well I wot,
Thy napkin cannot drinke a teare of mine,
For thou poore man haſt drown'd it with thine owne.
Lu. Ah my Lavinia I will wipe thy cheekes.
Tit. Marke Marcus marke, I underſtand her ſignes,
Had ſhe a tongue to ſpeake, now would ſhe ſay
That to her brother which I ſaid to thee.
His Napkin with her true teares all bewet,
Can do no ſervice on her ſorrowfull cheekes.
Oh what a ſimpathy of woe is this!
As farre from helpe as Limbo is from bliſſe.

Enter Aron the Moore alone.

Moore. Titus Andronicus, my Lord the Emperour,
Sends thee this word, that if thou love thy ſonnes,
Let Marcus Lucius, or thy ſelfe old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And ſend it to the King: he for the ſame,
Will ſend thee hither both thy ſonnes alive,
And that ſhall be the ranſome for their fault.
Tit. Oh gracious Emperour, oh gentle Aaron.
Did ever Raven ſing ſo like a Larke,
That gives ſweet tydings of the Sunnes upriſe?
With all my heart, Ile ſend the Emperour my hand,
Good Aaron wilt thou help to chop it off?
Lu. Stay Father, for that noble hand of thine,
That hath throwne downe ſo many enemies,
Shall not be ſent: my hand will ſerve the turne.
My youth can better ſpare my blood then you,
And therefore mine ſhall ſave my brothers lives.
Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,
And rear'd aloft the bloody Battleaxe,
Writing deſtruction on the enemies Caſtle?
Oh none of both but are of high deſert:
My hand hath bin but idle, let it ſerve
To ranſome my two nephewes from their death,
Then have I kept it to a worthy end.
Moo. Nay come agree, whoſe hand ſhall goe along,
For feare they die before their pardon come.
Mar. My hand ſhall goe.
Lu. By heaven it ſhall not goe.
Ti. Sirs ſtrive no more, ſuch withered hearbs as theſe
Are meete for plucking up, and therefore mine.
Lu. Sweet Father, if I ſhall be thought thy ſonne,
Let me redeeme my brothers both from death.
Mar. And for our fathers ſake, and mothers care,
Now let me ſhew a brothers love to thee.
Ti. Agree betweene you, I will ſpare my hand.
Lu. Then Ile goe fetch an Axe.
Mar. But I will uſe the Axe. Exeunt.
Ti. Come hither Aaron, Ile deceive them both,
Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine,
Moo. If that be cal'd deceit, I will be honeſt,
And never whil'ſt I live deceive men ſo:
But Ile deceive you in another ſort,
And that you'l ſay ere halfe an houre paſſe.

He cuts off Titus hand.

Enter Lucius and Marcus againe.

Ti. Now ſtay your ſtrife, what ſhall be, is diſpatcht:
Good Aaron give his Majeſty my hand,
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thouſand dangers: bid him bury it:
More hath it merited: That let it have.
As for my ſonnes, ſay I account of them,
As iewels purchaſt at an eaſie price,
And yet deere too, becauſe I bought mine owne.
Aaron. I goe Andronicus, and for thy hand,
Looke by and by to have thy ſonnes with thee:
Their heads I meane: Oh how this villany
Doth fat me with the very thought of it.
Let fooles doe good, and faire men call for grace,
Aron will have his ſoule blacke like his face. Exit.
Ti. O heere I lift this one hand up to heaven,
And bow this feeble ruine to the earth,
If any power pitties wretched teares,
To that I call: what wilt thou kneele with me?
Doe then deare heart, for heaven ſhall heare our prayers,
Or with our ſighs weele breath the welkin dimme,
And ſtaine the Sun with fogge as ſometime cloudes,
When they do hug him in their melting boſomes.
Mar. Oh brother ſpeake with poſſibilities,
And do not breake into theſe deepe extreames.
Ti. Is not my ſorrow deepe, having no bottome?
Then

Then be my paſſions botromleſſe with them.
Mar. But yet let reaſon governe thy lament.
Tit. If there were reaſon for theſe miſeries,
Then into limits could I binde my woes:
When heaven doth weepe, doth not the earth ore flow?
If the windes rage,doth not the Sea wax mad,
Threatning the welkin with his big-ſwolne face?
And wilt thou have a reaſon for this coile?
I am the Sea. Harke how her ſighes doe blow:
Shee is the weeping welkin,I the earth:
Then muſt my Sea be moved with her ſighes,
Then muſt my earth with her continuall teares,
Become a deluge:overflow'd and drown'd:
For why,my bowels cannot hide her woes,
But like a drunkard muſt I vomit them:
Then give me leave,for looſers will have leave,
To eaſe their ſtomackes with their bitter tongues,

Enter a meſſenger with two heads and a hand.

Meſ. Worthy Andronicus,ill art thou repaid,
For that good hand thou ſent'ſt the Emperour:
Heere are the heads of thy two noble ſonnes.
And heeres thy hand in ſcorne to thee ſent backe:
Thy griefes,their ſports:Thy reſolution mockt,
That woe is me to thinke upon thy woes,
More then remembrance of my fathers death. Exit.
Mar. Now let hot Ætna coole in Cicily,
And be my heart an ever-burning hell:
Theſe miſeries are more then may be borne,
To weepe with them that weepe,doth eaſe ſome deale,
But ſorrow flouted at, is double death.
Luc. Ah that this ſight ſhould make ſo deep a wound,
And yet deteſted life not ſhrinke thereat:
That ever death ſhould let life beare his name,
Where life hath no more intereſt but to breath.
Mar. Alas poore hart that kiſſe is comfortleſſe,
As frozen water to a ſtarved ſnake.
Tit. When will this fearefull ſlumber have an end?
Mar. Now farewell flattery,die Andronicus,
Thou doſt not ſlumber,ſee thy two ſons heads,
Thy warlike hands,thy mangled daughter here:
Thy other baniſht ſonnes with this deere ſight
Strucke pale and bloodleſſe,and thy brother I,
Even like a ſtony Image,cold and numme.
Ah now no more will I controule my griefes,
Rent off thy ſilver haire,thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth,and be this diſmall ſight
The cloſing up of our moſt wretched eyes:
Now is a time to ſtorme,why art thou ſtill?
Tit. Ha,ha,ha.
Mar. Why doſt thou laugh?it fits not with this houre.
Tit. Why I have not another teare to ſhed:
Beſides,this ſorrow is an enemy,
And would uſurpe upon my watry eyes,
And make them blinde wit tributary teares,
Then which way ſhall I finde Revenges Cave?
For theſe two heads doe ſeeme to ſpeak to me,
And threat me,I ſhall never come to bliſſe,
Till all theſe miſchiefes be returned againe,
Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come let me ſee what taske I have to doe,
You heavy people,circle me about,
That I may turne me to each one of you,
And ſweare unto my ſoule to right your wrongs.
The vow is made,come Brother take a head,
And in this hand the other will I beare.
Lavinia thou ſhalt be employd in theſe things:
Beare thou my hand ſweet wench betweene thy teeth:
As for thee boy,goe get thee from my ſight,
Thou art an Exile,and thou muſt not ſtay.
Hie to the Gothes,and raiſe an army there,
And if you love me,as I thinke you doe,
Let's kiſſe and part,for we have much to doe. Exeunt.

Manet Lucius.

Luc. Farewell Andronicus my noble Father.
The woful'ſt man that ever liv'd in Rome:
Farewell proud Rome,till Lucius come againe,
He loves his pledges dearer then his life:
Farewell Lavinia my noble ſiſter,
O would thou wert as thou to fore haſt beene,
But now,nor Lucius nor Lavinia lives
But in oblivion and hatefull griefes:
It Lucius live,he will requit your wrongs,
And make proud Saturninus and his Empreſſe
Beg at the gates like Tarquin and his Queene.
Now will I to the Gothes and raiſe a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine. Exit Lucius.

A Banquet.
Enter Andronicus, Marcus, Lavinia, and the Boy.

An. So,ſo, now ſit,and looke you eate no more
Then will preſerve juſt ſo much ſtrength in us
As will revenge theſe bitter woes of ours.
Marcus unknit that ſorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy Neece an I(poore Creatures)want our hands
And cannot paſſionate our tenfold griefe,
With foulded Armes. This poore right hand of mine,
Is left to tirranize upon my breaſt
Who when my heart all mad with miſery,
Beats in this hollow priſon of my fleſh,
Then thus I thumpe it downe.
Thou Map of woe,that thus doſt talke in ſignes,
When thy poore heart beates with outragious beating,
Thou canſt not ſtrike it thus to make it ſtill?
Wound it with ſighing girle,kil it with grones:
Or get ſome little kniſe betweene thy teeth,
And juſt againſt thy heart make thou a hole,
That all the teares that thy poore eyes let fall
May run into that ſinke,and ſoaking in,
Drowne the lamenting foole,in Sea-ſalt teares.
Mar. Fy brother fy,teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.
An. How now! Has ſorrow made thee doate already?
Why Marcus,no man ſhould be mad but I:
What violent hands can ſhe lay on her life:
Ah,wherefore doſt thou urge the name of hands,
To bid Æneas tell the tale twice ore
How Troy was burnt,and he made miſerable?
O handle not the theame,to talke of hands,
Leaſt we remember ſtill that we have none,
Fie,fie,how Frantiquely I ſquare my talke
As if we ſhould forget we had no hands:
If Marcus did not name the word of hands.
Come,lets fall too,and gentle girle eate this,
Heere is no drinke?Harke Marcus what ſhe ſayes,
I can interpret all her martir'd ſignes,
She ſaies,ſhe drinkes no other drinke but teares
Brew'd with her ſorrows:meſh'd upon her cheekes,

Speechleſſe complaint,O I will learne thy thought:
In thy dumb action,will I be as perfect
As begging Hemits in their holy prayers.
Thou ſhalt not ſighe nor hold thy ſtumps to heaven,
Nor winke,nor nod,nor kneele,nor make a ſigne,
But I (of theſe) will wreſt an Alphabet,
And by ſtill practice,learne to know thy meaning.
Boy. Good grandſire leave theſe bitter deepe laments,
Make my Aunt merry, with ſome pleaſing tale.
Mar. Alas,the tender boy in paſſion mov'd,
Doth weepe to ſee his grandſires heavineſſe,
An. Peace tender Sapling,thou art made of teares,
And teares will quickly melt thy life away.

Marcus ſtrikes the diſh with a knife.

What doeſt thou ſtrike at Marcus with thy knife.
Mar. At that that I have kill'd my Lord,a Flye
An. Out on the murderour:thou kil'ſt my heart.
Mine eyes are cloi'd with view of Tirrany:
A deed of death done on the Innocent
Becoms not Titus brother:get thee gone,
I ſee thou art not for my company:
Mar. Alas(my Lord)I have but kild a flie.
An. But?How:if that Flie had a father and mother?
How would he hang his ſlender gilded wings
And buz lamenting doings in the ayer,
Poore harmeleſſe Fly,
That with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came heere to make us merry,
And thou haſt kil'd him.
Mar. Pardon me ſir,
It was a blacke illfavour'd Fly,
Like to the Empreſſe Moore,therefore I kild him.
An. O,o,o,
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou haſt done a Charitable deed:
Give me thy knife,I will inſult on him,
Flattering my ſelfe, as if it were the Moore,
Come hither purpoſely to poiſon me.
There's for thy ſelfe,and thats for Tamora: Ah ſirra,
Yet I thinke we are not brought ſo low,
But that betweene us,we can kill a Fly,
That comes in likeneſſe of a Cole-blacke Moore.
Mar. Alas poore man,griefe ha's ſo wrought on him,
He takes falſe ſhadowes,for true ſubſtances.
And:Come,take away:Lavinia,goe with me,
Ile to thy cloſſet,and goe read with thee
Sad ſtories,chanced in the times of old.
Come boy,and goe with me,thy ſight is young,
And thou ſhalt read,when mine begin to dazell. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter young Lucius and Lavinia running after him, and the Boy flies from her with his bookes under his arme.
Enter Titus and Marcus.

Boy. Helpe Grandſier helpe,my Aunt Lavinia,
Followes me every where I know not why.
Good Vncle Marcus ſee how ſwift ſhe comes,
Alas ſweet Aunt,I know not what you meane.
Mar. Stand by me Lucius,doe not feare thy Aunt.
Tit. She loves thee boy too well to doe thee harme
Boy. I when my father was in Rome ſhe did.
Ma. What meanes my Neece Lavinia by theſe ſignes?
Ti. Feare not Lucius,ſome what doth ſhe meane:
See Lucius ſee,how much ſhe makes of thee:
Some whither would ſhe have thee go with her.
Ah boy, Cornelia never with more care
Read to her ſonnes,then ſhe hath read to thee,
Sweet Poetry,and Tullies Oratour:
Canſt thou not geſſe wherefore ſhe plies thee thus?
Boy. My Lord I know not I,nor can I geſſe,
Vnleſſe ſome fit or frency do poſſeſſe her:
For I have heard my Grandſier ſay full oft,
Extremity of griefes would make men mad.
And I have read that Hecuba of Troy,
Ran mad through ſorrow,that made me to feare,
Although my Lord,I know my noble Aunt,
Loues me as deare as ere my mother did,
And would not but in fury fright my youth,
Which made me downe to throw my bookes,and flie
Cauſles perhaps,but pardon me ſweet Aunt,
And Madam,if my Vncle Marcus goe,
I will moſt willingly attend your Ladyſhip.
Mar. Lucius I will.
Ti. How now Lavinia,Marcus what meanes this?
Some booke there is that ſhe deſires to ſee,
Which is it girle of theſe?Open them boy,
But thou art deeper read and better skild,
Come and take choyſe of all my Library,
And ſo beguile thy ſorrow,till the heavens
Reveale the damn'd contriver of this deed:
What booke?
Why lifts ſhe up her armes in ſequence thus?
Mar. I think ſhe meanes that ther was more then one
Confederate in the fact,I more there was:
Or elſe to heaven ſhe heaves them to revenge.
Tit. Lucius what booke is that ſhe toſſeth ſo?
Boy. Grandſier tis Ovids Metamorphoſis,
My mother gave it me,
Mar. For love of her that's gone,
Perhaps ſhe culd it from among the reſt.
Tit. Soft,ſo buſily ſhe turnes the leaves.
Helpe her, what would ſhe finde? Lavinia ſhall I read?
This is the tragicke tale of Philomel?
And treates of Tereus treaſon and his rape,
And rape I feare was roote of thine annoy.
Mar. See brother ſee, note how ſhe quotes the leaves
Tit. Livinia,wert thou thus ſurpriz'd ſweet girle,
Raviſht and wrong'd as Philomela was?
Forc'd in the ruthleſſe,vaſt,and gloomy woods?
See,ſee,I ſuch a place there is where we did hunt,
(O had we never,never hunted there)
Patern'd by that the Poet heere deſcribes,
By nature made for murthers and for rapes.
Mar. O Why ſhould nature build ſo foule a den,
Vnleſſe the Gods delight in tragedies?
Ti. Give ſignes ſweet girle,for heere are none but friẽds
What Romaine Lord it was durſt do the deed?
Or ſlunke not Saturnine,as Tarquin erſt,
That left the Campe to ſinne in Lucrece bed.
Mar. Sit downe ſweet Neece, brother ſit downe by me,
Apollo,Pallas,Iove,or Mercury,
Inſpire me that I may this treaſon finde.
My Lord looke heere,looke heere Lavinia,

He writes his Name with his ſtaffe, and guides it with feete and mouths.

This ſandy plot is plaine,guide if thou canſt

This after me, when I have writ my name,
Without the helpe of any hand at all.
Curſt be that heart that forc'ſt us to this ſhift:
Write thou good Neece, and heere diſplay at laſt,
What God will have diſcovered for revenge,
Heaven guide thy pen to print thy ſorrowes plaine,
That we may know the Traytors and the truth.

She takes the ſtaffe in her mouth, and guides it with her ſtumps and writes.

Tit. Oh doe ye read my Lord what ſhe hath writ?
Stuprum, Chiron, Demetrius.
Mar. What, what, the luſtfull ſonnes of Tamora,
Performers of this hainous bloody deed?
Tit. Magni Dominator poli,
Tam lentus audis ſcelera! tam lentus vides!
Mar. Oh calme thee gentle Lord: Although I know
There is enough written upon this earth,
To ſtirre a mutiny in the mildeſt thoughts,
And arme the mindes of infants to exclaimes.
My Lord kneele downe with me: Lavinia kneele,
And kneele ſweet boy, the Romaine Hectors hope,
And ſweare with me, as with the wofull Feere
And father of that chaſt diſhonoured Dame,
Lord Iunius Brutus ſweare for Lucrece rape,
That we will proſecute (by good adviſe)
Mortall revenge upon theſe traytorous Gothes,
And ſee their blood, or dye with this reproach.
Tit. Tis ſure enough, and you knew how.
But if you hunt theſe Beare-whelpes, then beware
The Dam will wake, and if ſhe winde you once,
Shes with the Lyon deepely ſtill in league.
And lulls him whilſt ſhe playeth on her backe,
And when he ſleepes will ſhe doe what ſhe liſt.
You are a young huntſman Marcus, let it alone:
And come, I will goe get a leafe of braſſe,
And with a Gad of ſteele will write theſe words,
And lay it by: the angry Northerne winde
Will blow theſe ſands like Sibels leaves abroad,
And wheres your leſſon then. Boy what ſay you?
Boy. I ſay my Lord, that if I were a man,
Their mothers bed-chamber ſhould not be ſafe,
For theſe bad bond-men to the yoake of Rome.
Mar. I that's my boy, thy father hath full oft,
For his ungratefull country done the like.
Boy. And Vncle ſo will I, and if I live.
Tit. Come goe with me into mine Armory,
Lucius Ile fit thee, and withall, my boy
Shall carry from me to the Empreſſe ſonnes,
Preſents that I intend to ſend them both,
Come, come, thou'lt doe thy meſſage, wilt thou not?
Boy. I with my dagger in their boſome, Grandſire:
Tit. No boy not ſo, Ile teach thee another courſe,
Lavinia come, Marcus looke to my houſe,
Lucius and Ile goe brave it at the Court,
I marry will we ſir, and weele be waited on. Exeunt.
Mar. O heavens! Can you heare a good man grone
And not relent, or not compaſſion him?
Marcus attend him in his extaſie,
That hath more ſcars of ſorrow in his heart,
Then foe-mens markes upon his batter'd ſhield,
But yet ſo juſt, that he will not revenge,
Revenge the heavens for old Andronicus. Exit.

Enter Aron, Chiron and Demetrius at one dore: and at another dore young Lucius and another, with a bundle of weapons, and verſes writ upon them.

Chi. Demetrius heeres the ſonne of Lucius,
He hath ſome meſſage to deliver us.
Aron. I ſome mad meſſage from his mad Grandfather.
Boy. My Lords, with all the humbleneſſe I may,
I greete your honours from Andronicus,
And pray the Romane gods confound you both.
Deme. Gramercy lovely Lucius, what's the newes?
Boy. For villaines markt with rape. May it pleaſe you,
My Grandſire well adviſ'd hath ſent by me,
The goodlieſt weapons of his Armory,
To gratifie your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome, for ſo he bad me ſay:
And ſo I doe and with his gifts preſent
Your Lordſhips, when ever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well,
And ſo I leave you both: like bloody villaines. Exit.
Deme. What's heere? a ſcrole, and written round about?
Lets ſee.
Integer vitæ ſceleriſque purus, non egit mauri jaculis nec arcu.
Chir. O tis a verſe in Horace, I know it well.
I read it in the Grammer long agoe.
Moore. I juſt, a verſe in Horace: right, you have it,
Now what a thing it is to be an Aſſe?
Heeres no ſound jeſt, th'old man hath found their guilt,
And ſends the weapons wrapt about with lines,
That wound (beyond their feeling) to the quicke:
But were our witty Empreſſe well a foot,
She would applaud Andronicus conceit:
But let her reſt, in her unreſt a while.
And now young Lords, was't not a happy ſtarre
Led us to Rome ſtrangers, and more then ſo;
Captives, to be advanced to this height?
It did me good before the Pallace gate,
To brave the Tribune in his brothers hearing.
Deme. But me more good, to ſee ſo great a Lord
Baſely inſinuate, and ſend us gifts.
Moore. Had he not reaſon Lord Demetrius?
Did you not uſe his daughter very friendly?
Deme. I would we had a thouſand Romane Dames
At ſuch a bay, by turne to ſerve out luſt.
Chir. A charitable wiſh, and full of love.
Moore. Heere lack's but you mother for ſay, Amen.
Chir. And that would ſhe for twenty thouſand more.
Deme. Come, let us goe, and pray to all the gods
For our beloved mother in her paines.
Moore. Pray to the devils, the gods have given us over.
Flouriſh.
Dem. Why doe the Emperors trumpets flouriſh thus?
Chir. Belike for joy the Emperour hath a ſonne.
Dem. Soft, who comes heere?

Enter Nurſe with a blacke a Moore child.

Nurſe. Good morrow Lords:
O tell me, did you ſee Aaron the Moore?
Aaron. Well, more or leſſe, or ne're a whit at all,
Heere Aaron is, and what with Aaron now?
Nurſe. Oh gentle Aaron, we are all undone.
Now helpe, or woe betide thee evermore.
Aaron. Why, what a catterwalling doſt thou keepe?
What doſt thou wrap and fumble in thine armes?
Nurſe. O that which I would hide from heavens eye,
Our Empreſſe ſhame, and ſtately Romes diſgrace,
She is delivered Lords, ſhe is delivered.
Aaron. To whom?
Nurſe. I meane ſhe is brought a bed?
Aaron. Well God give her good reſt.

What hath he ſent her ?
Nurſe. A devill.
Aaron. Why then ſhe is the devils Dam: a joyfull iſſue.
Nur. A joyleſſe, diſmall, blacke and, ſorrowfull iſſue,
Heere is the babe as loathſome as a toad,
Among'ſt the faireſt breeders of our clime,
The Empreſſe ſends it thee, thy ſtampe, thy ſeale,
And bids thee chriſten it with thy daggers point.
Aaron. Out you whore, is blacke ſo baſe a hue ?
Sweet blowſe, you are a beautious bloſſome ſure.
Deme. Villaine what haſt thou done?
Aaron. That which thou canſt not undoe.
Chir. Thou haſt undone our mother.
Deme. And therein helliſh dog, thou haſt undone,
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choyce,
Accur'ſt the off-ſpring of ſo foule a fiend.
Chir. It ſhall not live.
Aaron. It ſhall not dye.
Nurſe. Aaron it muſt, the mother wills it ſo.
Aaron. What, muſt it Nurſe ? Then let no man but I
Doe execution on my fleſh and blood.
Deme. Ile broach the Tadpole on my Rapiers point:
Nurſe give it me, my ſword ſhall ſoone diſpatch it.
Aaron. Sooner this ſword ſhall plough thy bowels up.
Stay murtherous villaines, will you kill your brother?
Now by the burning Tapers of the skye,
That ſh'one ſo brighly when this Boy was got,
He dies upon my Semitars ſharpe point,
That touches this my firſt borne ſonne and heire.
I tell you young-lings, not Enceladus
With all his threatning band of Typhons broode,
Nor great Alcides, nor the god of Warre,
Shall ceaze this prey out of his fathers hands:
What, what, ye ſanguine ſhallow hearted Boyes,
Ye white-limb'd walls, ye Ale-houſe painted ſignes,
Cole-blacke is better then another hue:
In that it ſcornes to beare another hue:
For all the water in the Ocean,
Can never turne the Swans blacke legs to write,
Although ſhe lave them hourely in the flood:
Tell the Empreſſe from me, I am of age
To keepe mine owne, excuſe it how ſhe can.
Deme. Wilt thou betray thy noble miſtris thus ?
Aaron. My miſtris is my miſtris: this my ſelfe,
The vigour, and the picture of my youth:
This, before all the world doe I preferre,
This mauger all the world will I keepe ſafe,
Or ſome of you ſhall ſmoake for it in Rome.
Dem. By this our mother is for ever ſham'd.
Chir. Rome will deſpiſe her for this foule eſcape.
Nur. The Emperour in his rage will doome her death
Chir. I bluſh to thinke upon this ignominy.
Aaron. Why ther's the priviledge your beauty beares:
Fye trecherous hue, that will betray with bluſhing
The cloſe enacts and counſells of the heart:
Heres a young Lad fram'd of another leere,
Looke how the blacke ſlave ſmiles upon the father;
As who ſhould ſay, old Lad I am thine owne.
He is your brother Lords, ſenſibly fed
Of that ſelfe blood that firſt gave life to you,
And from that wombe where you impriſoned were
He is infranchiſed and come to light:
Nay he is your brother by the ſurer ſide,
Although my ſeale be ſtamped in his face.
Nurſe. Aaron what ſhall I ſay unto the Empreſſe?
Dem. Adviſe thee Aaron, what is to be done,
And we will all ſubſcribe to thy adviſe:
Save thou the child, ſo we may all be ſafe.
Aaron. Then ſit we downe and let us all conſult.
My ſonne and I will have the winde of you:
Keepe there, now talke at pleaſure of your ſafety.
Dem. How many women ſaw this child of his ?
Aaron. Why ſo brave Lords, when we all joyne in (league
I am a Lambe: but if you brave the Moore,
The chafed Bore, the mountaine Lyoneſſe,
The Ocean ſwells not ſo at Aaron ſtormes:
But ſay againe, how many ſaw the child ?
Nurſe. Cornelia, the midwife, and my ſelfe,
And none elſe but the delivered Empreſſe.
Aaron. The Empreſſe, the Midwife, and your ſelfe,
Two may keepe counſell, when the third's away:
Goe to the Empreſſe, tell her this I ſaid, He kils her.
Weeke, weeke, ſo cries a Pigge prepared to th'ſpit.
Dem. What mean'ſt thou Aaron ?
Wherefore did'ſt thou this ?
Aaron. O Lord ſir, 'tis a deed of pollicy ?
Shall ſhe live to betray this guilt of ours:
A long tongu'd babling Goſſip ? No Lords no:
And now be it knowne to you my full intent.
Not farre, one Muliteus my Country-man
His wife but yeſternight was brought to bed,
His child is like to her, faire as you are:
Goe packe with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumſtance of all,
And how by this their Child ſhall be advanc'd,
And be received for the Emperours heyre,
And ſubſtituted in the place of mine,
To calme this tempeſt whirling in the Court,
And let the Emperour dandle him for his owne.
Harke ye Lords, ye ſee I have given her phyſicke,
And you muſt needs beſtow her funerall,
The fields are neere, and you are gallant Groomes:
This done, ſee that you take no longer dayes
But ſend the Midwife preſently to me.
The Midwife and the Nurſe well made away,
Then let the Ladies tattle what they pleaſe.
Chir. Aaron I ſee thou wilt not truſt the ayre with ſe- (crets,
Dem. For this care of Tamora,
Her ſelfe, and hers are highly bound to thee. Exeunt.
Aaron. Now to the Gothes, as ſwift as Swallow flies,
There to diſpoſe this treaſure in mine armes,
And ſecretly to greete the Empreſſe friends:
Come on you thick-lipt-ſlave, Ile beare you hence,
For it is you that puts us to our ſhifts:
Ile make you feed on berries, and on rootes,
And feed on curds and whay, and ſucke the Goate,
And cabbin in a Cave, and bring you up
To be a warriour, and command a Campe. Exit.

Enter Titus, old Marcus, young Lucius, and other gentlemen with bowes, and Titus beares the arrowes with Letters on the end of them.

Tit. Come Marcus, come, kinſmen this is the way.
Sir Boy now let me ſee your Archery,
Looke yee draw home enough, and 'tis there ſtraight:
Terras Aſtræa reliquit, be you remembred Marcus.
She's gone, ſhe's fled, ſirs take you to your tooles,
You Coſens ſhall goe ſound the Ocean:
And caſt your nets, haply you may find her in the Sea,
Yet theres as little juſtice as at Land:
No Publius and Sempronius, you muſt doe it,

Tis you muſt dig with Mattocke, and with Spade,
And pierce the inmoſt Center of the earth:
Then when you come to Plutoes Region,
I pray you deliver him this petition,
Tell him it is for juſtice, and for aide,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with ſorrowes in ungratefull Rome.
Ah Rome! Well, well, I made thee miſerable,
What time I threw the peoples ſuffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize ore me.
Goe get you gone, and pray be carefull all,
And leave you not a man of warre unſearcht,
This wicked Emperour may have ſhipt her hence,
And kinſmen then we may goe pipe for juſtice.
Marc. O Publius is not this a heavy caſe
To ſee thy Noble Vncle thus diſtract?
Pub. Therefore my Lord it highly us concernes,
By day and night t'attend him carefully:
And feede his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget ſome carefull remedy.
Marc. Kinſmen, his ſorrowes are paſt remedy.
Ioyne with the Gothes, and with revengefull warre,
Take wreake on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the Traytor Saturnine.
Tit. Publius how now? how now my maſters?
What have you met with her?
Publ. No my good Lord, but Pluto ſends you word,
If you will have revenge from hell you ſhall,
Marry for juſtice ſhe is ſo imploy'd,
He thinkes with Iove in heaven, or ſome where elſe:
So that perforce you muſt needs ſtay a time.
Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delayes,
Ile dive into the burning Lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heeles,
Marcus we are but ſhrubs, no Cedars we,
No big-bon'd-men, fram'd of the Cyclops ſize,
But mettall Marcus, ſteele to the very backe,
Yet wrung with wrongs more then our backe can beare:
And ſith there's no juſtice in earth nor hell,
We will ſollicite heaven, and move the gods
To ſend downe Iuſtice for to wreake our wrongs:
Come to this geare, you are a good Archer Marcus.

He gives them the Arrowes.

Ad Iovem, thats for you: here ad Apollonem,
Ad Martem, thats for my ſelfe,
Heere Boy to Pallas, heere to Mercury,
To Saturnine, to Caius, not to Saturnine,
You were as good to ſhoote againſt the winde.
To it Boy, Marcus looſe when I bid:
Of my word, I have written to effect,
Theres not a god left unſollicited.
Marc. Kinſmen, ſhoot all your ſhafts into the Court,
We will afflict the Emperour in his pride.
Tit. Now maiſters draw, Oh well ſaid Lucius:
Good boy in Virgoes lap, give it Pallas.
Marc. My Lord, I ayme a Mile beyond the Moone,
Your letter is with Iupiter by this.
Tit. Ha, ha, Publius, Publius, what haſt thou done?
See ſee, thou haſt ſhot off one of Taurus hornes.
Mar. This was the ſport my Lord, when Publius ſhot,
The Bull being gal'd, gave Aries ſuch a knocke,
That downe fell both the Rams hornes in the Court,
And who ſhould finde them but the Empreſſe villaine:
She laught, and told the Moore he ſhould not chooſe
But give them to his Maiſter for a preſent.
Tit. Why there it goes, God give your Lordſhip joy.

Enter the Clowne with a basket and two Pigeons.

Tit. Newes, newes, from heaven.
Marcus the poaſt is come.
Sirrah, what tydings? have you any letters?
Shall I have Iuſtice, what ſayes Iupiter?

Clow. Ho the Iibbetmaker, he ſayes that he hath taken them downe againe, for the man muſt not be hang'd till the next weeke.

Tit. But what ſayes Iupiter I aske thee?
Clow. Alas ſir I know not Iupiter:
I never dranke with him in all my life.
Tit. Why villaine art not thou the Carrier?
Clow. I of my Pigions ſir, nothing elſe.
Tit. Why, didſt thou not come from heaven?

Clow. From heaven? Alas ſir, I never came there, God forbid I ſhould be ſo bold, to preſſe to heaven in my young dayes. Why I am going with my pigeons to the Tribunall Plebs, to take up a matter of brawle, betwixt my Vncle, and one of the Emperialls men.

Mar. Why ſir, that is as fit as can be to ſerve for your Oration, and let him deliver the Pigions to the Emperour from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an Oration to the Emperour with a Grace?

Clow. Nay truely ſir, I could never ſay grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah come hither, make no more adoe,
But give your Pigeons to the Emperour,
By me thou ſhalt have juſtice at his hands.
Hold, hold, meane while hers money for thy charges.
Give me a pen and inke.
Sirrah, can you with a Grace deliver a Supplication?
Clow. I ſir.

Tit. Then here is a Supplication for you, and when you come to him, at the firſt approach you muſt kneele, then kiſſe his foote, then deliver up your Pigeons, and then looke for your reward. Ile be at hand ſir, ſee you do it bravely.

Clow. I warrant you ſir, let me alone.
Tit. Sirrha haſt thou a knife? Come let me ſee it.
Heere Marcus fold it in the Oration,
For thou haſt made it like an humble Suppliant,
And when thou haſt given it the Emperour,
Knocke at my dore, and tell me what he ſayes.
Clow. God be with you ſir, I will.
Tit. Come Marcus let us goe, Publius follow me.

Exeunt.

Enter Emperour and Empreſſe, and her two ſonnes, the Emperour brings the Arrowes in his hand that Titus ſhot at him.

Satur. Why Lords,
What wrongs are theſe? was ever ſeene
An Emperour in Rome thus overborne,
Troubled, Confronted thus, and for the extent
Of equall juſtice, uſ'd in ſuch contempt?
My Lords, you know the mightfull Gods
(How ever theſe diſturbers of our peace
Buz in the peoples eares) there nought hath paſt,
But even with law againſt the willfull Sonnes
Of old Andronicus. And what and if
His ſorrowes have ſo overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreakes,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterneſſe?
And now he writes to heaven for his redreſſe.
See, heres to Iove, and this to Mercury,

This

This to Apollo, this to the god of warre:
Sweet ſcrowles to flye about the ſtreets of Rome:
What's this but Libelling againſt the Senate,
And blazoning our injuſtice every where?
A goodly humour is it not my Lords?
As who would ſay, in Rome no Iuſtice were.
But if I live, his fained extaſies
Shall be no ſhelter to theſe outrages:
But he and his ſhall know, that Iuſtice lives
In Saturninus health, whom if he ſleepe,
He'll ſo awake, as he in fury ſhall
Cut off the proudſt Conſpirator that lives.
Tamo. My gracious Lord, my lovely Saturnine,
Lord of my life, Commander of my thoughts,
Calme thee, and beare the faults of Titus age,
Th'effects of ſorrow for his valiant Sonnes,
Whoſe loſſe hath pier'ſt him deepe, and ſcar'd his heart;
And rather comfort his diſtreſſed plight,
Then proſecute the meaneſt or the beſt
For theſe contempts. Why thus it ſhall become High witted Tamora to gloſe with all:
But Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quicke,
Thy life blood ont: if Aaron now be wiſe,
Then is all ſafe, the Anchor's in the Port.
Enter Clowne.
How now good fellow, would'ſt thou ſpeake with us?
Clow. Yea forſooth, and your Miſterſhip be Emperiall.
Tam. Empreſſe I am, but yonder ſits the Emperour.
Clow. Tis he; God and Saint Stephen give you good den;
I have brought you a Letter, and a couple of Pigions here.
He reades the Letter.
Satu. Goe take him away, and hang him preſently.
Clow. How much money muſt I have?
Tam. Come ſirrah you muſt be hang'd.
Clow. Hang'd? bir Lady, then I have brought up a necke to a faire end. Exit.
Satur. Deſpightfull and intollerable wrongs,
Shall I endure this monſtrous villany?
I know from whence this ſame deviſe proceedes;
May this be borne? As if his traytrous Sonnes,
That dy'd by law for murther of our brother,
Have by my meanes beene butcher'd wrongfully?
Goe dragge the villaine hither by the haire,
Nor Age, nor Honor, ſhall ſhape priviledge:
For this proud mocke, Ile be thy ſlaughter man:
Sly franticke wretch, that holp'ſt to make me great,
In hope thy ſelfe ſhould governe Rome and me.
Enter Nuntius Emillius.
Satur. What newes with thee Emillius.
Emil. Arme my Lords, Rome never had more cauſe,
The Gothes have gather'd head, and with a power
Of high reſolved men, bent to the ſpoyle
They hither march amaine, under the conduct
Of Lucius, Sonne to old Andronicus:
Who threats in courſe of this revenge to doe
As much as ever Coriolanus did,
Satur. Is warlike Lucius Generall of the Gothes?
Theſe tydings nip me, and I hang the head
As flowers with froſt, or graſſe beat downe with ſtormes
I now begin our ſorrowes to approach,
Tis he the common people love ſo much,
My ſelfe hath often heard them ſay,
(When I have walked like a priuate man)
That Lucius baniſhment was wrongfully,
And they have wiſht that Lucius were their Emperour.
Tam. Why ſhould you feare? Is not our City ſtrong?
Satur. I, but the Cittizens favour Lucius,
And will revolt from me, to ſuccour him.
Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious like thy name.
Is the Sunne dim'd, that Gnats doe flye in it?
The Eagle ſuffers little Birds to ſing,
And is not carefull what they meane thereby,
Knowing that with the ſhadow of his wings,
He can at pleaſure ſtint their melody.
Even ſo mayeſt thou, the giddy men of Rome,
Then cheare thy ſpirit, for know thou Emperour,
I will enchaunt the old Andronicus,
With words more ſweet, and yet more dangerous
Then baites to fiſh, or hony ſtalkes to ſheepe,
When as the one is wounded with the baite,
The other rotted with delicious foode.
King. But he will not entreat his ſonne for us.
Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will,
For I can ſmooth and fill his aged eare,
With golden promiſes, that were his heart
Almoſt impregnable, his old eares deafe,
Yet ſhould both eare and heart obey my tongue.
Goe thou before to our Embaſſador,
Say, that the Emperour requeſts a parly
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.
King. Emillius doe this meſſage Honourably.
And if he ſtand in Hoſtage for his ſafety,
Bid him demand what pledge will pleaſe him beſt.
Emill. Your bidding ſhall I doe effectually. Exit.
Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him withall the Art I have,
To plucke proud Lucius from the warlike Gothes.
And now ſweet Emperour be blithe againe,
And bury all thy feare in my deviſes.
Satu. Then goe ſucceſſantly and plead for him. Exit.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Lucius with an Army of Gothes.
with Drum and Souldiers.

Luci. Approved warriours, and my faithfull Friends,
I have received Letters from great Rome,
Which ſignifies what hate they beare their Emperour,
And how deſirous of our ſight they are.
Therefore great Lords, be as your Titles witneſſe,
Imperious and impatient of your wrongs,
And wherein Rome hath done you any ſcathe,
Let him make treble ſatisfaction.
Goth. Brave ſlip, ſprung from the Great Andronicus,
Whoſe name was once our terrour, now our comfort,
Whoſe high exploits, and honourable Deeds,
Ingratefull Rome requites with foule contempt:
Behold in us, weele follow where thou lead'ſt,
Like ſtinging Bees in hotteſt Sommers day,
Led by their Maſter to the flowred fields,
And be aveng'd on curſed Tamora:
Omn. And as he ſaith, ſo ſay we all with him.
Luci. I humbly thanke him, and I thanke you all.
But who comes heere, led by a luſty Goth?
Enter a Goth leading Aaron with his child in his armes.
Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troups I ſtraid,
To gaze upon a ruinous Monaſtery,

And as I earneſtly did fixe mine eye
Vpon the waſted building, ſuddainely
I heard a child cry underneath a wall:
I made unto the noiſe, when ſoone I heard,
The crying babe control'd with this diſcourſe:
Peace Tawny ſlave, halfe me, and halfe thy Dam,
Did not thy Hue bewray whoſe brat thou art?
Had nature lent thee, but thy Mothers looke,
Villaine thou mightſt have beene an Emperour.
But where the Bull and Cow are both milk-white,
They never doe beget a cole-blacke-Calfe:
Peace, villaine peace, even thus he rates the babe,
For I muſt beare thee to a truſty Goth,
Who when he knowes thou art the Empreſſe babe,
Will hold thee dearely for thy Mothers ſake.
With this, my weapon drawne I ruſht upon him,
Surpriz'd him ſuddainely, and brought him hither
To uſe, as you thinke needfull of the man.
Luci. Oh worthy Goth, this is the incarnate devill,
That rob'd Andronicus of his good hand:
This is the Pearle that pleas'd your Empreſſe eye,
And heres the Baſe Fruit of his burning luſt.
Say wall-ey'd ſlave, whether wouldſt thou convay
This growing Image of thy fiend-like face?
Why doſt not ſpeake? what deafe? no! Not a word?
A halter Souldiers, hang him on this Tree,
And by his ſide his Fruite of Baſtardy.
Aaron. Touch not the Boy, he is of Royall blood,
Luci. Too like the Syre for ever being good.
Firſt hang the Child that he may ſee it ſprall,
A ſight to vexe the Fathers ſoule withall.
Aaron. Get me a Ladder Lucius, ſave the Child,
And beare it from me to the Empreſſe:
If thou doe this, Ile ſhew thee wondrous things,
That highly may advantage thee to heare;
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
Ile ſpeake no more: but vengeance rot you all.
Luci. Say on, and if it pleaſe me which thou ſpeak'ſt,
Thy child ſhall live, and I will ſee it Nouriſht.
Aaron. And if it pleaſe thee? why aſſure thee Lucius.
Twill vexe thy ſoule to heare what I ſhall ſpeake:
For I muſt talke of Murthers, Rapes, and Maſſacres,
Acts of Blacke-night, abhominable Deeds,
Complots of Miſchiefe, Treaſon, Villaines
Ruthfull to heare, yet pittiouſly perform'd,
And this ſhall all be buried by my death,
Vnleſſe thou ſweare to me my Child ſhall live.
Luc. Tell on thy minde,
I ſay thy Child ſhall live.
Aaron. Sweare that he ſhall, and then I will begin.
Luci. Who ſhould I ſweare by;
Thou beleeveſt no God,
That graunted, how can'ſt thou beleeve an oath?
Aaron. What if I doe not, as indeed I doe not,
Yet for I know thou art Religious,
And haſt a thing within thee, called Conſcience,
With twenty Popiſh trickes and Ceremonies,
Which I have ſeene thee carefull to obſerve:
Therefore I urge thy oath, for that I know
An Ideot holds his Bauble for a god,
And keepes the oath which by that god he ſweares,
To that Ile urge him: therefore thou ſhalt vow
By that ſame god, what god ſo ere it be
That thou adoreſt, and haſt in reverence,
To ſave my Boy, to nouriſh and bring him up,
Ore elſe I will diſcover nought to thee.
Luci. Even by my god I ſweare to thee I will.
Aaron. Firſt know thou,
I begot him on thy Empreſſe.
Luci. Oh moſt inſatiate luxurious woman!
Aaron. Tut Lucius, this was but a deed of Charity,
To that which thou ſhalt heare of me anon,
Twas her two Sonnes that murdered Baſſianus,
They cut thy Siſters tongue, and raviſht her,
And cut her hands off, and trim'd her as thou ſawſt.
Luci. Oh deteſtable villaine!
Callſt thou that Trimming?
Aaron. Why ſhe was waſht, and cut, and trim'd,
And twas trim ſport for them that had the doing of it.
Luci. Oh barbarous beaſtly villaines like thy ſelfe!
Aaron. Indeed, I was their Tutor to inſtruct them,
That Codding ſpirit had they from their Mother,
As ſure a Card as ever wonne the Set:
That bloody mind I thinke they learn'd of me,
As true a Dog as ever fought at head.
Well, let my Deeds be witneſſe of my worth:
I trayn'd thy Bretheren to that guilefull Hole,
Where the dead Corps of Baſſianus lay:
I wrote the Letter, that thy Father found,
And hid the Gold within the Letter mention'd.
Confederate with the Queene, and her two Sonnes,
And what not done, that thou haſt cauſe to rue,
Wherein I had no ſtroke of Miſcheife in it.
I plaid the Cheater for thy Fathers hand,
And when I had it, drew my ſelfe apart,
And almoſt broke my heart with extreame laughter.
I pried me through the Crevice of a Wall,
When for his hand, he had his two Sonnes heads,
Beheld his teares, and laught ſo heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like to his:
And when I told the Empreſſe of this ſport,
She ſounded almoſt at my pleaſing tale,
And for my tydings, gave me twenty kiſſes.
Goth. What canſt thou ſay all this, and never bluſh?
Aaron. I, like a blacke Dogge, as the ſaying is.
Luc. Art thou not ſorry for theſe hainous deeds?
Aaron. I, that I had not done a thouſand more.
Even now I curſe the day, and yet I thinke
Few come within the compaſſe of my curſe,
Wherein I did not ſome Notorious ill,
As kill a man, or elſe deviſe his death,
Rauiſh a Maid, or plot the way to doe it,
Accuſe ſome innocent, and forſweare my ſelfe,
Set deadly Enmity betweene two Friends,
Make poore mens Cattell breake their neckes,
Set fire on Barnes and Hayſtackes in the night,
And bid the Owners quench them with their teares:
Oft have I dig'd up dead men from their graves,
And ſet them up right at their deere Friends doores,
Even when their ſorrow almoſt was forgot,
And on their ſkinnes, as on the Barke of Trees,
Have with my knife carved in Romaine Letters,
Let not your ſorrow dye, though I am dead.
Tut, I have done a thouſand dreadfull things
As willingly, as one would kill a flye,
And nothing greives me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot doe ten thouſand more.
Luci. Bring downe the divell, for he muſt not dye
So ſweet a death as hanging preſently.
Aaron. If there be divels, 'would I were a devill,
To live and burne in everlaſting fire,
So I might have your company in hell,

But to torment you with my bitter tongue.
Luc. Sirs ſtop his mouth, and let him ſpeake no more.
Enter Emillius.
Goth. My Lord, there is a Meſſenger from Rome
Deſires to be admitted to your preſence.
Luc. Let him come neere.
Welcome Emillius, whats the newes from Rome?
Emi. Lord Lucius, and you Princes of the Gothes,
The Romaine Emperour greets you all by me,
And for he underſtands you are in Armes,
He craves a parly at your Fathers houſe
Willing you to demand your Hoſtages,
And they ſhall be immediately delivered,
Goth. What ſayes our Generall?
Luc. Emillius, let the Emperour give his pledges
Vnto my Father, and my Vncle Marcus,
And we will come: march away. Exeunt.

Enter Tamora, and her two Sonnes diſguiſed.

Tam. Thus in this ſtrange, and ſad Habillaments,
I will encounter with Andronicus,
And ſay, I am Revenge ſent from below,
To joyne with him and right his hainous wrongs:
Knocke at his ſtudy where they ſay he keepes,
To ruminate ſtrange plots of dire Revenge,
Tell him Revenge is come to joyne with him,
And worke confuſion on his Enemies.
They knocke and Titus opens his ſtudy dore.
Tit. Who doth moleſt my Contemplation?
Is it your tricke to make me ope the dore,
That ſo my ſad decrees may flye away,
And all my ſtudy be to no effect?
You are deceiv'd, for what I meane to doe,
See here in bloody lines I have ſet downe:
And what is written ſhall be executed.
Tam. Titus, I am come to talke with thee.
Tit. No not a word: how can I grace my talke,
Wanting a hand to give it action,
Thou haſt the ods of me, therefore no more.
Tam. If thou did'ſt know me,
Thou wouldſt talke with me.
Tit. I am not mad, I know thee well enough,
Witneſſe this wretched ſtump,
Witneſſe theſe crimſon lines,
Witneſſe theſe Trenches made by griefe and care,
Witneſſe the tyring day, and heavy night,
Witneſſe all ſorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud Empreſſe, Mighty Tamora:
Is not thy comming for my other hand?
Tam. Know thou ſad man, I am not Tamora,
She is thy Enemy, and I thy friend,
I am Revenge ſent from th'infernall Kindome,
To eaſe the gnawing Vulture of thy mind,
By working wreakefull vengeance on thy Foes:
Come downe and welcome me to this worlds light,
Conferre with me of Murder and of Death,
There's not a hollow Cave or lurking place,
No Vaſt obſcurity. or Miſty vale,
Where bloody Murther or deteſted Rape,
Can couch for feare, but I will find them out,
And in their eares tell them my dreadfull name,
Revenge, which makes the foule offenders quake.
Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou ſent to me,
To be a torment to mine Enemies?
Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.
Tit. Doe me ſome ſervice ere I come to thee:
Loe by thy ſide where Rape and Murder ſtands,
Now give ſome ſurance that thou art Revenge,
Stab them, or teare them on thy Chariot wheeles,
And then Ile come and be thy Waggoner,
And whirle along with thee about the Globes.
Provide the two proper Palfries, blacke as Iet,
To hale thy vengefull Waggon ſwift away,
And find out Murder in their guilty Caves.
And when thy Car is loaden with their heads,
I will diſmount, and by the Waggon wheele,
Trot like a Servile footeman all day long,
Even from Hiperions riſing in the Eaſt,
Vntill his very downefall in the Sea.
And day by day Ile doe this heavy taske,
So thou deſtroy Rapine and Murder there.
Tam. Theſe are my Miniſters, and come with me.
Tit. Are they thy Miniſters, what are they call'd?
Tam. Rapine and Murder, therefore called ſo,
Cauſe they take vengeance of ſuch kind of men.
Tit. Good Lord how like the Empreſſe Sons they are,
And you the Empreſſe: But we worldly men,
Have miſerable mad miſtaking eyes:
Oh ſweet Revenge, now doe I come to thee,
And if one armes imbracement will content thee,
I will imbrace thee in it by and by.
Tam. This cloſing with him, fits his Lunacy,
What ere I forge to feede his braine-ſicke fits,
Doe you uphold, and maintaine in your ſpeeches,
For now he firmely takes me for Revenge,
And being Credulous in this mad thought,
Ile make him ſend for Lucius his Sonne,
And whilſt I at a Banquet hold him ſure,
Ile find ſome cunning practiſe out of hand
To ſcatter and diſperſe the giddy Gothes,
Or at the leaſt make them his Enemies:
See heere he comes, and I muſt play my theame.
Tit. Long have I beene forlorne, and all for thee,
Welcome dread Fury to my woefull houſe,
Rapine and Murther, you are welcome too,
How like the Empreſſe and her Sonnes you are.
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moore,
Could not all hell afford you ſuch a devill?
For well I wote the Empreſſe never wags;
But in her company there is a Moore,
And would you repreſent our Queene aright
It were convenient you had ſuch a devill:
But welcome as you are, what ſhall we doe?
Tam. What wouldſt thou have us doe Andronicus?
Dem. Shew me a Murtherer, Ile deale with him.
Chir. Shew me a Villaine that hath done a Rape.
And I am ſent to be reveng'd on him.
Tam. Shew me a thouſand that have done thee wrong,
And I will be revenged on them all,
Tit. Looke round about the wicked ſtreets of Rome,
And when thou findeſt a man that's like thy ſelfe,
Good Murder ſtab him, he's a Murtherer.
Goe thou with him, and when it is thy hap
To find another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine ſtab him, he is a Raviſher.
Goe thou with them, and in the Emperours Court,
There is a Queene attended by a Moore,
Well maiſt thou know her by thy owne proportion,
For up and downe ſhe doth reſemble thee,
I pray thee doe on them ſome violent death,
They have beene violent to me and mine.

Tamora.

Tam. Well haſt thou leſſon'd us, this ſhall we doe.
But would it pleaſe the good Andronicus,
To ſend for Lucius thy thrice Valiant Sonne,
Who leads towards Rome a Band of Warlike Gothes,
And bid him come and Banquet at thy houſe.
When he is here, even at thy Solemne Feaſt,
I will bring in the Empreſſe and her Sonnes,
The Emperour himſelfs, and all thy Foes,
And at thy mercy ſhall they ſtoope, and kneele,
And on them ſhalt thou eaſe, thy angry heart:
What ſayes Andronicus to this deviſe?

Enter Marcus.

Tit. Marcus my brother, tis ſad Titus calls,
Goe gentle Marcus to thy Nephew Lucius,
Thou ſhalt enquire him out among the Gothes,
Bid him repaire to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefeſt Princes of the Gothes,
Bid him encampe his Souldiers where they are,
Tell him the Emperour, and the Empreſſe too,
Feaſts at my houſe, and he ſhall Feaſt with them,
This doe thou for my love, and ſo let him,
As he regards his aged Fathers life.
Mar. This will I doe, and ſoone returne againe. Exi
Tam. Now will I hence about thy buſineſſe,
And take my Miniſters along with me.
Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder ſtay with me,
Or elſe Ile call my Brother backe againe,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.
Tam. What ſay you Boyes, will you bide with him,
Whiles I goe tell my Lord the Emperour.
How I have govern'd our determined jeſt?
Yeeld to his humour, ſmooth and ſpeake him faire,
And tarry with him till I turne againe.
Tit. I know them all though they ſuppoſe me mad,
And will ore-reach them in their owne deviſes,
A payre of curſed hell-hounds and their Dam.
Dem. Madam depart at pleaſure, leave vs here.
Tam. Farewell Andronicus, revenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy Foes.
Tit. I know thou do'ſt, and ſweet revenge farewell.
Chi. Tell us old man, how ſhall we be imploy'd?
Tit. Tut, I have worke enough for you to doe,
Publius come hither, Caius, and Valentine.
Pub. What is your will?
Tit. Know you theſe two?
Pub. The Empreſſe Sonnes
I take them, Chiron, Demetrius.
Tit. Fye Publius, fie, thou art too much deceau'd,
The one is Murder, Rape is the others name,
And therefore bind them gentle Publius,
Caius, and Valentine, lay hands on them,
Oft have you heard me wiſh for ſuch an houre,
And now I find it, therefore bind them ſure.
Chi. Villaines forbeare, we are the Empreſſe Sonnes.
Pub. And therefore doe we, what we are commanded.
Stop cloſe their mouthes, let them not ſpeake a word,
Is he ſure bound, looke that you binde them faſt. Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus with a knife, and Lavinia with a Baſon.

Tit. Come, come Lavinia, looke, thy Foes are bound,
Sirs ſtop their mouthes, let them not ſpeake to me,
But let them heare what fearefull words I utter.
Oh Villaines, Chiron, and Demetrius,
Here ſtands the ſpring whom you have ſtain'd with mud
This goodly Sommer with your Winter mixt,
You kil'd her husband, and for that vil'd fault,
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry jeſt,
Both her ſweet hands, her Tongue, and that more deere
Then hands or tongue, her ſpotleſſe Chaſtity,
Inhumane Traytors, you conſtrain'd and for'ſt.
What would you ſay, if I ſhould let you ſpeake:
Villaines for ſhame you could not beg for grace.
Hearke Wretches, how I meane to marrtyr you,
This one Hand yet it left, to cut you throats,
Whil'ſt that Lavinia tweene her ſtumps doth hold:
The Baſon that receives your guilty blood.
You know you Mother meanes to feaſt with me,
And calls herſelfe Revenge, and thinkes me mad.
Hearke Villaines, I will grin'd your bones to duſt,
And with your blood and it, Ile make a Paſte,
And of the Paſte a Coffen I will reare,
And make two Paſties of your ſhamefull heads,
And bid that ſtrumpet your unhallowed Dam,
Like to the earth ſwallow her owne increaſe.
This is the Feaſt, that I have bid her to,
And this the Banquet ſhe ſhall ſurfet on,
For worſe then Philomel you uſ'd my Daughter,
And worſe then Progne, I will be reveng'd,
Ane now prepare your throats: Lavinia come.
Receive the blood, and when that they are dead
Let me goe grin'd their Bones to powder ſmall,
And with this hatefull Liquor temper it,
And in that Paſte let their vild'd Heads be bakte,
Come, come, be ever one officious,
To make this Banket, which I wiſh might prove,
More ſterne and bloody then the Centaures Feaſt.
He cuts their throats.
So now bring them in, for Ile play the Cooke,
And ſee them ready, gainſt the Mother comes. Exeunt

Enter Lucius, Marcus, and the Gothes.

Luc. Vnckle Marcus, ſince 'tis my Fathers minde
That I repaire to Rome, I am content.
Goth. And ours with thine befall, what fortune will.
Luc. Good Vnckle take you in this barbarous Moore,
This Ravenous Tiger, this accurſed devill,
Let him receive no ſuſtenance, fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the Emperours face,
For teſtimony of his foule proceedings.
And ſee the Ambuſh of our Friends be ſtrong,
If ere the Emperour meanes no good to us.
Aaron. Some devill whiſper curſes in my eare,
And prompt me that my tongue may utter forth,
The Venemous Malice of my ſwelling heart.
Luc. Away inhumane Dogge, Vnhallowed Slave,
Sirs helpe our Vnckle, to convey him in, Flouriſh.
The Trumpets ſhew the Emperour is at hand.

Sound Trumpets. Enter Emperour, and Empreſſe, with Tribunes and others.

Sat. What, hath the Firmament more Suns then one?
Luc. What bootes it the to call thy ſelfe a Sunne?
Mar. Romes Emperour and Nephew breake the parly
Theſe quarrels muſt be quietly debated,
The Feaſt is ready which the carefull Titus,

Hath ordained to an honourable end,
For Peace, for Love, for League, and good to Rome :
Pleaſe you therefore draw nye and take your places.
Satur. Marcus we will. Hoboyes.

A Table brought in.
Enter Titus like a Cooke, placing the meat on the Table, and Lavinia with a vale over her face.

Titus. Welcome my gracious Lord,
Welcome Dread Queene,
Welcome ye Warlike Gothes, welcome Lucius,
And welcome all : although the cheere be poore,
Twill fill your ſtomackes, pleaſe you eat of it.
Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd Andronicus?
Tit. Becauſe I would be ſure to have all well,
To entertaine your Highneſſe, and your Empreſſe.
Tam. We are beholding to you good Andronicus.
Tit. And if your highneſſe knew my heart, you were :
My Lord the Emperour reſolve me this,
Was it well done of raſh Virginius,
To ſlay his daughter with his owne right hand,
Becauſe ſhe was enfor'ſt, ſtain'd, and deflowr'd ?
Satur. It was Andronicus.
Tit. Your reaſon, Mighty Lord ?
Sat. Becauſe the Girle, ſhould not ſurvive her ſhame,
And by her preſence ſtill renew his ſorrowes.
Tit. A reaſon mighty, ſtrong, and effectuall,
A patterne, preſident, and lively warrant,
For me (moſt wretched) to performe the like :
Dye, dye, Lavinia, and thy ſhame with thee,
And with thy ſhame, thy Fathers ſorrow dye.
He kils her.
Sat. What haſt thou done, unnaturall and unkind ?
Tit. Kild her for whom my teares have made me blind.
I am as wofull as Virginius was,
And have a thouſand times more cauſe then he.
Sat. What was ſhe raviſht ? tell who did the deed,
Tit, Wilt pleaſe you eat,
Wilt pleaſe your highneſſe feed ?
Tam. Why haſt thou ſlaine thine onely Daughter thus?
Tit. Not I, twas Chiron, and Demetrius.
They raviſht her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, twas they, that did her all this wrong.
Satur. Goe fetch them hither to us preſently.
Tit. Why there they are both, baked in that Pye,
Whereof their Mother dantily hath fed,
Eating the fleſh that ſhe herſelfe hath bred.
Tis true, tis true, witneſſe my knives ſharpe point.
He ſtabs the Empreſſe.
Satu. Dye franticke wretch, for this accurſed deed.
Luc. Can the Sonnes eye, behold his Father bleed ?
Theres meede for meed, death for a deadly deed.
Mar. You ſad fac'd men, people and Sonnes of Rome,
By uproree ſever'd like a flight of Fowle,
Scattred by windes and high tempeſtuous gueſts :
Oh let me teach you how, to knit againe
This ſcattred Corne, into one mutuall ſheafe,
Theſe broken limbs againe into one body.
Goth, Let Rome herſelfe be bane unto herſelfe,
And ſhe whom mighty kingdomes curſie to,
Like a forlorne and deſperate caſtaway,
Doe ſhamefull execution on her ſelfe.
But if my froſty ſignes and chaps of age,
Grave witneſſes of true experience,
Cannot induce you to attend my words,
Speake Romes deere friend, as 'erſt our Anceſter,
When with his ſolemne tongue he did diſcourſe
To love-ſicke Didoes ſad attending eare,
The ſtory of that balefull burning night,
When ſubtill Greekes ſurpriz'd King Priams Troy :
Tell us what Sinon hath bewicht our eares,
Or who hath brought the fatall engine in,
That gives our Troy, our Rome the civill wound.
My heart is not compact of flint nor ſteele,
Nor can I utter all our bitter griefe,
But floods of teares will drowne my Oratory,
And breake my very uttrance, even in the time
When it ſhould move you to attend me moſt,
Lending your kind hand Commiſeration.
Heere is a Captaine, let him tell the tale.
Your hearts will throb and weepe to heare him ſpeake.
Luc. This Noble Auditory, be it knowne to you,
That curſed Chiron and Demetrius
Were they that murdred our Emperours Brother,
And they it were that raviſhed our Siſter,
For their fell faults our Brothers were beheaded,
Our fathers teares deſpiſ'd, and baſely couſen'd,
Of that true hand that fought Romes quarrell out,
And ſent her enemies unto the grave.
Laſtly, my ſelfe unkindly baniſhed,
The gates ſhut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg reliefe among Romes Enemies,
Who drown'd their enmity in my true teares,
And op'd their armes to imbrace me as a Friend :
And I am turned forth, be it knowne to you,
That have preſerv'd her well fare in my blood,
And from her boſome tooke the Enemies point,
Sheathing the ſteele in my adventrous body.
Alas you know, I am no Vaunter I,
My ſcars can witneſſe, dumbe although they are,
That my report is juſt and full of truth :
But ſoft, me thinkes I doe digreſſe too much,
Cyting my worthleſſe praiſe : Oh pardon me,
For when no friends are by, men praiſe themſelves.
Marc. Now is my turne to ſpeake : Behold this Child,
Of this was Tamora delivered,
The iſſue of an Irreligious Moore,
Chiefe Architect and plotter of theſe woes,
The Villaine is alive in Titus houſe,
And as he is, to witneſſe this is true.
Now judge what courſe had Titus to revenge
Theſe wrongs, unſpeakeable paſt patience,
Or more then any living man could beare.
Now you have heard the truth, what ſay you Romanes?
Have we done ought amiſſe ? ſhew us wherein,
And from the place where you behold us now,
The poore remainder of Andronicus,
Will hand in hand all headlong caſt us downe,
And on the ragged ſtones beat forth our braines,
And make a mutuall cloſure of our houſe ;
Speake Romanes ſpeake, and if you ſay we ſhall,
Loe hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.
Emilli. Come come, thou reverent man of Rome,
And bring our Emperour gently in thy hand,
Lucius our Emperour : for well I know,
The common voyce doe cry it ſhall be ſo.
Mar. Lucias, all haile Romes Royall Emperour,
Goe, goe into old Titus ſorrowfull houſe,
And hither hale that misbelieving Moore,
To be adjudg'd ſome direfull ſlaughtering death,
As puniſhment for his moſt wicked life.
Lucius all haile to Romes gracious Governour.

Luc. Thankes gentle Romans, may I governe ſo,
To heale Romes harmes, and wipe away her woe.
But gentle people, give me ayme a-while,
For Nature puts me to a heavy taske:
Stand all aloofe, but Vnckle draw you neere,
To ſhed obſequious teares upon this Trunke:
Oh take this warme kiſſe on they pale cold lips,
Theſe ſorrowfull drops upon thy bloud-ſlaine face,
The laſt true Duties of thy Noble Sonne.
Mar. A teare for teare, and loving kiſſe for kiſſe,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy Lips:
O were the ſumme of theſe that I ſhould pay
Countleſſe, and infinit yet would I pay them.
Luc. Come hither Boy, come, come, and learne of us
To melt in ſhowres: thy Grandſire lov'd thee well:
Many a time he danc'd thee on his knee:
Sung thee aſleepe, his Loving Breſt, thy Pillow:
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Meete, and agreeing with thine Infancy:
In that reſpect then, like a loving Childe,
Shed yet ſome ſmall drops from thy tender Spring.
Becauſe kinde Nature doth require it ſo:
Friends ſhould aſſociate Friends, in Griefe and Woe
Bid him farwell, commit him to the Grave,
Doe him that kindneſſe, and take leave of him.
Boy. O Grandſire, Grandſire: even with all my heart
Would I weare Dead, ſo you did Live againe.
O Lord, I cannot ſpeake to him for weeping,
My teares will choke me. if I ope my mouth.
Romanes. You ſad Andronici, have done with woes,
Give ſentence on this execrable Wretch,
That hath beene breeder of theſe dire events.
Luc. Set him breſt deepe in earth, and famiſh him:
There let him ſtand, and rave, and cry for foode:
If any one releeves, or pitties him,
For the offence, he dyes. This is our doome:
Some ſtay, to ſee him faſtned in the earth.
Aaron. O why ſhould wrath be mute, and fury dumbe?
I am no Baby I, that with baſe Prayers
I ſhould repent the Evils I have done.
Ten thouſand worſe, then ever yet I did,
Would I performe if I might have my will:
If one good Deed in all my life I did,
I doe repent it from my very Soule.
Luci. Some loving Friends convey the Emperor hence,
And give him buriall in his fathers grave.
My Father, aud Lavinia, ſhall forthwith
Be cloſed in our Houſholds Monument:
As for rhat heynous Tyger Tamora,
No funerall Rite, nor man in mournfull Weeds:
No mournfull Bell ſhall ring her Buriall:
But throw her forth to Beaſt and Birds of prey:
Her life was Beaſt-like, and devoid of pitty,
And being ſo, ſhall have like want of pitty.
See Iuſtice done on Aaron that damn'd Moore,
For whom, our heavy happee had their beginning:
Then afterwards, to Order well the State,
That like Events, may ne're it Ruinate. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF ROMEO and IVLIET.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Sampſon and Gregory, with Swords and Bucklers, of the Houſe of Capulet.

Sampſon.

GRegory: A my word we'll not carry coales.
Greg. No, for then we ſhould be Colliars.
Samp. I meane, if we be in choller, we'll draw.
Greg. I, while you live, draw your necke out o'th Collar.
Samp. I ſtrike quickly, being mov'd.
Greg. But thou art not quickly mov'd to ſtrike.
Samp. A dog of the houſe of Mountague, moves me.
Greg. To move, is to ſtir: and to be valiant, is to ſtand: Therefore, if thou art mov'd, thou runſt away.
Samp. A dogge of that houſe ſhall move me to ſtand, I will take the wall of any Man or Maid of Mountagues.
Greg. That ſhewes thee weake ſlave, for the weakeſt goes to the wall.
Samp. True, and therefore women being the weaker Veſſells, are ever thruſt to the wall: therefore I will puſh Mountagues men from the wall, and thruſt his Maides to the wall. (their men.
Greg. The Quarrell is betweene our Maſters, and us
Samp. Tis all one, I will ſhew my ſelfe a tyrant: when I have fought with the men, I will be civill with the Maids, and cut off their heads.
Greg. The heads of the Maids?
Samp. I, the heads of the maids, or their maiden-heads, Take it in what ſence thou wilt.
Greg. They muſt take it in ſence, that feele it.
Samp. Me they ſhall feele while I am able to ſtand:
And tis knowne I am a pretty peece of fleſh.
Greg. T is well thou art not Fiſh: if thou had'ſt, thou had'ſt beene poore Iohn. Draw thy Toole, here comes of the Houſe of the Mountagues.

Enter two other Servingmen.

Sam. My naked weapon is out: quarrel, I wil backe thee
Gre. How? Turne thy backe; and run.
Sam. Feare me not.
Greg. No marry: I feare thee.
Samp. Let us take the Law of our ſides: let them begin
Gr. I wil frown as I paſſe by, & let thẽ take it as they liſt
Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my Thumbe at them which is a diſgrace to them, if they beare it.
Abra. Doe you bite your Thumbe at vs ſir?
Sam. I doe bite my Thumbe, ſir.
Abra. Doe you bite your Thumbe at us ſir?
Sam. Is the Law of our ſide, if I ſay I? Gre. No
Samp. No ſir, I doe not bite my Thumbe at you ſir: but I bite my Thumbe ſir.
Greg. Doe you quarrell ſir?
Abra. Quarrell ſir? no ſir. (as you
Sam. If you doe ſir, I am for you, I ſerve, as good a man
Abra. No better? Sam. Well ſir.

Enter Benvolio.

Gre. Say better: here comes one of my maſters kinſmen
Sam. Yes, better.
Abra. You Lye.
Samp. Draw if you be men. Gregory, remember thy waſhing blow. They fight,
Ben. Part Fooles put up your Swords, you know not what you doe.

Enter Tibalt.

Tyba. What art thou drawne, among theſe heartleſſe Hindes? Turne thee Benvolio, looke upon thy death.
Ben. I doe but keepe the peace, put up thy Sword,
Or manage it to part theſe men with me.
Tyb. What draw, and talke of peace? I hate the word
As I hate hell, all Mountagues, and thee:
Have at the Coward. Fight.

Enter three or foure Citizens with Clubs.

Offic. Clubs, Bils, and Partiſons, ſtrike, beat them down
Downe with the Capulets, downe with the Mountagues.

Enter old Capulet in his Gown, and his Wife.

Cap. What noiſe is this? Give me my long Sword ho.
Wife. A crutch, a crutch: why call you for a Sword?
Cap. My Sword I ſay: Old Mountague is come,
And flouriſhes his Blade in ſpight of me.

Enter old Mountague, and his wife.

Moun. Thou villaine Capulet. Hold me not, let me goe.
2. Wife. Thou ſhalt not ſtirre a foote to ſeeke a Foe.

Enter Prince Eskales, with his Traine.

Prin. Rebellious Subjects, Enemies to peace,
Prophaners of this Neighbor-ſtained Steele,
Will they not heare? What hoe, you Men, you Beaſts,
That quench the fire of your pernitious Rage,
With purple Fountaines iſſuing from your Veines:
On paine of Torture, from theſe bloody hands
Throw your miſtemper'd Weapons to the ground,
And heare the Sentence of your moved Prince.
Three civill Broyles, bred of an Ayery word,
By thee old Capulet and Mountague,
Have thrice diſturb'd the quiet of our ſtreets,
And make Verona's ancient Citizens
Caſt by their Grave beſeeming Ornament,
To wield old Partizans, in hands as old,

Cankred with peace, to part your Cankred hate,
If ever you diſturbe our ſtreets againe,
Your lives ſhall pay the forfeit of the peace.
For this time all the reſt depart away:
You Capulet ſhall goe along with me,
And Mountague come you this afternoone,
To know our Fathers pleaſure in this caſe:
To old Free-towne, our common judgement place:
Once more on paine of death, all men depart. Exeunt.
Moun. Who ſet this ancient quarrell new abroach?
Speake Nephew, were you by, when it began?
Ben. Heere were the ſervants of your adverſary,
And yours cloſe fighting ere I did approach,
I drew to part them, in the inſtant came
The fiery Tibalt, with his ſword prepar'd,
Which as he breath'd defiance to my eares,
He ſwong about his head, and cut the windes,
Who nothing hurt withall, hiſt him in ſcorne.
While we were enterchanging thruſts and blowes,
Came more and more, and fought on part and part,
Till the Prince came, who parted either part.
Wife. O where is Romeo, ſaw you him to day?
Right glad am I, he was not at this fray.
Ben. Madam, an houre before the worſhipt Sun
Peer'd forth the golden window of the Eaſt,
A troubled mind drave me to walke abroad,
Where underneath the grove of Sycamour,
That Weſt-ward rooteth from this City ſide:
So early walking did I ſee your Sonne;
Towards him I made, but he was ware of me,
And ſtole into the covert of the wood,
I meaſuring his affections by my owne,
Which then moſt ſought, where moſt might not be found
Being one too many by my weary ſelfe,
Perſued my honour, not perſuing his
And gladly ſhunn'd, who gladly fled from me.
Mount. Many a morning hath he there beene ſeene,
With teares augmenting the freſh mornings deaw,
Adding to cloudes, more cloudes with his deepe ſighes,
But all ſo ſoone as the all-cheering Sunne,
Should in the fartheſt Eaſt begin to draw
The ſhady Curtaines from Auroras bed,
Away from light ſteales home my heavy Sonne,
And private in his Chamber pennes himſelfe,
Shuts up his windowes, lockes faire day-light out,
And makes himſelfe an artificiall night:
Blacke and portentous muſt this humour prove,
Vnleſſe good counſell may the cauſe remove.
Ben. My Noble Vncle doe you know the cauſe?
Moun. I neither know it, nor can learne of him.
Ben. Have you importun'd him by any meanes?
Moun. Both by my ſelfe and many other Friends,
But he his owne affections counſeller,
Is to himſelfe (I will not ſay how true)
But to himſelfe ſo ſecret and ſo cloſe,
So farre from ſounding and diſcovery,
As is the bud bit with an envious worme,
Ere he can ſpread his ſweet leaves to the ayre,
Or dedicate his beauty to the ſame.
Could we but learne from whence his ſorrowes grow,
We would as willingly give cure, as know.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. See where he comes, ſo pleaſe you ſtep aſide,
Ile know his greevance, or be much denide.
Moun. I would thou wert ſo happy by thy ſtay,
To heare true ſhrift. Come Madam let's away. Exeunt.
Ben. Good morrow Couſin.
Rom. Is the day ſo young?
Ben. But new ſtrooke nine.
Rom. Aye me, ſad houres ſeeme long:
Was that my Father that went hence ſo faſt?
Ben. It was: what ſadneſſe lengthens Romeos houres?
Ro. Not having that, which having, makes them ſhort
Ben. In love.
Rom. Out.
Ben. Of love.
Rom. Out of her favour where I am in love.
Ben. Alas that love ſo gentle in his view,
Should be ſo tyrannous and rough in proofe.
Rom Alas that love, whoſe view is muffled ſtill,
Should without eyes, ſee path-wayes to his will:
Where ſhall we dine? O me: what fray was heere?
Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all:
Heres much to doe with hate, but more with love:
Why then, O brawling love, O loving hate,
O any thing, of nothing firſt create:
O heavy lightneſſe, ſerious vanity,
Miſhapen Chaos of welſeeming formes,
Feather of lead, bright ſmoake, cold fire, ſicke health,
Still-waking ſleepe, that is not what it is:
This love feele I, that feele no love in this.
Doeſt thou not laugh?
Ben. No Coze, I rather weepe.
Rom. Good heart, at what?
Ben. At thy good hearts oppreſſion.
Rom. Why ſuch is loves tranſgreſſion.
Griefes of mine owne lye heavy in my breaſt,
Which thou wilt propagate to have it preaſt
With more of thine, this love that thou haſt ſhowne,
Doth adde more griefe, to too much of mine owne.
Love, is a ſmoake made with the fume of ſighes,
Being purg'd, a fire ſparkling in Lovers eyes,
Being vext, a Sea nouriſht with loving teares,
What is it elſe? a madneſſe, moſt diſcreet,
A choking gall, and a preſerving ſweet:
Farewell my Coze.
Ben. Soft I will goe along.
And if you leave me ſo, you doe me wrong.
Rom. Tut I have loſt my ſelfe, I am not here,
This is not Romeo, he's ſome other where.
Ben. Tell me in ſadneſſe, who is that you love?
Rom. What ſhall I grone and tell thee?
Ben. Grone, why no: but ſadly tell me who.
Rom. A ſicke man in good ſadneſſe makes his will:
O, word ill urg'd to one that is ſo ill:
In ſadneſſe Cozin, I doe love a woman.
Ben. I aym'd ſo neare, when I ſuppos'd you lov'd.
Rom. A right good marke man, and ſhes faire I love.
Ben. A right faire marke, faire Coze, is ſooneſt hit.
Rom. Well in that hit you miſſe, ſheell not be hit
With Cupids arrow, ſhe hath Dians wit:
And in ſtrong proofe of chaſtity well arm'd:
From loves weake childiſh Bow, ſhe lives uncharm'd.
She will not ſtay the ſiege of loving tearmes
Nor bid th'incounter of aſſailing eyes.
Nor ope her lap to Saint-ſeducing Gold:
O ſhe is rich in beauty, onely poore,
That when ſhe dyes, with beauty dyes her ſtore.
Ben. Then ſhe hath ſworne, that ſhe will ſtill live chaſt?
Rom. She hath, and in that ſparing makes huge waſt?
For beauty ſterv'd with her ſeverity,
Cuts beauty off from all poſterity.

She is too faire, too wiſe wiſely too faire,
To merit bliſſe by making me diſpaire:
She hath forſworne to love, and in that vow
Doe I live dead, that live to tell it now.
Ben. Be ruld by me, forget to thinke of her.
Rom. O teach me how I ſhould forget to thinke.
Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eyes,
Examine other beauties. (more,
Rom. Tis the way to call hers (exquiſit) in queſtion
Theſe happy maskes that kiſſe faire Ladies browes,
Being blacke, puts us in mind they hide the faire:
He that is ſtrooken blind, cannot forget
The precious treaſure of his eye-ſight loſt:
Shew me a Miſtreſſe that is paſſing faire:
What doth her beauty ſerve but as a note,
Where I may reade who paſt that paſſing faire.
Farewell thou can'ſt not teach me to forget.
Ben. Ile pay that doctrine, or elſe dye in debt. Exeunt.

Enter Capulet, County Paris, and the Clowne.

Capu. Mountague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike, and tis not hard I thinke,
For men ſo old as we, to keepe the peace.
Par. Of honourable reckning are you both,
And pitty tis you liv'd at ods ſo long:
But now my Lord, what ſay you to my ſute?
Capu. But ſaying ore what I have ſaid before,
My Child is yet a ſtranger in the world,
Shee hath not ſeene the change of fourteene yeeres,
Let two more Summers wither in their pride,
Ere we may thinke her ripe to be a Bride.
Par. Younger then ſhe, are happy mothers made.
Capu. And too ſoone mar'd are thoſe ſo early made:
Earth up hath ſwallowed all my hopes but ſhe,
She is the hopefull Lady of my earth:
But wooe her gentle Paris, get her heart,
My will to her conſent, is but a part,
And ſhe agree, within her ſcope of choiſe,
Lyes my conſent, and faire according voyce:
This night I hold an old accuſtom'd feaſt,
Whereto I have invited many a Gueſt,
Such as I love, and you among the ſtore,
One more, moſt welcome makes my number more:
At my poore houſe, looke to behold this night,
Earth-treading ſtarres, that make darke heaven light,
Such comfort as doe luſty young men feele,
When well apparrel'd Aprill on the heele
Of limping Winter treads, euen ſuch delight
Among freſh Female buds ſhall you this night
Inherit at my houſe: heare all, all ſee;
And like her moſt, whoſe merit moſt ſhall be:
Which one more view, of many, mine being one,
My ſtand in number, though in reckning none.
Come, goe with me: goe ſirrah trudge about,
Through faire Verona, find thoſe perſons out,
Whoſe names are written there, and to them ſay,
My houſe and welcome, on their pleaſure ſtay. Exit.

Ser. Find them out whoſe names are written. Heert it is written, that the Shoo-maker ſhould meddle with his Yard, and the Tayler with his Laſt, the Fiſher with his Penſill, and the Painter with his Nets. But I am ſent to find thoſe perſons whoſe names are writ, and can never find what names the writting perſon hath here writ (I muſt to the learned) in good time.

Enter Benvolio, and Romeo.

Ben. Tut man, one fire burnes out anothers burning,
One paine is leſned by anothers anguiſh:
Turne giddy, and be holpe by backward turning:
One deſparate griefe, cures with anothers languiſh:
Take thou ſome new infection to the eye,
And the ranke poyſon of the old will dye.
Rom. Your Plantan leafe is excellent for that.
Ben. For what I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken ſhin.
Ben. Why Romeo art thou mad?
Rom. Not mad, but bound more then a mad man is:
Shut up in priſon, kept without my foode,
Whipt and tormented: and Godden good fellow.
Ser. Godgigoden, I pray ſir can you read?
Rom. I mine owne fortune in my miſery.
Ser. Perhaps you have learn'd it without booke;
But I pray can you read any thing you ſee?
Rom. I, if I know the Letters and the Language.
Ser. Ye ſay honeſtly, reſt you merry.
Rom. Stay fellow, I can read.

He reades the Letter.

Seigneur Martino, and his wife and daughter: County Anſelme and his beautious ſiſters: the Lady widdow of Vitruvio, Seigneur Placentio, and his lovely Neeces: Mercutio and his brother Valentine, mine uncle Capulet his wife and daughters: my faire Neece Roſaline, Livia, Seigneur Valentio, and his Coſen Tybalt: Lucio and the lively Helena.

A faire aſſembly, whither ſhould they come?
Ser. Vp.
Rom. Whither? to ſupper?
Ser. To our houſe.
Rom. Whoſe houſe?
Ser. My Maiſters.
Rom. Indeed I ſhould have askt you that before.

Ser. Now Ile tell you without asking. My maſter is the great rich Capulet, and if you be not of the houſe of Mountagues I pray come and cruſh a cup of wine. Reſt you merry. Exit.

Ben. At this ſame ancient Feaſt of Cupalets,
Sups the faire Roſaline, whom thou ſo loveſt:
With all the admired Beauties of Verona,
Goe thither and with unattainted eye,
Compare her face with ſome that I ſhall ſhow,
And I will make thee thinke thy Swan a Crow.
Rom. When the devout religion of mine eye
Maintaines ſuch falſhood, then turne teares to fire:
And theſe who often drown'd could never dye,
Tranſparent Heretiques be burnt for liers.
One fairer then my love! the all-ſeeing Sun
Nere ſaw her match, ſince firſt the world begun.
Ben. Tut Tut, you ſaw her faire, none elſe being by,
Herſelfe poyſ'd with herſelfe in either eye:
But in that Chriſtall ſcales, let there be waid,
Your Ladies love againſt ſome other Maid
That I will ſhow you, ſhining at this Feaſt,
And ſhele ſhew ſcant, well, that now ſhewes beſt.
Rom. Ile goe along, no ſuch ſight to be ſhowne,
But to rejoyce in ſplendor of mine owne.

Enter Capulets Wife and Nurſe.

Wife. Nurſe wher's my daughter? call her forth to me.
Nurſe. Now by my Maidenhead, at twelve yeare old
I bad her come, what Lamb: what Ladi-bird, God forbid,
Where's this Girle? what Iuliet?

Enter Iuliet.

Iuliet. How now, who calls?
Nur. Your Mother.
Iuliet. Madam I am heere, what is your will?
Wife. This is the matter: Nurſe give leave a while, we muſt

muſt talke in ſecret. Nurſe come backe againe, I have remembred me, thou'ſe heare our councell. Thou knoweſt my daughter's of a prety age.

Nurſe. Faith I can tell her age unto an houre.

Wife, Shees not fourteene.

Nurſe. Ile lay foureteene of my teeth,
And yet to my teeth be it ſpoken,
I have but foure, ſhees not fourteene,
How long is it now to Lammas tide?

Wife. A fortnight and odde dayes.

Nurſe. Euen or odde, of all daies in the yeare come Lammas Eue at night ſhall ſhe be fourteene. Suſan and ſhe, God reſt all Chriſtian ſoules, were of an age. Well Suſan is with God, ſhe was too good for me. But as I ſaid on Lammas Eue at night ſhall ſhe be fourteene, that ſhall ſhe marie, I remember it well. Tis ſince the Earth-quake now eleven yeares, and ſhe was wean'd I never ſhall forget it, of all the daies of the yeare, upon that day: for I had then laid Worme-wood to my Dug ſitting in the Sunne under the Dove-houſe wall, my Lord and you were then at Mantua, nay I doe beare a braine. But as I ſaid, when it did taſt the Worme-wood on the niple of my Dugge, and felt it bitter, pretty foole, to ſee it teachie, and fall out with the Dugge, Shake quoth the Dove-houſe, 't was no neede I trow to bid mee trudge: and ſince that time it is eleven yeares, for then ſhe could ſtand alone, nay bi'th roode ſhe could have runne, and wadled all about: for even the day before ſhe broke her brow, and then my Husband God be with his ſoule, a was a merrie man, tooke up the Child, yea quoth hee, doeſt thou fall upon thy face? thou wilt fall backeward when thou haſt more wit, wilt thou not Iulet? And by my holy-dam, the pretty wretch lefte crying, and ſaid I: to ſee now how a Ieſt ſhall come about. I warrant, & I ſhall live a thouſand yeares, I never ſhould forget it: wilt thou not Iulet quoth he? and pretty foole it ſtinted, and ſaid I.

Old La. Inough of this I pray the hold thy peace.

Nurſe. Yes Madam, yet I cannot chuſe but laugh, to thinke it ſhould leave crying, & ſay I: and yet I warrant it had upon it brow, a bumpe as big as a young Cockrels ſtone? A perilous knock, and it cryed bitterly. Yea quoth my husband, fall'ſt vpon thy face, thou wilt fall backward when thou commeſt to age: wilt thou not Iulet It ſtinted: and ſaid I.

Iule. And ſtint thou too I pray the Nurſe, ſay I.

Nur. Peace I have done: God marke thee to his grace thou was the pretieſt Babe that ere I nurſt, and I might live to ſee thee maried once, I have my wiſh.

Old La. Marry that marry is the very theame
I came to talke of, tell me daughter Iulet,
How ſtands your diſpoſition to be Married?

Iuli. It is an houre that I dreame not of.

Nur. An houre, were not I thine onely Nurſe, I would ſay thou hadſt ſuckt wiſedome from thy teat.

Old La. Well thinke of marriage now, younger then you
Heere in Varona, Ladies of eſteeme,
Are made already Mothers. By my count,
I was your Mother, much upon theſe yeares
That you are now a maide, thus then in briefe:
The valiant Paris ſeekes you for his love.

Nurſe. A man young Lady, Lady, ſuch a man as all the world. Why hee's a man of waxe.

Old La. Veronas Summer hath not ſuch a flower.

Nurſe. Nay hee's a flower, in faith a very flower.

Old La: What ſay you. can you love the Gentleman?
This night you ſhall behold him at our Feaſt,
Read ore the volume of young Paris face,
And find delight, writ there with Beauties pen:
Examine every ſeverall liniament,
And ſee how one another lends content:
And what obſcur'd in this faire volume lies,
Find written in the Margent of his eyes,
This precious Booke of Love, this unbound Lover,
To Beavtifie him; onely lacks a Cover.
The fiſh lives in the Sea, and'tis much pride
For faire without, the faire within to hide:
That Booke in manies eyes doth ſhare the glory,
That in Gold claſpes, Lockes in the Golden ſtorie:
So ſhall you ſhare all that he doth poſſeſſe,
By having him, making your ſelfe no leſſe.

Nurſe. No leſſe, nay bigger: women grow by men.

Old La. Speake briefly, can you like of Paris love.

Iuli. Ile looke to like, if looking liking move.
But no more deepe will I endart mine eye,
Then your conſent gives ſtrength to make it flye,

Enter a Serving man.

Ser. Madam, the gueſts are come, ſupper ſeru'd up, you cal'd, my young Lady askt for, the Nurſe curſt in the Pantery, and every thing in extremitie: I muſt hence to wait, I beſeech you follow ſtraight. Exit.

Mo. We follow thee, Iuliet, the Countie ſtaies.

Nurſe. Goe Girle, ſeeke happie nights to happie daies. Exeunt.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benuolio, with five or ſixe other Maskers, Torch-bearers.

Rom. What ſhall this ſpeech be ſpoke for our excuſe?
Or ſhall we on without Apologie?

Ben. The date is out of ſuch prolixitie,
Weele have no Cupid, hood winkt with a skarfe,
Bearing a Tartars painted Bow of lath,
Skaring the Ladies like a Crow-keeper.
But let them meaſure us by what they will.
Weele meaſure them a meaſure, and be gone.

Rom. Give me a Torch, I am not for this ambling.
Being but heavy I will beare the light.

Mer. Nay gentle Romeo, we muſt have you dance.

Rom. Not I beleeve me, you have dancing ſhooes
With nimble ſoles, I have a ſole of Lead
So ſtakes me to the ground, I cannot move.

Mer. You are a Lover, borrow Cupids wings,
And ſoare with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too ſore impearced with his ſhaft,
To ſoare with his light feathers, and to bond:
I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe,
Vnder loves heavy burthen doe I ſinke.

Hora. And to ſinke in it ſhould you burthen love,
Too great oppreſſion for a tender thing.

Rom. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough,
Too rude, too boyſterous, and it pricks like thorne.

Mer. If love be rough with you, be rough with love,
Pricke love for pricking, and you beate love downe,
Give me a Caſe to put my viſage in,
A Viſor for a Viſor, what care I
What curious eye doth quote deformities:
Here are the Beetle-browes ſhall bluſh for me.

Ben. Come knocke and enter, and no ſooner in,
But every man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A Torch for me, let wantons light of heart
Tickle the ſenceleſſe ruſhes with their heeles:
For I am proverb'd with a Grandſier Phraſe,
Ile be a Candle-holder and looke on,
The game was nere ſo faire, and I am done.

Mer. Tut,duns the Mouſe,the Conſtables owne word,
If thou art dun,weele draw thee from the mire.
Or ſave your reverence love, wherein thou ſtickeſt
Vp to the eares, come we burne day-light ho.

Rom. Nay that's not ſo.

Mer. I meane ſir I, delay,
We waſt our lights in vaine, lights,lights,by day ;
Take our good meaning,for our Iudgement ſits
Five times in that ere once in our fine wits.

Rom. And we meane well in going to this Maske,
But 'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why may one aske?

Rom. I dreampt a dreame to night.

Mer. And ſo did I.

Rom. Well what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lie.

Rom. In bed a ſleepe while they do dreame things true.

Mer. O then I ſee Queene Mabhath beene with you:
She is the Fairies Midwife,and ſhe comes in ſhape no bigger then Agat-ſtone, on the fore-finger of an Alderman, drawne with a teeme of little Atomies, over mens noſes as they lie aſleepe : her Waggon Spokes made of long Spinners legs : the Cover of the wings of Graſhoppers, her Trace of the ſmalleſt Spiders web, her collars of the Moone ſhines watry Beames,her Whip of Creckets bone, the Laſh of filme, her Waggoner, a ſmall gray coated Gnat, not halfe ſo bigge as a round little Worme, prickt from the Lazy-finger of a woman. Her Chariot is an ēpty Haſelnut, made by the Ioyner Squirrell or old Grub, time out a mind,the Faries Choach-makers:and in this ſtate ſhe gallops night by night,through Louers braines : and then they dreame of Love. On Countries knees,that dreame on Curſies ſtrait: ore Lawiers fingers, who ſtrait dreame on Fees , ore Ladies lips, who ſtrait on kiſſes dreame, which oft the angry Mab with bliſters plagues, becauſe their breath with Sweet meats tainted are. Sometime ſhe gallops ore a Courtiers noſe,and then dreames he of ſmelling out a ſuite:and ſometime comes ſhe with a Tith pigs tale, tickling a Parſons noſe as he lies aſleepe,then he dreams of another Benefice. Sometime ſhe driveth ore a Souldiers necke,and then dreames he of cutting Forraine throats,of Breaches, Ambuſcados, Spaniſh Blades : Of Healths fiue Fadome deepe,and then anon drums in his eares,at which he ſtarts and wakes, and being thus frighted, ſweares a prayer or two & ſleeps againe: this is that very Mab that plats the manes of Horſes in the night:and baks the Elf-locks in foule ſluttiſh haires,which once untangled,much misfortune bodes.
This is the hag, when Maides lie on their backs,
That preſſes them,and learnes them firſt to beare,
Making them women of good carriage:
This is ſhe———

Rom. Peace,peace, Mercutio peace,
Thou talk'ſt of nothing.

Mer. True I talke of dreames:
Which are the children of an idle braine,
Begot of nothing, but vaine phantaſie,
Which is as thin of ſubſtance as the ayre,
And more inconſtant then the wind, who wooes
Even now the frozen boſome of the North:
And being anger'd, puffes away from thence,
Turning his ſide to the dew dropping South.

Ben. This wind you talke of blows vs from our ſelves,
Supper is done and we ſhall come too late.

Rom. I feare too early, for my mind miſgives,
Some conſequence yet hanging in the ſtarres,
Shall bitterly begin his fearefull date
With this nights revels, and expire the tearme
Of a deſpiſed life cloſ'd in my breſt:
By ſome vile forfeit of untimely death,
But he that hath the ſtirrage of my courſe,
Direct my ſute : on luſty Gentlemen.

Ben. Strike Drum.

They march about the Stage, and Seruingmen come forth with their napkin.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away?
He ſhift a Trencher? he ſcrape a Trencher,

1. When good manners,ſhall lye in one or two mens hands, and they unwaſht too,'tis a foule thing.

Ser, Away with the Ioynſtooles, remove the Court-cubbord, looke to the plate: good thou, ſave me a peice of Marchpane,and as thou loveſt me, let the Porter let in Suſan Grindſtone, and Nell, Anthonie and Potpan.

2. I Boy ready.

Ser. You are lookt for,and cal'd for,askt for,and ſought for, in the great Chamber.

1. We cannot be here and there too,chearly Boys,
Be briske a while, and the longer liver take all.

Exeunt.

Enter all the Gueſts and Gentlewomen to the Maskers.

1. Capu. Welcome Gentlemen,
Ladies that have their toes
Vnplagu'd with Cornes,will walke about with you:
Ah me Miſtreſſes, which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
She Ile ſweare hath Cornes: am I come neare ye now?
Welcome Gentlemen, I have ſeene the day
That I have worne a Viſor, and could tell
A whiſpering tale in a faire Ladies eare:
Such as would pleaſe : 'tis gone,'tis gone, 'tis gone,
You are welcome Gentlemen, come Muſitians play:

Muſicke plaies: and the dance.

A Hall,hall, give roome, and foote it Girles,
More light ye knaves, and turne the Tables up:
And quench the fire, the Roome is growne too hot.
Ah ſirrah,this unlookt for ſport comes well :
Nay ſit,nay ſit, good Cozin Capulet,
For you and I are paſt our dauncing dayes ;
How long 'iſt now ſince laſt your ſelfe and I
Were in a Maske

2. Capu. Berlady thirty yeares.

1. Capu. What man : 'tis not ſo much,'tis not ſo much,
'Tis ſince the Nuptiall of Lucentio.
Come Penticoſt as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty yeares,and then we Maskt.

2. Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more, his Sonne is elder ſir :
His Sonne is thirty.

3. Cap. Will you tell me that?
His Sonne was but a Ward two yeares agoe.

Rom. What Lady is that which doth in rich the hand
Of yonder Knight?

Ser. I konw not ſir.

Rom. O ſhe doth teach the Torches to burne bright:
Her Beauty hangs upon the cheeke of night,
Like a rich Iewel in an Æthiops eare :
Beauty too rich for uſe,for earth too deare:
So ſhewes a Snowy Dove trooping with Crowes,
As yonder Lady ore her fellowes ſhowes?
The meaſure done. Ile watch her place of ſtand,
And touching hers, make bleſſed my rude hand.

Did my heart love till now,forſweare it ſight,
For I never ſaw true Beauty till this night.
Tib. This by his voyce,ſhould be a Mountague.
Fetch me my Rapier, Boy,what dares the ſlave
Come hither coverd with an antique face,
To fleere and ſcorne at our Solemnity?
Now by the ſtocke and Honour of my kin.
To ſtrike him dead I hold in not a ſin.
Cap. Why how now kinſman,
Wherefore ſtorme you ſo?
Tib. Vncle this is a Mountague, our foe:
A Villaine that is hither come in ſpight,
To ſcorne at our Solemnity this night.
Cap. Young Romeo is?
Tib. 'Tis he,that Villian Romeo.
Cap. Content thee gentle Coz, let him alone,
Abeares him like a portly Gentleman:
And to ſay truth,Verona brags of him,
To be a vertuous and well govern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all the towne,
Here in my houſe doe him diſparagement:
Therefore be potient,take no note of him,
It is my will, the which if thou reſpect,
Shew a faire preſence,and put off theſe frownes,
An ill beſeeming ſemblance for a Feaſt.
Tib. It fits when ſuch a Villaine is a gueſt,
Ile not endure him.
Cap. He ſhall be endur'd.
What goodmanboy,I ſay be ſhall,go to,
Am I the Maiſter here or you? go to,
Youle not endure him,God ſhall mend my ſoule,
Youle make a Mutiny among the Gueſts:
You will ſet cocke a hoope,youle be the man?
Tib. Why Vncle 'tis a ſhame.
Cap. Go to, go to.
You are a ſawcy Boy,'tis ſo indeed?
This tricke may chance to ſcath you,I know what,
You muſt contrary me,marry 'tis time.
Well ſaid my hearts, you are a princox,goe,
Be quiet or more light,for ſhame,
Ile make you puiet. What,chearely my hearts.
Tib. Patience perforce,with wilfull coler making,
Makes my fleſh tremble in their different greeting:
I will withdraw, but this intruſion ſhall
Now ſeeming ſweet, conuert to bitter gall.
Rom, If I prophane with my vnworthieſt hand,
This holy ſhrine, the gentle ſin is this,
My lips two bluſhing Pilgrims ready ſtand,
To ſmooth that rough touch,with a tender kiſſe.
Iuli. Good Pilgrime,
You do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly devotion ſhewes in this,
For Saints have hands,that Pilgrimes hand,doe touch,
And palme to palme, is holy Palmers kiſſe.
Rom. Have not Saints lips, and holy Palmers too?
Iuli. I Pilgrim,lips that they muſt uſe in prayer.
Rom. O then deare Saint let lips do what hands doe,
They pray (graunt thou) leaſt faith turne to diſpaire.
Iuli. Saints doe not move,
Though graunt for prayers ſake.
Rom. Then move not while my prayers effect doe take:
Thus from my lips,by thine my ſin is purg'd.
Iuli. Then have my lips the ſin that they have tooke,
Rom. Sin from my lips! O treſpaſſe ſweetly vrg'd:
Give me my ſin againe,
Iuli. You kiſſe by'th'booke.
Nur. Madam your Mother craves a word with you.
Rom. What is her Mother,
Nurſe, Marry Batcheler,
Her Mother is the Lady of the houſe,
And a good Lady,and a wiſe,and Vertuous,
I Nur'ſt her Daughter that you talke withall:
I tell you,he that can lay hold of her,
Shall have the chincke.
Rom. Is ſhe a Capulet?
O deare account! My life is my foes debt.
Ben. Away,be gone,the ſport is at the beſt.
Rom. I ſo I feare,the more is my unreſt.
Cap. Nay Gentlemen prepare not to be gone,
We have a trifling fooliſh Banquet towards:
Is it e'ne ſo? why then I thanke you all.
I thanke you honeſt Gentlemen,good night:
More Torches here come on,then let's to bed.
Ah ſirra,by my faie it waxes late.
Ile to my reſt. Exeunt.
Iuli. Come hither Nurſe,
What is yond Gentleman:
Nur. The Sonne and Heire of old Tyberio.
Iuli. What's he that now is going out of doore?
Nur. Marry that I thinke be young Petruchio.
Iuli. What's he that follows here that would not dance?
Nur. I know not.
Iuli. Go aske his name;if he be maried,
My grave is like to be my wedding bed.
Nur. His name is Romeo,and a Mountague,
The onely Sonne of our great Enemy.
Iuli. My onely Love ſprung from my onely hate,
Too early ſeene,unknow,and knowne, too late,
Prodigious birth of Love it is to me,
That I muſt love a loathed Enemy.
Nur. What's this? what's this?
Iuli. A rime, I learnd even now
Of one I dan'ſt withall.
One calls within, Iuliet.
Nur. Anon,anon:
Come let's away, the ſtraungers all are gone.
Exeunt

Chorus:
Now old deſire doth in his death-bed lye,
And young affection gapes to be his Heire,
That faire,for which Love grou'd for and would dye,
With tender Iuliet matcht, is now not faire.
Now Romeo is beloved, and Loues againe,
A like bewitched by the charme of lookes:
But to his foe ſuppos'd he muſt complaine,
And ſhe ſteale Loves ſweet bait from fearefull hookes.
Being held a foe,he may not have acceſſe
To breath ſuch vowes, as Lovers uſe to ſweare;
And ſhe as much in Love,her meanes much leſſe,
To meete her new Beloved any where:
But paſſion lends them Power,time,meanes to meete,
Temp'ting extremities with extreame ſweete.

Enter Romeo alone.
Rom. Can I goe forward when my heart is here?
Turne backe dull earth,and find my Centour out.
Enter Bennolio, with Mercutio.
Ben. Romeo,my Cozen Romeo,Romeo.
Mere. He is wiſe,
And on my life hath ſtolne him home to bed.
Ben. He ran this way,and leapt this Orchard wall.
Call good Mercutio:
Nay,Ile coniure too.

Mer. Romeo,Humours, Madman,Paſſion,Lover,
Appeare thon in the likeneſſe of a ſight,
Speake but one time,and I am ſatisfied:
Cry me but ayme,Couply but Love and day,
Speake to my goſhip Venus one faire wor,
One Nickname for her purblind Sonne and her,
Young Abraham Cupid he that ſhot ſo true,
When King Cophetua lov'd the begger Maid,
He heareth not,he ſtirreth not,he moveth not,
The Ape is dead,and I muſt coniure him,
I coniure thee by Roſalines bright eyes,
By her high forehead,and her Scarlet lip,
By her fine foote, Straight leg,aud Quivering thigh,
And the Demeanes,that there Adiacent lie,
That in thy likeneſſe thou appeare to us.
Ben. And if he heare thee thou wilt anger him.
Mer. This cannot anger him,t'would anger him
To raiſe a ſpirit in his Miſtreſſe circle,
Of ſome ſtrange nature, letting it there ſtand
Till ſhe had laid it, and conjur'd it downe,
That were ſome ſpight.
My invocation is faire and honeſt,and in his Miſtris name
I conjure onely but to raiſe up him.
Ben. Come, he hath hid himſelſe among theſe Trees
To be conſorted with the Humerous night:
Blind is his Love, and beſt befits the darke.
Mer. If Love be blind, Love cannot hit the marke,
Now will he ſit under a Medler tree,
And wiſh his Miſtreſſe were that kind of Fruite,
As Maides call Medlers when they laugh alone,
O Romeo that ſhe were, O that ſhe were
An open, or thou a Poprin Peare,
Romeo goodnight,Ile to my Truckle bed,
This Field-bed is too cold for me to ſleepe,
Come ſhall we go?
Ben. Go then,for 'tis in vaine to ſeeke him here
That meanes not to be found. Exeunt.
Rom. He ieaſts at Scarres that never felt a wound,
But ſoft,what light through yonder window breaks?
It is the Eaſt,and Iuliet is the Sunne,
Ariſe faire Sun and kill the envious Moone,
Who is already ſicke and pale with greife,
That thou her Maid art far more faire then ſhe:
Be not her Maid ſince ſhe is envious,
Her Veſtall livery is but ſicke and greene,
And none but fooles do weare it,caſt it off:
It is my Lady,O it is my Love,O that ſhe knew ſhe were,
She ſpeakes, yet ſhe ſaies nothing; what of that?
Her eye diſcourſes, I will anſwere it:
I am too bold 'tis not to me ſhe ſpeakes:
Two of the faireſt ſtarres in all the heaven,
Hauing ſome buſineſſe do entreat her eyes,
To twinckle in their Spheres till they returne.
What if her eyes were there,they in her head,
The brightneſſe of her cheeke would ſhame thoſe ſtarres,
As day-light doth a Lampe, her eye in heaven,
Would through the ayrie Region ſtreame ſo bright,
That Birds would ſing and thinke it were not night:
See how ſhe leanes her cheeke upon her hand.
O that I were a Glove upon that hand.
That I might touch that cheeke.
Iuli. Ay me.
Rom. She ſpeakes.
Oh ſpeake againe bright Angell,for thou art
As glorious to this night being ore my head,
As is a winged meſſenger. of heaven
Vnto the white upturned wondering eyes
Of mortalls that fall backe to gaze on him,
When he beſtrids the lazy puffing Clouds,
And ſailes upon the boſome of the ayre.
Iuli. O Romeo,Romeo, wherefore art thou Romeo?
Deny thy Father and refuſe thy name:
Or if thou wilt not,be but ſworne my Love,
And Ile no longer be a Capulet.
Rom. Shall I here more, or ſhall I ſpeake at this?
Iu. 'Tis but thy name that is my Enemy:
Thou art thy ſelfe, though not a Mountague,
What's Mountague? it is nor hand nor foote,
Nor arme, nor face,O be ſome other name
Belonging to a man.
Whats in a name? that which we call a Roſe,
By any other word would ſmell as ſweete,
So Romeo would,were he not Romeo cal'd,
Retaine that deare perfection which he owes,
Without that title Romeo,doffe thy name,
And for thy name which is no part of thee,
Take all my ſelfe,
Rom. I take thee at thy word:
Call me but Love, and Ile be new baptiz'd,
Hence foorth I never will be Romeo.
Iuli. What man art thou, that thus beſcreen'd in nigh
So ſtumleſt on my councell?
Rom. By a name,
I know not how to tell thee who I am:
My name deare Saint, is hatefull to my ſelfe,
Becauſe it is an Enemy to thee,
Had I it written, I would teare the word,
Iuli. My eares have yet not drunke a hundred words
Of thy tongues uttering, yet I know the ſound.
Art thou not Romec,and a Mountague?
Rom, Neither faire Maid,if either thee diſlike,
Iuli. How cam'ſt thou hither.
Tell me, and wherefore?
The Orchard walls are high, and hard to climbe,
And the place death,conſidering who thou art,
If any of my kinſmen find thee here,
Rom. With Loves light wings
Did I ore-perch theſe Walls,
For ſtony limits cannot hold Love out,
And what Love can do, that dars Love attempt:
Therefore thy kinſmen are no ſtop to me.
Iuli. If they doe ſee thee,they will murther thee.
Rom. Alacke there lies more perill in thine eye,
Then twenty of their Swords, looke thou but ſweete,
And I am proofe againſt their enmity.
Iuli. I would not for the world they ſaw thee here.
Rom. I have nights cloake to hide me from their eyes
And but thou love me, let them finde me here,
My life were better ended by their hate,
Then death proroged wanting of thy Love.
Iuli. By whoſe direction found'ſt thou out this place?
Rom. By Love that firſt did prompt me to enquire,
He lent me counſell,and I lent him eyes,
I am no Pylot,yet wert thou as far
As that vaſt-ſhore: waſhd with the fartheſt Sea,
I ſhould aduenture for ſuch Marchandiſe,
Iuli. Thou knoweſt the maske of night is on my face,
Elſe would a Maiden bluſh bepaint my cheeke,
For that which thou haſt heard me ſpeake to night,
Faine would I dwell on forme, faine, faine, deny
What I have ſpoke but farewell Complements
Doeſt thou Love? O I know thou wilt ſay I,

And I will take thy word,yet if thou ſwear'ſt,
Thou maieſt prove falſe at Louers perjvries
They ſay Ioue laughes,oh gentle Romeo,
If thou doſt Love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or if thou thinkeſt I am too quickly wonne,
Ile frowne and be peruerſe, and ſay thee nay,
So thou wilt wooe: But elſe not for the world.
In truth faire Mountague I am too fond:
And therefore thou mayeſt thinke my haviour light,
But truſt me Gentleman,Ile prove more true,
Then thoſe that have more coyning to be ſtrange,
I ſhould have beene more ſtrange I muſt confeſſe,
But that thou over heard'ſt ere I was ware
My true Loves paſſion, therefore pardon me,
And not impute this yeelding to light Love,
Which the darke night hath ſo diſcovered,
Rom. Lady,by yonder Moone I vow:
That tips with ſilver all theſe Fruite-tree tops.
Iuli. O ſweare not by the Moone,th'inconſtant Moone,
That monethly changes in her circled Orbe,
Leaſt that thy Love prove likewiſe variable.
Rom. What ſhall I ſweare by?
Iuli. Do not ſweare at all:
Or if thou wilt ſweare by thy gratious ſelfe,
Which is the God of my Idolatry,
And Ile beleeve thee.
Rom. If my hearts deare love——
Iuli. Well do not ſweare although I ioy in thee,
I have no ioy of this contract to night,
It is too raſh,too unadviſ'd,too ſodden,
Too like the lightning which doth ceaſe to be
Ere, one can ſay,it lightens,Sweete good night:
This bud of Love by Summers ripening breath.
May prove a beavteous Flower when next we meete:
Goodnight: goodnight, as ſweete repoſe and reſt,
Come to thy heart, as that within my breſt.
Rom. O wilt thou leave me ſo unſatisfied?
Iuli, What ſatiſtaction can'ſt thou have to night?
Rom. Th'exchange of thy Loves faithfull vow of mine,
Iuli. I gave thee mine before thou did'ſt reqneſt it:
And yet I would it were to give againe,
Rom. Would'ſt thou withdraw it,
For what purpoſe Love?
Iuli. But to be franke and give it thee againe,
And yet I wiſh but for the thing I have,
My bounty is as boundleſſe as the Sea,
My Love as deepe, the more I give to thee
The more I have,for both are Infinite.
I heare ſome noyſe within deare Love adue.

Cals within.

Anon good Nurſe, ſweet Mountagne be true:
Stay but a little, I will come againe.
Rom. O bleſſed bleſſed night,I am afear'd
Being in night, all this is but a dreame,
Too flattering ſweet to be ſubſtantiall.
Iuli. Three words deare Romeo, Enter.
And goodnight indeed,
If that thy bent of Love be Honourable,
Thy purpoſe marriage, ſend me word to morrow,
By one that Ile procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt performe the right,
And all my Fortunes at thy foote Ile lay,
And follow thee my Lord throughout the world.

Within: Madam.

I come,anon:but if thou meaneſt not well,
I do beſeech thee.

Within: Madam

(By and by I come)
To ceaſe thy ſtrife,and leave me to my griefe,
To morrow will I ſend.
Rom. So thrive my ſoule.
Iuli. A thouſand times goodnight.

Exit.

Rom. A thouſand times the worſe to want thy light,
Love goes toward Love as ſchoole-boys from their books
But Love from Love,towards ſchoole with heavy lookes,

Enter Iuliet againe.

Iuli. Hiſt Romeo hiſt: O for a Falkners voice,
To lure this Taſſell gentle backe againe,
Bondage is hoarſe, and may not ſpeake aloud,
Elſe would I teare the Cave where Eccho lies,
And make her ayry tongue more hoarſe,then with
The repetition of my Romeo,
Rom. It is my ſoule that calls upon my name.
How ſilver ſweete, ſound Lovers tongues by night,
Like ſofteſt Muſicke to attending eares.
Iuli. Romeo.
Rom. My ſweete.
Iuli. What a clocke to morrow
Shall I ſend to thee?
Rom. By the houre of nine.
Iuli. I will not faile, 'tis twenty yeares till then,
I have forgot why I did call thee backe,
Rom. Let me ſtand here till thou remember it.
Iuli. I ſhall forget,to have the ſtill ſtand there,
Remembring how I Love thy company.
Rom. And Ile ſtill ſtay, to have thee ſtill forget,
Forgetting any other name but this.
Iuli. 'Tis almoſt morning, I would have thee gone,
And yet no further then a wantons Bird,
That let's it hop a little from his hand,
Like a poore priſoner in his twiſted Gyves,
And with a ſilken thred plucks it againe,
So loving Iealous of his liberty.
Rom. I would I were thy bird.
Iuli. Sweet ſo would I,
Yet I ſhould kill thee with much cheriſhing:
Goodnight,goodnight.
Rom. Parting is ſuch ſweete ſorrow,
That I ſhall ſay goodnight, till it be morrow.
Iuli, Sleepe dwell vpon thine eyes, peace in thy breſt

Exit.

Rom. Would I were ſleepe and peace ſo ſweet to reſt,
The gray ey'd morne ſmiles on the frowning night,
Checkring the Eaſterne Clouds with ſtreaks of light,
And darkeneſſe fleckel'd like a drunkard reeles,
From forth dayes pathway,made by Titans wheeles.
Hence wil I to my ghoſtly Friers cloſe Cell,
His helpe to crave,and my deare hap to tell.

Exit.

Enter Frier alone with a basket.

Fri. Now ere the Sun advance his burning eye,
The day to cheere, and nights danke dew to dry,
I muſt upfill this Oſier Cage of ours,
With balefull weedes, and precious Iuiced flowers,
The earth that's Natures mother,is her Tombe,
What is her burying grave that is her wombe:
And from her wombe children of divers kind

We ſucking on her naturall boſome find:
Many for many vertues excellent:
None but for ſome, and yet all different.
O mickle is the powerfull grace that lies
In Plants, Hearbs, ſtones, and their true qualities:
For nought ſo vile, that on the earth doth live.
But to the earth ſome ſpeciall good doth give.
Nor ought ſo good, but ſtrain'd from that faire vſe,
Revolts from true birth, ſtumbling on abuſe.
Vertue it ſelfe turnes vice being miſapplied.
And vice ſometime by action dignified.

Enter Romeo.

Within the infant rin'd of this weake flower,
Poyſon hath reſidence, and medicine power:
For this being ſmelt, with that part cheares each part,
Being taſted ſlayes all ſences with the heart.
Two ſuch oppoſed Kings encampe them ſtill,
In man as well as Hearbs grace and rude will:
And where the worſer is predominant,
Full ſoone the Canker death eates up that Plant,

Rom. Good morrow Father.

Fri. Benedicite.
What early tongue ſo ſweet ſalute them?
Young Sonne, it argues a diſtempered head,
So ſoone to bid good morrow to thy bed;
Care keeps his watch in every old mans eye,
And where Care lodgeth, ſleepe will never lye:
But where unbruſed youth with unſtuft braine
Doth couch his lims, there, golden ſleepe doth raigne;
Therefore thy earlineſſe doth me aſſure,
Thou art uprouz'd with ſome diſtemprature;
Or if not ſo, then here I hit it right.
Our Romeo. hath not beene in bed to night.

Rom. That laſt is true, the ſweeter reſt was mine.

Fri. God pardon ſin: waſt thou with Roſaline?

Rom, With Roſaline, my ghoſtly Father? No,
I have forgot that name, and that names woe.

Fri. That's my good Son, but where haſt thou bin then?

Rom. Ile tell thee ere thou aske it me agen:
I have beene feaſting with mine enemy,
Where on a ſudden one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy helpe and holy phiſicke lies:
I beare no hatred. bleſſed man: for loe
My interceſſion likewiſe steads my foe.

Fri. Be plaine good Son, reſt homely in thy drift,
Ridling confeſſion, finds but ridling ſhrift.

Rom. Then plainely know my hearts deare Love is ſet,
On the faire daunger of rich Capulet:
As mine on hers. ſo hers is ſet on mine;
And all combin'd, ſave what thou muſt combine
By holy marriage: when and where, and how,
We met, we wooed, and made exchange of vow:
Ile tell the as we paſſe, but this I pray,
That thou conſent to marry us to day.

Fri. Holy S. Francis, what a change is here?
Is Roſaline that thou didſt Love ſo deare
So ſoone forſaken? young mens Love then lies
Not truely in their hearts, but in theit eyes.
Ieſu Maria, what a deale of brine
Hath waſht thy ſallow cheeckes for Roſaline?
How much ſalt water throwne away in waſt,
To ſeaſon Love that of it doth not taſt.
The Sun not yet thy ſighes, from heaven cleares,
Thy old grones yet ring in my auncient eares:
Lo here upon thy cheecke the ſtaine doth ſit,
Of an old teare that is not waſht off yet.
If ere thou waſt thy ſelfe, and theſe woes thine.
Thou and theſe woes, were all for Roſaline.
And art thou chang'd? pronounce this ſentence then
Women may fall, when there's no ſtrength in men,

Rom. Thou chid'ſt me oft for loving Roſaline.

Fri. For doting not for loving pupill mine.

Rom. And bad'ſt me bury Love.

Fri. Not in a grave,
To lay one in another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee chide me not, her I Love now
Doth grace for grace, and Love for Love allow:
The other did not ſo.

Fri. O ſhe knew well,
Thy Love did read by rote, that could not ſpell:
But come young waverer, come goe with me,
In one reſpect. Ile thy aſiſtant be:
For this alliance may ſo happy prove,
To turne your houſhold rancord to pure Love.

Rom. O let us hence, I ſtand on ſudden haſt.

Fri. Wiſely and ſlow, they ſtumble that run faſt.

Exeunt.

Enter Bennolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the devile ſhould this Romeo be? came he not home to night?

Ben. Not to his Fathers, I ſpoke with his man.

Mer. Why that ſame pale hard-harted wench, that Roſaline torments him ſo, that he will ſure run mad.

Ben. Tibalt, the kinſman to old Capulet, hath ſent a Letter to his Fathers houſe.

Mer. A challenge on my life.

Ben. Romeo will anſwere it.

Mer. Any man that can write, may anſwere a Letter.

Ben. Nay he will anſwere the Letters Maiſter how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas poore Romeo, he is already dead, ſtab'd with a white wenches blacke eye, runne through the eare with a Love ſong, the very pinne of his heart, cleft with the blind Bowe-boyes-but-ſhaft, and is he a man to encounter Tybalt?

Ben, Why what is Tybalt?

Mer. More then Prince of Cats. Oh hee's the Couragious Captaine of Complements: he fights as you ſing prickſong, keeps time. diſtance, and proportion, he reſts his minum, one, two, and the third in your boſome: the very butcher of a ſilke button, a Dualiſt, a Dualiſt: a Gentleman of the very firſt houſe of the firſt and ſecond cauſe: ah the immortall Paſſado, the punto reverſo, the Hay.

Ben. The what?

Mer. The Pox of ſuch antique liſping affecting phantacies, theſe new tuners of accent: Ieſu a very good blade, a very tall man, a very good whore. Why is not this a lamentable thing Grandſire, that we ſhould be thus afflicted with theſe ſtrainge flies: theſe faſhion Mongers, theſe pardon-mee's, who ſtand ſo much on the new form, that the cannot ſit at eaſe on the old bench. O their bones, their bones.

Enter Romeo.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.

Mer. Without his Roe, like a dried Hering. O fleſh, fleſh, how art thou fiſhified? Now is he for the numbers that Petrarch flowed in: Laura to his Lady was a kitchen wench, marry ſhe had a better Love to berime her: Dido a dowdy, Cleopatra a Gipſie, Hellen and Hero, hildings and harlots: Thisby a gray eie or ſo, but not to the purpoſe Signior Romeo, Bonsour, theres a French ſalutation to your

French ſlop: you gave us the counterfeit fairely laſt night.

Romeo. Good morrow to you both, what counterfeit did I give you?

Mer. The ſlip ſir, the ſlip, can you not conceive?

Rom. Pardon Mercutio, my buſineſſe was great, and in ſuch a caſe as mine, a man may ſtraine courſie.

Mer. That's as much as to ſay, ſuch a caſe as yours conſtrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom, Meaning to courteſie.

Mer. Thou haſt moſt kindly hit it.

Rom. A moſt courteous expoſition.

Mer. Nay. I am the very pinck of courteſie.

Rom. Pinke for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why then is my Pump well flowr'd.

Mer. Sure wit, follow me this ieaſt, now till thou haſt worne out thy Pump, that when the ſingle ſole of it is worne, the ieaſt may remaine after the wearing, ſole-ſingular.

Rom. O ſingle ſol'd ieaſt,
Soly ſingular for the ſingleneſſe.

Mer. Come betweene us good Benuolio, my wit faints.

Rom. Swits and ſpurs,
Swits and ſpurs, or Ile crie a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the Wild-Gooſe chaſe, I am done: For thou haſt more of the Wild-Gooſe in one of thy wits, then I am ſure I have in my whole five. Was I with you there for the Gooſe?

Rom. Thou was never with me for any thing, when thou waſt not there for the Gooſe.

Mer. I will bite thee by the eare for that ieſt.

Rom: Nay, good Gooſe bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very bitter-ſweeting,
It is a moſt ſharpe ſawce.

Rom. And is it not well ſerv'd into a ſweet-Gooſe?

Mer. Oh here's a wit of Cheverell, that ſtretches from an ynch narrow, to an ell broad.

Rom. I ſtretch it out for that word, broad, which added to the Gooſe, proves the farre and wide, abroad Gooſe.

Mer. Why is not this better now, then groning for Love, now art thou ſociable, now art thou Romeo: now art thou what thou art, by Art as well as by Nature, for this driveling Love is like a great Naturall, that runs lolling up and downe to hide his bable in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, ſtop there.

Mer. Thou deſir'ſt me to ſtop in my tale againſt the

Ben. Thou would'ſt elſe have made thy tale large. (haire.

Mer. O thou art deceiv'd, I would have made it ſhort, or I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant indeed to occupy the argument no longer.

Enter Nurſe and her man.

Rom. Here's goodly geare.
A ſayle, a ſayle.

Mer. Two, two: a Shirt and a Smocke.

Nur. Peter?

Peter. Anon.

Nur. My Fan Peter?

Mer. Good Peter to hide her face?
For her Fans the fairer face?

Nur. God ye good morrow Gentlemen.

Mer. God ye gooden faire Gentlewomen,

Nur. It is gooden?

Mer. 'Tis no leſſe I tell you: for the bawdy hand of the Dyall is now upon the pricke of Noone.

Nur. Out upon you: what a man are you?

Rom. One Gentlewoman,
That God hath made, himſelfe to, mar.

Nur. By my troth it is ſaid, for himſelfe to, mar quotha Gentleman, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Romeo. I can tell you: but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, then he was when you ſought him: I am the youngeſt of that name, for fault of a worſe.

Nur. You ſay well.

Mer. Yea is the worſt well.
Very well tooke: Iſaith, wiſely, wiſely,

Nur. If you be he ſir,
I deſire ſome confidence with you?

Beu. She will envite him to ſome Supper.

Mer. A baud, a baud, a baud. So ho.

Rom. What haſt thou found?

Mer. No Hare ſir, unleſſe a Hare ſir in a Lenten pie, that is ſomething ſtale and hoare ere it be ſpent.
An old Hare hoare, and an old Hare hoare is very good meat in Lent.
But a Hare that is hoare is too much for a ſcore, when it hoares ere it be ſpent,
Romeo will you come to your Fathers? Weele to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell auncient Lady:
Farewell Lady, Lady, Lady.

Exit. Mercutio, Benuolio.

Nur. I pray you ſir, what ſawcie Merchant was this that was ſo full of his ropery?

Rom. A Gentleman Nurſe, that loves to here himſelfe talke, and will ſpeake more in a minute, then he will ſtand to in a Moneth.

Nur. And a ſpeake any thing againſt me, Ile take him downe, and a were luſtier then he is, and twenty ſuch Iacks: and if I cannot, Ile find thoſe that ſhall: ſcuruie knave, I am none of his flurt-gils, I am none of his skaines mates and thou muſt ſtand by too and ſuffer every knave to uſe me at his pleaſure.

Pet. I ſaw no man uſe you at his pleaſure: if I had, my weapon ſhould quickly have beene out, I warrant you, I dare draw aſſoone as another man, if I ſee occaſion in a good quarrell, and the law on my ſide.

Nur. Now afore God, I am ſo vext, that every part about me quivers, skurvy knave: pray you ſir a word: and as I told you my young Lady bid me enquire you out, what ſhe bid me ſay I will keepe to my ſelfe: but firſt let me tell ye, if ye ſhould lead her in a fooles paradiſe, as they ſay, it were a very groſſe kind of behaviour, as they ſay: for the Gentlewomen is yong: and therefore, if you ſhould deale double with her, truely it were an ill thing to be offered to any Gentlewoman, and very weake dealing,

Rom. Nurſe commend me to thy Lady and Miſtreſſe, I, proteſt onto thee——

Nur. Good heart, and Iſaith I will tell her as much:
Lord, Lord ſhe will be a ioyfull woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her Nurſe? thou doeſt not marke me?

Nur. I will tell her ſir, that you do proteſt, which as I take it, is a Gentleman-like offer. (afternoone,

Rom. Bid her deviſe ſome meanes to come to ſhrift this
And there ſhe ſhall at Frier Lawrence Cell
Beſhriv'd and married: here is for thy paines.

Nur. No truly ſir not a penny.

Rom. Go to I ſay you ſhall.

Nur. This afternoone ſir? well ſhe ſhall be there.
Ro. And ſtay thou good Nurſe behind the Abbey wall,
Within this houre my man ſhall be with thee,
And bring the Cords made like a tackled ſtaire,
Which to the high top gallant of my ioy.
Muſt be my conuoy in the ſecret night.
Farewell,be truſty and Ile quite thy paines:
Farewell,commend me to thy Miſtreſſe.
Nur. Now God in heaven bleſſe thee: harke you ſir,
Rom. What ſaiſt thou my deare Nurſe?

Nurſe. Is your man ſecret, did you nere heare ſay two may keepe councell putting one away.

Rom. I warrant thee my man as true as ſteele.

Nur. Well ſir, my Miſtreſſe is the ſweeteſt Lady,Lord, Lord,when 'twas a little prating thing. O there is a Noble man in Towne one Paris, that would faine lay knife aboard: but ſhe good ſoule had as leeve ſee a Toade. a very Toade as ſee him: I anger her ſometimes,and tell her that Paris is the properer man but Ile warrant you,when I ſay ſo ſhee, lookes as pale as any clout in the verſall world, Doth not Roſemary and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. I Nurſe, what of that? Both with an R

Nur, A mocker that's the dogs name. R. is for the no, I know it begins with ſome other letter, and ſhe hath the prettieſt ſententious of it, of you and Roſemary, that it would do you good to heare it,

Rom. Commend me to thy Lady.
Nur. I a thouſand times.Peter?
Pet. Anon.
Nur. Before and apace. Exit Nurſe and Peter.

Enter Iuliet.

Iuli. The clocke ſtrooke nine,when I did ſend the Nurſe,
In halfe an houre ſhe promiſed to returne,
Perchance ſhe cannot meete him:that's not ſo:
Oh ſhe is lame, Loves Herauld ſhould be thoughts,
Which ten times faſter glides then the Sunnes beames,
Driving backe ſhadowes over lowring hils.
Therefore do nimble Pinion'd Doves draw Love,
And therefore hath the wind-ſwift Cupid wings:
Now is the Sun upon the highmoſt hill
Of this daies iourney, and from nine till twelve,
I three long houres,yet ſhe is not come:
Had ſhe affections and warme youthfull blood,
She'ld be as ſwift in motion as a ball,
My words would bandy her to my ſweete Love,
And his to me, but old folkes,
Many faine as they were dead,
Vnwieldy, ſlow,heavy,and pale as lead.

Enter Nurſe.

O God ſhe comes, O hony Nurſe what newes?
Haſt thou met with him? ſend thy man away.
Nur. Peter ſtay at the gate,
Iuli. Now good ſweet Nurſe:
O Lord why lookes thou ſad?
Though newes, be ſad,yet tell them merrily.
If good thou ſham'ſt the muſicke of ſweete newes,
By playing it to me, with ſo ſower a face.
Nur. I am a weary, give me leave a while,
Fie how my bones ake, what a iaunt have I had?
Iuli. I would thou had'ſt my bones and I thy newes:
Nay come I pray the ſpeake,good Nurſe ſpeake.
Nur. Ieſu what haſt? can you not ſtay a while?
Do you not ſee I am out of breath?
Iuli. How art thou out of breath,when thou haſt breath
To ſay to me, that thou art out of breath?
The excuſe that thou doſt make in this delay,
Is longer then the tale thou doſt excuſe.
Is thy newes good or bad? anſwere to that,
Say either and Ile ſtay the circumſtance:
Let me be ſatisfied,iſt good or bad?

Nur. Well, you have made a ſimple choice, you know not how to chuſe a man: Romeo,no not he though his face be better then any mans, yet his legs excels all mens, and for a hand,and a foote,and a bawdy, though they be not to be talkt on, yet they are paſt compare:he is not the flower of courteſie, but I warrant him as gentle a Lambe: go thy waies wench,ſerve God,what have you din'd at home.

Iuli. No no:but all this did I know before
What ſaies he of our marriage? what of that?
Nur. Lord how my head akes,what a head have I:
It beates as it would fall in twenty peeces.
My backe a tother ſide:O my backe,my backe:
Beſhrew your heart for ſending me about
To catch my death with iaunting up and downe.
Iuli. Ifaith I am ſorry that thou art ſo ill,
Sweete ſweete,ſweete Nurſe,tell me what ſaies my Love?
Nur. Your Love ſayes like an honeſt Gentleman,
And a courteous,and a kind,and a handſome,
And I warrant a vertuous: where is your Mother?
Iuli. Where is my Mother?
Why ſhe is within where ſhould ſhe be?
How odly thou repli'ſt:
Your Love ſaies like an honeſt Gentleman:
Where is my Mother?
Nur. O Gods Lady deare,
Are you ſo hot? marry come vp I trow,
Is this the Poultis for my aking bones?
Hence forward do your meſſages your ſelfe.
Iuli. Heere's ſuch a coile,come what ſaies Romeo?
Nur. Have you got leave to go to ſhrift to day?
Iuli. I have.
Nur. Then high you hence to Frier Lawrence Cell,
There ſtaies a Husband to make you a wife:
Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeckes,
The'le be in Scarlot ſtraight at any newes:
Hie you to Church, I muſt another way,
To fetch a Ladder by the which your Love:
Muſt climbe a birds neſt Soone when it is darke:
I am the drudge, and toile in your delight:
But you ſhall beare the burthen ſoone at night,
Go Ile to dinner, hie you to the Cell.
Iuli. Hie to high Fortune,honeſt Nurſe,farewell.
Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Romeo

Fri. So ſmile the heavens vpon this holy act,
That after houres,with ſorrow chide us not.
Rom. Amen,amen,but come what ſorrow can,
It cannot counteruaile the exchange of ioy
That one ſhort minute gives me in her ſight:
Do thou but cloſe our hands with holy words,
Then Love devouring death do what he dare,
It is enough.I may but call her mine.
Fri. Theſe violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die like fire and powder;
Which as they kiſſe conſume.The ſweeteſt honey
Is loathſome in his owne deliciouſneſſe,
And in the taſte confounds the appetite.
Therefore Love moderately, long Love doth ſo,
Too ſwift arrives as tardy as too ſlow.

Enter Iuliet.

Here comes the Lady.Oh ſo light a foot
Will nere weare out the everlaſting flint;

A Lover may beſtride the Goſſamours,
That ydles in the wanton Summer ayre,
And yet not fall,ſo light is vanity.

Iuli. Good even to my goſtly Confeſſor.

Fri. Romeo ſhall thanke thee Daughter for us both.

Iuli. As much to him, elſe in his thanks too much.

Rom. Ah Iuliet, if the meaſure of thy ioy
Be heapt like mine, and that thy skill be more
To blaſon it,then ſweeten with thy breath
This neighbour ayre,and let rich muſickes tongue,
Vnfold the imagin'd happineſſe that both
Receive in either,by this deere encounter,

Iuli. Conceit more rich in matter then in words,
Brags of his ſubſtance, not of Ornament:
They are but beggers that can count their worth,
But my true Love is growne to ſuch exceſſe,
I cannot ſum up ſome of halfe my wealth.

Fri. Come,come with me,& we will make ſhort worke,
For by your leaues,you ſhall not ſtay alone,
Til holy Church incorporate two in one. Exeunt.

Enter Mercutio. Bennolio,and men.

Ben. I pray thee good Mercutio lets retire,
The day is hot:the Capulets abroad:
And if we meet,we ſhall not ſcape a brawle,for now theſe hot dayes,is the mad blood ſtirring

Mer. Thou art like one of theſe fellowes, that when he enters the confines of a Tauerne,claps me his Sword vpon the Table,and ſayes,God ſend me no need of thee: and by the operation of the ſecond cup,draws him on the Drawer,when indeed there is no need.

Ben. Am I like ſuch a Fellow?

Mer. Come,come,thou art as hot a Iacke in thy mood, as any in Italy: and aſſoone moved to be moody, and aſſoone moody to be mov'd,

Ben. And what too?

Mer. Nay, and there were two ſuch, we ſhould have none ſhortly, for one would kill the other:thou,why thou wilt quarrell with a man that hath a haire more,or a haire leſſe in his beard,then thou haſt: thou wilt quarrell with a man for cracking Nuts, having no other reaſon, but becauſe thon haſt haſell eyes; what eye, but ſuch an eye, would ſpy out ſuch a quarell? thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egge is full of meat, and yet thy head hath bin beaten as addle as an egge for quarreling: thou haſt quarrel'd with a man for coſſing in the ſtreet, becauſe he hath wakened thy Dog that hath laine aſleepe in the Sun. Did'ſt thou not fall out with a Tailor for wearing his new Doublet before Eaſter? with another, for tying his new ſhooes with old Riband, and yet thou wilt Tutor me from quarrelling?

Ben, And I were ſo apt to quarrell as thou art, any man ſhould buy the Fee-ſimple of my life, for an houre and a quarter.

Mer. The Fee-ſimple? O ſimple.

Enter Tybalt,Petruchio,and others.

Ben. By my head here come the Capuletes,

Mer. By my heele I care not,

Tib, Follow me cloſe,for I will ſpeake to them.
Gentlemen,Good den, a word with one of you.

Mer And but one word with one of us? couple it with ſomething, make it a word and a blow.

Tib. You ſhall find me apt enough to that ſir, and you will give me occaſion.

Mercu. Could you not take ſome occaſion without giving?

Tib. Mercutio thou conſort'ſt with Romeo,

Mer. Conſort? what doſt thou make us Minſtrels? and thou make Minſtrels of us, looke to heare nothing but diſcords: here's my fiddleſticke, here's that ſhall make you dance. Come conſort.

Ben. We talke here in the publike haunt of men:
Either withdraw unto ſome private place,
Or reaſon coldly of your greevances:
Or elſe depart, here all eyes gaze on us.

Mer. Mens eyes were made to looke,and let them gaze
I will not budge for no mans pleaſure I.

Enter Romeo.

Tib. Well peace be with you ſir, here comes my man.

Mer. But Ile be hang'd ſir if he weare your Livery:
Marry goe before to field,heele be your follower,
Your worſhip in that ſenſe,may call him man.

Tib. Romeo.the Love I beare thee,can affoord
No better terme then this. Thou art a Villaine.

Rom. Tibalt, the reaſon that I have to love thee,
Doth much excuſe the appertaining rage
To ſuch a greeting;
Therefore farewell, I ſee thou know'ſt me not.

Tib. Boy,this ſhall not excuſe the iniures
That thou haſt done me,therefore turne and draw,

Rom. I do proteſt I never iniur'd thee,
But lov'd thee better then thou can'ſt deviſe:
Till thou ſhalt know the reaſon of my love,
And ſo good Capulet,which name I tender
As dearely as my owne, be ſatisfied.

Mer. O calme, diſhonourable,vile ſubmiſſion
Allaſtucatho carries is away.
Tibalt.you Rat-catcher, will you walke?

Tib, What woulds thou have with me?

Mer. Good King of Cats, nothing but one of your nine lives, that I meane to make bold withall,and as you ſhall uſe me hereafter dry beate the reſt of the eight. Will you plucke your Sword out of his Pilcher by the eares? Make haſt. leaſt mine be about your eares ere it be out.

Tib. I am for you.

Rom. Gentle Mercutio,put thy Rapier up,

Mer. Come ſir, your Paſſado.

Rom, Draw Bennolio beat downe their weapons:
Gentlemen,for ſhame forbeare this outrage,
Tibalt, Mercutio,the Prince expreſly hath
Forbidden bandying in Verona ſtreetes.
Hold Tybalt, good Mercutio.

Exit Tybalt

Mer. I am hurt.
A plague of both the houſes,I am ſped:
Is he gone and hath nothing?

Ben. What art thou hurt?

Mer. I,I,a ſcrath,a ſcratch,marry 'tis inough,
Where is my Page? go Villaine fetch a Surgon,

Rom. Courage man,the hurt cannot be much,

Mer. No: 'tis not ſo deepe as a well, nor ſo wide as a Church doore,but 'tis inough,'twill ſerue: aske for me to morrow, and you ſhall find me a graue man. I am pepper'd I warrant for this world: a plague of both your houſes. What, a Dog, a Rat, a Mouſe, a Cat to ſcratch a man to death: a Braggart, a Rogue, a Villaine: that fights by the booke of Arichmeticke, why the deu'le came you betweene vs? I was hurt under your arme.

Rom. I thought all for the beſt.

Mer. Helpe me into ſome houſe Bennolio,
Or I ſhall faint:a plague a both your houſes.
They have made wormes meate of me,

I have it,and ſoundly too your Houſes. Exit.

Rom. This Gentleman the Princes neere Allie,
My very Friend hath got his mortall hurt
In my behalfe, my reputation ſtain'd
With Tibalts ſlaunder, Tybalt that an houre
Hath beene my Cozin: O Sweet Iuliet,
Thy Beauty hath made me Effeminate,
And in my temper ſoftned Valours ſteele.

Enter Benuolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, brave Mercutio's dead,
That Gallant ſpirit hath aſpir'd the Cloudes,
Which too untimely here did ſcorne the earth.

Rom. This daies blacke Fate, on mo daies doe depend,
This but begins, the woe others muſt end.

Enter Tybalt.

Ben. Here comes the Furious Tybalt backe againe.

Rom. He gon in triumph, and Mercutio ſlaine?
Away to heaven reſpective Lenity,
And fire and Fury, be my conduct now.
Now Tybalt take the Villaine backe againe
That late thou gav'ſt me, for Mercutio's ſoule,
Is but a little way aboue our heads,
Staying for thine to keepe him company:
Either thou or I, or both, muſt goe with him.

Tib. Thou wretched Boy that didſt conſort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This ſhall determine that.

They fight. Tybalt falles.

Ben. Romeo, away be gone:
The Citizens are up, and Tybalt ſlaine,
Stand not amaz'd, the Prince will Doome thee death
If thou art taken: hence, be gone, away.

Rom. O! I am Fortunes foole,

Ben. Why doſt thou ſtay?

Exit Romeo.

Enter Citizens.

Citi. Which way ran he that kild Mercutio?
Tybalt that Murtherer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

Citi. Vp ſir go with me:
I charge thee in the Princes name obey.

Enter Prince, old Mountague, Capulet, their Wives and all.

Prin. Where are the vild beginners of this Fray?

Ben. O Noble Prince, I can diſcover all
The unluckie Mannage of this fatall brall:
There lies the man ſlaine by young Romeo,
That ſlew thy kinſman brave Mercutio.

Cap. Wi. Tybalt my Cozin? O my Brothers Child,
O Prince, O Cozin, Husband, O the blood is ſpild.
Of my deare kinſman, Prince as thou art true,
For blood of ours, ſhed blood of Mountague.
O Cozin, Cozin.

Prin. Benuolio, who began this Fray?

Ben. Tybalt here ſlaine, whom Romeo's hand did ſlay,
Romeo that ſpoke him faire, bid him bethinke
How nice the Quarrell was, and urg'd withall
Your high diſpleaſure: all this uttered,
With gentle breath, calme looke, knees humbly bow'd
Could not take truce with the unruly ſpleene
Of Tybalt deafe to peace, but that he Tilts
With Peircing ſteele at bold Mercutio's breaſt,
Who all as hot turnes deadly point to point,
And with a Martiall ſcorne, with one hand beates
Cold death aſide, and with the other ſends
It backe to Tybalt, whoſe dexterity
Retorts it: Romeo he cries aloud,
Hold Friends, Friends part, and ſwifter then his tongue,
His able arme, beats downe fatall points,
And twixt them ruſhes, underneath whoſe arme,
An envious thruſt from Tybalt, hit the life
Of ſtout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled.
But by and by comes backe to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertained Revenge,
And too't they goe like lightning, for ere I
Could draw to part them, was ſtout Tybalt ſlaine:
And as he fell, did Romeo turne and fly:
This is the truth, or let Benuolio die.

Cap. Wi. He is a kinſman to the Mountague,
Affection makes him falſe, he ſpeakes not true.
Some twenty of them fought in this blacke ſtrife,
And all thoſe twenty could but kill one life.
I beg for Iuſtice, which thou Prince muſt give:
Romeo ſlew Tybalt, Romeo muſt not live.

Prin. Romeo ſlew him, he ſlew Mercutio,
Who now the price of his deare blood doth owe.

Cap. Not Romeo Prince, he was Mercutios Friend,
His fault concludes but, what the law ſhould end,
The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And for that offence,
Immediately we doe exile him hence:
I have an intereſt in your hearts proceeding:
My bloud for your rude braules doth ly a bleeding.
But Ile Amerce you with ſo ſtrong a fine,
That you ſhall all repent the loſſe of mine.
I will be deafe to pleading and excuſes.
Nor teares, nor prayers ſhall purchaſe our abuſes.
Therefore uſe done, let Romeo hence in haſt,
Elſe when he is found, that houre is his laſt.
Beare hence this body, and attend our will:
Mercy but Murders, pardoning thoſe that kill.

Exeunt.

Enter Iuliet alone.

Iuli. Gallop apace, you fiery footed ſteedes,
Toward Phœbus lodging, ſuch a Wagoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the weſt,
And bring in Cloudy night immediately,
Spred thy cloſe Curtaine Love-performing night,
That run-awaies eyes may wincke, and Romeo
Leapt to theſe armes, untalkt of and unſeene,
Lovers can ſee to doe their Amorous rights,
By their owne Beauties: or if Love be blind,
It beſt agrees with night: come civill night,
Thou ſober ſuted Matron all in blacke,
And learne me how to looſe a winnig match,
Plaid for a paire of ſtainleſſe Maidenheads,
Hood my unman'd blood bayting in my Cheekes,
With thy blacke mantle, till ſtrainge Love grow bold,
Thinke true Love acted ſimple modeſty:
Come night, come Romeo, come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night,
Whiter then new Snow on a Ravens backe:
Come gentle night, come loving blacke brow'd night.
Give me my Romeo, and when I ſhall die,
Take him and cut him out in little ſtarres,
And he will make the Face of heaven ſo fine,
That all the world will be in Love with night,
And pay no worſhip to the Gariſh Sun.
O I have bought the Manſion of a Love,
But not poſſeſt it, and though I am ſold,
Not yet enioy'd, ſo tedious is this day,
As is the night before ſome Feſtuall.

To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not weare them, O here comes my Nurſe:

Enter Nurſe with cords.

And ſhe brings newes and every tongue that ſpeakes
But Romeos, name, ſpeakes heavenly eloquence:
Now Nurſe, what newes? what haſt thou there?
The Cords that Romeo bid thee fetch?

Nur. I, I, the Cords,

Iuli. Ayme, what newes?
Why doſt thou wring thy hands.

Nur. A welady hee's dead, hee's dead,
We are undone Lady, we are undone.
Alacke the day, hee's gone, hee's kil'd, hee's dead.

Iuli. Can heaven be ſo envious?

Nur. Romeo can,
Though heaven cannot. O Romeo, Romeo,
Who ever would have thought it Romeo.

Iuli. What divell art thou,
That doſt torment me thus?
This torture ſhould be roar'd in diſmall hell,
Hath Romeo ſlaine himſelfe? ſay thou but I:
And that bare vowell I ſhall poyſon more
Then the death-darting eye of Cockatrice,
I am not I, if there be ſuch an I.
Or thoſe eyes ſhot, that makes the anſwere I,
If he be ſlaine ſay I, or if not, no.
Breife, ſounds, determine of my weale or wo.

Nur. I ſaw the wound, I ſaw it with mine eyes
God ſave the marke, here on his manly breſt.
A pitteous Coarſe, a bloody pitteous Coarſe:
Pale, pale as aſhes, all bedawb'd in blood
All in gore blood I ſounded at the ſight.

Iuli. O breake my heart,
Poore Banckrout breake at once,
To priſon eyes, nere looke on liberty.
Vile earth to earth reſigne, end motion here,
And thou and Romeo preſſe one heavy beere.

Nur. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the beſt Friend I had:
O curteous Tybalt honeſt Gentlemen,
That ever I ſhould live to ſee thee dead.

Iuli. What ſtorme is this that bowes ſo contrary?
Is Romeo ſlaughtred? and is Tybalt dead?
My deareſt Cozen, and my dearer Lord:
Then dreadfull Trumpet ſound the generall doome,
For who is living, if thoſe two are gone?

Nur. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo baniſhed,
Romeo that kil'd him, he is baniſhed.

Iuli. O God!

Nur. Did Romeos hand ſhed Tybalts blood
It did, it did, alas the day, it did.

Iuli. O Serpent heart, hid with a flowring face.
Did ever Dragon keepe ſo faire a Cave?
Beautifull Tyrant, fiend Angelicall:
Ravenous Dove, feather'd Raven,
Woluiſh-ravening Lambe,
Diſpiſed ſubſtance of Divineſt ſhow:
Iuſt oppſite to what thou iuſtly ſeem'ſt,
A damned Saint, an Honourable Vallaine:
O Nature! what had'ſt thou to doe in hell,
When thou did'ſt bower the ſpirit of a fiend
In mortall paradiſe of ſuch ſweet fleſh?
Was ever booke containing ſuch vile matter
So fairely bound? O that deceit ſhould dwell
In ſuch a gorgeous Pallace.

Nur. There's no truſt, no faith, no honeſty in men,
All periur'd, all forſworne, all naught, all diſſemblers,
Ah wher's my man? give me ſome Aqua-vitæ?
Theſe griefes, theſe woes, theſe ſorrowes make me old!
Shame come to Romeo.

Iuli. Bliſter'd be thy tongue
For ſuch a wiſh, he was not borne to ſhame:
Vpon his brow ſhame is aſham'd to ſit;
For 'tis a throane where Honour may be Crown'd
Sole Monarch of the univerſall earth:
O what a beaſt was I to chide him ſo?

Nur. Will you ſpeake well of him,
That kil'd your Cozen?

Iuli. ſhall I ſpeake ill of him that is my husband?
Ah poore my Lord, what tongue ſhall ſmooth thy name,
When I thy three houres wife have mangled it.
But wherefore Villaine did'ſt thou kill my Cozin?
That Villaine Cozen would have kil'd my husband:
Backe fooliſh teares, backe to your native ſpring,
Your tributary drops belong to woe,
Which your miſtaking offer up to ioy:
My husband lives that Tybalt would have ſlaine,
And Tybalt dead that would have kil'd my husband:
All this is comfort, wherefore weepe I then?
Some word there was worſer then Tybalts death
That murdred me, I would forget it faine,
But oh, it preſſes to my memory,
Like damned guilty deedes to ſinners minds,
Tybalt is dead and Romeo baniſhed:
That baniſhed, that one word baniſhed,
Hath ſlaine ten thouſand Tybalts: Tybalts death
Was woe inough if it had ended there:
Or if ſower woe delights in fellowſhip,
And needly will be ranckt with other greifes,
Why followed not when ſhe ſaid Tybalts dead.
Thy Father or thy Mother, nay or both,
Which moderne lamentation might have mov'd.
But with a rere-ward following Tybalts death,
Romeo is baniſhed to ſpeake that word,
Is Father, Mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Iuliet;
All ſlaine, all dead: Romeo is baniſhed,
There is no end, no limit, meaſure, bound,
In that words death, no words can that woe ſound.
Where is my Father and my Mother Nurſe?

Nur. Weeping and wailing ouer Tybalts Coarſe.
Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Iu. Waſh they his wounds with tears: mine ſhal be ſpent
When theirs are dry for Romeo's baniſhment.
Take up thoſe Cords, poore rops you are beguil'd,
Both you and I for Romeo is exild:
He made you for a high way to my bed,
But I a Maide, dye Maiden widdowed.
Come Cord, come Nurſe, Ile to my wedding bed,
And death not Romeo, take my Maiden head.

Nur. Hy to your Chamber, Ile find Romeo
To comfort you, I wot well where he is:
Harke ye your Romeo will be heere at night,
Ile to him, he is hid at Lawrence Cell.

Iuli. O find him, give this Ring to my true Knight,
And bid him come, to take his laſt farewell.

Exit.

Enter Frier, and Romeo.

Fri. Romeo come forth,
Come forth thou fearefull man,
Affliction is enamor'd of thy parts:
And thou art wedded to calamity.

Rom. Father what newes?

What is the Princes Doome?
What ſorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?
Fri. Too familiar
Is my deare Sonne with ſuch ſowre Company:
I bring thee tydings of the Princes Doome.
Rom. What leſſe then Doomeſday,
Is the Princes Doome?
Fri. A gentler iudgement vaniſht from his lips,
Not bodies death, but bodies baniſhment.
Rom. Ha, baniſhment? be mercifull, ſay death:
For exile hath more terror in his looke,
Much more then death: do not ſay baniſhment.
Fri. Here from Verona art thou baniſhed:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.
Rom. There is no world without Verona walles,
But Purgatory, Torture, hell it ſelfe:
Hence baniſhed, is baniſht from the world,
And worlds exile is death. Then baniſhed,
Is death, miſtearm'd, calling death baniſhed,
Thou cut'ſt my head oft with a golden Axe,
And ſmileſt upon the ſtroke that murders me.
Fri. O deadly ſin, O rude unthankefullneſſe!
Thy fault our Law calles death, but the kind Prince
Taking thy part hath ruſht aſide the Law,
And turn'd that blacke word death, to baniſhment.
This is deare mercy, and thou ſeeſt it not.
Rom. 'Tis Torture and not mercy, heaven is here
Where Iuliet lives, and every Cat and Dog,
and little Mouſe, every unworthy thing
Live here in Heaven and may looke on her,
Bnt Romeo may not, More Validity,
More Honourable ſtate, more Courtſhip lives
In carrion Flies, then Romeo: they may ſeaze
On the white wonder of deare Iuliets hand,
And ſteale immortall bleſſing from her lips,
Who even in pure and veſtall modeſty
Still bluſh, as thinking their owne kiſſes ſin.
This may Flies doe, when I from this muſt flie,
And ſaiſt thou yet, that exile is not death?
But Romeo may not, hee is baniſhed.
Had'ſt thou no poyſon mixt, no ſharpe ground knife,
No ſudden meane of death, though nere ſo meane,
But baniſhed to kill me? Baniſhed?
O Frier, the damned uſe that word in hell:
Howlings attend it, how haſt thou the heart
Being a Divine, a Ghoſtly Confeſſor,
A Sin-Abſolver, and my friend profeſt:
To mangle me with that word baniſhed?
Fri. Fond Mad man, heare me ſpeake.
Rom. O thou wilt ſpeake againe of baniſhment.
Fri. Ile give the Armour to keepe off that word,
Adverſities ſweet milke, Philoſophy,
To comfort thee, though thou art baniſhed.
Rom. Yet baniſhed? hang up Philoſophy:
Vnleſſe Philoſophie can make a Iuliet,
Diſplant a Towne, reuerſe a Princes Doome,
It helps not, it prevailes not, talke no more:
Fri. O then I ſee, that Madmen have no eares.
Rom. How ſhould they,
When wiſemen have no eyes?
Fri. Let me diſpaire with thee of thy eſtate.
Rom. Thou can'ſt not ſpeake of that thō doſt not feele,
Wert thou as young as Iuliet my Love:
An houre but married, Tybalt murdred,
Doting like me, and like me baniſhed,
Then mighteſt thou ſpeake,
Then mighteſt thou teare thy hayre,
And fall upon the ground as I doe now,
Taking the meaſure of an unmade grave.
Enter Nurſe, and knockes.
Frier. Ariſe one knockes,
Good Romeo hide thy ſelfe.
Rom. Not I,
Vnleſſe the breath of Heartſicke groanes
Miſt-like infold me from the ſearch of eyes.
Knock.
Fri. Harke how they knocke
(Who's there) Romeo ariſe,
Thou wilt be taken ſtay a while ſtand up:
Knocke.
Run to my ſtudy: by and by, Gods will
What ſimpleneſſe is this: I come, I come,
Knoke.
Who knockes ſo hard?
Whenc come you? what's your will?
Enter Nurſe.
Nur. Let me come in.
And you ſhall know my errand:
I come from Lady Iuliet.
Fri. Welcome then.
Nur. O holy Frier, O tell me holy Frier,
Wher's my Ladies Lord? wher's Romeo?
Fri. There on the groud,
With his owne teares made druncke.
Nur. O he is even in my Miſtreſſe cauſe,
Iuſt in her caſe, O wofull ſimpathy:
Pittious predicament, even ſo liles ſhe,
Blubbring and weeping, weeping aud blubbring,
Stand up, ſtand up, ſtand and you be a man,
For Iuliets ſake, for her ſake riſe and ſtand:
Why ſhould you fall into ſo deepe an O.
Rom. Nurſe.
Nur. Ah ſir, ah ſir, deaths the end of all.
Rom. Speak'ſt thou of Iuliet? how is it with her?
Doth not ſhe thinke me an old Murtherer,
Now I have ſtain'd the Childhood of our ioy,
With blood removed, but little from her owne?
Where is ſhe? and how doth ſhe? and what ſaies
My conceal'd Lady to our conceal'd Love?
Nur. Oh ſhe ſayes nothing ſir, but weepes and weepes,
And now fals on her bed, and then ſtarts up,
And Tybalt calls, and then on Romeo cries,
And then downe falls againe.
Ro. As if that name ſhot from the deadly levell of a Gun,
Did murder her, as that names curſed hand
Murdred her kinſman. Oh tell me Frier, tell me,
In what vile part of this Anotamy
Doth my name lodge? Tell me, that I may ſacke
The hatefull Manſion,
Fri. Hold thy deſperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy forme cries out thou art:
Thy teares are womaniſh, thy wild acts doe note
The unreaſonable Fury of a beaſt.
Vnſeemely woman, in a ſeeming man,
And ill beſeeming beaſt in ſeeming both,
Thou haſt amaz'd me. By my holy order,
I thought thy diſpoſition better temper'd.
Haſt thou ſlaine Tybalt? wilt thou ſlay thy ſelfe?
And ſlay thy Lady, that in thy life lies,
By doing damned hate upon thy ſelfe?
Why rail'ſt thou on thy birth? the heaven and earth?

Since birth,and heaven and earth,all three do meete
In thee at once,which thou at once would'ſt looſe
Fie,fie,thou ſham'ſt thy ſhape,thy love,thy wit,
Which like a Vſurer abound'ſt in all:
And uſeſt none in that true uſe indeed,
Which ſhould bedecke thy ſhape,thy love,thy wit:
Thy Noble ſhape,is but a forme of waxe,
Digreſſing,from the Valour of a man,
Thy deare Love ſworne but hollow perjury,
Killing that Love which thou haſt vow'd to cheriſh.
Thy wit,that Ornament,to ſhape and Love,
Miſ-ſhapen in the conduct of them both:
Like powder in a skilleſſe Souldiers flaske,
Is ſet a fire by thine owne ignorance,
And thou diſmembred with thine owne defence.
What,rowſe thee man,thy Iuliet is alive,
For whoſe deare ſake thou waſt but lately dead.
There art thou happy.Tybalt would kill thee,
But thou ſlew'ſt Tybalt,there art thou happy too
The law that threatned death became thy Friend,
And turn'd it to exile,there art thou happy.
A packe of bleſſings light upon thy backe,
Happineſſe Courts thee in her beſt array,
But like a miſ-ſhaped and a ſullen wench,
Thou putteſt up thy Fortune and thy Love:
Take heed,take heed,for ſuch die miſerable.
Goe get thee to thy Love as was decreed,
Aſcend her Chamber,hence and comfort her:
But looke thou ſtay not till the watch be ſet,
For then thou canſt not paſſe to Mantua,
Where thou ſhalt live till we can finde a time
To blaze your marriage,reconcile your Friends,
Beg pardon of thy Prince,and call thee backe,
With twenty hundred thouſand times more joy
Then thou went'ſt forth in lamentation.
Goe before Nurſe,commend me to thy Lady,
And bid her haſten all the houſe to bed,
Which heavy ſorrow makes them apt unto.
Romeo is comming.
  Nur. O Lord,I could have ſtaid here all night,
To heare good counſell:oh what learning is!
My Lord Ile tell my Lady you will come.
  Rom. Do ſo,and bid my Sweete prepare to chide,
  Nur. Heere ſir,a Ring ſhe bid me give you ſir:
Hie you,make haſt,for it growes very late.
  Rom. How well my comfort is reuiv'd by this.
  Fri. Go hence.
Goodnight,and here ſtands all your ſtate:
Either be gone before the watch be ſet,
Or by the breake of day diſguis'd from hence,
Sojorne in Mantua,Ile find out your man,
And he ſhall ſignifie from time to time,
Every good hap to you that chaunces heere:
Give me thy hand,tis late,farewell,goodnight.
  Rom. But that a joy paſt joy,calls out on me,
It were a griefe,ſo briefe to part with thee:
Farewell. Exeunt.

Enter old Capulet,his Wife and Paris.

  Cap. Things have falne out ſir ſo unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our Daughter:
Looke you,ſhe Lov'd her kinſman Tybalt dearely,
And ſo did I. Well,we were borne to die.
Tis very late,ſhe'l not come downe to night:
I promiſe you,but for your company,
I would have bin a bed an houre ago.
  Par. Theſe times of wo,affoord no times to wooe:
Madam goodnight,commend me to your Daughter.
  Lad. I will,and know her mind early to morrow.
To night,ſhe is mewed up to her hevineſſe.
  Cap. Sir Paris,I will make a deſperate tender
Of my Childes love : I thinke ſhe will be rul'd
In all reſpects by me:nay more,I doubt it not,
Wife,go you to her ere you go to bed,
Acquaint her here,of my Sonne Paris Love,
And bid her,marke you me,on Wenſday next,
But ſoft,what day is this?
  Par. Monday my Lord.
  Cap. Monday,ha ha:well Wendſday is too ſoone,
A Thurſday let it be:a Thurſday tell her,
She ſhall be married to this Noble Earle:
Will you be ready?do you like this haſt?
Weele keepe no great adoe,a Friend or two,
For harke you,Tybalt being ſlaine ſo late,
It may be thought we held him careleſly,
Being our kinſman,if we revell much:
Therefore weele have ſome halfe a dozen Friends,
And there an end. But what ſay you to Thurſday?
  Par. My Lord,
I would that Thurſday were to morrow.
  Cap. Well,get you gone,a Thurſday,be it then:
Go you to Iuliet ere you go to bed,
Prepare her wife,againſt this wedding day.
Farewell my Lord,light to my Chamber hoa,
Afore me,it is ſo late, that we may call it early by and by,
Goodight. Exeunt.

Enter Romeo and Iuliet aloft.

  Iu. Wilt thou be gone?
It was the Nightingale,and not the Larke,
That pier'ſt the fearefull hollow of thine eare,
Nightly ſhe ſings on yond Pomgranet tree,
Beleeve me Love,it was the Nightingale.
  Rom. It was the Larke the Herauld of Morne:
No Nightingale:looke Love what envious ſtreakes
Do lace the ſevering Cloudes in yonder Eaſt:
Nights Candles are burnt out,and Iocond day
Stands tipto on the miſtie Mountaine tops,
I muſt be gone and live,or ſtay and die.
  Iul. Yond light is not day light,I know it I:
It is ſome Meteor that the Sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a Torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua.
Therefore ſtay yet,thou need'ſt not to be gone,
  Rom. Let me be tane,let me be put to death,
I am content,ſo thou wilt have it ſo.
Ile ſay yon gray is not the mornings eye,
Tis but the pale reflexe of Cinthias brow.
Nor that is not the Larke whoſe notes do beate
The vaulty heaven ſo high above our heads,
I have more care to ſtay,then will to go:
Come death and welcome,Iuliet wils it ſo.
How iſt my ſoule,lets talke,it is not day.
  Iul. It is,it is,hie hence be gone away:
It is the Larke that ſings ſo out of tune,
Straining harſh Diſcords,and unpleaſing Sharpes.
Some ſay the Larke makes ſweete Diviſion;
This doth not ſo:for ſhe divideth us.
Some ſay,the Larke and loathed Toad change eyes,
O now I would they had chang'd voyces too:

Since arme from arme that voyce doth us affray,
Hunting thee hence, with Huntſ-up to the day,
O now be gone,more light and it light growes.
Rom. More light & light,more darke & darke our woes.

Enter Madam and Nurſe.

Nur. Madam.
Iul. Nurſe.
Nu. Your Lady Mother is comming to your chamber,
The day is broke,be wary,looke about,
Iul. Then window let day in,and let life out.
Rom. Farewell,farewell,one kiſſe and Ile deſcend.
Iul. Art thou gone ſo?Love,Lord,ah Husband,Friend,
I muſt heare from thee every day in the houre,
For in a minute there are many dayes,
O by this count I ſhall be much in yeares,
Ere I againe behold my Romeo.
Rom. Farewell:
I will omit no oportunity,
That may convey my greetings Love,to thee.
Iul. O thinkeſt thou we ſhall ever meet againe?
Rom. I doubt it not,and all theſe woes ſhall ſerve
For ſweet diſcourſes in our time to come.
Iul. O God!I have an ill Divining ſoule,
Me thinkes I ſee thee now,thou art ſo lowe,
As one dead in the Bottome of a Tombe,
Either my eye-ſight failes,or thou look'ſt pale.
Rom. And truſt me Love,in my eye ſo do you:
Dry ſorrow drinkes our blood. Adue,adue. Exit.
Iul. O Fortune,Fortune,all men call thee fickle,
If thou art fickle,what doſt thou with him
That is renown'd for faith?be fickle Fortune:
For then I hope thou wilt not keepe him long,
But ſend him backe.

Enter Mother.

Lad. Ho Daughter,are you up?
Iul. Who iſt that calls?Is it my Lady Mother?
Is ſhe not downe ſo late,or up ſo early?
What unaccuſtom'd cauſe procures her hither?
Lad. Why how now Iuliet?
Iul. Madam I am not well.
Lad. Evermore weeping for your Cozins death?
What wilt thou waſh him from his grave with teares?
And if thou could'ſt,thou could'ſt not make him live:
Therefore have done,ſome griefe ſhewes much of Love,
But much of griefe,ſhewes ſtill ſome want of wit.
Iul. Yet let me weepe,for ſuch a feeling loſſe.
Lad. So ſhall you feele the loſſe,but not the Friend
Which you weepe for.
Iul. Feeling ſo the loſſe,
I cannot chuſe but ever weepe the Friend.
La. Well Girle,thou weep'ſt not ſo much for his death,
As that the Villaine lives which ſlaughter'd him.
Iul. What Villaine,Madam?
Lad. That ſame Villaine Romeo.
Iul. Villaine and he,be many Miles aſſunder:
God pardon him,I doe with all my heart,
And yet no man like he,doth grieve my heart.
Lad. That is becauſe the Traitor lives.
Iul I Madam from the reach of theſe my hands:
Would none but I might venge my Cozins death.
La. We will have vengeance for it, feare thou not.
Then weepe no more,Ile ſend to one in Mantua,
Where that ſame baniſht Run-agate doth live,
Shall give him ſuch an unaccuſtom'd dram,
That he ſhall ſoone keepe Tybalt company:
And then I hope thou wilt be ſatisfied.
Iul. Indeed I never ſhall be ſatisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him. Dead
Is my poore heart ſo for a kinſman vext:
Madam if you could find out but a man
To beare a poiſon,I would temper it;
That Romeo ſhould upon receit thereof,
Soone ſleepe in quiet. O how my heart abhors
To heare him nam'd,and cannot come to him,
To wreake the Love I bore my Cozin,Tybalt
Vpon his body that hath ſlaughter'd him.
Mo. Find thou the meanes,and Ile find ſuch a man,
But now Ile tell thee joyfull tidings Girle,
Iul. And joy comes well, in ſuch a needy time,
What are they,I beſeech your Ladyſhip?
Mo. Well,well, thou haſt a carefull Fa her Child?
One who to put thee from thy heavineſſe,
Hath ſorted out a ſudden day of joy,
That thou expects not,nor I looke not for.
Iul. Madam in happy time,what day is this?
Mo. Marry my Child,early next Thurſday morne,
The gallant,young,and Noble Gentleman,
The County Paris at Saint Peters Church,
Shall happily make thee a joyfull Bride.
Iul. Now by Saint Peters Church,and Peter too,
He ſhall not make me there a joyfull Bride.
I wonder at this haſt,that I muſt wed
Ere he that ſhould be Husband comes to woe.
I pray you tell my Lord and Father Madam
I will not marry yet,and when I doe, I ſweare
It ſhall be Romeo, whom you know I hate
Rather then Paris. Theſe are newes indeed.
Mo. Here comes your Father,tell him ſo your ſelſe,
And ſee how he will take it at you hands,

Enter Capulet and Nurſe.

Cap. When the Sun ſets,the earth doth drizzle dew;
But for the Sunſet of my Brothers Sonne,
It raines downright.
How now? A Conduit Girle,what ſtill in teares?
Ever more ſhowring in one little body?
Thou counterfeits a Barke,a Sea,a Wind:
For ſtill thy eyes,which I may call the Sea,
Do ebbe and flow with teares,the Barke thy body
Sailing in this ſalt floud,the windes thy ſighes,
Who raging with the teares and they with them,
Without a ſudden calme will over ſet
Thy tempeſt-toſſed body.How now wife?
Have you delivered to her our decree?
Lad. I ſir;
But ſhe will none,ſhe gives you thankes,
I would the foole were married to her grave.
Cap. Soft,take me with you,take me with you wife,
How,will ſhe none?doth ſhe not give us thanks?
Is ſhe not proud?doth ſhe not count her bleſt,
Vnworthy as ſhe is,that we have wrought
So worthy a Gentleman,to be her Bridegroome?
Iul. Not proud you have,
But thankfull that you have:
Proud can I never be of what I have,
But thankfull even for hate,that is meant Love.
Cap. How now?
How now?Chopt Logicke?what is this?
Proud,and I thanke you:and I thanke you not.
Thanke me no thankings,nor proud me no prouds,
But ſettle your fine joints 'gainſt Thurſday next,

To go with Paris to Saint Peters Church:
Or I will drag thee, on a Hurdle thither.
Out you greene ſickneſſe carrion, out you baggage,
You tallow face.
Lad. Fie, fie, what are you mad?
Iul. Good Father, I beſeech you on my knees
Heare me wth patience, but to ſpeake a word.
Fa. Hang thee young baggage, diſobedient wretch,
I tell thee what, get the to Church a Thurſday,
Or never after looke me in the face.
Speake not, reply not, do not anſwere me.
My fingers itch, wife: we ſcarce thought us bleſt,
That God had lent us but this onely Child,
But now I ſee this one is one too much,
And that we have a curſe in having her:
Out on her Hilding.
Nur. God in heaven bleſſe her,
You are too blame my Lord to rate her ſo.
Fa. And why my Lady wiſedome? hold your tongue,
Good Prudence, ſmatter with your goſſip, go.
Nur. I ſpeake no treaſon,
O Godigoden,
May not one ſpeake?
Fa. Peace you mumbling foole,
Vtter your gravity ore a Goſſips bowle,
For here we need it not.
La. You are too hot.
Fa. Gods bread, it makes me mad:
Day, night, houre, tide, time, worke, play,
Alone in company, ſtill my care hath bin
To have her matcht, and having now provided
A Gentleman of Noble Parentage,
Of faire Demeanes. Youthfull, and Nobly Allied,
Stuft as they ſay with Honourable parts,
Proportion'd as ones thought would wiſh a man.
And then to have a wretched puling foole,
A whining mammet, in her Fortunes tender,
To anſwer, Ile not wed, I cannot Love:
I am too young, I pray you pardon me.
But, and you will not wed, Ile pardon you.
Graze where you will, you ſhall not houſe with me:
Looke too't, thinke on't, I do not uſe to jeſt.
Thurſday is neere, lay hand on heart, adviſe,
And you be mine, Ile give you to my Friend:
And you be not, hang, beg, ſtarve, die in the ſtreets,
For by my ſoule, Ile nere acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine ſhall never do thee good:
Truſt too't, be thinke you, Ile not be forſworne. Exit.
Iul. Is there no pitty ſitting in the Cloudes,
That ſees into the bottome of my griefe?
O ſweet my Mother caſt me not away,
Delay this marriage, for a month, a weeke,
Or if you do not, make the Bridall bed
In that dim Monument where Tybalt lies.
Mo. Talke not to me, for Ile not ſpeake a word,
Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee. Exit.
Iul. O God!
O Nurſe, how ſhall this be prevented?
My Husband is on earth, my faith in heaven,
How ſhall that faith returne againe to earth,
Vnleſſe that Husband ſend it me from heaven,
By leaving earth? Comfort me, counſaile me:
Alacke, alacke, that heaven ſhould practiſe ſtratagems
Vpon ſo ſoft a ſubject as my ſelfe.
What ſaiſt thou? haſt thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort Nurſe.
Nur. Faith here it is,
Romeo is baniſhed, and all the world to nothing,
That he dares nere come backe to challenge you:
Or if he do, it needs muſt be by ſtealth.
Then ſince the caſe ſo ſtands as now it doth,
I thinke it beſt you married with the Count,
O hee's a Lovely Gentleman:
Romeos a diſh-clout to him, an Eagle Madam
Hath not ſo greene, ſo quicke, ſo faire an eye
As Paris hath, beſhrow my very heart,
I thinke you are happy in this ſecond match,
For it excels your firſt: or if it did not,
Your firſt is dead, or 'twere as good he were,
As living here and you no uſe of him.
Iul. Speakeſt thou from thy heart?
Nur. And from my ſoule too,
Or elſe beſhrew them both.
Iu. Amen.
Nur. What?
Iul. Well, thou haſt comforted me marv'lous much,
Go in, and tell my Lady I am gone,
Having diſpleas'd my Father, to Lawrence Cell,
To make confeſſion, and to be abſolv'd.
Nur. Marry I will, and this is wiſely done. Exit.
Iul. Auncient damnation, O moſt wicked fiend.
Is it more ſin to wiſh me thus forſworne,
Or to diſpraiſe my Lord with that ſame tongue
Which ſhe hath prais'd him with above compare,
So many thouſand times? Go Counſellor,
Thou and my boſome henchforth ſhall be twaine:
Ile to the Frier to know his remedy,
If all elſe faile, my ſelfe have power to die. Exeunt.

Enter Frier and Count Paris.

Fri. On Thurſday ſir? the time is very ſhort.
Par. My Father Capulet will have it ſo,
And I am nothing ſlow to ſlack his haſte.
Fri. You ſay you do not know the Ladies mind?
Vneven is the courſe, I like it not.
Pa. Immoderately ſhe weepes for Tybalts death,
And therefore have I little talke of Love,
For Venus ſmiles not in a houſe of teares.
Now ſir, her Father counts it dangerous
That ſhe doth give her ſorrow ſo much ſway:
And in his wiſedome, haſts our marriage,
To ſtop the inundation of her teares,
Which too much minded by her ſelfe alone,
May be put from her by ſociety.
Now doe you know the reaſon of this haſte?
Fri. I would I knew not why it ſhould be ſlow'd.
Looke ſir, here comes the Lady towards my Cell.
Enter Iuliet.
Par. Happily met, my Lady and my wife.
Iul. That may be ſir, when I may be a wife.
Par. That may be, muſt be Love, on Thurſday next.
Iul. What muſt be ſhall be.
Fri. That's a certaine text.
Par. Come you to make confeſſion to this Father?
Iul. To anſwere that, I ſhould confeſſe to you.
Par. Do not deny to him, that you Love me.
Iul. I will confeſſe to you that I Love him.
Par. So will ye, I am ſure that you Love me.
Iul. If I do ſo, it will be of more price,
Being ſpoke behind your backe, then to your face.
Par. Poore ſoule, thy face is much abus'd with teares.

Iul. The teares have got ſmall victorie by that:
For it was bad inough before their ſpight.
Pa. Thou wrong'ſt it more then teares with that report
Iul. That is no ſlaunder ſir, which is truth,
And what I ſpake, I ſpake it to my face.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou haſt ſlaundred it.
Iul. It may be ſo, for it is not mine owne.
Are you at leiſure, Holy Father now,
Or ſhall I come to you at evening Maſſe?
Fri. My leiſure ſerves me penſive daughter now.
My Lord I muſt intreat the time alone.
Par. Godſheild: I ſhould diſturbe Devotion,
Iuliet, on Thurſday early will I rowſe yee,
Till then adue, and keepe this holy kiſſe. Exit Paris.
Iul. O ſhut the doore, and when thou haſt done ſo,
Come weepe with me, paſt hope, paſt care, paſt helpe.
Fri. O Iuliet, I already know thy griefe,
It ſtraines me paſt the compaſſe of my wits:
I heare thou muſt, and nothing may prorogue it,
On Thurſday next be married to this Count,
Iul. Tell me not Frier that thou heareſt of this,
Vnleſſe thou tell me how I may prevent it:
If in thy wiſedome, thou canſt give no helpe,
Do thou but call my reſolution wiſe,
And with' this knife, Ile helpe it preſently.
God joyn'd my heart, and Romeos, thou our hands,
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo ſeal'd:
Shall be the Labell to another Deede,
Or my true heart with trecherous revolt.
Turne to another, this ſhall ſlay them both:
Therefore out of thy long experien'ſt time,
Give me ſome preſent counſell, or behold
Twixt my extreames and me, this bloody knife
Shall play the umpire, arbitrating that,
Which the commiſſion of thy yeares and art,
Could to no iſſue of true honour bring:
Be not ſo long to ſpeak, I long to die,
If what thou ſpeak'ſt, ſpeake not of remedy.
Fri. Hold Daughter, I doe ſpie a kind of hope,
Which craves as deſperate an execution,
As that is deſperate which we would prevent.
If rather then to marry Countie Paris
Thou haſt the ſtrength of will to lay thy ſelfe,
Then is it likely thou wilt undertake
A thing like death to chide away this ſhame,
That coap'ſt with death himſefe, to ſcape fro it:
And if thou dar'ſt, Ile give thee remedy.
Iul. O bid me leape, rather then marry Paris,
From of the Battlements of any Tower,
Or walke in theeviſh waies, or bid me lurke
Where Serpents are: chaine me with roaring Beares
Or hide me nightly in a Charnell houſe,
Orecovered quite with dead mens ratling bones,
With recky ſhankes aed yellow chappleſſe ſculls:
Or bid me go into a new made grave,
And hide me with a dead man in his grave,
Things that to heare them told, have made me tremble,
And I will doe it without feare or doubt,
To live an vnſtaind wife to my ſweet Love.
Fri. Hold then: goe home be merry, give conſent,
To marry Paris: wenſday is to morrow,
To morrow night looke that thou lie alone,
Let not thy Nurſe lie with thee in thy Chamber:
Take thou this Violl being then in bed,
And this diſtilling liquor drinke thou off,
When preſently through all thy veines ſhall run,
A cold and drowſie humour: for no pulſe
Shall keepe his native progreſſe, but ſurceaſe:
No warmth, no breath ſhall teſtifie thou liveſt,
The Roſes in thy lips and cheekes ſhall fade
To mealy aſhes, the eyes windowes fall
Like death when he ſhuts up the day of life:
Each part depriv'd of ſupple government,
Shall ſtiffe and ſtarke, and cold appeare like death,
And in this borrowed likeneſſe of ſhrunke death
Thou ſhalt continue two and forty houres,
And then awake, as from a pleaſant ſleepe.
Now when the Bridegroome in the morning comes,
To rowſe the from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then as the manner of our country is,
In thy beſt Robes uncover'd on the Beere,
Be borne to buriall in thy kindreds grave:
Thou ſhalt be borne to that ſame antient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie,
In the meane time againſt thou ſhalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my Letters know our drift,
And hither ſhall he come, and that very night
Shall Romeo beare thee hence to Mantua.
And this ſhall free thee from this preſent ſhame,
If no inconſtant toy nor womaniſh feare,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.
Iul. Give me, give me, O tell not me of feare.
Fri. Hold get you gone, be ſtrong and proſperous:
In this reſolve, Ile ſend a Frier with ſpeed
To Mantua with my Letters to thy Lord.
Iul. Love give me ſtrength,
And ſtrength ſhall helpe afford:
Farewell deare father. Exit.

Enter Father Capulet, Mother, Nurſe, and ſerving men, two or three.

Cap. So many gueſts invite as here are writ,
Sirrah, go hire me twenty cunning Cookes.
Ser. You ſhall have none ill ſir, for Ile trie if they can licke their fingers.
Cap. How canſt thou trie them ſo?
Ser. Marry ſir, tis an ill Cooke that cannot licke his owne fingers: therefore he that cannot licke his fingers goes not with me.
Cap. Go be gone, we ſhall be much unfurniſht for this time: what is my Daughter gone to Frier Lawrence?
Nur. I forſooth.
Cap. Well he may chance to do ſome good on her,
A peeviſh ſelfe-wild harlotry it is.
Enter Iuliet.
Nur. See where ſhe comes from ſhrift
With merry looke
Cap. How now my headſtrong,
Where have you bin gadding?
Iul. Where I have learnt me to repent the ſin
Of diſobedient oppoſition;
To you and your beheſts, and am enjoyn'd
By holy Lawrence, to fall proſtrate here,
To beg your pardon: pardon I beſeech you,
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you,
Cap. Send for the Count, goe tell him of this,
Ile have this knot knit up to morrow morning.
Iul. I met the youthfull Lord at Lawrence Cell,
And gave him what becomed Love I might,
Not ſtepping ore the bounds of modeſtie.
Cap. Why I am glad on't, this is well, ſtand up,

This is as't ſhould be,let me ſee the County:
I marry go I ſay,and fetch him hither.
Now afore God,this reverend holy Frier,
All our whole City is much bound to him.
Iul. Nurſe will you goe with me into my Cloſet,
To helpe me ſort ſuch needfull ornaments,
As you thinke fit to furniſh me to morrow?
Mo. No not till Thurſday,there is time inough.
Fa. Go Nurſe,go with her,
Weele to Church to morrow.
Exeunt Iuliet and Nurſe.
Mo. We ſhall be ſhort in our proviſion,
Tis now neere night.
Fa. Tuſh,I will ſtirre about,
And all things ſhall be well, I warrant thee wife;
Go thou to Iuliet,helpe to decke up her,
Ile not to bed to night,let me alone:
Ile play the huſwife for this once. What ho?
They are all forth,well I will walke my ſelfe
To County Paris, to prepare him up
Againſt to morrow,my heart is wondrous light,
Since this ſame way-ward Gyrle is ſo reclam'd.
Exeunt Father and Mother.

Enter Iuliet and Nurſe.
Iul. I thoſe attires are beſt,but gentle Nurſe
I pray thee leaue me to my ſelfe to night:
For I have need of many Oryſons,
To move the heavens to ſmile upon my ſtate,
Which well thou know'ſt,is croſſe and full of ſin.
Enter Mother.
Mo. What are you buſie ho?need you my help?
Iul. No Madam,we have cull'd ſuch neceſſaries
As are behoouefull for our ſtate to morrow:
So pleaſe you,let me now be left alone;
And let the Nurſe this night ſit up with you,
For I am ſure,you have your hands full all,
In this ſo ſudden buſineſſe.
Mo. Goodnight.
Get thee to bed and reſt,for thou haſt need. Exeunt.
Iul. Farewell:
God knowes when we ſhall meete againe.
I have a faint cold feare thrills through my veines,
That almoſt freezes up the heate of fire:
Ile call them backe againe to comfort me.
Nurſe,what ſhould ſhe do here?
My diſmall Sceane,I needs muſt act alone:
Come Viall,what if this mixture do not worke at all?
Shall I be married then to morrow morning?
No,no,this ſhall forbid it. Lie thou there,
What if it be a poiſon which the Frier
Subtilly hath miniſtred to have me dead,
Leſt in this marriage he ſhould be diſhonour'd,
Becauſe he married me before to Romeo?
I feare it is,and yet me thinkes it ſhould not.
For he hath ſtill beene tried a holy man.
How,if when I am laid into the Tombe,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeeme me? There's a fearefull point:
Shall I not then be ſtifled in the Vault?
To whoſe foule mouth no healthſome ayre breaths in,
And there die ſtrangled ere my Romeo comes.
Or if I live, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,
As in a Vault,an ancient receptacle,
Where for theſe many hundred yeeres the bones
Of all my buried Aunceſtors are packt,
Where bloody Tybalt,yet but greene in earth,
Lies feſtring in his ſhrow'd,where as they ſay,
At ſome houres in the night,Spirits reſort:
Alacke,alack is it not like that I
So early waking, what with loathſome ſmels,
And ſhrikes like Mandrakes torne out of the earth,
That living mortals hearing them,run mad.
Or if I walke,ſhall I not be diſtraught,
Invironed with all theſe hideous feares,
And madly play with my forefathers joynts?
And plucke the mangled Tibalt from his ſhrow'd?
And in this rage,with ſome great kinſmans bone,
As (with a club) daſh out my deſperate braines.
O looke,me thinks I ſee my Cozins Ghoſt,
Seeking out Romeo that did ſpit his body
Vpon his Rapiers point:ſtay Tybalt, ſtay;
Rome,Romeo,Romeo,here's drinke:I drinke to thee.

Enter Lady of the houſe,and Nurſe.

Lady. Hold,
Take theſe keies,and fetch more ſpices Nurſe,
Nur. They call for Dates and Quinces in the Paſtrie,
Enter old Capulet.
Cap. Come,ſtir,ſtir ſtir,
The ſecond Cocke hath Crow'd,
The Curphew Bell hath rung,tis three a clocke:
Looke to the bakte meates,good Angelica,
Spare not for coſt.
Nur. Go you Cot-queane,go,
Get you to bed,faith youle be ſicke to morrow
For this nights watching.
Cap. No not a whit.what?I have watcht ere now
All night for a leſſe cauſe,and neere beene ſicke,
La. I you have bin a Mouſe-hunt in your time,
But I will watch you from ſuch watching now.
Exit Lady and Nurſe.
Cap. A jealous hood,a jealous hood,
Now fellow,whats there?
Enter three or foure with ſpits,and logs,and baskets.
Fel. Things for the Cooke ſir,but I know not what.
Cap. Make haſt,make haſt,ſirrha,fetch drier Logs.
Call Peter,he will ſhew thee where they are.
Fel. I have a head ſir,that will find out logs,
And never trouble Peter for the matter.
Cap. Maſſe and well ſaid,a merry horſon,ha,
Thou ſhalt be loggerhead,good Faith,tis day.
Play Muſicke.
The County will be here with Muſicke ſtraight,
For ſo he ſaid he would,I heare him neere,
Nurſe,wife,what ho?what Nurſe I ſay?
Enter Nurſe.
Go waken Iuliet,go and trim her up,
Ile go and chat with Paris:hie,make haſt,
Make haſt,the Bridegroome,he is come already:
Make haſt I ſay.
Nur. Miſtris,what Miſtris? Iuliet? Faſt I warrant her.
Why Lambe, why Lady?fie you ſluggabed,
Why Love I ſay?Madam,ſweet heart:why Bride?
What not a word?You take your peniworths now.
Sleepe for a weeke,for the next night I warrant
The County Paris hath ſet up his reſt,
That you ſhall reſt but little,God forgive me:
Marry and Amen:how ſound is ſhe a ſleepe?

I muſt needs wake her:Madam,Madam,Madam,
I,let the County take you in your bed;
Heele fright you up yfaith. Will it not be?
What dreſt,and in your clothes,and downe againe?
I muſt needs wake you:Lady,Lady,Lady?
Alas,alas,helpe,helpe,my Ladys dead,
Oh weladay,that ever I was borne,
Some Aqua-vitæ ho,my Lord,my Lady?
Mo. What noiſe is heere? Enter Mother.
Nur. O lamentable day.
Mo. What is the matter?
Nur. Looke,looke,oh heavy day.
Mo. O me,O me,my Child, my onely life:
Revive,looke up,or I will die with thee:
Helpe,helpe,call helpe.

Enter Father.

Fa. For ſhame bring Iuliet forth,her Lord is come.
Nur. Shee's dead:deceaſt,ſhee's dead:alacke the day.
M. Alacke the day,ſhee's dead,ſhee's dead,ſhee's dead.
Fa. Ha?Let me ſee her : out alas ſhee's cold,
Her blood is ſetled and her joynts are ſtiffe:
Life and theſe lips have long bene ſeparated:
Death lies on her like an untimely froſt
Vpon the ſweteſt flower of all the field.
Nur. O Lamentable day!
Mo. O wofull time.
Fa. Death that hath tane her hence to make me waile,
Ties up my tongne,and will not let me ſpeake.

Enter Frier and the County.

Fri. Come,is the Bride ready to go to Church?
Fa. Ready to go,but never to returne.
O Sonne,the night before thy wedding day,
Hath death laine with thy wife:ſee there ſhe lies,
Flower as ſhe was,deflowred now by him.
Death is my Sonne in law,death is my Heire,
My Daughter he hath wedded.I will die,
And leave him all life living,all is deaths.
Fa. Have I thought long to ſee this mornings face,
And doth it give me ſuch a ſight as this?
Mo. Accur'ſt,unhappy,wretched,hatefull day,
Moſt miſerable houre,that ere time ſaw
In laſting labour of his Pilgrimage.
But one,poore one,one poore and loving Child,
But one thing to rejoyce and ſolace in,
And cruell death hath catcht it from my ſight.
Nur. O wo, O wofull,wofull,wofull day,
Moſt lamentable day,moſt wofull day,
That ever,ever,I did yet behold.
O day,O day,O day,O hatefull day,
Never was ſeene ſo blacke a day as this:
O wofull day,O wofull day.
Fa. Beguild,divorced,wronged,ſpighted,ſlaine,
Moſt deteſtable death,by thee beguil'd,
By cruell,cruell thee quite overthrowne:
O love,O life;not life,but loue in death.
Fa. Deſpis'd,diſtreſſed,hated,martir'd,kil'd,
Vncomfortable time,why cam'ſt thou now
To murther,murther our ſolemnity?
O Child,O Child;my ſoule,and not my Child,
Dead art thou,alacke my Child is dead,
And with my Child,my joyes are buried.
Fri. Peace ho for ſhame,confuſions:Care lives not
In theſe confuſions,heaven and your ſelfe
Had part in this faire Maid,now heaven hath all,
And all the better is it for the Maid:
Your part in her,you could not keepe from death,
But heaven kepes his part in eternall life:
The moſt you ſought was her promotion,
For 'twas your heaven,that ſhe ſhould be advanc't.
And weepe ye now,ſeeing ſhe is advanc't
Above the Cloudes,as high as Heaven it ſelfe?
O in this love;you love your Child ſo ill,
That you run mad,ſeeing that ſhe is well:
Shee's not well married,that lives married long,
But ſhee's beſt married, that dies married yong.
Drie vp your teares, and ſticke your Roſemarie
On this faire Coarſe, and as the cuſtome is
And in her beſt array beare her to Church:
For though fond Nature bids all us lament,
Yet Natures teares are Reaſons merriment.
Fa. All things that we ordained Feſtivall,
Turne from their office to blacke Funerall:
Our inſtruments to melancholy Bells
Our wedding cheare,to a ſad buriall Feaſt:
Our ſolemne Hymnes,to ſullen Dyrges change;
Our Bridall flowers ſerve for a buried Coarſe:
And all things change them to the contrary.
Fri. Sir go you in,and Madam,go with him,
And go ſir Paris,every one prepare
To follow this faire Coarſe unto her grave:
The heavens do lowre upon you,for ſome ill:
Move them no more,by croſſing their high will. Exeunt.
Mu. Faith we may put up our Pipes and be gone.
Nur. Honeſt goodfellowes:Ah put up put up,
For well you know,this is a pittifull caſe.
Mu. I by my troth,the caſe may be amended.

Enter Peter.

Pet. Muſitians,oh Muſitians,
Hearts eaſe,hearts eaſe,
O, and you will have me live,play hearts eaſe.
Mu. Why hearts eaſe;
Pet. O Muſitians,
Becauſe my heart it ſelfe plaies,my heart is full.
Mu. Not a dump we,tis no time to play now.
Pet. You will not then?
Mu. No.
Pet. I will then give it you ſoundly.
Mu. What will you give us?
Pet. No money on my faith,but the gleeke.
I will give you the Miniſtrell.
Mu. Then will I give you the Serving creature.
Pet. Then will I lay the ſerving Creatures Dagger on your pate.I will cary no Crochets, Ile Re you,Ile Fa you, do you note me?
Mu. And you Re us,and Fa us,you Note us.
2. M. Pray you put up your Dagger,
And put out your wit.
Then have at you with my wit.
Pet. I will dry-beate you with an yron wit,
And put up my yron Dagger.
Anſwere me like men:
When griping griefes the heart doth wound, then Muſicke with her ſilver ſound.
Why ſilver ſound?why Muſicke with her ſilver ſound?
what ſay you Simon Catling?
Mu. Mary ſir,becauſe ſilver hath a ſweet ſound.
Pet. Prateſt,what ſay you Hugh Rebicke?
2. M. I ſay ſilver ſound,becauſe Muſitions ſound for ſilver.
Pet. Prateſt to,what ſay you Iames Sound-Poſt?
3. Mu. Faith I know not what to ſay.
Pet. O I cry you mercy,you are the Singer.
I will ſay for you;it is Muſicke with her ſilver ſound,

Becauſe Muſitians have no gold for ſounding:
Then Muſicke with her ſilver ſound, with ſpeedy helpe
doth lend redreſſe. Exit.

Mu. What a peſtilent knave is this ſame?

M.2. Hang him Iacke, come weele in here, tarry for the Mourners, and ſtay dinner. Exit.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. If I may truſt the flattering truth of ſleepe,
My dreames preſage ſome joyfull newes at hand:
My boſomes Lord ſits lightly in his throne:
And all this winged vnaccuſtom'd ſpirit,
Lifts me above the ground with cheerefull thoughts.
I dreamt my Lady came and found me dead,
(Strange dreame that gives a dead man leave to thinke,)
And breath'd ſuch life with kiſſes in my lips,
That I reuiv'd and was an Emperour.
Ah me, how ſweet is love it ſelfe poſſeſt,
When but loves ſhadowes are ſo rich in joy.

Enter Romeo's man.

Newes from Verona, how now Balthazar?
Doſt thou not bring me Letters from the Frier?
How doth my Lady? Is my Father well?
How doth my Lady Iuliet? that I aske againe,
For nothing can be ill, if ſhe be well.

Ma. Then ſhe is well, and nothing can be ill.
Her body ſleepes in Capels Monument,
And her immortall part with Angels lives
I ſaw her laid low in her kindreds Vault.
And preſently tooke Poſte to tell it you:
O pardon me for bringing theſe ill newes,
Since you did leave it for my office Sir.

Rom. Is it even ſo?
Then I deny you Starres.
Thou knoweſt my lodging, get me inke and paper,
And hire Poſt-Horſes, I will hence to night.

Ma. I do beſeech you ſir, have patience:
Your lookes are pale and wilde, and do import
Some miſadventure.

Rom. Tuſh, thou art deceiv'd,
Leave me, and do the thing I bid thee doe:
Haſt thou no Letters to me from the Frier?

Ma. No, my good Lord.

Exit Man.

Rom. No matter: Get thee gone,
And hyre thoſe Horſes, Ile be with thee ſtraight.
Well Iuliet, I will lie with thee to night:
Lets ſee for meanes: O miſchiefe thou art ſwift,
To enter in the thoughts of deſperate men:
I do remember an Appothecary,
And here abouts he dwels, which late I noted
In tattred weeds, with overwhelming browes,
Culling of Simples, meager were his lookes,
Sharpe miſerie had worne him to the bones:
And in his needie ſhop a Tortoys hung,
An Allegater ſtuft, and other skins
Of ill ſhap'd fiſhes, and about his ſhelves,
A beggerly account of empty boxes,
Greene earthen pots, Bladders, and muſty ſeedes,
Remnants of packthred, and old cakes of Roſes
Were thinly ſcattered, to make up a ſhew.
Noting this penury, to my ſelfe I ſaid,
An if a man did need a poiſon now,
Whoſe ſale is preſent death in Mantua,
Here lives a Caitiffe wretch would ſell it him.
O this ſame thought did but fore-run my need,
And this ſame needy man muſt ſell it me.
As I remember, this ſhould be the houſe,
Being holy day, the beggers ſhop is ſhut.
What ho? Appothecary?

Enter Appothecary.

App. Who call's ſo low'd?

Rom. Come hither man, I ſee that thou art poore,
Hold, there is forty Dukets, let me have
A dram of poiſon, ſuch ſoone ſpeeding geare,
As will diſperſe it ſelfe through all the veines,
That the life-weary-taker may fall dead,
And that the Trunke may be diſcharg'd of breath,
As violently, as haſty powder fier'd
Doth hurry from the fatall Canons wombe.

Ap. Such mortall drugs I have, but Mantuas law
Is death to any he, that vtters them.

Rom. Art thou ſo bare and full of wretchedneſſe,
And fear'ſt to die? Famine is in thy cheekes,
Need and oppreſſion ſtarveth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggery hang on thy backe!
The world is not thy friend, nor the worlds law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich.
Then be not poore, but breake it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will conſents.

Rom. I pray thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will
And drinke it off, and if you had the ſtrength
Of twenty men, it would diſpatch you ſtraight.

Rom. There's thy Gold,
Worſe poiſon to mens ſoules,
Doing more murther in this loathſome world,
Then theſe poore compounds that thou mayeſt not ſell.
I ſell thee poiſon, thou haſt ſold me none,
Farewell, buy food, and get thy ſelfe in fleſh.
Come Cordiall, and not poiſon, go with me
To Iuliets grave, for there muſt I uſe thee.

Exeunt.

Enter Frier Iohn to Frier Lawrence.

Iohn. Holy Franciſcan Frier, Brother, ho?

Enter Frier Lawrence.

Law. This ſame ſhould be the voice of Frier Iohn.
Welcome from Mantua, what ſayes Romeo?
Or if mind be writ, give me his Letter.

Ioh. Going to find a bare-foote Brother out,
One of our order to aſſociate me,
Here in this City viſiting the ſick,
And finding him, the Searchers of the Towne
Suſpecting that we both were in a houſe
Where the infectious peſtilence did raigne,
Seal'd up the doores, and would not let us forth,
So that my ſpeed to Mantua there was ſtaid.

Law. Who bare my Letter then to Romeo?

Ioh. I could not ſend it, here it is againe,
Nor get a meſſenger to bring it thee,
So fearefull were they of infection.

Law. Vnhappy Fortune: by my Brotherhood
The Letter was not nice, but full of charge,
Of deare import, and the neglecting it
May do much danger: Frier Iohn go hence,
Get me an Iron Crow, and bring it ſtraight
Vnto my Cell.

Ioh. Brother Ile go and bring it thee. Exit.

Law. Now muſt I to the Monument alone,
Within this three houres will faire Iuliet wake,
Shee will beſhrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of theſe accidents:
But I will write againe to Mantua,

And keepe her at my Cell till Romeo come,
Poore living Coarſe,clos'd in a dead mans Tombe,
Exit.

Enter Paris and his Page,

Par. Give me thy Torch Boy,hence and ſtand aloft,
Yet put it out,for I would not be ſeene:
Vnder yond young Trees lay thee all alone,
Holding thy eare cloſe to the hollow ground,
So ſhall no foot upon the Churchyard tread,
Being looſe,unfirme with digging up of Graves,
But thou ſhalt heare it:whiſtle then to me,
As ſignall that thou heareſt ſome thing approach,
Give me thoſe flowers. Do as I bid thee,go.
Pag. I am almoſt afraid to ſtand along
Here in the Churchyard,yet I will adventure. Exit.
Pa. Sweet Flower with flowers thy Bridall bed I ſtrew:
O woe,thy Canopy is duſt and ſtones,
Which with ſweet water nightly I will dewe,
Or wanting that,with teares diſtill'd by mones;
The obſequies that I for thee will keepe,
Nightly ſhall be,to ſtrew thy grave,and weepe.
Whiſtle Boy.
The Boy gives warning,ſomething doth approach,
What curſed foot wanders this way to night,
To croſſe my obſequies,and true loves right?
What with a Torch? Muffle me night a while.

Enter Romeo,and Peter.

Rom. Give me that Mattocke,& the wrenching Iron,
Hold take this Letter,early in the morning
See thou deliver it to my Lord and Father,
Give me the light:upon thy life I charge thee,
What ere thou hear'ſt or ſeeſt,ſtand all aloofe,
And do not interrupt me in my courſe.
Why I deſcend into this bed of death,
Is partly to behold my Ladies face:
But chiefly to take thence from her dead finger,
A precious Ring:a Ring that I muſt uſe,
In deare employment,therefore hence be gone:
But if thou jealous doſt returne to prie
In what I further ſhall intend to do,
By heaven I will teare thee joynt by joynt,
And ſtrew this hungry Churchyard with thy limbs:
The time,and my intents are ſavage wilde:
More fierce and more inexorable farre,
Then empty Tygers, or the roaring Sea.
Pet I will be gone ſir,and not trouble you
Ro. So ſhalt thou ſhew me friendſhip : take thou that,
Live and be proſperous,and farewell good fellow.
Pet. For all this ſame,Ile hide me here about,
His lookes I feare,and his intents I doubt. Exit.
Rom. Thou deteſtable mawe,thou wombe of death,
Gorg'd with the deareſt morſell of the earth:
Thus I enforce thy rotten Iawes to open,
And in deſpight,Ile cram thee with more food.
Par. This is that baniſht haughty Mountague,
That murdred my Loves Cozin;with which griefe,
It is ſuppoſed the faire Creature died,
And here is come to do ſome villanous ſhame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.
Stop thy unhallowed toyle,vile Mountague:
Can vengeance be purſued further then death?
Condemned villaine,I do apprehend thee.
Obey and go with me,for thou muſt die,
Rom. I muſt indeed,and therfore came I hither:
Good gentle youth,tempt not a deſperate man,
Flie hence and leave me,thinke upon thoſe gone,
Let them affright thee. I beſeech thee Youth,
Put not an other ſin upon my head,
By urging me to fury. O be gone,
By heaven I love thee better then my ſelfe,
For I come hither arm'd againſt my ſelfe:
Stay not, be gone,live,and hereafter ſay,
A mad mans mercy bid thee run away.
Par. I do defie thy commiſeration,
And apprehend thee for a Fellon here.
Ro. Wilt thou provoke me? Then have at thee Boy.
Pet. O Lord they fight,I will go call the Watch.
Pa. O I am ſlaine,if thou be mercifull,
Open the Tombe,lay me with Iuliet.
Rom. In faith I will,let me peruſe this face,
Mercutius kinſman,Noble County Paris,
What ſaid my man,when my betoſſed ſoule
Did not attend him as we rode? I thinke
He told me Paris ſhould have married Iuliet.
Said he not ſo? Or did I dreame it ſo?
Or am I mad,hearing him talke of Iuliet,
To thinke it was ſo? O give me thy hand,
One,writ with me in ſowre misfortunes booke,
Ile bury thee in a triumphant grave.
A Grave,O no,a Lanthorne;ſlaughtred Youth:
For here lies Iuliet, and her beauty makes
This Vault a feaſting preſence full of light.
Death lie thou there,by a dead man inter'd.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they beene merry? Which their Keepers call
A lightning before death? Oh how may I
Call this a lightning? O my Love,my Wife,
Death that hath ſuck the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy Beauty:
Thou are not conquer'd:Beauties enſigne yet
Is Crymſon in thy lips,and in thy cheekes,
And Deaths pale flag is not advanced there.
Tybalt,ly'ſt thou there in thy bloudy ſheet?
O what more favour can I do to thee,
Then with that hand that cut thy youth in twaine,
To ſunder his that was thy enemy?
Forgive me Cozen. Ah deare Iuliet:
Why art thou yet ſo faire? I will beleeve,
Shall I beleeve,that unſubſtantiall death is amorous?
And that the leane abhorred Monſter keepes
Thee here in darke to be his Paramour?
For feare of that,I ſtill will ſtay with thee,
And never from this Palace of dym night
Depart againe:come lie thou in my armes,
Heere's to thy health,where ere thou tumbleſt in.
O true Appothecary!
Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kiſſe I die,
Depart againe;here,here will I remaine,
With Wormes that are thy Chambermaides:O here
Will I ſet up my everlaſting reſt:
And ſhake the yoke of inauſpicious ſtarres
From this worlds wearied fleſh:Eyes looke your laſt:
Armes take your laſt embrace: And lips,O you
The doores of breath,ſeale with a righteous kiſſe
A datelesse bargaine to ingroſſing death:
Come bitter conduct,come unſavoury guide,
Thou deſperate Pilot,now at once run on
The daſhing Rocks,thy Sea-ſicke weary Barke:
Heere's to my Love. O true Appothecary:

Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kiſſe I die.
Enter Frier with Lanthorne, Crow, and Spade.
Fri. St. Francis be my ſpeed, how oft to night
Have my old feet ſtumbled at graves? Who's there?
Man. Her's one, a Friend, & one that knowes you well.
Fri. Bliſſe be upon you. Tell me good my Friend
What Torch is yond that vainely lends his light
To grubs, and eyeleſſe Sculles? As diſcerne,
It burneth in the Capels Monument.
Man. It doth ſo holy ſir,
And there's my Maiſter, one that you love.
Fri. Who is it?
Man. Romeo.
Fri. How long hath he bin there?
Man. Full halfe an houre.
Fri. Go with me to the Vault.
Man. I dare not Sir.
My Maiſter knowes not but I am gone hence,
And fearefully did menace me with death,
If I did ſtay to looke on his entents.
Fri. Stay, then Ile go alone, feares come upon me.
O much I feare ſome ill unluckie thing.
Mar. As I did ſleepe under this young tree here,
I dreamt my maiſter and another fought,
And that my Maiſter ſlew him.
Fri. Romeo.
Alacke, alacke, what blood is this which ſtaines
The ſtony entrance of this Sepulcher?
What meane theſe Maiſterleſſe, and goary Swords
To lie diſcolour'd by this place of peace?
Romeo, oh pale: who elſe? what Paris too?
And ſteept in blood? Ah what an unkn'd houre
Is guilty of this lamentable chance?
The Lady ſtirs.
Iul. O comfortable Frier, where's my Lord?
I do remember well where I ſhould be:
And there I am, where is my Romeo?
Fri. I heare ſome noiſe Lady, come from that neſt
Of death, contagion, and unnaturall ſleepe,
A greater power then we can contradict
Hath thwarted our entents, come, come away,
Thy husband in thy boſome there lies dead:
And Paris too: come Ile diſpoſe of thee,
Among a Siſterhood of holy Nunnes:
Stay not to queſtion, for the watch is comming,
Come, go good Iuliet, I dare no longer ſtay. Exit.
Iul. Go get thee hence, for I will not away,
What's here? A cup cloſ'd in my true loves hand?
Poiſon I ſee hath bin his timeleſſe end
O churle, drinke all? and left no friendly drop,
To hlpe me after, I will kiſſe thy lips,
Happly ſome poiſon yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a reſtorative.
Thy lips are warme.
Enter Boy and Watch.
Watch. Lead Boy, which way?
Iul. Yea noiſe?
Then ile be briefe. O happy Dagger.
Tis in thy ſheath, there ruſt and let me die Kils herſelfe.
Boy. This is the place,
There where the Torch doth burne
Watch. The ground is bloody,
Search about the Churchyard.
Go ſome of you, who ere you find attach.
Pittifull ſight, here lies the County ſlaine,
And Iuliet bleeding, warme and newly dead
Who here hath laine theſe two dayes buried.
Go tell the Prince, runne to the Capulets,
Raiſe up the Mountagues, ſome others ſearch,
We ſee the ground whereon theſe woes do lie.
But the true ground of all theſe piteous woes,
We cannot without circumſtance deſcry.
Enter Romeo's man.
Wat. Here's Romeo's man,
We found him in the Churchyard.
Con. Hold him in ſafety, till the Prince comes hither,
Enter Frier, and another Watchman.
3. Wat. Here is a Frier that trembles, ſighes, and weepes
We tooke this Mattocke and this Spade from him,
As he was comming from this Church-yard ſide.
Con. A great ſuſpition, ſtay the Frier too.
Enter the Prince.
Prin. What miſadventure is ſo earely up,
That calls our perſon from our mornings reſt?

Enter Capulet and his Wife.
Cap. What ſhould it be that they ſo ſhrike abroad?
Wife. O the people in the ſtreete crie Romeo.
Some Iuliet, and ſome Paris, and all runne
With open out cry toward our Monument.
Pri. What feare is this which ſtartles in your eares?
Wat. Soveraigne, here lies the Countie Paris ſlaine,
And Romeo dead, and Iuliet dead before,
Warme and new kil'd.
Pri. Search,
Seeke, and know how, this foule murder comes.
Wat. Here is a Frier, and Slaughter'd Romeos man,
With Inſtruments upon them fit to open
Theſe dead mens Tombes,
Cap. O heaven!
O wife looke how our Daughter bleedes!
This Dagger hath miſtaine, for loe his houſe
Is empty on the backe of Mountague,
And is miſheathed in my Daughters boſome.
Wife. O me, this ſight of death, is as a Bell
That warnes my old age to a Sepulcher.
Enter Mountague.
Pri. Come Mountague, for thou art early up
To ſee thy Sonne and Heire, now early downe,
Moun. Alas my liege, my wife is dead to night,
Griefe of my Sonnes exile hath ſtopt her breath:
What further woe conſpires againſt my age?
Pri. Looke: and thou ſhalt ſee
Mon. O thou untaught, what manners in is this,
To preſſe before thy Father to a grave?
Pri. Seale up the mouth of outrage for a while,
Till we can cleare theſe ambiguities,
And know their ſpring, their head, their true deſcent,
And then will I be generall of your woes,
And lead you even to death? meane time forbeare,
And let miſchance be ſlave to patience,
Bring forth the parties of ſuſpition.
Fri. I am the greateſt, able to doe leaſt,
Yet moſt ſuſpected as the time and place
Doth make againſt me of this direfull murther:
And heere I ſtand both to impeach and purge
My ſelfe condemned, and my ſelfe excuſ'd.
Pri. Then ſay at once, what thou doſt know in this?
Fri. I will be briefe, for my ſhort date of breath
Is not ſo long as is a tedious tale.
Romeo there dead, was husband to that Iuliet,
And ſhe there dead, that's Romeos faithfull wife:

I married them;and their ſtolne marriage day
Was Taybalts Domeſday:whoſe untimely death
Baniſh'd the new-made Bridegroome from this City:
For whom(and not for Tybalt) Iuliet pinde.
You, to remove that ſiege of Grieſe from her,
Betroth'd,and would have married her perforce
To Countie Paris. Then comes ſhe to me,
And(with wilde lookes)bid me deviſe ſome meanes
To rid her from this ſecond Marriage,
Or in my Cell there would ſhe kill her ſelfe.
Then gave I her(ſo Tuter'd by my Art)
A ſleeping Potion, which ſo tooke effect
As I intended,for it wrought on her
The forme of death. Meane time,I writ to Romeo,
That he ſhould hither come,as this dyre night,
To helpe to take her from her borrowed grave,
Being the time the Potions force ſhould ceaſe.
But he which bore my Letter,Frier Iohn,
Was ſtay'd by accident;and yeſternight
Return'd my Letter backe. Then all alone,
At the prefixed houre of her waking,
Came I to take her from her Kindreds vault,
Meaning to keepe her cloſely at my Cell,
Till I conveniently could ſend to Romeo.
But when I came(ſome Minute ere the time
Of her a waking)heere untimely lay
The Noble Paris,and true Romeo dead.
Shee wakes, and I Intreated her come foorth,
And beare this worke of Heaven,with patience:
But then, a noiſe did ſcarre me from the Tombe,
And ſhe(too deſperate)would not go with me,
But(as it ſeemes)did violence on her ſelfe.
All this I know,and to the Marriage her Nurſe,is privy:
And if ought in this miſcarried by my fault,
Let my old life be ſacrific'd,ſome houre before the time,
Vnto the rigour of ſevereſt Law.
Prin. We ſtill have knowne thee for a Holy man.
Where's Romeo's man? What can he ſay to this?
Boy. I brought my Maiſter newes of Iuliets death,
And then in poſte he came from Mantua
To this ſame place,to this ſame Monument.
This Letter he early bid me give his Father,
And threatned me with death,going in the Vault,
If I departed not,and left him there.
Prin. Give me the Letter,I will looke on it.
Where is the Counties Page that rais'd the Watch?
Sirra,what made your Maiſter in this place?
Pag. He came with flowres to ſtrew his Ladies grave,
And bid me ſtand aloofe,and ſo I did:
Anon comes one with light to ope the Tombe,
And by and by my Maiſter drew on him,
And then I ran away to call the Watch.
Prin. This Letter doth make good the Friers words,
Their courſe of Love,the tydings of her death:
And heere he writes,that he did buy a poyſon
Of a poore Pothecary,and therewithall
Came to this Vault to dye, and lye with Iuliet,
Where be theſe Enemies? Capulet, Mountague,
See what a ſcourge is laide upon your hate,
That Heaven finds meanes to kill your joyes with Love;
And I, for winking at your diſcords too,
Have loſt a brace of Kinſmen: All are puniſh'd.
Cap. O Brother Mountague,give me thy hand,
This is my Daughters joynture,for no more
Can I demand.
Moun. But I can give thee more:
For I will raiſe her Statue in pure Gold,
That whiles Verona by that name is knowne,
There ſhall no figure at that Rate be ſet,
As that of True and Faithfull Iuliet.
Cap. As rich ſhall Romeo by his Lady lie,
Poore ſacrifices of our enmity,
Prin. A glooming peace this morning with it brings,
The Sunne for ſorrow will not ſhew his head;
Go hence,to have more talke of theſe ſad things,
Some ſhall be pardon'd,aud ſome puniſhed.
For never was a Story of more Woe
Then this of Iuliet, and her Romeo. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE LIFE OF TYMON OF ATHENS.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Poet, Painter, Ieweller, Merchant, and Mercer, at ſeverall doores.

Poet.

GOod day Sir.

Pain. I am glad y'are well.

Poet. I have not ſeene you long, how goes the World?

Pain. It weares ſir, as it growes.

Poet. I that's well knowne:
But what particular Rarity? What ſtrange,
Which manifold record not matches: ſee
Magicke of Bounty, all theſe ſpirits thy power
Hath conjur'd to attend.
I know the Merchant.

Pai. I know them both: th'others a Ieweller.

Mer. O tis a worthy Lord.

Iew. Nay that's moſt fixt.

Mer. A moſt incomparable man, breath'd as it were,
To an untyrable and continuate goodneſſe:
He paſſes.

Iew. I have a Iewell heere.

Mer. O pray let's ſee't. For the Lord Timon, ſir?

Iew. If he will touch the eſtimate, but for that———

Poe. When we for recompence have prais'd the vild,
It ſtaines the glory in that happy Verſe,
Which aptly ſings the good.

Mer. Tis a good forme.

Iew. And rich: heere is a Water looke ye.

Pai. You are rapt ſir, in ſome worke, ſome Dedication to the great Lord.

Poe. A thing ſlipt idly from me.
Our Poeſie is as a Gowne, which uſes
From whence tis nouriſht: the fire i'th'Flint
Shewes not, till it be ſtrooke: our gentle flame
Provokes it ſelfe, and like the currant flyes
Each bound it chaſes. What have you there?

Pai. A Picture ſir: when comes your Booke forth?

Poe. Vpon the heeles of my preſentment ſir.
Let's ſee your peece.

Pai. Tis a good Peece.

Poe. So tis, this comes off well, and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent:

Poe. Admirable: How this grace
Speakes his owne ſtanding: what a mentall power
This eye ſhootes forth? How bigge imagination
Moves in this Lip; to th'dumbneſſe of the geſture,
One might interpret.

Pai. It is a pretty mocking of the life:
Heere is a touch: Is't good?

Poe. I will ſay of it,
It Tutors Nature, Artificiall ſtrife
Lives in theſe touches, livelier then life.

Enter certaine Senators.

Pai. How this Lord is followed.

Poe. The Senators of Athens, happy men.

Pain. Looke moe.

Po. You ſee this confluẽce, this great flood of viſitors,
I have in this rough worke ſhap'd out a man
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hugge
With ampleſt entertainement: My free drift
Halts not particularly, but moves it ſelfe
In a wide Sea of wax, no levell'd malice
Infects one comma in the courſe I hold,
But flies an Eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leaving no Tract behinde.

Pai. How ſhall I underſtand you?

Poe. I will unboult to you.
You ſee how all Conditions, how all Mindes,
As well of glib and ſlipp'ry Creatures, as
Of Grave and auſtere quality, tender downe
Their ſervices to Lord Timon: his large Fortune,
Vpon his good and gracious Nature hanging,
Subdues and properties to his love and tendance
All ſorts of hearts; yea, from the glaſſe-fac'd Flatterer
To Apemantus, that few things loves better
Then to abhorre himſelfe, even hee drops downe
The knee before him, and returnes in peace
Moſt rich in Timons nod.

Pai. I ſaw them ſpeake together.

Poe. Sir, I have upon a high and pleaſant hill
Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd.
The Baſe o'th'Mount
Is rank'd with all deſerts, all kinde of Natures
That labour on the boſome of this Sphere,
To propagate their ſtates; among'ſt them all,
Whoſe eyes are on this Soveraigne Lady fixt,
One do I perſonate of Lord Timons frame,
Whom Fortune with her Ivory hand wafts to her,
Whoſe preſent grace, to preſent ſlaves and ſervants
Tranſlates his Rivals.

Pai. Tis conceiv'd, to ſcope
This Throne, this Fortune, and this Hill me thinkes

With one man becken'd from the reſt below,
Bowing his head againſt the ſteepy Mount
To climbe his happineſſe, would be well expreſt
In our Condition.

Poe. Nay Sir,but heare me on:
All thoſe which were his Fellowes but of late,
Some better then his valew;on the moment
Follow his ſtrides,his Lobbies fill with tendance,
Raine Sacrificiall whiſperings in his eare,
Make Sacred even his ſtyrrop,and through him
Drinke the free Ayre.

Pai. I marry,what of theſe?

Boe. When fortune in her ſhift and change of mood
Spurnes downe her late beloved;all his Dependants
Which labour'd after him to the Mountaines top,
Even on their knees and hands,let him ſit downe,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pai. Tis common:
A thouſand morall Paintings I can ſhew,
That ſhall demonſtrate theſe quicke blowes of Fortune,
More pregnantly then words. Yet you do well,
To ſhew Lord Timon,that meane eyes have ſeene
The foot above the head.

Trumpets ſound.

Enter Lord Timon,addreſsing himſelfe curteouſly to every Suitor.

Tim. Impriſon'd is he,ſay you?

Meſ. I my good Lord,five Talents is his debt,
His meanes moſt ſhort,his Creditors moſt ſtraite:
Your Honourable Letter he deſires
To thoſe have ſhut him up,which failing to him,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius well:
I am not of that Feather,to ſhake off
My Friend when he muſt neede me. I do know him
A Gentleman,that well deſerves a helpe,
Which he ſhall have. Ile pay the debt,and free him.

Meſ. Your Lorſhip ever bindes him.

Tim. Commend me to him,I will ſend his ranſome,
And being enfranchized bid him come to me;
Tis not enough to helpe the Feeble up,
But to ſupport him after. Fare you well.

Meſ. All happineſſe to your Honor. Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Oldm. Lord Timon,heare me ſpeake.

Tim. Freely good Father.

Old. Thou haſt a Servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have ſo:What of him?

Old. Moſt Noble Timon,call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he heere,or no? Lucilius.

Luc. Heere at your Lordſhips ſervice.

Old. This Fellow heere,L. Timon, this thy Creature,
By night frequents my houſe. I am a man
That from my firſt have beene inclin'd to thrift,
And my eſtate deſerves an Heyre more rais'd,
Then one which holds a Trencher.

Tim. Well:what further?

Old. One onely Daughter have I,no Kin elſe,
On whom I may conferre what I have got:
The Maid is faire,a'th'youngeſt for a Bride,
And I have bred her at my deereſt coſt
In Qualities of the beſt. This man of thine
Attempts her love:I prythee(Noble Lord)
Ioyne with me to forbid him her reſort,
My ſelfe have ſpoke in vaine.

Tim. The man is honeſt.

Old. Therefore he will be Timon,
His honeſty rewards him in it ſelfe,
It muſt not beare my Daughter.

Tim. Does ſhe love him?

Old. She is young and apt:
Our owne precedent paſſions do inſtruct us
What levities in youth.

Tim. Love you the Maid?

Luc. I my good Lord,and ſhe accepts of it.

Old. If in her Marriage my conſent be miſſing,
I call the Gods to witneſſe,I will choſe
Mine heyre from forth the Beggers of the world,
And diſpoſſeſſe her all.

Tim. How ſhall ſhe be endowed,
If ſhe be mated with an equall Husband?

Old. Three Talents on the preſent;in future,all.

Tim. This Gentleman of mine
Hath ſerv'd me long:
To build his Fortune,I will ſtraine a little,
For tis a Bond in men. Give him thy Daughter,
What you beſtow,in him Ile counterpoize,
And make him weigh with her.

Old. Moſt Noble Lord,
Pawne me to this your Honour,ſhe is his.

Tim. My hand to thee,
Mine Honour on my promiſe.

Luc. Humbly I thanke your Lordſhip,never may
That ſtate or Fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owed to you. Exit.

Poe. Vouchſafe my Labour.
And long live your Lordſhip.

Tim. I thanke you,you ſhall heare from me anon:
Go not away. What have you there,my Friend?

Pai. A peece of Painting, which I do beſeech
Your Lordſhip to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.
The Painting is almoſt the Naturall man:
For ſince Diſhonor Traffickes with mans Nature,
He is but out-ſide: The Penſil'd Figures are
Even ſuch as they give out, I like your worke,
And you ſhall finde I like it; Waite attendance
Till you heare further from me.

Pai. The Gods preſerve ye.

Tim. Well fare you Gentleman:give me your hand.
We muſt needs dine together:ſir your Iewell
Hath ſuffered under praiſe.

Iew. What my Lord,diſpraiſe?

Tim. A meere ſaciety of Commendations,
If I ſhould pay you for't as tis extold,
It would unclew me quite.

Iew. My Lord,tis rated
As thoſe which ſell would give:but you well know,
Things of like valew differing in the Owners,
Are prized by their Maiſters. Beleev't deere Lord,
You mend the Iewell by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd. Enter Apermantus.

Mer. No my good Lord,he ſpeakes the common toong
Which all men ſpeake with him.

Tim. Looke who comes heere,will you be chid?

Iew. Wee'l I beare with your Lordſhip.

Mer. Hee'l ſpare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee,
Gentle Apermantus.

Aper

Ape. Till I be gentle, ſtay thou for thy good morrow.
When thou art Timons dogge, and theſe Knaves honeſt.

Tim. Why doſt thou call them Knaves, thou knowſt them not?

Ape. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Ape. Then I repent not.

Iew. You know me, Apemantus?

Ape. Thou knowſt I doe, I call'd thee by thy name:

Tim. Thou art proud Apemantus?

Ape. Of nothing ſo much, as that I am not like Timon.

Tim. Whether art going?

Ape. To knocke out an honeſt Athenians braines.

Tim. That's a deed thou't dye for.

Ape. Right, if doing nothing be death by th'Law.

Tim. How lik'ſt thou this picture Apemantus?

Ape. The beſt, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it:

Ape. He wrought better that made the Painter, and yet he's but a filthy peece of worke.

Pain. Y'are a Dogge.

Ape. Thy Mothers of my generation: whats ſhe, if I be a Dogge?

Tim. Wilt dine with me Apemantus?

Ape. No: I eate not Lords.

Tim. And thou ſhouldſt, thoud'ſt anger Ladies.

Ape. O they eate Lords;
So they come by great bellies.

Tim. That's a laſcivious apprehenſion.

Ape. So. thou apprehendſt it.
Take it for thy labour.

Tim. How doſt thou like this Iewell, Apemantus.

Ape. Not ſo well as plain-dealing, which will not caſt a man a Doit,

Tim. What doſt thou thinke tis worth?

Ape. Not worth my thinking.
How now Poet?

Poet. How now Philoſopher?

Ape. Thou lyeſt.

Poet. Art not one?

Ape. Yes.

Poet. Then I lye not.

Ape. Art not a Poet?

Poet. Yes.

Ape. Then thou lyeſt:
Looke in thy laſt worke, where thou haſt feign'd him a worthy Fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd, he is ſo.

Ape. Yes he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour. He that loves to be flattered, is worthy o'th flatterer. Heavens, that I were a Lord.

Tim. What wouldſt doe then Apemantus?

Ape. E'ne as Apemantus does now, hate a Lord with my heart.

Tim. What thy ſelfe?

Ape. I.

Tim. Wherefore?

Ape. That I had no angry wit to be a Lord.
Are not thou a Merchant?

Mer. I Apemantus.

Ape. Trafficke confound thee, if the gods will not:

Mer. If Trafficke doe it, the gods doe it.

Ape. Traffickes thy god, and thy god confound thee.

Trumpet ſounds. Enter a Meſſenger.

Tim. What Trumpets that?

Meſ. Tis Alcibiades, and ſome twenty horſe
All of Companionſhip.

Tim. Pray entertaine them, give them guide to us.
You muſt needs dine with me: goe not you hence
Till I have thankt you: and when dinners done
Shew me this peece, I am joyfull of your ſights.

Enter Alcibiades with the reſt.

Moſt welcome Sir.

Ape. So, ſo; their Aches contract, and ſterue your ſupple joynts: that there ſhould be ſmall love amongeſt theſe ſweet Knaves, and all this Curteſie. The ſtraine of mans bred out into Baboon and Monkey.

Alci. Sir, you have ſav'd my longing, and I feed
Moſt hungerly on your ſight.

Tim. Right welcome Sir.
Ere we depart, we'll ſhare a bounteous time
In different pleaſures.
Pray you let us in. Exeunt.

Enter two Lords.

1 Lord. What time a day is't Apemantus.

Ape. Time to be honeſt.

1 That time ſerves ſtill.

Ape. The moſt accurſed thou that ſtill omitſt it.

2 Thou art going to Lord Timons Feaſt.

Ape. I, to ſee meate fill Knaves, and Wine heat fooles,

2. Farthee well, farthee well.

Ape. Thou art a Foole to bid me farewell twice.

2 Why Apemantus?

Ape. Shouldſt have kept one to thy ſelfe, for I meane to give thee none.

1 Hang thy ſelfe.

Ape. No I will doe nothing at thy bidding:
Make thy requeſts to thy Friend.

2 Away unpeaceable Dogge,
Or Ile ſpurne thee hence.

Ape. I will flye like a dogge, the heeles a'th'Aſſe.

1 He's oppoſite to humanity.
Come ſhall we in,
And taſte Lord Timons bounty: he out goes
The very heart of kindneſſe.

2 He powres it out: Plutus the god of gold
Is but his Steward; no meede but he repayes
Seven-fold above it ſelfe: No guift to him,
But breeds the giver a returne: exceeding
All uſe of quittance.

1 The Nobleſt minde he carries.
That ever govern'd man.

2 Long may he live in Fortunes. Shall we in?
Ile keepe you Company. Exeunt.

Hoboyes Playing lowd Muſicke.

A great Banquet ſerv'd in: and then, Enter Lord Timon, the States, the Athenian Lords, Ventigius which Timon redeemd from priſon. Then comes dropping after all Apemantus diſcontentedly like himſelfe.

Ventig. Moſt honoured Timon,
It hath pleas'd the gods to remember my fathers age,
And call him to long peace:
He is gone happy, and has left me rich:
Then, as in gratefull Vertue I am bound
To your free heart, I doe returne thoſe Talents
Doubled with thankes and ſervice, from whoſe helpe
I deriu'd liberty.

Tim O by no meanes,
Honeſt Ventigius: you miſtake my love,

I gave it freely ever, and there's none
Can truely ſay he gives, if he receives:
If our betters play at that game, we muſt not dare
To imitate them. faults that are rich are faire.

Vint. A Noble ſpirit.

Tim. Nay my Lords, Ceremony was but deviſ'd at firſt
To ſet a gloſſe on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodneſſe, ſorry ere tis ſhowne:
But where there is true friendſhip, there needs none.
Pray ſit, more welcome are ye to my Fortunes,
Then my Fortunes to me.

1 Lord. My Lord, we alwayes have confeſt it.

Ape. Ho ho, confeſt it? hang'd it? have you not?

Tim. O Apermantus, you are welcome.

Ape. No: you ſhall not make me welcome.
I come to have thee thruſt me out of doores.

Tim. Fye, th'art a churle, ye have got a humour there
Does not become a man, tis much too blame:
They ſay my Lords, Ira furor breuis eſt,
But yond man is very angry.
Goe, let him have a Table by himſelfe:
For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for't indeed.

Ape. Let me ſtay at thine apperill Timon,
I come to obſerve, I give thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heede of thee; Th'art an Athenian, therefore welcome: I my ſelfe would have no power, prethee let my meate make thee ſilent.

Aper. I ſcorne thy meate, twould choake me: for I ſhould nere flatter thee. Oh you Gods! What a number of men eates Timon, and he ſees em not? It grieves me to ſee ſo many dip there meate in one mans blood, and all the madneſſe is, he cheeres them up too.
I wonder men dare truſt themſelves with men.
Me thinkes they ſhould invite them without knives,
Good for their meate, and ſafer for their lives.
Theres much example for't, the fellow that ſits next him now parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a divided draught: is the readieſt man to kill him. Tas beene proved, if I were a huge man I ſhould feare to drinke at meales, leaſt they ſhould ſpye my wind-pipes dangerous noates, great men ſhould drinke with harneſſe on their throats.

Tim. My Lord in heart: and let the health goe round.

2 Lord. Let it flow this way my good Lord.

Aper. Flow this way? A brave fellow. He keepes his tides well, thoſe healths will make thee and thy ſtate looke ill, Timon.
Heeres: that which is too weake to be a ſinner,
Honeſt water, which nere left man i'th'mird:
This and my food are equall, theres no ods,
Feaſts are to proud to give thankes to the gods.

Apermantus Grace.

Immortall gods, I crave no pelfe,
I pray for no man but my ſelfe,
Grant I may never prove ſo fond,
To truſt man on his Oath or Bond.
Or a Harlot for her weeping.
Or a Dogge that ſeemes aſleeping,
Or a keeper with my freedome,
Or my friends if I ſhould need em.
Amen. So fall too't:
Richmen ſin, and I eat root.

Much good dich thy good heart, Apermantus.

Tim. Captaine, Alcibiades, your hearts in the field now.

Alci. My heart is ever at your ſervice, my Lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakefaſt of Enemies, then a dinner of Friends.

Alci. So they were bleeding new my Lord, theres no meat like em, I could wiſh my friend at ſuch a Feaſt.

Aper. Would all thoſe flatterers were thine Enemies then, that then thou mightſt kill em: and bid me to em.

1 Lord. Might we but have that happineſſe my Lord, that you would once uſe our hearts, whereby we might expreſſe ſome part of our zeales, we ſhould thinke our ſelves for ever perfect.

Tim. Oh no doubt my good Friends, but the gods themſelves have provided that I ſhall have much helpe from you: how had you beene my Friends elſe. Why have you that charitable title from thouſands? Did not you chiefely belong to my heart? I have told more of you to my ſelfe, then you can with modeſty ſpeake in your owne behalfe. And thus farre I confirme you. Oh you gods (thinke I) what need we have any Friends; if we ſhould nere have neede of em? They were the moſt needleſſe Creatures living; ſhould we nere have uſe for em? And would moſt reſemble ſweet Inſtruments hung up in Caſes, that keepe their ſounds to themſelves. Why I have often wiſht my ſelfe poorer, that I might come neerer to you: we are borne to doe benefits. And what better or properer can we call our owne, then the riches of our Friends? Oh what a pretious comfort tis to have ſo many like Brothers commanding one anothers Fortunes. Oh joyes, e'ne made away er't can be borne, mine eyes cannot hold out watter me thinkes to forget their faults. I drinke to you,

Aper. Thou weep'ſt to made them drinke Timon.

2 Lord. Ioy had the like conception in our eyes,
And at that inſtant, like a babe ſprung up.

Aper. Ho, ho: I laugh to thinke that babe a baſtard.

3 Lord. I promiſe you my Lord you mov'd me much.

Aper. Much.

Sound Tucket. Enter the Maskers of Amazons with Lutes in their hands, dancing and playing.

Tim. What meanes that Trumpe? How now?

Enter Servant.

Ser. Pleaſe you my Lord, there are certaine Ladies
Moſt deſirovs of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? what are their wills?

Ser. There comes with them a ſore-runner my Lord, which beares that office, to ſignifie their pleaſures.

Tim. I pray let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid with the Maske of Ladies.

Cup. Haile to thee worthy Timon and to all that of his Baunties taſte: the fiue beſt Sences acknowledge thee their Patron, and come freely to gratulate thy plenteous boſome.
There taſte, touch all, pleaſ'd from thy Table riſe:
They onely now come but to Feaſt thine eyes.

Timo. Their welcome all, let em have kind admittance. Muſicke make their welcome.

Luc. You ſee my Lord, how ample ye are belov'd.

Aper. Hoyday,
What a ſweepe of vanity comes this way.
They daunce? They are madwomen.

Like Madneſſe is the glory of this life,
As this pompe ſhewes to a little oyle and roote.
We make our ſelves fooles, to diſport our ſelves,
And ſpend our Flatteries, to drinke thoſe men,
Vpon whoſe Age we voyde it up agen
With poyſonous Spight and Envy.
Who lives, that's not depraved, or depraves;
Who dyes, that beares not one ſpurne to their graves
Of their friends gift:
I ſhould feare, thoſe that dance before me now,
Would one day ſtampe upon me: Tas beene done,
Men ſhut their doores againſt a ſetting Sunne.

The Lords riſe from Table, with much adoring of Timon, and to ſhew their loves, each ſingle out an Amazon, and all Dance, men with women, a lofty ſtraine or two to the Hoboyes, and ceaſe.

Tim. You have done our pleaſures
Much grace (faire Ladies)
Sets a faire faſhion on our entertainment,
Which was not halfe ſo beautifull, and kind:
You have added worth untoo't, and lively luſter,
And entertain'd me with mine owne device.
I am to thanke you for't.
1 Lord. My Lord you take us even at the beſt.
Ape. Faith for the worſt is filthy, and would not hold taking, I doubt me.
Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends you.
Pleaſe you to diſpoſe your ſelves.
All La. Moſt thankfully, my Lord. Exeunt.
Tim. Flavius,
Fla. My Lord.
Tim. The little Casket, bring me hither.
Fla. Yes, my Lord. More Iewels yet?
There is no croſſing him in's humour,
Elſe I ſhould tell him well, ifaith I ſhould;
When alls ſpent, he'ld be croſt then, and he could:
Tis pitty Bounty had not eyes behind,
That man might ne're be wretched for his mind.
1 Lord. Where be our men?
Ser. Heere my Lord in readineſſe,
2 Lord, Our horſes.
Tim. O my Friends;
I have one word to ſay to you: Looke you, my good L.
I muſt intreat you honour me ſo much.
As to advance this Iewell, accept, and weare it,
Kind my Lord.
1 Lord. I am ſo farre already in your guifts.
All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. My Lord, there are certaine Nobles of the Senate newly alighted, and come to viſit you.
Tim. They are fairely welcome,

Enter Flavius.

Fla. I beſeech your Honor, vouchſafe me a word, it does concerne you neere.
Tim. Neere? why then another time Ile heare thee.
I prethee let's be provided to ſhew them entertainment.
Fla. I ſcarſe know how.

Enter another Servant.

Ser. May it pleaſe your honor, Lord Lucius
(Out of his free love) hath preſented to you
Foure Milke-white Horſes, trapt in Silver.
Tim. I ſhall accept them fairely: let the Preſents
Be worthily entertain'd.

Enter a third Servant.

How now? What newes?
3 Ser. Pleaſe you my Lord, that honourable Gentleman Lord Lucullus, entreats your company to morrow, to hunt with him, and ha's ſent your Honour two brace of Grey-hounds.
Tim. Ile hunt with him.
And let them be received, not without faire Reward.
Fla. What will this come to?
He commands us to provide, and give great guifts, and all out of an empty Coffer:
Nor will he know his purſe, or yeeld me this,
To ſhew him what a Begger his heart is,
Being of no power to make his wiſhes good,
His promiſes flye ſo beyond his ſtate,
That what he ſpeakes is all in debt, owes for ev'ry word:
He is ſo kind, that he now payes intereſt for't;
His Lands put to their Bookes. Well, would I were Gently put out of Office, ere I were forc'd:
Happier is he that has no friend to feede,
Then ſuch that doe e'ne Enemies exceede.
I bleed inwardly for my Lord. Exit.
Tim. You doe your ſelves much wrong,
You bate too much of your owne merits.
Heere my Lord, a trifle of our Love.
2 Lord. With more then common thankes
I will receive it.
3 Lord. O has the very ſoule of Bounty.
Tim. And now I remember my Lord, you gave good words the other day of a Bay Courſer I rod on. Tis yours becauſe you lik'd it.
1 L. Oh, I beſeech you pardon me, my Lord, in that.
Tim. You may take my word my Lord: I know no man can juſtly praiſe, but what he does affect. I weigh my friends affection with mine owne? Ile tell you true, Ile call to you.
All Lor. O none ſo welcome.
Tim. I take all, and your ſeverall viſitations
So kind to heart, tis not enough to give:
Me thinkes, I could deale Kingdomes to my friends,
And nere be weary. Alcibiades,
Thou art a Souldier, therefore ſildome rich,
It comes in Charity to thee; for all thy living
Is mong'ſt the dead: and all the Lands thou haſt
Lye in a pitcht field.
Alci. I defie Land, my Lord.
1 Lord. We are ſo vertuouſly bound.
Tim. And ſo am I to you.
2 Lord. So infinitely endeer'd.
Tim. All to you. Lights, more Lights, more Light.
1 Lord. The beſt of Happines, Honor, and Fortunes
Keepe with you Lord Timon.
Tim. Ready for his Friends. Exeunt Lords.
Aper. What a coiles heere, ſerving of beckes, and jutting out of bummes. I doubt whether their Legges be worth the ſummes that are given for 'em.
Friendſhips full of dregges,
Me thinkes falſe hearts, ſhould never have ſound legges.
Thus honeſt Fooles lay out their wealth on Curtſies
Tim. Now Apermantus (if thou wert not ſullen)
I would be good to thee.
Aper. No, Ile nothing; for if I ſhould be brib'd too, there would be none left to raile upon thee, and then thou wouldſt ſinne the faſter. Thou giv'ſt ſo long Timon (I feare me) thou wilt give away thy ſelfe in paper ſhortly. What neede theſe Feaſts, pompes, and Vaine-glories?

Tim. Nay, and you begin to raile on Society once, I am ſworne not to give regard to you. Farewell, and come with better Muſicke. Exit.

Aper. So: thou wilt not heare me now, thou ſhalt not then. Ile locke thy heaven from thee:
Oh that mens eares ſhould be
To Counſell deafe, but not to Flattery. Exit.

Enter a Senator.

Sen. And late five thouſand: to Varro and to Iſidore
He owes nine thouſand, beſides my former ſumme,
Which makes it five and twenty. Still in motion
Of raging waſte? It cannot hold, it will not.
If I want Gold, ſteale but a beggers Dogge,
And give it Timon, why the Dogge coynes Gold.
If I would ſell my horſe, and buy twenty more
Better then he; why give my horſe to Timon.
Aske nothing, give it him, it Foles me ſtraight
And able Horſes: No Porter at his gate,
But rather one that ſmiles, and ſtill invites
All that paſſe by. It cannot hold, no reaſon
Can ſound his ſtate in ſafety. Caphis hoa,
Caphis I ſay.

Enter Caphis.

Caph. Heere ſir, what is your pleaſure.

Sen. Get on your cloake, and haſt you to Lord Timon
Importune him for my Moneyes, be not ceaſt
With ſlight deniall; nor then ſilenc'd, then
Commend me to your Maſter, and the Cap
Playes in the right hand, thus: but tell him ſirrah
My uſes cry to me; I muſt ſerve my turne
Out of mine owne, his dayes and times are paſt,
And my reliances on his fracted dates
Have ſmit my credit. I love, and honour him,
But muſt not breake my backe, to heale his finger.
Immediate are my needs, and my releife
Muſt not be toſt and turn'd to me in words,
But find ſupply immediate. Get you gone,
Put on a moſt importunate aſpect,
A viſage of demand: for I doe feare
When every Feather ſtickes in his owne wing,
Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
Which flaſhes now a Phœnix, get you gone.

Ca. I goe ſir.

Sen. I goe ſir?
Take the Bonds along with you,
And have the dates in. Come.

Ca. I will Sir.

Sen. Goe. Exeunt.

Enter Steward, with many billes in his hand.

Stew. No care, no ſtop, ſo ſenſeleſſe of expence,
That he will neither know how to maintaine it,
Nor ceaſe his flow of Riot. Takes no accompt
How things goe from him, nor reſume no care
Of what is to continve: never mind
Was to be ſo unwiſe, to be ſo kind.
What ſhall be done, he will not here, till feele:
I muſt be round with him, now he comes from hunting.
Fie, fie, fie, fie.

Enter Caphis, Iſidore, and Varro.

Cap. Good even Varro: what, you come for money?

Var. Is't not your buſineſſe too?

Cap. It is, and yours too, Iſidore?

Iſid. It is ſo.

Cap. Would we were all diſcharg'd.

Var. I feare it,

Cap. Heere comes the Lord.

Enter Timon, and his Traine.

Tim. So ſoone as dinners done, we'll forth againe
My Alcibiades. With me, what is your will?

Cap. My Lord, heere is a note of certaine dues.

Tim. Dues? whence are you?

Cap. Of Athens heere: my Lord.

Tim. Goe to my Steward.

Cap. Pleaſe it your Lordſhip, he hath put me off
To the ſucceſſion of new dayes this moneth:
My Maſter is awak'd by great Occaſion,
To call upon his owne, and humbly prayes you,
That with your other Noble parts, you'll ſuite,
In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honeſt Friend,
I prethee but repaire to me next morning.

Cap. Nay good my Lord.

Tim. Containe thy ſelfe, good friend.

Var. One Varroes ſervant, my good Lord.

Iſid. From Iſidore, he humbly prayes your ſpeedy payment,

Cap. If you did know my Lord, my Naſters wants.

Var. Twas due on forfeyture my Lord, ſixe weekes, and paſt.

Iſid. Your Steward puts me off my Lord, and I
Am ſent expreſſely to your Lordſhip.

Tim. Give me breath:
I doe beſeech you good my Lords keepe on,
Ile waite upon you inſtantly. Come hither: pray you
How goes the world, that I am thus encountred
With clamorous demands of debt, broken Bonds,
And the detention long ſince due debts
Againſt my Honor?

Stew. Pleaſe you Gentlemen,
The time is unagreeable to this buſineſſe:
Your importunacy ceaſe, till after dinner,
That I may make his Lordſhip underſtand
Wherefore you'are not paid.

Tim. Doe ſo my Friends, ſee them well entertain'd.

Stew. Pray draw neere. Exit.

Enter Apemantus and Foole.

Caph. Stay, ſtay, here comes the Foole with Apemantus, lets ha ſome ſport with em.

Var. Hang him, he'll abuſe us.

Iſid. A plague upon him dogge.

Var, How doſt Foole?

Ape. Doſt Dialogue with thy ſhadow?

Var. I ſpeake not to thee.

Ape. No tis to thy ſelfe. Come away.

Iſid. Theres the Foole hangs on your backe already.

Ape. No thou ſtandſt ſingle, thou art not on him yet

Cap. Wheres the foole now?

Ape. He laſt ask'd the queſtion. Poore Rogues and Vſurers men, Bauds betweene Gold and want.

All. What are we Apemantus?

Ape. Aſſes.

All. Why?

Ape. That you aske me what you are, and doe not know your ſelves. Speake to em foole.

Foole. How doe you Gentlemen?

All. Gramercies good Foole:
How does your Miſtris?

Foole. She's e'ne ſetting on water to ſcal'd ſuch Chickens as you are. Would we could ſee you at Corinth.

Ape. Good, Gramercy.

Enter Page.

Foole. Looke you, heere comes my Maſters Page.

Page. Why how now Captaine? what doe you in this wiſe company.
How doſt thou Apermantus?

Ape. Would I had a Rod in my mouth, that I might anſwer thee profitably.

Boy. Prethee Apermantus reade me the ſuperſcription of theſe Letters, I know not which is which.

Ape. Canſt not read?

Page. No.

Ape. There will little Learning dye then that day thou art hang'd. This is to Lord Timon, this to Alcibiades. Go thou was't borne a Baſtard, and thou't dye a Bawd.

Page. Thou was't whelpt a Dogge, and thou ſhalt famiſh a Dogges death.
Anſwer not, I am gone. Exit.

Ape. E'ne ſo thou out-runſt grace,
Foole I will goe with you to Lord Timons.

Foole. Will you leave me there?

Ape. If Timon ſtay at home.
You three ſerve three Vſurers?

All. I would they ſerv'd us.

Aper. So would I:
As good a tricke as ever Hangman ſerv'd theefe.

Foole. Are you three Vſuers men?

All. I foole

Foole. I thinke no Vſurer, but has a foole to his Servant. My Miſtris is one, and I am her foole: when men come to borrow of your Maſters, they approach ſadly, and goe away merry: but they enter my Maſters houſe merrily, and goe away ſadly. The reaſon of this?

Var. I could render one.

Ape. Doe it then, that we may account thee a Whoremaſter, and a Knave, which notwithſtanding thou ſhalt be no leſſe eſteemed.

Var. What is a Whoremaſter foole?

Foole. A foole in good cloathes, and ſomething like thee. Tis a ſpirit, ſometime t'appeares like a Lord, ſomtime like a Lawyer, ſometime like a Philoſopher, with two ſtones more then's artificiall one. He is very often like a Knight; and generally, in all ſhapes that man goes up and downe in, from fourescore to thirteen, this ſpirit walkes in.

Var. Thou art not altogether a foole.

Foole. Nor thou altogether a Wiſe man,
As much foolery as I have, ſo much wit thou lack'ſt.

Ape. That anſwer might have become Apemantus.

All. Aſide, aſide, here comes Lord Timon.

Enter Timon, and Steward.

Ape. Come with me (foole) come.

Foole. I doe not alwayes follow Lover, elder Brother, and Woman, ſometime the Philoſopher.

Stew. Pray you walke neere,
Ile ſpeake with you anon. Exeunt.

Tim. You make me mervell wherefore ere this time
Had you not fully laid my ſtate before me,
That I might ſo have rated my expence
As I had leave of meanes.

Stew. You would not heare me:
At many leyſures I propoſ'd.

Tim. Goe to:
Perchance ſome ſingle vantages you tooke,
When my indiſpoſition put you backe,
And that unaptneſſe made you miniſter
Thus to excuſe your ſelfe.

Stew. O my good Lord,
At many times I brought in my accompts,
Laid them before you, you would throw them off,
And ſay you found them in mine honeſty,
When for ſome trifling preſent you have bid me
Returne ſo much, I have ſhooke my head, and wept:
Yea gainſt th'Authority of manners, pray'd you
To hold your hand more cloſe: I did indure
Not ſildome, nor no ſlight checkes, when I have Prompted you in the ebbe of your eſtate,
And your great flow of debts; my deare lov'd Lord,
Though you here now (too late) yet nowes a time,
The greateſt of you having, lackes a halfe,
To pay your preſent debts.

Tim. Let all my Land be ſold.

Stew. Tis all engag'd, ſome forfeyted and gone,
And what remaines will hardly ſtop the mouth
Of preſent dues; the future comes apace:
What ſhall defend the interim, and at length
How goes our reck'ning?

Tim. To Lacedemon did my Land extend.

Stew. O my good Lord, the world is but a world,
Were it all yours, to give it in a breath,
How quickly were it gone.

Tim. You tell me true.

Stew. If you ſuſpect my Husbandry or Falſhood,
Call me before the exacteſt Auditors,
And ſet me on the proofe. So the gods bleſſe me,
When all our Offices have beene oppreſt
With riotous Feeders, when our Vaults have wept
With drunken ſpilth of Wine; when every roome
Hath blaz'd with Lights, and braid with Minſtrelſie,
I have retyr'd me to a waſtefull cocke,
And ſet mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prethee no more.

Stew. Heavens have I ſaid, the bounty of this Lord!
How many prodigall bits have Slaves and Pezants
This night englutted: who is not Timons,
What heart, head, ſword, force, meanes, but is L. Timons:
Great Timon, Noble, Worthy, Royall Timons:
Ah, when the meanes are gone, that buy this praiſe,
The breath is gone, whereof this praiſe is made:
Feaſt won, faſt loſt; one cloud of Winter ſhowres,
Theſe flyes are coucht.

Tim. Come ſermon me no further.
No villainous bounty yet hath paſt my heart;
Vnwiſely, not ignobly have I given.
Why doſt thou weepe, canſt thou the conſcience lacke,
To thinke I ſhall lacke friends: ſecure thy heart,
If I would broach the veſſels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts, by borrowing,
Men, and mens fortunes could I frankely uſe
As I can bid thee ſpeake.

Stew. Aſſurance bleſſe your thoughts,

Tim. And in ſome ſort theſe wants of mine are crown'd
That I account them bleſſings. For by theſe
Shall I try friends. You ſhall perceive
How you miſtake my fortunes:
I am wealthy in my friends.
Within there, Flavius, Servilius?

Enter three Servants.

Ser. My Lord, my Lord.

Tim. I will diſpatch you ſeverally.
You to Lord Lucius, to Lord Lucullus you, I hunted with his Honor to day; you to Sempronius; commend me to their loves, and I am proud ſay, that my occaſions have found time to uſe 'em toward a ſupply of mony: let the requeſt be fifty Talents.

Flam, As you have ſaid, my Lord.

Stew. Lord Lucius and Lucullus? Humh.

Tim. Goe you ſir to the Senators;
Of whom. even to the States beſt health? I have
Deſerv'd this hearing; bid 'em ſend o'th'inſtant
A thouſaud Talents to me.

Stew. I have beene bold
(For that I knew it the moſt generall way)
To them, to uſe your Signet, and your Name,
But they doe ſhake their heads, and I am heere
No richer in returne.

Tim. Is't true? Can't be?

Stew. They anſwer in a joynt and corporate voyce,
That now they are at fall, want Treaſure, cannot
Doe what they would, are ſorry: you are Honourable,
But yet they could have wiſht, they know not,
Something hath beene amiſſe; a Noble Nature
May catch a wrench; would all were well; tis pitty,
And ſo intending other ſerious matters,
After diſtaſtefull lookes; and theſe hard Fractions
With certaine halfe-caps, and cold moving nods,
They froze me into Silence.

Tim. You gods reward them:
Prythee man looke cheerely. Theſe old Fellowes
Have their ingratitude in them Hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd, tis cold, it ſeldome flowes,
Tis lacke of kindly warmth, they are not kind;
And Nature, as it growes againe toward earth,
Is faſhion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.
Goe to Ventidius (prythee be not ſad,
Thou art true, and honeſt; ingeniouſly I ſpeake,
No blame belongs to thee:) Ventidius lately
Buried his Father, by whoſe death he's ſtepp'd
Into a great eſtate: when he was poore,
Impriſon'd, and in ſcarſity of Friends,
I cleer'd him with five Talents: Greet him from me,
Bid him ſuppoſe, ſome good neceſſity
Touches his Friend, which craves to be remembred
With thoſe five Talents; that had, give't theſe Fellowes
To whom tis inſtant due. Neu'r ſpeake, or thinke,
That Timons fortunes 'mong his friends can ſinke.

Stew. I would I could not thinke it:
That thought is Bounties Foe?
Being free it ſelfe, it thinkes all others ſo. Exeunt.

Flaminius waiting to ſpeake with a Lord from his Maſter, enters a ſervant to him.

Ser. I have told my Lord of you, he is comming downe to yon.

Flam: I thanke you Sir.

Enter Lucullus.

Ser. Heres my Lord.

Luc. One of Lord Timons men? A Gift I warrant. Why this hits right: I dreampt of a Silver Baſon and Ewre to night. Flaminius, honeſt Flaminius, you are very reſpectively welcome ſir. Fill me ſome Wine. And how does that honourable, Compleate, Free-hearted Gentleman of Athens, thy very bountifull good Lord and Maſter?

Flam. His health is well ſir.

Luc. I am right glad that his health is well ſir: and what haſt thou there under thy Cloake, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box Sir, which in my Lords behalfe; I come to intreat your honor to ſupply: who having great and inſtant occaſion to uſe fifty Talents, hath ſent to your Lordſhip to furniſh him: nothing doubting your preſent aſſiſtance therein.

Luc. La, la, la, la: Nothing doubting ſayes he? Alas good Lord, a Noble Gentleman tis, if he would not keepe ſo good a houſe. Many a time and often I ha din'd with him, and told him on't, and come againe to ſupper to him of purpoſe, to have him ſpend leſſe, and yet he would embrace no counſell, take no warning by my comming, every man has his fault, and honeſty is his. I ha told him on't, hut I could nere get him from't.

Enter Servant, with Wine.

Ser. Pleaſe your Lordſhip, here is the Wine.

Luc. Flaminius, I have noted thee alwayes wiſe. Heres to thee.

Flam. Your Lordſhip ſpeakes your pleaſure,

Luci. I have obſerved thee alwayes for a towardly prompt ſpirit, give thee thy due, and one that knowes what belongs to reaſon; and canſt uſe the time well, if the time uſe thee well. Good parts in thee; get you gone ſirrah. Draw neerer honeſt Flaminius. Thy Lords a bountifull Gentleman, but thou art wiſe, and thou knowſt well enough (although thou com'ſt to me) that this is no time to lend money, eſpecially upon bare friendſhip without ſecurity. Heres three Solidares for thee, good Boy winke at me, and ſay thou ſaw'ſt me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't poſſible the world ſhould ſo much differ,
And we alive that lived? Fly damned baſeneſſe
To him that worſhips thee.

Luc. Ha? Now I ſee thou art a Foole, and fit for thy Maſter. Exit Lucullus.

Fla. May theſe adde to the number that may ſcald thee:
Let multen Coyne be thy damnation,
Thou diſeaſe of a friend, and not himſelfe:
Has friendſhip ſuch a faint and milky heart,
It turnes in leſſe then two nights? O you gods!
I feele my Maſters paſſion. This Slave unto his honor,
Has my Lords meate in him:
Why ſhould it thrive, and turne to Nutriment,
When he is turn'd to poyſon?
O may Diſeaſes onely worke upon't:
And when he's ſicke to death, let not that part of Nature
Which my Lord paid for, be of any powre,
To expell ſickneſſe, but prolong his hower. Exit.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who the Lord Timon? He is my very good friend and an honourable Gentleman.

1 We know him for no leſſe, though we are but ſtrangers to him. But I can tell you one thing my Lord, and which I heare from common rumours, now Lord Timons happy howres are done and paſt, and his eſtate ſhrinkes from him.

Luc. Fye no, doe not beleeve it; be cannot want for money.

2 But beleeve you this my Lord, that not long agoe, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus, to borrow ſo many Talents, nay urg'd extreamely for't, and ſhewed what neceſſity belong'd too't, and yet was deny'de.

Luc. How?

2 I tell you, deny'de my Lord.

Luc. What a ſtrange caſe was that? Now before the gods I am aſham'd on't. Denyed that honourable man? There was very little honour ſhew'd in. For my owne part, I muſt needs confeſſe, I have received ſome ſmall kindneſſes from him, as Money, Plate, Iewels, and ſuch like Trifles; nothing comparing to his: yet had he miſtooke him, and ſent to me, I ſhould ne're have denied his occaſion ſo many Talents.

Enter Servilius.

Servil. See, by good hap yonders my Lord, I have ſwet to ſee his honor. My honor'd Lord.

Luci. Servilius? You are kindly met ſir. Farthewell, commend me to thy honourable vertuous Lord, my very exquiſite Friend.

Servil. May it pleaſe your Honor, my Lord hath ſent

———.

Luci. Ha? what has he ſent? I am ſo much endeered to that Lord; hes ever ſending: how ſhall I thanke him think'ſt thou? And what has he ſent now?

Serv. Has onely ſent his preſent occaſion now my Lord: requeſting your Lordſhip to ſupply his inſtant uſe with ſo many Talents.

Luci. I know his Lordſhip is but merry with me,
He cannot want fifty five hundred Talents,

Servil. But in the meane time he wants leſſe my Lord.
If his occaſion were not vertuous,
I ſhould not urge it halfe ſo faithfully.

Luc. Doſt thou ſpeake ſeriouſly Servilius.

Serv. Vpon my ſoule tis true Sir.

Luc. What a wicked Beaſt was I to disfurniſh my ſelfe againſt ſuch a good time, when I might ha ſhewne my ſelfe honorable? how unluckily it hapned, that I ſhould purchaſe the day before for a little part, and undoe a great deale of honor? Servilius, now before the gods I am not able to doe (the more beaſt I ſay) I was ſending to uſe Lord Timon my ſelfe, theſe gentlemen can witneſſe; but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had don't now Commend me bountifully to his good Lordſhip, and I hope his Honor will conceive the faireſt of me, becauſe I have no power to be kind. And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greateſt afflictions ſay, that I cannot pleaſure ſuch an honorable Gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me ſo farre, as to uſe mine owne words to him?

Serv. Yes ſir, I ſhall. Exit Servilius.

Luci. Ile looke you out a good turne Servilius.
True as you ſaid, Timon is ſhrunke indeed,
And he thats once deny'd, will hardly ſpeed. Exit.

1 Doe you obſerve this Hoſtilius?

2 I, to well.

1 Why this is the worlds ſoule,
And juſt of the ſame peece
Is every Flatterers ſport: who can call him his friend
That dips in the ſame diſh? For in my knowing
Timon has bin this Lords Father,
And kept his credit with his purſe:
Supported his eſtate, nay Timons money
Has paid his men their wages. He ne're drinkes,
But Timons Silver treads upon his Lip,
And yet, oh ſee the monſtrouſneſſe of man,
When he lookes out in an ungratefull ſhape:
He does deny him (in reſpect of his)
What charitable men affoord to Beggers.

3 Religion grones at it.

1 For mine owne part, I never taſted Timon in my life,
Nor came any of his bounties over me,
To marke me for his Friend. Yet I proteſt.
For his right Noble mind, illuſtrious Vertue,
And honourable Carriage,
Had his neceſſity made uſe of me.
I would have put my wealth into Donation,
And the beſt halfe ſhould haue return'd to him,
So mnch I love his heart: But I perceive,
Men muſt learne now with pitty to diſpence.
For policie ſits above Conſcience. Exeunt.

Enter a third ſervant with Sempronius, another of Timons Friends.

Semp. Muſt he needs trouble me in't? Hum.
Bove all others?
He might have tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus,
And now Ventidius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeemd from priſon. All theſe
Owe their eſtates unto him.

Ser. My Lord,
They have all bin touch'd, and all are found Baſe-Mettle,
For they have all denied him.

Semp. How? have they denyde him?
Has Ventidius and Lucullus deny'de him,
And does he ſend to me? Three? Humh?
It ſhewes but little love, or judgement in him.
Muſt I be his laſt Refuge? his friend: (like Phyſitians)
That thriu'd, give him over. Muſt I take th'Cure upon (me?
Has much diſgrac'd me in't, I'me angry at him,
That might have knowne my place. I ſee no ſenſe for't,
But his occaſions might have wooed me firſt:
For in my conſcience, I was the firſt man
That ere received gift from him.
And does he thinke ſo backwardly of me now,
That Ile requite it laſt? No:
So it may prove an Argument of Laughter
To th'reſt, and 'mongſt Lords I be thought a Foole:
Ide rather then the worth of thrice the ſumme,
Had ſent to me firſt, but for my minds ſake:
Ide ſuch a courage to doe him good. But now returne,
And with their faint reply, this anſwer joyne;
Who bates mine honor, ſhall not know my Coyne. Exit.

Ser. Excellent: Your Lorſhips a goodly Villaine. the divell knew not what he did, when he made man Politicke; he croſſed himſelfe by't: and I cannot thinke, but in the end, the villanies of man will ſet him cleere. How fairely this Lord ſtrives to appeare foule? Takes Vertuous Copies to be wicked: like thoſe, that under hot ardent zeale, would ſet whole Realmes on fire, of ſuch a nature is his politike love.
This was my Lords beſt hope, now all are fled
Save onely the gods. Now his friends are dead,
Doores that were ne're acquainted with their Wards
Many a bounteous yeere, muſt be imploy'd
Now to guard ſure their Maſter:
And this is all a liberall courſe allowes,
Who cannot keepe his wealth, muſt keepe his houſe. Ex.

Enter Varro's man, meeting others. All Timons Creditors to wait for his comming out. Then enter Lucius and Hortenſius.

Var.man. Well met, good morrow Titus and Hortenſius

Titus

Tit. The like to you kind Varro.
Hort. Lucius, what doe we meet together?
Luc. I, and I thinke one buſineſſe do's command us all.
For mine is money.
Tit. So is theirs, and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luci. And ſir Philotus too.
Phi. Good day at once.
Luci. Welcome good Brother.
What doe you thinke the houre?
Phil. Labouring for Nine.
Luci. So much?
Phil. Is not my Lord ſeene yet?
Luci. Not yet.
Phil. I wonder on't, he was wont to ſhine at ſeaven.
Luci. I, but the dayes are waxt ſhorter with him:
You muſt conſider, that a Prodigall courſe
Is like the Sunnes, but not like his recoverable, I feare:
Tis deepeſt Winter in Lord Timons purſe, that is: One may reach deepe enough, and yet find little.
Phil. I am of your feare, for that.
Tit. Ile ſhew you how t'obſerve a ſtrange event:
Your Lord ſends now for Money?
Hort. Moſt true, he does.
Tit. And he weares Iewels now of Timons guift,
For which I waite for money.
Hort. It is againſt my heart.
Luci. Marke how ſtrange it ſhowes,
Timon in this, ſhould pay more then he owes:
And e'ne as if your Lord ſhould weare rich Iewels,
Ad ſend for money for 'em.
Hort. I' me weary of this Charge,
The gods can witneſſe:
I know my Lord hath ſpent of Timons wealth,
And now ingratitude, makes it worſe then ſtealth.
Varro. Yes mine's three thouſand Crownes:
Whats yours?
Luci. Five thouſand mine.
Var. Tis much deepe, and it ſhould ſeeme by th'ſum
Your Maſters confidence was above mine,
Elſe ſurely his had equall' d.

Enter Flaminius.

Tit. One of Lord Timons men.
Luc. Flaminius? Sir, a word: Pray is my Lord ready to come forth?
Flam. No, indeed he is not.
Tit. We attend his Lordſhip; pray ſignifie ſo much.
Flam. I need not tell him that, he knowes you are too diligent.

Enter Steward in a Cloake, muffled.

Luci. Ha: is not that his Steward muffled ſo?
He goes away in a Clowd: Call him, call him.
Tit. Doe you heare, ſir?
2 Varro. By your leave, ſir.
Stew. What doe ye aske of me, my friend.
Tit. We waite for certaine Money heere, ſir.
Stew. I, if Money were as certaine as your waiting,
Twere ſure enough.
Why then preferr'd you not your ſummes and Billes
When your falſe Maſters eate of my Lords meat?
Then they would ſmile and fawne upon his debts,
And take downe th'intreſt into their glutt'nous Mawes.
You doe your ſelves but wrong, to ſtirre me up,
Let me paſſe quietly:
Beleeve't, my Lord and I have made an end,
I have no more to reckon, he to ſpend.
Luci. I, but this anſwer will not ſerve.
Stew. Iſt twill not ſerve, tis not ſo baſe as you,
For you ſerve Knaves.
1 Varro. How? what does his caſheer'd Worſhip mutter?
2 Varro. No matter what, he's poore, and thats revenge enough. Who can ſpeake broader, then he that has no houſe to put his head in? Such may rayle againſt great buildings.

Enter Servilius.

Tit. Oh heres Servilius: now we ſhall know ſome anſwer.
Serv. If I might beſeech you Gentlemen, to repayre ſome other houre, I ſhould derive much from't. For tak't of my ſoule, my Lord leanes wondrouſly to diſcontent: his comfortable temper has forſooke him, hes much out of health, and keepes his Chamber.
Luci. Many doe keepe their Chambers, are not ſicke:
And if it be ſo farre beyond his health,
Me thinkes he ſhould the ſooner pay his debts,
And make a cleare way to the gods.
Servil. Good gods.
Tit. We cannot take this for anſwer, ſir.
Flaminius within. Servilius helpe, my Lord, my Lord.

Enter Timon in a rage.

Tim. What, are my dores oppos'd againſt my paſſage?
Have I bin ever free, and muſt my houſe
Be my retentive Enemy? My Goale?
The place which I have Feaſted, does it now
(Like all Mankind) ſhew me an Iron heart?
Luci. Put in now Titus.
Tit. My Lord, heere is my Bill.
Luci. Heres mine.
1 Var. And mine, my Lord.
2 Var. And ours, my Lord.
Philo. All our Billes.
Tim. Knocke me downe with em, cleave me to the Girdle.
Luc. Alas my Lord.
Tim. Cut my heart in ſummes.
Tit. Mine, fifty Talents.
Tim. Tell out my bloud.
Luc. Five thouſand Crownes, my Lord.
Tim. Five thouſand drops payes that.
What yours? and yours?
1 Var. My Lord.
2 Var. My Lord.
Tim. Teare me, take me, and the gods fall upon you.

Exit Timon.

Hort. Faith I perceive our Maſters may throw their caps at their money, theſe debts may well be call'd deſperate ones, for a madman owes em. Exeunt.

Enter Timon.

Tim. They have e'ne put my breath from me the ſlaves. Creditors? Divels.
Stew. My deere Lord.
Tim. What if it ſhould be ſo?
Stew. My Lord.
Tim. Ile have it ſo. My Steward?
Stew. Heere my Lord.
Tim. So fitly? Goe, bid all my Friends againe,
Lucius, Lucullus, add Semprovius: All,
Ile once more feaſt the Raſcals.
Stew. O my Lord, you onely ſpeake from your diſtracted ſoule; there's not ſo much left to furniſh out a moderate Table.

Timon.

Tim. Be it not in thy care :
Goe I charge thee, invite them all, let in the tide
Of Knaves once more: my Cooke and Ile provide. Exeun.

Enter three Senators at one doore, Alcibiades meeting them, with Attendants.

1 Sen. My Lord, you have my voyce, too't,
The faults Bloudy;
Tis neceſſary he ſhould dye:
Nothing imboldens ſinne ſo much, as Mercy.
2 Moſt true; the Law ſhall bruiſe em.
Alci. Honor, health, and compaſſion to the Senate,
1 Now Captaine.
Alci. I am an humble Sutor to your Vertues;
For pitty is the vertue of the Law,
And none but Tyrants uſe it cruelly.
It pleaſes time and Fortune to lye heavy
Vpon a Friend of mine, who in hot blood
Hath ſtept into the Law: which is paſt depth
To thoſe that (without heed) doe plundge intoo't.
He is a Man (ſetting his Fate aſide) of comely Vertues,
Nor did he ſoyle the fact with Cowardice.
(And honour in him, which buyes out his fault)
But with a Noble Fury, and faire ſpirit,
Seeing his Reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppoſe his Foe;
And with ſuch ſober and unnoted paſſion
He did behoove his anger ere twas ſpent,
As if he had but prov'd an Argument.
1 Sen. You undergoe too ſtrict a Paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed looke faire:
Your words have tooke ſuch paines, as they labour
To bring Man-ſlaughter into forme, and ſet Quarrelling
Vpon the head of Valour; which indeed
Is Valour miſ-begot, and came into the world,
When Sects, and Factions were newly borne.
Hes truly Valiant, that can wiſely ſuffer
The worſt that man can breath,
And make his wrongs, his Out-ſides,
To weare them like his Rayment, careleſſely,
And ne're preferre his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.
If wrongs be evills, and inforce us kill,
What Folly tis, to hazard life for ill.
Alci. My Lord.
1 Sen. You cannot make groſſe ſinnes looke cleare,
To revenge is no Valour, but to beare.
Alci. My Lords, then under favour, pardon me.
If I ſpeake like a Captaine.
Why doe fond men expoſe themſelves to Battell,
And not endure all threats? Sleepe upon't,
And let the Foes quietly cut their throats
Without repugnancy? if there be
Such Valour in the bearing, what make we Abroad? Why then, Women are more valiant
That ſtay at home, if Bearing carry it:
And the Aſſe, more Captaine then the Lyon? the fellow
Loaden with Irons, wiſer then the Iudge?
If Wiſedome be in ſuffering. Oh my Lords,
As you are great, be pittifully good,
Who cannot condemne raſhneſſe in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is ſinnes extreameſt Guſt,
But in defence, by Mercy, tis moſt juſt.
To be in Anger, is impiety:
But who is Man, that is not Angry.
Weigh but the Crime with this.
2 Sen. You breath in vaine.
Alci. In vaine?
His ſervice done at Lacedemon, and Bizantium,
Were a ſufficient briber for his life.
1 What's that?
Alci. Why I ſay my Lords ha's done faire ſervice,
And ſlaine in fight many of your enemies:
How full of valour did he beare himſelfe
In the laſt Conflict, and made plenteous wounds?
2 He has made too much plenty with em
Hes a ſworne Riotor, he has a ſinne
That often drownes him, and takes his valour priſoner.
If there were no Fots, that were enough
To overcome him. In that Beaſtly fury,
He has bin knowne to commit outrages,
And cherriſh Factions: Tis inferr'd to us,
His dayes are foule, and his drinke drangerous.
1 He dyes.
Alci. Hard fate: he might have dyed in warre.
My Lords, if not for any parts in him,
Though his right arme might purchaſe his owne time,
And be in debt to none: yet more to move you.
Take my deſerts to his, and joyne em both.
And for I know, your reverend Ages love Security,
Ile pawne my Victories, all my honours to you,
Vpon his good returnes.
If by this Crime, he owes the Law his life,
Why let the Waare receive't in valiant gore,
For Law is ſtrict, and Warre is nothing more.
1 We are for Law, he dyes, urge it no more
On height of our diſpleaſure: Friend, or Brother,
He forfeits his owne blood, that ſpilles another,
Alci. Muſt it be ſo? It muſt not bee:
My Lords, I doe beſeech you know me.
2 How?
Alci. Call me to your remembrences.
3 What.
Alci. I cannot thinke but your Age has forgot me,
It could not elſe be, I ſhould prove ſo bace,
To ſue and be deny'de ſuch common Grace.
My wounds ake at you.
1 Doe you dare our anger?
Tis few words, but ſpacious in effect.
We baniſh thee for ever.
Alci. Baniſh me?
Baniſh your dotage, baniſh uſury,
That makes the Senate ugly.
1 If after two dayes ſhine, Athens containe thee,
Attend our waightier Iudgement,
And not to ſwell our Spirit.
He ſhall be executed preſently. Exeunt.
Alci. Now the gods keepe you old enough,
That you may live
Onely in bone, that none may looke on you.
I'm worſe then mad: I have kept backe their Foes
While they have told their Money, and let out
Their Coyne upon large intereſt. I my ſelfe,
Rich onely in large hurts. All thoſe, for this?
Is this the Balſome, that the uſuring Senat
Powres into Captaines wounds? ha Baniſhment.
It comes not ill: I hate not to be baniſht,
It is a cauſe worthy my Spleene and Fury,
That I may ſtrike at Athens. Ile cheere up
My diſcontented Troopes, and lay for hearts:
Tis honour with moſt Lands to be at ods,
Souldiers ſhould brooke as little wrongs as gods. Exit.

Enter divers Friends at ſeverall doores.

1 The good time of day to you, ſir.

2 I alſo wiſh it to you: I thinke this honourable Lord did but try us this other day.

1 Vpon that were my thoughts tyring when we encountred. I hope it is not ſo low with him as he made it ſeeme in the triall of his ſeverall Friends.

2 It ſhould not be, by the perſwaſion of his new Feaſting.

1 I ſhould thinke ſo: He hath ſent me an earneſt inviting, which many my neere occaſions did urge me to put off: but he hath conjur'd me beyond them, and I muſt needs appeare.

2 In like manner was I in debt to my importunat buſineſſe, but he would not heare my excuſe. I am ſorry, when he ſent to borrow of mee, that my Proviſion was out.

1 I am ſicke of that griefe too, as I underſtand how all things goe.

2 Every man heares ſo: what would he have borrowwed of you?

1 A thouſand Peeces.

2 A thouſand Peeces?

1 What of you?

2 He ſent to me ſir——Heere he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendands.

Tim. With all my heart Gentlemen both; and how fare you?

1 Ever at the beſt, hearing well of your Lordſhip.

2 The Swallow followes not Summer more willing, then we your Lordſhip.

Tim, Nor more willingly leaves Winter, ſuch Summer Birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompence this long ſtay: Feaſt your eares with the Muſicke a while: if they will fare ſo harſhly o'th Trumpets ſound: we ſhall too't preſently.

1 I hope it remains not unkindly with your Lordſhip, that I return'd you an empty Meſſenger.

Tim. O ſir, let it not trouble you.

2 My Noble Lord.

Tim. Ah my good friend, what cheere?

The Banket brought in.

2 My moſt honorable Lord, I am e'ne ſicke of ſhame, that when your Lordſhip the other day ſent to me, I was ſo unfortunate a Begger.

Tim. Thinke not on't, ſir.

2 If you had ſent but two houres before.

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come bring in all together.

2 All cover'd Diſhes.

1 Royall Cheare, I warrant you.

3 Doubt not that, if money and the ſeaſon can yeild it

1 How doe you? Whats the newes?

3 Alcibiades is baniſh'd: here you of it.

Both. Alcibiades baniſh'd?

3 Tis ſo, be ſure of it.

1 How? How?

2 I pray you upon what?

Tim. My worthy Friends, will you draw neere?

3 Ile tell you more anon. Here's a Noble feaſt toward

2 This is the old man ſtill.

3 Wilt hold? Wilt hold?

2 It does, but time will, and ſo.

3 I doe conceive.

Tim. Each man to his ſtoole, with that ſpurre as hee would to the lip of his miſtris: your dyet ſhal be in al places alike. Make not a City Feaſt of it, to let the meat coole, ere we can agree upon the firſt place. Sir, ſir. The gods require our Thankes.

You great Benefactors, ſprinkle our Society with Thankefulneſſe. For your owne guifts, make your ſelves prais'd: But reſerve ſtill to give, leaſt your Deities be deſpiſed. Lend to each man enough, that one neede not lend to another. For were your Godheads to borrow of men, men would forſake the gods. Make the Meate be beloved, more then the Man that gives it. Let no Aſſembly of Twenty, be without a ſcore of Villaines. If there ſit twelve Women at the Table, let a dozen of them be as they are. The reſt of your Fees, O gods, the Senators of Athens, together with the common legge of People, what is amiſſe in them, you Gods, make ſuteable for deſtruction. For theſe my preſent Friends, as they are to me nothing, ſo in nothing bleſſe them, and to nothing are they welcome.

Vncover Dogges, and lap.

Some ſpeake. What doe's his Lordſhip meane?

Some other. I know not.

Tim. May you a better Feaſt never behold
You knot of Mouth-friends: Smoke, and luke warme water
Is your perfection. This is Timons laſt,
Who ſtucke and ſpangled you with flatteries,
Waſhes it off, and ſprinkles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Live loath'd, and long
Moſt ſmiling, ſmooth, deteſted Paraſites,
Curteous deſtroyers, affable Wolves, meeke Beares:
You fooles of fortune, Trencher-friends, Time flyes,
Cap and knee Slaves, vapours, and Minute Iackes
Of Man and Beaſt, the infinite Malady
Cruſt you quite o're, What do'ſt thou goe?
Soft, take thy Phyſicke firſt; thou too, and thou;
Stay I will lend thee money, borrow none.
What? All in Motion? Henceforth be no Feaſt,
Whereat a Villaine's not a welcome Gueſt.
Burne houſe, ſinke Athens, henceforth hated be
Of Timon, Man, and all humanity. Exit.

Enter the Senators, with other Lords.

1 How now, my Lords?

2 Know you the quality of Lord Timons fury?

3 Puſh, did you ſee my Cap?

4 I have loſt my Gowne.

1 Hes but a mad Lord, and nought but humors ſwaies him. He gave me a Iewell th'other day, and now he has beate it out of my hat. Did you ſee my Iewell?

2 Did you ſee my Cap.

3 Heere tis.

4 Heere lyes my Gowne.

1 Lets make no ſtay.

2 Lord Timons mad.

3 I fee'lt upon my bones.

4 One day he giues us Diamonds, next day ſtones.

Exeunt the Senators,

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me looke backe upon thee. O thou Wall
That girdles in thoſe Wolves, dive in the earth,
And fence not Athens. Mutrons, turne incontinent,
Obedience fayle in Children: Slaves and Fooles

Plucke the grave wrinkled Senate from the Bench,
And miniſter in their ſteeds, to generall Filthes.
Convert oth'inſtant greene Virginity,
Doo't in your Parents eyes. Bankrupts, hold faſt
Rather then render backe; out with your Knives,
And cut your Truſters throates. Bound Servants, ſteale,
Large-handed Robbers your grave Maſters are,
And pill by Law. Maide to thy Maſters bed,
Thy Miſtris is o'th Brothell. Sonne of ſixteene,
Plucke the lyn'd Crutch from thy old limping Sire,
With it, beate out his Braines. Piety, and feare,
Religion to the gods, Peace, Iuſtice, Truth,
Domeſticke awe, Night-reſt, and Neighbour-hood,
Inſtruction, Manners, Myſteries, and Trades,
Degrees, Obſervances, Cuſtomes, and Lawes,
Decline to your confounding contraries.
And yet Confuſion live: Plagues incident to men,
Your potent and infectious Feavors, heape
On Athens ripe for ſtroke. Thou cold Sciatica,
Cripple our Senators, that their limbes may halt
As lamely as their Manners. Luſt and liberty
Creepe in the Mindes and Marrowes of our youth,
That gainſt the ſtreame of Vertue they may ſtrive,
And drowne themſelves in Riot. Itches, Blaines,
Sowe all th'Athenian boſomes, and their crop
Be generall Leproſie: Breath, infect breath,
That their Society (as their Friendſhip) may
Be meerely poyſon. Nothing Ile beare from thee
But nakedneſſe, thou deteſtable Towne.
Take thou that too, with multiplying Bannes:
Timon will to the Woods, where he ſhall find
Th'unkindeſt Beaſt, more kinder then Mankind.
The gods confound (heare me you good gods all)
Th'Athenians both within and out that Wall:
And graunt as Timon growes, his hate may grow
To the whole race of Mankind, high and low.
Amen. Exit.

Enter Steward with two or three Servants.

1 Heare you Maſter Steward, where's our Maſter?
Are we undone, caſt off, nothing remaining?
Stew. Alacke my fellowes, what ſhould I ſay to you?
Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
I am as poore as you.
1 Such a houſe broke?
So Noble a Maſter falne, all gone, and not
One Friend to take his Fortune by the arme,
And goe along with him.
2 As we doe turne our backes
From our Companion, throwne into his grave,
So his Familiars to his buried Fortunes
Slinke all away leave their falſe vowes with him
Like empty purſes pickt. and his poore ſelfe
A dedicated Beggar to the Ayre,
With his diſeaſe, of all ſhunn'd poverty,
Walkes likes contempt alone. More of our Fellowes.
Enter other Servants.
Stew. All broken Implements of a ruin'd houſe.
3 Yet doe our hearts weare Timons Livery,
That ſee I by our Faces: we are Fellowes ſtill,
Serving alike in ſorrow: Leak'd is our Barke,
And we poore Mates, ſtand on the dying Decke,
Hearing the Surges threat: we muſt all part
Into this Sea of Ayre.
Stew. Good fellowes all,
The lateſt of my wealth Ile ſhare amongſt you.
Where ever we ſhall meete, for Timons ſake,
Let's yet be Fellowes. Lets ſhake our heads, and ſay
As twere a Knell unto our Maſters Fortunes,
We have ſeene better dayes. Let each take ſome:
Nay put out all your hands: Not one word more,
Thus part we rich in ſorrow, parting poore.
Embrace and part ſeverall wayes.
Oh the fierce wretchedneſſe that glory brings us!
Who would not wiſh to be from wealth exempt,
Since Riches point to Miſery and Contempt?
Who would be ſo mock'd with glory, or to live
But in a Dreame of Friendſhip,
To have his pompe, and all what ſtate compounds,
But onely painted like his varniſht Friends:
Poore honeſt Lord, brought lowe by his owne heart,
Vndone by goodneſſe: Strange unuſuall blood,
When mans worſt ſinne is, he do's too much Good.
Who then dares to be halfe ſo kind agen?
For Bounty that makes gods, doe ſtill marre Men,
My deereſt Lord, bleſt to be moſt accurſt,
Rich onely to be wretched; thy great Fortunes
Are made thy chiefe Afflictions. Alas (kind Lord)
Hes flung in Rage from this ingratefull Seate
Of monſtrous Friends:
Nor his he with him to ſupply his life,
Or that which can command it:
Ile follow and enquire him out.
Ile ever ſerve his minde, with my beſt will,
Whilſt I have gold, Ile be his Steward ſtill. Exit.

Enter Timon in the Woods.

Tim. O bleſſed breeding Sun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy Siſters Orbe
Infect the ayre. Twin'd Brothers of one wombe,
Whoſe procreation, reſidence, and birth,
Scarſe is dividant; touch them with ſeverall fortunes,
The greater ſcornes the leſſer. Not Nature
(To whom all ſores lay ſiege) can beare great Fortune
But by contempt of Nature.
Raiſe me this Begger, and deny't that Lord,
The Senators ſhall beare contempt Hereditary,
The Begger Natiue honor.
It is the Paſtor Lords, the Brothers ſides,
The want that makes him leane: who dares? who dares
In purity of Manhood ſtand upright
And ſay, this mans a flatterer. If one be,
So are they all: for every grize of fortune
Is ſmooth'd by that below. The Learned pate
Duckes to the Golden foole. Alls obliquy:
Theres nothing levell in our curſed Natures
But direct villainy. Therefore be abhorr'd,
All Feaſts, Societies, and Throngs of men.
His ſemblable, yea himſelfe Timon diſdaines,
Deſtruction phang mankind, Earth yeeld me Rootes,
Who ſeekes for better of thee, ſawce his pallate
With thy moſt operant Poyſon. What is heere?
Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious Gold?
No gods, I am no idle Votariſt,
Roots you cleere Heavens. Thus much of this will make
Blacke, white; fowle, faire; wrong, right;
Baſe, Noble; Old, young; Coward, valliant.
Ha you gods! why this? what this you gods? why this
Will lugge your Prieſts and Servants from your ſides:
Plucke ſtout mens pillowes from below the heads.

This yellow Slave,
Will knit and breake Religions, bleſſe th'accurſt,
Make the hoare Leproſie ador'd, place Theeves.
And give them Title, knee, and approbation
With Senators on the Bench? This is it
That makes the wappen'd Widdow wed againe;
Shee, whom the Spittle-houſe, and vlcerous ſores,
Would caſt the gorge at. This Embalmes and Spices
To'th'Aprill day againe. Come damn'd Earth,
Thou common whore of Mankind, that puttes oddes
Among the rout of Nations, I will make thee.
Doe thy right Nature. March afarre off.
Ha? A Drumme? Th'art quicke,
But yet Ile bury tee: Thou't goe (ſtrong Theefe)
When Gowty keepers of thee cannot ſtand:
Nay ſtay thou out for earneſt.

Enter Alcibiades with Drumme and Fiſt in warlike manner and Phrynia, and Timandra.

Alci. What art thou there? ſpeake.
Tim. A beaſt as thou art. The Canker gnaw thy heart
For ſhewing me againe the eyes of man,
Alci. What is thy name? Is man ſo hatefull to thee,
That art thy ſelfe a Man?
Tim. I am Miſan thropos, and hate Mankind.
For thy part, I doe wiſh thou wert a dogge,
That I might love thee ſomething,
Alci. I know thee well:
But in thy Fortunes am unlearn'd, and ſtrange.
Tim. I know thee to, and more then that I know thee
I not deſire to know, Follow thy Drumme,
With mans blood paint the ground Gules, Gules:
Religious Cannons, civill Lawes are cruell,
Then what ſhould warre be? This fell whore of thine,
Hath in her more deſtruction then thy Sword,
For all her Cherubin looke.
Phrin. Thy lips rot off.
Tim. I will not kiſſe thee, then the rot returnes
To thine owne lippes againe.
Alci. How came the Noble Timon to this change?
Tim. As the Moone doe's, by wanting light to give:
But then renew I could not like the Moone,
There were no Sunnes to borrow of.
Alci. Noble Timon, what friendſhip may I doe thee?
Tim. None, but to maintaine my opinion.
Alci. What is it Timon?
Tim. Promiſe me Friendſhip, but performe none. If thou wilt not promiſe, the Gods plague thee, for thou art a man: if thou do'ſt performe, confound thee, for thou art a man.
Alci. I have heard in ſome ſort of thy Miſeries.
Tim. Thou ſawſt them when I had proſperity.
Alci. I ſee them now, then was a bleſſed time.
Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of Harlots.
Timan. Is this th'Athenian Minion, whom the world,
Voyc'd ſo regardfully?
Tim. Art thou Timandra? Taman. Yes.
Tim. Be a whore ſtill, they love thee not that uſe thee, give them diſeaſes, leaving with thee their Luſt. Make uſe of thy ſalt houres, ſeaſon the ſlaves for Tubbes and Bathes, bring downe Roſe-checkt youth to the Fubfaſt, and the Diet.
Timan. Hang thee Monſter,
Alci. Pardon him ſweet Timandra, for his wits
Are drown'd and loſt in his Calamites.
I have but little Gold of late, brave Timon,
The want whereof, doth dayly make revolt
In my penurious Band. I have heard and greev'd
How curſed Athens, mindleſſe of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when Neighbour ſtates
But for thy Sword and Fortune trod upon them.
Tim. I prethee beate thy Drum, and get thee gone.
Alci. I am thy Friend, and pitty thee deere Timon.
Tim. How doeſt thou pitty him whom thou doſt trouble,
I had rather be alone.
Alci. Why fare thee well:
Heere is ſome gold for thee.
Tim. Keepe it, I cannot eat it.
Alci. When I have laid proud Athens on a heape.
Tim. Warr'ſt thou, gainſt Athens.
Alci. I Timon, and have cauſe.
Tim. The gods confound them all in thy Conqueſt,
And thee after, when thou haſt Conquer'd.
Alc. Why me, Timon?
Tim, That by killing of Villaines
Thou was't borne to conquer my Country.
Put up thy Gold. Go on, heeres Gold, goe on;
Be as a Plannetary plague, whom Iove
Will ore ſome high-Vic'd City, hang his poyſon
In the ſicke ayre: let not thy ſword skip one.
Pitty not honour'd Age for his white Beard,
He is an Vſurer. Strike me the counterfet Matron,
It is her habite onely, that is honeſt,
Her ſelfes a Bawd. Let not the Virgins cheeke
Make ſoft thy trenchant Sword: for thoſe Milke pappes
That through the window Barne bore at mens eyes,
Are not within the Leafe of pitty writ,
But ſet them down horrible Traitors. Spare not the Babe
Whoſe dimpled ſmiles from Fooles exhauſt their mercy;
Thinke it a Baſtard, whom the Oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced, the throat ſhall cut,
And mince it ſans remorſe. Sweare againſt Objects,
Put Armour on thine eares, and on thine eyes,
Whoſe proofe, nor yels of Mothers, Maides, nor Babes
Nor ſight of Prieſts in holy Veſtments bleeding,
Shall pierce a jot. Theres Gold to pay thy Souldiers.
Make large confuſion: and thy fury ſpent,
Counfounded be thy ſelfe. Speake not, be gone.
Alci. Haſt thou gold yet, Ile take the gold thou giveſt me, not all thy Counſell.
Tim. Doſt thou or doſt thou not, Heavens curſe upon thee.
Both. Give us ſome Gold good Timon, haſt thou more?
Tim. Enough to make a Whore forſweare her Trade,
And to make Whores, a Bawd. Hold up you Sluts
Your Aprons mountant; you are not Othable,
Although I know you'll ſweare, terribly ſweare
Into ſtrong ſhudders, and to heavenly Agues
Th'immortall gods that heare you. Spare your Oathes:
Ile truſt to your Conditions, be whores ſtill.
And he whoſe pious breath ſeekes to convert you,
Be ſtrong in Whore, allure him, burne him up,
Let your cloſe fire predominate his ſmoke,
And be no turne-coats: yet may your paines ſix mouths
Be quite contrary. And Thatch
Your poore thin Roofes with burthens of the dead,
(Some that were hang'd) no matter:
Weare them, betray with them; Whore ſtill,
Paint till a horſe may myre upon your face:
A pox of wrinkles.
Both. Well, more Gold, what then?

Be eeve't that wee'l do any thing for Gold.
Tim. Conſumptions ſowe
In hollow bones of man, ſtrike their ſharpe ſhinnes,
And marre mens ſpurring. Cracke the Lawyers voyce,
That he may never more falſe Title pleade,
Nor ſound his Quillets ſhrilly; Hoare the Flamen,
That ſcold'ſt againſt the quality of fleſh,
And not beleeves himſelfe. Downe with the Noſe,
Downe with it flat, take the Bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to foreſee (bald
Smels from the generall weale. Make curld'pate Ruffians
And let the unſcarr'd Braggarts of the Warre
Deriue ſome paine from you. Plagve all,
That your Activity may defeate and quell
The ſourſe of all Erection. There's more Gold.
Do you damne others, and let this damne you,
And ditches grave you all.
Both. More counſell with more Money, bounteous Timon.
Tim. More whore, more Miſcheefe firſt, I have given you earneſt.
Alc. Strike up the Drum towardes Athens, farewell Timon: if I thrive well, Ile uiſit thee againe.
Tim. If I hope well, Ile never ſee thee more,
Alc. I never did the harme.
Tim. Yes, thou ſpok'ſt well of me.
Alc. Call'ſt thou that harme?
Tius. Men dayly finde it. Get thee away,
And take thy Beagles with thee.
Alc. We but offend him, ſtrike. Exeunt.
Tim. That Nature being ſicke of mans unkindneſſe
Should yet be hungry: Common Mother, thou
Whoſe wombe vnmeaſureable, and infinite breſt
Teemes and feeds all: whoſe ſelfeſame Mettle
Whereof thy proud Child (arrogant man) is puft,
Engenders the blacke Toad, and Adder blew,
The gilded Newt, and eyeleſſe venom'd Worme,
With all th'abhorred Births below Criſpe Heaven,
Whereon Hyperions quickning fire doth ſhine:
Yeeld him, who all the humane Sonnes do hate,
From foorth thy plentious boſome, one poore roote:
Enſeare thy Fertile and Conceptions wombe,
Let it no more bring out ingratefull man.
Goe great with Tygers: Dragons, Wolues, and Beares,
Teeme with new Monſters, whom thy upward face
Hath to the Marbled Manſion all above
Never preſented. O, a Root, deare thankes:
Dry up thy Marrowes, Vines, and Plough-torne Leas,
Whereof ingratefull man with Licouriſh draughts
And Morſels Vnctious, greaſes his pure minde,
That from it all Conſideration ſlippes——

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague, plague.
Ape. I was directed hither. Men report,
Thou doſt affect my Manners, and doſt uſe them.
Tim. 'Tis then, becauſe thou doſt not keepe a dogge
Whom I would imitate, Conſumption catch thee.
Ape. This is in thee a Nature but infected,
A poore unmanly Melancholy ſprung
From change of future. Why this Spade? this place?
This Slave like Habit, and theſe lookes of Care?
Thy Flatterers yet weare Silke, drinke Wine, lye ſoft,
Hugge their diſeaſed Perfumes, and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shame not theſe Woods,
By putting on the cunning of a Carper.
Be thou a Flatterer now, and ſeeke to thrive
By that which ha's undone thee; hindge thy knee,
And let his very breath whom thou'lt obſerve
Blow of thy Cap: praiſe his moſt vicious ſtraine,
And call it exellent: thou waſt told thus:
Thou gav'ſt thine eares (like Tapſters, that bid welcome)
To Knaves, and all approachers: 'Tis moſt iuſt
That thou turne Raſcall, had'ſt thou wealth againe,
Raſcalls ſhould have't, Do not aſſume my likeneſſe,
Tiu, Where I like thee, I'de throw away my ſelfe.
Ape. Thou haſt caſt away thy ſelfe, being like thy ſelfe
A Madman ſo long, now a Foole: what think'ſt
That the bleake ayre, thy boyſterous Chamberlaine
Will put thy ſhirt on warme? Will theſe moyſt Trees,
That have out-liv'd the Eagle, page thy heeles
And skip when thou point'ſt out? Will the cold brooke
Candied with Ice, Cawdle thy Morning taſte
To cure thy o're-nights ſurfet? Call the Creatures,
Whoſe naked Natures live in all the ſpight
Of wrekefull Heaven, whoſe bare unhouſed Trunkes,
To the conflicting Elements expos'd
Anſwer meere Nature: bid them flatter thee.
O thou ſhalt finde.
Tim. A Foole of thee: depart.
Ape. I love the better now, then ere I did.
Tim. I hate thee worſe.
Ape. Why?
Tim. Thou flatter'ſt miſery.
Ape. I flatter not, but ſay thou art a Caytiffe.
Tim. Why do'ſt thou ſeeke me out?
Ape. To vex thee.
Tim. Alwaies a Villaines Office, or a Fooles.
Doſt pleaſe thy ſelfe in't?
Ape. I.
Tim. What, a Knave too?
Ape. If thou did'ſt put this ſowre cold habit on
To caſtigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Doſt it enforcedly: Thou'dſt Countier be againe
Wert thou not Beggar: willing miſery
Out-lives: in certaine pompe, is crown'd before:
The one is filling ſtil, never compleat:
The other, at high wiſh: beſt ſtate Contentleſſe,
Hath a diſtracted and moſt wretched being,
Worſe then the worſt, Content.
Thou ſhould'ſt deſire to dye, being miſerable.
Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miſerable.
Thou art a Slave, whom Fortunes tender arme
With favour never claſpt: but bred a Dogge.
Had'ſt thou like us from our firſt ſwath proceeded,
The ſweet degrees that this breefe world affords,
To ſuch as may the paſſive drugges of it
Freely command'ſt: thou would'ſt have plung'd thy ſelfe
In generall Riot, melted downe thy youth
In different beds of Luſt, and never learn'd
The Icie precepts of reſpect, but followed
Tye ſugred game before thee. But my ſelfe,
Who had the world as my Confectionary,
The mouthes, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men,
At duty more then I could frame employments:
That numberleſſe upon the ſtucke, as leaves
Do on the Oake, have with one Winters bruſh
Fell from their boughes, and left me open bare,
For every ſtorme that blowes. I to beare this,
That never knew but better, isſume burthen:
Thy Nature, did commence in ſufferance, Time
Hath made the hard in't. Why ſhould'ſt thou hate Men?
They never flatter'd thee. What haſt thou given?

If thou wilt curſe: thy Father (that poore ragge)
Muſt be thy ſubiect; who in ſpight put ſtuffe
To ſome ſhee-Begger, and compounded thee
Poore Rogue hereditary. Hence be gone,
If thou hadſt not beene borne the worſt of men,
Thou hadſt bene a Knave and Flatterer.

Ape. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. I, that I am not thee.

Ape. I, that I was no Prodigall.

Tim. I, that I am one now.
Were all the wealth I have ſhut up in thee,
I'ld give the leave to hange it. Get the gone:
That the whole life of Athens were in this,
Thus would I eate it.

Ape. Heere, I will mend thy feaſt.

Tim. Firſt mend thy company, take away thy ſelfe.

Ape. So I ſhall mend mine owne, by th'lacke of thine

Tim. 'Tis not well mended ſo, it is but botcht;
If not, I would it were.

Ape. What would'ſt thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlewind: if thou wilt,
Tell them there I have Gold, looke, ſo I have.

Ape. Heere is no uſe for Gold.

Tim. The beſt, and trueſt:
For here it ſleepes, and do's no hyred harme.

Ape. Where lyeſt a nights Timon?

Tim. Vnder that's above me.
Where feed'ſt thou a dayes Apemantus?

Ape. Where my ſtomacke findes meate, or rather where I eate it.

Tim. Would poyſon were obedient, and knew my mind

Ape. Where would'ſt thou ſend it?

Tim. To ſawce thy diſhes.

Ape. The middle of Humanity thou never kneweſt, but the extremity of both ends. When thou waſt in thy Gilt, and thy Perfume, they mockt thee for too much Curioſity: in thy Ragges thou knoweſt none, but art deſpis'd for the contrary. Ther's a medler for thee, eate it.

Tim. On what I hate, I feed not.

Ape. Do'ſt hate a Medler?

Tim. I, though it looke like thee.

Ape. And th'hadſt hated Medlers ſooner, thou ſhould'ſt have loved thy ſelfe better now. What man didd'ſt thou ever know unthrift, that was beloved after his meanes?

Tim. Who without thoſe meanes thou talk'ſt of, didſt thou ever know belov'd?

Ape. My ſelfe.

Tim. I underſtand thee: thou had'ſt ſome meanes to keepe a Dogge.

Apem. What things in the world canſt thou neereſt compare to thy Flatterers?

Tim. Women neereſt, but men: men are the things themſelves. What would'ſt thou do with the world Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Ape. Give it the Beaſts, to be rid of the men.

Tim. Would'ſt thou have thy ſelfe fall in the confuſion of men, and remaine a Beaſt with the Beaſts.

Ape. I Timon.

Tim. A beaſtly Ambition, which the Goddes grant thee t'attaine to. If thou wert the Lyon, the Fox would beguile thee: if thou wert the Lambe, the Foxe would eate thee: if thou wert the Fox, the Lion would ſuſpect thee, when peradventure thou wert accus'd by the Aſſe: If thou wert the Aſſe, thy dulneſſe would torment thee: and ſtill thou liu'dſt but as a Breakefaſt to the Wolfe. If thou wert the Wolfe, thy greedineſſe would afflict thee, and oft thou ſhold'ſt hazard thy life for thy dinner. Wert thou the Vnicorne, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine owne ſelfe the conqueſt of thy fury. Wert thou a Beare, thou would'ſt be kill'd by the Horſe: wert thou a Horſe, thou would'ſt be ſeaz'd by the Leopard: wert thou a Leopard, thou wert Germane to the Lion, and the ſpottes of thy Kindred, were Iurors on thy life. All thy ſafety were remotion, and thy defence abſence. What Beaſt could'ſt thou bee, that were not ſubject to a Beaſt: and what a Beaſt art thou already, that ſeeſt not thy loſſe in transformation.

Ape. If thou could'ſt pleaſe me
With ſpeaking to me thou might'ſt
Have hit upon it heere.
The Common wealth of Athens, is become
A Forreſt of Beaſts.

Tim. How ha's the Aſſe broke the wall, that thou art out of the City.

Ape. Yonder comes a Poet and a Painter:
The plague of Company light upon thee:
I will feare to catch it, and give way.
When I know not what elſe to do,
Ile ſee thee againe.

Tim. When there is nothing living but thee,
Thou ſhalt be welcome.
I had rather be a Beggers Dogge,
Then Apemantus.

Ape. Thou art the Cap
Of all the Fooles alive.

Tim. Would thou wert cleane enough
To ſpit upon.

Ape. A plague on thee,
Thou art too bad to curſe.

Tim. All Villaines
That do ſtand by thee, are pure.

Ape. There is no Leproſie,
But what thou ſpeak'ſt.

Tim. If I name thee, Ile beate thee;
But I ſhould infect my hands.

Ape. I would my tongue
Could rot them off.

Tim. Away thou iſſue of a mangy dogge.
Coller does kill me,
That thou art alive, I ſwoond to ſee thee.

Ape. Would thou would'ſt burſt.

Tim. Away thou tedious Rogue, I am ſorry I ſhall loſe a ſtone by thee.

Ape. Beaſt.

Tim. Slave.

Ape. Toad.

Tim. Rogue, Rogue, Rogue.
I am ſicke of this falſe world, and will love nought
But even the meere neceſſities upon't:
Then Timon preſently prepare thy grave:
Lye where the light Fome of the Sea may beate
Thy grave-ſtone dayly, make thine Epitaph,
That death in me, at others lives may laugh.
O thou ſweete King-killer, and deare divorce
Twixt naturall Sunne and fire: thou bright defiler of Himens pureſt bed, thou valiant Mars,
Thou ever, young, freſh, loved, and delicate wooer,
Whoſe bluſh doth thawe the conſecrated Snow
That lies on Dians lap.
Thou viſible God,
That ſouldreſt cloſe Impoſſibilities,
And mak'ſt them kiſſe; that ſpeak'ſt with every Tongue

To every purpoſe; O thou touch of hearts,
Thinke thy ſlave-man rebels, and by thy vertue
Set them into confounding oddes, that Beaſts
May have the world in Empire.
Ape. Would'twere ſo,
But not till I am dead. Ile ſay th'haſt Gold:
Thou wilt be throng'd too ſhortly.
Tim. Throng'd too?
Ape. I.
Tim. Thy backe I prythee,
Ape. Live, and love thy miſery,
Tim. Long live ſo, and ſo dye. I am quit.
Ape. Mo things like men;
Eate Timon, and abhorre then. Exit Apemian

Enter the Bandetti.

1 Where ſhould he have this Gold? It is ſome poore Fragment, ſome ſlender Ort of his remainder: the meere want of Gold, and the falling from of his Friendes, drove him into this Melancholly.
2 It is nois'd
He hoth a maſſe of Treaſure,
3 Let us make the aſſay upon him, if he care not for't, he will ſupply us eaſily: if he covetouſly reſerue it, how ſhall's get it?
2 True: for he beares it not about him:
Tis hid.
1 Is not this hee?
All, Where?
2 'Tis his deſcription.
3 He? I know him.
All. Save thee Timon.
Tim. Now Theeves.
All, Soldiers, not Theeves.
Tim. Both too, and womens Sons.
All. We are not Theeves, but men
That much do want.
Tim. Your greateſt want is, you wont much of meat:
Why ſhould you want? Behold, the Earth hath Rootes:
Within this Mile breake forth a hundred Springs:
The Oakes beare Maſt, the Briers Scarlet Hips,
The bounteous Huſwife Nature, on each buſh,
Layes her full Meſſe before you. Want? why Want?
1 We cannot live on Graſſe, on Berries, Water,
As Beaſts, and Birds, and Fiſhes.
Ti. Nor on the Beaſts themſelves, the Birds and Fiſhes,
You muſt eate men. Yet thankes I muſt you con,
That you are Theeves profeſt: that you worke not
In holier ſhapes: For there is boundleſſe Theft
In limited Profeſſions. Raſcall Theeves
Heere's Gold. Go, ſucke the ſubtle blood o'th Grape,
Till the high Feavour ſeeth your blood to froth,
And ſo ſcape hanging. Truſt not the Phyſitian,
His Antidotes are poyſon, and he ſlayes
Moe then you Rob: Take wealth, and live together,
Do Villaine do, ſince you proteſt to doo't.
Like Workemen, Ile example your with Theevery:
The Sunnes a Theefe, and with his great attraction
Robbes the vaſte Sea. The Moones an arrant Theefe,
And her pale fire, ſhe ſnatches from the Sunne.
The Seas a Theefe, whoſe liquid Surge, reſolues
The Moone into Salt teares. The Earth's a Theefe,
That feeds and breeds by a compoſture ſtolne
From gen'rall excrement: each think's a Theefe.
The Lawes, your curbe and whip, in their rough power
Ha's uncheck'd Theft. Love not your ſelves away,
Rob one another, there's more Gold, cut throates,
All that you meete are Theeves: to Athens go,
Breake open ſhoppes, nothing can you ſteale
But Theeves do looſe it: ſteale leſſe, for this I give you
And Gold confound you howſoere: Amen.
3 Has almoſt charm'd me from my Profeſſion, by perſwading me to it.
1 'Tis in the malice of mankinde, that he thus adviſes vs not to have vs thrive in our myſtery.
2 Ile beleeve him as an Enemy,
And give over my Trade.
1 Let vs firſt ſee peace in Athens, there is no time ſo miſerable but a man may be true. Exeunt Theeves.

Enter the Steward to Timon.

Stew. Oh you Gods!
Is yon'd diſpis'd and ruinous man my Lord?
Full of decay and fayling? Oh Monument
And wonder of good deeds, evilly beſtow'd!
What an alteration of Honor has deſp'rate want made?
What vilder thing upon the earth, then Friends,
Who can bring Nobleſt mindes, to baſeſt ends,
How rarely does it meete with this times guiſe,
When man was wiſht to love his Enemies:
Grant I may ever love, and rather woo
Thoſe that would miſcreeſe me, then thoſe that doo.
Has caught me in his eye, I will preſent my honeſt grieſe unto him; and as my Lord, ſtill ſerve him with my life.
My deereſt Maſter.
Tim. Away: what art thou?
Stew. Have you forgot me. Sir?
Tim. Why doſt aske that? I haue forgot all men.
Then if thou grunt'ſt th'art a man,
I have forgot thee,
Stew. An honeſt poore ſeruant of yours.
Tim. Then I know thee not:
I never had honeſt man about me, I all,
I kept were Knaves, to ſerve in meate to Villaines.
Stew. The Gods are witneſſe,
Nev'r did poore Steward weare a truer greefe
For his undone Lord, then mine eyes for you.
Tim. What doſt thou weepe?
Come neerer. then I love thee
Becauſe thou art a woman, and diſclaim'ſt
Flinty mankinde: whoſe eyes do never give,
But thorow Luſt and Laughter: pittie's ſleeping:
Strange times that weepe with laughing, not with weeping.
Stew. I begge of you to know me, good my Lord,
T'accept my greefe, and whil'ſt this poore wealth laſts,
To entertaine me as your Steward ſtill.
Tim. Had I a Steward
So true, ſo iuſt, and now ſo comfortable?
It almoſt turnes my daungerous Nature wild.
Let me behold thy face: Surely, this man
Was borne of woman.
Forgive my generall, and exceptleſſe raſhneſſe
You perpetuall ſober Gods. I do proclaime
One honeſt man: Miſtake me not, but one:
No more I pray, and hee's a Steward.
How faine would I have hated all mankinde,
And thou redeem'ſt thy ſelfe. But all ſave thee,
I fell with Curſes,
Me thinkes thou art more honeſt now then wiſe:
For, by oppreſſing and betraying mee,

Thou might'ſt have ſooner got another Service:
For many, ſo arrive at ſecond Maſters,
Vpon their firſt Lords necke. But tell me true,
(For I muſt ever doubt, though ne're ſo ſure)
Is not thy kindneſſe ſubtle, couetous,
If not a Vſuring kindneſſe, and as rich men deale Guifts,
Expecting in returne twenty for one?
Stew No my moſt worthy Maſter, in whoſe breſt
Doubt, and ſuſpect (alas) are plac'd to late:
You ſhould have fear'd falſe times, when you did Feaſt.
Suſpect ſtill comes where an eſtate is leaſt,
That which I ſhew, Heaven knowes, is meerely Love,
Duty, and Zeale, to your unmatched minde;
Care of your Food and Living, and beleeve it,
My moſt honovr'd Lord,
For any benefit that points to mee,
Either In hope, or preſent, I'de exchange
For this one wiſh, that you had power and wealth
To requite me, by making rich your ſelfe.
Tim. Looke the 'tis ſo: thou ſingly honeſt man,
Heere take: the Gods out of my miſery
Ha's ſent the Treaſure. Go, live rich and happy.
But thus condition'd: Thou ſhalt build from men:
Hate all, curſe all, ſhew Charity to none,
But let the famiſht fleſh ſlide from the bone,
Ere thou releeve the Begger. Give to dogges
What thou denyeſt to men. Let Priſons ſwallow'em,
Debts wither'em to nothing, be men like blaſted woods
And may Diſeaſes licke vp their falſe bloods,
And ſo farewell, and thrive.
Stew. O let me ſtay and comfort you my Maſter.
Tim. If thou hat'ſt Curſes
Stay not: flye, whil'ſt thou art bleſt and free:
Ne're ſee thou man, aud let me ne're ſee thee. Exit.

Enter Poet, and Painter.

Pain. As I tooke note of the place, it cannot be farre
Where he abides,
Poet. What's to be thought of him?
Does the Rumor hold for true,
That hee's ſo full of Gold?
Painter. Certaine.
Alcibiades reports it: Phrinia and Timandra
Had Gold of him, he likewiſe enrich'd
Poore ſtragling Soldiers, with great quantity.
'Tis ſaide, he gave unto his Steward
A mighty ſumme.
Poet. Then this breaking of his,
Ha's beene but a try for his Friends?
Painter. Nothing elſe:
You ſhall ſee him a Palme in Athens againe,
And flovriſh with the higheſt:
Therefore, 'tis not amiſſe, we tender our loves
To him, in this ſuppos'd diſtreſſe of his:
It will ſhew honeſtly in us,
And is very likely, to loade our purpoſes
With what they travaile for,
If it be a iuſt and true report, that goes
Of his having.
Poet What have you now
To preſent unto him?
Painter. Nothing at this time
But my Viſitation: onely I will promiſe him
An excellent Peece.
Poet. I muſt ſerue him ſo too;
Tell him of an intent that's comming toward him.
Painter. Good as the beſt
Promiſing, is the very Ayre o'th' Time;
It opens the eyes of Expectation.
Performance, is ever the duller for his acte,
And but in the plainer and ſimpler kind of people,
The deede of Saying is quiet out of uſe.
To promiſe, is moſt Gourtly and faſhionable;
Performance, is a kind of Will or Teſtament
Which argues a great ſickeneſſe in his iudgement
That makes it.

Enter Timon from his Cave.

Timon. Excellent Workeman,
Thou canſt not paint a man ſo badde
As is thy ſelfe.
Poet. I am thinking
What I ſhall ſay I have provided for him:
It muſt be a perſonating of himſelfe:
A Satyre againſt the ſoftneſſe of Proſperity,
With a Diſcovery of the infinite Flatteries
That follow youth and opulency.
Timon. Muſt thou needes
Stand for a Villaine in thine owne Worke?
Wilt thou whip thine owne faults in other men?
Do ſo, I have Gold for thee.
Poet. Nay let's ſeeke him.
Then do we ſinne againſt our owne eſtate,
When we may profit meete, and come too late.
Painter. True:
When the day ſerues before blacke-corner'd night;
Finde what thou want'ſt, by free and offer'd light.
Come.
Tim. Ile meete you at the turne:
What a Gods Gold, that he is worſhipt
In a baſer Temple, then where Swine feede?
'Tis thou that rigg'ſt the Barke, and plow'ſt the Fome,
Setleſt admired reverence in a Slave,
To thee be worſhipt, and thy Saints for aye:
Be crown'd with Plagues, that thee alone obay.
Fit I meete them.
Poet. Haile worthy Timon.
Pain. Our late Noble Maſter.
Timon. Have I once liv'd
To ſee two honeſt men?
Poet. Sir:
Having often of your open Bounty teſted,
Hearing you were retyr'd, your Friends falne off,
Whoſe thankeleſſe Natures (O abhorred Spirits)
Not all the Whippes of Heaven, are large enough,
What, to you,
Whoſe Starre-like Nobleneſſe gave life and influence
To their whole being? I am rapt, and cannot cover
The monſtrus bulke of this Ingratitude
With any ſize of words.
Timon. Let it go,
Naked men may ſee't the better:
You that are honeſt, by being what yov are,
Make them beſt ſeene, and knowne.
Pain. He, and my ſelfe
Have travail'd in the great ſhowre of your guifts,
And ſweetly felt it.
Timon. I, you are honeſt men.
Painet. We are hither come
To offer you our ſevice.
Timon. Moſt honeſt men:

Why how ſhall I requite you?
Can you eate Roots, and drinke cold water, no?
Both. What we can do,
Wee'l do to do you ſeruice.
Tim. Y'are honeſt men,
Y'have heard that I have Gold,
I am ſure you have, ſpeake truth, y'are honeſt men,
Pain. So it is ſaid my Noble Lord, but therefore Came not my Friend, nor I.
Timon. Good honeſt man: Thou draw'ſt a counterfet
Beſt in all Athens, th'art indeed the beſt,
Thou counterfet'ſt moſt lively.
Pain, So, ſo, my Lord,
Tim. E'ne ſo ſir as I ſay. And for thy fiction,
Why thy Verſe ſwels with ſtuffe ſo fine and ſmooth,
That thou art even Naturall in thine Art.
But for all this (my honeſt Natur'd friends)
I muſt needs ſay you have a little fault,
Marry 'tis not monſtrous in you, neither wiſh I
You take much paines to mend.
Both, Beſeech your Honour
To make it knowne to us.
Tim. You'l take it ill.
Both. Moſt thankefully, my Lord.
Timon. Will you indeed?
Both. Doubt it not worthy Lord.
Tim. There's never a one of you but truſts a Knave,
That mightily deceives you.
Both, Do we, my Lord?
Tim. I, and you heare him cogge,
See him diſſemble,
Know his groſſe patchery, love him, feede him,
Keepe in your boſome, yet remaine aſſur'd
That he's a made-up-Villaine.
Pain. I know none ſuch, my Lord.
Poet. Nor I.
Tim. Looke you,
I love you well, Ile give you Gold
Rid me theſe Villaines from your companies;
Hang them, or ſtab them, drowne them in draught,
Confound them by ſome courſe, and come to me,
Ile give you Gold enough.
Both. Name them my Lord, let's know them.
Tim. You that way, and you this:
But two in company:
Each man a part, all ſingle, and alone,
Yet an arch Villaine keepes him company:
If where thou art, two Villaines ſhall not be,
Come not neere him. If thou would'ſt not recide
But where one Villaine is, then him abandon.
Hence, packe, there's Gold, ye came for Gold ye ſlaves:
You have worke for me, there's payment, thence,
You are an Alcumiſt, make Gold of that:
Out Raſcall dogges. Exeunt.

Enter Steward, and two Senators.

Stew. It is vaine that you would ſpeake with Timon:
For he is ſet ſo onely to himſelfe,
That nothing but himſelfe, which lookes like man,
Is friendly with him.
1. Sen. Bring us to his Cave.
It is our part and promiſe to th'Athenians
To ſpeake with Timon.
2. Sen. At all times alike
Men are not ſtill the ſame: 'twas Time and Greefes
That fram'd him thus. Time with his fairer hand,
Offering the Fortunes of his former dayes,
The former man may make him: bring us to him
And chanc'e it as it may,
Stew. Heere is his Cave:
Peace and content be heere. Timon, Timon,
Looke out, and ſpeake to Friends: Th'Athenians
By two of their moſt reverend Senate greet thee:
Speake to them Noble Timon.

Enter Timon out of his Cave.

Tim. Thou Sunne that comfort burne,
Speake and be hang'd:
For each true word, a bliſter, and each falſe
Be as a Catherizing to the root o'th'Tougue,
Conſuming it with ſpeaking.
1 Worthy Timon.
Tim. Of none but ſuch as you,
And you of Timon.
1 The Senators of Athens, greet thee Timon.
Tim. I thanke them,
And would ſend them backe the plague,
Could I but catch it for them.
1 O forget
What we are ſorry for our ſelves in thee:
The Senators, with one conſent of love,
Intreate thee backe to Athens, who have thought
On ſpeciall Dignities, which vacant lye
For thy beſt uſe and wearing.
2 They confeſſe
Toward thee, forgetfulneſſe too generall groſſe;
Which now the publike Body, which doth ſildome
Play the re-canter, feeling in it ſelfe
A lacke of Timons ayde, hath ſince withall
Of it owne fall, reſtraining ayde to Timon,
And ſend forth us, to make their ſorrowed render,
Together, with a recompence more fruitfull
Then their offence can weigh downe by the Dramme,
I even ſuch heapes and ſummes of Love and Wealth,
As ſhall to thee blot out, what wrongs were theirs,
And write in thee the figures of their love,
Ever to read them thine.
Tim, You witch me in it;
Surprize me to the very brinke of teares;
Lend me a Fooles heart, and a womans eyes,
And Ile beweepe theſe comforts, worthy Senators.
1 Therefore ſo pleaſe thee to returne with us,
And of our Athens, thine and ours to take
The Captaineſhip, thou ſhalt be met with thankes,
Allowed with abſolute power and thy good name
Live with Authority: ſo ſoone we ſhall drive backe
Of Alcibiades h'approaches wilde
Who like a Boare too ſavage, doth root up
His Countries peace.
2 And ſhakes his threatning Sword
Againſt the walls of Athens.
1 Therefore Timon.
Tim. Well ſir, I will: therefore I will ſir thus:
If Alcibiades kill my Countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not, But if he ſacke faire Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by'th'Beards,
Giving our holy Virgins to the ſtaine
Of contumelious, beaſtly, mad-brain'd warre:
Then let him know, and tell him Timon ſpeakes it.

In pitty of our aged, and our youth,
I cannot chooſe but tell him that I care not,
And let him tak't at worſt: For their Knives care not,
While you have throats to anſwer. For my ſelfe,
There's not a whittle, in th'unruly Campe,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverendſt Throat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the proſperous Gods,
As Theeves to Keepers.

Stew. Stay not, all's in vaine.

Tim. Why I was writing of my Epitaph,
It will be ſeene to morrow, My long ſickneſſe
Of Health, and Living, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live ſtill,
Be Alcibiades your plague; you his,
And laſt ſo long enough.

1 We ſpeake in vaine,

Tim. But yet I love my Country, and am not
One that reioyces in the common wracke,
As common bruite doth put it.

1 That's well ſpoke.

Tim. Commend me to my loving Countreymen.

1 Theſe words become your lippes as they paſſe thorow them.

2 And enter in our eares, like great Triumphers
In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them,
And tell them, that to eaſe them of their greefes,
Their feares of Hoſtile ſtrokes, their Aches loſſes,
Their pangs of Loue, with other incident throwes
That Natures fragile Veſſell doth ſuſtaine
In lifes uncertaine voyage, I will ſome kindnes do them,
Ile teach them to prevent wilde Alcibiades wrath.

1 I like this well, he will returne againe.

Tim. I have a Tree which growes heere in my Cloſe,
That mine owne uſe inuites me to cut downe,
And ſhortly muſt I fell it. Tell my Friends,
Tell Athens, in the frequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that who ſo pleaſe
To ſtop Affliction, let him take his haſte;
Come hither ere my Tree hath felt the Axe,
And hang himſelfe. I pray you do my greeting.

Stew. Trouble him no further, thus you ſtill ſhall
Finde him.

Tim. Come not to me againe, but ſay to Athens,
Timon hath made his euerlaſting Manſion
Vpon the Beached Verge of the ſalt Flood,
Which once a day with his emboſſed Froth
The turbulent Surge ſhall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-ſtone be your Oracle:
Lippes, let foure words go by, and Language end:
What is amiſſe, Plague and Infection mend.
Graves onely be mens workes, and Death their gaine;
Sunne, hide thy Beames, Timon hath done his Raigne,
Exit Timon.

1 His diſcontents are unremoveably coupled to Nature.

2 Our hope in him is dead: let us returne,
And ſtraine what other meanes is left unto us
In our deere perill.

1 It requires ſwift foot. Exeunt.

Enter two other Senators, with a Meſſenger.

1 Thou haſt painfully diſcover'd: are his Files
As full as they report?

Meſ. I have ſpoke the leaſt.
Beſides his expedition promiſes preſent approach.

2 We ſtand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Meſ. I met a Currier, one mine ancient Friend,
Whom though in generall part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old love made a particular force,
And made us ſpeake like Friends. This man was riding
From Alcibiades to Timons Cave,
With Letters of intreaty, which imported
His Fellowſhip i'th'cauſe againſt your City,
In part for his ſake mov'd.

Enter the other Senators.

1 Heere come our Brothers.

3 No talke of Timon, nothing of him expect,
The Enemies Drumme is heard and fearefull ſcouring
Doth choake the ayre with duſt: In, and prepare,
Ours is the fall I feare, our Foes the Snare. Exeunt.

Enter a Souldier in the Woods ſeeking Timon.

Sol. By all deſeription this ſhould be the place.
Whos heere? Speake hoa. No anſwer? What is this?
Tymon is dead, who hath out-ſtretcht his ſpan,
Some Beaſt reade this; There do's no live a Man.
Dead ſure, and this his Grave, what's on this Tomb,
I cannot read: the Charracter Ile take with wax,
Our Captaine hath in every Figure skill,
An ag'd Interpreter, though yong in dayes:
Before proud Athens hee's ſet downe by this,
Whoſe fall the marke of his ambition is. Exit

Trumpets ſound. Enter Alcibiades with his Powers before Athens.

Alc. Sound to this Coward and laſcivious Towne,
Our terrible approach.

Sounds a Parly,

The Senators appeare upon the wals.

Till now you have gone on, and fill'd the time
With all Licentious meaſure, making your willes
The ſcope of Iuſtice. Till now my ſelfe and ſuch
As ſlept within the ſhadow of your power
Have wander'd with our traverſt Armes, and breath'd
Our ſufferance vainly. Now the time is fluſh,
When crouching Marrow in the bearer ſtrong
Cries (of it ſelfe) no more: Now breathleſſe wrong,
Shall ſit and pant in your great Chaires of eaſe,
And purſie Inſolence ſhall breake his winde
With feare and horrid flight.

1. Sen. Noble and young;
When thy firſt greefes were but a meere conceit,
Ere thou had'ſt power, or we had cauſe to feare,
We ſent to thee, to give thy rages Balme,
To wipe out our Ingratitude, with Loves
Above their quantity.

2 So did we wooe
Transformed Timon to our Citties love
By humble Meſſage, and by promiſt meanes:
We were not all unkinde, nor all deſerve
The common ſtroke of warre.

1 Theſe walles of ours,
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You have receiv'd your greefe: Nor are they ſuch,
That theſe great Towres, Trophees, & Schools ſhould fall
For private faults in them.

2 Nor are they living

Who were the motives that you firſt went out,
Shame (that they wanted cunning in exceſſe)
Hath broke their hearts, Martch, Noble Lord,
Into our City with thy Banners ſpred,
By decimation and a tythed death;
If thy Revenges hunger for that Food
Which Nature loathes, take thou the deſtin'd tenth;
And by the hazard of the ſpotted dye,
Let dye the ſpotted.
1 All have not offended:
For thoſe that were, it is not ſquare to take,
On thoſe that are, Revenge: Crimes, like Lands
Are not inherited, then deere Countryman,
Bring in thy rankes, but leave without thy rage,
Spare thy Athenian Cradle, and thoſe Kin
Which in the bluſter of thy wrath muſt fall
With thoſe that have offended, like a Shepheard,
Approch the Fold, and cull th'infected forth,
But kill not al together.
2 What thou wilt,
Thou rather ſhalt inforce it with thy ſmile,
Then hew too't, with thy Sword.
1 Set but thy foot
Againſt our rampyr'd gates, and they ſhall ope:
So thou wilt ſend thy gentle heart before,
To ſay thou't enter Friendly.
2 Throw thy Glove,
Or any Token of thine Honour elſe,
That thou wilt uſe the warres as thy redreſſe,
And not as our Confuſion: All thy Powers
Shall make their harbour in our Towne till wee
Have ſeal'd thy full deſire.
Alc. Then there's my Glove,
Deſcend and open your uncharged Ports,
Thoſe Enemies of Timons, and mine owne
Whom you your ſelves ſhall ſet out for reproofe,
Fall and no more; and to attone your feares
With my more Noble meaning, not a man
Shall paſſe his quarter, or offend the ſtreame
Of Regular Iuſtice in your Citties bounds,
But ſhall be remedied by your publique Lawes
At heavieſt anſwer.
Both. 'Tis moſt Nobly ſpoken.
Alc. Deſcend, and keepe your words.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. My Noble Generall, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd upon the very hemme o'th'Sea,
And on his Graveſtone, this Inſculpture which
With wax I brought away: whoſe ſoft Impreſſion
Interprets for my poore ignorance.

Alcibiades reades the Epitaph.

Heere lies a wretched Coarſe, of wretched Soule bereft,
Seek not my name: A Plague conſume you, Caitifs left:
Heere lye I Timon, who all living men did hate,
Paſſe by, and curſe thy fill, but ſtay not here thy gate.
Theſe well expreſſe in thee thy latter ſpirits:
Though thou abhorrd'ſt in vs our humane greifes,
Scornd'ſt our Braines flow, and thoſe our droplets, which
From niggard Nature fall; yet Rich Conceit
Taught thee to make vaſt Neptune weepe for aye
On thy low Grave: on faults forgiven. Dead
Is Noble Timon, of whoſe Memory
Heereafter more. Bring me into your Citty,
And I will uſe the Olive with my Sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace ſtint war, make each
Preſcribe to other, as each others Leach.
Let our Drummes ſtrike. Exeunt.

THE TRAGEDIE OF IVLIVS CÆSAR.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Flavius, Murellus, and certaine Commoners ouer the Stage.

Flauius.

HEnce: home you idle Creatures, get you home:
Is this a Holiday? What, know you not (Being Mechanicall) you ought not walke
Vpon a labouring day, without the ſigne
Of your Profeſſion? Speake, what Trade art thou?

Car. Why Sir, a Carpenter.

Mur. Where is thy Leather Apron, and thy Rule?
What doſt thou with thy beſt Apparrell on?
You ſir what Trade are you?

Cobl. Truely Sir, in reſpect of a fine Workeman, I am but as you would ſay, a Cobler.

Mur, But what Trade art thou? Anſwer me directly.

Cob. A Trade Sir, that I hope I may uſe with, a ſafe Conſcience, which is indeed Sir, a Mender of bad ſoules.

Fla. What Trade thou knave? Thou naughty knave, what Trade?

Cobl. Nay I beſeech you Sir, be not out with me: yet if you be out Sir I can mend you.

Mur. What mean'ſt thou by that? Mend mee, thou ſawcy Fellow?

Cob. Why ſir Cobble you.

Fla. Thou art a Cobler art thou?

Cob, Truely ſir, all that I live by, is with the Aule: I meddle with no Tradeſmans matters, nor womans matters; but withall I am indeed Sir, a Surgeon to old ſhooes: when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon Neates Leather, have gone upon my handy worke.

Fla. But wherefore art not in thy Shop to day?
Why do'ſt thou leade theſe men about the ſtreets?

Cob. Truly ſir, to weare out their ſhooes, to get my ſelfe into more worke. But indeede ſir we make Holyday to ſee Cæſar, and to reioyce in his Triumph.

Mur. Wherefore reioyce?
What Conqueſt brings he home?
What Tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace in Captive bonds his Chariot Wheeles?
You Blockes, you ſtones, you worſe then ſenſleſſe things:
O you hard hearts, you cruell men of Rome,
Knew you not Pompey many a time and oft?
Have you climb'd up to Walles and Battlements,
To Towres and Windowes? Yea, to Chimney tops,
Your Infants in your Armes, and there have ſate
The live-long day, with patient expectation,
To ſee great Pompey paſſe the ſtreets of Rome:
And when you ſaw his Chariot but appeare,
Have you not made an Vniverſall ſhout,
That Tyber trembled underneath her bankes
To heare the replication of your ſounds,
Made in her Concave Shores?
And do you now put on your beſt attyre?
And do you now cull out a Holyday?
And do you now ſtrew Flowers in his way,
That comes in Triumph over Pompey's blood?
Be gone,
Runne to your houſes, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the Gods to intermit the plague
That needs muſt light on this Ingratitude.

Fla. Go, go, good Countrymen, and for this fault
Aſſemble all the poore men of your ſort;
Draw them to Tyber bankes, and weepe your teares
Into the Channell, till the loweſt ſtreame
Do kiſſe the moſt exalted Shores of all.

Exeunt all the Commoners.

See where their baſeſt mettle be not mou'd,
They vaniſh tongue-tyed in their guiltineſſe:
Go you downe that way towards the Capitoll,
This way will I: Diſrobe the Images,
If you do finde them deckt with Ceremonies.

Mur. May we do ſo?
You know it is the Feaſt of Lupercall.

Fla. It is no matter, let on Images
Be hung with the Cæſars Trophees: Ile about,
And drive away the Vulgar from the ſtreets;
So do you too, where you perceive them thicke.
Theſe growing Feathers, pluckt from Cæſars wing,
Will make him flye an ordinary pitch,
Who elſe would ſoare above the view of men,
And keepe us all in ſervile fearefulneſſe. Exeunt.

Enter Cæſar, Antony for the Courſe, Calphurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Caſſius, Caska, a Soothſayer: after them Murellus and Flavius.

Caſ. Calphurnia.

Cask. Peace ho, Cæſar ſpeakes.

Caſ, Calphurnia.

Calp. Heere my Lord.

Caſ. Stand you directly in Antonio's way,
When he doth run his courſe. Antonio.

Ant. Cæſar, my Lord.

Caſ. Forget not in your ſpeed Antonio,
To touch Calphurnia: for our Elders ſay,

The Barren touched in this holy chace,
Shake off their ſterrile curſe.
Ant. I ſhall remember,
When Cæſar ſayes Do this; it is perform'd.
Cæſ. Set on, and leave no Ceremony out.
Sooth. Cæſar.
Cæſ. Ha? Who calles?
Cask. Bid every noyſe be ſtill: peace yet againe.
Cæſ. Who is it in the preſſe, that calles on me?
I heare a Tongue ſhriller then all the Muſicke
Cry, Cæſar: Speake, Cæſar is turn'd to heare.
Sooth. Beware the Ides of March,
Cæſ. What man is that?
Br. A Sooth-ſayer bids you beware the Ides of March
Cæſ. Set him before me, let me ſee his face.
Caſſi. Fellow, come from the throng, looke opon Cæſar.
Cæſ. What ſayſt thou to me now? Speake once againe.
Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.
Cæſ. He is a Dreamer let us leave him: Paſſe.
Sennet. Exeunt. Manent Brut. & Caſſ.
Caſſi. Will you goe ſee the order of the courſe?
Brut. Not I.
Caſſi. I pray you doe.
Brut. I am not Gameſom: I do lacke ſome part
Of that quicke Spirit that is in Antony:
Let me not hinder Caſſius your deſires;
Ile leave you.
Caſſi. Brutus, I doe obſerue you now of late:
I have not from your eyes, that gentleneſſe
And ſhew of Love, as I was wont to have:
You beare too ſtubborne, and too ſtrange a hand
Over your Friends, that Loves you.
Bru. Caſſius.
Be not deceiv'd: If I have veyl'd my looke,
I turne the trouble of my Countenance
Meerely upon my ſelfe. Vexed I am
Of late, with paſſions of ſome difference,
Conceptions onely proper to my ſelfe,
Which give ſome ſoyle (perhaps) to my Behaviours:
But let not therefore my good Friends be greev'd
(Among which number Caſſius be you one)
Nor conſtrue any further my neglect,
Then, that poore Brutus with himſelfe at warre,
Forgets the ſhewes of Love to other men.
Caſſi. Then Brutus, I have much miſtooke your paſſion,
By meanes whereof, this Breſt of mine hath buried
Thoughts of great value, worthy Cogitations.
Tell me good Brutus, Can you ſee your face?
Brutus. No Caſſius:
For the eye ſees not himſelfe but by reflection,
By ſome other things.
Caſſius. 'Tis iuſt,
And it is very much lamented Brutus,
That you have no ſuch Mirrors, as will turne
Your hidden worthineſſe into your eye,
That you might ſee your ſhadow:
I have heard,
Where many of the beſt reſpect in Rome,
(Except immortall Cæſar) ſpeaking of Brutus,
And groaning vnderneath this Ages yoake,
Have wiſh'd, that Noble Brutus had his eyes.
Bru. Into what daungers would you
Leade me Caſſius?
That you would have me ſeeke into my ſelfe,
For that which is not in me?
Caſ. Therefore good Brutus, be prepar'd to heare:
And ſince you know you cannot ſee your ſelfe
So well as by Reflection; I your Glaſſe,
Will modeſtly diſcouer to your ſelfe
That of your ſelfe, which you yet know not of.
And be not iealous on me, gentle Brutus:
Where I a common Laughter, or did uſe
To ſtale with ordinary Oathes my love
To every new Proteſter: if you know,
That I do fawne on men, and hugge them hard,
And after ſcandall them: or if you know,
That I profeſſe in Banquetting
To all the Rout, then hold me dangerous.

Flouriſh, and Shout.

Bru. What meanes this Showting?
I do feare, the People choole Cæſar
For their King.
Caſſi. I do you feare it?
Then muſt I thinke you would not have it ſo.
Bru. I would not Caſſius, yet I love him well:
But wherefore do you hold me here ſo long?
What is it, that you would impart to me?
If it be ought toward the generall good,
Set Honour in one eye, and Death i'th other,
And I will looke on both indifferently:
For let the Gods ſo ſpeed mee, as I love
The name of Honour, more then I feare death.
Caſſi. I know that vertue to be in you Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward favour,
Well, Honor is the ſubiect of my Story:
I cannot tell, what you and other men
Thinke of this life: But my ſingle ſelfe,
I had as liefe not be, as live to be
In awe of ſuch a Thing, as I my ſelfe.
I was borne free as Cæſar, ſo were you,
We both have fed as well, and we can both
Endure the Winters cold, as well as hee.
For once. upon a Rawe and Guſty day,
The troubled Tyber, chaſing with her Shores,
Cæſar ſaies to me, Dar'ſt thou Caſſius now
Leape in with me into this angry Flood,
And ſwim to yonder Point? Vpon the word,
Accounted as I was, I plunged in,
And bad him follow: ſo indeed he did.
The Torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With luſty Sinewes, throwing it aſide,
And ſtemming it with hearts of Controverſie.
But ere we could arrive the Point propos'd,
Cæſar cride. Helpe me Caſſius, or I ſinke.
I (as Æneas, our great anceſtor,
Did from the Flames of Troy, upon his ſhoulder
The old Anchiſes beare) ſo, from the waves of Tyber
Did I the tyred Cæſar: And this Man,
Is now become a God, and Caſſius is
A wretched Creature, and muſt bend his body,
If Cæſar careleſly but nod on him.
He had a Feaher when he was in Spaine,
And when the Fit was on him, I did marke
How he did ſhake: Tis true, this God did ſhake,
His Coward lipes did from their colour flye,
And that ſame eye, whoſe bend doth awe the World,
Did looſe his Luſtre: I did heare him grone:
I, and that Tongue of his, that bad the Romans
Marke him, and write his Speeches in their Bookes,
Alas, it cried, Give me ſome drinke Titinius,

As a ſicke Girle: Ye Gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of ſuch a feeble temper ſhould
So get the ſtart of the Maieſticke world,
And beare the Palme alone.
Shout. Flouriſh.
Bru. Another generall ſhout?
I doe beleeve, that theſe applauſes are
For ſome new Honors, that are heap'd on Cæſar.
Caſſi. Why man, he doth beſtride the narrow world
Like a Coloſſus, and we petty men
Walke under his huge legges, and peepe about
To finde our ſelves diſhonourable Graves.
Men at ſometime, are Maſters of their Fates.
The fault (deere Brutus) is not in our Starres,
But in our Selves, that we are underlings.
Brutus and Cæſar: What ſhould be in that Cæſar?
Why ſhould that name be ſounded more then yours
Write them together: Yours, is as faire a Name:
Sound them, it doth become the mouth aſwell.
Weigh them, it is as heavy: Coniure with'em,
Brutus will ſtart a Spirit as ſoone as Cæſar.
Now in the names of all the Gods at once,
Vpon what meate doth this our Cæſar feede,
That he is growne ſo great? Age, thou art ſham'd.
Rome, thou haſt loſt the breed of Noble Bloods.
When went there by an Age, ſince the great Flood,
But it was fam'd with more then with one man?
When could they ſay (till now) that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide Walkes in compaſt but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and Roome enough
When there is in it but one onely man.
O! you and I, have heard our Fathers ſay,
There was a Brutus once, that would have brook'd
Th'eternall Divell to keepe his State in Rome,
As eaſily as a King.
Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing iealous:
What you would worke me to, I have ſome ayme:
How I have though of this, and of theſe times
I ſhall recount heereafter. For this preſent.
I would not ſo (with love I might intreat you)
Be any further moov'd: What you have ſaid,
I will conſider: what you have to ſay
I will with patience heare and finde a time
Both meet to heare, and anſwer ſuch high thinges.
Till then my Noble Friend, chew upon this:
Brutus had rather be a Villager,
Then to repute himſelfe a Sonne of Rome
Vnder theſe hard Conditions, as this time
Is like to lay upon us.
Caſſi. I am glad that my weake words
Have ſtrucke but thus much ſhew of fire from Brutus.

Enter Cæſar and his Traine.

Bru. The Games are done,
And Cæſar is returning.
Caſſi. As they paſſe by,
Plucke Caska by the Sleeve,
And he will (after his ſowre faſhion) tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to day.
Bru. I will do ſo: but looke you Caſſius,
The angry ſpot doth blow on Cæſars brow,
And all the reſt looke like a chidden Traine;
Calphurnia's Cheeke is pale, and Cicero
Lookes with ſuch Ferret, and ſuch fiery eyes
As we have ſeene him in the Capitoll
Being croſt in Conference, by ſome Senators,
Caſſi. Caska will tell us what the matter is.
Cæſ. Antonio.
Ant. Cæſar.
Cæſ. Let me have men about me that are fat,
Sleeke-headed men, and ſuch as ſleepe a-nights:
Yond Caſſius has a leane and hungry looke,
He thinkes too much: ſuch men are daungerous.
Ant. Feare him not Cæſar, he's not daungerous,
He is a Noble Roman, and well given.
Cæſ. Would he were fatter; But I feare him not:
Yet if my name were lyable to feare,
I do not know the man I ſhould avoyd
So ſoone as that ſpare Caſſius. He reades much,
He is a great obſerver, and he lookes
Quite through the Deedes of men. He loves no Playes,
As thou doſt Antony: he heares no Muſicke:
Seldome he ſmiles, and ſmiles in ſuch a ſort
As if he mock'd himſelfe, and ſcorn'd his ſpirit
That could be mov'd to ſmile at any thing.
Such men as he, be never at hearts eaſe,
Whiles they behold a greater then themſelves,
And therefore are they very daungerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Then what I feare: for alwayes I am Cæſar
Come on my right hand, for this eare is deafe,
And tell me truely, what thou think'ſt of him.
Sennit.

Exeunt Cæſar and his Traine.

Cask. You pul'd me by the cloake, would you ſpeake with me?

Bru. I Caska, tell us what hath chanc'd to day
That Cæſar lookes ſo ſad.
Cask. Why you were with him, were you not?
Bru. I ſhould not then aske Caska what had chanc'd.

Cask. Why there was a Crowne offer'd him; and being offer'd him, he put it by with the backe of his hand thus, and then the people fell a ſhouting.

Bru. What was the ſecond noyſe for?
Cask. Why for that too.
Caſi. They ſhouted thrice: what was the laſt cry for?
Cask. Why for that too.
Bru. Was the Crowne offer'd him thrice?

Cask. I marry was't, and hee put it by thrice, every time gentler then other; and at every putting by, mine honeſt Neighbors ſhowted.

Caſ. Who offer'd him the Crowne?
Cask. Why Antony.
Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Caska.

Caska. I can as well bee hang'd as tell the manner of it: It were meere Foolery, I did not marke it. I ſawe Mark Antony offer him a Crowne, yet 'twas not a Crowne neyther, 'twas one of theſe Coronets: and as I told you, hee put it by once: but for all that, to my thinking, he would faine have had it. Then he offered it to him againe: then hee put it by againe: but to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time: he put it the third time by, and ſtill as he refus'd it, the rabblement howted, and clapp'd their chopt hands, and threw uppe ther ſweaty Night-cappes, and uttered ſuch a deale of ſtinking breath, becauſe Cæſar refus'd the Crowne, that it had (almoſt) choaked Cæſar: for hee ſwoonded, and fell downe at it: And for mine owne part, I durſt not laugh, for feare of opening my Lippes, and receiving the bad Ayre.

Caſſi. But ſoft I pray you: what, did Cæſar ſwound?

Cask. He fell downe in the Market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was ſpeechleſſe.

Brut. 'Tis very like he hath the Falling ſickeneſſe.

Caſſi. No, Cæſar hath it not: but you, and I,
And honeſt Caska, we have the falling ſickeneſſe.

Cask. I know not what you meane by that, but I am ſure Cæſar fell downe. If the tag-ragge people did not clap him, and hiſſe him, according as he pleas'd, and diſpleas'd them, as they uſe to doe the Players in the Theatre, I am no true man.

Brut. What ſaid he, when he came unto himſelfe?

Cask. Mary, before he fell downe, when he perceiv'd the common Heard was glad he refus'd the Crowne, he pluckt me ope his Dovblet, and offer'd them his Throat to cut: and I had beene a man of any Occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might goe to Hell among the Rogues, and ſo hee fell. When he came to himſelfe againe, he ſaid, If hee had done, or ſaid any thing amiſſe, he deſir'd their worſhips to thinke it was his infirmity. Three or foure Wenches where I ſtood, cryed, Alaſſe good Soule, and forgave him with all their hearts: But there's heed to be taken of them; if Cæſar had ſtabl'd their Mothers, they would have done no leſſe.

Brut. And after that, he came thus ſad away.

Cask. I.

Caſſi. Did Cicero ſay any thing?

Cask. I, he ſpoke Greeke.

Caſſi. To what effect?

Cask. Nay, and I tell you that, Ile ne're looke you i'th'face againe. But thoſe that underſtood him, ſmil'd at one another, and ſhooke their heads: but for mine owne part, it was Greeke to me. I could tell you more newes too: Murellus and Flavius, for pulling Scarffes off Cæſars Imags, are put to ſilence. Fare you well. There was more Foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Caſſi. Will you ſuppe with me to night, Caska?

Cask. No, I am promis'd forth.

Caſſi. Will you Dine with me to morrow?

Cask. I, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your Dinner worth the eating.

Caſſi. Good, I will expect you.

Cask. Doe ſo: farewell both.

Exit.

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this growne to be?
He was quicke Mettle, when he went to Schoole.

Caſſi. So is he now, in execution
Of any bold or Noble Enteprize,
How-ever he puts on this tardy forme:
This Rudeneſſe is a Sawce to his good Wit,
Which gives men ſtomacke to diſgeſt his words
With better Appetites

Brut. And ſo it is:
For this time I will leave you:
To morrow if yon pleaſe to ſpeake with with me,
I will come home to you: or if you will,
Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Caſſi. I will doe ſo: till then, thinke of the world.

Exit Brutus.

Well Brutus, thon art: Noble yet I ſee,
Thy houourable Mettall may be wrought
From that it is diſpos'd, therefore tis meet,
That Noble mindes keepe ever with their likes:
For who ſo firme, that cannot be ſeduc'd?
Cæſar doth beare me hard, bnt he loves Brutus.
If I were Brutus now, and he were Caſſius,
He ſhould not humor me. I will this Night,
In ſeverall hands, in at his Windowes throw,
As if they came from ſeverall Citizens,
Writtings, all tending to the great opinion
That Rome holds of his Name: wherein obſcurely
Cæſars Ambition ſhall be glanced at.
And after this, let Cæſar ſeat him ſure,
For wee will ſhake him, or worſe dayes endure.

Exit.

Thunder, and Lightning. Enter Caska, and Cicero.

Cic. Good even, Caska: brought you Cæſar home?
Why are you breathleſſe, and why ſtare you ſo?

Cask. Are not you mov'd, when all the ſway of Earth
Shakes, like a thing unfirme? O Cicero,
I have ſeene Tempeſts, when the ſcolding Winds
Have riu'd the knotty Oakes, and I have ſeene
Th'ambitious Ocean ſwell, and rage, and foame,
To be exalted with the threatning Clouds:
But never till to Night, never till now,
Did I goe through a Tempeſt-dropping-fire.
Eyther there is a Civill ſtrife in Heaven,
Or elſe the World, too ſawcy with the Gods,
Incenſes them to ſend deſtruction.

Cic. Why, ſaw you any thing more wonderfull?

Cask. A common ſlave, you know him well by ſight,
Held up his left hand, which did flame and burne
Like twenty Torches ioyn'd; and yet his hand,
Not ſenſible of fire, remain'd unſcorch'd.
Beſides, I ha'not ſince put up my Sword,
Againſt the Capitoll I met a Lyon,
Who glaz'd upon me, and went ſurely by,
Without annoying me. And there were drawne
Vpon a heape, a hundred gaſtly Women,
Transformed with their feare, who ſwore, they ſaw
Men, all in fire, walke up and downe the ſtreetes.
And yeſterday, the Bird of Night did ſit,
Even at Noone day, upon the Market place,
Howting, and ſhreeking. When theſe Prodigies
Doe ſo conioyntly meet, let not men ſay,
Theſe are their Reaſons they are Naturall:
For I beleeve, they are portentous things
Vnto the Clymate, that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a ſtrange diſpoſed time:
But men may conſtrue things after their faſhion,
Cleane from the purpoſe of the things themſelves.
Comes Cæſar to the Capitoll to morrow?

Cask. He doth: for he did bid Antonio
Send word to you, he would be there to morrow.

Cic. Good-night then, Caska:
This diſturbed Skie is not to walke in.

Cask. Farewell Cicero.

Exit Cicero.

Enter Caſſius.

Caſſi. Who's there?

Cask. A Romane.

Caſſi. Caska, by your Voyce.

Cask. Your Eare is good.
Caſſius, what Night is this?

Caſſi. A very pleaſing Night to honeſt men.

Cask. Who ever knew the Heavens menace ſo?

Caſſi. Thoſe that have knowne the Earth ſo full of faults.

For my part, I have walk'd about the ſtreets,
Submitting me unto the perillous Night;
And thus unbraced, Caſka, as you ſee,
Have bar'd my Boſome to the Thunder-ſtone:
And when the croſſe blew Lightning ſeem'd to open
The Breſt of Heaven, I did preſent my ſelfe
Even in the ayme, and very flaſh of it.
Cask. But wherefore did you ſo much tempt the Heauens?
It is the part of men, to feare and tremble,
When the moſt mighty Gods, by tokens ſend
Such dreadfull Heraulds, to aſtoniſh us.
Caſſi. You are dull, Caſka:
And thoſe ſparkes of Life that ſhould be in a Roman,
You doe want or elſe you uſe not.
You looke pale, and gaze and put on feare,
And caſt your ſelfe in wonder,
To ſee the ſtrange impatience of the Heavens:
But if you would conſider the true cauſe,
Why all theſe Fires, why all theſe gliding Ghoſts,
Why Birds and Beaſts, from quality and kinde,
Why Old men, Fooles, and Children calculate,
Why all theſe things change from their Ordinance,
Their Natures, and pre-formed Faculties,
To monſtrous quality; why you ſhall finde,
That Heaven hath infus'd them with theſe Spirits,
To make them Inſtrments of feare, and warning,
Vnto ſome monſtrous State.
Now could I (Caska) name to thee a man,
Moſt like this dreadfull Night,
That Thunders, Lightens, opens Graves, and teares,
As doth the Lyon in the Capitoll:
A man no mightier then thy ſelfe, or me,
In perſonall action; yet prodigious growne,
And fearefull, as theſe ſtrange eruptions are.
Cask. Tis Cæſar that you meane:
Is it not, Caſſius?
Caſ. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Have Thewes, and Limbes, like to their Anceſtors;
But woe the while, our Fathers mindes are dead,
And we are govern'd with our Mothers ſpirits,
Our yoake, and ſufferance, ſhew us Womaniſh.
Cask. Indeed, they ſay, the Senators to morrow
Meane to eſtabliſh Cæſar as a King:
And he ſhall weare his Crowne by Sea, and Land,
In every place, ſave here in Italy.
Caſ. I know where I will weare this Dagger then;
Caſſius from Bondage will deliver Caſſius:
Therein, yee Gods, you make the weake moſt ſtrong;
Therein, yee Gods, you Tyrants doe defeat.
Nor Stony Tower, nor Walls of beaten Braſſe,
Nor ayre-leſſe Dungeon, nor ſtrong Linkes of Iron,
Can be retentive to the ſtrength of ſpirit:
But Life being weary of theſe worldly Barres,
Never lacks power to diſmiſſe it ſelfe.
If I know this, know all the World beſides,
That part of Tyranny that I doe beare,
I can ſhake off at pleaſure. Thunder ſtill.
Cask. So can I:
So every Bond-man in his owne hand beares
The power to cancell his Captivity.
Caſ. And why ſhould Cæſar be a Tyrant then?
Poore man, I know he would not be a Wolfe,
But that he ſees the Romans are but Sheepe;
He were no Lyon, were not Romans Hindes.
Thoſe that with haſte will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weake Strawes. What traſh is Rome?
What Rubbiſh, and what Offall? when it ſerves
For the baſe matter, to illuminate
So vile a thing as Cæſar. But oh Griefe,
Where haſt thou led me? I (perhaps) ſpeake this
Before a willing Bond-man: then I know
My anſwere muſt be made. But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.
Cask. You ſpeake to Caska, and to ſuch a man,
That is no flearing Tell-tale. Hold, my Hand:
Be factious for reddreſſe of all theſe Griefes,
And I will ſet this foot of mine as farre,
As who goes fartheſt,
Caſ. There's a Bargaine made.
Now know you, Caska, I have mov'd already
Some certaine of the Nobleſt minded Romans
To under-goe, with me, an Enterprize,
Of Honourable dangerous conſequence;
And I doe know by this, they ſtay for me
In Pompeyes Porch: for now this fearefull Night,
There is no ſtirre, or walking in the ſtreetes;
And the Complexion of the Element
Is Favors, like the Worke we have in hand,
Moſt bloody, fiery, and moſt terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Caska. Stand cloſe a while, for heere comes one in haſte.
Caſ. Tis Cinna, I doe know him by his Gate,
He is a friend. Cinna, where haſte you ſo?
Cinna. To finde out you: Who's that, Metellus Cymber?
Caſ. No, it is Caska, one incorporate
To our Attempts. Am I not ſtay'd for, Cinna?
Cin. I am glad on't.
What a fearefull Night?
There's two or three of us have ſeene ſtrange ſights.
Caſ. Am I not ſtay'd for? tell me.
Cin. Yes, you are, O Caſsius,
If you could but winne the Noble Brutus
To our party——
Caſ. Be you content. Good Cinna take this Paper,
And looke you lay it in the Pretors Chayre,
Where Brutus may but finde it: and throw this
In at his Window; ſet this up with Waxe
Vpon old Brutus Statue: all this done,
Repaire to Pompeyes Porch, where you ſhall finde us.
Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?
Cin. All, but Metellus Cymber, and hee's gone
To ſeeke you at your houſe. Well, I will hie,
And ſo beſtow theſe Papers as you bad me.
Caſ. That done, repayre to Pompeyes Theater.
Exit Cinna.
Come Caska, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his houſe: three parts of him
Is ours already, and the man entire
Vpon the next encounter, yeelds him ours.
Cask. O, he ſits high in all the Peoples hearts:
And that which would appeare Offence in vs,
His Countenance, like richeſt Alchymie,
Will change to Vertue, and to Worthineſſe.
Caſ. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You have right well conceited: let us goe,
For it is after Mid-night, and ere day,
We will awake him, and be ſure of him.
Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Brutus in his Orchard.

Bru. What Lucius, hoe?
I cannot, by the progreſſe of the Starres,
Give gueſſe how neere to day—Lucius, I ſay?
I would it were my fault to ſleepe ſo ſoundly.
When Lucius, when? awake, I ſay: what Lucius?
Enter Lucius.
Luc. Call'd you, my Lord?
Bru. Get me a Taper in my Study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.
Luc. I will, my Lord. Exit.
Bru. It muſt be by his death: and for my part,
I know no perſonall cauſe, to ſpurne at him,
But for the generall. He would be crown'd:
How that might change his nature, there's the queſtion?
It is the bright day, that brings forth the Adder,
And that craves wary walking: Crowne him that,
And then I graunt we put a Sting in him,
That at his will he may doe danger with.
Th'abuſe of Greatneſſe, is, when it dis-joynes
Remorſe from Power: And to ſpeake truth of Cæſar,
I have not knowne, when his Affections ſway'd
More then his Reaſon. But tis a common proofe,
That Lowlyneſſe is young Ambitions Ladder,
Whereto the Climber upward turnes his Face:
But when he once attaines the upmoſt Round,
He then unto the Ladder turnes his Backe,
Lookes in the Clouds, ſcorning the baſe degrees
By which he did aſcend: ſo Cæſar may;
Then leſt he may, prevent. And ſince the Quarrell
Will beare no colour, for the thing he is,
Faſhion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would runne to theſe, and theſe extremities:
And therfore thinke him as a Serpents egge,
Which hatch'd, would as his kinde grow miſchievous;
And kill him in the ſhell.
Enter Lucius.
Luc. The Taper burneth in your Cloſet, Sir:
Searching the Window for a Flint, I found
This Paper, thus ſeal'd up, and I am ſure
It did not lye there when I went to Bed.
Gives him the Letter.
Bru. Get you to Bed againe, it is not day:
Is not to morrow (Boy) the firſt of March?
Luc. I know not, Sir.
Bru. Looke in the Calender, and bring me word.
Luc. I will, Sir. Exit.
Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the ayre,
Give ſo much light, that I may reade by them.
Opens the Letter, and reades.
Brutus thou ſleep'ſt; awake, and ſee thy ſelfe:
Shall Rome, &c. ſpeake, ſtrike, redreſſe.
Brutus, thou ſleep'ſt: awake.
Such inſtigations have beene often dropt,
Where I have tooke them up:
Shall Rome, &c. Thus muſt I piece it out:
Shall Rome ſtand under one mans awe? What Rome?
My Anceſtors did from the ſtreetes of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a King.
Speake, ſtrike, redreſſe. Am I entreated
To ſpeake, and ſtrike? O Rome, I make the promiſe,
If the redreſſe will follow, thou receiveſt
Thy full Petition at the hand of Brutus.
Enter Lucius.
Luc. Sir, March is waſted fifteene dayes.
Knocke within.
Bru. Tis good. Go to the Gate, ſome body knocks:
Since Caſſius firſt did whet me againſt Cæſar,
I have not ſlept.
Betweene the acting of a dreadfull thing,
And the firſt motion, all the Interim is
Like a Phantaſma, or a hideous Dreame:
The Genius, and the mortall Inſtruments
Are then in councell; and the ſtate of man,
Like to a little Kingdome, ſuffers then
The nature of an Inſurrection.

Enter Lucius.
Luc. Sir, tis your Brother Caſſius at the Doore,
Who doth deſire to ſee you.
Bru. Is he alone?
Luc. No, Sir, there are moe with him.
Bru. Doe you know them?
Luc. No, Sir, their Hats are pluckt about their Eares,
And halfe their Faces buried in their Cloathes,
That by no meanes I may diſcover them,
By any marke of favour.
Bru. Let'em enter:
They are the Faction. O Conſpiracie,
Sham'ſt thou to ſhew thy dang'rous Brow by Night,
When evills are moſt free? O then, by day
Where wilt thou finde a Caverne darke enough,
To maske thy monſtrous Viſage? Seeke none Conſpiracie,
Hide it in Smiles, and Affability:
For if thou path, thy native ſemblance on,
Not Erebus it ſelfe were dimme enough,
To hide thee from prevention.

Enter the Conſpirators, Caſsius, Caska, Decius, Cinna, Metellus, and Trebonius.

Caſ. I thinke we are too bold upon your Reſt:
Good morrow Brutus, doe we trouble you?
Bru. I have beene up this howre, awake all Night:
Know I theſe men, that come along with you?
Caſ. Yes, every man of them; and no man here
But honors you: and every one doth wiſh,
You had but that opinion of your ſelfe,
Which every Noble Roman beares of you.
This is Trebonius.
Bru. He is welcome hither.
Caſ. This, Decius Brutus.
Bru. He is welcome too.
Caſ. This, Caska; this Cinna; and this, Metellus Cimber.
Bru. They are all welcome.
What watchfull Cares doe interpoſe themſelves
Betwixt your Eyes, and Night?
Caſ. Shall I intreat a word? They whiſper.
Dec. Here lyes the Eaſt: doth not the Day breake heere?
Cask. No.
Cin. O pardon, Sir, it doth; and yon grey Lines,
That fret the Clouds, are Meſſengers of Day.
Cask. You ſhall confeſſe, that you are both deceiv'd:
Heere, as I point my Sword, the Sunne ariſes,
Which is a great way growing on the South,
Weigh-

Weighing the youthfull Seaſon of the yeare.
Some two moneths hence,up higher toward the North
He firſt preſents his fire,and the high Eaſt
Stands as the Capitoll,directly heere.
Bru. Give me your hands all over,one by one.
Caſ. And let us ſweare our Reſolution.
Bru. No,not an Oath:if not the Face of men,
The ſufferance of our Soules,the times Abuſe;
If theſe be Motives weake,breake off betimes,
And every man hence,to his idle bed:
So let high-ſighted-Tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by Lottery. But if theſe
(As I am ſure they do) beare fire enough
To kindle Cowards,and to ſteele with valour
The melting Spirits of women; Then Countrymen,
What neede we any ſpurre,but our owne cauſe
To pricke us to redreſſe? What other Bond,
Then ſecret Romans,that have ſpoke the word,
And will not palter? And what other Oath,
Then Honeſty to Honeſty ingag'd,
That this ſhall be,or we will fall for it.
Sweare Prieſts and Cowards,and men Cautelous
Old feeble Carrions,and ſuch ſuffering Soules
That welcome wrongs: Vnto bad cauſes,ſweare
Such Creatures as men doubt;but do not ſtaine
The even vertue of our Enterprize,
Nor th'inſupreſſive Mettle of our Spirits,
To thinke,that or our Cauſe,or our Performance
Did neede an Oath. When every drop of blood
That every Roman beares,and Nobly beares
Is guilty of a ſeverall Baſtardy,
If he do breake the ſmalleſt Particle
Of any promiſe that hath paſt from him.
Caſ. But what of Cicero? Shall we ſound him?
I thinke he will ſtand very ſtrong with us.
Cask. Let us not leave him out.
Cin. No,by no meanes.
Met. O let us have him,for his Silver haires
Will purchaſe us a good opinion:
Aud buy mens voyces,to commend our deeds:
It ſhall be ſayd,his judgement rul'd our hands,
Our youths,and wildeneſſe, ſhall no whit appeare,
But all be buried in his Gravity.
Bru. O name him not;let us not breake with him,
For he will never follow any thing
That other men begin.
Caſ. Then leave him out.
Cask. Indeed,he is not fit.
Dec. Shall no man elſe be toucht,but onely Cæſar?
Caſ. Decius,well urg'd:I thinke it is not meet,
Marke Antony,ſo well belov'd of Cæſar,
Should out-live Cæſar,we ſhall finde of him
A ſhrew'd Contriver. And you know,his meanes
If he improve them,may well ſtretch ſo farre
As to annoy us all:which to prevent,
Let Antony and Cæſar fall together.
Bru. Our courſe will ſeeme too bloody, Caius Caſſius,
To cut the Head off,and then hacke the Limbes:
Like Wrath in death,and Envy afterwards:
For Antony,is but a Limbe of Cæſar.
Let's be Sacrificers,but not Butchers Caius:
We all ſtand up againſt the ſpirit of Cæſar,
And in the Spirit of men,there is no blood:
O that we then could come by Cæſars Spirits,
And not diſmember Cæſar! But(alas)
Cæſar muſt bleed for it. And gentle Friends,
Let's kill him Boldly,but not Wrathfully:
Let's carve him,as a Diſh fit for the Gods,
Not hew him as a Carkaſſe fit for Hounds;
And let our Hearts,as ſubtle Maiſters do,
Stirre up their Servants to an acte of Rage,
And after ſeeme to chide,em. This ſhall make
Our purpoſe Neceſſary,and not Envious.
Which ſo appearing to the common eyes,
We ſhall be call'd Purgers not Murderers.
And for Marke Antony,thinke not of him:
For he can do no more then Cæſars Arme,
When Cæſars head is off.
Caſ. Yet I feare him,
For in the ingrafted love he beares to Cæſar.
Bru. Alas,good Caſsius,do not thinke of him:
If he love Cæſar,all that he can do
Is to himſelfe;take thought,and dye for Cæſar.
And that were much he ſhould:for he is given
To ſports,to wildeneſſe,and much company.
Treb. There is no feare in him;let him not dye,
For he will live,and laugh at this heereafter.
Clocke ſtrikes.
Bru. Peace,count the Clocke.
Caſ. The Clocke hath ſtricken three.
Treb. Tis time to part.
Caſ. But it is doubtfull yet,
Whether Cæſar will come forth to day,or no:
For he is Superſtitious growne of late,
Quite from the maine Opinion he held once,
Of Fantaſie,of Dreames,and Ceremonies:
It may be,theſe apparant Prodigies,
The unaccuſtom'd Terror of this night,
And the perſwaſion of his Augurers,
May hold him from the Capitoll to day.
Dec. Never feare that:If he be ſo reſolv'd,
I can ore-ſway him:for he loves to heare,
That Vnicornes may be betray'd with Trees,
And Beares with Glaſſes,Elephants with Holes,
Lyons with Toiles,and men with Flatterers.
But,when I tell him,he hates Flatterers,
He ſayes,he does;being then moſt flattered.
Let me worke:
For I can give his humour the true bent;
And I will bring him to the Capitoll.
Caſ. Nay,we will all of us,be there to fetch him.
Bru. By the eight houre,is that the uttermoſt?
Cin. Be that the uttermoſt,and faile not then.
Met. Caius Ligarius doth beare Cæſar hatred,
Who rated him for ſpeaking well of Pompey,
I wonder none of you have thought of him.
Bru. Now good Metellus go along by him:
He loves me well,and I have given him Reaſons,
Send him but hither,and Ile faſhion him.
Caſ. The morning comes upon's:
Wee'l leave you Brutus,
And friends diſperſe your ſelves;but all remember
What you have ſaid,and ſhew your ſelves true Romans.
Bru. Good Gentlemen,looke freſh and merrily,
Let not our lookes put on our purpoſes,
But beare it as our Roman Actors do,
With untyr'd Spirits,and formall Conſtancy,
And ſo good morrow to you every one. Exeunt.
Manet Brutus
Boy:Lucius: Faſt aſleepe? It is no matter,
Enjoy the hony-heavy-Dew of Slumber:
Thou haſt no Figures,nor no Fantaſies,

Which buſie care drawes, in the braines of men;
Therefore thou ſleep'ſt ſo ſound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my Lord.
Bru. Portia, What meane you? wherfore riſe you now?
It is not for your health, thus to commit
Your weake condition, to the raw cold morning.
Por. Nor for yours neither. Y'have ungently Brutus
Stole from my bed: and yeſternight at Supper
You ſodainly aroſe, and walk'd about,
Muſing, and ſighing, with your armes a-croſſe:
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You ſtar'd upon me, with ungentle lookes.
I urg'd you further, then you ſcratch'd your head,
And too impatiently ſtampt with your foote:
Yet I inſiſted, yet you anſwer'd not,
But with an angry wafter of your hand
Gave ſigne for me to leave you: So I did,
Fearing to ſtrengthen that impatience
Which ſeem'd too much inkindled; and withall,
Hoping it was but an effect of Humor,
Which ſometime hath his houre with every man.
It will not let you eate, nor talke, nor ſleepe;
And could it worke ſo much upon your ſhape,
As it hath much prevail'd on your Condition,
I ſhould not know you Brutus. Deare my Lord,
Make me acquainted with your cauſe of greefe,
Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.
Por. Brutus is wiſe, and were he not in health,
He would embrace the meanes to come by it.
Bru. Why ſo I do: good Portia go to bed.
Por. Is Brutus ſicke? And is it Phyſicall
To walke unbraced, and ſucke up the humors
Of the darke Morning? What, is Brutus ſicke?
And will he ſteale out of his wholeſome bed
To dare the vile contagion of the Night?
And tempt the Rhewmy, and unpurged Ayre,
To adde unto his ſickneſſe? No my Brutus,
You have ſome ſicke Offence within your minde,
Which by the Right and Vertue of my place
I ought to know of: And upon my knees,
I charme you, by my once commended Beauty,
By all your vowes of Love, and that great Vow
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, your ſelfe; your halfe;
Why you are heavy, and what men to night
Have had reſort to you: for heere have beene
Some ſixe or ſeven, who did hide their faces
Even from darkneſſe.
Bru. Kneele not gentle Portia.
Por. I ſhould not neede, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the Bond of Marriage, tell me Brutus,
Is it excepted, I ſhould know no Secrets
That appertaine to you? Am I your Selfe,
But as it were in ſort, or limitation?
To keepe with you at Meales, comfort your Bed,
And talke to you ſometimes? Dwell I but in the Suburbs
Of your good pleaſure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus Harlot, not his Wife.
Bru. You are my true and honourable Wife,
As deere to me, as are the ruddy droppes
That viſit my ſad heart.
Por. If this were true, then ſhould I know this ſecret.
I graunt I am a Woman; but withall,
A Woman that Lord Brutus tooke to Wife:
I graunt I am a Woman; but withall,
A Woman well reputed: Cato's Daughter.
Thinke you, I am no ſtronger then my Sex
Being ſo Father'd, and ſo Husbanded?
Tell me your Counſels, I will not diſcloſe 'em:
I have made ſtrong proofe of my Conſtancie,
Giving my ſelfe a voluntary wound
Heere, in the Thigh: Can I beare that with patience,
And not my Husbands Secrets?
Bru. O ye Gods!
Render me worthy of this Noble Wife. Knocke.
Hearke, hearke, one knockes: Portia go in a while,
And by and by thy boſome ſhall partake
The ſecrets of my Heart.
All my engagements, I will conſtrue to thee,
All the Charactery of my ſad browes:
Leave me with haſt, Exit Portia.

Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius, who's that knockes.
Luc. Heere is a ſicke man that would ſpeake with you.
Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus ſpake of.
Boy, ſtand aſide. Caius Ligarius, how?
Cai. Vouchſafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.
Bru. O what a time have you choſe out brave Caius
To weare a Kerchiefe? Would you were not ſicke.
Cai. I am not ſicke, if Brutus have in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of Honor.
Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand Ligarius,
Had you a healthfull eare to heare of it.
Cai. By all the Gods that Romans bow before,
I heere diſcard my ſickneſſe. Soule of Rome,
Brave Sonne, deriv'd from Honourable Loines,
Thou like an Exorciſt, haſt conjur'd up
My mortified Spirit. Now bid me runne,
And I will ſtrive with things impoſſible,
Yea get the better of them. What's to do?
Bru. A peece of worke,
That will make ſicke men whole.
Cai. But are not ſome whole, that we muſt make ſicke?
Bru. That muſt we alſo. What it is my Caius,
I ſhall unfold to thee, as we are going,
To whom it muſt be done.
Cai. Set on your foote,
And with a heart new-fir'd, I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it ſufficeth
That Brutus leads me on. Thunder.
Bru. Follow me then. Exeunt.

Thunder and Lightning.
Enter Iulius Cæſar in his Night-gowne.

Cæſar. Nor Heaven, nor Earth,
Have beene at peace to night:
Thrice hath Calphurnia, in her ſleepe cryed out;
Helpe, ho: They murther Cæſar. Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Ser. My Lord.
Cæſ. Go bid the Prieſts do preſent Sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of Succeſſe.
Ser. I will my Lord. Exit.

Enter Calphurnia.

Cal. What meane you Cæſar? Think you to walke forth?
You ſhal not ſtirre out of your houſe to day,
Cæſ. Cæſar ſhall forth; the things that threaten'd me,
Ne're look'd but on my backe: When they ſhall ſee
The face of Cæſar, they are vaniſhed.

Calp. Cæſar,I never ſtood on Ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me:There is one within,
Beſides the things that we have heard and ſeene,
Recounts moſt horrid ſights ſeene by the Watch.
A Lioneſſe hath whelped in the ſtreets,
And Graves have yawn'd,and yeelded up their dead;
Fierce fiery Warriours fight upon the Clouds
In Rankes and Squadrons,and right forme of Warre
Which drizel'd blood upon the Capitoll:
The noiſe of Battell hurried in the Ayre:
Horſes did neigh, and dying men did grone,
And Ghoſts did ſhrieke and ſqueale about the ſtreets.
O Cæſar,theſe things are beyond all uſe,
And I do feare them.
Cæſ. What can be avoyded
Whoſe end is purpos'd by the mighty Gods?
Yet Cæſar ſhall go forth:for theſe Predictions
Are to the world in generall,as to Cæſar.
Calp. When Beggers dye,there are no Comets ſeene,
The Heavens themſelves blaze forth the death of Princes
Cæſ. Cowards dye many times before their deaths,
The valiant never taſte of death but once:
Of all the Wonders that I yet have heard,
It ſeemes to me moſt ſtrange that men ſhould feare,
Seeing that death,a neceſſary end
Will come,when it will come.
Enter a Servant.
What ſay the Augurers?
Ser. They would not have you to ſtirre forth to day.
Plucking the intrailes of an Offering forth,
They could not finde a heart within the beaſt.
Cæſ. The Gods do this in ſhame of Cowardice:
Cæſar ſhould be a Beaſt without a heart
If he ſhould ſtay at home to day for feare:
No,Cæſar ſhall not;Danger knowes full well
That Cæſar is more dangerous then he.
We heare two Lyons litter'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible,
And Cæſar ſhall go forth.
Cal. Alas my Lord,
Your wiſedome is conſum'd in confidence:
Do not go forth to day:Call it my feare,
That keepes you in the houſe,and not your owne.
Wee'l ſend Marke Antony to the Senate houſe,
And he ſhall ſay,you are not well to day:
Let me upon my knee,prevaile in this.
Cæſ. Marke Antony ſhall ſay I am not well,
And for thy humor,I will ſtay at home.
Enter Decius.
Heere's Decius Brutus he ſhall tell them ſo.
Dec. Cæſar,all haile:Good morrow worthy Cæſar,
I come to fetch you to the Senate houſe.
Cæſ. And you are come in very happy time,
To beare my greeting to the Senators,
And tell them that I will not come to day:
Cannot,is falſe:and that I dare not,falſer:
I will not come to day,tell them ſo Decius.
Cal. Say he is ſicke.
Cæſ. Shall Cæſar ſend a Lye?
Have I in Conqueſt ſtretcht mine Arme ſo farre,
To be afear'd to tell Gray-beards the truth:
Decius,go tell them,Cæſar will not come.
Dec. Moſt mighty Cæſar let me know ſome cauſe,
Leſt I be laught at when I tell them ſo.
Cæſ. The cauſe is in my Will,I will not come,
That is enough to ſatisfie the Senate.
But for your private ſatisfaction,
Becauſe I love you,I will let you know.
Calphurnia heere my wife,ſtayes me at home:
She dream't to nigh,ſhe ſaw my Statue,
Which like a fountaine,with an hundred ſpouts
Did run pure blood:and many luſty Romans
Came ſmiling,and did bathe their hands in it:
And theſe does ſhe apply,for warnings and portents,
And evils imminent;and on her knee
Hath begg'd,that I will ſtay at home to day.
Dec. This dreame is all amiſſe interpreted,
It was a viſion,faire and fortunate:
Your Statue ſpouting blood in many pipes,
In which ſo many ſmiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies,that from you great Rome ſhall ſucke
Reviving blood,and that great men ſhall preſſe
For Tinctures,Staines,Reliques,and Cogniſance.
This by Calphurnia's Dreame is ſignified.
Cæſ. And this way have you well expounded it.
Dec. I have,when you have heard what I can ſay:
And know it now,the Senate have concluded
To give this day,a Crowne to mighty Cæſar.
If you ſhall ſend them word you will not come,
Their mindes may change.Beſides,it were a mocke
Apt to be render'd,for ſome one to ſay,
Breake up the Senate,till another time,
When Cæſars wife ſhall meete with better Dreames:
If Cæſar hide himſelfe,ſhall they not whiſper
Loe Cæſar is affraid?
Pardon me Cæſar,for my deere deere love
To your proceeding bids me tell you this;
And reaſon to my love is liable.
*Cæſ.*How fooliſh do your fears ſeeme now Calphurnia?
I am aſhamed I did yeeld to them.
Give me my Robe,for I will go.

Enter Brutus,Ligarius,Metellus,Caska,Trebonius,Cinna,and Publius.
And looke where Publius is come to fetch me.
Pub. Good morrow Cæſar.
Cæſ. Welcome Publius.
What Brutus, are you ſtirr'd ſo earely too?
Good morrow Caska:Caius Ligarius,
Cæſar was ne're ſo much your enemy,
As that ſame Ague which hath made you leane.
What is't a Clocke?
Bru. Cæſar,tis ſtrucken eight.
Cæſ. I thanke you for your paines and curteſie.
Enter Antony.
See,Antony that Revels long a-nights
Is notwithſtanding up. Good morrow Antony.
Ant. So to moſt Noble Cæſar
Cæſ. Bid them prepare within:
I am too blame to be thus waited for.
Now Cynna,now Metellus:what Trebonius,
I have an houres talke in ſtore for you:
Remember that you call on me to day:
Be neere me,that I may remember you.
Treb. Cæſar I will;and ſo neere will I be,
That your beſt Friends ſhall wiſh I had beene further.
Cæſ. Good Friends go in, and taſte ſome wine with me
And we(like Friends)will ſtraight way go together.
Bru. That every like is not the ſame,O Cæſar,
The heart of Brutus earnes to thinke upon. Exeunt.
Enter Artemidorus.
Cæſar,beware of Brutus,take heede of Caſſius;come not neere Caska, have an eye to Cynna, truſt not Trebonius, marke well Metellus Cymber, Decius Brutus loves thee not: Thou haſt wrong'd Caius Ligarius. There is but one minde in all theſe men, and it is bent againſt Cæſar: If thou beeſt not Immortall, looke about you: Security giues way to Conſpiracy. The mighty Gods defend thee.

Thy Lover Artemidorus.

Heere will I ſtand, till Cæſar paſſe along,
And as a Sutor will I give him this:
My heart laments, that Vertue cannot live
Out of the teeth of Emulation.
If thou reade this, O Cæſar, thou mayeſt liue;
If not, the Fates with Traitors do contriue.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prythee Boy, run to the Senate-houſe,
Stay not to anſwer me, but get thee gone.
Why doeſt thou ſtay?
Luc. To know my errand Madam.
Por. I would have had thee there and heere agen
Ere I can tell thee what thou ſhould'ſt do there:
O Conſtancy, be ſtrong upon my ſide,
Set a huge Mountaine 'tweene my Heart and Tongue:
I have a mans minde, but a womans might:
How hard it is for women to keepe counſell.
Art thou heere yet?
Luc. Madam, what ſhould I do?
Run to the Capitoll, and nothing elſe?
And ſo returne to you, and nothing elſe?
Por. Yes, bring me word Boy, if thy Lord looke well,
For he went ſickly forth: and take good note
What Cæſar doth, what Sutors preſſe to him.
Hearke Boy, what noiſe is that?
Luc. I heare none Madam.
Por. Prythee liſten well:
I heard a buſsling Rumor like a Fray,
And the winde brings it from the Capitoll.
Luc. Sooth Madam, I heare nothing.

Enter the Soothſayer.

Por. Come hither Fellow, which way haſt thou bin?
Sooth. At mine owne houſe, good Lady.
Por. What is't a clocke?
Sooth. About the ninth houre Lady.
Por. Is Cæſar yet gone to the Capitoll?
Sooth. Madam not yet, I go to take my ſtand,
To ſee him paſſe on to the Capitoll.
Por. Thou haſt ſome ſuite to Cæſar, haſt thou not?
Sooth. That I have Lady, if it will pleaſe Cæſar
To be ſo good to Cæſar, as to heare me:
I ſhall beſeech him to befriend himſelfe.
Por. Why know'ſt thou any harme's intended towards him?
Sooth. None that I know will be,
Much that I feare may chance:
Good morrow to you: heere the ſtreet is narrow:
The throng that followes Cæſar at the heeles,
Of Senators, of Prætors, common Sutors,
Will crowd a feeble man (almoſt) to death:
Ile get me to a place more voyd, and there
Speake to great Cæſar as he comes along. Exit.
Por. I muſt go in:
Aye me! How weake a thing
The heart of woman is? O Brutus,
The Heavens ſpeede thee in thine enterprize.
Sure the Boy heard me: Brutus hath a ſuite
That Cæſar will not grant. O, I grow faint:
Run Lucius, and commend me to my Lord,
Say I am merry; Come to me againe,
And bring me word what he doth ſay to thee.

Actus Tertius.

Flouriſh.

Enter Cæſar, Brutus, Caſſius, Caska, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cynna, Antony, Lepidus, Artemidorus, Popilius, and the Soothſayer.

Cæſ. The Ides of March are come.
Sooth. I Cæſar, but not gone.
Art. Haile Cæſar: Read this Scedule.
Dec. Trebonius doth deſire you to ore-read
(At your beſt leiſure) this his humble ſuite.
Art. O Cæſar, reade mine firſt: for mine's a ſuite
That touches Cæſar neerer. Read it great Cæſar.
Cæſ. What touches us our ſelfe, ſhall be laſt ſerv'd.
Art. Delay not Cæſar, read it inſtantly.
Cæſ. What, is the fellow mad?
Pub. Sirra, give place.
Cæſ. What, urge you your Petitions in the ſtreet?
Come to the Capitoll.
Pop. I wiſh your enterprize to day may thrive.
Caſ. What enterprize Popilius?
Pop. Fare you well.
Bru. What ſaid Popilius Lena?
Caſ. He wiſht to day our enterprize might thrive:
I feare our purpoſe is diſcovered.
Bru. Looke how he makes to Cæſar: marke him.
Caſ. Caska be ſodaine, for we feare prevention.
Brutus what ſhall be done? If this be knowne,
Caſſius or Cæſar never ſhall turne backe,
For I will ſlay my ſelfe.
Bru. Caſſius be conſtant:
Popilius Lena ſpeakes not of our purpoſes,
For looke he ſmiles, and Cæſar doth not change.
Caſ. Trebonius knowes his time: for look you Brutus
He drawes Marke Antony out of the way.
Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber, let him go,
And preſently preferre his ſuite to Cæſar.
Bru. He is addreſt: preſſe neere, and ſecond him.
Cin. Caska, you are the firſt that reares your hand.
Cæſ. Are we all ready? What is now amiſſe,
That Cæſar and his Senate muſt redreſſe?
Metel. Moſt high, moſt mighty, and moſt puiſant Cæſar
Metellus Cimber throwes before thy Seate
An humble heart.
Cæſ. I muſt prevent thee Cymber:
Theſe couchings, and theſe lowly courteſies
Might fire the blood of ordinary men,
And turne pre-Ordinance, and firſt Decree,
Into the lane of Children. Be not fond,
To thinke that Cæſar beares ſuch Rebell blood
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth Fooles, I meane ſweet words,
Low-crooked-curtſies, and baſe Spaniell fawning:
Thy Brother by decree is baniſhed:
If thou doeſt bend, and pray, and fawne for him,
I ſpurne thee like a Curre out of my way:
Know, Cæſar doth not wrong, nor without cauſe
Will he be ſatisfied.
Met. Is there no voice more worthy then my owne,

To ſound more ſweetly in great Cæſars eare,
For the repealing of my baniſh'd Brother?
Bru. I kiſſe thy hand,but not in flattery Cæſar:
Deſiring thee,that Publius Cimber may
Have an immediate freedome of repeale.
Cæſ. What Brutus?
Caſ. Pardon Cæſar:Cæſar pardon:
As love as to thy foote doth Caſſius fall,
To begge infranchiſement for Publius Cimber.
Cæſ. I could be well mov'd,if I were as you,
If I could pray to moove,Prayers would moove me:
But I am conſtant as the Northerne Starre,
Of whoſe true fixt,and reſting quality,
There is no fellow in the Firmament,
The Skies are painted with unnumbred ſparkes,
They are all Fire,and every one doth ſhine:
But,there's but one in all doth hold his place.
So,in the World;'Tis furniſh'd well with Men,
And Men are Fleſh and Blood,and apprehenſive;
Yet in the number,I do know but One
That unaſſayleable holds on his Ranke,
Vnſhak'd of motion:and that I am he,
Let me a little ſhew it,even in this:
That I was conſtant Cymber ſhould be baniſh'd,
And conſtant do remaine to keepe him ſo.
Cin. O Cæſar.
Cæſ. Hence: Wilt thou lift up Olympus?
Dec. Great Cæſar.
Cæſ. Do not Brutus bootleſſe kneele?
Cask. Speake hands for me.
They ſtab Cæſar.
Cæſ. Et Tu Brute———— Then fall Cæſar.
Cin. Liberty,Freedome;Tyranny is dead,
Run hence,proclaime,cry it about the Streets.
Caſ. Some to the common Pulpits,and cry out
Liberty,Freedome,and Enfrachiſement.
Bru. People and Senators,be not affrighted:
Fly not,ſtand ſtill:Ambitions debt is paid.
Cask. Go to the Pulpit Brutus.
Dec. And Caſsius too.
Bru. Where's Publius?
Cin. Heere,quite confounded with this mutiny.
Met. Stand faſt together,leſt ſome Friend of Cæſars
Should chance————
Bru. Talke not of ſtanding. Publius good cheere,
There is no harme intended to your perſon,
Nor to no Roman elſe:ſo tell them Publius.
Caſ. And leave us Publius, leſt that the people
Ruſhing on us,ſhould do your Age ſome miſchiefe.
Bru. Do ſo,and let no man abide this deede,
But we the Doers.
Enter Trebonius.
Caſ. Where is Anthony?
Treb. Fled to his Houſe amaz'd:
Men,Wives,and Children,ſtare,cry out,and run,
As it were Doomeſday.
Bru. Fates,we will know your pleaſures:
That we ſhall dye we know,tis but the time
And drawing dayes out,that men ſtand upon.
Cask. Why he that cuts off twenty yeares of life,
Cuts off ſo many yeares of fearing death.
Bru. Grant that,and then is Death a Benefit:
So are we Cæſars Friends,that have abridg'd
His time of fearing death. Stoope Romans,ſtoope,
And let us bathe our hands in Cæſars blood
Vp to the Elbowes,and beſmeare our Swords:
Then walke we forth,even to the Market place,
And waving our red Weapons o're our heads,
Let's all cry Peace,Freedome,and Liberty.
Caſ. Stoop then,and waſh. How many Ages hence
Shall this our lofty Scene be acted over,
In States unborne,and Accents yet unknowne?
Bru. How many times ſhall Cæſar bleed in ſport,
That now on Pompeyes Baſis lyes along,
No worthier then the duſt?
Caſ. So oft as that ſhall be,
So often ſhall the knot of us be call'd,
The Men that gave their Country liberty.
Dec. What,ſhall we forth?
Caſ. I every man away.
Brutus ſhall leade,and we will grace his heeles
With the moſt boldeſt,and beſt hearts of Rome.
Enter a Servant.
Bru. Soft,who comes heere? A friend of Antonyes.
Ser. Thus Brutus,did my Maſter bid me kneele;
Thus did Marke Antony bid me fall downe,
And being proſtrate,thus he bad me ſay,
Brutus is Noble,Wiſe,Valiant,and Honeſt,
Cæſar was Mighty,Bold,Royall,and Loving:
Say,I love Brutus,and I honour him;
Say,I fear'd Cæſar,honour'd him,and lov'd him.
If Brutus will vouchſafe,that Antony
May ſafely come to him,and be reſolv'd
How Cæſar hath deſerv'd to lye in death,
Mark Antony,ſhall not love Cæſar dead
So well as Brutus living;but will follow
The Fortunes and Affaires of Noble Brutus,
Thorough the hazards of this untrod State,
Withall true Faith. So ſayes my Maſter Antony.
Bru. Thy Maſter is a Wiſe and Valiant Romane,
I never thought him worſe:
Tell him,ſo pleaſe him come unto this place
He ſhall be ſatisfied:and by my Honor
Depart untouch'd.
Ser. Ile fetch him preſently. Exit Servant.
Bru. I know that we ſhall have him well to Friend.
Caſ. I wiſh we may:But yet have I a minde
That feares him much:and my miſgiving ſtill
Falles ſhrewdly to the purpoſe.
Enter Antony.
Bru. But heere comes Antony:
Welcome Mark Antony.
Ant. O mighty Cæſar! Doſt thou lye ſo low?
Are all thy Conqueſts,Glories,Triumphes,Spoiles,
Shrunke to this little Meaſure? Fare thee well.
I know not Gentlemen what you intend,
Who elſe muſt be let blood,who elſe is ranke:
If I my ſelfe,there is no houre ſo fit
As Cæſars deaths houre;nor no Inſtrument
Of halfe that worth,as thoſe your Swords;made rich
With the moſt Noble blood of all this World.
I do beſeech yee,if you beare me hard,
Now,whil'ſt your purpled hands do reeke and ſmoake
Fulfill your pleaſure. Live a thouſand yeeres,
I ſhall not finde my ſelfe ſo apt to dye.
No place will pleaſe me ſo,no meane of death,
As heere by Cæſar,and by you cut off,
The Choice and Maſter Spirits of this Age.
Bru. O Antony! Begge not your death of us:
Though now we muſt appeare bloody and cruell,
As by our hands,and this our preſent Act
You ſee we do:Yet ſee you but our hands,

And this, the bleeding buſineſſe they have done:
Our hearts you ſee not, they are pittifull:
And pitty to the generall wrong of Rome,
As fire drives out fire, ſo pitty, pitty,
Hath done this deed on Cæſar. For your part,
To you, our Swords have leaden points Marke Antony;
Our Armes in ſtrength of malice, and our Hearts
Of Brothers temper, do receive you in,
With all kinde love, good thoughts, and reverence.
Caſ. Your voyce ſhall be as ſtrong as any mans,
In the diſpoſing of new Dignities.
Bru. Onely be patient, till we have appeas'd
The Multitude, beſide themſelves with feare,
And then, we will deliver you the cauſe,
Why I, that did love Cæſar when I ſtrooke him,
Have thus proceeded.
Ant. I doubt not of your Wiſedome:
Let each man render me his bloody hand.
Firſt Marcus Brutus will I ſhake with you;
Next Caius Caſſius do I take your hand;
Now Decius Brutus yours, now yours Metellus;
Yours Cinna; and my valiant Caska, yours;
Though laſt, not leaſt in love, yours good Trebonius.
Gentlemen all: Alas, what ſhall I ſay,
My credit now ſtands on ſuch ſlippery ground,
That one of two bad wayes you muſt conceit me,
Either a Coward, or a Flatterer.
That I did love thee Cæſar, O tis true:
If then thy Spirit looke upon us now,
Shall it not greeve thee deerer then thy death,
To ſee thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy Foes?
Moſt Noble, in the preſence of thy Coarſe,
Had I as many eyes, as thou haſt wounds,
Weeping as faſt as they ſtreame forth thy blood,
It would become me better, then to cloſe
In tearmes of Friendſhip with thine enemies.
Pardon me Iulius, heere was't thou bay'd brave Heart,
Heere did'ſt thou fall, and heere thy Hunters ſtand
Sign'd in thy Spoyle, and Crimſon'd in thy Lethe.
O World! thou waſt the Forreſt to this Hart,
And this indeed, O World, the Hart of thee.
How like a Deere, ſtricken by many Princes,
Doſt thou heere lye?
Caſ. Marke Antony.
Ant. Pardon me Caius Caſſius:
The Enemies of Cæſar, ſhall ſay this:
Then, in a Friend, it is cold Modeſty.
Caſ. I blame you not for praiſing Cæſar ſo,
But what compact meane you to have with us?
Will you be prick'd in number of our Friends,
Or ſhall we on; and not depend on you?
Ant. Therefore I tooke your hands, but was indeed
Sway'd from the point, by looking downe on Cæſar.
Friends am I with you all, and love you all,
Vpon this hope, that you ſhall give me Reaſons,
Why, and wherein, Cæſar was dangerous.
Bru. Or elſe were this a ſavage Spectacle:
Our Reaſons are ſo full of good regard,
That were you Antony, the Sonne of Cæſar,
You ſhoud be ſatisfied.
Ant. That's all I ſeeke,
And am moreover ſutor, that I may
Produce his body to the Market-place,
And in the Pulpit as becomes a Friend,
Speake in the Order of his Funerall.
Bru. You ſhall Marke Antony.
Caſ. Brutus, a word with you:
You know not what you do; Do not conſent
That Antony ſpeake in his Funerall:
Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter.
Bru. By your pardon:
I will my ſelfe into the Pulpit firſt,
And ſhew the reaſon of our Cæſars death.
What Antony ſhall ſpeake, I will proteſt
He ſpeakes by leave, and by permiſsion:
And that we are contented Cæſar ſhall
Have all true Rites, and lawfull Ceremonies,
It ſhall advantage more, then do us wrong.
Caſ. I know not what may fall, I like it not.
Bru. Marke Antony, heere take you Cæſars body:
You ſhall not in your Funerall ſpeech blame us,
But ſpeake all good you can deviſe of Cæſar,
And ſay you doo't by our permiſsion:
Elſe ſhall you not have any hand at all
About his Funerall. And you ſhall ſpeake
In the ſame Pulpit whereto I am going,
After my ſpeech is ended.
Ant. Be it ſo:
I do deſire no more.
Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us. Exeunt.
Manet Antony.
O pardon me, thou bleeding peece of Earth:
That I am meeke and gentle with theſe Butchers.
Thou art the Ruines of the Nobleſt man
That ever lived in the Tide of Times.
Woe to the hand that ſhed this coſtly Blood.
Ouer thy wounds, now do I Propheſie,
(which like dumbe mouthes do ope their Ruby lips,
To begge the voyce and utterance of my Tongue)
A Curſe ſhall light upon the limbes of men;
Domeſticke Fury, and fierce Civill ſtrife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and deſtruction ſhall be ſo in uſe,
And dreadfull Objects ſo familiar,
That Mothers ſhall but ſmile, when they behold
Their infants quartered with the hands of Warre:
All pitty choak'd with cuſtome of fell deeds,
And Cæſars Spirit ranging for Revenge,
With Ate by his ſide, come hot from Hell,
Shall in theſe Confines, with a Monarkes voyce,
Cry havocke, and let ſlip the Dogges of Warre,
That this foule deede, ſhall ſmell above the earth
With Carrion men, groaning for Buriall.
Enter Octavio's Servant.
You ſerve Octavius Cæſar, do you not?
Ser. I do Marke Antony.
Ant. Cæſar did write for him to come Rome.
Ser. He did receive his Letters, and is comming,
And bid me ſay to you by word of mouth——
O Cæſar!
Ant. Thy heart is bigge: get thee a-part and weepe:
Paſsion I ſee is catching, for mine eyes,
Seeing thoſe Beads of ſorrow ſtand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy Maſter comming?
Ser. He lies to night within ſeven Leagues of Rome.
Ant. Poſt backe with ſpeede,
And tell him what hath chanc'd:
Heere is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of ſafety for Octavius yet,
Hie hence, and tell him ſo. Yet ſtay a-while,
Thou

Thou ſhalt not backe, till I have borne this courſe
Into the market place : There ſhall I try
In my Oration, how the People take
The cruell iſſue of theſe bloody men,
According to the which, thou ſhalt diſcourſe
To young Octavius of the ſtate of things.
Lend me your hand. Exeunt

Enter Brutus and goes into the Pulpit, and Caſſius with the Plebeians.

Ple. We will be ſatisfied : let us be ſatisfied.
Bru. Then follow me, and give me Audience friends.
Caſſius go you into the other ſtreete,
And part the Numbers :
Thoſe that will heare me ſpeake, let 'em ſtay heere ;
Thoſe that will follow Caſſius, go with him,
And publike Reaſons ſhall be rendred.
Of Cæſars death.
1 Ple. I will heare Brutus ſpeake.
2. I will heare Caſſius, and compare their Reaſons,
When ſeverally we heare them rendred.
3. The Noble Brutus is aſcended : Silence.
Bru. Be patient till the laſt.

Romans, Countrey-men, and Lovers, heare mee for my cauſe, and be ſilent, that you may heare. Beleeve mee for mine Honor, and have reſpect to mine Honor, that you may beleeve. Cenſure me in your Wiſedome, and awake your Senſes, that you may the better Iudge. If there bee any in this Aſſembly, any deere Friend of Cæſars, to them I ſay, that Brutus love to Cæſar, was no leſſe then his. If then, that Friend demand, why Brutus roſe againſt Cæſar, this is my anſwer : Not that I lov'd Cæſar leſſe, but that I lov'd Rome more. Had you rather Cæſar were living, and dye all Slaves ; then that Cæſar were dead, to live all Free-men ? As Cæſar lov'd mee, I weepe for him; as he was Fortunate, I rejoyce at it ; as he was Valiant, I honour him : But, as he was Ambtious, I ſlew him. There is Teares, for his Love : Ioy, for his Fortune : Honor, for his Valour : and death for his Ambition. Who is heere ſo baſe, that would be a Bondman ? If any, ſpeak, for him have I offended. Who is heere ſo rude, that would not be a Roman ? If any, ſpeak, for him have I offended. Who is heere ſo vile, that will not love his Countrey ? If any, ſpeake, for him have I offended. I pauſe for a Reply.

All. None Brutus, none.

Brutus. Then none have I offended. I have done no more to Cæſar, then you ſhall do to Brutus. The Queſtion of his death, is inroll'd in the Capitoll : his Glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy ; nor his offences enforc'd, for which he ſuffered death.

Enter Mark Antony, with Cæſars body.

Heere comes his Body, mourn'd by Marke Antony, who though he had no hand in his death, ſhall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the Commonwealth, as which of you ſhall not. With this I depart, that as I ſlewe my beſt Lover for the good of Rome, I have the ſame Dagger for my ſelfe, when it ſhall pleaſe my Country to need my death.

All. Live Brutus, live, live.
1. Bring him with Triumph home unto his houſe,
2. Give him a Statue with his Anceſtors.
3. Let him be Cæſar.
4. Cæſars better parts,
Shall be Crown'd in Brutus.
1. Wee'l bring him to his Houſe,
With Showts and Clamors.
Bru. My Country-men.
2. Peace, ſilence, Brutus ſpeakes.
1. Peace ho.
Bru. Good Countrymen, let me depart alone,
And (for my ſake) ſtay heere with Antony :
Do grace to Cæſars Corpes, and grace his Speech
Tending to Cæſars Glories, which Marke Antony
(By our permiſſion) is allow'd to make.
I do intreat you, not a man depart.
Save I alone, till Antony have ſpoke. Exit.
1 Stay ho, and let us heare Mark Antony.
3 Let him go up into the publike Chaire,
Wee'l heare him : Noble Antony go up.
Ant. For Brutus ſake, I am beholding to you.
4 What does he ſay of Brutus ?
3 He ſayes for Brutus ſake
He findes himſelfe beholding to us all.
4 'Twere beſt ſpeake no harme of Brutus heere ?
1 This Cæſar was a Tyrant.
3 Nay thats certaine :
We are glad that Rome is rid of him.
2 Peace, let us heare what Antony can ſay.
Ant. you gentle Romans.
All. Peace hoe, let us heare him.
An. Friends, Romans, Countrymen, lend me your ears :
I come to bury Cæſar, not to praiſe him :
The evill that men do, lives after them,
The good is oft enterred with their bones,
So let it be with Cæſar. The Noble Brutus,
Hath told you Cæſar was Ambitious :
If it were ſo, it was a greevous Fault,
And greevouſly hath Cæſar anſwer'd it
Heere under leave of Brutus, and the reſt,
(For Brutus is an Honourable man,
So are they all, all Honourable men)
Come I to ſpeake in Cæſars Funerall.
He was my Friend, faithfull, and juſt to me;
But Brutus ſayes, he was Ambitious,
And Brutus is an Honourable man.
He hath brought many Captives home to Rome,
Whoſe Ranſomes, did the generall Coffers fill :
Did this in Cæſar ſeeme Ambitious ?
When that the poore have cry'de, Cæſar hath wept :
Ambition ſhould be made of ſterner ſtuffe,
Yet Brutus ſayes, he was Ambitious ;
And Brutus is an Honourable man.
You all did ſee, that on the Lupercall,
I thrice preſented him a Kingly Crowne,
Which he did thrice refuſe. Was this Ambition ?
Yet Brutus ſayes, he was Ambitious :
And ſure he is an Honourable man.
I ſpeake not to diſprove what Brutus ſpoke,
But heere I am, to ſpeake what I do know ;
You all did love him once, not without cauſe,
What cauſe with-holds you then, to mourne for him ?
O Iudgement ! thou art fled to brutiſh Beaſts,
And Men have loſt their Reaſon. Beare with me,
My heart is in the Coffin there with Cæſar.
And I muſt pawſe till it come backe to me.
1 Me thinkes there is much reaſon in his ſayings.
If thou conſider rightly of the matter,
Cæſar ha's had great wrong.
3 Ha's he Maſters ? I feare there will a worſe come in his place.

4 Mark'd ye his words? he would not take ÿ Crowne,
Therefore tis certaine,he was not Ambitious.
1 If it be found ſo,ſome will deere abide it.
2 Poore ſoule,his eyes are red as fire with weeping.
3 There's not a Nobler man in Rome then Antony.
4 Now marke him,he begins againe to ſpeake.
Ant. But yeſterday,the word of Cæſar might
Have ſtood againſt the World:Now lies he there,
And none ſo poore to do him reuerence.
O Maiſters! If I were diſpos'd to ſtirre
Your hearts and mindes to Mutiny and Rage,
I ſhould doe Brutus wrong,and Caſſius wrong:
who(you all know)are Honourable men.
I will not do them wrong:I rather chooſe
To wrong the dead,to wrong my ſelfe and you,
Then I will wrong ſuch Honourable men.
But heere's a Parchment,with the Seale of Cæſar,
I found it in his Cloſſet,tis his Will:
Let but the Commons heare this Teſtament:
(Which pardon me) I do not meane to reade,
And they would go and kiſſe dead Cæſars wounds,
And dip their Napkins in his Sacred Blood;
Yea,begge a haire of him for Memory,
And dying,mention it within their Willes,
Bequeathing it as a rich Legacy
Vnto their iſſue.
4 Wee'l heare the Will,reade it Marke Antony.
All. The Will,the Will;we will heare Cæſars Will.
Ant. Have patience gentle Friends, I muſt not read it.
It is not meet you know how Cæſar lov'd you:
You are not Wood, you are not Stones,but men:
And being men,hearing the Will of Cæſar,
It will inflame you,it will make you mad;
Tis good you know not that you are his Heires,
For if you ſhould,O what would come of it?
4 Read the Will,wee'l heare it Antony:
You ſhall reade us the will,Cæſars Will.
Ant. Will you be Patient? Will you ſtay a while?
I have o're ſhot my ſelfe to tell you of it,
I feare I wrong the Honourable men,
Whoſe Daggers have ſtabb'd Cæſar: I do feare it.
4 They were Traitors:Honourable men?
All. The Will,the Teſtament.
2 They were Villaines, Murderers:the Will,reade the Will.
Ant. You will compell me then to read the Will;
Then make a Ring about the Corpes of Cæſar,
And let me ſhew you him that made the Will:
Shall I deſcend? And will you giue me leave?
All. Come downe.
2 Deſcend.
3 You ſhall have leave.
4 A Ring,ſtand round.
1 Stand from the Hearſe,ſtand from the Body.
2 Roome for Antony,moſt Noble Antony.
Ant. Nay preſſe not ſo upon me,ſtand farre off.
All. Stand backe:roome,beare backe.
Ant. If you have teares,prepare to ſhed them now.
You all do know this Mantle,I remember
The firſt time ever Cæſar put it on,
Twas on a Summers Evening in his Tent,
That day he overcame the Nervij.
Looke,in this place ran Caſſius Dagger through:
See what a rent the envious Caska made:
Through this,the welbeloved Brutus ſtabb'd,
And as he pluck'd his curſed Steele away:
Marke how the blood of Cæſar followed it,
As ruſhing out of doores,to be reſolv'd
If Brutus ſo unkindely knock'd,or no:
For Brutus,as you know,was Cæſars Angel.
Iudge,O you Gods,how deerely Cæſar lov'd him:
This was the moſt unkindeſt cut of all.
For when the Noble Cæſar ſaw him ſtab,
Ingratitude,more ſtrong then Traitors armes,
Quite vanquiſh'd him:then burſt his Mighty heart,
And in his Mantle,muffling up his face,
Even at the Baſe of Pompeyes Statue
(Which all the while ran blood)great Cæſar fell.
O what a fall was there,my Countrymen?
Then I,and you,and all of us fell downe,
Whil'ſt bloody Treaſon flouriſh'd over us.
O now you weepe,and I perceive you feele
The dint of pitty: Theſe are gracious droppes.
Kinde Soules,what weepe you,when you but behold
Our Cæſars Veſture wounded? Look you heere,
Heere is Himſelfe,marr'd as you ſee with Traitors.
1 O pitteous ſpectacle!
2 O Noble Cæſar!
3 O wofull day!
4 O Traitors,Villaines!
1 O moſt bloody ſight!
2 We will be reveng'd:Revenge
About,ſeeke,burne,fire,kill,ſlay,
Let not a Traitor live.
Ant. Stay Country-men.
1 Peace there,heare the Noble Antony,
2 Wee'l heare him, wee'l follow him, wee'l dy with him.
Ant. Good Friends,ſweet Friends,let me not ſtirre you up
To ſuch a ſodaine Flood of Mutiny:
They that have done this Deede,are honourable,
What private greefes they have,alas I know not,
That made them do it: They are Wiſe,and Honourable,
And will no doubt with Reaſons anſwer you.
I come not(Friends)to ſteale away your hearts;
I am no Orator,as Brutus is;
But (as you know me all)a plaine blunt man
That love my Friend,and that they know full well,
That give me publicke leave to ſpeake of him:
For I have neither wit nor words,nor worth,
Action,nor Vtterance,nor the power of Speech,
To ſtirre mens Blood. I onely ſpeake right on:
I tell you that,which you your ſelves do know,
Shew you ſweet Cæſars wounds,poor poor dum mouths
And bid them ſpeake for me:But were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony,there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your Spirits,and put a Tongue
In every Wound of Cæſar,that ſhould move
The ſtones of Rome,to riſe and Mutiny.
All. Wee'l Mutiny.
1 Wee'l burne the houſe of Brutus.
3 Away then,come ſeeke the Conſpirators.
Ant. Yet heare me Countrymen,yet heare me ſpeake
All. Peace hoe,heare Antony,moſt Noble Antony.
Ant. Why Friends,you go to do you know not,what.
Wherein hath Cæſar thus deſerv'd your loves?
Alas you know not,I muſt tell you then:
You have forgot the Will I told you of.
All. Moſt true,the Will, let's ſtay and heare the Wil.
Ant. Heere is the Will,and under Cæſars Seale:
To every Roman Citizen he gives,
To every ſeverall man, ſeventy five Drachmaes.

2 Ple. Moſt Noble Cæſar, wee'l revenge his death.
3 Ple. O Royall Cæſar.
Ant. Heare me with patience.
All. Peace hoe
Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his Walkes,
His private Arbors, and new-planted Orchards,
On this ſide Tyber, he hath left them you,
And to your heyres for euer: common pleaſures
To walke abroad, and recreate your ſelves.
Heere was a Cæſar: when comes ſuch another?
1 Ple. Never, never: come, away, away:
Wee'l burne his body in the holy place,
And with the Brands fire all the Traitors houſes.
Take up the body.
2 Ple. Go fetch fire.
3 Ple. Plucke downe Benches.
4 Ple. Plucke downe Formes, Windowes, any thing.
Exeunt Plebeians.
Ant. Now let it worke: Miſcheefe thou art a-foot,
Take thou what courſe thou wilt.
How now Fellow?

Enter Servant.

Ser. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.
Ant. Where is hee?
Ser. He and Lepidus are at Cæſars houſe.
Ant. And thither will I ſtraight, to viſit him:
He comes vpon a wiſh. Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will give us any thing.
Ser. I heard him ſay, Brutus and Caſſius
Are rid like Madmen through the Gates of Rome.
Ant. Belike they had ſome notice of the people
How I had moved them. Bring me to Octauius. Exeunt.

Enter Cinna the Poet, and after him the Plebeians.

Cin. I dreamt to night, that I did feaſt with Cæſar,
And things unluckily charge my Fantaſie:
I have no will to wander forth of doores,
Yet ſomething leads me forth.
1 What is your name?
2 Whether are you going?
3 Where do you dwell?
4 Are you a married man, or a Batchellor?
2 Anſwer every man directly.
1 I, and breefely.
4 I, and wiſely.
3 I, and truly, you were beſt.
Cin. What is my name? Whether am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a Batchellour? Then to anſwer every man, directly and breefely, wiſely and truly: wiſely I ſay, I am a Batchellor.
2 That's as much as to ſay, they are fooles that marry: you'l beare me a bang for that I feare: proceede directly.
Cin. Directly I am going to Cæſars Funerall.
1 As a Friend, or an Enemy?
Cin. As a friend.
2 That matter is anſwered directly.
4 For your dwelling: breefely.
Cin. Breefely, I dwell by the Capitoll.
3 Your name ſir, truly,
Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.
1 Teare him to peeces, hee's a Conſpirator.
Cin. I am Cinna the Poet, I am Cinna the Poet.
4 Teare him for his bad verſes, teare him for his bad Verſes.
Cin. I am not Cinna the Conſpirator.
4 It is no matter, his name's Cinna, pluck but his name out of his heart, and turne him going.
3 Teare him, teare him; Come Brands hoe, Firebrands: to Brutus, to Caſſius, burne all. Some to Decius Houſes and ſome to Caska's; ſome to Ligarius: Away, go.
Exeunt all the Plebeians.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus.

Ant. Theſe many then ſhall die, their names are prikt
Oct. Your Brother too muſt dye: conſent you Lepidus?
Lep. I do conſent.
Oct. Pricke him downe Antony.
Lep. Vpon condition Publius ſhall not live,
Who is your Siſters ſonne, Marke Antony.
Ant. He ſhall not live; looke, with a ſpot I dam him.
But Lepidus, go you to Cæſars houſe:
Fetch the Will hither, and we ſhall determine
How to cut off ſome charge in Legacies.
Lep. What? ſhall I finde you heere?
Oct. Or heere, or at the Capitoll. Exit Lepidus.
Ant. This is a ſlight unmeritable man,
Meet to be ſent on Errands: is it fit
The three-fold World divided, he ſhould ſtand
One of the three to ſhare it?
Oct. So you thought him,
And tooke his voyce who ſhould be prickt to die
In our blacke Sentence and Proſcription.
Ant. Octavius, I have ſeene more dayes then you;
And though we lay theſe Honours on this man,
To eaſe our ſelves of divers ſland'rous loads,
He ſhall but beare them, as the Aſſe beares Gold,
To groane and ſweat under the Buſineſſe,
Either led or driven, as we print the way:
And having brought our Treaſure, where we will,
Then take we downe his Load, and turne him off
(Like to the empty Aſſe) to ſhake his eares,
And graze in Commons.
Oct. You may do your will:
But hee's a tried, and valiant Souldier.
Ant. So is my Horſe Octavius, and for that
I do appoint him ſtore of Provender.
It is a Creature that I teach to fight,
To winde, to ſtop, to run directly on:
His corporall Motion, govern'd by my Spirit,
And in ſome taſte, is Lepidus but ſo:
He muſt be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth:
A barren ſpirited Fellow; one that feeds
On Objects, Arts, and Imitations.
Which out of vſe, and ſtal'de by other men
Begin his faſhion. Do not talke of him,
But as a property: and now Octavius,
Liſten great things. Brutus and Caſſius
Are levying Powers; We muſt ſtraight make head:
Therefore let our Alliance be combin'd,
Our beſt Friends made and our beſt meanes ſtretcht out,
And let us preſently go ſit in Councell,
How covert matters may be beſt diſclos'd,
And open Perils ſureſt anſwered.
Oct. Let us do ſo: for we are at the ſtake,

And bayed about with many Enemies,
And ſome that ſmile have in their hearts I feare
Millions of Miſcheefes. Exeunt.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucilius, and the Army. Titinius and Pindarus meete them.

Bru. Stand ho.
Luc. Give the word ho, and Stand.
Bru. What now Lucilius, is Caſsius neere?
Luc. He is at hand, and Pindarus is come
To do you ſalutation from his Maſter.
Bru. He greets me well. Your Maſter Pindarus
In his owne change, or by ill Officers,
Hath given me ſome worthy cauſe to wiſh
Things done, undone: But if he be at hand,
I ſhall be ſatisfied.
Pin. I do not doubt
But that my Noble Maſter will appeare
Such as he is, full of regard, and Honour.
Bru. He is not doubted. A word Lucilius
How he receiv'd you: let me be reſolv'd.
Luc. With courteſie, and with reſpect enough,
But not with ſuch familiar inſtances,
Nor with ſuch free and friendly Conference
As he hath us'd of old.
Bru. Thou haſt deſcrib'd
A hot Friend, cooling: Ever note Lucilius,
When Love begins to ſicken and decay
It uſeth an enforced Ceremony.
There are no trickes, in plaine and ſimple Faith:
But hollow men, like Horſes hot at hand,
Make gallant ſhew, and promiſe of their Mettle:
Low March within.
But when they ſhould endure the bloody Spurre,
They fall their Creſt, and like deceifull Iades
Sinke in the Triall. Comes his Army on?
Luc. They meane this night in Sardis to be quarter'd:
The greater part, the Horſe in generall
Are come with Caſsius.

Enter Caſsius and his Powers.

Bru. Hearke, he is arriv'd:
Martch gently on to meete him,
Caſ. Stand ho.
Bru. Stand ho, ſpeake the word along.
Stand.
Stand.
Stand.
Caſ. Moſt Noble Brother, you have done me wrong.
Bru. Iudge me you Gods; wrong I mine Enemies?
And if not ſo, how ſhould I wrong a Brother.
Caſ. Brutus, this ſober forme of yours, hides wrongs,
And when you do them ——
Bru. Caſsius, be content,
Speake your greefes ſoftly, I do know you well.
Before the eyes of both our Armies heere
(Which ſhould perceive nothing but Love from us)
Let us not wrangle. Bid them move away:
Then in my Tent Caſsius enlarge your Greefes
And I will give you Audience.
Caſsi. Pindarus,
Bid our Commanders leade their Charges off
A little from this ground.
Bru. Lucilius, do you the like, and let no man
Come to our Tent, till we have done our Conference.
Let Lucius and Titinius guard our doore. Exeunt.

Manet Brutus and Caſsius.

Caſ. That you have wrong'd me, doth appear in this:
You have condemn'd, and noted Lucius Pella
For taking Bribes heere of the Sardians;
Wherein my Letter, praying on his ſide,
Becauſe I knew the man, was ſlighted off.
Bru. You wrong'd your ſelfe to write in ſuch a caſe.
Caſ. In ſuch a time as this, it is not meet
That every nice offence ſhould beare his Comment.
Bru. Let me tell you Caſsius, you your ſelfe
Are much condemn'd to have an itching Palme,
To ſell, and Mart your Offices for Gold
To Vndeſervers.
Caſ. I, an itching Palme?
You know that you are Brutus that ſpeakes this,
Or by the Gods, this ſpeech were elſe your laſt.
Bru. The name of Caſsius Honors this corruption,
And Chaſticement doth therefore hide his head.
Caſ. Chaſticement?
Bru. Remember March, the Ides of March remember:
Did not great Iulius bleede for Iuſtice ſake?
What Villaine touch'd his body, that did ſtab,
And not for Iuſtice? What, Shall one of Vs,
That ſtrucke the Formoſt man of all this World,
But for ſupporting Robbers: ſhall we now,
Contaminate our fingers, with baſe Bribes?
And ſell the mighty ſpace of our large Honors
For ſo much traſh, as may be graſped thus?
I had rather be a Dogge, and baite the Moone,
Then ſuch a Roman.
Caſ. Brutus, baite not me,
Ile not indure it: you forget your ſelfe
To hedge me in, I am a Souldier, I,
Older in practice, Abler then your ſelfe
To make Conditions.
Bru. Go to: you are not Caſsius.
Caſ. I am.
Bru I ſay, you are not.
Caſ. Vrge me no more, I ſhall forget my ſelfe:
Have minde upon your health: Tempt me no farther.
Bru. Away ſlight man.
Caſ. Is't poſsible?
Bru. Heare me, for I will ſpeake.
Muſt I give way, and roome to your raſh Choler?
Shall I be frighted, when a Madman ſtares?
Caſ. O ye Gods, ye Gods, Muſt I endure all this?
Bru. All this? I more, Fret till your proud heart break,
Go ſhew your Slaves how Cholericke you are,
And make your Bondmen tremble. Muſt I bouge?
Muſt I obſerve you? Muſt I ſtand and crouch
Vnder your Teſtie Humour? By the Gods,
You ſhall digeſt the Venom of your Spleene
Thought it do Split you. For from this day forth,
Ile vſe you for my Mirth, yea for my Laughter
When you are Waſpiſh.
Caſ. Is it come to this?
Bru. You ſay, you are a better Souldier:
Let it appeare ſo; make your vaunting true,
And it ſhall pleaſe me well. For mine owne part,
I ſhall be glad to learne of Noble men.
Caſ. You wrong me every way:
You wrong me Brutus:
I ſaide, an Elder Souldier, not a Better.
Did I ſay Better?
Bru. If you did, I care not.
Caſ. When Cæſar liv'd, he durſt not thus have mov'd me.
Bru. Peace, peace, you durſt not ſo have tempted him.

Caſſ.

Caſſi. I durſt not.
Bru. No.
Caſſi. What? durſt not tempt him?
Bru. For your life you durſt not.
Caſſi. Doe not preſume too much upon my Love,
I may doe that I ſhall be ſorry for.
Bru. You have done that you ſhould be ſorry for.
There is no terror Caſſius in your threats.
For I am arm'd ſo ſtrong in Honeſty,
That they paſſe by me, as the idle winde,
Which I reſpect not. I did ſend to you
For certaine ſummes of Gold, which you deny'de me,
For I can raiſe no money by vile meanes:
By heaven, I had rather Coyne my heart,
And drop my blood for Drachmaes, then to wring
From the hard hands of Peazants, their vile traſh
By any indirection. I did ſend
To you for Gold to pay my Legions,
Which you deny'd me: was that done like Caſſius?
Should I have anſwer'd Caius Caſſius ſo?
When Marcus Brutus growes ſo Covetous,
To locke ſuch Raſcall Counters from his friends,
Be ready gods with all your Thunder-bolts,
Daſh him to peeces.
Caſſi. I deny'de you not.
Bru. You did.
Caſſi. I did not. He was but a Foole
That brought my anſwer back. Brutus hath riu'd my hart
A friend ſhould beare his friends infirmityes,
But Brutus makes mine greater then they are.
Bru. I doe not, till you practice them on me.
Caſſi. You love me not.
Bru. I doe not like your faults.
Caſſi. A friendly eye could never ſee ſuch faults.
Brut. A flatterers would not, though they do appeare
As huge as high Olympus.
Caſſi. Come Antony, and yong Octavius come,
Revenge your ſelves alone on Caſſius,
For Caſſius is a-weary of the World:
Hated by one he loves, brau'd by his brother,
Check'd like a bondman, all his faults obſerv'd,
Set in a Note-booke, learn'd, and con'd by roate
To caſt into my Teeth. O I could weepe
My Spirit from mine eyes: There is my Dagger,
And heere my naked Breaſt: Within, a heart
Deerer then Pluto's Mine: Richer then gold:
If that thou beeſt a Roman, take it forth.
I that deny'd thee gold, will give my heart:
Strike as thou didſt at Cæſar: for I know,
When thou didſt hate him worſt, thou lovedſt him better
Then ever thou lovedſt Caſſius.
Bru. Sheath your Dagger:
Be angry when you will, it ſhall have ſcope:
Doe what you will, diſhonor, ſhall be humour.
O Caſſius, you are yoaked with a Lambe
That carries Anger, as the Flint beares fire,
Who much inforced, ſhewes a haſty ſparke,
And ſtraite is cold agen.
Caſſi. Hath Caſſius liv'd
To be but Mirth and Laughter to his Brutus,
When griefe and blood ill temper'd, vexeth him?
Bru. When I ſpoke that, I was ill temper'd too.
Caſſi. Doe you confeſſe ſo much? Give me your hand.
Bru. And my heart too.
Caſſi. O Brutus!
Bru. Whats the matter?
Caſſi. Have not you love enough to beare with me,
When that raſh humour which my Mother gave me
Makes me forgetfull?
Bru. Yes Caſſius, and from henceforth
When you are over-earneſt with your Brutus,
Hee'l thinke your Mother chides, and leave you ſo.

Enter a Poet.

Poet. Let me goe in to ſee the Generals,
There is ſome grudge betweene em, tis not meete
They be alone.
Luci. You ſhall not come to them.
Poet. Nothing but death ſhall ſtay me.
Caſſi. How now? Whats the matter?
Poet. For ſhame you Generals? what doe you meane?
Love, and be friends, as two ſuch men ſhould be,
For I have ſeene more yeeres Ime ſure then yee.
Caſi. Ha, ha, how vildely doth this Cynicke rime:
Bru. Get you hence ſirrah: Sawcy fellow, hence.
Caſi. Beare with him Brutus, tis his faſhion,
Bru. Ile know his humour, when he knowes his time:
What ſhould the Warres doe with theſe Iigging fooles?
Companion, hence.
Caſi. Away, away be gone. Exit Poet.
Bru. Lucillius and Titinius bid the Commanders
Prepare to lodge their Companies to night.
Caſi. And come your ſelves, & bring Meſſala with you
Immediately to us.
Bru. Lucius, a bowle of Wine.
Caſi. I did not thinke you could have bin ſo angry,
Bru. O Caſſius, I am ſicke of many griefes.
Caſſi. Of your Philoſophy you make no uſe,
If you give place to accidentall evills.
Bru. No man beares ſorrow better. Portia is dead.
Caſi. Ha? Portia?
Bru. She is dead.
Caſi. How ſcap'd I killing, when I croſt you ſo?
O inſupportable, and touching loſſe!
Vpon what ſickneſſe?
Bru. Impatient of my abſence.
And griefe, that yong Octavius with Marke Antony,
Have made themſelves ſo ſtrong: For with her death
That tydings came. With this ſhe fell diſtract,
And (her Attendants abſent) ſwallow'd fire.
Caſi. And dy'd ſo?
Bru. Even ſo.
Caſi. O ye immortall gods!

Enter Boy with Wine, and Tapers.

Bru. Speake no more of her: Give me a bowle of wine
In this I bury all unkindneſſe Caſſius. Drinkes.
Caſſi. My heart is thirſty for that Noble pledge,
Fill Lucius, till the Wine ore-ſwell the Cup:
I cannot drinke too much of Brutus love.

Enter Titinius, and Meſſala.

Brut. Come in Titinius:
Welcome good Meſſala:
Now ſit we cloſe about this Taper heere,
And call in queſtion our neceſſities.
Caſſi. Portia, art thou gone?
Bru. No more I pray you.
Meſſala, I have here received Letters,
That yong Octavius, and Marke Antony
Come downe upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their Expedition toward Philippi.

Meſſ. My ſelfe have Letters of the ſelfe-ſame Tenure.
Bru. With what Addition.
Meſſ. That by proſcription, and billes of Outlary,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Have put to death, an hundred Senators.
Bru. Therein our Letters doe not well agree:
Mine ſpeake of ſeventy Senators, that dy'de
By their proſcriptions, Cicero being one.
Caſſi. Cibero one?
Meſſa. Cicero is dead, and by that order of proſcription
Had you your Letters from your wife, my Lord?
Bru. No Meſſala.
Meſſa. Nor nothing in your Letters writ of her?
Bru. Nothing Meſſala.
Meſſa. That me thinkes is ſtrange.
Bru. Why aske you?
Heare you ought of her, in yours?
Meſſa. No my Lord.
Bru. Now as you are a Roman tell me true.
Meſſ. Then like a Roman, beare the truth I tell,
For certaine ſhe is dead, and by ſtrange manner.
Bru. Why farewell Portia: We muſt dye Meſſala:
With meditating that ſhe muſt dye once,
I have the patience to endure it now.
Meſſa. Even ſo great men, great loſſes ſhould indure.
Caſſi. I have as much of this in Art as you.
But yet my Nature could not beare it ſo.
Bru. Well, to our worke alive. What doe you thinke
Of marching to Philippi preſently.
Caſſi. I doe not thinke it good.
Bru. Your reaſon?
Caſſi. This it is:
Tis better that the Enemy ſeeke us,
So ſhall he waſte his meanes, weary his Souldiers,
Doing himſelfe offence, whilſt we lying ſtill,
Are full of reſt, defence, and nimbleneſſe.
Bru. Good reaſons muſt of force give place to better:
The people twixt Philippi, and this ground
Doe ſtand but in a forc'd affection:
For they have grug'd us Contribution.
The Enemy, marching along by them,
By them ſhall make a fuller number up,
Come on refreſht, new added, and encourag'd;
From which advantage ſhall we cut him off.
If at Philippi we doe face him there,
Theſe people at our backe,
Caſſi. Heare me good brother.
Bru. Vnder your pardon. You muſt note beſide,
That we have tride the utmoſt of our friends:
Our Legions are brim full, our cauſe is ripe,
The Enemy encreaſeth every day,
We at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a Tide in the affayres of men,
Which taken at the Flood, leades on to Fortune:
Omitted, all the voyage of their life,
Is bound in Shallowes, and in Miſeries.
On ſuch a full Sea are we now a-float,
And we muſt take the current when it ſerves,
Or looſe our Ventures.
Caſſi. Then with your will goe on: we'll along
Our ſelves, and meet them at Philippi.
Bru. The deepe of night is crept upon our talke,
And Nature muſt obey Neceſſity,
Which we will niggard with a little reſt:
There is no more to ſay.
Caſſi. No more, good night,
Early to morrow will we riſe, and hence.

Enter Lucius.

Bru. Lucius my Gowne: farewell good Meſſala,
Good night Titinius: Noble, Noble Caſſius,
Good night, and good repoſe.
Caſſi. O my deere brother:
This was an ill beginning of the night:
Never come ſuch diviſion tweene our ſoules:
Let it not Brutus.

Enter Lucius with the Gowne.

Bru. Every thing is well.
Caſſi. Good night my Lord.
Bru. Good night good brother.
Tit. Meſſa. Good night Lord Brutus.
Bru. Farewell every one. Exeunt.
Give me the Gowne. Where is thy inſtrument?
Luc. Heere in the Tent.
Bru. What thou ſpeak'ſt drowſily?
Poore knave I blame thee art, thou art ore-watch'd.
Call Claudio, and ſome other of my men,
Ile have them ſleepe on Cuſhions in my Tent.
Luc. Varrus, and Claudio.

Enter Varrus and Claudio.

Var. Calls my Lord?
Bru. I pray you ſirs, lye in my Tent and ſleepe,
It may be I ſhall raiſe you by and by
On buſineſſe to my brother Caſſius.
Vas. So pleaſe you, we will ſtand,
And watch your pleaſure.
Bru, I will not have it ſo: Lye downe good ſirs,
It may be I ſhall otherwiſe bethinke me.
Looke Lucius, heeres the booke I ſought for ſo:
I put it in the pocket of my Gowne.
Luc. I was ſure your Lordſhip did not give it me.
Bru. Beare with me good Boy, I am much forgetfull.
Canſt thou hold up thy inſtrument a ſtraine or two.
And touch thy heavy eyes a-while,
Luc. I my Lord, an't pleaſe you.
Bru. It does my Boy;
I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.
Luc. It is my duty Sir.
Bru. I ſhould not urge thy duty paſt thy might,
I know yong blouds looke for a time of reſt.
Luc. I have ſlept my Lord already.
Bru. It was well done, and thou ſhalt ſleepe againe:
I will not hold thee long. If I doe live,
I will be good to thee.

Muſicke, and a Song.

This is a ſleepy Tune; O Murdrous ſlumbler!
Layeſt thou thy Leaden Mace upon my Boy,
That playes thee Muſicke? Gentle knave good night:
I will not doe thee ſo much wrong to wake thee:
If thou doſt nod, thou break'ſt thy inſtrument,
Ile take it from thee, and (good Boy) good night.
Let me ſee, let me ſee? is not the Leafe turn'd downe
Where I left reading? Heere it is I thinke.

Enter the Ghoſt of Cæſar.

How ill this Taper burnes. Ha! Who comes heere?
I thinke it is the weakeneſſe of mine eyes
That ſhapes this monſtrous Apparition.
It comes upon me: Art thou any thing?
Art thou ſome god, ſome Angell, or ſome Divell,
That mak'ſt my blood cold, and my haire to ſtare?
Speake to me, what thou art.
Ghoſt. Thy evill Spirit Brutus
Bru. Why comſt thou?

Ghoſt. To tell thee thou ſhalt ſee me at Philippi.
Brut. Well: then I ſhall ſee thee againe?
Ghoſt. I, at Philippi.
Bru. Why I will ſee thee at Philippi then:
Now I have taken heart, thou vaniſheſt.
Ill Spirit, I would hold more talke with thee.
Boy, Lucius, Varrus, Claudio, Sirs: awake:
Claudio.
Luci. The ſtrings my Lord are falſe.
Bru. He thinkes he ſtill is at his inſtrument.
Lucius, awake.
Luci. My Lord.
Bru. Didſt thou dreame Lucius, that thou ſo cryedſt out?
Luc. My Lord, I doe not know that I did cry.
Bru. Yes that thou didſt; Didſt thou ſee any thing?
Luc. Nothing my Lord.
Bru. Sleepe againe Lucius: Sirra Claudio, fellow,
Thou: Awake.
Var. My Lord.
Clau. My Lord.
Bru. Why did you ſo cry out ſirs in your ſleepe?
Both. Did we my Lord?
Bru. I: ſaw you any thing?
Var. No my Lord, I ſaw nothing.
Clau. Nor I my Lord.
Bru. Goe, and commend me to my brother Caſſius:
Bid him ſet on his Powres betimes before,
And we will follow.
Both. It ſhall be done my Lord. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Octa. Now Antony, our hopes are anſwered,
You ſaid the Enemy would not come downe,
But keepe the hilles and upper Regions:
It proves not ſo: their battailes are at hand,
They meane to warne us at Philippi here:
Anſwering before we doe demand of them.
Ant. Tut I am in their boſomes, and I know
Wherefore they doe it: They could be content
To viſit other places, and come downe
With fearefull bravery: thinking by this face
To faſten in our thoughts that they have Courage:
But tis not ſo.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſ. Prepare you Generals,
The Enemy comes on in gallant ſhew:
Their bloody ſigne of Battell is hung out,
And ſomething to be done immediately.
Ant. Octavius, leade your Battaile ſoftly on
Vpon the left hand of the even field.
Octa. Vpon the right hand I, keepe thou the left.
Ant. Why doe you croſſe me in this exigent.
Octa. I doe not croſſe you: but I will doe ſo. March.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Caſſius, and their Army.

Bru. They ſtand, and would have parley.
Caſſi. Stand faſt Titinius, we muſt out and talke.
Octa. Marke Antony, ſhall we give ſigne of Battaile?
Ant. No Cæſar, we will anſwer on their Charge.
Make forth, the generalls would have ſome words.
Octa. Stirre not untill the Signall.
Bru. Words before blowes: is it ſo Countrymen?
Octa. Not that we love words better, as you doe.
Bru. Good words are better then bad ſtrokes Octavius
Ant. In your bad ſtrokes Brutus, you give good words
Witneſſe the hole you made in Cæſars heart,
Crying long live, haile Cæſar.
Caſſi. Antony,
The poſture of your blowes are yet unknowne;
But for your words, they rob the Hibla bees,
And leave them Hony-leſſe.
Ant. Not ſtingleſſe too.
Bru. O yes, and ſoundleſſe too:
For you have ſtolne their buzzing Antony,
And very wiſely threat before you ſting.
Ant. Villaines: you did not ſo, when your vile daggers
Hackt one another in the ſides of Cæſar:
You ſhew'd your teethes like Apes,
And fawn'd like hounds,
And bow'd like Bondmen, kiſſing Cæſars feete:
Whilſt damned Caska, like a Curre, behind
Strooke Cæſar on the necke. O you flatterers.
Caſſi. Flatterers? Now Brutus thanke your ſelfe,
This tongue had not offended ſo to day,
If Caſſius might have ruld.
Octa. Come, come, the cauſe. If arguing make us ſwet,
The proofe of it will turne to redder drops:
Looke, I draw a Sword againſt Conſpirators,
When thinke you that the Sword goes up againe?
Never till Cæſars three and thirty wounds
Be well aveng'd; or till another Cæſar
Have added ſlaughter to the Sword of Traytors.
Bru. Cæſar, thou canſt not dye by Traytors hands,
Vnleſſe thou bringſt them with thee.
Octa. So I hope:
I was not borne to dye on Brutus Sword.
Bru. O if thou wert the Nobleſt of thy Straine,
Yong-man, thou couldſt not dye more honorable.
Caſſi. A peeviſh Schoole-boy, worthies of ſuch honor
Ioyn'd with a Maſker, and a Reveller.
Ant. Old Caſſius ſtill.
Octa. Come Antony: away;
Defiance Traitors, hurle we in your teeth.
If you dare fight to day, come to the field;
If not, when you have ſtomackes,

Exit Octavius, Antony, and Army.

Caſſi. Why now blow winde, ſwell billow,
And ſwimme Barke:
The Storme is up, and all is on the hazard.
Bru. Ho Lucillius, hearke, a word with you.

Lucillius, and Meſſala ſtand forth.

Luc. My Lord.
Caſſi. Meſſala.
Meſſa. What ſayes my generall?
Caſſi. Meſſala, this is my Birth-day: as this very day
Was Caſſius borne. Give me thy hand Meſſala:
Be thou my witneſſe, that againſt my will,
(As Pompey was) am I compell'd to ſet
Vpon one Battell all our Liberties.
You know, that I held Epicurus ſtrong,
And his opinion: Now I change my minde,
And partly credit things that doe preſage.
Comming from Sardiis, on our former Enſigne
Two mighty Eagles fell, and there they pearch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our Souldiers hands;

Who

Who to Philippi here conſorted us:
This Morning are they fled away, and gone,
And in their ſteeds, doe Ravens, Crowes, and Kites
Flye ore our heads, and downward looke on us
As we were ſickely prey; their ſhadowes ſeeme
A Canopy moſt fatall, under which
Our Army lyes, ready to give up the Ghoſt.
Meſſa. Beleeve not ſo.
Caſſi. I but beleeve it partly,
For I am freſh of ſpirit, and reſolv'd
To meet all peril, very conſtantly.
Bru. Even ſo Lucillius.
Caſſi. Now moſt Noble Brutus,
The gods to day ſtand friendly, that we may
Lovers in peace, leade on our dayes to age.
But ſince the affayres of men reſts ſtill incertaine,
Lets reaſon with the worſt that may befall.
If we doe loſe this Battaile, then is this
The very laſt time we ſhall ſpeake together:
What are you then determined to do?
Bru. Even by the rule of that Philoſophy,
Be which I did blame Cato, for the death
Which he did give himſelfe, I know not how:
But I doe find it Cowardly, and vile,
For feare of what might fall, ſo to prevent
The time of life, arming my ſelfe with patience,
To ſtay the providence of ſome high Powers,
That governe us below.
Caſſi. Then, if we looſe this Battaile,
You are contented to be led in Triumph
Thorow the ſtreets of Rome.
Bru. No Caſſius, no:
Thinke not thou Noble Romane,
That ever Brutus will goe bound to Rome,
He beares too great a minde. But this ſame day
Muſt end that worke, that Ides of March begun.
And whether we ſhall meete againe, I know not:
Therefore our everlaſting, farewell take:
For ever, and for ever, farewell Caſſius,
If we doe meete againe, why we ſhall ſmile:
If not, why then this parting was well made.
Caſſi. For ever, and for ever, farewell Brutus:
If we doe meete againe, we'll ſmile indeed;
If not, tis true, this parting was well made.
Bru. Why then leade on. O that a man might know
The end of this dayes buſineſſe, ere it come:
But it ſufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is knowne. Come ho, away. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Brutus and Meſſala.

Bru. Ride, ride Meſſala, ride and give theſe Billes
Vnto the Legions, on the other ſide.
Lowd Alarum.
Let them ſet on at once: for I perceive
But cold demeanor in Octavio's wing:
And ſodaine puſh gives them the overthrow:
Ride, ride Meſſala, let them all come downe. Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Caſſius and Titinius.

Caſſi. O looke Titinius, looke, the Villaines flye:
My ſelfe have to mine owne turn'd Enemy:
This Enſigne heere of mine was turning backe,
I ſlew the Coward, and did take it from him.
Titin. O Caſſius, Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having ſome advantage on Octavius
Tooke it too eagerly: his Souldiers fell to ſpoyle,
Whilſt we by Antony are all incloſ'd.

Enter Pindarus.

Pind. Flye further off my Lord: flye further off,
Marke Antony is in your Tents my Lord:
Flye therefore Noble Caſſius, flye farre off.
Caſſi. This hill is farre enough. Looke, looke Titinius
Are thoſe my Tents where I perceive the fire?
Tit. They are, my Lord.
Caſſi. Titinius, if thou loveſt me,
Mount thou my horſe, and hide thy ſpurres in him,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder Troopes
And here againe, that I may reſt aſſurd
Whether yond Troopes, are friend or Enemy.
Tit. I will be heere againe, even with a thought. Exit.
Caſſi. Goe Pindarus, get thither on that hill,
My ſight was ever thicke: regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou notſt about the field.
This day I breathed firſt, time is come round,
And where I did begin, there ſhall I end,
My life is run his compaſſe. Sirra, what newes?
Pind. Above. O my Lord.
Caſſi. What newes?
Pind. Titinius is encloſed round about
With horſemen, that make to him on the Spurre,
Yet he ſpurres on. Now they are almoſt on him:
Now Titinius, Now ſome light: O he lights too.
Hes tane. Showt.
And hearke, they ſhout for joy.
Caſſi. Come downe, behold no more:
O Coward that I am, to live ſo long,
To ſee my beſt friend tane before my face
Enter Pindarus.
Come hither ſirrah; In Parthia did I take thee Priſoner,
And then I ſwore thee, ſaving of thy life,
That whatſoever I did bid thee doe,
Thou ſhouldſt attempt it. Come now, keepe thine oath,
Now be a free-man, and with this good Sword
That ran through Cæſars bowels, ſearch this boſome.
Stand not to anſwer: Heere, take thou the Hilts,
And when my face is cover'd, as tis now,
Guide thou the Sword——Cæſar, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the Sword that kill'd thee. Kills him.
Pin. So, I am free,
Yet would not ſo have beene
Durſt I have done my will. O Caſſius,
Farre from this Country Pindarus ſhall run,
Where never Roman ſhall take note of him.
Enter Titinius, and Meſſala.
Meſſa. It is but change, Titinius: for Octavius
Is overthrowne by Noble Brutus power,
As Caſſius Legions are by Antony.
Titin. Theſe tydings will well comfort Caſſius.
Meſſa. Where did you leave him.
Titin. All diſconſolate,
With Pindarus his Bondman, on this hill.
Meſſa. Is not that he that lyes upon the ground?
Titi. He lyes not like the Living. O my heart!
Meſſa. Is not that he?
Titin. No, this was he Meſſala,
But Caſſius is no more. O ſetting Sunne:
As in thy red Rayes thou doeſt ſinke to night;

So in his red blood Caſſius day it ſet.
The Sonne of Rome is ſet. Our day is gone,
Clowds, Dewes, and Dangers come; our deeds are done:
Miſtruſt of my ſucceſſe hath done this deed.

Meſſa. Miſtruſt of good ſucceſſe hath done this deed.
O hatefull Error, Melancholies Childe:
Why do'ſt thou ſhew to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O Error ſoone conceyu'd,
Thou never com'ſt unto a happy byrth,
But kilſt the Mother that engendred thee.

Tit. What Pindarus? Where art thou Pindarus?

Meſſa. Seeke him Titinius, whilſt I goe to meet
The Noble Brutus, thruſting this report
Into his eares; I may ſay thruſting it:
For piercing Steele, and Darts invenomed,
Shall be as welcome to the eares of Brutus,
As tydings of this ſight.

Tit. Hye you Meſſala,
And I will ſeeke for Pindarus the while:
Why didſt thou ſend me forth brave Caſſius?
Did I not meet thy friends, and did not they
Put on my browes this wreath of Victory,
And bid me give it thee? Didſt thou not heare their Alas, thou haſt miſconſtrued every thing. (ſhowts?
But hold thee, take this Garland on thy Brow,
Thy Brutus bid me giue it thee, and I
Will doe his bidding. Brutus, come apace,
And ſee how I regarded Caius Caſſius:
By your leave gods: This is a Romans part,
Come Caſſius Sword, and find Titinius heart. Dyes.

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Meſſala yong Cato,
Strato, Volumnius, and Lucillius.

Bru. Where, where Meſſala, doth his body lye?

Meſſa. Loe yonder, and Titinius mourning it.

Bru. Titinius face is upward.

Cato. He is ſlaine.

Bru. O Iulius Cæſar, thou art mighty yet,
Thy ſpirit wa'kes abroad, and turnes our Swords
In our owne proper Entrailes. Low Alarums.

Cato. Brave Titinius,
Looke where he have not crown'd dead Caſſius.

Bru. Are yet two Romans living ſuch as theſe?
The laſt of all the Romans, fare thee well:
It is impoſſible, that ever Rome
Should breed thy fellow: friends I owe mo teares
To this dead man, then you ſhall ſee me pay.
I ſhall find time, Caſſius: I ſhall find time.
Come therefore, and to Tharſus ſend his body,
His funerals ſhall not be in our Campe,
Leaſt it diſcomfort us. Lucillius come,
And come yong Cato, let us to the field,
Labio and Flavius ſet our Battailes on:
Tis three a clocke, and Romans yet ere night,
We ſhall try fortune in a ſecond fight. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Brutus, Meſſala, Cato, Lucillius, and Flavius.

Bru. Yet Country men: O yet, hold up your heads.

Cato. What Baſtard doth not? who will goe with me?
I will proclaime my name about the Field.
I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe.
A Foe to Tyrants, and my Countries friend.
I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe.

Enter Souldiers, and fight.

And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I.
Brutus my Countries friend: Know me for Brutus,

Luc. O yong and Noble Cato, art thou downe?
Why now thou dyeſt, as bravely as Titinius,
And may'ſt be honour'd, being Cato's Sonne.

Sold. Yeeld, or thou dyeſt.

Luc. Onely I yeeld to dye:
There is ſo much, that thou wilt kill me ſtraight;
Kill Brutus, and be honor'd in his death.

Sold. We muſt not: a Noble Priſoner.

Enter Antony.

2 Sold. Roome hoe: tell Antony, Brutus is tane.

1 Sold. Ile tell thee newes. Heere comes the Generall,
Brutus is tane, Brutus is tane my Lord.

Ant. Where is he?

Luc. Safe Antony, Brutus is ſafe enough:
I dare aſſure thee, that no Enemy
Shall ever take alive the Noble Brutus:
The gods defend him from ſo great a ſhame,
When you doe finde him, or a live, or dead,
He will be found like Brutus, like himſelfe.

Ant. This is not Brutus friend, but I aſſure you,
A prize no leſſe in worth; keepe this man ſafe,
Give him all kindneſſe. I had rather have Such men my friends, then Enemies. Goe on,
And ſee where Brutus be alive or dead,
And bring us, unto Octavius Tent,
How every thing is chanc'd. Exeunt.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato, and Volumnius.

Bru. Come poore remaines of friends, reſt on this Rocke.

Clit. Statillius ſhew'd the Torch-light, but my Lord
He came not backe: he is or tane, or ſlaine.

Bru. Sit thee downe, Clitus: ſlaying is the word,
It is a deed in faſhion. Hearke thee, Clitus.

Clit. What I, my Lord? No, not for all the World.

Bru. Peace then, no words.

Clit. Ile rather kill my ſelfe.

Bru. Hearke thee, Dardanius.

Dard. Shall I doe ſuch a deed?

Clit. O Dardanius.

Dar. O Clitus.

Clit. What ill requeſt did Brutus make to thee?

Dard. To kill him, Clitus: looke he meditates.

Clit. Now is that Noble Veſſell full of griefe,
That it runnes over even at his eyes.

Bru. Come hither. good Volumnius, liſt a word.

Volum. What ſayes my Lord?

Bru. Why this, Volumnius:
The Ghoſt of Cæſar hath appear'd to me
Two ſeverall times by Night: at Sardis, once;
And this laſt Night, here in Philippi fields:
I know my houre is come.

Volum. Not ſo, my Lord.

Bru. Nay, I am ſure it is, Volumnius.
Thou ſeeſt the world, Volumnius, how it goes,
Our Enemies have beat us to the Pit: Low Alarum.
It is more worthy, to leape in our ſelves,
Then tarry till they puſh us. Good Volumnius,
Thou knowſt, that we two went to Schoole together:
Even for that our love of old, I prethee
Hold thou my Sword Hilts, whileſt I runne on it.

Vol. Thats not an Office for a friend, my Lord.

Alarum ſtill.

Cly. Fly, flye my Lord, there is no tarrying heere.
Bru. Farewell to you, and you, and you Volumnius.
Strato, thou haſt bin all this while a ſleepe:
Farewell to thee, to Strato, Countrymen:
My heart doth joy, that yet all my life,
I found no man, but he was true to me.
I ſhall have glory by this looſing day
More then Octavius, and Marke Antony,
By this vile Conqueſt ſhall attaine unto.
So fare you well at once, for Brutus tongue
Hath almoſt ended his lives Hiſtory:
Night hangs upon mine eyes, my Bones would reſt,
That have but labour'd, to attaine this houre.

Alarum. Cry within, Flye, flye, flye.

Cly. Fly my Lord, flye.
Bru. Hence: I will follow:
I prethee Strato, ſtay thou by thy Lord,
Thou art a fellow of a good reſpect:
Thy life hath had ſome ſmatch of honor in it.
Hold then my Sword, and turne away thy face,
While I doe run upon it. Wilt thou Strato?
Stra. Give me your hand firſt. Fare you well my Lord.
Bru. Farewell good Strato. —— Cæſar, now be ſtill,
I kill'd not thee with halfe ſo good a will. Dyes.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Antony, Octavius, Meſſala, Lucillius, and the Army.

Octa. What man is that?
Meſſa. My maſters man. Strato, where is thy Maſter?
Stra. Free from the Bondage you are in Meſſala,
The Conquerors can but make a fire of him:
For Brutus onely overcame himſelfe,
And no man elſe hath honor by his death.
Luci. So Brutus ſhould be found. I thanke thee Brutus
That thou haſt prov'd Lucillius ſaying true.
Octa. All that ſerv'd Brutus, I will entertaine them,
Fellow, wilt thou beſtow thy time with me?
Stra. I, if Meſſala will preferre me to you.
Octa. Doe ſo, good Meſſala.
Meſſa. How dyed my Strato?
Stra. I held the Sword, and he did run on it.
Meſſa. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the lateſt ſervice to my Maſter.
Ant. This was the Nobleſt Roman of them all:
All the Conſpirators ſave onely he,
Did that they did, in envy of great Cæſar:
He, onely in a generall honeſt thought,
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle, and the Elements
So mixt in him, that Nature might ſtand up,
And ſay to all the world; This was a man.
Octa. According to his Vertue, let us uſe him
Withall reſpect, and rites of Buriall.
Within my Tent his bones to night ſhall lye,
Moſt like a Souldier ordered honorably:
So call the field to reſt, and lets away,
To part the glories of this happy day. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF MACBETH.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Thunder, and Lightning. Enter three Witches.

1 When ſhall we three meet againe?
In Thunder, Lightning, or in Raine?
2 When the Hurley-burleys done,
When the Battailes loſt and wonne.
3 That will be ere the ſet of Sunne,
1 Where the place?
2 Vpon the Heath.
3 There to meet with Macbeth.
1 I come, Gray-Malkin.
All. Padocke calls anon: faire is foule, and foule is faire,
Hover through the fogge and filthy ayre. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Alarum within. Enter King, Malcolme, Donalbaine, Lenox, with attendants, meeting a bleeding Captaine.

King. What bloody man is that? he can report,
As ſeemeth by his plight, of the Revolt
The neweſt ſtate.
Mal. This is the Serjeant,
Who like a good and hardy Souldier fought
Gainſt my Captivity: Haile: haile brave friend;
Say to the King, the knowledge of the broyle,
As thou didſt leave it.
Cap. Doubtfull it ſtood,
As two ſpent Swimmers, that doe cling together,
And choake their Art: The mercileſſe Macdonnell (Worthy to be a Rebell, for to that
The multiplying Villaines of Nature
Doe ſwarme upon him) from the Weſterne Iſles
Of Kernes and Gallowglaſſes is ſupply'd,
And Fortune on his damned Quarry ſmiling,
Shew'd like a Rebells Whore: but al's too weake:
For brave Macbeth (well he deſerves that Name)
Diſdayning Fortune, with his brandiſht Steele,
Which ſmoak'd with bloody execution
(Like Valours Minion) carv'd out his paſſage,
Till he fac'd the Slave:
Which neu'r ſhooke hands, nor bad farewell to him,
Till he unſeam'd him from the Nave toth' Chops,
And fix'd his head upon our Battlements.
King. O valiant Couſin, worthy Gentleman,
Cap. As whence the Sunne gins his reſtection,
Shipwracking Stormes, and direfull Thunders breaking
So from that ſpring, whence comfort ſeem'd to come,
Diſcomfort ſwells: Marke King of Scotland, marke,
No ſooner juſtice had, with Valour arm'd,
Compell'd theſe skipping Kernes to truſt their heeles,
But the Norweyan Lord, ſurveying vantage,
With furbuſht Armes, and new ſupplyes of men,
Began a freſh aſſault.
King. Diſmaid not this our Captaines, Macbeih and Banquoh?
Cap. Yes, as Sparrowes Eagles;
Or the Hare, the Lyon:
If I ſay ſooth, I muſt report they were
As Cannons over-charg'd with double Crackes
So they doubly redoubled ſtroakes on the Foe:
Except they meant to bathe in recking Wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell: but I am faint,
My Gaſhes cry for helpe.
King. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds
They ſmacke of Honor both: Goe get him Surgeons.

Enter Roſſe and Angus.

Who comes here?
Mal. The worthy Thane of Roſſe.
Lenox. What haſt lookes through his eyes?
So ſhould he looke, that ſeemes to ſpeake things ſtrange.
Roſſe. God ſave the King.
King. Whence cam'ſt thou, worthy Thane?
Roſe. From Fife, great King,
Where the Norweyan Bannars flowt the Sky,
And fanne our people cold.
Norway himſelfe, with terrible numbers,
Aſſiſted by that moſt diſloyall Traytor,
The Thane of Cawdor, began a diſmall Conflict,
Till that Bellona's Bridegroome, lapt in proofe,
Confronted him with ſelfe-compariſons,
Point againſt Point, rebellious Arme gainſt Arme,
Curbing his laviſh ſpirit: and to conclude,
The Victory fell on us,
King. Great happineſſe.
Roſſe. That now Sweno, the Norwayes King,
Craves compoſition:
Nor would we deigne him butiall of his men,
Till he disburſed, at Saint Colmes-hill,
Ten thouſand Dollars, to our generall uſe.

King. No more that Thane of Cawdor ſhall deceive
Our Boſome intereſt: Goe pronounce his preſent death,
And with his former Title greet Macbeth.
Roſ. Ile ſee it done.
King. What he hath loſt, Noble Macbeth hath wonne.
Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Where haſt thou been, Siſter?
2 Killing Swine.
3 Siſter, where thou?
1 A Saylors Wife had Cheſtnuts in her Lappe,
And mouncht, and mouncht, and mouncht:
Give me, quoth I.
Aroynt thee, Witch, the rumpe-fed Ronyon cryes.
Her husbands to Aleppo gone, Maſter oth' Tiger:
But in a Syve Ile thither ſayle,
And like a Rat without a tayle,
Ile doe, Ile doe, and Ile doe.
2 Ile give thee a Wind.
1 Th'art kind.
3 And I another.
1 I my ſelfe have all the other,
And the very Ports they blow,
All the Quarters that they know.
Ith' Ship-mans Card.
I'le dreyne him dry as Hay:
Sleepe ſhall neither Night nor day
Hang upon his Pent-houſe Lid:
He ſhall live a man forbid:
Weary Seu'nights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peake, and pine:
Though his Barke cannot be loſt,
Yet it ſhall be Tempeſt-toſt.
Looke what I have.
2 Shew me, ſhew me.
1 Here I have a Pilots Thumbe,
Wrackt, as homeward he did come. Drum within.
3 A Drumme, a Drumme:
Macbeth doth come.
All. The weyward Siſters, hand in hand,
Poſters of the Sea and Land,
Thus doe goe, about, about,
Thice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice againe, to make up nine.
Peace, the Charme's wound up.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foule and faire a day I have not ſeene.
Banq. How farre is't call'd to Soris? What are theſe,
So wither'd, and ſo wilde in their attyre,
That looke not like th'inhabitants oth'Earth,
And yet are on't? Live you, or are you aught
That man may queſtion? you ſeeme to underſtand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying
Vpon her skinny Lips: you ſhould be Women,
And yet your Beards forbid me to interpret
That you are ſo.
Mac. Speake if you can: what are you?
1 All haile Macbeth, haile to thee Thane of Glamis.
2 All haile Macbeth, haile to thee Thane of Cawdor.
3 All haile Macbeth, that ſhalt be King hereafter.
Banq. Good ſir, why doe you ſtart, and ſeeme to feare
Things that doe ſound ſo faire? i'th' name of truth
Are ye fantaſticall, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye ſhew? My Noble Partner
You greet with preſent Grace, and great prediction
Of Noble having, and of Royall hope,
That he ſeemes wrapt withall; to me you ſpeake not.
If you can looke into the Seedes of Time,
And ſay, which Graine will grow, and which will not.
Speake then to me, who neither begge, nor feare
Your favors, nor your hate.
1 Hayle.
2 Hayle.
3 Hayle.
1 Leſſer then Macbeth, and greater.
2 Not ſo happy, yet much happyer.
3 Thou ſhalt get Kings, though thou be none:
So all haile Macbeth, and Banquo.
1 Banquo, and Macbeth, all haile.
Macb. Stay you imperfect Speakers, tell me more:
By Sinells death, I know I am Thane of Glamis,
But how, of Cawdor? the Thane of Cawdor lives
A proſperous Gentleman: And to be King,
Stands not within the proſpect of beliefe,
No more then to be Cawdor. Say from whence
You owe this ſtrange Intelligence, or why
Vpon this blaſted heath you ſtop our way
With ſuch Prophetique greeting?
Speake, I charge you. Witches vaniſh.
Banq. The earth hath bubbles, as the Water has,
And theſe are of them: whether are they vaniſh'd?
Macb. Into the Ayre: and what ſeem'd corporall,
Melted, as breath into the Winde.
Would they had ſtaid.
Banq. Were ſuch things here, as we doe ſpeake about?
Or have we eaten on the inſane Root,
That takes the Reaſon Priſoner?
Macb. Your Children ſhall be Kings.
Banq. You ſhall be King.
Macb. And Thane of Cawdor too: went it not ſo?
Banq. Toth' ſelfe-ſame tune, and words: whos here?

Enter Roſſe, and Angus.

Roſſe. The King hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth,
The newes of thy ſucceſſe; and when he reades
Thy perſonall Venture in the Rebels fight,
His wonders and his Praiſes doe contend,
Which ſhould be thine, or his: ſilenc'd with that,
In viewing o're the reſt o'th'ſelfe-ſame day,
He findes thee in the ſtout Norweyan Rankes,
Nothing afeard of what thy ſelfe didſt make
Strange Images of death, as thicke as Tale
Can poſt with poſt, and every one did beare
Thy prayſes in his Kingdomes great defence,
And powr'd them downe before him.
Ang. We are ſent,
To give thee from our Royall Maſter thankes,
Onely to herrald thee into his ſight,
Not pay thee.
Roſſe. And for an earneſt of a greater honor,
He bad me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawdor:

In which addition, haile moſt worthy Thane,
For it is thine.
Banq. What can the Devill ſpeake true?
Macb. The Thane of Cawdor lives:
Why doe you dreſſe me in his borrowed Robes?
Ang. Who was the Thane, lives yet,
But under heavy judgement beares that life,
Which he deſerves to looſe.
Whether he was combin'd with thoſe of Norway,
Or elſe did lyne the Rebell with hidden helpe,
And vantage; or that with both he labour'd
In his Countryes wracke, I know not:
But Treaſons Capitall, confeſs'd, and prou'd,
Have overthrowne him.
Macb. Glamis, and Thane of Cawdor:
The greateſt is behind. Thankes for your paines.
Doe you not hope your Children ſhall be Kings,
When thoſe that gave the Thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no leſſe to them.
Banq. That truſted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the Crowne,
Beſides the Thane of Cawdor. But tis ſtrange:
And oftentimes, to winne us to our harme,
The Inſtruments of Darkneſſe tell us Truths,
Winne us with honeſt Trifles, to betrays
In deepeſt conſequence.
Couſins, a word, I pray you.
Macb. Two truths are told,
As happy Prologues to the ſwelling Acte
Of the imperiall Theame. I thanke you Gentlemen:
This ſupernaturall ſolliciting
Cannot be ill; cannot be good.
If ill? why hath it given me earneſt of ſucceſſe,
Commencing in a Truth? I am Thane of Cawdor.
If good? why doe I yeeld to that ſuggeſtion,
Whoſe horrid Image doth unfixe my heire,
And make my ſeated Heart knocke at my Ribbes,
Againſt the uſe of nature? Preſent Feares
Are leſſe then horrible imaginings:
My thought, whoſe Murther yet is but fantaſticall,
Shakes ſo my ſingle ſtate of Man,
That function is ſmother'd in ſurmiſe,
And nothing is, but what is not.
Banq. Looke how our Partners rapt.
Macb. If chance will have me King,
Why Chance may Crowne me,
Without my ſtirre.
Banq. New honors come upon him
Like our ſtrange Garments, cleave not to their mould,
But with the aid of uſe.
Macb. Come what come may,
Time, and the houre, runs through the rougheſt Day.
Banq. Worthy Macbeth, we ſtay upon your leyſure.
Macb. Give me your favour:
My dull Braine was wrought with things forgotten.
Kind Gentlemen, your paines are regiſtred,
Where every day I turne the Leafe,
To reade them.
Let us toward the King; thinke upon
What hath chanc'd: and at more time,
The Interim having weigh'd it, let us ſpeake
Our free hearts each to other.
Banq. Very gladly,
Macb. Till then enough:
Come friends.
Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Flouriſh. Enter King, Lenox, Malcolme,
Donalbaine, and Attendants.

King. Is execution done on Cawdor?
Are not thoſe in Commiſſion yet return'd?
Mal. My Liege, they are not yet come backe.
But I have ſpoke with one that ſaw him dye:
Who did report, that very frankly he
Confeſs'd his Treaſons, implor'd your Highneſſe Pardon
And ſet forth a deepe Repentance:
Nothing in his Life became him,
Like the leaving it. He dy'de,
As one that had beene ſtudied in his death,
To throw away the deareſt thing he ow'd,
As twere a careleſſe Trifle.
King. Theres no Art,
To finde the mindes conſtruction in the face:
He was a Gentleman, on whom I built
An abſolute Truſt.
Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Roſſe, and Angus.
O worthyeſt Couſin,
The ſinne of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me. Thou art ſo farre before,
That ſwifteſt Wine of Recompence is ſlow:
To overtake thee. Would thou hadſt leſſe deſerv'd,
That the proportion both of thankes, and payment,
Might have beene mine: onely I have left to ſay,
More is thy due, then more then all can pay.
Macb. The ſervice, and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it payes it ſelfe.
Your highneſſe part, is to receive our Duties:
And our Duties are to your Throne, and State,
Children, and Servants; which doe but what they ſhould
By doing every thing ſafe toward your Love
And honor,
King. Welcome hither:
I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing. Noble Banquo,
That haſt no leſſe deſerv'd, nor muſt be knowne
No leſſe to have done ſo: Let me enfold thee,
And hold thee to my heart,
Banq. There if I grow,
The Harveſt is your owne.
King. My plenteous joyes,
Wanton in fulneſſe, ſeeke to hide themſelves
In drops of ſorrow. Sonnes, Kinſman, Thanes,
And you whoſe places are the neareſt, know,
We will eſtabliſh our Eſtate upon
Our eldeſt, Malcolme, whom we name heareafter,
The Prince of Cumberland: which honor muſt
Not unaccompained, inveſt him onely.
But ſignes of Nobleneſſe, like Starres ſhall ſhine
On all deſervers. From hence to Envernes,
And bind us further to you.
Mac. The Reſt is labour, which is not us'd for you:
Ile be my ſelfe the Herbenger, and make joyfull
The hearing of my Wife, with your approach:
So humbly take my leave.
King. My worthy Cawdor.
Macb. The Prince of Cumberland: that is a ſtep,
On which I muſt fall downe, or elſe o're leape,

For in my way it lyes. Starres hide your fires,
Let not Light ſee my blacke and deepe deſires:
The eye winke at the hand: yet let that be,
Which the Eye feares, when it is done to ſee. Exit.
King. True, worthy Banquo: he is full ſo valiant,
And in his commendations, I am fed:
It is a Banquet to me. Lets after him,
Whoſe care is gone before, to bid us welcome:
It is a peereleſſe Kinſman. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Macbeths Wife alone with a Letter.

Lady. They met me in the day of ſucceſſe: and I have learn'd by the perfect'ſt report, they have more in them, then mortall knowledge. When I burnt in deſire to queſtion them further, they made themſelves Ayre, into which they vaniſh'd. Whiles I ſtood rapt in the wonder of it, came Miſſives from the King, who all hail'd me Thane of Cawdor, by which Title before, theſe weyward Siſters ſaluted me, and referr'd me to the comming on of time, with haile King that ſhalt be. This have I thought good to deliver thee (my deareſt Partner of Greatneſſe) that thou might'ſt not looſe the dues of rejoycing by being ignorant of what Greatneſſe is promis'd thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor, and ſhalt be
What thou art promis'd: yet doe I feare thy Nature,
It is too full o'th' Milke of humane kindneſſe,
To catch the neereſt way. Thou wouldſt be great,
Art not without Ambition, but without
The illneſſe ſhould attend it. What thou wouldſt highly,
That wouldſt thou holily: wouldſt not play falſe,
And yet wouldſt wrongly winne.
Thould'ſt have, great Glamis, that which cryes,
Thus thou muſt doe, if thou have it;
And that which rather thou do'ſt feare to doe,
Then wiſheſt ſhould be undone. High thee hither,
That I may powre my Spirits in thine Eare,
And chaſtiſe with the valour of my Tongue
All that thee hinders from the Golden Round,
Which Fate and Metaphyſicall ayde doth ſeeme
To have thee crown'd withall. Enter Meſſenger.
What is your tidings?
Meſſ. The King comes here to Night.
Lady. Thou'rt mad to ſay it.
Is not thy Maſter with him? who, wer't ſo,
Would have inform'd for preparation.
Meſſ. So pleaſe you, it is true: our Thane is comming:
One of my fellowes had the ſpeed of him;
Who almoſt dead for breath, had ſcarcely more
Then would make up his Meſſage.
Lady. Give him tending,
He brings great newes. Exit Meſſenger.
The Raven himſelfe is hoarſe,
That croakes the fatall entrance of Duncan
Vnder my Battlements. Come you Spirits,
That tend on mortall thoughts, unſex me here,
And fill me from the Crowne to the Toe, top-full
Of direſt Cruelty: make thicke my blood,
Stop up th'acceſſe, and paſſage to Remorſe,
That no compunctious viſitings of Nature
Shake my fell purpoſe, nor keepe peace betweene
Th'effect, and hit. Come to my Womans Breſts,
And take my Milke for Gall, you murth'ring Miniſters,
Where-ever, in your ſightleſſe ſubſtances,
You wait on Natures Miſchiefe. Come thicke Night,
And pall thee in the dunneſt ſmoake of hell,
That my keene Knife ſee not the Wound it makes,
Nor heaven peepe through the Blanket of the darke,
To cry, hold, hold. Enter Macbeth.
Great Glamis, worthy Cawdor,
Greater then both, by the all-haile hereafter,
Thy Letters have tranſported me beyond
This ignorant preſent, and I feele now
The future in the inſtant.
Macb. My deareſt Love,
Duncane comes here to Night.
Lady. And when goes hence?
Macb. To morrow, as he purpoſes.
Lady. O never,
Shall Sunne that Morrow ſee.
Your Face, my Thane, is as booke, where men
May reade ſtrange matters, to beguile the time.
Looke like the time, beare welcome in your Eye,
Your hand, your Tongue: looke like the innocent flower,
But be the Serpent under't. He thats comming,
Muſt be provided for: and you ſhall put
This Nights great buſineſſe into my diſpatch,
Which ſhall to all our Nights, and Dayes to come,
Give ſolely ſoveraigne ſway, and Maſterdome.
Macb. We will ſpeake further.
Lady. Onely looke up cleare:
To alter favor, ever is to feare:
Leave all the reſt to me. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Hoboyes, and Torches. Enter King, Malcolme, Donalbaine, Banquo, Lenox, Macduffe, Roſſe, Angus, and Attendants.

King. This Caſtle hath a pleaſant ſeat,
The ayre nimbly and ſweetly recommends it ſelfe
Vnto our gentle ſences.
Banq. This Gueſt of Summer,
The Temple-haunting Barlet does approve,
By his loued Manſonry, that the Heavens breath
Smells wooingly here: no Iutty frieze,
Buttrice, nor Coigne of Vantage, but this Bird
Hath made his pendant Bed, and procreant Cradle,
Where they muſt breed, and haunt: I have obſerv'd
The ayre is delicate. Enter Lady.
King. See, ſee, our honor'd Hoſteſſe:
The love that followes us, ſometime is our trouble,
Which ſtill we thanke as Love. Herein I teach you,
How you ſhall bid god-eyld us for your paines,
And thanke us for your trouble.
Lady. All our ſervice,
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poore, and ſingle Buſineſſe, to contend
Againſt thoſe honors deepe, and broad,
Wherewith your Majeſty loades our houſe:
For thoſe of old, and the late Dignities,
Heap'd up to them, we reſt your Hermites.

King. Wheres the Thane of Cawdor?
We courſt him at the heeles, and had a purpoſe
To be his Purveyor: But he rides well,
And his great Love (ſharpe at his Spurre) hath holpe him
To his home before us: Faire and Noble Hoſteſſe
We are your gueſt to night.

Lady. Your Servants ever,
Have theirs, themſelves, and what is theirs in compt,
To make their Audit at your higneſſe pleaſure,
Still to returne your owne.

King. Give me your hand:
Conduct me to mine Hoſt we love him highly,
And ſhall continue, our Graces towards him.
By your leave Hoſteſſe. Exeunt.

Scæna Septima.

Ho-boyes. Torches.
Enter a Sewer, and divers Servants with Diſhes and Service over the Stage. Then enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done, when tis done, then twer well,
It were done quickly: if th'Aſſaſſination
Could trammell up the Conſequence, and catch
With his ſurceaſe, Succeſſe: that but this blow
Might be the be all, and the end all. Heere,
But heere, upon this Banke and Schoole of time,
We'ld jumpe the life to come. But in theſe Caſes,
We ſtill have judgement heere, that we but teach
Bloody inſtructions, which being taught, returne
To plague th'Ingredience of our poyſon'd Challice
To our owne lips. Hes here in double truſt;
Firſt, as I am his Kinſman, and his ſubject,
Strong both againſt the Deed: then, as his Hoſt,
Who ſhould againſt his Murtherer ſhut the doore,
Not beare the knife my ſelfe. Beſides, this Duncane
Hath borne his Faculties ſo meeke: hath bin
So cleere in his great Office, that his Vertues
Will pleade like Angels, Trumpet-tongu'd againſt
The deepe damnation of his taking off:
And Pitty, like a naked Newborne-babe,
Striding the blaſt, or heavens Cherubin, hors'd
Vpon the ſightleſſe Curriors of the Ayre,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That teares ſhall drowne the winde. I have no Spurre
To pricke the ſides of my intent, but onely
Vaulting Ambition, which ore-leapes it ſelfe,
And falles on th'other. Enter Lady.
How now? What Newes?

La. He has almoſt ſupt: why have you left the chamber?

Mac. Hath he ask'd for me?

Lady. Know you not, he has?

Mac. We will proceed no further in this Buſineſſe:
He hath honour'd me of late, and I have bought
Golden Opinions from all ſorts of people,
Which would be worne now in their neweſt gloſſe,
Not caſt aſide ſo ſoone.

Lady. Was the hope drunke,
Wherein you dreſt your ſelfe? hath it ſlept ſince?
And wakes it now to looke ſo greene, and pale,
At what it did ſo freely? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou affear'd
To be the ſame in thine owne Act, and Valour,
As thou art in deſire? Wouldſt thou have that
Which thou eſteem'ſt the Ornament of Life,
And live a Coward in thine owne Eſteeme?
Letting I dare not, wait upon I would,
Like the poore Cat i'th'Addage.

Macb. Prethee peace:
I dare doe all that may become a man,
Who dares do more, is none.

Lady. What beaſt was't then
That made you breake this enterprize to me?
When you durſt doe it, then you were a man:
And to be more then what you were, you would
Be ſo much more the man. Nor time, nor place
Did then adhere, and yet you would make both:
They have made themſelves, and that their fitneſſe now
Do's unmake you. I have given Sucke, and know
How tender tis to love the Babe that milkes me,
I would, while it was ſmyling in my face,
Have pluckt my Nipple from his boneleſſe Gummes,
And daſht the Braines out, had I ſo ſworne
As you have done to this.

Macb. If we ſhould faile?

Lady. We faile?
But ſcrew your courage to the ſticking place,
And wee'l not faile: when Duncan is a ſleepe,
(Whereto the rather ſhall his dayes hard Iourney
Soundly invite him) his two Chamberlaines
Will I with Wine, and Waſſell, ſo convince,
That Memory, the Warder of the Braine,
Shall be a Fume, and the Receit of Reaſon
A Lymbecke onely: when in Swiniſh ſleepe,
Their drenched Natures lyes as in a Death,
What cannot you and I performe upon
Th'unguarded Duncan? What not put upon
His ſpungy Officers? who ſhall beare the guilt
Of our great quell.

Macb. Bring forth Men-Children onely:
For thy undaunted Mettle ſhould compoſe
Nothing but Males. Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood thoſe ſleepy two
Of his owne Chamber, and us'd their very Daggers,
That they have don't?

Lady. Who dares receive it other,
As we ſhall make our Griefes and Clamor rore,
Vpon his death?

Macb. I am ſettled, and bend up
Each corporall Agent to this terrible Feat.
Away, and mocke the time with faireſt ſhow,
Falſe Face muſt hide what the falſe heart doth know.
Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance, with a Torch before him.

Banq. How goes the Night, Boy?

Fleance. The Moone is downe: I have not heard the Clocke.

Banq. And ſhe goes downe at Twelve.

Flean. I take't, 'tis later, Sir.

Banq. Hold, take my Sword:
There's Husbandry in Heaven,
Their Candles are all out: take thee that too.

A heavy Summons lyes like Lead upon me,
And yet I would not ſleepe:
Mercifull Powers, reſtraine in me the curſed thoughts
That Nature gives way to in repoſe.

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a Torch.

Give me my Sword: whos there?
Macb. A friend.
Banq. What Sir, not yet at reſt? the Kings a bed.
He hath beene in unuſuall pleaſure.
And ſent forth a great Largeſſe to your Offices.
This Diamond he greets your Wife withall,
By the name of moſt kind hoſteſſe,
And ſhut it up in meaſureleſſe content.
Macb. Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the ſervant to defect,
Which elſe ſhould free have wrought.
Banq. Alls well.
I dreampt laſt Night of the three weyward Siſters:
To you they have ſhew'd ſome truth.
Macb. I thinke not of them:
Yet when we can intreat an houre to ſerve,
We would ſpend it in ſome words upon that Buſineſſe,
If you would graunt the time.
Ban. At your kindſt leyſure.
Macb, If you ſhall cleave to my conſent,
When tis, it ſhall make honor for you.
Banq. So I loſe none,
In ſeeking to augment it, but ſtill keepe
My boſome franchis'd, and Allegeance cleare,
I ſhall be counſail'd.
Macb. Good repoſe the while.
Banq. Thankes Sir: the like to you. Exit Banquo.
Macb. Goe bid thy Miſtreſſe, when my drinke is ready
She ſtrike upon the Bell. Get thee to bed. Exit.
Is this a dagger, which I ſee before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee:
I have thee not, and yet I ſee thee ſtill,
Art thou not fatall Viſion, ſenſible
To feeling, as to ſight? or art thou but
A Dagger of the Minde, a falſe Creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppreſſed Braine?
I ſee thee yet, in forme as palpable,
As this which now I draw.
Thou marſhalſt me the way that I was going,
And ſuch an inſtrument I was to uſe.
Mine eyes are made the fooles o'th' other Senſes,
Or elſe worth all the reſt: I ſee thee ſtill;
And on thy blade, and Dudgeon, Gouts of blood,
Which was not ſo before. There's no ſuch thing:
It is the bloody Buſineſſe, which informes
Thus to mine eyes. Now ore the one halfe World
Nature ſeemes dead, and wicked Dreames abuſe
The Curtain'd ſleepe: Witchcraft celebrates
Pale Heccates Offrings: and wither'd Murther,
Alarum'd by his Centinell, the Wolfe,
Whoſe howles his Watch, thus with his ſtealthy pace,
With Tarquins raviſhing ſides, towards his deſigne
Moves like a Ghoſt. Thou ſowre and firme-ſet Earth
Heare not my ſteps, which they may walke, for feare
Thy very ſtones prate of my where-about,
And take the preſent horror from the time,
Which now ſutes with it. Whiles I threat, he lives:
Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

A Bell rings.

I goe, and it is done: the bell invites me.
Heare it not, Duncane, for it is a Knell,
That ſummons thee to heaven, or to hell. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Lady.

La. That which hath made them drunke, hath made me
What hath quench'd them, hath given me fire. (bold:
Hearke, peace: it was the Owle that ſhriek'd,
The fatall Bell-man, which gives the ſtern'ſt good-night,
He is about it, the Doores are open:
And the ſurfeted Groomes doe mocke their charge
With Snores. I have drugg'd their Poſſets,
That death and Nature doe contend about them,
Whether they live, or dye.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. Whos there? what hoa?
Lady. Alacke, I am afraid they have awak'd,
And tis not done: th'attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds us: hearke: I laid their Daggers ready,
He could not miſſe em. Had he not reſembled
My father as he ſlept, I had don't.
My husband?
Macb. I have done the deed:
Didſt thou not heare a noyſe?
Lady. I heard the Owle ſchreame, and the Crickets cry
Did not you ſpeake?
Macb. When?
Lady. Now.
Macb. As I deſcended?
Lady. I.
Macb. Hearke, who lyes ith' ſecond Chamber?
Lady. Donalbaine.
Macb. This is a ſorry ſight.
Lady. A fooliſh thought, to ſay a ſorry ſight.
Macb. Theres one did laugh ins ſleepe,
And one cry'd Murther, that they did wake each other:
I ſtood, and heard them: but they did ſay their Prayers,
And addreſt them againe to ſleepe.
Lady. There are two lodg'd together.
Macb. One cry'd God bleſſe us, and Amen the other,
As they had ſeene me with theſe hangmans hands:
Liſtning their feare, I could not ſay Amen,
When they did ſay God bleſſe us.
Lady. Conſider it not ſo deepely.
Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce Amen?
I had moſt need of bleſſing, and Amen ſtuck in my throat
Lady. Theſe deeds muſt not be thought
After theſe wayes: ſo, it will make us mad.
Macb. Me thought I heard a voyce cry, ſleepe no more:
Macbeth does murther Sleepe, the innocent ſleepe,
Sleepe that knits up the ravel'd ſleeve of Care,
The death of each dayes Life, ſore Labors Bath,
Balme of hurt Mindes, great Natures ſecond Courſe,
Chiefe nouriſher in lifes feaſt.
Lady. What doe you meane?
Macb. Still it cry'd, ſleepe no more to all the houſe:
Glamis hath murther'd ſleepe, and therefore Cawdor
Shall ſleepe no more: Macbeth ſhall ſleepe no more.
Lad. Who was it, that thus cry'd? why worthy Thane,
You doe unbend your Noble ſtrength, to thinke
So braine-ſickly of things: Goe get ſome Water,
And

And waſh this filthy Witneſſe from your Hand.
Why did you bring theſe Daggers from the place?
They muſt lye there: goe carry them, and ſmeare
The ſleepy Groomes with blood.
Macb. Ile goe no more:
I am afraid, to thinke what I have done:
Looke on't againe, I dare not.
Lady. Infirme of purpoſe:
Give me the Daggers: the ſleeping, and the dead,
Are but as Pictures: 'tis the Eye of Child-hood,
That feares a painted Divell. If he doe bleed,
Ile guilde the Faces of the Groomes withall,
For it muſt ſeeme their Guilt. Exit.

Knocke within.

Macb. Whence is that knocking?
How is't with me, when every noyſe appalls me?
What Hands are here? hah: they plucke out mine Eyes.
Will all great Neptunes Ocean waſh this blood
Cleane from my Hand? no: this my Hand will rather
The multitudinous Seas incarnardine,
Making the Greene one, Red.

Enter Lady.

Lady. My hands are of your colour: but I ſhame
To weare a heart ſo white. Knocke.
I heare a knocking at the South entry:
Retyre we to our Chamber:
A little Water cleares us of this deed.
How eaſie is it then? your Conſtancie
Hath left you unattended, Knocke.
Hearke, more knocking.
Get on your Night-Gowne, leſt occaſion call us,
And ſhew vs to be Watchers: be not loſt
So poorely in your thoughts.
Macb. To know my deed, Knocke.
'Twere beſt not know my ſelfe.
Wake Duncan with thy knocking:
I would thou could'ſt. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter a Porter.

Knocking within.

Porter. Heere's a knocking indeed: if a man were Porter of Hell Gate, hee ſhould have old turning the Key. Knocke, Knock, Knock, Knock. Who's there i'th'name of Belzebub? Here's a Farmer, that hang'd himſelfe on th'expectation of Plenty: Come in time, have Napkins enough about you, here you'le ſweat for't. Knock. Knock, Knock. Who's there in th'other Devils Name? Faith here's an Equivocator, that could ſweare in both the Scales, againſt eyther Scale, who committed Treaſon enough for Gods ſake, yet could not equivocate to Heaven: oh come in, Equivocator, Knock. Knock, Knock, Knock. Who's there? Faith here's an Engliſh Taylor come hither, for ſtealing out of a French Hoſe: Come in Taylor, here you may roſt your Gooſe. Knock. Knock, Knock, Never at quiet: What are you? but this place is too cold for Hell. Ile Devill-Porter it no further: I had thought to have let in ſome of all profeſſions, that goe the Primroſe way to th'everlaſting Bonfire. Knock. Anon, anon, I pray you remember the Porter.

Enter Macduff, and Lenox.

Macd. Was it ſo late, friend, ere you went to Bed,
That you doe lye ſo late?

Port. Faith Sir, we were carowſing till the ſecond Cock: And Drinke, Sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does Drinke eſpecially provoke?

Port. Marry, Sir, Noſe-painting, Sleepe, and Vrine. Lechery, Sir, it provokes, and unprovokes: it Provokes the deſire, but it takes away the performance. Therefore much Drinke may be ſaid to be an Equivocator with Lechery: it makes him and it marres him; it ſets him on, and it takes him off; it perſwades him, and diſheartens him; makes him ſtand to, and not ſtand to: in concluſion, equivocates him in a ſleepe, and giving him the Lye, leaves him.

Macd. I beleeve, Drinke gave thee the Lye laſt Night.

Port. That it did, Sir, i'the very Throat on me: but I requited him for his Lye, and (I thinke) being too ſtrong for him, though he tooke up my Legges ſometime, yet I made a Shift to caſt him.

Enter Macbeth.

Macd. Is thy Maſter ſtirring?
Our knocking ha's awak'd him: here he comes.
Lenox. Good morrow, Noble Sir.
Macb. Good morrow both.
Macd. Is the King ſtirring, worthy Thane?
Macb. Not yet.
Macd. He did command me to call timely on him,
I have almoſt ſlipt the houre.
Macb. Ile bring you to him.
Macd. I know this is a ioyfull trouble to you:
But yet 'tis one.
Macb. The labour we delight in, Phyſicks paine:
This is the Doore.
Macd. Ile make ſo bold to call, for 'tis my limited
ſervice. Exit Macduffe.
Lenox. Goes the King hence to day.
Macb. He does: he did appoint ſo.
Lenox. The Night ha's beene vnruly;
Where we lay, our Chimneys were blowne downe.
And (as they ſay) lamentings heard i'th'Ayre;
Strange Schreemes of Death,
And Prophecying, with Accents terrible,
Of dyre Combuſtions and confus'd Events,
New hatch'd toth'wofull time.
The obſcnre Bird clamor'd the live-long Night,
Some ſay, the Earth was fevorous,
And did ſhake.
Macb. 'Twas a rough Night.
Lenox. My young remembrance cannot parallell
A fellow to it.

Enter Macduff.

Macd. O horror, horror, horror,
Tongue nor Heart cannot conceive, nor name thee.
Macb. and Lenox. What's the matter?
Macd. Confuſion now hath made his Maſter-peece:
Moſt ſacrilegious Murther hath broke ope
The Lords anoynted Temple, and ſtole thence
The Life o'th'Building.
Macb. What is't you ſay? the Life?
Lenox. Meane you his Maieſtie?
Macb. Approch the Chamber, and deſtroy your ſight
With a new Gorgon. Doe not bid me ſpeake:

See, and then ſpeake your ſelves : awake, awake,
Exeunt Macbeth and Lenox.
Ring the Alarum Bell : Murther, and Treaſon,
Banquo, and Donalbaine : Malcolme awake,
Shake off this Downy ſleepe, Deaths counterfeit,
And looke on death it ſelfe : up, up, and ſee
The great Doomes Image : Malcolme, Banquo,
As from your Graves riſe up, and walke like Sprights,
To countenance this horror. Ring the Bell.
Bell Rings. Enter Lady.
Lady. What's the buſineſſe ?
That ſuch a hideous Trumpet calls to parley
The ſleepers of the Houſe ? ſpeake, ſpeake,
Macd. O gentle Lady,
'Tis not for you to heare what I can ſpeake :
The repetition in a Womans eare,
Would murther as it fell.
Enter Banquo.
O Banquo, Banquo, Our Royall Maſter's murther'd.
Lady. Woe, alas :
What, in our houſe ?
Ban. Too cruell, any where.
Deare Duff, I prythee contract thy ſelfe,
And ſay, it is not ſo.

Enter Macbeth, Lenox, and Roſſe.

Macb. Had I but dy'd an houre before this chance,
I had liv'd a bleſſed time : for from this inſtant,
There's nothing ſerious in Mortality :
All is but Toyes : Renowne and Grace is dead,
The Wine of Life is drawne, and the meere Lees
Is left this Vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolme and Donalbaine.

Donal. What is amiſſe ?
Macb. You are and doe not know't :
The Spring, the Head, the Fountaine of your Blood
Is ſtopt; the very Source of it is ſtopt,
Macd. Your Royall Father's murther'd.
Mal. Oh, by whom ?
Lenox. Thoſe of his Chamber, as it ſeem'd, had don't:
Their Hands and Faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their Daggers, which unwip'd, we found
Vpon their Pillowes : they ſtar'd, and were diſtracted,
No mans life was to be truſted with them.
Macb. O, yet I do repent me of my furie,
That I did kill them.
Macd. Wherefore did you ſo ?
Macb. Who can be wiſe, amaz'd, temp'rate, & furious,
Loyall, and Neutrall, in a moment ? No man :
Th'expedition of my violent Love
Out-run the pawſer, Reaſon. Here lay Duncan,
His Silver skinne, lac'd with his Golden Blood,
And his gaſh'd Stabs, look'd like a Breach in Nature,
For Ruines waſtfull entrance : there the Murtherers,
Steep'd in the Colours of their Trade ; their Daggers
Vnmannerly breech'd with gore : who could refraine,
That had a heart to love, and in that heart,
Courage, to make's love knowne ?
Lady. Helpe me hence, hoa,
Macd. Looke to the Lady,.
Mal, Why do we hold our tongues,
That moſt may claime this argument for ours ?
Donal. What ſhould be ſpoken here,
Where our Fate hid within an augure hole,
May ruſh, and ſeize us ? Let's away,
Our Teares are not yet brew'd.
Mal. Nor our ſtrong Sorrow
Vpon the foote of Motion.
Banq. Looke to the Lady :
And when we have our naked Frailties hid,
That ſuffer in expoſure ; let us meet,
And queſtion this moſt bloody piece of worke,
To know it further. Feares and ſcruples ſhake us :
In the great Hand of God I ſtand, and thence,
Againſt the undivulg'd pretence I fight
Of Treaſonous Malice.
Macd. And ſo doe I.
All. So all.
Macb. Let's breefely put on manly readineſſe,
And meet i'th' Hall together.
All. Well contented, Exeunt.
Malc. What will you doe ?
Let's not conſort with them :
To ſhew an unfelt Sorrow, is an Office
Which the falſe man do's eaſie.
Ile to England.
Don. To Ireland, I :
Our ſeperated fortune ſhall keepe us both the ſafer :
Where we are, there's Daggers in mens Smiles ;
The neere in blood, the neerer bloody.
Macl. This murtherous Shaft that's ſhot,
Hath not yet lighte'd : and our ſafeſt way,
Is to avoid the ayme. Therefore to Houſe,
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But ſhift away : there's warrant in that Theft,
Which ſteales it ſelfe, when there's no mercie left.
Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Roſſe, with an Old man.

Old man. Threeſcore and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which Time, I have ſeene
Houres dreadfull, and things ſtrange : but this ſore Night
Hath trified former knowings.
Roſſe. Ha, good Father,
Thou ſeeſt the heavens, as troubled with mans Act,
Threatens his bloody Stage : by th' Clock tis Day,
And yet darke Night ſtrangles the travailing Lampe :
Iſt Nights predominance, or the Dayes ſhame,
That darkeneſſe does the face of Earth intombe,
When living Light ſhall kiſſe it ?
Oldman. 'Tis unnaturall,
Even like the deed that's done : on Tueſday laſt,
A Faulcon towring in her pride of place,
Was by a Mowſing Owle hawkt at, and kill'd
Roſſe. And Duncans Horſes,
(A thing moſt ſtrange, and certaine)
Beauteous, and ſwift, the Minions of their Race,
Turn'd wilde in nature, broke their ſtalls, flong out,
Contending 'gainſt Obedience, as they would Make warre with Mankinde.
Old man. 'Tis ſaid, they eate each other.
Roſſe. They did ſo :

To th'amazement of mine eyes that look'd upon't.
Enter Macduffe.
Heere comes the good Macduffe.
How goes the world Sir, now?
Macd. Why ſee you not?
Roſſe. Is't known who did this more then bloody deed?
Macd. Thoſe that Macbeth hath ſlaine.
Roſſe. Alas the day,
What good could they pretend?
Macd. They were ſubborned,
Malcolme, and Donolbaine the Kings two Sonnes
Are ſtolne away and fled, which puts upon them
Suſpition of the deed.
Roſſe. 'Gainſt Nature ſtill,
Thriftleſſe Ambition, that will raven upon
Thine owne lives meanes: Then 'tis moſt like,
The Soveraignty will fall upon Macbeth.
Macd. He is already nam'd, and gone to Scone
To be inveſted.
Roſſe. Where is Duncans body?
Macd. Carried to Colmekill,
The Sacred Store-houſe of his Predeceſſors,
And Guardian of their Bones.
Roſſe. Will you to Scone?
Macd. No Coſin, Ile to Fife.
Roſſe. Well, I will thither.
Macd. Well may you ſee things well done there: Adieu
Leſt our old Robes ſit eaſier then our new.
Roſſe. Farewell, Father.
Old M. Gods benyſon go with you ſir, and with thoſe
That would make good of bad, and Friends of Foes.
Exeunt omnes.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Banquo.
Banq. Thou haſt it now, King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weyward Women promis'd, and I feare
Thou plaid'ſt moſt foully for't: yet it was ſaid
It ſhould not ſtand in thy Poſterity,
But that my ſelfe ſhould be the Roote, and Father
Of many Kings. If there come truth from them,
As upon thee Macbeth, their Speeches ſhine,
Why by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my Oracles as well,
And ſet me up in hope. But huſh, no more.

Senit ſounded. Enter Macbeth as King, Lady Lenox, Roſſe, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. Heere's our chiefe Gueſt.
La. If he had beene forgotten,
It had beene as a gap in our great Feaſt,
And all-things unbecomming.
Macb. To night we hold a ſolemne Supper, ſir,
And Ile requeſt your preſence.
Banq. Let your Highneſſe
Command upon me, to the which my duties
Are with a moſt indiſſoluble tye
For ever knit.
Macb. Ride you this afternoone?
Ban. I, my good Lord.
Macb. We ſhould have elſe deſir'd your good advice
(Which ſtill hath been both grave, and proſperous)
In this dayes Councell: but wee'le take to morrow.
Is't farre you ride?
Ban. As farre, my Lord, as will fill up the time
Twixt this, and Supper. Goe not my Horſe the better,
I muſt become a borrower of the Night,
For a darke houre or twaine.
Macb. Faile not our Feaſt.
Ban. My Lord, I will not.
Macb. We heare our bloody Cozens are beſtow'd
In England, and in Ireland, not confeſſing
Their cruell Parricide, filling their hearers
With ſtrange inuention. But of that to morrow,
When therewithall we ſhall have cauſe of State,
Craving us joyntly. Hye you to horſe:
Adieu, till you returne at Night.
Goes Fleance with you?
Ban. I, my good Lord: our time does call upon's.
Macb. I wiſh your Horſes ſwift, and ſure of foot:
And ſo I doe commend you to their backs.
Farwell. Exit Banquo.
Let every man be maſter of his time,
Till ſeaven at Night, to make ſociety
The ſweeter welcome:
We will keepe our ſelfe till Supper time alone:
While then, God be with you. Exeunt Lords.
Sirrha, a word with you: Attend thoſe men
Our pleaſure?
Servant. They are, my Lord, without the Palace Gate.
Macb. Bring them before us. Exit Servant.
To be thus, is nothing, but to be ſafely thus:
Our feares in Banquo ſticke deepe,
And in his Royalty of Nature reignes that
Which would be fear'd. 'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntleſſe temper of his Minde,
He hath a Wiſdome, that doth guide his Valour,
To act in ſafetie. There is none but he,
Whoſe being I doe feare: and under him,
My Genius is rebuk'd, as it is ſaid
Mark Anthonies was by Cæſar, He chid the Siſters,
When firſt they put the Name of King upon me
And bad them ſpeake to him. Then Prophet-like,
They hayld him Father to a Line of Kings.
Vpon my head they plac'd a fruitleſſe Crowne,
And put a barren Scepter in my Gripe,
Thence to be wrencht with an unlineall Hand,
No Sonne of mine ſucceeding: if't be ſo,
For Banquo's Iſſue have I fil'd my Minde,
Fot them, the gracious Duncan have I murther'd,
Put Rancours in the Veſſell of my Peace
Onely for them, and mine eternall Iewell
Given to the common Enemy of Man,
To make them Kings, the Seedes of Banquo Kings:
Rather then ſo, come Fate into the Lyſt,
And champion me to th' utterance.
Who's there?

Enter Servant, and two Murtherers.

Now goe to the Doore, and ſtay there till we call.
Exit Servant.
Was it not yeſterday we ſpoke together?
Murth. It was, ſo pleaſe your Highneſſe.
Macb. Well then,
Now have you conſider'd of my ſpeeches?

Know, that it was he, in the times paſt,
Which held you ſo under fortune,
Which you thought had beene our innocent ſelfe,
This I made good to, you, in our laſt conference,
Paſt in probation with you:
How you were borne in hand, how croſt:
The Inſtruments: who wrought with them:
And all things elſe, that might
To halfe a Soule, and to a Notion craz'd,
Say, Thus did Banquo.
1. Murth. You made it knowne to us.
Macb. I did ſo:
And went further, which is now
Our point of ſecond meeting,
Doe you finde your patience ſo predominant,
In your nature, that you can let this goe?
Are you ſo Goſpell'd to pray for this good man,
And for his Iſſue, whoſe heavie hand
Hath bow'd you to the Grave, and begger'd
Yours for ever?
1. Murth. We are men, my Liege.
Macb. I, in the Catalogue ye goe for men,
As Hounds, and Greyhoundes, Mungrels, Spaniels, Curres,
Showghes, Water-Rugs, and Demy-Wolves are clipt
All by the Name of Dogges: the valued file
Diſtinguiſhes the ſwift, the ſlow, the ſubtle,
The Houſe-keeper, the Hunter, every one
According to the gift, which bounteous Nature
Hath in him clos'd; whereby he does receive
Particular addition, from the Bill,
That writes them all alike: and ſo of men.
Now, if you have a ſtation in the file,
Not i'th' worſt ranke of Manhood, ſay't,
And I will put that Buſineſſe in your Boſomes,
Whoſe execution takes your Enemie off,
Grapples you to the heart; and love of us,
Who weare our Health but ſickly in his Life,
Which in his Death were perfect.
2. Murth. I am one my Liege,
Whom the vile Blowes and Buffets of the World
Hath ſo incens'd, that I am reckleſſe what I doe,
To ſpight the World.
1. Murth. And I another,
So wearie with Diſaſters, tugg'd with Fortune,
That I would ſet my Life on any Chance,
To mend it or be rid on't.
Macd. Both of you know Banquo was your Enemie.
Murth. True, my Lord.
Macb. So is he mine: and in ſuch bloody diſtance,
That every minute of his being, thruſts
Againſt my neer'ſt of Life: and though I could
With bare-fac'd power ſweepe him from my ſight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I muſt not,
For certaine friends that are both his, and mine,
Whoſe loves I may not drop, but wayle his fall,
Who I my ſelfe ſtrucke downe: and thence it is,
That I to your aſſiſtance doe make love,
Masking the Buſineſſe from the common Eye,
For ſundry weightie Reaſons.
2. Murth. We ſhall, my Lord,
Performe what you command us.
1. Murth. Though our Lives——
Macb. Your Spirits ſhine through you.
Within this houre, at moſt,
I will adviſe you where to plant your ſelves,
Acquaint you with the perfect Spy o'th' time,
The moment on't, for't muſt be done to Night,
And ſomething from the Palace: alwayes thought,
That I require a cleareneſſe; and with him,
To leave no Rubs nor Botches in the Worke:
Fleans, his Sonne, that keepes him companie,
Whoſe abſence is no leſſe materiall to me,
Then is his Fathers, muſt embrace the fate
Of that darke houre: reſolue your ſelves apart,
Ile come to you anon.
Murth. We are reſolu'd, my Lord.
Macb. Ile call upon you ſtraight: abide within,
It is concluded: Banquo, thy Soules flight,
If it finde Heaven, muſt finde it out to Night. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda,

Enter Macbeths Lady, and a Servant.

Lady. Is Banquo gone from Court?
Servant. I, Madame, but returnes againe to Night.
Lady. Say to the King, I would attend his leyſure,
For a few words.
Servant. Madame, I will. Exit.
Lady. Nought's had, all's ſpent,
Where our deſire is got without content:
'Tis ſafer, to be that which we deſtroy,
Then by deſtruction dwell in doubtfull joy.
Enter Macbeth.
How now, my Lord, why doe you keepe alone?
Of ſorryeſt Francies your Companions making,
Vſing thoſe Thoughts, which ſhould indeed have dy'd
With them they thinke on: things without all remedie
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.
Macb. We have ſcorch'd the Snake, not kill'd it:
Shee'le cloſe, and be her ſelfe, whileſt our poore Malice
Remaines in danger of her former Tooth.
But let the frame of things diſ-joynt,
Both the Worlds ſuffer,
Ere we will eate our Meale in feare, and ſleepe
In the affliction of theſe terrible Dreames,
That ſhake us Nightly: Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gayne our place, have ſent to peace:
Then on the torture of the Minde to lye
In reſtleſſe extaſie:
Duncane is in his Grave:
After Lifes fitfull Fever, he ſleepes well,
Treaſon ha's done his worſt: nor Steele nor Poyſon,
Malice domeſtique, forraine Levie, nothing,
Can touch him further.
Lady. Come on:
Gentle my Lord, ſleeke o're your rugged Lookes,
Be bright and Ioviall 'mong your Gueſts to Night.
Macb. So ſhall I Love, and ſo I pray be you:
Let your remembrance ſtill apply to Banquo,
Preſent him Eminence, both with Eye and Tongue:
Vnſafe the while, that we muſt lave
Our Honors in theſe flattering ſtreames,
And make our Faces Vizards to our Hearts,
Diſguiſing what they are.
Lady. You muſt leave this.
Macb. O, full of Scorpions is my Minde, deare Wife:
Thou know'ſt, that Banquo and his Feans lives.

Lady. But in them, Natures Coppie's not eterne.
Macb. There's comfort yet, they are aſſaileable,
Then be thou jocund: ere the Bat hath flowne
His Cloyſter'd flight, ere to blacke Hecats ſummons
The ſhard-borne Beetle, with his drowſie hums,
Hath rung Nights yawning Peale,
There ſhall be done a deed of dreadfull note.
Lady. What's to be done?
Macb: Be innocent of the knowledge, deareſt Chuck,
Till thou applaud the deed: Come, ſeeling Night,
Skarfe up the tender Eye of pittifull Day,
And with thy bloody and inviſible Hand
Cancell and teare to pieces that great Bond,
Which keepes me pale. Light thickens,
And the Crow makes Wing to th' Rookie Wood:
Good things of Day begin to droope, and drowſe,
Whiles nights black Agents to their Prey's doe rowſe.
Thou marvell'ſt at my words: but hold thee ſtill,
Things bad begun, make ſtrong themſelves by ill:
So prythee goe with me. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter three murtherers.

1. But who did bid thee joyne with us?
3. Macbeth.
2. He needes not our miſtruſt, ſince he delivers
Our Offices, and what we have to doe,
To the direction juſt.
1. Then ſtand with us.
The Weſt yet glimmers with ſome ſtreakes of Day.
Now ſpurres the lateſt Traveller apace,
To gayne the timely Inne, and neere approches
The ſubject of our Watch.
3. Hearke, I heare Horſes.
Banquo within. Give us a Light there, hoa.
2. Then 'tis hee:
The reſt, that are within the note of expectation,
Already are i'th' Court.
1. His Horſes goe about.
3. Almoſt a mile: but he does uſually,
So all men doe, from hence to th' Pallace Gate
Make it their Walke.

Enter Banquo and Fleans, with a Torch.

2. A Light, a Light.
3. 'Tis hee.
1. Stand too't.
Ban. It will be Rayne to Night.
1. Let it come downe.
Ban. O, Trecherie!
Flye godd Fleans, flye, flye, flye,
Thou may'ſt revenge. O Slave!
3. Who did ſtrike out the Light?
1. Was't not the way?
3. There's but one downe: the Sonne is fled.
2. We have loſt
Beſt halfe of our Affaire.
1. Well, let's away, and ſay how much is done.
Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Banquet prepar'd. Enter Macbeth, Lady, Roſſe, Lenox, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your owne degrees, ſit downe:
At firſt and laſt, the hearty welcome.
Lords. Thankes to your Majeſty.
Macb. Our ſelfe will mingle with Society,
And play the humble Hoſt:
Our Hoſteſſe keepes her State, but in the beſt time
We will require her welcome.
La. Pronounce it for me Sir, to all our Friends,
For my heart ſpeakes, they are welcome.
Enter firſt Murtherer.
Macb. See they encounter thee with their hearts thanks
Both ſides are even: heere Ile ſit i'th' mid'ſt,
Be large in mirth, anon wee'l drinke a Meaſure
The Table round. There's blood upon thy face.
Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.
Macb. 'Tis better thee without, then he within.
Is he diſpatch'd?
Mur. My Lord his throat is cut, that I did for him:
Mac Thou art the beſt o'th' Cut-throats,
Yet hee's good that did the like for Fleans:
If thou did'ſt it, thou art the Non-pareill.
Mur. Moſt Royall Sir
Fleans is ſcap'd.
Macb. Then comes my Fit againe:
I had elſe beene perfect;
Whole as the Marble, founded as the Rocke,
As broad, and generall, as the caſing Ayre:
But now I am cabin'd, crib'd, confin'd, bound in
To ſawcy doubts, and feares. But Banquo's ſafe?
Mur. I, my good Lord: ſafe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gaſhes on his head;
The leaſt a Death to Nature.
Macb. Thankes for that,
There the growne Serpent lyes, the worme that's fled
Hath Nature that in time will Venom breed,
No teeth for th' preſent. Get thee gone, to morrow
Wee'l heare our ſelves againe. Exit Murderer.
Lady. My Royall Lord,
You do not give the Cheere, the Feaſt is ſold
That is not often vouch'd, while'tis making:
Tis given, with welcome: to feede were beſt at home:
From thence, the ſawce to meate is Ceremony,
Meeting were bare without it.

Enter the Ghoſt of Banquo, and ſits in Macbeths place.

Macb. Sweet Remembrancer:
Now good digeſtion waite on Appetite,
And health on both.
Lenox. May't pleaſe your Highneſſe ſit.
Macb. Here had we now our Countries Honor, roof'd,
Were the grac'd perſon of our Banquo preſent:
Who may I rather challenge for unkindneſſe,
Then pitty for Miſchance.
Roſſe. His abſence (Sir)
Layes blame upon his promiſe. Pleas't your highneſſe
To grace us with your Royall Company?

Macb. The Table's full.
Lenox. Here is a place reſerv'd Sir.
Macb. Where?
Lenox. Heere my good Lord.
What is't that moves your Highneſſe?
Macb. Which of you have done this?
Lords. What, my good Lord?
Macb. Thou canſt not ſay I did it; never ſhake
Thy goary lockes at me,
Roſſe. Gentlemen riſe, his Highneſſe is not well.
Lady. Sit worthy Friends: my Lord is often thus,
And hath beene from his youth. Pray you keepe Seat,
The fit is momentany, upon a thought
He will againe be well. If much you note him
You ſhall offend him, and extend his Paſſion,
Feed, and regard him not. Are you a man?
Macb. I, and a bold one, that dare looke on that
Which might appall the Divell.
La. O proper ſtuffe:
This is the very painting of your feare:
This is the Ayre-drawne-Dagger which you ſaid
Led you to Duncan. O, theſe flawes and ſtarts
(Impoſters to true feare) would well become
A womans ſtory at a Winters fire
Authoriz'd by her Grandam: ſhame it ſelfe,
Why do you make ſuch faces? When all's done
You looke but on a ſtoole.
Macb. Prythee ſee there:
Behold, looke, loe, how ſay you:
Why what care I, if thou canſt nod, ſpeake too.
If Charnell houſes, and our Graves muſt ſend
Thoſe that we bury, backe; our Monuments
Shall be the Mawes of Kytes. Exit Ghoſt.
La. What? quite unmann'd in folly.
Macb. If I ſtand heere, I ſaw him.
La. Fie for ſhame.
Macb, Blood hath bene ſhed ere now, i'th' olden time
Ere humane Statute purg'd the gentle Weale:
I, and ſince too, Murthers have bene perform'd
Too terrible for the eare. The times have beene,
That when the Braines were out, the man would dye,
And there an end: But now they riſe againe
With twenty mortall murthers on their crownes,
And puſh us from our ſtooles. This is more ſtrange
Then ſuch a murther is.
La. My worthy Lord
Your Noble Friends do lacke you.
Macb. I do forget:
Do not muſe at me my moſt worthy Friends,
I have a ſtrange infirmity, which is nothing
To thoſe that know me. Come, love and health to all,
Then Ile ſit downe: Give me ſome Wine, fill full:
Enter Ghoſt.
I drinke to th' generall joy o'th' whole Table,
And to our deere Friend Banquo, whom we miſſe:
Would he were heere: to all, and him we thirſt,
And all to all.
Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.
Mac. Auant, & quit my ſight, let the earth hide thee:
Thy bones are marrowleſſe, thy blood is cold:
Thou haſt no ſpeculation in thoſe eyes
Which thou doſt glare with.
La. Thinke of this good Peeres.
But as a thing of Cuſtome: 'Tis no other,
Onely it ſpoyles the pleaſure of the time.
Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Ruſſian Beare,
The arm'd Rhinoceros, or th' Hircan Tiger,
Take any ſhape but that, and my firme Nerves
Shall never tremble. Or be alive againe,
And dare me to the Deſart with thy Sword:
If trembling I inhabit, then proteſt me
The Baby of a Girle. Hence horrible ſhadow, Exit.
Vnreall mock'ry hence. Why ſo, being gone
I am a man againe: pray you ſit ſtill.
La. You have diſplac'd the mirth,
Broke the good meeting, with moſt admir'd diſorder.
Macb. Can ſuch things be,
And overcome us like a Summers Clowd,
Without our ſpeciall wonder? You make me ſtrange
Even to the diſpoſition that I owe,
When now I thinke you can behold ſuch ſights,
And keepe the naturall Rubie of your Cheekes,
When mine is blanchd with feare.
Roſſe. What ſignes, my Lord?
La. I pray you ſpeake not: he growes worſe & worſe,
Queſtion enrages him: at once, goodnight.
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.
Len. Good night, and better health
Attend his Majeſty.
La. A kinde goodnight to all. Exeunt Lords:
Macb. It will have blood they ſay:
Blood will have Blood:
Stones have beene knowne to move, & Trees to ſpeake:
Augures, and underſtood Relations, have
By Maggot Pyes, & Choughes, & Rookes brought forth
The ſecretſt man of blood. What is the night?
La. Almoſt at oddes with morning, which is which.
Macb. How ſayſt thou that Macduff denies his perſon
At our great bidding.
La. Did you ſend to him Sir?
Macb. I heare it by the way: But I will ſend:
There's not a one of them but in his houſe
I keepe a Servant Feed. I will to morrow
(And betimes I will) to the wizard Siſters.
More ſhall they ſpeake: for now I am bent to know
By the worſt meanes, the worſt, for mine owne good,
All cauſes ſhall give way, I am in blood
Spent in ſo farre, that ſhould I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go ore:
Strange things I have in head, that will to hand,
Which muſt be acted, ere they may be ſcand.
La. You lacke the ſeaſon of all Natures, ſleepe.
Macb. Come, weel to ſleepe; My ſtrange & ſelf-abuſe
Is the initiate feare, that wants hard uſe:
We are yet but young indeed. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting Hecat.

1. Why how now Hecat, you looke angerly?
Hec. Have I not reaſon (Beldams) as you are?
Sawcy, and over-bold, how did you dare
To Trade, and Trafficke with Macbeth,
In Riddles, and Affaires of death;

And I the Miſtris of your Charmes,
The cloſe contriver of all harmes,
Was never call'd to beare my part,
Or ſhew the glory of our Art?
And which is worſe, all you have done
Hath beene but for a wayward Sonne,
Spightfull, and wrathfull, who (as others do)
Loves for his owne ends, not for you.
But make amends now: Get you gon,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meete me i'th' Morning: thither he
Will come, to know his Deſtinie,
Your Veſſels, and your Spels provide,
Your Charmes, and every thing beſide;
I am for th' Ayre: This night Ile ſpend
Vnto a diſmall, and a Fatall end.
Great buſineſſe muſt be wrought ere Noone.
Vpon the Corner of the Moone,
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound,
Ile catch it ere it come to ground;
And that diſtill'd by Magicke ſleights,
Shall riſe ſuch Artificiall Sprights,
As by the ſtrength of their illuſion,
Shall draw him on to his Confuſion.
He ſhall ſpurne Fate, ſcorne Death, and beare
His hopes 'bove Wiſedome, Grace, and Feare:
And you all know, Security
Is mortals cheefeſt Enemie.

Muſicke, and a Song.

Hearke, I am call'd: my little Spirit ſee
Sits in a Foggy cloud, and ſtayes for me.

Sing within. Come away, come away, &c.

1 Come, let's make haſt, ſhee'l ſoone be Backe againe. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Enter Lenox, and another Lord.

Lenox. My former Speeches,
Have but hit your Thoughts
Which can interpret farther: Onely I ſay
Things have bin ſtrangely borne. The gracious Duncan
Was pittied of Macbeth: marry he was dead:
And the right valiant Banquo walk'd too late,
Whom you may ſay (if't pleaſe you) Fleans kill'd,
For Fleans fled: Men muſt not walke too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monſtrous
It was for Malcolme, and for Donalbane
To kill their gracious Father? Damned Fact,
How it did greeve Macbeth? Did he not ſtraight
In pious rage, the two delinquents teare,
That were the Slaves of drinke, and thralles of ſleepe?
Was not that Nobly done? I, and wiſely too:
For 'twould have anger'd any heart alive
To heare the men deny't. So that I ſay,
He ha's borne all things well, and I do thinke,
That had he Duncans Sonnes under the Key,
(As, and't pleaſe Heaven he ſhall not) they ſhould finde
What 'twere to kill a Father: So ſhould Fleans.
But peace; for from broad words, and cauſe he fayl'd
His preſence at the Tyrants Feaſt, I heare
Macduffe lives in diſgrace. Sir, can you tell
Where he beſtowes himſelfe?
Lord. The Sonnes of Duncane
(From whom this Tyrant holds the due of Birth)
Live in the Engliſh Court, and is receyv'd
Of the moſt Pious Edward, with ſuch grace,
That the malevolence of Fortune, nothing
Takes from his high reſpect. Thither Macduffe
Is gone, to pray the Holy King, upon his ayd
To wake Northumberland, and warlike Seyward,
That by the helpe of theſe (with him above
To ratifie the Worke) we may againe
Give to our Tables meate, ſleepe to our Nights:
Free from our Feaſts, and Banquets bloody knives;
Do faithfull Homage, and receive free Honors,
All which we pine for now. And this report
Hath ſo exaſperate their King, that hee
Prepares for ſome attempt of Warre.
Len. Sent he to Macduffe?
Lord. He did: and with an abſolute, Sir, not I,
The clowdy Meſſenger turnes me his backe,
And hums; as who ſhould ſay, you'l rue the time
That clogges me with this Anſwer.
Lenox. And that well might
Adviſe him to a Caution, t'hold what diſtance
His wiſedome can provide. Some holy Angell
Flye to the Court of England, and unfold
His Meſſage ere he come, that a ſwift bleſſing
May ſoone returne to this our ſuffering Country,
Vnder a hand accurs'd.
Lord. Ile ſend my Prayers with him. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Thrice the brinded Cat hath mew'd.
2 Thrice, and once the Hedge-Pigge whin'd.
3 Harpier cries, 'tis time, 'tis time.
1 Round about the Caldron go:
In the poyſond Entrailes throw
Toad, that under cold ſtone,
Dayes and Nights, ha's thirty one:
Sweltred Venom ſleeping got,
Boyle thou firſt i'th' charmed pot.
All. Double, double, toile and trouble;
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.
2 Fillet of a Fenny Snake,
In the Cauldron boyle and bake:
Eye of Newt, and Toe of Frogge:
Wooll of Bat, and Tongue of Dogge:
Adders Forke, and Blinde-wormes Sting,
Lizards legge, and Howlets wing:
For a Charme of powerfull trouble,
Like a Hell-broth, boyle and bubble.
All. Double, double, toyle and trouble,
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.
3 Scale of Dragon, Tooth of Wolfe,
Witches Mummy, Maw, and Gulfe
Of the ravin'd ſalt Sea ſharke:
Roote of Hemlocke, digg'd i'th darke:
Liver of Blaſpheming Iew,
Gall of Goate, and Slippes of Yew,
Sliver'd in the Moones Ecclipſe:

Noſe of Turke, and Tartars lips:
Finger of Birth-ſtrangled Babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a Drab,
Make the Grwell thicke, and ſlab.
Adde thereto a Tigars Chawdron,
For th' Ingredience of our Cawdron.
All. Double, double, toyle and trouble,
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.
2 Coole it with a Baboones blood,
Then the Charme is firme and good.

Enter Hecat, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O well done: I commend your paines,
And every one ſhall ſhare i'th' gaines:
And now about the Cauldron ſing
Like Elves and Fairies in a Ring,
Inchanting all that you put in.
Muſicke and a Song. Blacke Spirits, &c.
2 By the pricking of my Thumbes,
Something wicked this way comes:
Open Lockes, who ever knockes.
Enter Macbeth.
Macb. How now you ſecret, black, & midnight Hags?
What is't you do?
All. A deed without a name.
Macb. I conjure you, by that which you Profeſſe,
(How ere you come to know it) anſwer me:
Though you untye the Windes, and let them fight
Againſt the Churches: Though the yeſty Waves
Coufound and ſwallow Navigation up:
Though bladed Corne be lodg'd, & Trees blown downe,
Though Caſtles topple on their Warders heads:
Though Palaces, and Pyramids do ſlope
Their heads to their Foundations: Though the treaſure
Of Natures Germaine, tumble altogether,
Even till deſtruction ſicken: Anſwere me
To what I aske you.
1 Speake.
2 Demand.
3 Wee'l anſwer.
1 Say, if th' hadſt rather heare it from our mouthes,
Or from our Maſters.
Macb. Call 'em: let me ſee 'em.
1 Powre in Sowes blood, that hath eaten
Her nine Farrow: Greace that's ſweaten
From the Murtherers Gibbet, throw
Into the Flame.
All. Come high or low:
Thy Selfe and Office deaftly ſhow. Thunder.
1. Apparation, an Armed Head.
Macb. Tell me thou unknowne power.
1 He knowes thy thought:
Heare his ſpeech, but ſay thou nought.
1 Appar. Macbeth, Macbeth, Macbeth:
Beware Macduffe,
Beware the Thane of Fife: diſmiſſe me. Enough.
He Deſcends.
Macb. What ere thou art, for thy good caution, thanks
Thou haſt harp'd my feare aright. But one word more.
1 He will not be commanded: heere's another
More potent then the firſt. Thunder
2 Apparition, a Bloody Childe.
2 Appar. Macbeth, Macbeth, Macbeth.
Macb. Had I three eares, Il'd heare thee.
2 Appar. Be bloody, bold, and reſolute:
Laugh to ſcorne
The power of man: For none of woman borne
Shall harme Macbeth. Deſcends.
Mac. Then live Macduffe: what need I feare of thee?
But yet Ile make aſſurance, double ſure,
And take a Bond of Fate: thou ſhalt not live,
That I may tell pale-hearted Feare, it lies;
And ſleepe in ſpight of Thunder. Thunder.
3 Apparation, a Childe Crowned, with a Tree in his hand.
What is this, that riſes like the iſſue of a King,
And weares upon his Baby-brow, the round
And top of Soveraignty?
All. Liſten, but ſpeake not too't.
3 Appar. Be Lyon metled, proud, and take no care:
Who chafes, who frets, or where Conſpirers are:
Macbeth ſhall never vanquiſh'd be, untill
Great Byrnam Wood, to high Dunſinane Hill
Shall come againſt him. Deſcend.
Macb. That will never be:
Who can impreſſe the Forreſt, bid the Tree
Vnfixe his earth-bound Root? Sweet boadments, good:
Rebellious dead, riſe never till the Wood
Of Byrnam riſe, and our high plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the Leaſe of Nature, pay his breath
To time, and mortall Cuſtome. Yet my heart
Throbs to know one thing: Tell me, if your Art
Can tell ſo much: Shall Banquo's iſſue ever
Reigne in this Kingdome?
All. Seeke to know no more.
Macb. I will be ſatisfied. Deny me this,
And an eternall Curſe fall on you: Let me know.
Why ſinkes that Caldron? & what noyſe is this? Hoboyes
1. Shew.
2 Shew.
3 Shew.
All. Shew his Eyes, and greeve his Heart,
Come like ſhadowes, ſo depart.
A ſhew of eight Kings, and Banquo laſt, with a glaſſe in his hand.
Macb. Thou art too like the Spirit of Banquo: Down:
Thy Crowne do's ſeare mine Eye-bals. And thy haire
Thou other Gold-bound-brow, is like the firſt:
A third, is like the former. Filthy Hagges,
Why do you ſhew me this? —— A fourth? Start eyes!
What will the Line ſtretch out to'th' cracke of Doome?
Another yet? A ſeaventh? Ile ſee no more:
And yet the eight appears, who beares a glaſſe,
Which ſhewes me many more: and ſome I ſee,
That two-fold Balles, and trebble Scepters carry.
Horrible ſight: Now I ſee 'tis true,
For the Blood-bolter'd Banquo ſmiles upon me,
And points at them for his. What is this ſo?
1 I Sir, all this is ſo. But why
Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?
Come Siſters, cheere we up his ſprights,
And ſhew the beſt of our delights.
Ile Charme the Ayre to give a ſound,
While you performe your Antique round:
That this great King may kindly ſay,
Our duties, did his welcome pay. Muſicke.
The Witches Dance, and vaniſh.
Macb. Where are they? Gone?
Let this pernitious houre,
Stand aye accurſed in the Kalender.
Come in, without there. Enter Lenox.
Lenox. What's your Graces will.

Macb. Saw you the Wizard Siſters?
Lenox. No my Lord.
Macb. Came they not by you?
Lenox. No indeed my Lord.
Macb. Infected be the Ayre whereon they ride,
And damn'd all thoſe that truſt them. I did heare
The gallopping of Horſe. Who was't came by?
Len. 'Tis two or three my Lord, that bring you word:
Macduff is fled to England.
Macb. Fled to England?
Len. I, my good Lord.
Macb. Time, thou anticipat'ſt my dread exploits:
The flighty purpoſe never is o're-tooke
Vnleſſe the deed go with it, From this moment,
The very firſtling of my heart ſhall be
The firſtlings of my hand. And even now
To Crown my thoughts with Acts: be it thought & done:
The Caſtle of Macduff, I will ſurprize.
Seize upon Fife; give to th' edge o'th' Sword
His Wife, his Babes, and all unfortunate Soules
That trace him in his Line. No boaſting like a Foole,
This deed Ile do, before this purpoſe coole,
But no more ſights. Where are theſe Gentlemen?
Come bring me where they are. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Macduffes Wife, her Son, and Roſſe.

Wife. What had hee done, to make him fly the Land?
Roſſe. You muſt have patience Madam.
Wife. He had none:
His flight was madneſſe: when our Actions do not,
Our feares do make us Traitors.
Roſſe. You know not
Whether it was his wiſedome, or his feare.
Wife. Wiſedom? to leave his wife, to leave his Babes,
His Manſion, and his Titles, in a place
From whence himſelfe does flye? He loves us not.
He wants the naturall touch. for the poore Wren
(The moſt diminiuive of Birds) will fight,
Her young ones in her Neſt, againſt the Owle:
All is the Feare, and nothing is the Love;
As little is the Wiſedome, where the flight
So runnes againſt all reaſon.
Roſſe. My deereſt Cooz,
I pray you ſchoole your ſelfe, But for your Husband,
He is Noble, Wiſe, Iudicious, and beſt knowes
The fits o'th' Seaſon. I dare not ſpeake much further,
But cruell are the times, when we are Traitors
And do not know our ſelves: when we hold Rumor
From what we feare, yet know not what we feare,
But floate upon a wilde and violent Sea
Each way, and move. I take my leave of you:
Shall not be long but Ile be here againe:
Things at the worſt will ceaſe, or elſe climbe upward,
To what they were before. My pretty Coſine,
Bleſſing upon you.
Wife. Father'd he is,
And yet hee's Fatherleſſe.
Roſſe. I am ſo much a Foole, ſhould I ſtay longer
It would be my diſgrace, and your diſcomfort.
I take my leave at once. Exit Roſſe.
Wife. Sirra, your Fathers dead,
And what will you do now? How will you live?
Son. As Birds do Mother.
Wife. What with Wormes, and Flyes?
Son. With what I get, and ſo do they.
Wife. Poore bird,
Thoud'ſt never Feare the Net, nor Line,
The Pitfall, nor the Gin.
Son. Why ſhould I Mother?
Poore Birds they are not ſet for:
My Father is not dead for all your ſaying.
Wife. Yes, he is dead:
How wilt thou doe for a Father?
Son. Nay how will you doe for a husband?
Wife. Why I can buy me twenty at any Market.
Son. Then you'l by 'em to ſell againe.
Wife. Thou ſpeak'ſt with all thy wit,
And yet I'faith with wit enough for thee.
Son. Was my Father a Traitor, Mother?
Wife. I, that he was.
Son. What is a Traitor?
Wife. Why one that ſweares, and lyes.
Son. And be all Traytors, that doe ſo.
Wife. Every one that do's ſo, is a Traitor,
And muſt be hang'd.
Son. And muſt they all be hang'd, that ſwear and lye?
Wife. Every one.
Son. VVho muſt hang them?
Wife. VVhy, the honeſt men.
Son. Then the Liars and Swearers are Fools: for there are Lyars and Swearers enow, to beate the honeſt men, and hang up them.
Wife. Now God helpe thee, poore Monkie:
But how wilt thou doe for a Father?
Son. If hee were dead, youl'd weepe for him: if you would not it were a good ſigne, that I ſhould quickely have a new Father.
Son. Poore pratler, how thou talk'ſt?

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Bleſſe you faire Dame: I am not to you knowne,
Though in your ſtate of honour I am perfect;
I doubt ſome danger does approach you neerely.
If you will take a homely mans advice,
Be not found heere: hence with your little ones:
To fright you thus, Me thinkes I am to ſavage:
To do worſe to you, were fell Cruelty,
VVhich is too nie your perſon. Heauen preſerve you,
I dare abide no longer. Exit Meſſenger.
Wife. Whether ſhould I flye?
I have done no harme, But I remember now
I am in this earthly world: where to doe harme
Is often laudable, to doe good ſometime
Accounted dangerous folly. Why then (alas)
Doe I put up that womanly defence,
To ſay I had done no harme?
What are theſe faces?

Enter Murtherers.

Mur. Where is your husband?
Wife. I hope in no place ſo unſanctified,
Where ſuch as thou mayſt find him.
Mur. He's a Traitor.
Sor. Thou lyſt thou ſhagge-ear'd Villaine.
Mur. What you Egge?
Yong fry of Treachery?
Son. He has killd me Mother,
Run away I pray you. Exit crying Murther.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Malcolme and Macduffe.

Mal. Let us ſeeke out ſome deſolate ſhade, & there
Weepe our ſad boſomes empty.
Macd. Let us rather
Hold faſt the mortall Sword: and like good men,
Beſtride our downfall Birthdome: each new Morne,
New Widdowes howle, new Orphans cry, new ſorowes
Strike Heaven on the face, that it reſounds
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like Syllable of Dolour.
Mal. What I beleeve, Ile waile;
What know, beleeve; and what I can redreſſe,
As I ſhall finde the time to friend, I will.
What you have ſpoke, it may be ſo perchance.
This Tyrant, whoſe ſole name bliſters our tongues,
Was once thought honeſt: you have lov'd him well,
He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young, but ſomething
You may diſcerne of him through me, and wiſedome
To offer up a weake, poore innocent Lambe
T'appeaſe an angry God.
Macd. I am not treacherous.
Malc. But Macbeth is.
A good and vertuous Nature may recoyle
In an Imperiall charge. But I ſhall crave your pardon:
That which you are, my thoughts cannot tranſpoſe;
Angels are bright ſtill, though the brighteſt fell.
Though all things foule, would wear the brows of grace
Yet Grace muſt ſtill looke ſo.
Macd. I have loſt my Hopes.
Malc. Perchance even there
Where I did finde my doubts
Why in that rawneſſe left you Wife, and Children?
Thoſe precious Motives, thoſe ſtrong knots of Love,
Without leave-taking. I pray you,
Let not my Iealouſies, be your Diſhonors,
But mine owne Safeties: you may be rightly juſt,
What ever I ſhall thinke.
Macd. Bleed, bleed poore Country,
Great Tyrany, lay thou thy baſis ſure,
For goodneſſe dare not check thee: weare yͧ thy wrongs
The Title is affear'd. Fare thee well Lord,
I would not be the Villaine that thou think'ſt,
For the whole Space that's in the Tyrants Graſpe,
And the rich Eaſt to boot.
Mal. Be not offended:
I ſpeake not as in abſolute feare of you:
I thinke our Country ſinkes beneath the yoake,
It weepes, it bleeds, and each new day a gaſh
Is added to her wounds. I thinke withall,
There would be hands uplifted in my right:
And here from gracious England have I offer
Of goodly thouſands. But for all this,
When I ſhall tread upon the Tyrants head,
Or weare it on my Sword; yet my poore Country
Shall have more vices then it had before,
More ſuffer, and more ſundry wayes then ever,
By him that ſhall ſucceede.
Macd. What ſhould he be?
Mal. It is my ſelfe I meane: in whom I know
All the particulars of Vice ſo grafted,
That when they ſhall be open'd, blacke Macbeth
Will ſeeme as pure as Snow, and the poore State
Eſteeme him as a Lambe, being compar'd
With my confineleſſe harmes.
Macd, Not in the Legions
Of horrid Hell, can come a Divell more damn'd
In evils, to top Macbeth.
Macb. I grant him Bloody,
Luxurious, Auaricious, Falſe, Deceitfull,
Sodaine, Malicious, ſmoaking of every ſinne
That ha's a name. But there's no bottome, none
In my Voluptuouſneſſe: Your Wives, your Daughters,
Your Matrons, and your Maides, could not fill up
The Ceſterne of my Luſt, and my Deſire
All continent Impediments would ore-beare
That did oppoſe my will. Better Macbeth,
Then ſuch an one to reigne.
Macd. Boundleſſe intemperance
In Nature is a Tyranny: It hath beene
Th' untimely emptying of the happy Throne,
And fall of many Kings. But feare not yet
To take upon you what is yours: you may
Convey your pleaſures in a ſpacious plenty,
And yet ſeeme cold. The time you may ſo hoodwinke:
We have willing Dames enough: there cannot be
That Vulture in you, to devoure ſo many
As will to Greatneſſe dedicate themſelves,
Finding it ſo inclinde.
Mal. With this, there growes
In my moſt ill-compos'd Affection, ſuch
A ſtanchleſſe Auarice, that were I King,
I ſhould cut off the Nobles for their Lands,
Deſire his Iewels, and this others Houſe,
And my more-having, would be as a Sawce
To make me hunger more, that I ſhould forge
Quarrels unjuſt againſt the Good and Loyall,
Deſtroying them for wealth.
Macd. This Auarice
ſtickes deeper: growes with more pernicious roote
Then Summer-ſeeming Luſt: and it hath bin
The Sword of our ſlaine Kings: yet do not feare,
Scotland hath Foyſons to fill up your will
Of your meere Owne. All theſe are portable,
With other Graces weigh'd.
Mal. But I have none. The King-becoming Graces,
As Iuſtice, Verity, Temp'rance, Stableneſſe,
Bounty, Perſeverance, Mercy, Lowlineſſe,
Devotion, Patience, Courage, fortitude,
I have no reliſh of them, but abound
In the diviſion of each ſeverall Crime,
Acting it many wayes. Nay had I power I ſhould
Poure the ſweet Milke of Concord, into Hell,
Vprore the univerſall peace, confound
All unity on earth.
Macd. O Scotland, Scotland.
Mal. If ſuch a one be fit to governe, ſpeake:
I am as I have ſpoken.
Mac. Fit to govern? No not to live. O Nation miſerable!
With an untitled Tyrant, bloody Sceptred,
When ſhalt thou ſee thy wholſome dayes againe?
Since that the trueſt Iſſue of thy Throne
By his owne Interdiction ſtands accurſt,
And do's blaſpheme his breed? Thy Royall Father
Was a moſt Sainted-King: the Queene that bore thee,
Oftner upon her knees, then on her feet,
Dy'de every day ſhe liv'd. Fare thee well,

Theſe Evils thou repeat'ſt upon thy ſelfe,
Hath baniſht me from Scotland. O my Breſt,
Thy hope ends heere.
Mal. Macduff, this Noble paſſion
Childe of integrity, hath from my ſoule
Wip'd the blacke Scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good Truth, and Honor. Divelliſh Macbeth,
By many of theſe traines, hath ſought to win me
Into his power: and modeſt Wiſedome pluckes me
From over-credulous haſt: but God above
Deale betweene thee and me; For even now
I put my ſelfe to thy direction, and Vnſpeake mine owne detraction. Heere abiure
The taints, and blames I laid upon my ſelfe,
For ſtrangers to my Nature, I am yet
Vnknowne to women, never was forſwore,
Scarſely have coveted what was mine owne,
At no time broke my Faith, would not betray
The Divell to his Fellow, and delight
No leſſe in truth then life. My firſt falſe ſpeaking
Was this upon my ſelfe. what I am truly
Is thine, and my poore Countries to command:
Whither indeed, before thy heere approach,
Old Seyward with ten thouſand warlike men
Already at a point, was ſetting foorth?
Now wee'l together, and the chance of goodneſſe
Be like our warranted Quarrell. Why are you ſilent?
Macd. Such welcome, and unwelcome things at once
'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well, more anon. Comes the King forth
I pray you?
Doct. I Sir: there are a crew of wretched Soules
That ſtay his Cure: their malady convinces
The great aſſay of Art: But at his touch,
Such ſanctity hath Heaven given his hand,
They preſently amend. Exit.
Mal. I thanke you Doctor.
Macd. What's the Diſeaſe he meanes?
Mal. Tis call'd the Evill,
A moſt miraculous worke in this good King,
Which often ſince my heere remaine in England,
I have ſeene him doe: How he ſolicites heaven
Himſelfe beſt knowes; but ſtrangely viſited people
All ſwolne and Vlcerous, pittifull to the eye,
The meere deſpaire of Surgery, he cures,
Hanging a golden ſtampe about their neckes,
Put on with holy Prayers, and 'tis ſpoken
To the ſucceeding Royalty he leaves
The healing Benediction. with this ſtrange vertue,
He hath a heavenly guift of Propheſie,
And ſondry Bleſſings hang about his Throne,
That ſpeake him full of Grace.

Enter Roſſe.

Macd. Se who comes heere.
Malc. My Countryman: but yet I know him not.
Macd. My euer gentle Cozen, welcome hither.
Malc. I know him now. Good God betimes remoue
The meanes, the meanes that makes us ſtrangers,
Roſſ. Sir. Amen.
Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?
Roſſ. Alas poore Country,
Almoſt affraid to know it ſelfe. It cannot
Be call'd our Mother, but our Grave; where nothing
But who knowes nothing is once ſeene to ſmile:
Where ſighes, and groanes, and ſhrieks that rent the ayre
Are made, not mark'd: Where violent ſorrow ſeemes
A Moderne extaſie: The Deadmans knell,
Is there ſcarſe ask'd for who, and good mens lives
Expire before the Flowers in their Caps,
Dying, or ere they ſicken.
Macd. Oh relation; too nice, and yet too true.
Malc. What's the neweſt griefe?
Roſſe. That of an houeres age, doth hiſſe the ſpeaker,
Each minute teemes a new one.
Macd. How does my Wife?
Roſſe. Why well.
Macd. And all my Children?
Roſſe. Well too.
Macd. The Tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?
Roſſe. No, they were well at peace when I did leave 'em.
Macd. Be not a niggard of your ſpeech: How gos't?
Roſſe. When I came hither to tranſport the Tidings
Which I have heavily borne, there ran a Rumour
Of many worthy Fellowes, that were out,
Which was to my beleefe witneſt the rather,
For that I ſaw the Tyrants Power a-foot,
Now is the time of helpe: your eye in Scotland
Would create Soldiours, make our women fight,
To doffe their dire diſtreſſes.
Malc. Bee't their comfort
We are comming thither: Gracious England hath
Lent us good Seyward, and ten thouſand men,
An older and a better Souldier, none
That Chriſtendome gives out.
Roſſe. Would I could anſwer
This comfort with the like. But I have words
That would be howl'd out in the deſert ayre,
Where hearing ſhould not latch them.
Macd. What concerne they,
The generall cauſe, or is it a Fee-griefe
Due to ſome ſingle breſt?
Roſſe. No minde that's honeſt
But in it ſhares ſome woe, though the maine part
Pertaines to you alone.
Macd. If it be mine
Keepe it not from me, quickly let me have it.
Roſſe. Let not your eares deſpiſe my tongue for ever,
Which ſhall poſſeſſe them with the heavieſt ſound
That ever yet they heard.
Macd. Humh: I gueſſe at it.
Roſſe. Your Caſtle is ſurpriz'd: your Wife, and Babes
Savagely ſlaughter'd: To relate the manner
Were on the Quarry of theſe murther'd Deere
To adde the death of you.
Malc. Mercifull Heaven:
What man, ne're pull your hat upon your browes:
Give ſorrow words; the griefe that do's not ſpeake,
Whiſpers the o're-fraught heart, and bids it breake.
Macd. My Children too?
Ro. Wife, Children, Servants, all that could be found.
Macd. And I muſt be from thence? My wife kill'd too?
Roſſe. I have ſaid.
Malc. Be comforted.
Let's make us Med'cines of our great Revenge,
To cure this deadly greefe.
Macd. He ha's no Children. All my pretty ones?
Did you ſay All? Oh Hell-Kite! All?
What, All my pretty Chickens, and their Damme
At one fell ſwoope?
Malc. Diſpute it like a man.
Macd. I ſhall do ſo:

But I muſt alſo feele it as a man;
I cannot but remember ſuch things were
That were moſt precious to me: Did heaven looke on,
And would not take their part? Sinfull Macduffe,
They were all ſtrooke for thee: Naught that I am,
Not for their owne demerits, but for mine
Fell ſlaughter on their ſoules: Heaven reſt them now.

Mal. Be this the Whetſtone of your ſword, let griefe
Convert to anger: blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O I could play the woman with mine eyes,
And Braggart with my tongue. But gentle Heavens,
Cut ſhort all intermiſſion: Front to Front,
Bring thou this Fiend of Scotland, and my ſelfe
Within my Swords length ſet him, if he ſcape
Heaven forgive him too.

Mal. This time goes manly:
Come go we to the King, our Power is ready,
Our lacke is nothing but our leave. Macbeth
Is ripe for ſhaking, and the Powers aboue
Put on their Inſtruments: Receiue what cheere you may,
The night is long that never findes the Day. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter a Doctor of Phyſicke, and a Wayting Gentlewoman.

Doct. I have two Nights watch'd with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it ſhe laſt walk'd?

Gent. Since his Majeſty went into the Field, I have ſeene her riſe from her bed, throw her Night-Gown upon her, unlocke her cloſſet, take foorth paper, folde it, write upon't, read it, afterwards ſeale it, and againe returne to bed; yet all this while in a moſt faſt ſleepe.

Doct. A great perturbation in Nature, to receive at once the benefit of ſleepe and do the effects of watching. In this ſlumbry agitation, beſides her walking, and other actuall performances, what (at any time) have you heard her ſay?

Gent. That Sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may to me, and 'tis moſt meet you ſhould.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one, having no witneſſe to confirme my ſpeech. Enter Lady with a Taper.
Lo you, here ſhe comes: This is her very guiſe, and upon my life faſt aſleepe; obſerve her, ſtand cloſe.

Doct. How came ſhe by that light?

Gent. Why it ſtood by her: ſhe ha's light by her continually, 'tis her command.

Doct. You ſee her eyes are open.

Gent. I but their ſenſe are ſhut.

Doct. What is it ſhe do's now?
Looke how ſhe rubbes her hands.

Gent. It is an accuſtom'd action with her, to ſeeme thus waſhing her hands: I have knowne her continue in this a quarter of an houre.

Lad. Yet heere's a ſpot.

Doct. Heark, ſhe ſpeakes, I will ſet downe what comes from her, to ſatisfie my remembrance the more ſtrongly.

La. Out damned ſpot: out I ſay. One: Two: Why then 'tis time to doo't: Hell is murky. Fye, my Lord, fie, a Souldier, and affear'd? what need we feare? who knows it, when none can call our power to accompt: yet who would have thought the olde man to have had ſo much blood in him.

Doct. Do you marke that?

Lad. The Thane of Fife, had a wife: where is ſhe now? What will theſe hands neere be cleane? No more o'that my Lord, no more o'that: you marre all with ſtatting.

Doct. Go to, go to:
You have knowne what you ſhould not.

Gent. She ha's ſpoke what ſhe ſhould not, I am ſure of that: Heaven knowes what ſhe ha's knowne.

La. Here's the ſmell of the blood ſtill: all the perfumes of Arabia will not ſweeten this little hand.
Oh, oh, oh.

Doct. What a ſigh is there? The heart is ſorely charg'd.

Gent. I would not have ſuch a heart in my boſome, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well.

Gent. Pray God it be ſir.

Doct. This diſeaſe is beyond my practiſe: yet I have knowne thoſe which have walkt in their ſleep, who have dyed holily in their beds.

Lad. Waſh your hands, put on your Night-Gowne, looke not ſo pale: I tell you yet againe Banquo's buried; he cannot come out on's grave.

Doct. Even ſo?

Lady. To bed, to bed: there's knocking at the gate: Come, come, come, come, give me your hand: What's done, cannot be undone. To bed, to bed, to bed. Exit Lady.

Doct. Will ſhe go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foule whiſp'rings are abroad: unnaturall deeds
Do breed unnaturall troubles: infected mindes
To their deafe pillowes will diſcharge their Secrets:
More needes ſhe the Divine, then the Phyſitian:
God, God forgive us all. Looke after her,
Remove from her the meanes of all annoyance,
And ſtill keepe eyes upon her: So goodnight;
My minde ſhe ha's mated, and amaz'd my ſight.
I thinke, but dare not ſpeake.

Gent. Good night good Doctor. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Drum and Colours. Enter Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, Lenx, Souldiers.

Met. The Engliſh power is neere, led on by Malcolm,
His Vnkle Seyward, and the good Macduff.
Revenges burne in them: for their deere cauſes
Excite the mortified man.

Ang. Neere Byrnan wood
Shall we well meet them, that way are they comming.

Cath. Who knowes if Donalbane be with his brother?

Len. For certaine Sir, he is not: I have a File
Of all the Gentry; there is Seywards Sonne,
And many unruffe youths, that even now
Proteſt their firſt of Manhood.

Ment. What do's the Tyrant.

Cath. Great Dunſinane he ſtrongly Fortifies,
Some ſay hee's mad: Others, that leſſer hate him,
Do call it valiant Fury, but for certaine

He cannot buckle his diſtemper'd cauſe
Within the belt of Rule.
Ang. Now doe's he feele
His ſecret Murthers ſticking on his hands,
Now minutely Revolts upbraid his faith-breach :
Thoſe he commands,move onely in command,
Nothing in love : Now doe's he feele his Title
Hang looſe about him,like a Giants Robe
Vpon a Dwarfiſh Theefe.
Ment. Who then ſhall blame
His peſter'd Senſes to recoyle,and ſtart,
When all that is within him,doe's condemne
It ſelfe, for being there.
Cath. Well,march we on,
To give obedience where tis truely ow'd :
Meet we the Med'cine of the ſickly Weale,
And with him powre we in our Countries purge,
Each drop of us.
Lenox. Or ſo much as it needs,
To dew the Soveraigne Flower,and drowne the Weeds
Make we our March towards Birnam. Exeunt marching

Scæna Tertia.

[illegible] Macbeth,Doctor,and Attendants.

Mac[illegible]ing me no more Reports,let them flye all :
Till Byrnam Wood remove to Dunſinane,
I cannot taint with Feare. Whats the Boy Malcolme?
Was he not borne of woman? The Spirits that know
All mortall Conſequences,have pronounc'd me thus :
Feare not Macbeth,no man that's borne of woman
Shall ere have power upon thee. Then fly falſe Thanes,
And mingle with the Engliſh Epicures,
The minde I ſway by,and the heart I beare,
Shall never ſagge with doubt,nor ſhake with feare.
Enter Servant.
The Divell damne thee blacke,thou cream-fac'd Loone :
Where got'ſt thou that Gooſe-looke.
Ser. There is ten thouſand.
Macb. Geeſe Villaine?
Ser. Souldiers ſir.
Macb. Goe pricke thy face,and over-red thy feare
Thou Lilly-liver'd Boy. What Souldiers,Patch?
Death of thy ſoule,thoſe linnen cheekes of thine
Are Counſailours to feare. What Souldiers Whay-face?
Ser. The Engliſh Force,ſo pleaſe you.
Macb. Take thy face hence. Seyton,I am ſicke at heart,
When I behold : Seyton,I ſay,this puſh
Will cheere me ever,or diſeaſe me now.
I have liv'd long enough : my way of life
Is falne into the Seare,the yellow Leafe,
And that which ſhould accompany Old Age,
As honour,love,obedience,Troopes of Friends,
I muſt not looke to have : but in their ſtead,
Curſes,not lowd but deepe,Mouth-honour,breath
Which the poore heart would faine deny,and dare not.
Seyton?

Enter Seyton.
Sey. Whats your Gracious pleaſure?
Mac. What newes more?
Sey. All is confirm'd my Lord,which was reported.
Mac. Ile fight,till from my bones,my fleſh is hackt.
Give me my Armour.
Sey. Tis not needed yet.
Mac. Ile put it on :
Send out moe horſes,skirre the Countrey round,
Hang thoſe that ſtand in feare. Give me mine Armor :
How doe's your Patient,Doctor?
Doct. Not ſo ſicke my Lord,
As ſhe is troubled with thicke-comming Fancies
That keepe her from her reſt.
Macb. Cure her of that :
Canſt thou not Miniſter to a minde diſeas'd,
Plucke from the Memory a rooted Sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the Braine,
And with ſome ſweet oblivious Antidote
Cleanſe the ſtuft boſome,of that perillous ſtuffe
Which weighes upon the heart?
Doct. Therein the Patient
Muſt Miniſter unto himſelfe.
Macb. Throw Phyſicke to the Dogs,Ile none of it.
Come,put mine Armor on : give me my Staffe :
Seyton,ſend out : Doctor,the Thanes flye from me :
Come ſir,diſpatch. If thou could'ſt Doctor,caſt
The water of my Land,find her diſeaſe,
And purge it to a ſound and priſtine Health,
I would applaud thee to the very Eccho,
That ſhould applaud againe. Pull't off I ſay,
What Rubarb,Cæny,or what Purgative drug
Would ſcowre theſe Engliſh hence : hearſt thou of them?
Doct. I my good Lord : your Royall preparation
Makes us heare ſomething.
Mac. Bring it after me :
I will not be afraid of Death and Bane,
Till Birnam Forreſt come to Dunſinane.
Doct. Were I from Dunſinane away,and cleare,
Profit againe ſhould hardly draw me here. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Drum and Colours. Enter Malcolme, Seyward, Macduffe, Seywards Sonne, Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, and Souldiers Marching.

Malc. Coſins I hope the dayes are neere at hand
That Chambers will be ſafe.
Ment. We doubt it nothing.
Seyw. What Wood is this before us?
Ment. The Wood of Byrnam.
Malc. Let every Souldier hew him downe a Bough,
And bear't before him,thereby ſhall we ſhadow
The numbers of our Hoaſt,and make diſcovery
Erre in report of us.
Sold. It ſhall be done.
Seyw. We learne no other,but the confident Tyrant,
Keepes ſtill in Dunſinane,and will indure
Our ſetting downe befor't.
Malc. Tis his maine hope :
For where there is advantage to be given,
Both more and leſſe have given him the Revolt,
And none ſerve with him, but conſtrained things,
Whoſe hearts are abſent too.
Macd. Let our beſt Cenſures
Before the true event,and put we on

Induſtrious Souldierſhip.
Sey. The time approaches,
That will with due deciſion make us know
What we ſhall ſay we have, and what we owe:
Thoughts ſpeculative, their unſure hopes relate,
But certaine iſſue, ſtrokes muſt arbitrate,
Towards which, advance the warre. Exeunt marching.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Macbeth, Seyton, and Souldiers, with Drum and Colours.

Macb. Hang out our Banners on the outward walls,
The Cry is ſtill, they come: Our Caſtles ſtrength
Will laugh a Siege to ſcorne: Here let them lye,
Till Famine and the Ague eate them up:
Were they not forc'd with thoſe that ſhould be ours,
We might have met them darefull, beard to beard,
And beat them backeward home. What is that noyſe?
A cry within of Women.
Sey. It is the cry of women, my good Lord.
Macb. I have almoſt forgot the taſte of Feares:
The time has beene, my ſenſes would have cool'd
To heare a Night-ſhrieke, and my Fell of haire
Would at a diſmall Treatiſe rowze, and ſtirre
As life were in't. I have ſupt full with horrors,
Direneſſe familiar to my ſlaughterous thoughts
Cannot once ſtart me. Wherefore was that cry?
Sey. The Queene (my Lord) is dead.
Macb. She ſhould have dy'd hereafter;
There would have been a time for ſuch a word:
To morrow, and to morrow, and to morrow,
Creepes in this petty pace from day to day,
To the laſt Syllable of Recorded time:
And all our yeſterdayes, have lighted Fooles
The way to ſtudy death. Out, out, briefe Candle,
Life's but a walking Shadow, a poore Player,
That ſtruts and frets his houre upon the Stage,
And then is heard no more. It is a Tale
Told by an Ideot, full of ſound and fury
Signifying nothing. Enter a Meſſenger.
Thou com'ſt to uſe thy Tongue: thy ſtory quickly.
Meſ. My Gracious Lord,
I ſhould report that which I ſay I ſaw,
But know not how to doo't.
Macb. Well, ſay ſir.
Meſ. As I did ſtand my watch upon the hill
I look't toward Byrnam, and anon me thought
The Wood began to move.
Macb. Lyar, and Slave.
Meſ. Let me endure your wrath, if't be not ſo:
Within this three mile may you ſee it comming.
I ſay, a moving Grove.
Macb. If thou ſpeak'ſt falſe,
Vpon the next tree ſhalt thou hang alive
Till Famine cling thee: If thy ſpeech be ſooth,
I care not if thou doſt for me as much.
I pull in Reſolution, and begin
To doubt the Equivocation of the Fiend,
That lies like truth. Feare not, till Byrnam Wood
Doe come to Dunſinane, and now a Wood
Comes toward Dunſinane. Arme, arme, and out,
If this which he avouches doe's appeare,
There is nor flying hence, nor tarrying here,
I'gin to be a weary of the Sunne,
And wiſh th'eſtate o'th' world were now undon.
Ring the alarum Bell, blow Wind, come wracke,
At leaſt wee'l dye with Harneſſe on our backe. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Drumme and Colours.
Enter Malcolme, Seyward, Mackduffe, and their Army, with Boughes.

Mal. Now neere enough:
Your Leavy Screenes throw downe,
And ſhew like thoſe you are: You (worthy Vncle)
Shall with my Couſin, your right Noble ſonne,
Lead our firſt Battell. Worthy Macduffe, and we Shall take upon's what elſe remaines to doe
According to our order.
Sey. Fare you well:
Doe we but find the Tyrants power to night,
Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.
Macd. Make all our Trumpets ſpeake, [illegible] them all (breath,
Thoſe clamourous Harbingers of blood, a[illegible].
Alarums continued.

Scæna Septima.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. They have tyed me to a ſtake, I cannot flye,
But Beare-like I muſt fight the courſe. Whats he
That was not borne of woman? Such a one
Am I to feare, or none.
Enter yong Seyward.
Y. Sey. What is thy name?
Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to heare it.
Y. Sey No: though thou call'ſt thy ſelfe a hotter name
Than any is in hell.
Macb. My name's Macbeth.
Y. Sey. The Divell himſelfe could not pronounce a Title
More hatefull to mine eare.
Macb. No: nor more fearefull.
Y. Sey. Thou lieſt thou abhorred Tyrant, with my ſword
Ile prove the lye thou ſpeak'ſt.
Fight, and yong Seyward ſlaine.
Macb. Thou waſt borne of Woman;
But ſwords I ſmile at, Weapons laugh to ſcorne,
Brandiſh'd by man that's of a Woman borne. Exit.
Alarums. Enter Macduffe.
Macd. That way the noyſe is: Tyrant ſhew thy face,
If thou beeſt ſlaine, and with no ſtroake of mine,
My Wife and Childrens Ghoſts will haunt me ſtill:
I cannot ſtrike at wretched Kernes, whoſe armes
Are hyr'd to beare their Staves; either thou Macbeth,
Or elſe my ſword with an unbatterred edge
I ſheath againe undeeded. There thou ſhould'ſt be,
By this great clatter, one of greateſt note

Seemes bruited. Let me finde him Fortune,
And more I beg not. Exit. Alarums.

Enter Malcolme and Seyward.

Seyw. This way my Lord, the Caſtles gently rendred:
The Tyrants people, on both ſides doe fight,
The Noble Thanes doe bravely in the Warre,
The day almoſt it ſelfe profeſſes yours,
And little is to doe.

Malc. We have met with Foes
That ſtrike beſide us.

Seyw. Enter, Sir, the Caſtle. Exeunt. Alarum.

Enter Macbeth.

Mac. Why ſhould I play the Roman Foole, and dye
On mine owne ſword? whiles I ſee lives, the gaſhes
Doe better upon them.

Enter Macduffe.

Macd. Turne Hell-hound, turne.

Mac. Of all men elſe I have avoyded thee:
But get thee backe, my ſoule is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words,
My voyce is in my Sword, thou bloodier Villaine
Than tearmes can give thee out. Fight: Alarum.

Macb. Thou loſeſt labour,
As eaſie m[illegible]ou the intrenchant Ayre
With th[illegible]word impreſſe, as make me bleed:
Let fall t[illegible]e on vulnerable Creſts,
I beare a charmed life, which muſt not yeeld
To one of woman borne.

Macd. Diſpaire thy Charme,
And let the Angell whom thou ſtill haſt ſerv'd
Tell thee, Macduffe was from his Mothers wombe
Vntimely ript.

Macb. Accurſed be that tongue that tels me ſo;
For it hath Cow'd my better part of man:
And be theſe Iugling Fiends no more beleev'd,
That palter with us in a double ſenſe,
That keepe the word of promiſe to our eare,
And breake it to our hope. Ile not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yeeld thee Coward,
And live to be the ſhew, and gaze o'th'time.
Wee'l have thee, as our Rarer Monſters are Painted upon a Pole, and under-writ,
Here may you ſee the Tyrant.

Macb. I will not yeeld
To kiſſe the ground before yong Malcolmes feet,
And to be baited with the Rabbles curſe,
Though Byrnam Wood be come to Dunſinane,
And thou oppos'd, being of no woman borne,
Yet I will try the laſt. Before my body,
I throw my warlike Shield: Lay on Macduffe,
And damn'd be him, that firſt cryes hold, enough.

Exeunt fighting. Alarums.

Enter Fighting, and Macbeth ſlaine.

Retreat, and Flouriſh. Enter with Drumme and Colours, Malcolme, Seyward, Roſſe, Thanes, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would the Friends we miſſe, were ſafe arriv'd.

Sey. Some muſt goe off: and yet by theſe I ſee,
So great a day as this is cheapely bought.

Mal. Macduffe is miſſing, and your noble Sonne.

Roſſ. Your ſonne my Lord, ha's paid a Souldiers debt,
He onely liv'd but till he was a man,
The which no ſooner had his Prowſſe confirm'd
In the unſhrinking ſtation where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd.

Sey. Then he is dead?

Roſſe. I, and brought off the Field: your cauſe of ſorrow
Muſt not be meaſur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Sey. Had he his hurts before?

Roſſ. I, on the Front.

Sey. Why then, Gods Souldier be he:
Had I as many ſonnes, as I have haires,
I would not wiſh them to a fairer death:
And ſo his Knell is knoll'd.

Mal. Hee's worth more ſorrow,
And that Ile ſpend for him.

Sey. He's worth no more,
They ſay he parted well, and paid his ſcore,
And ſo God be with him. Here comes newer comfort.

Enter Macduffe, with Macbeths head.

Macd. Haile King, for ſo thou art.
Behold where ſtands
Th'Vſurpers curſed head: the time is free:
I ſee thee compaſt with thy Kingdomes Pearle,
That ſpeake my ſalutation in their minds:
Whoſe voyces I deſire alowd with mine.
Haile King of Scotland.

All. Haile King of Scotland. Flouriſh.

Mal. We ſhall not ſpend a large expence of time,
Before we reckon with your ſeverall loves,
And make us even with you. My Thanes and Kinſmen
Henceforth be Earles, the firſt that ever Scotland
In ſuch an honor nam'd: Whats more to doe
Which would be planted newly with the time,
As calling home our exil'd Friends abroad,
That fled the Snares of watchfull tyranny,
Producing forth the cruell Miniſters
Of this dead Butcher, and his Fiend-like Queene;
Who (as 'tis thought) by ſelfe and violent hands,
Tooke off her life. This, and what needfull elſe
That cals upon us, by the Grace of Grace,
We will performe in meaſure, time, and place:
So thankes to all at once, and to each one,
Whom we invite, to ſee us Crown'd at Scone.

Flouriſh. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDY OF
HAMLET, Prince of Denmarke.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Barnardo and Franciſco two Centinels.

Barnardo.
WHo's there?
Fran. Nay anſwer me: Stand and unfold your ſelfe.
Bar. Long live the King.
Fran. Barnardo?
Bar. He.
Fran. You come moſt carefully upon your houre.
Bar. Tis now ſtruck twelve, get thee to bed Franciſco.
Fran. For this reliefe much thankes: Tis bitter cold,
And I am ſicke at heart.
Barn. Have you had quiet Guard?
Fran. Not a Mouſe ſtirring.
Barn. Well, goodnight. If you doe meet Horatio and Marcellus, the Rivals of my Watch, bid them make haſt.
Enter Horatio and Marcellus.
Fran. I thinke I heare them. Stand: who's there?
Hor. Friends to this ground.
Mar. And Liege-men to the Dane.
Fran. Give you good night.
Mar. O farewel honeſt Soldier, who hath reliev'd you?
Fra. Barnardo ha's my place: give you good night.
Exit Franciſco.
Mar. Holla Barnardo.
Bar. Say, what is Horatio there?
Hor. A peece of him.
Bar. Welcome Horatio, welcome good Marcellus.
Mar. What, ha's this thing appear'd againe to night.
Bar. I have ſeene nothing.
Mar. Horatio ſayes, tis but our phantaſie,
And will not let beleefe take hold of him
Touching this dreaded ſight, twice ſeene of us,
Therefore I have intreated him along
With us, to watch the minutes of this night,
That if againe this Apparition come,
He may approve our eyes, and ſpeake to it.
Hor. Tuſh, tuſh, 'twill not appeare.
Bar. Sit downe a while,
And let us once againe aſſaile your eares,]
That are ſo fortified againſt our Story,
What we two nights have ſeene.
Hor. Well, ſit we downe,
And let us heare Barnardo ſpeake of this.
Barn. Laſt night of all,
Whon yond ſame Starre thats Weſtward from the Pole
Had made his courſe t'illume that part of heaven
Where now it burnes, Marcellus and my ſelfe,
The Bell then beating one.
Mar. Peace, breake thee off: Enter the Ghoſt.
Looke where it comes againe.
Bar. In the ſame figure like the King thats dead.
Mar. Thou art a Scholler; ſpeake to it Horatio.
Bar. Looke it not like the King? Marke it Horatio.
Hor. Moſt like: It harrowes me with feare and wonder.
Bar. It would be ſpoke to.
Mar. Queſtion it Horatio.
Hor. What art thou that uſurp'ſt this time of night,
Together with that faire and warlike forme
In which the Majeſty of buried Denmarke
Did ſometimes march: By heaven I charge thee ſpeake.
Mar. It is offended.
Bar. See, it ſtalkes away.
Hor. Stay: ſpeake; ſpeake: I charge thee, ſpeake.
Exit the Ghoſt.
Mar. Tis gone, and will not anſwer.
Bar. How now Horatio? You tremble & looke pale:
Is not this ſomething more than phantaſie?
What thinke you on't?
Hor. Before my God I might nor this beleeve
Without the ſenſible and true avouch
Of mine owne eyes.
Mar. Is it not like the King?
Hor. As thou art to thy ſelfe,
Such was the Armour he had on,
When th'Ambitious Norway combatted:
So frown'd he once, when in an angry parle
He ſmot the ſledded Pollax on the Ice.
Tis ſtrange.
Mar. Thus twice before, and juſt at this ſame houre,
With Martiall ſtalke, hath he gone by our Watch.
Hor. In what particular thought to worke, I know not:
But in the groſſe and ſcope of my opinion,
This boads ſome ſtrange eruption to our State,
Mar. Good now ſit downe, and tell me he that knowes
Why this ſame ſtrict and moſt obſervant Watch,
So nightly toyles the ſubject of the Land,
And why ſuch daily Caſt of Brazen Cannon
And forraigne Mart for Implements of Warre:
Why ſuch impreſſe of Shipwrights, whoſe ſore Taske
Do's not divide the Sunday from the weeke,
What might be toward, that this ſweaty haſte
Doth make the night joynt-labourer with the day:
Who is't that can informe me?
Hor. That can I,

At leaſt the whiſper goes ſo: Our laſt King,
Whoſe Image even but now appear'd to us,
Was (as you know) by Fortinbras of Norway,
(Thereto prick'd on by a moſt emulate pride)
Dar'd to the Combate. In which, our valiant Hamlet,
(For ſo this ſide of our knowne world eſteem'd him)
Did ſlay this Fortinbras: Who by a ſeal'd Compact,
Well ratified by Law, and Heraldry,
Did forfeit (with his life) all thoſe his Lands
Which he ſtood ſeiz'd on, to the Conqueror:
Againſt the which, a Moity competent
Was gaged by our King: which had return'd
To the Inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he bin Vanquiſher, as by the ſame Cov'nant
And carriage of the Article deſign'd,
His fell to Hamlet. Now ſir, yong Fortinbras,
Of unimproved mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd up a Liſt of Landleſſe Reſolutes,
For food and Dyet, to ſome Enterprize
That hath a ſtomake in't: which is no other
(And it doth well appeare unto our State)
But to recover of us by ſtrong hand
And termes Compulſative, thoſe foreſaid Lands
So by his father loſt: and this (I take it)
Is the maine motive of our Preparations,
The ſourſe of this our Watch, and the chiefe head
Of this poſt-haſte, and Romage in the Land.

Enter Ghoſt againe.

But ſoft, behold: Loe, where it comes againe:
Ile croſſe it, though it blaſt me. Stay Illuſion:
If thou haſt any ſound, or uſe of voyce,
Speake to me. If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee doe eaſe, and grace to me; ſpeake to me.
If thou art privy to thy Countries Fate
(Which happily foreknowing may avoyd) Oh ſpeake.
Or, if thou haſt uphoorded in thy life
Extorted Treaſure in the wombe of Earth,
(For which, they ſay, you ſpirits oft walke in death)
Speake of it. Stay, and ſpeake. Stop it Marcellus.

Mar. Shall I ſtrike at it with my Partizan?

Hor. Doe if it will not ſtand,

Barn. Tis here.

Hor. Tis here.

Mar. Tis gone. Exit Ghoſt.

We doe it wrong, being ſo Majeſticall
To offer it the ſhew of Violence,
For it is as the Ayre, invulnerable,
And our vaine blowes, malicious mockery.

Barn. It was about to ſpeake, when the Cocke crew.

Hor. And then it ſtarted, like a guilty thing
Vpon a fearfull Summons. I have heard,
The Cocke that is the Trumpet to the day,
Doth with his lofty and ſhrill-ſounding throat
Awake the god of Day: and at his warning,
Whether in Sea, or Fire, in Earth, or Ayre,
Th'extravagant and erring ſpirit, hyes
To his Confine. And of the truth herein,
This preſent Object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the Cocke.
Some ſayes, that ever 'gainſt that ſeaſon comes
Wherein our Saviours Birth is celebrated,
The Bird of Dawning ſingeth all night long:
And (they ſay) no ſpirit can walke abroad,
The nights are wholſom, then no Planets ſtrike,
No Faiery talkes, nor Witch hath power to Charme:
So hallow'd, and ſo gracious is the time.

Hor. So have I heard, and doe in part beleeve it.
But looke, the Morne in Ruſſet Mantle clad,
Walkes o're the Dew of yon high Eaſterne hill,
Breake we our Watch up, and by my advice
Let us impart what we have ſeene to night
Vnto yong Hamlet. For upon my life,
This ſpirit dumbe to us, will ſpeake to him:
Doe you conſent we ſhall acquaint him with it,
As needfull in our Loves, fitting our duty?

Mar. Let's do't I pray, and I this morning know
Where we ſhall finde him moſt conveniently. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Claudius, King of Denmarke, Gertrud the Queene, Hamlet, Polonius, Laertes, and his Siſter Ophelia, Lords Attendants.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our deare Brothers death,
The memory be greene: and that it us befitted
To beare our hearts in griefe, and our whole Kingdome
To be contracted in one brow of woe:
Yet ſo farre hath Diſcretion fought with Nature,
That we with wiſeſt ſorrow thinke on him,
Together with remembrance of our ſelves.
Therefore our ſometimes Siſter, now our Queene,
Th'Imperiall Ioyntreſſe of this warlike State,
Have we, as twere, with a defeated joy,
With one Auſpicious, and one Dropping eye,
With mirth in Funerall, and with Dirge in Marriage,
In equall Scale weighing Delight and Dole
Taken to wife; nor have we herein barr'd
Your better Wiſedomes, which have freely gone
With this affaire along, for all our Thankes.
Now followes, that you know yong Fortinbras,
Holding a weake ſuppoſall of our worth;
Or thinking by our late deare Brothers death,
Our State to be diſioynt, and out of Frame,
Colleagued with the dreame of his Advantage;
He hath not fail'd to peſter us with Meſſage,
Importing the ſurrender of thoſe lands
Loſt by his Father, with all Bonds of Law
To our moſt valiant Brother. So much for him.

Enter Voltimand and Cornelius.

Now for our ſelfe, and for this time of meeting
Thus much the buſineſſe is. We have here writ
To Norway, Vncle of yong Fortinbras,
Who impotent and bedrid, ſcarcely heares
Of this his Nephewes purpoſe, to ſuppreſſe
His further gate herein. In that the Levies,
The Liſts, and full proportions are all made
Out of his ſubject: and we here diſpatch
You good Cornelius, and you Voltimand,
For bearing of this greeting to old Norway,
Giving to you no further perſonall power
To buſineſſe with the King, more than the ſcope
Of theſe dilated Articles allow:
Farewell, and let your haſte commend your duty.

Volt. In that, and all things, will we ſhew our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing, heartily farewell.

Exit Voltimand and Cornelius.

And now Laertes, whats the newes with you?

You told us of ſome ſuite. What is't Laertes?
You cannot ſpeake of Reaſon to the Dane,
And looſe your voyce. What wouldſt thou beg Laertes,
That ſhall not be my Offer, not thy Asking?
The head is not more Native to the heart,
The hand more inſtrumentall to the Mouth,
Then is the Throne of Denmarke to thy father.
What wouldſt thou have Laertes?
Laer. Dread my Lord,
Your leave and favour to returne to France,
From whence, though willingly I came to Denmarke
To ſhew my duty in your Coronation,
Yet now I muſt confeſſe, that duty done,
My thoughts and wiſhes bend againe towards France,
And bow them to your gracious leave and pardon.
King. Have you your Fathers leave?
What ſayes Polonius?
Pol. He hath my Lord:
I doe beſeech you give him leave to goe.
King. Take thy faire houre Laertes, time be thine,
And thy beſt graces ſpend it at thy will:
But now my Coſin Hamlet, and my Sonne?
Ham. A little more then kin, and leſſe then kind.
King. How is it that the Clouds ſtill hang on you?
Ham. Not ſo my Lord, I am too much ith' Sun.
Quee. Good Hamlet caſt thy nightly colour off,
And let thine eye looke like a Friend on Denmarke.
Doe not for ever with thy veyled lids
Seeke for thy Noble Father in the duſt;
Thou knowſt tis common, all that live muſt dye,
Paſſing through Nature, to Eternity.
Ham. I Madam, it is common.
Quee. If it be;
Why ſeemes it ſo particular with thee.
Ham. Seemes Madam? Nay, it is: I know not Seemes:
Tis not alone my Inky Cloake (good Mother)
Nor Cuſtomary ſuites of ſolemne Blacke,
Nor windy ſuſpiration of forc'd breath,
No, nor the fruitfull River in the Eye,
Nor the dejected haviour of the Viſage,
Together with all Formes, Moods, ſhewes of Griefe,
That can denote me truly. Theſe indeed Seeme,
For they are actions that a man might play:
But I have that Within, which paſſeth ſhow;
Theſe, but the Trappings, and the Suites of woe.
King. Tis ſweet and commendable
In your Nature Hamlet,
To give theſe mourning duties to your Father:
But you muſt know, your father loſt a father,
That father loſt, loſt his, and the Surviver bound
In filiall Obligation, for ſome terme
To doe obſequious Sorrow. But to perſever
In obſtinate Condolement, is a courſe
Of impious ſtubborneſſe. Tis unmanly griefe,
It ſhewes a will moſt incorrect to Heaven,
A heart unfortified, a Mind impatient,
An Vnderſtanding ſimple, and unſchool'd:
For, what we know muſt be, and is as common
As any the moſt vulgar thing to ſence,
Why ſhould we in our peeviſh Oppoſition
Take it to heart? Fye, tis a fault to heaven,
A fault againſt the Dead, a fault to Nature,
To Reaſon moſt abſur'd, whoſe common Theame
Is death of Fathers, and who ſtill hath cryed,
From the firſt Coarſe, till he that dyed to day,
This muſt be ſo. We pray you throw to earth
This unprevayling woe, and thinke of us,
As of a Father; For let the world take note,
You are the moſt immediate to our Throne,
And with no leſſe Nobility of Love,
Then that which deereſt Father beares his Sonne,
Doe I impart towards you. For your intent
In going backe to Schoole in Wittenberg,
It is moſt retrogarde to our deſire:
And we beſeech you, bend you to remaine
Heere in the cheere and comfort of our eye,
Our cheifeſt Courtier Coſin, and our Sonne.
Que. Let not thy Mother loſe her Prayers Hamlet:
I prethee ſtay with us, goe not to Wittenberg.
Ham. I ſhall in all my beſt
Obey you Madam.
King. Why tis a loving, and a faire Reply,
Be as our ſelfe in Denmarke. Madam come,
This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet
Sits ſmiling to my heart, in grace whereof,
No jocond health that Denmarke drinkes to day,
But the great Cannon to the Clowds ſhall tell,
And the Kings Rouce, the heavens ſhall bruite againe, Reſpeaking earthly Thunder. Come away. Exeunt.

Manet Hamlet.

Ham. Oh that this too too ſolid Fleſh, would melt,
Thaw, and reſolve it ſelfe into a Dew:
Or that the Everlaſting had not fixt
His Cannon gainſt ſelfe-ſlaughter. O God, O God!
How weary, ſtale, flat, and unprofitable
Seemes to me all the uſes of this world?
Fye on't? Oh fie, fie, tis an unweeded Garden
That growes to Seed: things rank, and groſſe in Nature
Poſſeſſe it meerely. That it ſhould come to this:
But two months dead: Nay, not ſo much; not two,
So excellent a King, that was to this
Hyperion to a Satyre: ſo loving to my Mother,
That he might not beteene the windes of heaven
Viſit her face too roughly. Heaven and Earth
Muſt I remember: why ſhe would hang on him,
As if encreaſe of Appetite had growne
By what it fed on; and yet within a month?
Let me not thinke on't: Frailty, thy name is woman!
A little Month, or ere thoſe ſhooes were old,
With which ſhe followed my poore Fathers body
Like Niobe, all teares. Why ſhe, even ſhe,
(O heaven! A beaſt that wants diſcourſe of Reaſon
Would have mourn'd longer) married with mine Vnkle,
My fathers brother: but no more like my father,
Then I to Hercules. Within a Month?
Ere yet the ſalt of moſt unrighteous Teares
Had left the fluſhing of her gauled eyes,
She married. O moſt wicked ſpeed to poſt
With ſuch dexterity to inceſtuous ſheets:
It is not, nor it cannot come to good.
But breake my heart, for I muſt hold my tongue.

Enter Horatio, Barnard, and Marcellus.

Hor. Haile to your Lordſhip.
Ham. I am glad to ſee you well:
Horatio, or I doe forget my ſelfe.
Hor. The ſame my Lord,
And your poore Servant ever.
Ham. Sir my good friend,
Ile change that name with you:
And what make you from Wittenberg Horatio?

Marcellus.
Mar. My good Lord.
Ham. I am very glad to ſee you : good even ſir.
But what in faith make you from Wittenberge.
Hor. A Truant diſpoſition,good my Lord.
Ham. I would not have your enemy ſay ſo ;
Nor ſhall you doe mine eare that violence,
To take it truſter of your owne report
Againſt your ſelfe. I know you are no Truant :
But what is your affaire in Elſenour ?
Wee'l teach you to drinke deepe ere you depart.
Hor. My Lord,I came to ſee your Fathers Funerall.
Ham. I prythee doe not mocke me(fellow Student)
I thinke it was to ſee my Mothers wedding.
Hor. Indeed my Lord,it followeth hard upon.
Ham. Thrift,thrift,Horatio: the Funerall Bak'd meats,
Did coldly furniſh forth the Marriage Tables ;
Would I had met my dearest Foe in heaven,
Ere I had ever ſeene that day Horatio.
My father,me thinkes I ſee my father.
Hor. Oh where my Lord ?
Ham. In my minds eye (Horatio.)
Hor. I ſaw him once,he was a goodly King.
Ham. He was a man,take him for all in all :
I ſhould not looke upon his like againe.
Hor. My Lord,I thinke I ſaw him yeſternight.
Ham. Saw ? Who ?
Hor. My Lord,the King your Father.
Ham. The King my father !
Hor. Seaſon your admiration for a while
With an attent eare ; till I may deliver
Vpon the witneſſe of theſe Gentlemen,
This marvell to you.
Ham. For heavens love let me heare.
Hor. Two nights together,had theſe Gentlemen
(Marcellus and Barnardo) on their Watch
In the dead waſte and middle of the night
Beene thus encountred. A figure like your father,
Arm'd at all points exactly,Cap a Pe,
Appeares before them,and with ſolemne March
Goes ſlow and ſtately : By them thrice he walkt,
By their oppreſt and feare-ſurprized eyes,
Within his Truncheons length; whilſt they beſtill'd
Almoſt to Ielly with the Act of feare,
Stand dumbe and ſpeake not to him. This to me
In dreadfull ſecrecy impart they did,
And I with them the third night kept the Watch,
Whereas they had deliver'd both in time,
Forme of the thing ; each word made true and good,
The Apparition comes. I knew your Father :
Theſe hands are not more like.
Ham. But where was this ?
Mar. My Lord upon the platforme where we watcht.
Ham. Did you not ſpeake to it ?
Hor. My Lord,I did ;
But anſwer made it none : yet once me thought
It lifted up it head,and did addreſſe
It ſelfe to motion,like as it would ſpeake :
But even then, the morning Cocke crew lowd ;
And at the ſound it ſhrunke in haſte away,
And vaniſht from our ſight.
Ham. Tis very ſtrange.
Hor. As I doe live my honourable Lord 'tis true ;
And we did thinke it writ downe in our duty
To let you know of it.
Ham. Indeed,indeed Sirs ; but this troubles me.
Hold you the Watch to night ?
Both. We doe my Lord.
Ham. Arm'd,ſay you ?
Both. Arm'd,my Lord.
Ham. From top to toe ?
Both. My Lord,from head to foote.
Ham. Then ſaw you not his face ?
Hor. O yes,my Lord,he wore his Beaver up.
Ham. What,lookt he frowningly ?
Hor. A countenance more in ſorrow than in anger.
Ham. Pale,or red ?
Hor. Nay,very pale.
Ham. And fixt his eyes upon you ?
Hor. Moſt conſtantly.
Ham. I would I had beene there.
Hor. It would have much amaz'd you.
Ham. Very like,very like : ſtaid it long ? (dred.
Hor. While one with moderate haſte might tell a hun-
All. Longer,longer.
Hor. Not when I ſaw't.
Ham. His Beard was griſly ?
Hor. It was,as I have ſeene it in his life,
A Sable Silver'd. (gaine.
Ham. Ile watch to night ; perchance twill walke a-
Hor. I warrant you it will.
Ham. If it aſſume my noble fathers perſon,
Ile ſpeake to it,though Hell it ſelfe ſhould gape
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you have hitherto conceald this ſight ;
Let it be trebble in your ſilence ſtill :
And whatſoever elſe ſhall hap to night,
Give it an underſtanding,but no tongue ;
I will requite your loves ; ſo,fare ye well :
Vpon the Platforme twixt eleven and twelve,
Ile viſit you.
All. Our duty to your Honour. Exeunt.
Ham. Your love,as mine to you : farewell.
My fathers ſpirit in Armes ? All is not well :
I doubt ſome foule play : would the night were come ;
Till then ſit ſtill my ſoule ; foule deeds will riſe,
Though all the earth orewhelm them to mens eyes. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My neceſſaries are imbark't,farewell :
And ſiſter,as the Winds give benefit,
And Convoy is aſſiſtant; doe not ſleepe,
But let me heare from you,
Ophe. Doe you doubt that ?
Laer. For Hamlet,and the trifling of his favours,
Hold it a faſhion and a toy in Bloud ;
A Violet in the youth of Primy Nature ;
Froward,not permanent ; ſweet not laſting
The ſuppliance of a minute ; No more.
Ophel. No more but ſo.
Laer. Thinke it no more :
For nature creſſant does not grow alone,
In thewes and Bulke : but as his Temple waxes,
The inward ſervice of the minde and ſoule
Growes wide withall. Perhaps he loves you now,
And now no foyle nor cautell doth beſmerch
The vertue of his feare : but you muſt feare
His

His greatneſſe weigh'd,his will is not his owne;
For he himſelfe is ſubject to his Birth:
He may not,as unvalued perſons doe,
Carve for himſelfe; for,on his choyce depends
The ſanctity and health of the whole ſtate.
And therefore muſt his choyce be circumſcrib'd
Vnto the voyce and yeelding of that body,
Whereof he is the head. Then if he ſayes he loves you,
It fits your wiſedome ſo farre to beleeve it;
As he in his peculiar Sect and force
May give his ſaying deed; which is no further,
Than the maine voyce of Denmarke goes withall.
Then weigh what loſſe your honour may ſuſtaine,
If with two credent eare you liſt his Songs;
Or loſe your heart; or your chaſte treaſure open
To his unmaſtred importunity.
Feare it Ophelia,feare it my deare Siſter,
And keepe within the reare of your affection;
Out of the ſhot and danger of deſire.
The charieſt Maid is prodigall enough,
If ſhe unmaske her beaty to the Moone:
Vertue it ſelfe ſcapes not calumnious ſtroaks,
The Canker galls the infant of the Spring
Too oft before the Buttons be diſclos'd,
And in the morne and liquid dew of Youth,
Contagious blaſtments are moſt imminent.
Be wary than,beſt ſafety lies in feare;
Youth to it ſelfe rebels,though none elſe neere.
Ophe. I ſhall th'effect of this good Leſſon keepe,
As watchmen to my heart: but good my Brother
Doe not as ſome ungracious Paſtors doe,
Shew me the ſteepe and thorny way to heaven;
Whilſt like a puft and reckleſſe Libertine
Himſelfe,the Primroſe path of dalliance treads,
And reakes not his owne reade.
Laer. Oh,feare me not.

Enter Polonius.

I ſtay too long; but here my Father comes:
A double bleſſing is a double grace;
Occaſion ſmiles upon a ſecond leave.
Polon. Yet here Laertes? Aboord,aboord for ſhame,
The wind ſits in the ſhoulder of your ſaile,
And you are ſtaid for there: my bleſſing with you:
And theſe few Precepts in thy memory,
See thou Character. Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportion'd thought his Act:
Be thou familiar; but by no meanes vulgar:
The friends thou haſt,and their adoption tride,
Grapple them to thy ſoule,with hoopes of Steele:
But doe not dull thy palme,with entertainment
Of each unhatch't,unfledg'd Comrade. Beware
Of entrance to a quarrell: but being in
Bear't that th'oppoſed may beware of thee.
Give every man thine eare; but few thy voyce:
Take each mans cenſure: but reſerve thy judgement:
Coſtly thy habit as thy purſe can buy;
But not expreſt in fancy; rich,not gaudy:
For the apparell oft proclaimes the man.
And they in France of the beſt ranke and ſtation,
Are of a moſt ſelect and generous cheff in that.
Neither a borrower,nor a lender be;
For Loane oft loſes both it ſelfe and friend:
A borrowing duls the edge of Husbandry.
This above all; to thine owne ſelfe be true:
And it muſt follow,as the Night the Day,
Thou canſt not then be falſe to any man.
Farewell: my bleſſing ſeaſon this in thee.
Laer. Moſt humbly doe I take my leave,my Lord.
Polon. The time invites you,goe,your ſervants tend.
Laer. Farewell Ophelia,and remember well
What I have ſaid to you.
Ophe. 'Tis in my memory lockt,
And you your ſelfe ſhall keepe the Key of it.
Laer. Farewell. Exit Laer.
Polon. What iſt Ophelia,he hath ſaid to you?
Ophe. So pleaſe you,ſomthing touching the L.Hamlet.
Polon. Marry,well bethought:
Tis told me he hath very oft of late
Given private time to you; and you your ſelfe
Have of your audience beene moſt free and bounteous.
If it be ſo,as ſo tis put on me;
And that in way of caution: I muſt tell you,
You doe not underſtand your ſelfe ſo clearely,
As it behoves my Daughter,and your honour.
What is betweene you,give me up the truth?
Ophe. He hath my Lord of late,made many tenders
Of his affection to me.
Polon. Affection,puh. You ſpeake like a greene Girle,
Vnſifted in ſuch perillous circumſtance.
Doe you beleeve his tenders,as you call them?
Ophe. I doe not know,my Lord, what I ſhould thinke.
Polon. Marry Ile teach you; thinke your ſelfe a Baby,
That you have tane his tenders for true pay,
Which are not ſtarling. Tender your ſelfe more dearely;
Or not to cracke the wind of the poore Phraſe,
Roaming it thus,you'l tender me a foole.
Ophe. My Lord,he hath importun'd me with love,
In honourable faſhion.
Polon. I,faſhion you may call it,goe to,goe to.
Ophe. And hath given countenance to his ſpeech,
My Lord,with all the vowes of heaven.
Polon. I,Springes to catch Woodcocks. I doe know
When the blood burnes,how prodigall the ſoule
Gives the tongue vowes: theſe blazes, daughter,
Giving more light than heat; extinct in both,
Even in their promiſe,as it is a making;
You muſt not take for fire. For this time Daughter,
Be ſomewhat ſcanter of your Maiden preſence,
Set your entreatments at a higher rate,
Then a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet,
Beleeve ſo much in him,that he is yong,
And with a larger tether may he walke,
Then may be given you. In few,Ophelia,
Doe not beleeve his vowes; for they are Broakers,
Not of the eye,which their Inveſtments ſhew:
But meere implorators of unholy Sutes,
Breathing like ſanctified and pious bonds,
The better to beguile. This is for all:
I would not,in plaine termes,from this time forth,
Have you ſo ſlander any moment leiſure,
As to give words or talke with the Lord Hamlet:
Looke too't,I charge you; come your way.
Ophe. I ſhall obey my Lord. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet,Horatio,Marcellus.

Ham. The Ayre bites ſhrew'dly: is it very cold?
Hor. It is a nipping and an eager ayre.
Ham. What houre now?
Hor. I thinke it lackes of twelve.
Mar. No,it is ſtrooke. (ſeaſon,
Hor. Indeed I heard it not: then it drawes neere the
Wherein the Spirit held his wont to walke.

What does this meane my Lord? (rouſe,
Ham. The King doth wake to night,and takes his
Keepes waſſels,and the ſwaggering upſpring reeles,
And as he dreines his draughts of Reniſh downe,
The Kettle Drum and Trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge.
Hor. It is a cuſtome?
Ham. I marry is't:
And to my mind,though I am native here,
And to the manner borne: It is a cuſtome
More honour'd in the breach,than the obſervance.

Enter Ghoſt.

Hor. Looke my Lord it comes.
Ham. Angels and Miniſters of grace defend us:
Be thou a ſpirit of health,or Goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee ayres from heaven,or blaſts from hell,
Be thy events wicked or charitable,
Thou com'ſt in ſuch a queſtionable ſhape
That I will ſpeake to thee. Ile call thee Hamlet,
King,Father,Royall Dane: Oh,oh,anſwer me,
Let me not burſt in ignorance; but tell
Why thy Canoniz'd bones hearſed in death,
Have burſt their Cearments,why the Sepulcher
Wherein we ſaw thee quietly Inurn'd,
Hath op'd his ponderous and Marble jawes,
To caſt thee up againe? What may this meane?
That thou dead Coarſe againe in compleat ſteele,
Reviſitſt thus the glimpſes of the Moone,
Making night hideous? And we fooles of Nature,
So horridly to ſhake our diſpoſition,
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our ſoules,
Say,why is this,wherefore? what ſhould we doe?

Ghoſt Beckens Hamlet.

Hor. It beckens you to goe away with it,
As if it ſome impartment did deſire
To you alone.
Mar. Looke with what courteous action
It wafts you to a more removed ground:
But doe not goe with it.
Hor. No,by no meanes.
Ham. It will not ſpeake: then will I follow it.
Hor. Doe not my Lord.
Ham. Why,what ſhould be the feare?
I doe not ſet my life at a Pins fee;
And for my ſoule what can it doe to that?
Being a thing immortall as it ſelfe:
It waves me forth againe; Ile follow it.
Hor. What if it tempt you toward the Floud my Lord?
Or to the dreadfull Sonnet of the Cliffe,
That beetles o're his baſe into the Sea,
And there aſſumes ſome other horrible forme,
Which might deprive your Soveraignty of Reaſon,
And draw you into madneſſe? thinke of it.
Ham. It wafts me ſtill: goe on,Ile follow thee.
Mar. You ſhall not goe my Lord.
Ham. Hold off your hand.
Hor. Be rul'd,you ſhall not goe.
Ham My fate cries out,
And makes each petty Artire in this body,
As hardy as the Nemian Lions Nerve:
Still am I call'd? Vnhand me Gentlemen:
By heav'n,Ile make a Ghoſt of him that lets me:
I ſay away,goe on,Ile follow thee.

Exeunt Ghoſt and Hamlet.

Hor. He waxes deſperate with imagination.
Mar. Let's follow; tis not fit thus to obey him.
Hor. Have after,to what iſſue will this come?
Mar. Something is rotten in the State of Denmarke.
Hor. Heaven will direct it.
Mar. Nay,let's follow him. Exeunt.

Enter Ghoſt and Hamlet.

Ham. Where wilt thou leade me? ſpeake; Ile goe no
Ghoſt. Marke me. (further.
Ham. I will.
Gho. My honour is almoſt come,
When I to ſulphurous and tormenting Flames
Muſt render up my ſelfe.
Ham. Alas poore Ghoſt.
Ghoſt. Pitty me not but lend thy ſerious hearing
To what I ſhall unfold.
Ham. Speake,I am bound to heare.
Gho. So art thou to revenge,when thou ſhalt heare.
Ham. What?
Ghoſt. I am thy fathers ſpirit.
Doom'd for a certaine terme to walke the night;
And for the day confin'd to faſt in fiers,
Till the foule crimes done in my dayes of Nature,
Are burnt and purg'd away? But that I am forbid
To tell the ſecrets of my Priſon-houſe;
I could a Tale unfold,whoſe lighteſt word
Would harrow up thy ſoule,freeze thy yong blood,
Make thy two eyes like Starres, ſtart from their Spheres,
Thy knotty and combined lockes to part,
And each particular haire to ſtand an end,
Like Quills upon the fretfull Porpentine:
But this eternall blazon muſt not be
To eares of Fleſh and Blood; liſt Hamle,oh liſt,
If thou didſt ever thy deare father love.
Ham. Oh heaven!
Ghoſt. Revenge his foule and moſt unnaturall Murther.
Ham. Murther?
Ghoſt. Murther moſt foule,as in the beſt it is;
But this moſt foule,ſtrange,and unnaturall.
Ham. Haſte,haſte me to know it,
That I with wings as ſwift
As Meditation,or the thoughts of Love,
May ſweepe to my Revenge.
Ghoſt. I finde thee apt,
And duller ſhould'ſt thou be than the fat weed
That rots it ſelfe in eaſe,on Lethe Wharfe,
Would'ſt thou not ſtirre in this. Now Hamlet heare:
It's given out,that ſleeping in mine Orchard,
A Serpent ſtung me: ſo the whole eare of Denmarke,
Is by a forged proceſſe of my death
Rankly abus'd: But know thou noble youth,
The Serpent that did ſting thy fathers life,
Now weares his Crowne.
Ham. O my Propheticke ſoule: mine Vncle?
Ghoſt. I,that inceſtuous,that adulterate Beaſt
With witchraft of his wits, hath traiterous gifts.
Oh wicked wit,and gifts,that have the power
So to ſeduce? Won to this ſhamefull Luſt
The will of my moſt ſeeming vertuous Queene:
Oh Hamlet,what a falling off was there,
From me,whoſe love was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand,even with the Vow
I made to her in Marriage; and to decline
Vpon a Wretch,whoſe naturall gifts were poore
To thoſe of mine. But Vertue, as it never will be moved,
Though Lewdneſſe court it in a ſhape of heaven;
So Luſt,though to a radiant Angell link'd,
Will ſate it ſelfe in a Celeſtiall bed, and prey on Garbage.

But ſoft, me thinks I ſcent the Mornings Ayre:
Briefe let me be: Sleeping within mine Orchard,
My cuſtome alwayes in the afternoone;
Vpon my ſecure howre thy Vncle ſtole
With juyce of curſed Hebenon in a Violl,
And in the Porches of mine eares did poure
The leaperous Diſtilment; whoſe effect
Holds ſuch an enmity with bloud of Man,
That ſwift as Quick-ſilver it courſes through
The naturall Gates and Allies of the body;
And with a ſodaine vigour it doth poſſet
And curd, like Aygre droppings into Milke,
The thin and wholſome blood: ſo did it mine;
And a moſt inſtant Tetter bak'd about,
Moſt Lazar-like, with vile and loathſome cruſt,
All my ſmooth body.
Thus was I, ſleeping, by a Brothers hand,
Of Life, of Crowne, and Queene at once diſpatcht:
Cut off even in the bloſſomes of my Sinne,
Vnhouzzled, diſappointed, unnaneld,
No reckoning made, but ſent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head,
Oh, horrible, Oh horrible, moſt horrible:
If thou haſt nature in thee beare it not;
Let not the Royall Bed of Denmarke be
A Couch for Luxury and damned Inceſt,
But howſoever thou purſueſt this Act,
Taint not thy mind; nor let thy ſoule contrive
Againſt thy Mother ought; leave her to heaven,
And to thoſe Thornes that in her boſome lodge,
To pricke and ſting her. Fare thee well at once,
The Glow-worme ſhowes the Matine to be neere,
And gins to pale his uneffectuall Fire:
Adue, adue, Hamlet: remember me. Exit.

Ham. Oh all you hoſt of heaven! Oh Earth; what elſe?
And ſhall I couple hell? Oh fie: hold my heart;
And you my ſinnewes, grow not inſtant Old;
But beare me ſtiffely up: remember thee?
I, thou poore Ghoſt, while memory holds a ſeate
In this diſtracted Globe: Remember thee?
Yea, from the Table of my Memory,
Ile wipe away all triviall fond Records,
All ſawes of bookes, all formes, all preſſures paſt,
That youth and obſervation coppied there;
And thy Commandment all alone ſhall live
Within the booke and Volume of my braine,
Vnmixt with baſer matter; yes, yes, by heaven:
Oh moſt pernicious woman!
Oh Villaine, Villaine, ſmiling damned Villaine!
My Tables, my Tables: meet it is I ſet it downe,
That one may ſmile, and ſmile and be a Villaine;
At leaſt I'm ſure it may be ſo in Denmarke;
So Vnckle there you are: now to my word;
It is; Adue, Adue, Remember me: I have ſworn't.

Hor. & Mar. within. My Lord, my Lord.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus.

Mar. Lord Hamlet.

Hor. Heaven ſecure him.

Mar. So be it.

Hor. Illo, ho, ho, my Lord.

Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy; come bird, come.

Mar. How iſt't my Noble Lord?

Hor. What newes, my Lord?

Ham. Oh wonderfull!

Hor. Good my Lord tell it.

Ham. No you'll reveale it.

Hor. Not I, my Lord, by heaven.

Mar. Nor I, my Lord.

Ham. How ſay you then, would heart of man once (thinke it?
But you'l be ſecret?

Both. I, by heav'n, my Lord-

Ham. There's ne'er a villaine dwelling in all Denmark
But he's an arrant Knave.

Hor. There needs no Ghoſt my Lord, come from the Grave to tell us this.

Ham. Why right, you are i'th'right;
And ſo without more circumſtance at all,
I hold it fit that we ſhake hands, and part:
You, as your buſineſſe and deſires ſhall point you:
For every man has buſineſſe and deſire,
Such as it is: and for mine owne poore part,
Looke you, Ile goe pray.

Hor. Theſe are but wilde and hurling words, my Lord.

Ham. I'm ſorry they offend you heartily:
Yes faith, heartily.

Hor. There's no offence my Lord.

Ham. Yes, by Saint Patricke, but there is my Lord,
And much offence too, touching this Viſion here:
It is an honeſt Ghoſt, that let me tell you:
For your deſire to know what is betweene us,
O're-maſter't as you may. And now good friends,
As you are Friends, Schollers, and Souldiers,
Give me one poore requeſt.

Hor. What is't my Lord? we will.

Ham. Never make knowne what you have ſeene to (night.

Both. My Lord, we will not.

Ham. Nay, but ſwear't.

Hor. In faith my Lord, not I.

Mar. Nor I my Lord: in faith.

Ham. Vpon my Sword.

Mar. We have ſworne my Lord already.

Ham. Indeed, upon my ſword, indeed.

Gho. Sweare. Ghoſt cries under the Stage.

Ham. Ah ha boy, ſayeſt thou ſo. Art thou there truepenny? Come on, you heare this fellow in the ſelleridge. Conſent to ſweare.

Hor. Propoſe the oath my Lord.

Ham. Never to ſpeake of this that you have ſeene.
Sweare by my Sword.

Gho. Sweare.

Ham. Hic & vbique? Then wee'l ſhift for ground,
Come hither Gentlemen,
And lay your hands againe upon my ſword.
Never to ſpeake of this that you have heard:
Sweare by my Sword.

Ghoſt. Sweare.

Ham. Well ſaid old Mole, can'ſt worke i'th'ground ſo (faſt?
A worthy Pioner, once more remove good friend.

Hor. Oh day and night, but this is wondrous ſtrange.

Ham. And therefore as a ſtranger give it welcome.
There are more things in heaven and earth Horatio,
Than are dream't of in our Philoſophy. But come,
Here as before, never ſo helpe you mercy,
How ſtrange or odde ſo ere I beare my ſelfe;
(As I perchance hereafter ſhall thinke meet
To put an Anticke diſpoſition on:)
That you at ſuch time ſeeing me, never ſhall
With Armes encombred thus, or thus, head ſhake;
Or by pronouncing of ſome doubtfull phraſe;
As well, we know, or we could, and if we would,
Or if we liſt to ſpeake; or there be and if there might,
Or ſuch ambiguous giving out to note,

That you know ought of me; this not to doe:
So grace and mercy at your moſt need helpe you:
Sweare.
Ghoſt. Sweare.
Ham. Reſt, reſt perturbed Spirit: ſo Gentlemen,
With all my love commend me to you;
And what ſo poore a man as Hamlet is,
May doe t'expreſſe his love and friending to you,
God willing ſhall not lacke: let us goe in together,
And ſtill your fingers on your lippes I pray,
The time is out of joynt: Oh curſed ſpight,
That ever I was borne to ſet it right.
Nay, come, lets goe together. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Polonius and Reynoldo.

Polon. Give him his money, and thoſe notes Reynoldo.
Reynold. I will my Lord.
Polon. You ſhall doe marvels wiſely: good Reynoldo.
Before you viſite him you make inquiry
Of his behaviour.
Reynold. My Lord, I did intend it.
Polo. Marry, well ſaid:
Very well ſaid. Looke you ſir,
Enquire me firſt what Danskers are in Paris;
And how, and who; what meanes; and where they keepe:
What company, at what expence: and finding
By this encompaſſement and drift of queſtion,
That they doe know my ſonne: Come you more neere
Than your particular demaunds will touch it,
Take you as twere ſome diſtant knowledge of him,
And thus, I know his father and his friends,
And in part him. Doe you marke this Reynoldo?
Reynold. I, very well my Lord,
Polon. And in part him, but you may ſay not well;
But if't be he I meane, hees very wilde;
Addicted ſo and ſo; and there put on him
What forgeries you pleaſe: marry, none ſo ranke,
As may diſhonour him; take heed of that:
But Sir, ſuch wanton, wilde, and uſuall ſlips,
As are companions noted and moſt knowne
To youth and liberty.
Reynold. As gaming my Lord.
Polon. I, or drinking, fencing, ſwearing,
Quarrelling, Drabbing. You may goe ſo farre.
Rey. My Lord that would diſhonour him.
Polon. Faith no, as you may ſeaſon it in the charge;
You muſt not put another ſcandall on him,
That he is open to Incontinency;
Thats not my meaning; but breathe his faults ſo quaintly,
That they may ſeeme the taints of liberty;
The flaſh and out-breake of a fiery minde,
A ſavageneſſe in unreclaim'd blood of generall aſſault.
Reynold. But my good Lord.
Polon. Wherefore ſhould you doe this?
Reynol. I my Lord, I would know that.
Polon. Marry Sir, here's my drift,
And I beleeve it is a fetch of warrant:
You laying theſe ſlight ſulleyes on my Sonne,
As twere a thing a little ſoil'd i'th' working: (ſound,
Marke you your party in converſe; him you would
Having ever ſeene. In the prenominate crimes,
The youth you breath of guilty, be aſſur'd
He cloſes with you in this conſequence:
Good ſir, or ſo, or friend, or Gentleman.
According to the Phraſe and the Addition,
Of man and Countrey.
Reynol. Very good my Lord.
Polon. And then ſir does he this?
He does: what was I about to ſay?
I was about to ſay nothing: where did I leave?
Reynol. At cloſes in the conſequence:
At friend, or ſo, and Gentleman.
Reynol. At cloſes in the conſequence, I marry,
He cloſes with you thus. I know the Gentleman,
I ſaw him yeſterday, or tother day;
Or then, or then, with ſuch and ſuch, and as you ſay,
There was he gaming, there o'retooke in's Rouſe,
Their falling out at Tennis; or perchance,
I ſaw him enter ſuch a houſe of ſaile;
Videlicet, a Brothell, or ſo forth. See you now;
Your bait of falſhood, takes this Cape of truth;
And thus doe we of wiſedome and of reach
With Windleſſes, and with aſſayes of Byas,
By indirections finde directions out:
So by my former Lecture and advice
Shall you my ſonne; you have me, have you not?
Reynol. My Lord I have.
Polon. God buy you; fare you well.
Reynol. Good my Lord.
Polon. Obſerve his inclination in your ſelfe.
Reynol. I ſhall my Lord.
Polon. And let him ply his Muſicke.
Reynol. Well, my Lord. Exit.

Enter Ophelia.

Pol. Farewell:
How now Ophelia, whats the matter?
Ophe. Alas my Lord, I have been ſo affrighted.
Pol. With what, in the Name of Heaven?
Ophe. My Lord, as I was ſowing in my Chamber,
Lord Hamlet with his doublet all unbrac'd,
No Hat upon his head, his ſtockings foul'd,
Vngartter'd, and downe-gyved to his Ancle,
Pale as his ſhirt, his knees knocking each other,
And with a looke ſo pitteous in purport,
As if he had been looſed out of Hell,
To ſpeake of horrors: he comes before me.
Polon. Mad for thy Love?
Ophe. My Lord, I do not know: but truly I do feare it.
Polon. What ſaid he?
Ophe. He tooke me by the wriſt.
Then goes he to the length of all his Arme;
And with his other hand, thus o're his brow,
He fals to ſuch peruſall of my face,
As he would draw it. Long ſtaid he ſo,
At laſt, a little ſhaking of my arme,
And thrice his head thus waving up and downe,
He rais'd a ſigh, ſo hideous and profound,
That it did ſeeme to ſhatter all his bulke,
And end his being. That done, he lets goe,
And with his head over his ſhoulders turn'd,
He ſeem'd to find his way without his eyes,
For out adores he went without their helpe;
And to the laſt, bended their light on me.
Polon. Goe with me, I will goe ſeeke the King,
This is the very extaſie of Love,
Whoſe violent propertie foredoes it ſelfe,

And leads the will to deſperate Vndertakings,
As oft as any paſſion under heaven,
That does afflict our Natures. I am ſorry,
What have you given him any hard words of late?
Ophe. No my good Lord: but as you did command,
I did repell his Letters, and deny'd
His acceſſe to me.
Pol. That hath made him mad.
I am ſorry that with better ſpeed and judgement
I had not quoted him. I feare he did but trifle,
And meant to wracke thee: but beſhrew my jealouſie:
It ſeemes it is as proper to our Age,
To caſt beyond our ſelves in our opinions,
As it is common for the yonger ſort
To lacke diſcretion. Come, goe we to the King, (move
This muſt be knowne, which being kept cloſe might
More griefe to hide, than hate to utter love. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter King, Queene, Roſincroſſe, and Guildenſtare Cumaliys.
King. Welcome deare Roſincros and Guildenſtare.
Moreover, that we much did long to ſee you,
The need we have to uſe you, did provoke
Our haſty ſending. Something have you heard
Of Hamlets transformation: ſo I call it,
Since not th'exterior, nor the inward man
Reſembles that it was. What it ſhould be
More than his fathers death, that thus hath put him
So much from th'underſtanding of himſelfe,
I cannot deeme of. I intreat you both,
That being of ſo yong dayes brought up with him:
And ſince ſo Neighbour'd to his youth, and humour,
That you vouchſafe your reſt here in our Court
Some little time: ſo by your Companies
To draw him on to pleaſures, and to gather
So much as from Occaſions you may gleane,
That open'd lies within our remedy,
Qu. Good Gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you,
And ſure I am, two men there are not living,
To whom he more adheres. If it will pleaſe you
To ſhew us ſo much gentry and good will,
As to expend your time with us a while,
For the ſupply and profit of our hope,
Your Viſitation ſhall receive ſuch thankes,
As fits a Kings remembrance.
Roſin. Both your Maieſties
Might by the Soveraigne power you have of us,
Put your dread pleaſures, more into command
Than to Entreaty.
Guil. We both obey,
And here give up our ſelves, in the full bent,
To lay our Services freely at your feet,
To be commanded.
Kin. Thankes Roſincros, and gentle Guildenſtare.
Qu. Thankes Guildenſtare and gentle Roſincros,
And I beſeech you inſtantly to viſit
My too-much changed ſonne.
Goe ſome of ye,
And bring the Gentlemen where Hamlet is.
Guil. Heavens make our preſence and our practiſes,
Pleaſant and helpefull to him. Exeunt.
Queen. Amen.
Enter Polonius.
Pol. The Ambaſſadors from Norway, my good Lord,
Are joyfully return'd.
King. Thou ſtill haſt bin the father of good Newes.
Pol. Have I, my Lord? Aſſure you, my good Liege,
I hold my duty, as I hold my Soule,
Both to my God, one to my gracious King:
And I doe thinke, or elſe this braine of mine
Hunts not the traile of Policy, ſo ſure
As I have us'd to doe, that I have found
The very cauſe of Hamlets Lunacy.
Kin. Oh ſpeake of that, that I doe long to heare.
Pol. Give firſt admittance to th'Ambaſſadors,
My Newes ſhall be the Newes to that great Feaſt.
King. Thy ſelfe doe grace to them, and bring them in.
He tels me my ſweet Queene, that he hath found
The head and ſourſe of all your ſonnes diſtemper.
Qu. I doubt it is no other, but the maine,
His fathers death, and our ore-haſty Marriage.
Enter Polonius, Voltimand, and Cornelius.
King. Well, we ſhall ſift him. Welcome good Friends:
Say Voltimand, what from our Brother Norway?
Volt. Moſt faire returne of Greetings, and Deſires.
Vpon our firſt, he ſent out to ſuppreſſe
His Nephewes Levies, which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainſt the Polak:
But better look'd into, he truly found
It was againſt your Highneſſe, whereat grieved,
That ſo his Sickneſſe, Age, and Impotence
Was falſely borne in hand, ſends out Arreſts
On Fortinbras, which he (in briefe) obeyes,
Receives rebuke from Norway: and in fine,
Makes Vow before his Vncle, never more
To give th'aſſay of Armes againſt your Majeſty.
Whereon old Norway, overcome with joy,
Gives him three thouſand Crownes in Annuall Fee,
And his Commiſſion to imploy thoſe Souldiers
So levied as before, againſt the Polak:
With an intreaty herein further ſhewne,
That it might pleaſe you to give quiet paſſe
Through your Dominions for his enterprize,
On ſuch regards of ſafety and allowance,
As therein are ſet downe.
King. It likes us well:
And at our more conſider'd time wee'l read,
Anſwer, and thinke upon this Buſineſſe.
Meane time we thanke you, for your well-look't labour.
Goe to your reſt, at night wee'l Feaſt together.
Moſt welcome home. Exit Ambaſ.
Pol. This buſineſſe is very well ended.
My Liege and Madrm, to expoſtulate
What Majeſtie ſhould be, what Duty is,
Why day is day; night, night; and time is time,
Were nothing but to waſte Night, Day, and Time.
Therefore, ſince Brevitie is the Soule of Wit,
And tediouſneſſe, the limbes and outward flouriſhes,
I will be briefe. Your Noble Sonne is mad:
Mad call I it; for to define true Madneſſe,
What is't, but to be nothing elſe but mad.
But let that goe.
Qu. More matter, with leſſe Art.
Pol. Madam, I ſweare I uſe no Art at all:
That he is mad 'tis true: T is true, tis pitty,
And pitty it is true: A fooliſh figure,
But farewell it: for I will uſe no Art.

Mad let us grant him then : and now remaines
That we find out the the cauſe of this effect,
Or rather ſay, the cauſe of this defect ;
For this effect defective, comes by cauſe,
Thus it remaines, and the remainder thus. Perpend.
I have a daughter : have, whilſt ſhe is mine,
Who in her Duty and Obedience, marke,
Hath giveu me this : now gather, and ſurmiſe.

The Letter.

To the Celeſtiall, and my Soules Idoll, the moſt beautified Ophelia.

Thats an ill Phraſe, a vilde Phraſe, beautified is a vilde Phraſe : but you ſhall heare theſe in her excellent white boſome, theſe.

Quee. Came this from Hamlet to her.

Pol. Good Madam ſtay awhile, I will be faithfull.

Doubt thou, the Starres are fire,
Doubt, that the Sunne doth move :
Doubt Truth to be a Lier,
But never Doubt, I love.

O deere Ophelia, I am ill at theſe Number : I have not Art to reckon my grones ; but that I love thee beſt, oh moſt Beſt beleeve it. Adieu.

Thine evermore moſt deere Lady, whilſt this Machine is to him, Hamlet.

This in Obedience hath my daughter ſhew'd me :
And more above hath his ſoliciting,
As they fell out by Time, by meanes, and place,
All given to mine eare,

King. But how hath ſhe receiv'd his Love ?

Pol. What doe you thinke of me ?

King. As of a man, faithfull and honorable.

Pol. I would faine prove ſo. But what might you think?
When I had ſeene this hot love on the wing,
As I perceived it, I muſt tell you that
Before my daughter told me, what might you
Or my deere Majeſty you Queene heere, thinke,
If I had playd the Deske or Table-booke,
Or given my heart a winking, mute and dumbe,
Or look'd upon this Love, with idle ſight,
What might you thinke ? No, I went round to worke,
And my yong Miſtris thus I did beſpeake ;
Lord Hamlet is a Prince out of thy Sphere,
This muſt not be : and then, I precepts gave her,
That ſhe ſhould locke her ſelfe from his Reſort,
Admit no Meſſengers, receive no Tokens :
Which done, ſhe tooke the fruites of my Advice,
And he repulſed , a ſhort Tale to make,
Fell into a Sadneſſe, then into a Faſt,
Thence to a Watch, thence into a Weakeneſſe,
Thence to a Lightneſſe, and by this declenſion
Iuto the Madneſſe whereon now he raves,
And all we waile for.

King. Doe you thinke tis this ?

Que. It may be very likely.

Pol. Hath there bene ſuch a time, Ide faine know that,
That I have poſitively ſaid, tis ſo,
When it prov'd otherwiſe ?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this , if this be otherwiſe,
If Circumſtances leade me, I will find
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeed
Within the Center.

King. How may we try it further ?

Pol. You know ſometimes
He walkes foure houres together, heere
In the Lobby.

Quee. So he has indeed.

Pol. At ſuch a time Ile loose my Daughter to him,
Be you and I behinde an Arrs then,
Marke the encounter ; If he love her not,
And be not from his reaſon falne thereon ;
Let me be no Aſſiſtant for a State,
And keepe a Farme and Carters,

King. We will try it.

Enter Hamlet reading on a Booke.

Que. But looke where ſadly the poore wretch
Comes reading.

Pol. Away I doe beſeech you, both away,
Ile boord him preſently. Exit King and Queene.
Oh give me leave. How does my good Lord Hamlet.

Ham. Well, god-a-mercy.

Pol. Doe you know me, my Lord ?

Ham. Excellent, excellent well : y'are a Fiſhmonger.

Pol. Not I my Lord.

Ham. Then I would you were ſo honeſt a man.

Pol. Honeſt, my Lord ?

Ham. I ſir, to be honeſt as this world goes, is to be one man pick'd out of two thouſand.

Pol. Thats very true, my Lord.

Ham. For if the Sun breed Magots in a dead dogge, being a good kiſſing Carrion——
Have you a daughter ?

Pol. I have my Lord.

Ham. Let her not walke i'th Sunne : Conception is a bleſſing, but not as your daughter may conceive. Friend looke too't.

Pol. How ſay you by that ? Still harping on my daughter : yet he knew me not at firſt ; he ſaid I was a Fiſhmonger : he is farre gone, farre gone : and truly in my youth, I ſuffred much extreamity for love : very neere this. Ile ſpeake to him againe. What doe you read my Lord ?

Ham. Words, words, words.

Pol. What is the matter, my Lord ?

Ham. Betweene whom ?

Pol. I meane the matter you meane, my Lord.

Ham. Slanders ſir : for the Satyricall ſlave ſayes here, that old men have gray Beards ; that their faces are wrinkled ; their eyes purging thicke Amber, or Plum-Tree Gumme : and that they have a plentifull locke of Wit, together with weake hammes. All which Sir, though I moſt powerfully, and potently beleeve ; yet I hold it not Honeſty to have it thus ſet downe : For you your ſelfe Sir, ſhould be old as I am, if like a Crab you could goe backward.

Pol. Though this be madneſſe.
Yet there is Method in't : will you walke
Out of the ayre my Lord ?

Ham. Into my Grave ?

Pol. Indeed that is out oth'Ayre :
How pregnant (ſometimes) his Replies are ?
A happineſſe,
That often Madneſſe hits on,
Which Reaſon and Sanity could not
So proſperouſly be deliver'd of.
I will leave him,
And ſodainely contrive the meanes of meeting
Betweene him, and my daughter.
My honorable Lord, I will moſt humbly
Take my leave of you.

Ham. You cannot Sir take from me any thing, that I will more willingly part withall, except my life, my life.

Polon. Fare you well my Lord.

Ham. Theſe tedious old fooles.

Polon. You goe to ſeeke my Lord Hamlet; there he is.

Enter Roſincros and Guildenſtar.

Roſin. God ſave you Sir.

Guild. Mine honour'd Lord?

Roſin. My moſt deare Lord?

Ham. My excellent good friends? How do'ſt thou Guildenſtar? Oh, Roſincros, good Lads: How doe yee both?

Roſin. As the indifferent Children of the earth.

Guild. Happy, in that we are not over-happy: on Fortunes Cap, we are not the very Button.

Ham. Nor the Soales of her Shooe?

Roſin. Neither my Lord.

Ham. Then you live about her waſte, or in the middle of her favour?

Guild. Faith, her privates, we.

Ham. In the ſecret parts of Fortune? Oh, moſt true: ſhe is a Strumpet. Whats the newes.

Roſin. None my Lord; but that the Worlds growne honeſt.

Ham. Then is Doomeſday neere: But your newes is not true. Let me queſtion more in particular: what have you my good friends, deſerved at the hands of fortune, that ſhe ſends you to Priſon hither?

Guild. Priſon, my Lord?

Ham. Denmark's a Priſon.

Roſin. Then is the World one.

Ham. A goodly one, in which there are many Confines, Wards, and Dungeons; Denmarke being one o'th' worſt.

Roſin. We thinke not ſo my Lord.

Ham. Why then tis none to you; for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it ſo: to me it is a priſon.

Roſin. Why then your Ambition makes it one: tis too narrow for your minde.

Ham. O God, I could be bounded in a nutſhell, and count my ſelfe a King of infinite ſpace; were it not that I have bad dreames.

Guild. Which dreames indeed are Ambition: for the very ſubſtance of the Ambitious, is meerely the ſhadow of a Dreame.

Ham. A dreame it ſelfe is but a ſhadow,

Roſin. Truely, and I hold Ambition of ſo ayry and light a quality, that it is but a ſhadowes ſhadow.

Ham. Then are our Beggers bodies; and our Monarchs and out-ſtretcht Heroes the Beggers Shadowes: ſhall we to th'Court: for, by my fey I cannot reaſon?

Both. We'll wait upon you.

Ham. No ſuch matter. I will not ſort you with the reſt of my ſervants: for to ſpeake to you like an honeſt man: I am moſt dreadfully attended; but in the beaten way of friendſhip. What make you at Elſinooer?

Roſin. To viſit you my Lord, no other occaſion.

Ham. Begger that I am, I am even poore in thankes; but I thanke you: and ſure deare friends my thankes are too deare a halfepeny; were you not ſent for? Is it your owne inclining? Is it a free-viſitation? Come, deale juſtly with me: come, come; nay ſpeake.

Guild. What ſhould we ſay my Lord?

Ham. Why any thing. But to the purpoſe; you were ſent for; and there is a kind confeſſion in your lookes; which your modeſties have not craft enough to colour, I know the good King and Queene have ſent for you.

Roſin. To what end my Lord?

Ham. That you muſt teach me: but let me conjure you by the rights of our fellowſhip, by the conſonancy of our youth, by the Obligation of our ever-preſerved love, and by what more deare, a better propoſer could charge you withall; be even and direct with me, whether you were ſent for or no.

Roſin. What ſay you?

Ham. Nay then I have an eye of you: if you love me hold not off.

Guild. My Lord, we were ſent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; ſo ſhall my anticipation prevent your diſcovery of your ſecrecy to the King and Queene: moult no feather, I have of late, but wherefore I know not, loſt all my mirth, forgone all cuſtome of exerciſe; and indeed, it goes ſo heavenly with my diſpoſition; that this goodly frame the earth,, ſeemes to me a ſterrill Promontory; this moſt excellent Canopy the Ayre looke you, this brave ore-hanging, this Majeſticall Roofe, fretted with golden fire: why, it appeared no other thing to me, then a foule and peſtilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of worke is a man! How Noble in Reaſon? how infinite in faculty? in forme and moving how expreſſe and admirable? in Action, how like an Angell? in apprehenſion, how like a god? the beauty of the world, the Parragon of Animals; and yet to me, what is this Quinteſſence of Duſt? Man delights not mee; no, nor Woman neither; though by your ſmiling you ſee me to ſay ſo.

Roſin. My Lord, there was no ſuch ſtuffe in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh, when I ſaid, Man delights not me?

Roſin. To thinke, my Lord, if you delight not in Man, what Lenton entertainment the Players ſhall receive from you: we coated them on the way, and hither are they comming to offer you Service.

Ham. He that playes the King ſhall be welcome; his Majeſty ſhall have Tribute of me: the adventurous Knight ſhall uſe his Foyle and Target: The Lover ſhall not ſigh gratis, the humorous man ſhall end his part in peace: the Clowne ſhall make thoſe laugh whoſe lungs are tickled ath' ſere: and the Lady ſhall ſay her mind freely; or the blanke Verſe ſhall halt for't: what Players are they?

Roſin. Even thoſe you were wont to take delight in the Tragedians of the City.

Ham. How chances it they travaile? their reſidence both in reputation and profit was better both wayes.

Roſin. I thinke their Inhibition comes by the meanes of the late innovation?

Ham. Doe they hold the ſame eſtimation they did when I was in the City? Are they ſo follow'd?

Roſin. No indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? doe they grow ruſty?

Roſin. Nay, their indeavour keepes in the wonted pace; But there is Sir an ayry of Children, little Yaſes, that cry out on the top of queſtion; and are moſt tyrannically clapt fort: theſe are now the faſhion, and ſo be ratle the common Stages (ſo they call them) that many wearing Rapiers, are affraid of Gooſe-quils, and dare ſcarſe come thither.

Ham. What are they Children? Who maintaines em? How are they eſcoted? Will they purſue the Quality no longer then they can ſing? Will they not ſay afterwards if they ſhould grow themſelves to common Players (as it is like moſt if their meanes are not better) their Writers doe them wrong, to make them exclaim againſt their owne Succeſſion.

Roſin. Faith there has been much to doe on both ſides: and the Nation holds it no ſinne, to tarre them to Controverſie. There was for a while, no money bid for argument, unleſſe the Poet and the Player went to Cuffes in the Queſtion.

Ham. Iſt poſſible?

Guild. Oh there has beene much throwing about of braines.

Ham. Doe the Boyes carry it away?

Roſin. I that they do my Lord, Hercules & his load too

Ham. It is not ſtrange for mine Vnckle is King of Denmarke, and thoſe that would make mowes at him while my father lived; give twenty, forty, an hundred Ducates a peece, for his picture in Little. There is ſomething in this more then Naturall, if Philoſophy could find it out.

Flouriſh for the Players.

Guild. There are the Players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcome to Elſinooer: your hands, come: The appurtenance of Welcome, is Faſhion and Ceremony. Let me comply with you in the Garbe, leſt my extent to the Players (which I tell you muſt ſhew fairely outward) ſhould more appeare like entertainment then yours. You are welcome: but my Vnckle Father, and Aunt Mother are deceiv'd.

Guild. In what my deere Lord?

Ham. I am but mad North, North-Weſt: when the Winde is Southerly, I know a Hawke from a Handſaw.

Enter Polonius.

Polo. Well be with you Gentlemen.

Ham. Hearke you Guildenſtar, and you too: at each eare a hearer: that great Baby you ſee there, is not yet out of his ſwathing clouts.

Roſin, Happily hes the ſecond time come to them: for they ſay, an old man is twice a child.

Ham, I will Propheſie, He comes to tell me of the Players. Marke it, you ſay right Sir: for a Monday morning twas ſo indeed.

Pol. My Lord, I have Newes to tell you.

Ham. My Lord, I have Newes to tell you,
When Roſcius an Actor in Rome———

Pol. The Actors are come hither my Lord.

Ham. Buzze, buzze.

Pol. Vpon mine honor.

Ham. Then can each Actor on his Aſſe———

Polo. The beſt Actors in the world, either for Tragedy, Comedy, hiſtory, Paſtorall: Paſtoricall-Comicall-Hiſtoricall-Paſtorall: Tragicall-Hiſtoricall; Tragicall-Comicall-Hiſtoricall-Paſtorall: Scæne indivible, or Poem unlimited. Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light, for the law of Writ, and the Liberty. Theſe are the onely men.

Ham. O Iephta Iudge of Iſrael, what a Treaſure hadſt thou?

Pol. What a Treaſure had he, my Lord?

Ham. Why one faire Daughter, and no more.
The which he loved paſſing well.

Pol. Still on my daughter.

Ham. Am I not ith'right old Iephta?

Pol. If you call me Iephta my Lord, I have a daughter that I love paſſing well.

Ham. Nay that followes not.

Polo. What followes then, my Lord?

Ham. Why, as by lot, God wot? and then you know, It came to paſſe, as moſt like it was: the firſt rowe of the Pans Chanſon will ſhew you more. For looke where my Abridgements come.

Enter foure or five Players.

Y'are welcome Maſters, welcome all. I am glad to ſee thee well; Welcome good friends. O my old friend? Thy face is valiant ſince I ſaw thee laſt: Comſt thou to beard me in Denmarke? What, my yong Lady and Miſtris? Berlady your Ladiſhip is neerer heaven then when I ſaw you laſt, by the altitude of a Choppine. Pray God your voyce like a peece of uncurrant gold be not crak'd within the ring. Maſters, you are all welcome: we'll e'ne to't like French Faulconers, flye at any thing we ſee: we'll have a ſpeech ſtraight. Come give us a taſt of your quality: come, a paſſionate ſpeech.

1 Play. What ſpeech, my Lord?

Ham. I heard thee ſpeake me a ſpeech once, but it was never Acted: or if it was, not above once, for the Play I remember pleas'd not the Million, twas Cantary to the Generall: but it was (as I received it, and others, whoſe judgement in ſuch matters, cryed in the top of mine) an excellent Play; well digeſted in the Scænes, ſet downe with as much modeſty, as cunning. I remember one ſaid, there was no Sallets in the lines, to make the matter ſavoury; nor no matter in the phraſe, that might indite the Author of affectation, but cal'd it an honeſt method. One chiefe ſpeech in it, I chiefely lov'd, twas Æneas Tale to Dido, and thereabout of it eſpecially, where he ſpeakes of Priams ſlaughter. If it live in your memory, begin at this Line, let me ſee, let me ſee: The rugged Pyrrhus like th'Hyrcanian Beaſt. It is not ſo: it begins with Pyrrhus
The rugged Pyrrhus, he whoſe Sable Armes
Blacke as he purpoſe, did the night reſemble
When his lay couched in the Ominous Horſe,
Hath now this dread and blacke Complexion ſmear'd
With Heraldry more diſmall: head to foote
Now is he to take Geulles, horridly Trick'd
With blood of Fathers, Mothers, Daughters, Sonnes,
Bak'd and impaſted with the parching ſtreets,
That lend a tyrannous, and damned light
To their vilde Murthers, roaſted in wrath and fire,
And thus o're-ſized with coagulate gore,
With eyes like Carbuncles, the helliſh Pyrrhus
Old Grandſire Priam ſeekes.

Pol. Fore God, my Lord, well ſpoken, with good accent, and good diſcretion.

1 Play. Anon he findes him,
Striking too ſhort at Greekes. His anticke Sword,
Rebellious to his Arme, lyes where it falles
Repugnant to command: unequall match,
Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in Rage ſtrikes wide:
But with the whiffe and wind of his fell Sword,
Th'unnerved father fals. Then ſenſeleſſe Illium,
Seeming to feele his blow. with flaming top
Stoopes to his Bace, and with a hideous craſh
Takes Priſoner Pyrrhus eare. For loe, his Sword
Which was declining on the Milky head
Of Reverend Priam, ſeem'd ith'Ayre to ſticke:

So as a painted Tirant Pyrrhus ſtood,
And lik'd a Newtrall to his will and matter, did nothing.
But as we often ſee againſt ſome ſtorme,
A ſilence in the heavens, the Racke ſtand ſtill,
The bold windes ſpeechleſſe, and the Orbe below
As huſh as death: Anon the dreadfull Thunder
Doth rend the Region. So after Pyrrhus pauſe,
A rowſed Vengeance ſets him new a worke,
And never did the Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his Armours, forg'd for proofe Eterne,
With leſſe remorſe then Pyrrhus bleeding ſword
Now falles on Priam.
Out, out, thou Strumpet-Fortune, all you gods,
In generall Synod take away her power:
Breake all the Spokes and Fallies from her wheele,
And boule the round Nave downe the hill of heaven,
As low as to the fiends.

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It ſhall to'th Barbars, with your beard. Prethee ſay on: Hes for a Iigge, or a tale of Baudry, or hee ſleepes. Say on; come to Hecuba.

1 Play. But who, O who, had ſeen the Mobled Queene.

Ham. The Mobled Queene?

Pol. Thats good: Mobled Queene is good.

1 Play. Run bare-foot up and downe,
Threatning the flame
With Biſſon Rheume: A clout about that head,
Where late the Diadem ſtood, and for a Robe
About her lanke and all ore-teamed Loynes,
A blanket in th'Alarum of feare caught up.
Who this had ſeene, with tongue in Venome ſteep'd,
Gainſt fortunes State, would Treaſon have pronounc'd?
But if the gods themſelves did ſee her then,
When ſhe ſaw Pyrrhus make malicious ſport
In mincing with his Sword her husbands limbes,
The inſtant Burſt of Clamour that ſhe made
(Vnleſſe things mortall move them not at all)
Would have made milche the Burning eyes of heaven,
And paſſion in the Gods.

Pol. Looke where he has not turn'd his colour, and has teares ins eyes. Pray you no more.

Ham. Tis well, Ile have thee ſpeake out the reſt, ſoone. Good my Lord, will you ſee the Players well beſtow'd. Doe ye heare, let them be well us'd: for they are the Abſtracts and briefe Chronicles of the time. After your death, you were better have a bad Epitaph, then their ill report while you lived.

Pol. My Lord, I will uſe them according to their deſart.

Ham. Godsbodykins man, better. Vſe every man after his deſart, and who ſhould ſcape whipping: uſe them after your owne Honor and dignity. The leſſe they deſerve, the more merit is in your bounty. Take them in.

Pol. Come ſirs. Exit Polonius.

Ham. Follow him friends: we'll heare a play to morrow. Doſt thou heare me old friend, can you play the murther of Gonzago?

Play. I my Lord.

Ham. We'll ha't to morrow night. You could for a need ſtudy a ſpeech of ſome doſen or ſixteen lines, which I would ſet downe, and inſert int? Could ye not?

Play. I my Lord.

Ham. Very well. Follow that Lord, and looke you mocke him not. My good friends, Ile leave you till night you are welcome to Elſonower?

Roſin. Good my Lord. Exeunt.

Manet Hamlet.

Ham. I ſo, god buy'ye: Now I am alone.
Oh what a Rogue and Peſant ſlave am I?
Is it not monſtrous that this Player heere,
But in a Fixion, in a dreame of Paſſion,
Could force his ſoule ſo to his whole conceit,
That from her working, all his uiſage warm'd;
Teares in his eyes, diſtraction ins Aſpect,
A broken voyce, and his whole function ſuiting
With formes, to his conceit? And all for nothing?
For Hecuba?
Whats Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he ſhould weepe for her? What would he doe,
Had he the Motive and the Cue for paſſion
That I have? He would drowne the Stage with teares,
And cleave the generall eare with horrid ſpeech:
Make mad the guilty, and apale the free.
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed,
The very faculty of eyes and Eares. Yet I,
A dull and muddy-metled Raſcall, peake
Like Iohn a-deames, unpregnant of my cauſe,
And can ſay nothing: No, not for a King,
Vpon whoſe property, and moſt deere life,
A damn'd defeate was made. Am I a Coward?
Who calles me Villaine? breakes my pate a-croſſe?
Pluckes off my Beard, and blowes it in my face?
Tweakes me byth'Noſe? gives me the Lye ith'Throate,
As deepe as to the Lungs? Who does me this?
Ha? Why I ſhould take it: for it cannot be,
But I am Pigeon-Liver'd, and lacke Gall
To make Oppreſſion bitter, or ere this,
I ſhould have fatted all the Region Kites
With this Slaves Offall, bloudy: a Bawdy villaine,
Remorſleſſe, Treacherous, Letcherous, kindleſſe villaine!
Oh Vengeance!
Who? What an Aſſe am I? I ſure, this is moſt brave,
That I, the Sonne of the Deere murthered,
Prompted to my Revenge by heaven, and hell,
Muſt (like a Whore) unpacke my heart with words,
And fall a Curſing like a very Drab,
A Scullion? Fye upon't. Foh. About my Braine.
I have heard, that guilty Creatures ſitting at a Play,
Have by the very cunning of the Scæne,
Beene ſtrooke ſo to the ſoule, that preſently
They have proclaim'd their Malefactions.
For Murther, though it have no tongue, will ſpeake
With moſt myraculous Organ. Ile have theſe Players,
Play ſomething like the murder of my father,
Before mine Vnkle. Ile obſerve his lookes
Ile rent him to the quicke: if he but blench
I know my courſe. The Spirit that I have ſeene
May be the divell, and the divell hath power
T'aſſume a pleaſing ſhape, yea and perhaps
Out of my Weakneſſe, and my Melancholly,
As he is very potent with ſuch Spirits,
Abuſes me to damne me. Ile have grounds
More Relative then this: The Plays the thing,
Wherein Ile catch the Conſcience of the King. Exit.

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Roſincros, Guildenſtar, and Lords.

King. And can you by no drift of circumſtance
Get from him why he puts on this Confuſion
Grating ſo harſhly all his dayes of quiet

With turbulent and dangerous Lunacy.
Roſin. He does confeſſe he feeles himſelfe diſtracted,
But from what cauſe he will by no meanes ſpeake.
Guil. Nor doe we find him forward to be ſounded,
But with a crafty Madneſſe keepes aloofe:
When we would bring him on to ſome Confeſſion
Of his true ſtate,
Quee. Did he receive you well?
Roſin. Moſt like a Gentleman.
Guild. But with much forcing of his diſpoſition.
Roſin. Niggard of queſtion, but of our demands
Moſt free in his reply.
Quee. Did you aſſay him to any paſtime?
Roſin. Madam, it ſo fell out, that certaine Players'
We ore-wrought on the way: of theſe we told him,
And there did ſeeme in him a kind of joy
To heare of it: They are about the Court,
And (as I thinke) they have already order
This night to play before him.
Pol. Tis moſt true:
And he beſeech'd me to intreate your Majeſties
To heare, and ſee the matter.
King. With all my heart, and it doth much content me
To heare him ſo inclin'd. Good Gentlemen,
Give him a further edge, and drive his purpoſe on
To theſe delights.
Roſin. We ſhall my Lord. Exeunt.
King. Sweet Gertrude leave us too;
For we have cloſely ſent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as twere by accident, may there
Affront Ophelia. Her father, and my ſelfe (lawfull eſpials)
Will ſo beſtow our ſelves, that ſeeing unſeene
We may of their encounter frankely judge,
And gather by him, as he is behaved,
Ift be th'affliction of his love, or no.
That thus he ſuffers for.
Quee. I ſhall obey you,
And for your part Ophelia. I doe wiſh
That your good beauties be the happy cauſe
Of Hamlets wildneſſe: ſo ſhall I hope your Vertues
Will bring him to his wonted way againe,
To both your honours.
Ophe. Madam, I wiſh it may.
Pol. Ophelia, walke you heere. Gracious ſo pleaſe ye
We will beſtow our ſelves: Reade on this booke,
That ſhew of ſuch an exerciſe may colour
Your lonelineſſe. We are oft too blame in this
Tis too much prov'd, that with Devotions viſage,
And pious Action, we doe ſurge ore
The divell himſelfe.
King. Oh tis true:
How ſmart a laſh that ſpeech doth give my Conſcience?
The Harlots Cheeke beautied with plaiſtring Art
Is not more ugly to the thing that helpes it,
Then is my deede, to my moſt painted word,
Oh heavy burthen!
Pol. I heare him comming, lets withdraw my Lord.
Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the Queſtion:
Whether tis Nobler in the mind to ſuffer
The Slings and Arrowes of outragious Fortune,
Or to take Armes againſt a Sea of troubles,
And by oppoſing end them: to dye, to ſleepe
No more: and by a ſleepe, to ſay we end
The heart-ake, and the thouſand naturall ſhockes
That fleſh is heire to? Tis a conſummation
Devoutly to be wiſh'd. To dye to ſleepe,
To ſleepe, perchance to Dreame; I there's the rub,
For in that ſleepe of death, what dreames may come,
When he have ſhuffel'd off this mortall coile,
Muſt give us pawſe. Theres the reſpect
That makes Calamity of ſo long life:
For who would beare the Whips and Scornes of time,
The Oppreſſors wrong, the poore mans Contumely,
The pangs of diſpriz'd Love, the Lawes delay,
The inſolence of Office, and the Spurnes
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himſelfe might his Quietus make
With a bare Bodkin? Who would theſe Fardles beare
To grunt and ſweat under a weary life,
But that the dread of ſomething after death,
The undiſcovered Country, from whoſe Borne
No Traveller returnes, Puzels the will,
And makes us rather beare thoſe illes we have,
Then flye to others that we know not of.
Thus Conſcience does make Cowards of us all,
And thus the Native hew of Reſolution
Is ſicklied ore, with the pale caſt of thought,
And enterprizes of great pith and moment,
With this regard their Currants turne away,
And looſe the name of Action. Soft you now,
The faire Ophelia? Nimph, in thy Horizons
Be all my ſinnes remembred.
Ope. Good my Lord,
How does your honor for this many a day?
Ham. I humbly thanke you: well, well, well.
Ophe. My Lord, I have Remembrances of yours,
That I have longed long to redeliver.
I pray you now, receive them.
Ham. No, no, I never gave you ought.
Ophe. My honor'd Lord, I know right well you did,
And with them words of ſo ſweet breath compos'd,
As made the things more rich, then perfume left:
Take theſe againe, for to the Noble mind
Rich gifts wax poore, when givers prove unkind.
There my Lord.
Ham. Ha, ha: Are you honeſt?
Ophe. My Lord.
Ham. Are you faire?
Ophe. What meanes you Lordſhip?

Ham. That if you be honeſt and faire, your Honeſty ſhould admit no diſcourſe to your Beauty.

Ophe. Could beauty my Lord, have better Comerce then your honeſty?

Ham. I truely: for the power of beauty, will ſooner transforme honeſty from what it is, to a Bawd, then the force of honeſty can tranſlate Beauty into his likeneſſe, This was ſometime a Paradox, but now the time gives it proofe. I did love you once.

Ophe. Indeed my Lord, you made me beleeve ſo.

Ham. You ſhould not have beleeved me. For vertue cannot ſo inocculate our old ſtocke, but we ſhall relliſh of it. I loved you not.

Ophe. I was the more deceived.

Ham. Get thee to a Nunnery. Why wouldſt thou be a breeder of Sinners? I am my ſelfe indifferent honeſt, but yet I could accuſe me of ſuch things, that it were better my Mother had not borne me. I am very prowd, revengefull. Ambitious, with more offences at my becke, then I have thoughts to put them in imagination, to give them ſhape, or time to acte them in. What ſhould ſuch Fellowes as I doe crawling betweene heaven and Earth. We are arrant Knaves all, beleeve none of us. Goe thy wayes to a Nunnery. Wheres your father?

Ophe. At home, my Lord.

Ham. Let the doores be ſhut upon him, that he may play the Foole no way, but ins owne houſe. Farewell.

Ophe. O helpe him, you ſweet heavens.

Ham. If thou doeſt Marry, Ile give thee this Plague for thy Dowry. Be thou as chaſte as Ice, as pure as Snow, thou ſhalt not eſcape Calumny. Get thee to a Nunnery. Goe, farewell. Or if thou wilt needs marry, marry a foole: for Wiſe men know well enough, what monſters you make of them. To a Nunnery goe, and quickly too. Farewell.

Ophe. O heavenly Powers reſtore him.

Ham. I have heard of your pratling too well enough. God has given you one pace, and you make your ſelfe another: you gidge, you amble, and you liſpe, and nickname Gods creatures, and make your Wantonneſſe, your ignorance. Goe, ile no more on't, it hath made me mad. I ſay, we will have no more Marriages. Thoſe that are married already, all but one ſhall, the reſt ſhall keepe as they are, To a Nunnery, goe. Exit Hamlet.

Ophe. O what a Noble minde is heere ore-throwne?
The Courtiers, Soldiers, Schollers? Eye, tongue, ſword,
Th'expectanſie and Roſe of the faire State,
The glaſſe of faſhion, and the mould of forme,
Th'obſerv'd of all Obſervers, quite, quite downe.
Have I of Ladies moſt deject and wretched,
That ſuck'd the Hony of his Muſicke Vowes:
Now ſee that Noble, and moſt Soveraigne Reaſon,
Like ſweet bels iangled out of tune, and harſh,
That unmatch'd fortune and feature of blowne youth,
Blaſted with extaſie. Oh woe is me,
T'have ſeene what I have ſeene: ſee what I ſee.

Enter King, and Polonius.

King. Love? his affections doe not that way tend,
Nor what he ſpake, though it lack'd forme a little,
Was not like Madneſſe. Theres ſomething in his ſoule,
Ore which his Melancholly ſits on brood,
And I doe doubt the hatch, and the diſcloſe
Will be ſome danger, which to prevent
I have in quicke determination
Thus ſet it downe. He ſhall with ſpeed to England
For the demand of our neglected Tribute:
Haply the Seas and Countries different
With variable Objects, ſhall expell
This ſomething ſetled matter in his heart:
Whereon his braines ſtill beating, puts him thus
From faſhion of himſelfe. What thinke you on't?

Pol. It ſhall doe well. But yet doe I beleeve
The Origin and Commencement of this greefe
Sprung from neglected love. How now Ophelia?
You neede not tell us, what Lord Hamlet ſaid,
We heard it all. My Lord, doe as you pleaſe,
But if you hold it fit after the Play,
Let his Queene Mother all alone intreat him
To ſhew his Griefes: let her be round with him,
And Ile be plac'd ſo, pleaſe you in the eare
Of all their conference. If ſhe find him not,
To England ſend him: Or confine him where
Your wiſedome beſt ſhall thinke.

King. It ſhall be ſo:
Madneſſe in great Ones, muſt not unwatch'd goe.

Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet, and two or three of the Players.

Ham. Speake the Speech I pray you, as I pronounc'd it to you trippingly on the Tongue. But if you mouth it, as many of your Players doe, I had as live the Towne-Cryer had ſpoke my Lines; Nor doe not ſaw the Ayre too much your hand thus, but uſe all gently; for in the very Torrent, Tempeſt, and (as I may ſay) the Whirle-winde of paſſion, you muſt acquire and beget a Temperance that may give it Smoothneſſe. O it offends me to the Soule, to ſee a robuſtious Pery-wig-parted fellow, teare a Paſſion to tatters, to very ragges, to ſplit the eares of the Groundlings: who (for the moſt part) are capeable of nothing, but inexplicable dumbe ſhewes, and noiſe: I could have ſuch a fellow whipt for ore-doing Termagant: it out-Herods Herod. Pray you avoyd it.

Player. I warrant your honor.

Ham. Be not too tame neither: but let your owne Diſcretion be your Tutor. Sute the Action to the word, the word to the Action, with this ſpeciall obſervance: That you ore-ſtep not the modeſty of Nature; for any thing ſo over-done, is from the purpoſe of Playing, whoſe end both at the firſt and now, was and is, to hold as 'twere the Mirrour up to Nature; to ſhew Vertue her owne Feature, Scorne her owne Image, and the very Age and Body of the Time, his forme and preſſure. Now, this over-done, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilfull laugh, cannot but make the judicious greive; The cenſure of the which one, muſt in your allowance ore-ſway a whole Theater of others. Oh, there be Players that I have ſeene Play, and heard others praiſe, and that highly (not to ſpeake it prophanely) that neither having the accent of Chriſtians, nor the gate of Chriſtian, Pagan, or Norman, have ſo ſtrutted and bellowed, that I have thought ſome of Natures Iouerney-men had made men, and not made them well, they imitated Humanity ſo abhominably.

Play. I hope we have reform'd that indifferently with us, Sir.

Ham. O reforme it altogether. And let thoſe that play your Clownes, ſpeake no more then is ſet down for them. For there be of them, that will themſelves laugh, to ſet on ſome quantity of barren Spectators to laugh too, though in the meane time, ſome neceſſary queſtion of the Play be then to be conſidered: thats Villanous, and ſhewes a moſt pittifull Ambition in the Foole that uſes it. Goe make you ready. Exeunt Players.

Enter Polonius, Roſincros, and Guildenſtare.

How now my Lord,
Will the King heare this peece of Worke?

Pol. And the Queene too, and that preſently.

Ham. Bid the Players make haſt. Exit Polonius.
Will you two helpe to haſten them?

Both. We will my Lord. Exeunt.

Enter Horatio.

Ham. What hoa, Horatio?

Hora. Heere ſweet Lord, at your ſervice.

Ham. Horatio, thou art eene as juſt a man
As ere my Converſation coap'd withall.

Hora. O my deere Lord.

Ham. Nay, doe not thinke I flatter:
For what advancement may I hope from thee,
That no Revennew haſt, but thy good ſpirits

To feed and cloath thee. Why ſhould the poore be flat-
No, let the Candied tongue, like abſurd pompe, (terd
And crooke the pregnant Hindges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow faining? Doſt thou heare,
Since my deere Soule was Miſtris of my choyſe,
And could of men diſtinguiſh, her election
Hath ſeal'd thee for her ſelfe. For thou haſt beene
As one in ſuffering all, that ſuffers nothing.
A man that Fortunes buffets, and Rewards
Hath tane with equall thankes. And bleſt are thoſe,
Whoſe blood and Iudgement are ſo well co-mingled,
That they are not a Pipe for fortunes finger.
To ſound what ſtop ſhe pleaſe. Give me that man,
That is not Paſſions Slave, and I will weare him
In my hearts Core: I, in my heart of heart,
As I doe thee. Something too much of this.
There is a Play to night before the King,
One Scæne of it comes neere the Circumſtance:
Which I have told thee, of my Fathers death.
I prethee, when thou ſeeſt that Act a-foot,
Even with the Comment of my ſoule
Obſerve mine Vnkl[illegible]if his occulted guilt,
Doe not it ſelfe unk[illegible]ll in one ſpeech,
It is a damned Ghoſt that we have ſeene:
And my imaginations are as foule
As Vulcans Styth. Give him heedfull note,
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face?
And after we will both our judgement joyne,
To cenſure of his ſeeming.

Hora. Well my Lord.
If he ſteale ought the whilſt this Play is playing,
And ſcape detecting, I will pay the Theft.

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Roſincros:
Guildenſtar, and other Lords attendant, with his Guard carrying Torches. Daniſh
March. Sound a Flouriſh.

Ham. They are comming to the Play: I muſt be idle. Get you a place.

King. How fares our Coſin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent ifaith, of the Camelions diſh: I eate the Ayre promiſe-cramm'd, you cannot feed Capons ſo.

King. I have nothing with this anſwer Hamlet, theſe words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine. Now my Lord, you plaid once ith'Vniverſity, you ſay?

Polon. That I did my Lord, and was accounted a good Actor.

Ham. And what did you enact?

Polo. I did enact Iulius Cæſar, I was kill'd ith'Capitoll: Brutus kill'd me.

Ham. It was a bruite part of him, to kill ſo Capitall a Calfe there. Be the Players ready?

Koſin. I my Lord, they ſtay upon your patience.

Quee. Come hither my good Hamlet, ſit by me.

Ham. No good Mother, heres Mettle more attractive.

Polo. Oh ho, doe you marke that?

Ham. Lady, ſhall I lye in your Lap?

Ophe. No my Lord.

Ham. I meane, my head upon your Lap?

Ophe, I my Lord.

Ham. Doe you thinke I meant Country matters?

Ophe. I thinke nothing, my Lord.

Ham. Thats a faire thought to lye between Maids legs

Obpe. What is my Lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Ophe. You are merry, my Lord?

Ham. Who I?

Ophe. I my Lord.

Ham. Oh God, your onely Iigge-maker: what ſhould a man doe, but be merry. For looke you how cheerefully my Mother lookes, and my father dyed within's two houres.

Ophe. Nay, tis twice two moneths, my Lord.

Ham. So long? Nay then let the Divell weare blacke, for Ile haue a ſuite of Sables. Oh heavens! dye two moneths agoe, and not forgotten yet? Then theres hope, a great mans Memoty, may out-live his life halfe a yeare: But berlady he muſt build Churches then: or elſe ſhall he ſuffer not thinking on, with the Hoby-horſſe, whoſe Epitaph is, for o, for o, the Hoby-horſe is forgot.

Hoboyes play, The dumbe ſhew enters.

Enter a King and Queene, very lovingly; the Queene embracing him. She kneeles; and makes ſhew of Proteſtation unto him. He takes her up, and declines his head upon her necke. Layes him downe upon a Banke of Flowers. She ſeeing him a-ſleepe, leaves him. Anon comes in a fellow, takes off his Crowne, kiſſes it, and powers poyſon in the Kings eares, and Exits. The Queene returnes, findes the King dead, and makes paſſionate Action. The Poyſoner, with ſome two or three Mutes comes in againe, ſeeming to lament with her. The dead body is carried away: The Poyſoner Wooes the Queene with Gifts, ſhe ſeemes loath and unwilling a while, but in the end, accepts his love. Exeunt.

Ophe. What meanes this, my Lord?

Ham. Marty this is Miching Malicho, that meanes Miſchiefe.

Ophe. Be like this ſhew imports the Argument of the Play?

Ham. We ſhall know by theſe fellowes: the Players cannot keepe counſell, they'll tell all.

Ophe. Will they teil us what this ſhew meant?

Ham. I, or any ſhew that you'll ſhew him. Be not you aſham'd to ſhew, he'll not ſhame to tell you what it meanes.

Ophe. You are naught, you are naught, Ile ma‸rke the Play.

Enter Prologue.

For us, and for our Tragedy,
Heere ſtooping to your Clemency:
We begge your hearing Patiently.

Ham. Is this a Prologue, or the Poeſie of a Ring?

Ophe. Tis briefe my Lord.

Ham. As Womans love.

Enter King, and his Queene.

King. Full thirty times hath Phœbus Cart gon round,
Neptunes ſalt Waſh, and Tellus Orbed ground:
And thirty dozen Moones with borrowed ſheene,
About the World have time, twelve thirties beene,
Since love our hearts, and Hymen did our hands
Vnite comutuall, in moſt ſacred Bands.

Quee. So many journies may the Sunne and Moone
Make us againe count ore, ere love be done.
But woe is me, you are ſo ſicke of late,
So farre from cheere, and from your former ſtate,
That I diſtruſt you: yet though I diſtruſt,
Diſcomfort you (my Lord) it nothing muſt:
For womens Feare and Love, holds quantity,

In neither ought, or in extremiy:
Now what my love is, proofe hath made you know,
And as my Love is ſiz, my feare is ſo.
King. Faith I muſt leave thee Love, and ſhortly too:
My operant Powers my functions leave to doe
And thou ſhalt live in this faire world behind,
Honor'd, belov'd, and haply, one as kind.
For husband ſhalt thou——
Que. Oh confound the reſt:
Such Love, muſt needs be Treaſon in my breſt:
In ſecond husband, let me be accurſt,
None wed the ſecond, but who killd the firſt.
Ham. Wormewood, Wormewood.
Quee. The inſtances that ſecond Marrage move,
Are baſe reſpects of Trift, but none of Love.
A ſecond time, I kill my husband dead,
When ſecond husband kiſſes me in Bed.
King. I doe beleeve you. Thinke what now you ſpeake:
But what we doe determine, oft we breake;
Purpoſe is but the ſlave to Memory,
Of violent Birth, but poore validity:
Which now like fruite unripe ſtickes on the Tree,
But fall unſhaken, when they mellow be.
Moſt neceſſary tis, that we forget
To pay our ſelves, what to our ſelves is debt:
What to our ſelves in paſſion we propoſe,
The paſſion ending, doth the purpoſe loſe.
The violence of other Griefe or joy,
Their owne enactors with themſelves deſtroy:
Where Ioy moſt Revels, Griefe doth moſt lament;
Griefe joyes, Ioy greeves on ſlender accident.
This world is not for aye, nor tis not ſtrange
That even our Loves ſhould with our Fortunes change.
For tis a queſtion left us yet to prove,
Whether Love lead fortune, or elſe fortune Love.
The great man downe, you marke his favourite flyes,
The poore aduanc'd makes ſriends of Enemies:
And hither to doth Love on fortune tend,
For who not needs, ſhall never lacke a friend?
And who in want a hollow friend doth try,
Directly ſeaſons him his Enemy.
But orderly to end, where I begun,
Our Willes and Fates doe ſo contrary run,
That our Devices ſtill are overthrowne,
Our thoughtes are ours, their ends none of our owne.
So thinke thou wilt no ſecond husband wed.
But dye thy thoughts, when thy firſt Lord is dead.
Quee. Nor Earth to give me food, nor heaven light,
Sport and repoſe locke from me day and night:
Each oppoſite that blankes the face of joy,
Meet what I would have well, and it deſtroy:
Both heere, and hence, purſue me laſting ſtrife,
If once a Widdow, ever I be Wife.
Ham. If ſhe ſhould breake it now.
King. Tis deepely ſworne:
Sweet, leave me heare a while,
My ſpirits grow dull, and faine I would beguile
The tedious day with ſleepe.
Quee. Sleepe rocke thy braine, Sleepes.
And never come miſchance betweene us twaine. Exit.
Ham. Madam, how like you the Play?
Que. The Lady proteſts too much me thinkes.
Ham. Oh but ſhe'll keepe her word,
King. Have you heard the Argument, is there no Offence in't?
Ham. No, no, they doe but jeſt, poyſon in jeſt, no Offence ith'world.
King. What doe you call the Play?
Ham. The Mouſe-trap: Marry how? Tropically: This Play is the image of a murder done in Vienna: Gonzago is the Dukes name, his wife Baptiſta: you ſhall ſee anon: tis a knaviſh peece of worke: But what o'that? Your Majeſty, and we that have free ſoules, it touches us not: let the gall'd jade winch: our withers are unrung,

Enter Lucianus.

This is one Lucianus nephew to the King.
Ophe. You are a good Chorus. my Lord.
Ham. I could interpret betweene you and your love: if I could ſee the Puppets dallying.
Ophe. You are keene my Lord, you are keene.
Ham. It would coſt you a groaning, to take off my edge.
Ophe. Still better and worſe.
Ham. So you miſtake husbands. Begin Murderer. Pox, leave thy damnable Faces, and begin. Come, the croaking Raven doth bellow for Revenge.
Lucian. Thonghts blacke, hands apt,
Drugges fit, and Time agreeing:
Confederate ſeaſon, elſe no Creature ſeeing:
Thou mixture ranke, of Midnight-Weeds collected,
With Hecats Ban, thrice blaſted, thrice infected,
Thy naturall Magicke, and dire property,
On wholſome life, uſurpe immediately.

Powres the poyſon in his eares.

Ham. He poyſons him i'th' Garden fors eſtate: His names Gonzago: the Story is extant and writ in choyce Italian. You ſhall ſee anon how the Murtherer gets the love of Gonzagos wife.
Ophe. The King riſes.
Ham. What, frighted with falſe fire.
Quee. How fares my Lord?
Pol. Give o're the Play.
King. Giue me ſome Light. Away,
All. Lights, Lights, Lights. Exeunt.

Manet Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. Why let the ſtrucken Deere goe weepe,
The Heart ungalled play:
For ſome muſt watch, while ſome muſt ſleepe?
So runnes the world away.
Would not this Sir, and a Forreſt of Feathers, if the reſt of my fortunes turne Turke with me; with two Provinciall Roſes on my rac'd Shooes, get me a Fellowſhip in a cry of Players ſir.
Hor. Halfe a ſhare.
Ham. A whole one I,
For thou doſt know: Oh Damon deere,
This Realme diſmantled was of Iove himſelfe,
And now reignes heere,
A very very Pajocke.
Hora. You might have Rim'd.
Ham. Oh good Horatio, Ile take the Ghoſts word, for a thouſand pound. Didſt perceive?
Hora. Very well my Lord.
Ham. Vpon the talke of the poyſoning?
Hora. I did very well note him.

Enter Roſincros, and Guildenſtar.

Ham. Oh, ha? come ſome Muſick. Come the Recorders
For if the King like not the Comedy.
Why then belike he likes it not perdy.
Come ſome Muſicke.
Guild, Good my Lord, vouchſafe me a word with you.

Ham. Sir, a whole Hiſtory.

Guild. The King, ſir.

Ham. I ſir, what of him.

Guild. Is in his retyrement, marvellous diſtemper'd.

Ham. With drinke Sir?

Guild. No my Lord, rather with choller.

Ham. Your wiſedome ſhould ſhew it ſelfe more rich to ſignifie this to his Doctor; for me to put him to his Purgation, would perhaps plundge him into farre more Choller.

Guild. Good my Lord put your diſcourſe into ſome frame, and ſtart not ſo wildly from my affaire.

Ham. I am tame Sir, pronounce.

Guild. The Queene your Mother, in moſt great affliction of ſpirit, hath ſent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guild. Nay, good my Lord, this courteſie is not of the right breed. If it ſhall pleaſe you to make me a wholſome anſwer, I will doe your Mothers command'ment: if not, your pardon, and my returne ſhall be the end of my buſineſſe.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guild. What my Lord?

Ham. Make you a wholeſome anſwer: my wit's diſeas'd. But ſir, ſuch anſwers as I can make, you ſhall command: or rather you ſay, my mother: therefore no more but to the matter. My mother you ſay.

Roſin. Then thus ſhe ſayes: your behavior hath ſtroke her into amazement, and admiration.

Ham. Oh wonderfull Sonne, that can ſo aſtoniſh a Mother. But is there no ſequell at the heeles of this Mothers admiration?

Roſin. She deſires to ſpeake with you in her Cloſſet, ere you goe to bed.

Ham. We ſhall obey, were ſhe ten times our Mother.
Have you any further Trade with us?

Roſin. My Lord, you once did love me.

Ham. So I doe ſtill, by theſe pickers and ſtealers.

Roſin. Good my Lord, what is your cauſe of deſtemper? You doe freely barre the doore of your owne Liberty, if you deny your griefes to your friend.

Ham. Sir I lacke Advancement.

Roſin. How can that be, when you have the voyce of the King himſelfe, for your Succeſſion in Denmarke?

Ham. I, but while the graſſe growes, the Proverbe is ſomething muſty.

Enter one with a Recorder.

O the Recorder. Let me ſee, to withdraw with you, why doe you goe about to recover the wind of me, as if you would drive me into a toile?

Guild. O my Lord, if my Duty be too bold, my love is too unmannerly.

Ham, I doe not well underſtand that. Will you play upon this Pipe?

Guild. My Lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you.

Guild. Beleeve me, I cannot.

Ham. I doe beſeech you.

Guild. I know no touch of it, my Lord.

Ham. Tis as eaſie as lying: governe theſe Ventiges with your finger and thumbe, give it breath with your mouth, and it will diſcourſe moſt excellent Muſicke. Looke you, theſe are the ſtoppes.

Guild. But theſe cannot I command to any utterance of harmony, I have not the skill.

Ham. Why looke you now, how unworthy a thing you make of me: you would play upon me: you would ſeeme to know my ſtops: you would plucke out the heart of my Myſtery; you would ſound me from my loweſt Note, to the top of my compaſſe: and there is much Muſicke, excellent Voyce, in this little Organe, yet cannot you make it. Why doe you thinke, that I am eaſier to be plaid on, then a Pipe? Call me what inſtrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play upon me. God bleſſe your Sir.

Enter Polonius.

Polon. My Lord; the Queene would ſpeake with you and preſently.

Ham. Doe you ſee that Clowd? thats almoſt in ſhape like a Camell.

Polon. By'th'Miſſe, and its like a Camell indeed.

Ham. Me thinkes it is like a Weazell.

Polon. It is back'd like a Weazell.

Ham. Or like a Whale?

Polon. Very like a Whale.

Ham. Then will I come to my mother, by and by:
They foole me to the top of my bent.
I will come by and by.

Polon. I will ſay ſo. Exit.

Ham. By and by, is eaſily ſaid. Leave me friends:
Tis now the very witching time of night,
When Churchyards yawne, and hell it ſelfe breaths out
Contagion to this world. Now could I drinke hot blood,
And doe ſuch bitter buſineſſe as the day
Would quake to looke on. Soft now, to my mother:
Oh heart, looſe not thy Nature; let not ever
The Soule of Nero, enter this firme boſome:
Let me be cruell, not unnaturall,
I will ſpeake Daggers to her, but uſe none:
My tongue and ſoule in this be Hypocrites.
How in my words ſomever ſhe be ſhent,
To give them ſeales, never my ſoule conſent.

Enter King, Roſincros, and Guildenſtar.

King. I like him not, nor ſtands it ſafe with us,
To let his madneſſe range. Therefore prepare you,
I your Commiſſion will forthwith diſpatch,
And he to England ſhall along with you,
The termes of our eſtate, may not endure
Hazard ſo dangerous as doth hourely grow
Out of his Lunacies.

Guild. We will our ſelves provide:
Moſt holy and Religious feare it is
To keepe thoſe many bodies ſafe
That live and feede upon your Majeſty.

Roſin. The ſingle
And peculiar life is bound
With all the ſtrength and Armour of the minde,
To keepe it ſelfe from noyance: but much more,
That Spirit, upon whoſe ſpirit depends and reſts
The lives of many, the ceaſe of Majeſty
Dies not alone: but like a Gulfe doth draw
Whats neere it, with it. It is a maſſie wheele
Fixt on the Somnet of the higheſt Mount,
To whoſe huge Spoakes, ten thouſand leſſer things
Are mortiz'd and adjon'd: which when it falles,
Each ſmall annexment, petty conſequence
Attends the boyſtrous Ruine. Never alone
Did the King ſighe, but with a generall grone

King. Arme you, I pray you to this ſpeedy Voyage;
For we will Fetters put upon this feare,

Which now goes too free-footed.
Both. We will haſte us. Exeunt Gent.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My Lord, hes going to his Mothers Cloſſet:
Behinde the Arras Ile convey my ſelfe
To heare the Proceſſe. Ile warrant ſhe'll tax him home.
And as you ſaid, and wiſely was it ſaid,
Tis meete that ſome more audience then a Mother,
Since Nature makes them partiall, ſhould o're-heare
The ſpeech of vantage, Fare you well my Liege,
Ile call upon you ere you goe to bed,
And tell you what I know. Exit.
King. Thankes deere my Lord,
Oh my offence is ranke, it ſmels to heaven,
It hath the primall eldeſt curſe upon't,
A brothers murther. Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as ſharpe as will:
My ſtronger guilt, defeats my ſtrong intent,
And like a man to double buſineſſe bound,
I ſtand in pauſe where I ſhall firſt begin,
And both neglect; what if this curſed hand
Were thicker then it ſelfe with brothers blood,
Is there not Raine enough in the ſweet heavens
To waſh it white as Snow? Whereto ſerves mercy,
But to confront the viſage of Offence?
And whats in Prayer, but this two-fold force,
To be fore-ſtalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being downe? Then Ile looke up,
My fault is paſt. But oh, what forme of Prayer
Can ſerue my turne? Forgive me my foule Murther:
That cannot be, ſince I am ſtill poſſeſt
Of thoſe effects for which I did the Murther
My Crowne, mine owne Ambition, and my Queene:
May one be pardon'd, and retaine th'offence?
In the corrupted currants of this world,
Offences guilded hand may ſhove by Iuſtice,
And oft tis ſeene, the wicked prize it ſelfe
Buyes out the Law; but tis not ſo above,
There is no ſhuffling, there the Action lyes
In his true Nature, and we our ſelves compell'd
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. What then? What reſts?
Try what Repentance can. What can it not?
Yet what can it, when one cannot repent?
Oh wretched ſtate? Oh boſome, blacke as death!
Oh limed ſoule, that ſtrugling to be free,
Art more ingag'd: Helpe Angels, make aſſay:
Bow ſtubborne knees, and heart with ſtrings of Steele,
Be ſoft as ſinewes of the new-borne Babe,
All may be well.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I doe it pat, now he is praying,
And now Ile doo't, and ſo he goes to heaven,
And ſo am I reveng'd: that would be ſcann'd,
A Villaine killes my Father, and for that
I his foule Sonne, doe this ſame Villaine ſend
To heaven. Oh this is hyre and Sallery, not Revenge.
He tooke my Father groſſely, full of bread,
With all his Crimes broad blowne, as freſh as May,
And how his Audit ſtands, who knowes, ſave heaven:
But in our circumſtance and courſe of thought
Tis heavy with him: and am I then reveng'd,
To take him in the purging of his Soule,
When he is fit and ſeaſon'd for his paſſage? No.
Vp Sword, and know thou a more horrid hent
When he is drunke aſleepe: or in his Rage,
Or in th'inceſtuous pleaſure of his bed,
At gaming, ſwearing, or about ſome acte
That has no relliſh of Saluation in't,
Then trip him, that his heeles may kicke at heaven,
And that his Soule may be as damn'd and blacke
As hell, whereto it goes. My Mother ſtayes,
This Phyſicke but prolongs thy ſickly dayes. Exit.
King. My words flye up, my thoughts remaine below,
Words without thoughts, never to heaven goe. Exit.

Enter Queene and Polonius.

Polo. He will come ſtraight:
Looke you lay home to him,
Tell him his prankes have been too broad to berre with,
And that yovr grace hath ſcree'nd, and ſtood betweene
Much heat, and him. Ile ſilence me e'ne heere:
Pray you be round with him.
Ham. within. Mother, mother, mother.
Que. Ile warrant you, feare me not.
Withdraw, I heare him comming.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now mother, whats the matter?
Que. Hamlet, thou haſt thy father much offended.
Ham. Mother, you have my father much offended.
Que. Come, come, you anſwer with an idle tongue.
Ham. Goe, goe, you queſtion with an idle tongue.
Que. Why how now Hamlet.
Ham. Whats the matter now?
Que. Have you forgot me?
Ham. No by the Rood, not ſo:
You are the Queene, your husbands brothers wife,
But would you were not ſo. You are my Mother.
Quee. Nay, then Ile ſet thoſe to you that can ſpeake.
Ham. Come, come, and ſit you downe, you ſhall not boudge:
You goe not till I ſet up a glaſſe.
Where you may ſee the inmoſt part of you?
Que. What wilt thou doe? thou wilt not murther me?
Helpe, helpe, hoa.
Pol. What hoa, helpe, helpe, helpe.
Ham. How now, a Rat? dead for a Ducate, dead.
Pol. Oh I am ſlaine. Killes Polonius.
Quee. Oh me, what haſt thou done?
Ham. Nay I know not, is it the King?
Quee. Oh what a raſh, and bloody deed is this?
Ham. A bloody deed, almoſt as bad good Mother,
As kill a King, and marry with his brother.
Quee. As killd a King?
Ham. I Lady, twas my word.
Thou wretched, raſh, intruding foole farewell,
I tooke thee for thy Betters, take thy fortune,
Thou findſt to be too buſie, is ſome danger.
Leave wringing of your hands, peace ſit you downe,
And let me wring your heart, for ſo I ſhall
If it be made of penetrable ſtuffe;
If damned Cuſtome have not braz'd it ſo,
That it is proofe and bulwarke againſt Senſe.
Qu. What have I done, that thou darſt wag thy (tongue,
In noyſe ſo rude againſt me?
Ham. Such an Act
That blurres the grace and bluſh of Modeſty,
Cals Vertue Hypocrite, takes off the Roſe
From the faire forehead of an innocent love,
And makes a bliſter there. Makes marriage vowes
As falſe as Dicers Oathes. Oh ſuch a deed,

As from the body of contraction pluckes
The very ſoule, and ſweet Religion makes
A rapſody of words. Heavens face doth glow,
Yea this ſolidity and compound maſſe,
With triſtfull viſage as againſt the doome,
Is thought-ſicke at the act.
Quee. Aye me, what act, that roares ſo lowd, and thunders in the Index.
Ham. Looke heere upon this Picture, and on this,
The counterfet preſentment of two brothers:
See what a grace ſeated on his Brow,
Hyperions curles, the front of Iove himſelfe,
An eye like Mars, to threaten or command
A Station, like the Herald Mercury
New lighted on a heaven-kiſſing hill:
A Combination, and a forme indeed,
Where every god did ſeeme to ſet his Seale,
To give the world aſſurance of a man.
This was your husband. Looke you now what followes.
Heere is your husband, like a Mildew'd deare
Blaſting his wholſome breath. Have you eyes?
Could you on this faire Mountaine leave to feed,
And batten on this Moore? Ha? have you eyes?
You cannot call it Love: For at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, its humble,
And waites upon the Iudgement: and what judgement
Would ſtep from this, to this? What divell was't,
That thus hath couſend you at hoodman-blind?
O Shame! where is thy bluſh? Rebellious Hell,
If thou canſt mutine in a Matrons bones,
To flaming youth, let Vertue be as waxe.
And melt in her owne fire. Proclaime no ſhame,
When the compulſiue Ardure gives the charge,
Since Froſt it ſelfe, as actively doth burne,
As Reaſon panders Will.
Quee. O Hamlet, ſpeake no more.
Thou turnſt mine eyes into my very ſoule,
And there I ſee ſuch blacke and grained ſpots.
As will not leave their Tinct.
Ham. Nay, but to live
In the ranke ſweat of an enſeamed bed,
Stewd in Corruption; honying and making love
Over the naſty Stye.
Quee. Oh ſpeake to me, no more,
Theſe words like Daggers enter in mine eares.
No more ſweet Hamlet.
Ham. A Murderer, and a Villaine:
A Slave, that is not twentieth part the tythe
Of your precedent Lord. A vice of Kings,
A Cutpurſe of the Empire and the Rule.
That from a ſhelfe, the precious Diadem ſtole,
And put it in his Pocket.
Que. No more.

Enter Ghoſt.

Ham. A King of ſhreds and patches.
Save me: and hover o're me with your wings
You heavenly Guards. What would you gracious figure?
Quee. Alas hes mad.
Ham. Doe you not come your tardy Sonne to chide,
That laps't in Time and Paſſion, lets goe by
Th'important acting of your dread command? Oh ſay.
Ghoſt. Doe not forget: this Viſitation
Is but to whet thy almoſt blunted purpoſe.
But looke Amazement on thy Mother ſits;
O ſtep betweene her, and her fighting Soule,
Conceit in weakeſt bodies, ſtrongeſt workes.
Speake to her Hamlet.
Ham. How is it with you Lady?
Que. Alas, how is't with you?
That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with the corporall ayre doe hold diſcourſe.
Forth at your eyes, your ſpirits wildely peepe,
And as the ſleeping Souldiours in th'Alarme,
Your bedded haire, like life in excrements,
Start up, and ſtand an end. Oh gentle Sonne,
Vpon the heate and flame of thy diſtemper
Sprinkle coole patience. Whereon doe you looke?
Ham. On him, on him: looke you how pale he glares,
His forme and cauſe conjoyn'd, preaching to ſtones,
Would make them capeable. Doe not looke upon me,
Leaſt with this pitteous action you convert
My ſterne effects: then what I have to doe,
Will want true colour; teares perchance for blood.
Quee. To whom doe you ſpeake this?
Ham. Doe you ſee nothing there?
Quee. Nothing at all, yet all that is I ſee.
Ham. Nor did you nothing heare?
Quee. No, nothing but our ſelves.
Ham. Why looke you there: looke how it ſteals away;
My father in his habite, as he lived,
Looke where he goes even now out at the Portall. Exit.
Quee. This is the very coynage of your braine,
This bodileſſe Creation extaſie is very cunning in.
Ham. Extaſie?
My Pulſe as youre doth temperately keepe time,
And makes as healthfull Muſicke. It is not madneſſe
That I have uttered; bring me to the Teſt
And I the matter will re-word: which madneſſe
Would gamboll from. Mother, for love of Grace,
Lay not a flattering Vnction to your ſoule,
That not your treſpaſſe, but my madneſſe ſpeakes:
It will but skin and filme the Vlcerous place,
Whilſt ranke corruption mining all within,
Infects unſeene. Confeſſe your ſelfe to heaven,
Repent whats paſt, avoyd what is to come,
And doe not ſpred the Compoſt or the Weedes,
To make them ranke. Forgive me this my Vertue,
For in the fatneſſe of theſe purſie times,
Vertue it ſelfe, of Vice muſt pardon begge,
Yea courbe, and wooe, for leave to doe him good.
Quee. Oh Hamlet,
Thou haſt cleft my heart in twaine.
Ham. O throw away the worſer part of it,
And live the purer with the other halfe.
Good night, but goe not to mine Vnkles bed,
Aſſume a Vertue, if you have it not, refraine to night,
And that ſhall lend a kind of eaſineſſe
To the next abſtinence. Once more goodnight,
And when you are deſirous to be bleſt,
Ile bleſſing begge of you. For this ſame Lord,
I doe repent: but heaven hath pleas'd it ſo.
To puniſh me with this, and this with me,
That I muſt be their Scourge and Miniſter.
I will beſtow him, and will anſwer well
The death I gave him: ſo againe, good night.
I muſt be cruell, onely to be kind;
Thus bad begins, and worſe remaines behind.
Que. What ſhall I doe?
Ham. Not this by no meanes that I bid you doe:
Let the blunt King tempt you againe to bed,
Pinch Wanton on your cheeke, call you his Mouſe,
And let him for a paire of reechy kiſſes,

Or padling in your necke with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravell all this matter out,
That I eſſentially am not in madneſſe,
But mad in craft. Twere good you let him know,
For who thats but a Queene, faire, ſober, wiſe,
Would from a Paddocke, from a Bat, a Gibbe,
Such deere concernings hide? Who would doe ſo?
No in deſpight of Senſe and Secrecy,
Vnpegge the Basket on the houſes top :
Let the Birds flye, and like the famous Ape,
To try Concluſions, in the Basket creepe,
And breake your owne necke downe.

Que. Be thou aſſur'd, if words be made of breath,
And breath of life : I have no life to breath
What thou haſt ſaid to me.

Ham. I muſt to England, you know that ?

Quee. Alacke I had forgot : Tis ſo concluded on.

Ham. This man ſhall ſet me packing :
Ile lugge the Guts into the Neighbor roome,
Mother goodnight. Indeede this Counſellor
Is now moſt ſtill, moſt ſecret, and moſt grave,
Who was in life a fooliſh prating Knave.
Come ſir, to draw toward an end with you.
Good night Mother.

Exit Hamlet tugging in Polonius.

Enter King.

King. Theres matters in theſe ſighes.
Theſe profound heaves
You muſt tranſlate, Tis fit we underſtand them.
Where is your Sonne ?

Quee. Ah my good Lord, what have I ſeene to night ?

King. What Gertrude? How dos Hamlet ?

Quee. Mad as the Seas, and winde, when both contend
Which is the Mightier, in his lawleſſe fit
Behind the Arras, hearing ſomething ſtirre,
He whips his Rapier out, and cryes a Rat, a Rat,
And in his brainiſh apprehenſion killes
The unſeene good old man.

King. Oh heavy deed.
It had bine ſo with us had we beene there :
His Liberty is full of threats to all,
To you your ſelfe, to us, to every one.
Alas, how ſhall this bloody deede be anſwered ?
It will be laid to us, whoſe providence
Should have kept ſhort, reſtrain'd, and out of haunt,
This mad yong man. But ſo much was our love,
We would not underſtand what was moſt fit,
But like the Owner of a foule diſeaſe,
To keepe it from divulging, lets it feede
Even on the pith of life. Where is he gone ?

Quee. To draw apart the body he hath kild,
Ore whom his very madneſſe like ſome Oare
Among a Minerall of Methals baſe
Shewes it ſelfe pure. He weepes for wat is done.

King. Oh Gertrude, come away :
The Sun no ſooner ſhall the Mountaines touch,
But we will ſhip him hence, and this vilde deed,
We muſt with all our Majeſty and Skill
Both countenance, and excuſe. Enter Rroſincros, and Guildenſtar.
Ho Guildenſtar :
Friends both, go joyne you with ſome further ayde :
Hamlet in madneſſe hath Polonius ſlaine,
And from his Mothers Cloſſet hath he dragg'd him.
Goe ſeeke him out, ſpeake faire, and bring the body
Into the Chappell. I pray you haſte in this. Exit Gent.
Come Gertrude, we'll call up our wiſeſt friends,
To let them know both what we meane to doe,
And whats untimely done. Oh come away,
My ſoule is full of diſcord and diſmay. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Safely ſtowed.

Gentlemen within. Hamlet, Lord Hamlet.

Ham. What noiſe ? Who cals on Hamlet ?
Oh heere they come. Enter Roſincros, and Guildenſtar.

Roſ. What have you done my Lord with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with duſt, whereto tis kinne.

Roſin. Tell us where tis, that we may take it thence,
And beare it to the Chappell.

Ham. Doe not beeleeve it.

Roſin. Beleeve what ?

Ham. That I can keepe your counſell, and not mine owne. Beſides, to be demanded of a Spundge, what replication ſhould be made by the Sonne of a King.

Roſin. Take you me for a Spundge, my Lord ?

Ham. I ſir, that ſokes up the Kings Countenance, his Rewards, his Authorities(but ſuch Officers do the King beſt ſervice in the end.) He keepes them like an Ape in the corner of his jaw, firſt mouth'd to be laſt ſwallowed, when he needes what you have glean'd, it is but ſqueezing you, and Spundge you ſhall be dry againe.

Roſin. I underſtand you not my Lord.

Ham. I am glad of it : a knaviſh ſpeech ſleepes in a fooliſh eare.

Roſin. My Lord, you muſt tell us where the body is, and goe with us to the King.

Ham. The body is with the King, but the King is not with the body. The King, is a thing——.

Guild. A thing my Lord ?

Hvm. Of nothing? bring me to him, hide Fox, and all after. Exeunt.

Enter King.

King. I have ſent to ſeeke him, and to find the body:
How dangerous is it that this man goes looſe :
Yet muſt not we put the ſtrong Law on him :
Hes loved of the diſtracted multitude,
Who like not in their judgement, but their eyes :
And where tis ſo, th'Offenders ſcourge is weigh'd
Bnt neerer the offence : to beare all ſmooth, and even,
This ſodaine ſending him away, muſt ſeeme
Deliberate pauſe, diſeaſes deſperate growne,
By deſperate appliance are relieved,
Or not at all. Enter Roſincros.
How now ? what hath befalne ?

Roſin. Where the dead body is beſtow'd my Lord,
We cannot get from him.

King. But where is he ?

Roſin. Without my Lord, guarded to know your pleaſure.

King. Bring him before us.

Roſin. Hoa, Guildenſtar ? bring in my Lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenſtar.

King. Now Hamlet, wheres Polonius ?

Ham. At Supper.

King. At Supper ? Where ?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten, a certaine convocation of wormes are ene at him. Your worm is your onely Emperour for diet. We fat all creatures elſe to fat us, and we fat our ſelues for Magots. Your fat King and your leane Begger is but variable ſervice, two diſhes, but to one Table, thats the end.

King. What doſt thou meane by this ?

Ham. Nothing but to ſhew you how a King may goe a Progreſſe through the gut of a Begger.

King. Where is Polonius.

Ham. In heaven, ſend thither to ſee. If your Meſſenger finde him not there, ſeeke him i'th other place your ſelfe: but indeed, if you finde him not this moneth, you ſhall noſe him as you goe up the ſtaires into the Lobby.

King. Goe ſeeke him there:

Ham. He will ſtay till ye come.

K. Hamlet, this deed of thine, for thine eſpeciall ſafety
Which we doe tender, as we dearely grieve
For that which thou haſt done, muſt ſend thee hence
With fiery quickneſſe. Therefore prepare thy ſelfe,
The Barke is ready, and the wind at helpe,
Th'Aſſociates tend, and every thing at bent
For England.

Ham. For England.

King. I, Hamlet.

Ham. Good.

King. So is it, if thou knewſt our purpoſes.

Ham. I ſee a Cherube that ſees him: but, come, for England. Farewell deare Mother.

King. Thy loving Father Hamlet.

Hamlet. My Mother: Father and Mother is Man and Wife: Man and Wife is one fleſh, and ſo my Mother. Come, for England. Exit.

King. Follow him at foot,
Tempt him with ſpeed aboord:
Delay it not, Ile have him hence to night.
Away, for every thing is Seal'd and done
That elſe leanes on th'Affaire, pray you make haſte.
And England, if my love thou holdſt at ought,
As my great power thereof may give thee ſenſe,
Since yet thy Cicatrice lookes raw and red
After the Daniſh Sword, and thy free awe
Payes homage to us; thou maiſt not coldly ſet
Our Soveraigne Proceſſe, which imports at full
By letters conjuring to that effect
The preſent death of Hamlet. Doe it England,
For like the Hecticke in my blood he rages,
And thou muſt cure me: Till I know 'tis done,
How ere my haps, my joyes were ne're begun.
Exit:

Enter Fortinbras with an Army.

For. Goe Captaine, from me to the Daniſh King,
Tell him that by his licenſe, Fortinbras
Claimes the conveyance of a promis'd March
Over his Kingdome. You know the Rendevouz:
If that his Majeſtie would ought with us,
We ſhall expreſſe our durie in his eye,
And let him know ſo.

Cap. I will doo't, my Lord.

For. Goe ſafely on. Exit.

Enter Queene and Horatio.

Qu. I will not ſpeake with her.

Hor. She is importunate, indeed diſtract, her moode will needs be pittied.

Qu. What would ſhe have?

Hor. She ſpeakes much of her Father; ſayes ſhe heares
There's trickes i'th'world, and hems, and beats her heart,
Spurnes enviouſly at Strawes, ſpeakes things in doubt,
That carry but halfe ſenſe: Her ſpeech is nothing,
Yet the unſhaped uſe of it doth move
The hearers to Collection; they ayme at it,
And botch the words up fit to their owne thoughts,
Which as her winkes, and nods, and geſtures yeeld them,
Indeed would make one thinke there would be thought,
Though nothing ſure, yet much unhappily.

Qu. 'Twere good ſhe were ſpoken with,
For ſhe may ſtrew dangerous conjectures
In ill breeding mindes. Let her come in
To my ſicke ſoule (as ſinnes true nature is)
Each toy ſeemes Prologue, to ſome great amiſſe,
So full of Artleſſe jealouſie is guilt,
It ſpils it ſelfe in fearing to be ſpilt.

Enter Othelia diſtracted.

Oph. Where is the beauteous Majeſty of Denmarke.

Qu. How now Ophelia?

Ophe. How ſhould I your true love know from another
By his Cockle Hat and Staffe, and his Sandal Shoone (one?

Qu. Alas ſweet Lady: what imports this Song?

Ophe. Say you? Nay pray you marke.
He is dead and gone Lady, he is dead and gone,
At his head a graſſe-greene Turfe, at his heeles a ſtone,

Enter King.

Qu. Nay but Ophelia.

Oph. Pray you marke.
White his Shrow'd as the Mountaine Snow.

Qu. Alas, looke here my Lord.

Oph. Larded with ſweet flowers:
Which bewept to the grave did not goe,
With True-love ſhowers.

King. How doe ye, pretty Lady?

Oph. Well, God dil'd you. They ſay the Owle was a Bakers daughter. Lord, wee know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your Table.

King. Conceit upon her Father.

Ophe. Pray you let's have no words of this: but when they aske you what it meanes, ſay you this:
To morrow is S. Valentines day, all in the morne betime,
And I a Maid at your window, to be your Valentine. (dore.
Then up he roſe, & don'd his cloathes, & dupt the chamber
Let in the Maid, let in a Maid, never departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia.

Ophe. Indeed la? without an oath Ile make an end ont.
By gis, and by S. Charity.
Alacke, and fie for ſhame:
Yong men will doo't, if they come too't,
By Cocke they are too blame.
Quoth ſhe before you tumbled me,
You promis'd me to wed:
So would I ha done, by yonder Sunne,
And thou hadſt not come to my bed.

King. How long hath ſhe been thus?

Ophe. I hope all will be well. Wee muſt be patient, but I cannot chooſe but weepe, to thinke they ſhould lay him i'th'cold ground: My Brother ſhall know of it, and ſo I thanke you for your good counſell. Come, my Coach: Goodnight Ladies: Goodnight ſweet Ladies: Goodnight, goodnight. Exit.

King. Follow her cloſe,
Give her good watch I pray you:
Oh this is the poyſon of deepe griefe, it ſprings
All from her Fathers death. Oh Gertrude, Gertrude,
When ſorrowes come, they come not ſingle ſpies,
But in Battaliaes. Firſt, her father ſlaine,
Next your ſonne gone, and he moſt violent author
Of his owne juſt remove: the people muddied,
Thicke and unwholſome in their thoughts and whiſpers,
For good Polonius death; and we have done but greenly,
In hugger mugger to interre him. Poore Ophelia
Divided from her ſelfe, and her faire judgement,

Without the which we are Pictures, or meere Beaſts,
Laſt, and as much containing as all theſe,
Her brother is in ſecret come from France,
Keepes on his wonder, keepes himſelfe in clouds
And wants not Buzzers to infect his eare
With peſtilent Speeches of his fathers death,
Where in neceſſity of matter Beggard
Will nothing ſticke our perſons to Arraigne
In eare and eare. O my deere Gertrude, this,
Like to a murdering Peece in many places,
Gives me ſuperfluous death. A Noiſe within.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Que. Alacke, what noyſe is this?

King. Where are my Switzers?
Let them guard the doore. What is the matter?

Meſ. Save your ſelfe, my Lord.
The Ocean (over-peering of his Liſt)
Eates not the Flats with more impetuous haſte
Then young Laertes, in a Riotous head,
Ore-beares your Officers, the rabble call him Lord,
And as the world were now but to begin,
Antiquity forgot, Cuſtome not knowne,
The Ratifiers and props of every word,
They cry chooſe we? Laertes ſhall be King.
Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes ſhall be King, Laertes King.

Quee. How cheerefully on the falſe Traile they cry,
Oh this is Counter, you falſe Daniſh Dogges.

Noiſe within. Enter Laertes.

King. The doores are broke.

Laer. Where is the King, ſirs? Stand you all without.

All. No, lets come in.

Laer. I pray you give me leave.

All. We will, we will.

Laer. I thanke you: Keepe the doore.
Oh thou vilde King, give me my father.

Que. Calmely good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood, that calmes
Proclaimes me Baſtard:
Cries Cuckold to my father, brands the Harlot
Even here betweene the chaſte unſmitched brow
Of my true Mother.

King. What is the cauſe Laertes,
That thy Rebellion lookes ſo Gyant-like?
Let him goe Gertrude: Doe not feare our perſon:
Theres ſuch Divinity doth hedge a King,
That Treaſon can but peepe to what it would,
Acts little of his will. Tell me Laertes,
Why thou art thus incenſt? Let him goe Gertrude,
Speake man.

Laer. Wheres my Father?

King. Dead.

Que. But not by him,

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? Ile not be Iuggel'd with.
To hell Allegeance: Vowes, to the blackeſt divell.
Conſcience and Grace, to the Profoundeſt Pit.
I dare Damnation: to this point I ſtand,
That both the worlds I give to negligence,
Let come what comes: onely Ile be reveng'd
Moſt throughly for my father.

King. Who ſhall ſtay you?

Laer. My Will, not all the world.
And for my meanes, Ile husband them ſo well,
They ſhall goe farre with little.

King. Good Laertes:
If you deſire to know the certainty
Of your deare fathers death, if writ in your revenge,
That Soop-ſtake you will draw both friend and foe,
Winner and Looſer.

Laer. None but his Enemies.

King. Will you know them then.

La. To his good Friends thus wide Ile hope my
And like the kinde life-rendring Pelican, (Armes,
Repaſt them with my blood.

King. Why now? what noyſe is that?
Like a good child, and a true Gentleman.
That I am guiltleſſe of your Fathers death,
And am moſt ſenſible in griefe for it,
It ſhall as levell to your Iudgement pierce
As day do's to your eye.

A noyſe within, Let her come in,
Enter Ophelia.

Laer. How now? what noyſe is that?
Oh heat dry up my braines, teares ſeven times ſalt,
Burne out the ſenſe and vertue of mine eye.
By heaven thy madneſſe ſhall be paid by waight,
Till our Scale turnes the beame. Oh Roſe of May,
Deare Maide, kinde Siſter, ſweet Ophelia:
Oh heavens, is't poſſible, a yong Maids wits,
Should be as mortall as an old mans life?
Nature is fine in Love, and where tis fine,
It ſends ſome precions inſtance of it ſelfe
After the thing it loves.

Oph. They bore him bare fac'd on the Beere.
Hey non nony, noney, hey noney:
And on his grave raines many a teare,
Fare you well my Dove.

Laer. Hadſt thou thy wits, and didſt perſwade Revenge, it could not move thus.

Oph. You muſt ſing downe a-downe, and you call him a-downe-a. Oh, how the wheeles become it? It is the falſe Steward that ſtole his Maſters daughter.

Laer. This nothings more than matter.

Ophe. There's Roſemary, that's for Remembrance. I Pray Love remember: and there is Pancies, that's for Thoughts.

Laer. A document in madneſſe, thoughts and remembrance fitted.

Ophe. There's Fennell for you, and Columbines: there's Rue for you, and here's ſome for me. Wee may call it Herbe-Grace a Sundayes: Oh you muſt weare your Rue with a difference. There's a Daſie, I would give you ſome Violets, but they wither'd all whē my Father dyed: They ſay, he made a good end;

For Bonny ſweet Robin is all my joy.

Laer. Thought, and Affliction, Paſſion, Hell it ſelfe:
She turnes to favour; and to prettineſſe.

Oph. And will he not come againe.
And will he not come againe?
No, no, he is dead, goe to thy Death-bed,
He never will come againe.
His Beard as white as Snow.
All Flaxen was his Pole:
He is gone, he is gone, and we caſt away mone,
Gramercy on his Soule.
And of all Chriſtian Soules, I pray God.
God buy ye. Exit Ophelia.

Laer. Doe you ſee this, you gods?

King. Laertes, I muſt commune with your griefe,
Or you deny me right: goe but apart,

Make choyce of whom your wiſeſt friends you will,
And they ſhall heare and judge twixt you and me;
If by direct or by Collaterall hand
They find us touch'd, we will our Kingdome give,
Our Crown, our Life, and all that we call Ours
To you in ſatisfaction. But if not,
Be you content to lend your paience to us,
And we ſhall joyntly labour with your ſoule
To give it due content.

Laer. Let this be ſo:
His meanes of death his obſcure buriall:
No Trophee, Sword, nor Hatchment ore his bones,
No Noble rite, nor formall oſtentation,
Cry to be heard, as twere from heaven to earth,
That I muſt call in queſtion.

King. So you ſhall;
And where th'offence is, let the great Axe fall.
I pray you goe with me. Exeunt.

Enter Horatio, with an Attendant.

Hora. What are they that would ſpeake with me?

Ser. Saylors ſir, they ſay they have Letters for you.

Hora. Let them come in,
I doe not know from what part of the world
I ſhould be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet.

Enter Saylor,

Say. God bleſſe your Sir.

Hora. Let him bleſſe thee too.

Say. He ſhall Sir, and't pleaſe him. Theres a Letter for you Sir: It comes from th'Ambaſſadours that was bound for England, if your name be Horatio: as I am let to know it is.

Reads the Letter.

Horatio, When thou ſhalt have overlook'd this, give these fellowes ſome meanes to the King: They have Letters for him. Ere we were two dayes old at Sea, a Pyrate of very Warlicke appointment gave us Chace. Finding our ſelves too ſlow of Saile, we put on a compelled Valour. In the Grapple, I boorded them: On the inſtant they got cleare of our Ship, ſo I alone became their Priſoner. They have dealt with me, like Theeves of Mercy, but they knew what they did. I am to doe a good turne for them. Let the King have the Letters I have ſent, and repaire thou to me with as much haſt as thou wouldeſt flye death I have words to ſpeake in your eare, will make thee dumbe, yet are they much too light for the bore of the Matter. Theſe goodfellowes will bring thee where I am. Roſincros and Guildenſtar, hold their courſe for England. Of them I have much to tell thee, Farewell.

He that thou knoweſt thine,
Hamlet.

Come, I wil give you way for theſe your Letters,
And do't the ſpeedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them. Exit.

Enter King and Laertes.

King. Now muſt your conſcience my acquittance ſeal,
And you muſt put me in your heart for friend,
Sith you have heard, and with a knowing eare,
That he which hath your Noble father ſlaine,
Purſued my life.

Laer. It well appeares. But tell me,
Why you proceeded not againſt aheſe feates,
So crimefull, and ſo Capitall in Nature,
As by your Safety, Wiſedome, all things elſe,
You mainely were ſtirr'd up?

King. O for two ſpeciall Reaſons,
Which may to you (perhaps) ſeeme much unſinnowed,
And yet to me they are ſtrong. The Queene his Mother,
Lives almoſt by his lookes: and for my ſelfe,
My Vertue or my Plague, be it either which,
Shes ſo conjunctive to my life and ſoule;
That as the Starre moves not but in his Sphere,
I could not but by her. The other Motive,
Why to a publike count I might not goe,
Is the great love the generall gender beare him,
Who dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would like the Spring that turneth Wood to Stone,
Convert his Gyves to Graces. So that my Arrowes
Too ſlightly timbred for ſo loud a Wind,
Would have reverted to my Bow againe,
And not where I had aym'd them.

Laer. And ſo have I a Noble father loſt,
A Siſter driven into deſperate tearmes,
Who was (if praiſes may goe backe againe)
Stood Challenger on mount of all the Age
For her perfections. But my revenge will come,

King. Breake not your ſleepes for that;
You muſt not thinke
That we are made of ſtuffe, ſo flat, and dull,
That we can let our Beard be ſhooke with danger,
And thinke it paſttime. You ſhortly ſhall heare more,
I lov'd your father, and we love your ſelfe,
And that I hope will teach you to imagine——

Enter a Meſſenger.

How now? What Newes?

Meſ. Letters my Lord from Hamlet. This to your Majeſty: this to the Queene.

King. From Hamlet? Who brought them?

Meſ. Saylors my Lord they ſay, I ſaw them not:
They were given me by Clandio, he receiv'd them.

King. Laertes you ſhall them:
Leave us. Exit Meſſenger.

High and Mighty, you ſhall know I am ſet naked on your Kingdome. To morrow ſhall I beg leave to ſee your Kingly Eyes When I ſhall (firſt asking your Pardon thereunto) recount th'Occaſions of my ſodaine, and more ſtrange returne. Hamlet.

What ſhould this meane? Are all the reſt come backe?
Or is it ſome abuſe? Or no ſuch thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. Tis Hamlets Character, naked, and in a Poſtſcript here he ſayes alone: Can you adviſe me?

Laer. I'm loſt in it my Lord, but let him come,
It warmes the very ſickneſſe in my heart,
That I ſhall live and tell him to his teeth:
Thus diddeſt thou.

King. If it be ſo Laertes, as how ſhould it be ſo?
How otherwiſe? will you be rul'd by me?

Laer. If ſo you'll not o'rerule me to a peace.

Kin. To thine owne peace: If he be now return'd,
As checking at his Voyage, and that he meanes
No more to undertake it; I will worke him
To an exploy t now ripe in my Device,
Vnder the which he ſhall not chooſe but fall:
And for his death no wind of blame ſhall breath,
But even his Mother ſhall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident: Some two Monthes hence
Here was a Gentleman of Normandy.
I've ſeene my ſelfe and ſeru'd againſt the French,
And they ran well on Horſebacke; but this Gallant

Had witchcraft in't ; he grew into his Seat,
And to ſuch wondrous doing brought his Horſe,
As had he been encorps't and demy-Natur'd
With the brave Beaſt, ſo farre he paſt my thought,
That I in forgery of ſhapes and trickes,
Come ſhort of what he did.
Laer. A Norman was't?
King. A Norman.
Lear. Vpon my life Lamound.
King. The very ſame.
Laer. I know him well, he is the Brooch indeed,
And Iemme of all our Nation.
King. He made confeſſion of you,
And gave you ſuch a Maſterly report,
For Art and exerciſe in your defence;
And for your Rapier moſt eſpecially,
That he cryed out, t'would be a ſight indeed,
If one could match you Sir. This report of his
Did Hamlet ſo envenom with his Envy,
That he could nothing doe but wiſh and begge,
Your ſodaine comming over to play with him;
Now out of this.
Laer. Why out of this, my Lord?
King. Laertes, was your Father deare to you?
Or are you like the painting of a ſorrow,
A face without a heart?
Laer. Why aske you this?
Kin. Not that I thinke you did not love your Father,
But that I know Love is begun by Time:
And that I ſee in paſſages of proofe,
Time qualifies the ſparke and fire of it:
Hamlet come backe; what would you undertake,
To ſhew your ſelfe your Fathers ſonne indeed,
More than in words?
Laer. To cut his throat i'th'Church.
Kin. No place indeed ſhould murder Sanctuarize;
Revenge ſhould have no bounds: but good Laertes,
Will you doe this, keepe cloſe within your Chamber?
Hamlet return'd, ſhall know you are come home:
Wee'l put on thoſe ſhall praiſe your excellence,
And ſet a double varniſh on the ſame
The Frenchman gave you, bring you in fine together,
And wager on your heads, he being remiſſe,
Moſt generous, and free from all contriving,
Will not peruſe the Foiles? So that with eaſe,
Or with a little ſhuffling, you may chooſe
A Sword unbaited, and in a paſſe of practice,
Requit him for your Father.
Laer. I will doo't,
And for that purpoſe Ile annoiot my Sword:
I bought an Vnction of a Mountebanke
So mortall, I but dipt a knife in it,
Where it drawes blood, no Cataplaſme ſo rare,
Collected from all Simples that have Vertue
Vnder the Moone, can ſave the thing from death,
That is but ſcratcht withall: Ile touch my point,
With this contagion, that if I gall him ſlightly,
It may be death.
Kin. Let's further thinke of this,
Weigh what convenience both of time and meanes
May fit us to our ſhape, if this ſhould faile;
And that our drift looke through our bad performance,
Twere better not aſſaid; therefore this Project
Should have a backe or ſecond, that might hold,
If this ſhould blaſt in proofe: Soft, let me ſee
Wee'l make a ſolemne wager on your commings,
I ha't: when in your motion you are hot and dry,
As make your bowts more violent to the end,
And that he cals for drinke; Ile have prepar'd him
A Challice for the nonce; whereon but ſipping,
If he by chance eſcape your venom'd ſtuck,
Our purpoſe may hold there; how now ſweet Queene.

Enter Queene.

Queen. One woe doth tread upon anothers heele,
So faſt they'l follow: your Siſter's drown'd Laertes.
Laer. Drown'd! O where?
Queen. There is a Willow growes aſlant a Brooke,
That ſhewes his hore leaves in the glaſſie ſtreame:
There with fantaſticke Garlands did ſhe come,
Of Crow-flowers, Nettles, Dayſies, and long Purples,
That liberall Shepheards give a groſſer name;
But our cold Maids doe Dead Mens Fingers call them:
There on the pendant boughes, her Coronet weeds
Clambring to hang; an envious ſliver broke,
When downe the weedy Trophies, and her ſelfe,
Fell in the weeping Brooke, her cloathes ſpred wide,
And Mermaid-like, a while they bore her up,
Which time ſhe chaunted ſnatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her owne diſtreſſe,
Or like a creature Native, and deduced
Vnto that element: but long it could not be,
Till that her garments, heavy with their drinke,
Pull'd the poore wretch from her melodious by,
To muddy death.
Laer. Alas then, is ſhe drown'd?
Queen. Drown'd, drown'd.
Laer. Too much of water haſt thou poore Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my teares: but yet
It is our tricke, Nature her cuſtome holds,
Let ſhame ſay what it will; when theſe are gone
The woman will be out: Adue my Lord,
I have a ſpeech of fire, that faine would blaze,
But that this folly drownes it. Exit.
King. Let's follow, Gertrude:
How much I had to doe to calme his rage?
Now feare I this will give it ſtart againe;
Therefore let's follow. Exeunt.

Enter two Clownes.

Clown. Is ſhee to be buried in Chriſtian buriall, that wilfully ſeekes her owne ſalvation?

Other. I tell thee ſhe is, and therefore make her Grave ſtraight, the Crowner hath ſate on her, and finds it Chriſtian buriall.

Clo. How can that be, unleſſe ſhe drowned her ſelfe in her owne defence?

Other. Why 'tis found ſo.

Clo. It muſt be Se offendendo, it cannot be elſe: for here lies the point: If I drowne my ſelfe wittingly, it argues an Act: and an Act hath three branches. It is an Act to doe, and to performe; argall ſhe drown'd her ſelfe wittingly.

Other. Nay but here you Goodman Delver.

Clown. Give me leave; here lies the water, good: here ſtands the man, good: if the man goe to this water and drowne himſelfe; it is will he, nill he, hee goes; marke you that? But if the water come to him & drowne him; he drownes not himſelfe. Argall, he that is not guilty of his owne death, ſhortens not his owne life.

Other. But is this Law?

Clo. I marry is't, Crowners Queſt Law.

Other. Will you ha the truth on't: if this had not been a Gentlewoman, ſhee ſhould have beene buried out of Chriſtian Buriall.

Clo. Why there thou ſay'ſt. And the more pitty that great folke ſhould have countenance in this world to drowne or hang themſelves, more than their even Chriſtian. Come, my Spade; there is no ancient Gentlemen, but Gardiners, Ditchers and Grave-makers; they hold up Adams profeſſion.

Other. Was he a Gentleman?

Clo. He was the firſt that ever bore Armes.

Other. Why he had none.

Clo. What, art a Heathen? how doſt thou underſtand the Scripture? the Scripture ſayes Adam digg'd; could he digge without Armes? Ile put another queſtion to thee? if thou anſwereſt me not to the purpoſe, confeſſe thy ſelfe——

Other. Goe to.

Clo. What is he that builds ſtronger than either the Maſon, the Shipwright or the Carpenter?

Other. The Gallowes maker, for that Frame out-lives a thouſand Tenants.

Clo. I like thy wit well in good faith, the Gallowes does well; but how does it well? it does well to thoſe that doe ill: now thou doſt ill to ſay the Gallowes is built ſtronger than the Church: Argall, the Gallowes may doe well to thee. Too't againe, Come.

Other. Who builds ſtronger than a Maſon, a Shipwright, or a Carpenter?

Clo. I, tell me that, and unyoke.

Other. Marry, now I can tell.

Clo. Too't.

Other. Maſſe, I cannot tell.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio a farre off.

Clo. Cudgell thy braines no more about it; for your dull Aſſe will not mend his pace with beating; and when you are askt this queſtion next, ſay a Grave-maker: the Houſes that he makes, laſts till Doomes-day: go, get thee to Yaughan, fetch me a ſtoape of Liquor.

Sings.

In youth when I did love, did love,
me thought it was very ſweet,
To contract O the for a my behove,
O me thought there was nothing meet.

Ham. Ha's this fellow no feeling of his buſineſſe, that he ſings at Grave-making?

Hor. Cuſtome hath made it in him a property of eaſineſſe.

Ham. Tis ee'n ſo; the hand of little imployment hath the daintier ſenſe.

Clowne ſings.

But Age with his ſtealing ſteps
hath caught me in his clutch:
And hath ſhipped me intill the Land,
as if I had never been ſuch.

Ham. That Scull had a tongue in it, and could ſing once; how the Knave jowles it to th' ground, as if it were Caines Iaw-bone, that did the firſt murther; It might be the Pate of a Polititian which this Aſſe ore-Offices: one that could circumvent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my Lord.

Ham. Or of a Courtier, which could ſay, Good Morrow ſweet Lord: how doſt thou, good Lord? this might be my Lord ſuch a one, that prais'd my Lord ſuch a ones horſe, when he meant to begge it; might it not?

Hor. I, my Lord.

Ham. Why ee'n ſo: and now my Lady Wormes, Chapleſſe, and knockt about the Mazzard with a Sextons Spade; heere's fine Revolution, if we had the tricke to ſee't. Did theſe bones coſt no more the breeding, but to play at Loggets with 'em? mine ake to thinke on't.

Clowne ſings.

A Picke-axe and a Spade, a Spade,
for and a ſhrowding-ſheet:
O a Pit of Clay for to be made,
for ſuch a Gueſt is meet.

Ham. There's another: why might not that be the Scull of a Lawyer? where be his Quiddits now? his Quillets? his Caſes? his Tenures, and his Trickes? why doe's he ſuffer this rude knave now to knocke him about the Sconce with a dirty Shovell, and will not tell him of his Action of Battery? hum. This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of Land, with his Statutes, his Recognizances, his Fines, his double Vouchers, his Recoveries: Is this the fine of his Fines, and the recovery of his Recoveries, to have his fine Pate full of fine Dirt? will his Vouchers vouch him no more of his Purchaſes, and double ones too, then the length and breadth of a paire of Indentures? the very Conveyances of his Lands will hardly lye in this Boxe; and muſt the Inheritor himſelfe have no more? ha?

Hor. Not a jot more my Lord.

Ham. Is not Parchment made of Sheep-skinnes?

Hor. I my Lord, and of Calve-skinnes too.

Ham. They are Sheepe and Calves that ſeeke out aſſurance in that. I will ſpeake to this fellow: whoſe Grave's this Sir?

Clo. Mine Sir:

O a pit of Clay for to be made,
for ſuch a Gueſt is meet.

Ham. I thinke it be thine indeed: for thou lieſt in't.

Clo. You lie out on't Sir, and therefore it is not yours: for my part I doe not lie in't, and yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou doſt lye in't, to be in't, and ſay tis thine: tis for the dead, not for the quicke, therefore thou lyeſt.

Clo. Tis a quicke lye Sir, twill away againe from mee to you.

Ham. What man doſt thou digge it for?

Clo. For no man Sir.

Ham. What woman then?

Clo. For none neither.

Ham, Who is to be buried in't?

Clo. One that was a woman Sir; but reſt her ſoule ſhee's dead.

Ham. How abſolute the Knave is? wee muſt ſpeake by the Carde, or equivocation will follow us: by the Lord Horatio, theſe three yeares I have taken note of it, the Age is growne ſo picked, and the toe of the Peſant comes ſo neare the heele of our Courtier, hee galls his Kibe. How long haſt thou been a Grave-maker?

Clo. Of all the dayes i'th' yeare, I came too't that day that our laſt King Hamlet orecame Fortinbras.

Ham. How long is that ſince?

Clo. Cannot you tell that? every foole can tell that: It was the very day that young Hamlet was borne, hee that was mad and ſent into England.

Ham. I marry, why was he ſent into England?

Clo. Why, becauſe he was mad; he ſhall recover his wits there; or if he doe not, its no great matter there.

Ham. Why?

Clown. Twill not be ſeene in him, there the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?

Clo. Very ſtrangely they ſay.

Ham. How ſtrangely?

Clo. Faith e'ene with looſing his wits.

Ham. Vpon what ground?

Clo. Why here in Denmarke: I have been Sexeſtone here, Man and Boy thirty yeeres.

Ham. How long will a man lie 'ith'earth ere he rot?

Clo. Ifaith, if he be not rotten before he dye (as we have many pocky Coarſes now adayes, that will ſcarce hold the laying in) he will laſt you ſome eight yeere, or nine yeare. A Tanner will laſt you nine yeares.

Ham. Why he, more than another?

Clo. Why ſir, his hide is ſo tan'd with his Trade, that he will keepe out water a great while. And your water is a ſore Decayer of your whorſon dead body, heres a Scull now: this Scull has laine in the earth three and twenty yeeres.

Ham. Whoſe was it?

Clo. A whoreſon mad Fellowes it was;
Whoſe doe you thinke it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

Clo. A peſtilence on him for a mad Rogue, a pow'r'd a Flagon of Reniſh on my head once. This ſame Scull Sir, this ſame Scull ſir, was Yoricks Scull the Kings Ieſter.

Ham. This?

Clo. E'ene that.

Ham. Let me ſee. Alas poore Yoricke, I knew him Horatio, a fellow of infinit Ieſt; of moſt excellent fancy, he hath borne me on his backe a thouſand times: And how abhorred my imagination is, my gorge riſes at it. Here hung thoſe lippes, that I have kiſt I know not how oft. Where be your Iibes now? Your Gambals? Your Songs? Your flaſhes of Merriment that were wont to ſet the Table on a Rore? No one now to mocke your own Ieering? Quite chopfalne? Now get you to my Ladies Chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thicke, to this favour ſhe muſt come. Make her laugh at that: prythee Horatio tell me one thing,

Hor. What's that my Lord?

Ham. Doſt thou thinke Alexander lookt o'this faſhion i'th'earth?

Hor. E'ene ſo.

Ham. And ſmelt ſo? Puh.

Hor. E'ene ſo my Lord.

Ham. To what baſe uſes we may returne Horatio. Why may not imagination trace the Noble duſt of Alexander, till he find it ſtopping a bunghole.

Hor. Twere to conſider: too curiouſly to conſider ſo.

Ham. No faith, not a jot. But to follow him thither with modeſty enough, and likelihood to lead it; as thus. Alexander dyed: Alexander was buried: Alexander returneth into duſt; the duſt is earth; of earth we make Lome, and why of that Lome (whereto he was converted) might they not ſtop a Beere-barrell?
Imperiall Cæſar, dead and turn'd to clay,
Might ſtop a hole to keepe the wind away.
Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a Wall, expell the Winters flaw.
But ſoft, but ſoft, aſide; heere comes the King.

Enter King, Queene, Laertes, and a Coffin, with Lords attendant.

The Queene, the Courtiers. Who is't that they follow,
And with ſuch maimed rights? This doth betoken,
The Coarſe they follow, did with deſperate hand,
Foredoe it owne life; twas ſome Eſtate.
Couch we a while, and marke.

Laer. What Ceremony elſe?

Ham. That is Laertes, a very Noble youth: Marke.

Laer. What Ceremony elſe?

Prieſt. Her Obſequies have beene as farre enlarg'd,
As we have warrantie, her death was doubtfull,
And but that great command, o'reſwayes the order,
She ſhould in ground unſanctied have lodg'd,
Till the laſt Trumpet. For charitable prayer,
Shardes, Flints, and Peebles, ſhould be throwne on her;
Yet here ſhe is allowed her Virgin Rites,
Her Maiden ſtrewments, and the bringing home
Of Bell and Buriall.

Laer. Muſt there no more be done?

Prieſt. No more be done:
We ſhould prophane the ſervice of the dead,
To ſing ſage Requiem, and ſuch reſt to her
As to peace-parted Soules.

Laer. Lay her i'th'earth,
And from her faire and unpolluted fleſh,
May Violets ſpring. I tell thee (churliſh Prieſt)
A Miniſtring Angell ſhall my Siſter be,
When thou lieſt howling?

Ham. What, the faire Ophelia?

Queen. Sweets, to the ſweet farewell,
I hop'd thou ſhould'ſt have been my Hamlets wife:
I thought thy Bride-bed to have deckt (ſweet Maid)
And not t'have ſtrew'd thy Grave.

Laer. Oh terrible wooer,
Fall ten times trebble on that curſed head
Whoſe wicked deed, thy moſt ingenious ſenſe
Depriv'd thee of. Hold off the earth a while,
Till I have caught her once more in mine armes:
Leaps in the grave.
Now pile your duſt upon the quicke and dead,
Till of this flat a mountaine you have made,
To o'retop old Pelion, or the skyiſh head
Of blew Olympus.

Ham. What is he, whoſe griefes
Beares ſuch an Emphaſis? whoſe phraſe of ſorrow
Conjures the wandring Starres, and makes them ſtand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

Laer. The Divell take thy ſoule.

Ham. Thou prai'ſt not well,
I prythee take thy fingers from my throat;
Sir though I am not ſpleenative and raſh,
Yet have I ſomething in me dangerous,
Which let thy wiſeneſſe feare. Away thy hand

King. Plucke them aſunder.

Queen. Hamlet, Hamlet.

Gen. Good my Lord be quiet.

Ham. Why I will fight with him upon this Theame.
Vntill my eye-lids will no longer wag.

Queen. Oh my Sonne, what Theame?

Ham. I lov'd Ophelia; forty thouſand brothers
Could not (with all their quantity of love)
Make up my ſumme. What wilt thou doe for her?

King. Oh he is mad Laertes,

Qu. For love of God forbeare him.

Ham. Come ſhew me what thou'lt doe.
Woo't weepe? woo't fight? woo't teare thy ſelfe?
Woo't drinke up Eſile, eate a Crocodile?

Ile doo't. Doſt thou come here to whine;
To outface me with leaping in her Graue?
Be buried quicke with her, and ſo will I.
And if thou prate of Mountaines; let them throw
Millions of Akers on vs; till our ground
Sindging his pate againſt the burning Zone,
Make Oſſa like a Wart. Nay, and thou'lt mouthe,
Ile rant as well as thou.

King. This is meere madneſſe:
And thus a while the fit will worke on him:
Anon as patient as the female Dove,
When that her golden Cuplet are diſclos'd;
His ſilence will ſit drooping.

Ham. Heare you ſir:
What is the reaſon that you uſe me thus?
I lov'd you ever; but it is no matter:
Let Hercules himſelfe doe what he may,
The Cat will mew, and Dog will have his day. Exit.

King. I pray you good Horatio wait upon him,
Strengthen you patience in our laſt nights ſpeech,
Wee'l put the matter to the preſent puſh:
Good Gertrude ſet ſome watch over your ſonne,
This Grave ſhall have a living Monument:
An houre of quiet ſhortly ſhall we ſee;
Till then in patience our proceeding be. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio.

Ham. So much for this ſir; now let me ſee the other,
You doe remember all the circumſtance.

Hor. Remember it my Lord.

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me ſleepe; me thought I lay
Worſe than the mutines in the Bilboes, raſhly,
(And praiſe be raſhneſſe for it) let us know,
Our indiſcretion ſometimes ſerves us well,
When our deare plots do paule, and that ſhould teach us,
There's a Divinity that ſhapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is moſt certaine.

Ham. Vp from my Cabin
My Sea-gowne ſcarft about me in the darke,
Grop'd I to find out them; had my deſire,
Finger'd their Packet, and in fine, withdrew
To mine owne roome againe, making ſo bold,
(My teares forgetting manners) to unſeale
Their grand Commiſſion, where I found Horatio,
Oh royall knavery; An exact command,
Larded with many ſeverall ſorts of reaſon;
Importing Denmarks health, and Englands too,
With hoo, ſuch Bugges and Goblins in my life,
That on the ſupervize no leaſure bated,
No not to ſtay the gringding of the Axe,
My head ſhould be ſtrucke off.

Hor. Iſt poſſible?

Ham. Here's the Commiſſion, reade it at more leiſure:
But wilt thou heare how I did proceed?

Hor. I beſeech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with Villaines,
Ere I could make a Prologue to my braines,
They had begun the Play. I ſate me downe,
Devis'd a new Commiſſion, wrote it faire,
I once did hold it as our Statiſts doe,
A baſeneſſe to write faire; and laboured much
How to forget that learning: but ſir now,
It did me yeomans ſervice: wilt thou know
The effects of what I wrote?

Hor. I, good my Lord.

Ham. An earneſt Conjuration from the King;
As England was his faithfull Tributary,
As love betweene them, as the Palme ſhould flouriſh,
As Peace ſhould ſtill her wheaten Garland weare,
And ſtand a Comma tweene their amities,
And many ſuch like Aſſis of great charge,
That on the view and know of theſe Contents,
Without debatement further, more or leſſe,
He ſhould the bearers put to ſodaine death,
Not ſhriving time allowed.

Hor. How was this ſeal'd?

Ham. Why, even in that was heaven ordinate;
I had my fathers Signet in my Purſe,
Which was the Modell of that Daniſh Seale:
Folded the Writ up in forme of the other,
Subſcrib'd it, gau'th' Impreſſion, plac'd it ſafely,
The changling never knowne: Now, the next day
Was our Sea-fight, and what to this was ſement,
Thou know'ſt already.

Hor. So Guildenſtare and Roſincros, goe too't.

Ham. Why man, they did make love to this imployment
They are not neere my conſcience; their debate
Doth by their owne inſinuation grow:
Tis dangerous when baſer nature comes
Betweene the paſſe, and fell incenſed points
Of mighty oppoſites.

Hor. Why, what a King is this?

Ham. Does it not, think'ſt thee, ſtand me now vpon,
He that hath kill'd my King, and whor'd my Mother,
Popt in betweene th' election and my hopes,
Throwne out his Angle for my proper life,
And with ſuch cozenage; is't not perfect conſcience,
To quit him with his arme? And is't not to be damn'd
To let this Canker of our nature come
In further evill.

Hor. It muſt be ſhortly knowne to him from England
What is the iſſue of the buſineſſe there.

Ham. It will be ſhort,
The interim's mine, and a mans life's no more
Than to ſay one: but I am very ſorry good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot my ſelfe;
For by the image of my cauſe I ſee
The portraiture of his; Ile count his favours:
But ſure the bravery of his griefe did put me
Into a Towring paſſion.

2*Hor*. Peace, who comes here?

Enter Oſricke.

Oſr. Your Lordſhip is right welcome backe to Denmarke.

Ham. I humbly thanke you ſir, doſt know this waterfly?

Hor. No my good Lord.

Ham. Thy ſtate is the more gracious; for tis a Vice to know him: hee hath much Land, and fertile; let a Beaſt be Lord of Beaſts, and his Crib ſhall ſtand at the Kings Meſſe; tis a Chough; but as I ſay, ſpacious in the poſſeſſion of dirt.

Oſr. Swet Lord, if your friendſhip were at leaſure, I ſhould impart a thing to you from his Majeſty.

Ham. I will receive it with all diligence of ſpirit; put your Bonnet to his right uſe, tis for the head.

Oſr, I thanke your Lordſhip, tis very hot.

Ham. No, beleeve mee, tis very cold, the wind is Northerly.

Oſr. It is indifferent cold my Lord indeed.

Ham. Mee thinkes it is very ſoultry, and hot for my Complexion.

Orſ. Exceedingly, my Lord, it is very ſoultry, as 'twere I cannot tell how: but my Lord, his Majeſty bad me ſignifie to you, that he has laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter.
Ham. I beſeech you remember.
Oſr. Nay, in good faith, for mine eaſe in good faith: Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon.
Ham. What's his weapon?
Orſ. Rapier and Dagger.
Ham. That's two of his weapons; but well.
Orſ. The King ſir has wag'd with him ſixe Barbary horſes, againſt the which he impon'd, as I take it, ſixe French Rapiers and Poniards, with their aſſignes, as Girdle, Hangers, or ſo: three of the carriages infaith are very deare to fancy, very reſponſive to the hilts, moſt delicate carriages, and of very liberall conceit.
Ham. What call you the Carriages?
Orſ. The Carriages Sir, are the Hangers.
Ham. The phraſe would be more Germane to the matter: If we could carry Cannon by out ſides; I would it might be Hangers till then; but on, ſixe Barbary Horſes, againſt ſixe French Swords: their Aſſignes and three liberall conceited carriages, that's the French, but againſt the Daniſh; why is this impon'd as you call it?
Orſ. The King Sir, hath laid that in a dozen paſſes betweene you and him, he ſhall not exceed you three hits; He hath one twelve for mine, and that would come to immediate triall, if your Lordſhip would vouchſafe the Anſwer.
Ham. How if I anſwer no?
Orſ. I meane my Lord the oppoſition of your perſon in triall.
Ham. Sir, I will walke here in the Hall; if it pleaſe his Majeſtie, 'tis the breathing time of day with me; let the Foyles be brought, the Gentleman willing, and the King hold his purpoſe; I will winne for him if I can: if not, Ile gaine nothing but my ſhame, and the odde hits.
Orſ. Shall I redeliver you ee'n ſo?
Ham. To this effect Sir, after what flouriſh your nature will.
Oſr. I commend my duty to your Lordſhip. Exit.
Ham. Yours, yours; he does well to commend it himſelfe, there are no tongues elſe for's tongue:
Hor. This Lapwing runs away with the ſhell on his head.
Ham. He did Comply with his Dug before he ſuck't it: thus had he and nine more of the ſame Beavy that I know the droſſie Age dotes on; onely got the tune of the time, and outward habite of encounter, a kinde of yeſty collection, which carries them through & through the moſt fond and winnowed opinions; and doe but blow them to their tryalls, the Bubbles are out.
Hor. You will loſe this wager, my Lord.
Ham. I doe not thinke ſo, ſince he went into France, I have beene in continuall practice; I ſhall winne at the oddes; but thou wouldeſt not thinke how all heere about my heart: but it is no matter.
Hor. Nay, good my Lord.
Ham. It is but foolery; but it is ſuch a kind of gaingiving as would perhaps trouble a woman.
Hor. If your mind diſlike any thing, obey. I will foreſtall their repaire hither, and ſay you are not fit.
Ham. Not a whit, we defie Augury; theres a ſpeciall Providence in the fall of a ſparrow. If it be now, tis not to come: if it be not to come, it will be now: if it be not now; yet it will come; the readineſſe is all, ſince no man ha's ought of what he leaves. What is't to leave betimes?

Enter King, Queene, Laertes and Lords, with other Attendants with Foyles, and Gauntlets, a Table and Flagons of Wine on it.

Kin. Come Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.
Ham. Give me your pardon ſir, I've done you wrong,
But pardon't as you are a Gentleman.
This preſence knowes,
And you muſt needs have heard how I am puniſh'd
With ſore diſtraction? What I have done
That might your natures honor, and exception
Roughly awake, I here proclaime was madneſſe:
Was't Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Never Hamlet:
If Hamlet from himſelfe be tane away:
And when he's not himſelfe, do's wrong Laertes,
Then Hamlet doe's it not, Hamlet denies it:
Who does it then? His madneſſe? If't be ſo,
Hamlet is of the Faction that is wrong'd,
His Madneſſe is poore Hamlets enemy.
Sir, in this Audience,
Let my diſclaiming from a purpos'd evill,
Free me ſo farre in your moſt generous thoughts,
That I have ſhot mine Arrow o're the houſe,
And hurt my Mother.
Laer. I am ſatisfied in Nature,
Whoſe motive in this caſe ſhould ſtirre me moſt
To my Revenge. But in my termes of honor
I ſtand aloofe, and will no reconcilement,
Till by ſome elder Maſters of knowne honour,
I have a voyce, and preſident of peace
To keepe my name ungorg'd. But till that time,
I doe receive your offer'd love like love,
And will not wrong it.
Ham. I doe embrace it freely,
And will this brothers wager frankely play.
Give us the Foyles: Come on.
Laer. Come one for me.
Ham. Ile be your Foyle Laertes, in mine ignorance,
Your skill ſhall like a Starre i'th'brighteſt night,
Sticke fiery off indeed.
Laer. You mocke me ſir.
Ham. No, by this hand.
Kin. Give the Foyles young Oſricke,
Couſen Hamlet, you know the wager.
Ham. Very well my Lord,
Your Grace hath laid the oddes a'th'weaker ſide.
King. I doe not feare it,
I have ſeene you both:
But ſince he is better'd, we have therefore oddes.
Laer. This is too heavy,
Let me ſee another.
Ham. This likes me well,
Theſe Foyles have have all a length. Prepare to Play.
Oſr. I my good Lord.
King. Set me the Stopes of Wine upon that Table;
If Hamlet give the firſt, or ſecond hit,
Or quit in anſwer of the third exchange,
Let all the Battlements their Ordnance fire,
The King ſhall drinke to Hamlets better breath,
And in the Cup an union ſhall he throw
Richer than that, which foure ſucceſſive Kings
In Denmarkes Crowne have worne.]

Give me the Cups,
And let the Kettle to the Trumpets ſpeake,
The Trumpet to the Canoneer without,
The Cannons to the Heavens, the Heaven to Earth,
Now the King drinkes to Hamlet. Come, begin,
And you the Iudges beare a wary eye,
Ham. Come on ſir.
Laer. Come on ſir. They play.
Ham. One.
Laer. No.
Ham. Iudgement.
Oſr. A hit, a very palpable hit.
Laer. Well: againe.
King. Stay, give me drinke.
Hamlet, this Pearle is thine,
Here's to thy health. Give him the Cup,
Trumpet ſound, ſhot goes off.
Ham. Ile play this bout firſt, ſet by a while.
Come: Another hit; what ſay you?
Laer. A touch, a tonch, I doe confeſſe.
King. Our ſonne ſhall win.
Qu. He's fat, and ſcant of breath.
Here's a Napkin, rub thy browes,
The Queene Carowſes to thy fortune, Hamlet.
Ham. Good Madam.
King. Gertrude, doe not drinke.
Qu. I will my Lord;
I pray you pardon me.
King. It is the poyſon'd Cup, it is too late.
Ham. I dare not drinke yet Madam,
By and by.
Qu. Come, let me wipe thy face.
Laer. My Lord Ile hit him now.
King. I doe not think't.
Laer. And yet 'tis almoſt 'gainſt my conſcience.
Ham. Come, for the third.
Laertes, you but dally,
I pray you paſſe with your beſt violence,
I am affeard you make a wanton of me.
Laer. Say you ſo? Come on. Play.
Oſr. Nothing neither way.
Laer. Have at you now.
In ſcuffling they change Rapiers.
King. Part them, they are incens'd.
Ham. Nay, come againe.
Oſr. Looke to the Queene there hoa.
Hor. They bleed on both ſides. How is't my Lord?
Oſr. How is't Laertes?
Laer. Why as a Woodcocke
To my Sprindge, Oſricke,
I am juſtly kill'd with mine owne treachery.
Ham. How does the Queene?
King. She ſounds to ſee them bleed.
Qu. No, no the drinke, the drinke,
Oh my deare Hamlet, the drinke, the drinke,
I am poyſon'd.
Ham. Oh Villany! How? Let the doore be lock'd;
Treachery, ſeeke it out.
Laer. It is here Hamlet.
Hamlet, thou art ſlaine,
No medicine in the world can doe thee good.
In thee there is not halfe an houre of life;
The treacherous Inſtrument is in thy hand,
Vnbated and envenom'd: the foule practiſe
Hath turn'd it ſelfe on me, Loe, here I lye,
Never to riſe againe: Thy Mothers poyſon'd:
I can no more, the King, the King's to blame.
Ham. The point envenom'd too,
Then venome to thy worke.
Hurts the King.
All. Treaſon, Treaſon.
King. O yet defend me Friends, I am but hurt.
Ham. Heere thou inceſtuous, murdrous,
Damned Dane.
Drinke off this Potion: Is thy Vnion here?
Follow my Mother. King Dyes.
Laer. He is juſtly ſerv'd:
It is a poyſon temp'red by himſelfe:
Exchange forgiveneſſe with me, Noble Hamlet;
Mine and my Fathers death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Dyes.
Ham. Heaven make thee free of it, I follow thee.
I am dead Heratio, wretched Queene adiew,
You that looke pale and tremble at this chance,
That are but Mutes or audience at this act:
Had I but time (as this fell Sergeant death
Is ſtrick't in this Arreſt) oh I could tell you,
But let it be: Horatio, I am dead,
Thou liv'ſt, report me and my cauſes right
To the unſatisfied.
Hor. Never beleeve it.
I am more an Antike Roman then a Dane:
Heere's yet ſome Liquor left.
Ham. As th'art a man, give me the Cup,
Let go, by heaven Ile have't.
Oh good Horatio, what a wounded name,
(Things ſtanding thus unknowne) ſhall live behind me.
If thou did'ſt ever hold me in thy heart,
Abſent thee from felicitie a while,
And in this harſh world draw thy breath in paine,
To tell my Storie.
March a farre off, and ſhout within.
What warlike noyſe is this?

Enter Oſricke. (land,
Oſr. Yong Fortinbras, with conqueſt come from Po-
To th'Ambaſſadors of England gives this warlike volly.
Ham. O I dye Horatio;
The potent poyſon quie ore-crowes my ſpirit,
I cannot live to heare the Newes from England.
But I doe propheſie th'election lights
On Fortinbras, he ha's my dying voyce,
So tell him with the occurrents more and leſſe,
Which have ſolicited. The reſt is ſilence, O, o, o, o, Dies.
Horo. Now cracks a Noble heart:
Goodnight ſweet Prience,
And flights of Angels ſing thee to thy reſt,
Why do's the Drumme come hither?

Enter Fortinbras and Engliſh Ambaſſador, with Drumme, Colours, and Attendents.
Fort. Where is this ſight?
Hor. What is it ye would ſee;
If ought of woe or wonder, ceaſe your ſearch.
For. His quarry cries on Havocke. Oh proud death,
What Feaſt is toward in thine eternall Cell.
That thou ſo many Princes at a ſhoot,
So bloodily haſt ſtrooke.
Amb. The ſight is diſmall,
And our affaires from England come too late,
The eares are ſenſeleſſe that ſhould give us hearing,
To tell him his command'ment is fulfill'd,

That Roſincros and Guildenſtern are dead:
Where ſhould we have our thankes?
Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it th'ability of life to thanke you:
He never gave command'ment for their death.
But ſince ſo jumpe upon this bloody queſtion,
You from the Polake warres, and you from England
Are here arrived. Give order that theſe bodies
High on a ſtage be placed to the view,
And let me ſpeake to th'yet unknowing world,
How theſe things came about. So ſhall you heare
Of carnall, bloody, and unnaturall acts,
Of accidentall judgements, caſuall ſlaughters
Of death's put on by cunning, and forc'd cauſe,
And in this upſhot, purpoſes miſtooke,
Falne on the Inventors heads. All this can I
Truly deliver.
For. Let us haſte to heare it,
And call the Nobleſt to the Audience.
For me, with ſorrow, I embrace my Fortune,
I have ſome Rites of memory in this Kingdome,
Which are to claime, my vantage doth
Invite me.
Hor. Of that I ſhall alwayes cauſe to ſpeake
And from his mouth
Whoſe voyce will draw on more:
But let this ſame be preſently perform'd,
Even whiles mens mindes are wilde,
Leſt more miſchance
On plots, and errours happen.
For. Let foure Captaines
Beare Hamlet like a Souldier to the Stage,
For he was likely, had he beene put on
To have prov'd moſt royally:
And for his paſſage,
The Souldiers Muſicke, and the rites of Warre
Speake loudly for him.
Take up the body; Such a ſight as this
Becomes the Field, but here ſhewes much amiſſe.
Goe, bid the Souldiers ſhoot.
Exeunt Marching: after the which, a Peale of Ordnance are ſhot off.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF KING LEAR.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Kent, Glouceſter, and Edmond.

Kent.

I Thought the King had more affected the Duke of Albany, then Cornwall.

Glou. It did alwayes ſeeme to us: But now in the diviſion of the Kingdome, it appeares not which of the Dukes he values moſt, for qualities are ſo weigh'd, that curioſity in neither, can make choiſe of eithers moity.

Kent. Is not this your ſonne, my Lord?

Glou. His breeding Sir, hath been at my charge. I have ſo often bluſh'd to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd too't.

Kent. I cannot conceive you.

Glou. Sir, this yong Fellowes mother could; whereupon ſhe grew round womb'd, and had indeed (Sir) a Sonne for her Cradle, ere ſhe had a husband for her bed. Doe you ſmell a fault?

Kent. I cannot wiſh the fault undone, the iſſue of it being ſo proper.

Glou. But I have a Sonne, Sir, by order of Law, ſome yeere elder than this; who, yet is no dearer in my account, though this Knave came ſomething ſawcily to the world before hee was ſent for: yet was his Mother faire, there was good ſport at his making, and the whorſon muſt be acknowledged. Doe you know this Nobleman, Edmond?

Edm. No, my Lord.

Glou. My Lord of Kent:
Remember him hereafter, as my honourable Friend.

Edm. My ſervices to your Lordſhip.

Kent. I muſt love you, and ſue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I ſhall ſtudy deſerving.

Glou. He hath been out nine yeares, and away he ſhall againe. The King is comming.

Sennet. Enter King Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Generill, Regan, Cordelia, and attendants.

Lear. Attend the Lords of France & Burgundy, Gloſter.

Glou. I ſhall my Lord. Exit.

Lear. Meane time we ſhal expreſſe our darker purpoſe.
Give me the Map there. Know, that we have divided
In three, our Kingdome: and 'tis our faſt intent,
To ſhake all cares and buſineſſe from our Age,
Conferring them on yonger ſtrengths, while we
Vnburthen'd crawle toward death. Our ſon of Cornwall,
And you our no leſſe loving Sonne of Albany,
We have this houre a conſtant will to publiſh
Our Daughters ſeverall Dowers, that future ſtrife
May be preveted now. The Princes, France, & Burgundy.
Great Rivals in our yonger daughters love,
Long in our Court, have made their amorous ſojourne,
And here are to be anſwer'd. Tell me my daughters
(Since now we will diveſt us both of Rule,
Intereſt of Territory, Cares of State)
Which of you ſhall we ſay doth love us moſt,
That we, our largeſt bounty may extend
Where nature doth with merit challenge. Generill,
Our eldeſt borne, ſpeake firſt.

Gon. Sir, I love you more than word can weild the (matter,
Dearer than eye-ſight, ſpace, and liberty,
Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare,
No leſſe than life, with grace, health, beauty, honor:
As much, as childe ere lov'd, or Father found.
A love that makes breath poore, and ſpeech unable,
Beyond all manner of ſo much I love you.

Cor. What ſhall Cordelia ſpeake? Love, and be ſilent.

Lear. Of all theſe bounds even from this Line, to this,
With ſhadowy Forreſts, and with Champions rich'd
With plenteous Rivers, and wide-ſkirted Meades
We make thee Lady. To thine and Albanies iſſues
Be this perpetuall. What ſayes our ſecond Daughter,
Our deareſt Regan, wife of Cornwall?

Reg. I am made of that ſelfe-mettle as my ſiſter,
And prize me at her worth. In my true heart,
I finde ſhe names my very deed of love:
Onely ſhe comes too ſhort, that I profeſſe
My ſelfe an enemy to all other joyes,
Which the moſt precious ſquare of ſenſe profeſſes,
And finde I am alone felicitate
In your deere Highneſſe love.

Cor. Then poore Cordelia,
And yet not ſo, ſince I am ſure my love's
More ponderous than my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine hereditary ever,
Remaine this ample third of our faire Kingdome,
No leſſe in ſpace, validity, and pleaſure
Than that conferr'd on Generill. Now our Ioy,
Although our laſt and leaſt; to whoſe yong love,
The Vines of France, and Milke of Burgundy,
Strive to be intereſt. What can you ſay, to draw
A third, more opulent then your Siſters? ſpeake.

Cor. Nothing my Lord.

Lear. Nothing?

Cor. Nothing.
Lear. Nothing will come of nothing, ſpeake againe.
Corn. Vnhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your Majeſty
According to my bond, no more nor leſſe.
Lear. How, how Cordelia? Mend your ſpeech a little,
Leſt you may marre your fortunes.
Cor. Good my Lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me.
I returne thoſe duties backe as are right fit,
Obey you, Love you, and moſt honour you.
Why have my Siſters husbands, if they ſay
They love you all? happily when I ſhall wed.
That Lord, whoſe hand muſt take my plight, ſhall carry
Halfe my love with him, halfe my Care, and Duty,
Sure I ſhall never marry like my Siſters.
Lear. But goes thy heart with this?
Cor. I my good Lord.
Lear. So young, and ſo untender?
Cor. So young my Lord, and true.
Lear. Let it be ſo, thy truth then be thy dowre:
For by the ſacred radience of the Sunne,
The myſteries of Hecat and the night:
By all the operations of the Orbes,
From whom we doe exiſt, and ceaſe to be,
Heere I diſclaime all my Paternall care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a ſtranger to my heart and me,
Hold thee from this for ever. The barbarous Scythian,
Or he that makes his generation meſſes
To gorge his appetite, ſhall to my boſome
Be as well neighbour'd, pittied, and releiv'd,
As thou my ſometime Daughter.
Kent. Good my Liege.
Lear. Peace Kent.
Come not betweene the Dragon and his wrath,
I lov'd her moſt, and thought to ſet my reſt
On her kind nurſery. Hence and avoyd my ſight;
So be my grave my peace, as here I give
Her fathers heart from her; call France, who ſtirres?
Call Burgundy, Cornwall, and Albany,
With my two Daughters, Dowres, digeſt the third,
Let pride, which ſhe calls plainneſſe, marry her:
I doe inveſt you jontly with my power,
Preheminence, and all the large effects
That troope with Majeſty. Our ſelfe by Monthly courſe,
With reſervation of an hundred Knights,
By you to be ſuſtain'd, ſhall our abode
Make with you by due turne, onely we ſhall retaine
The name, and all th'addition to a King: the Sway,
Revennew, Execution of the reſt,
Beloved Sonnes be yours, which to confirme,
This Coronet part betweene you.
Kent. Royall Lear,
Whom I have ever honor'd as my King,
Lov'd as my Father, as my Maſter follow'd,
As my Patron thought on in my praiers.
Lear. The bow is bent and drawne, make from the ſhaft.
Kent. Let it fall rather, though the forke invade
The region of my heart, be Kent unmannerly,
When Lear is mad, what wouldeſt thou doe old man?
Thinkſt thou that duty ſhall have dread to ſpeake
When power to flattery bowes?
To plainneſſe honour's bound,
When Majeſty falls to folly, reſerve thy ſtate,
And in thy beſt conſideration checke
This hideous raſhneſſe, anſwer my life, my judgement:
Thy yongeſt Daughter do's not love thee leaſt,
Nor are thoſe emty hearted, whoſe low ſounds
Reverbe no hollowneſſe.
Lear. Kent, on thy life no more.
King. My life I never held but as a pawne
To wage againſt thine enemies, nere feare to loſe it,
Thy ſafety being motive.
Lear. Out of my ſight.
Kent. See better Lear, and let me ſtill remaine
The true blanke of thine eye.
Lear. Now by Apollo.
Kent. Now by Apollo, King
Thou ſwear'ſt thy gods in vaine.
Lear. O Vaſſall! Miſcreant.
Alb. Cor. Deare Sir forbeare.
Kent. Kill thy Phyſitian, and thy fee beſtow
Vpon the foule diſeaſe, revoke thy gift,
Or whilſt I can vent clamour from my throat,
Ile tell thee thou doſt evill.
Lear. Heare me recreant, on thine allegeance heare me;
That thou haſt ſought to make us breake our vowes,
Which we durſt never yet; and with ſtrain'd pride,
To come betwixt our ſentence, and our power.
Which, nor our nature, nor our place can beare;
Our potency made good, take thy reward.
Five dayes we doe allot thee for proviſion,
To ſhield thee from diſaſters of the world,
And on the ſixt to turne thy hated backe
Vpon our Kingdome; if the tenth day following,
Thy baniſht trunke be found in our Dominions,
The moment is thy death, away. By Iupiter,
This ſhall not be revok'd.
Kent. Fare thee well King, ſith thus thou wilt appeare,
Freedome lives hence, and baniſhment is here;
The gods to their deare ſhelter take thee Maid,
That juſtly think'ſt, and haſt moſt rightly ſaid:
And your large ſpeeches, may your deeds approve,
That good effects may ſpring from words of love:
Thus Kent, O Princes, bids you all adieu,
Hee'l ſhape his old courſe in a Countrey new. Exit.

Enter Gloſter with France, and Burgundy Attendants.

Cor. Here's France and Burgundy, my Noble Lord.
Lear. My Lord of Burgundy,
We firſt addreſſe toward you, who with this King
Hath rival'd for our Daughter; what in the leaſt
Will you require in preſent Dower with her,
Or ceaſe your queſt of Love?
Bur. Moſt Royall Majeſtie,
I crave no more than hath your Highneſſe offer'd,
Nor will you tender leſſe?
Lear. Right Noble Burgundy,
When ſhe was deare to us, we held her ſo,
But now her price is fallen: Sir, there ſhe ſtands,
If ought within that little ſeeming ſubſtance,
Or all of it with our diſpleaſure piec'd,
And nothing more may fitly like your Grace,
Shee's there, and ſhe is yours.
Bur. I know no anſwer.
Lear. Will you with thoſe infirmities ſhe owes,
Vnfriended, new adopted to our hate,
Dowr'd with our curſe, and ſtranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her.

Bur. Pardon me Royall Sir,
Election makes not up in ſuch conditions.
Lear. Then leave her ſir, fot by the powre that made
I tell you all her wealth. For you great King, (me,
I would not from your love make ſuch a ſtray,
To match you where I hate, therefore beſeech you
T'avert your liking a more worthier way,
Then on a wretch whom Nature is aſham'd
Almoſt t'acknowledge hers.
Fra. This is moſt ſtrange,
That ſhe who even but now, was your beſt object,
The argument of your praiſe, balme of your age,
The beſt, the deereſt, ſhould in this trice of time
Commit a thing ſo monſtrons, to diſmantle
So many folds of favour: ſure her offence
Muſt be of ſuch unnaturall degree,
That monſters it: Or your fore-voucht affection
Fall into taint; which to beleeve of her
Muſt be a faith that reaſon without miracle
Should never plant in me.
Cor. I yet beſeech your Majeſty,
If for I want that glib and oylye Art,
To ſpeake and purpoſe not, ſince what I will intend,
Ile do't before I ſpeake, that you make knowne
It is no vicious blot, murther, or fouleneſſe,
No unchaſte action or diſhonored ſtep
That hath depriv'd me of your Grace and favour,
But even for want of that, for which I am richer,
A ſtill ſoliciting eye, and ſuch a tongue,
That I am glad I have not, though not to have it,
Hath loſt me in your liking.
Lear. Better thou hadſt,
Not beene borne, then not t'have pleas'd me better,
Fra. Is it but this? A tardineſſe in nature,
Which often leaves the hiſtory unſpoke
That it intends to doe; my Lord of Burgundy,
What ſay you to the Lady? Love's not love
When it is mingled with regards, that ſtands
Aloofe from th'intire point, will yon have her?
She is herſelfe a Dowry.
Bur. Royall King,
Give but that portion which your ſelfe propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Dutcheſſe of Burgundy.
Lear. Nothing, I have ſworne, I am firme.
Bur. I am ſorry then you have ſo loſt a Father.
That you muſt looſe a husband.
Cor. Peace be with Burguny,
Since that reſpect and fortunes are his love,
I ſhall not be his wife.
Fra, Faireſt Cordelia, that art moſt rich being poore,
Moſt choiſe forſaken, and moſt lov'd deſpis'd,
Thee and thy vertues here I ſeize upon,
Be it lawfull I take up whats caſt away,
Gods, gods! Tis ſtrange, that from their cold'ſt neglect
My love ſhould kindle to enflam'd reſpect.
Thy dowreleſſe Daughter, King, throwne to my chance,
Is Queene of us, of ours, and our faire France:
Not all the Dukes of watriſh Burgundy,
Can buy this unpriz'd precious Maid of me.
Bid them farewell Cordelia, though unkind,
Thou looſeſt here a better where to find.
Lear. Thou haſt her France, let her be thine, for we Have no ſuch Daughter, nor ſhall ever ſee
That face of hers againe, therefore be gone,
Without our Grace, our Love, our Benizon:
Come Noble Burgundy. Flouriſh. Exeunt.
Fra. Bid farewell to your Siſters.
Cor. The Iewels of our father, with waſh'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you, I know you what you are,
And like a Siſter am moſt loth to call
Your faults as they are named. Love well our father:
To your profeſſed boſomes I commit him,
But yet alas, ſtood I within his Grace,
I would perfer him to a better place,
So farewell to you both.
Reg. Preſcribe not us our duty.
Gon. Let your ſtuddy
Be to coutent your Lord, who hath receiv'd you,
At fortunes almes, you have obedience ſcanted,
And well are worth the want that you have wanted.
Cor. Time ſhall unfold what plighted cunning hides,
Who covers faults, at laſt with ſhame derides.
Well may you proſper.
Fra. Come my faire Cordelia. Exit France and Cor.
Gon. Siſter, it is not little I have to ſay,
Of what moſt neerely appertaines to us both,
I thinke our father will hence to night. (with us.
Reg. Thats moſt certaine, and with you: next moneth

Gon. You ſee how full of changes his age is, the obſervation we have made of it hath beene little: he alwayes lov'd our Siſter moſt, and with what poore judgement he hath now caſt her off, appeares too too groſſely.

Reg. Tis the infirmity of his age, yet he hath ever but ſlenderly knowne himſelfe.

Gon. The beſt and ſoundeſt of his time hath beene but raſh, then muſt we looke from his age, to receive not alone the imperfections of long ingraffed condition, but therewithall the unruly way-wardneſſe, that infirme and cholericke yeeres bring with them.

Reg. Such unconſtant ſtarts are we like to have from him, as this of Kents baniſhment.

Gon. There is further complement of leave-taking betweene France and him, pray you let us ſit together, if our father carry authority with ſuch diſpoſition as he beares this laſt ſurrender of his will but offend us.

Reg: We ſhall further thinke of it,
Gon. We muſt doe ſomething, aud i'th'heate. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Baſtard.

Baſt. Thou Nature art my Goddeſſe, to thy Law
My ſervices are bound, wherefore ſhould I
Stand in the plague of cuſtome, and permit
The curioſity of Nations, to deprive me?
For that I am ſome twelve, or fourteene Moonſhines
Lag of a brother? Why Baſtard? Wherefore baſe?
When my Dimenſions are as well compact,
My mind as generous, and my ſhape as true
As honeſt Madams iſſue? Why brand they us
With Baſe? With baſeneſſe Baſtardy? Baſe, Baſe?
Who in the luſty ſtealth of Nature, take
More compoſition, and fierce quality,
Then doth within a dull ſtale tyred bed
Goe to th'creating a whole tribe of Fops
Got 'tweene a ſleepe, and wake? Well then,
Legitimate Edgar, I muſt have your land,
Our fathers love, is to the Baſtard Edmund,
As to th'legitimate: fine word: Legitimate.

Well, my Legittimate, if this Letter ſpeed,
And my invention thrive, Edmund the baſe
Shall to'th'Legitimate: I grow, I proſper:
Now gods, ſtand up for Baſtards.

Enter Glouceſter.

Glo. Kent baniſh'd thus? and France in choller parted?
And the King gone to night? Preſcrib'd his power,
Confin'd to exhibition? All this gone
Vpon the gad? Edmund, how now? What newes?

Baſt. So pleaſe your Lordſhip, none.

Glou. Whe ſo earneſtly ſeeke you to put up that Letter?

Baſt. I know no newes, my Lord.

Glou. What Paper were you reading?

Baſt. Nothing my Lord.

Glou. No? what needed then that terrible diſpatch of it into your Pocket? The quality of nothing, hath not ſuch neede to hide it ſelfe. Lets ſee: come, if it be nothing, I ſhall not need Spectacles,

Baſt. I beſeech you Sir, pardon me; it is a Letter from my Brother, that I have not all ore-read; and for ſo much as I have perus'd, I find it not fit for your ore-looking.

Glou. Give me the Letter, Sir,

Baſt. I ſhall offend, either to detaine, or give it:
The Contents, as in part I underſtand them,
Are too blame.

Glou. Lets ſee, lets ſee.

Baſt. I hope for my brothers juſtification, he wrote this but as an eſſay, or taſte of my Vertue.

Glou reads. This policy, and reverence of Age, makes the world bitter to beſt of our times: keepes our Fortunes from us, till our oldneſſe cannot reliſh them. I begin to find an idle and fond bondage, in the oppreſſion of aged tyranny, who ſwayes not as it hath power, but as it is ſuffer'd. Come to me, that of this I may ſpeake more. If our Father would ſleepe till I wak'd him, you ſhould enjoy halfe his Revennew for ever, and live the beloved of your brother. Edgar.

Hum? Conſpiracy? Sleepe till I wake him, you ſhould enjoy halfe his Revennew: my Sonne Edgar, had he a hand to write this? A heart and braine to breede it in? When came you to this? Who brought it?

Baſt. It was not brought me, my Lord; theres the cunning of it. I found it throwne in at the Caſement of my Cloſſet.

Glou. You know the character to be your Brothers?

Baſt. If the matter were good my Lord, I durſt ſweare it were his: but in reſpect of that, I would faine thinke it were not.

Glou. It is his.

Baſt. It is his hand, my Lord: I hope his heart is not in the Contents.

Glo. Has he never before ſounded you in this buſineſſe?

Baſt. Never my Lord. But I have heard him oft maintaine it to befit, that Sonnes at perfect age, and Fathers declind, the Father ſhould be as Ward to the Son, and the Sonne manage his Revennew.

Glou. O Villaine, villaine: his very opinion in the Letter. Abhorred Villaine, unnaturall, deteſted, brutiſh Villaine; worſe then brutiſh: Goe ſirrah, ſeeke him: Ile apprehend him. Abhominable Villaine, where is he?

Baſt. I doe not well know my L. if it ſhall pleaſe you to ſuſpend your indignation againſt my brother, till you can derive from him better teſtimony of his intent, you ſhould run a certaine courſe: where, if you violently proceed againſt him, miſtaking his purpoſe, it would make a great gap in your honor, and ſhake in peeces, the heart of his obedience. I dare pawne downe my life for him, that he hath writ this to feele my affection to your honor, and to no other pretence of danger.

Glou. Thinke you ſo?

Baſt. If your honor judge it meete, I will place you where you ſhall heare us conferre of this, and by an Auricular aſſurance have your ſatisfaction, and that without any further delay, then this very Evening.

Glou. He cannot be ſuch a Monſter. Edmund ſeeke him out: winde me into him, I pray you: frame the Buſineſſe after your owne wiſedome. I would unſtate my ſelfe, to be in a due reſolution.

Baſt. I will ſeeke him Sir, preſently: convey the buſineſſe as I ſhall find meanes, and acquaint you withall.

Glou. Theſe late Elipſes in the Sun and Moone portend no good to us: though the wiſedome of Nature can reaſon it thus, and thus, yet Nature finds it ſelfe ſcourg'd by the ſequent effects. Love cooles, friendſhip falls off, brothers divide. In Cities, mutinies; in Countries, diſcord: in Palaces, Treaſon; and the Bond crack'd, twixt Sonne and Father. This villaine of mine comes under the prediction: theres Son againſt Father, the King fals from by as of Nature, theres father againſt Child. We have ſeene the beſt of our time. Machinations, hollowneſſe, treachery, and all ruinous diſorders follow us diſquietly to our Graves, Find out this Villaine Edmund, it ſhall loſe thee nothing, doe it carefully: and the Noble and true harted Kent baniſh'd; his offence, honeſty. Tis ſtrange. Exit.

Baſt. This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are ſick in fortune, often the ſurfets of our owne behaviour, we make guilty of our diſaſters, the Sun, the Moone, and Starres, as if we were villaines on neceſſity, Fooles by heavenly compulſion, Knaves, Theeves, and Treachers by Sphæricall predominance. Drunkards, Lyars, and Adulterers by an inforc'd obedience of Planetary influence; and all that we are evill in, by a divine thruſting on. An admirable evaſion of Whore-maſter-man, to lay his Goatiſh diſpoſition on the charge of a Starre, My father compounded with my mother under the Dragonstaile, and my Nativity was under Vrſa Maior, ſo that it followes, I am rough and Leacherous. I ſhould have bin that I am, had the maidenleſt Starre in the Firmament twinkled on my baſtardizing.

Enter Edgar.

Pat: he comes like the Cataſtrophe of the old Comedy: my Cue is villanous Melancholly, with a ſigh like Tom o'Bedlam.——O theſe Eclipſes do portend theſe diviſions. Fa, Sol, La, Me.

Edg. How now brother Edmund, what ſerious contemplation are you in?

Baſt. I am thinking brother of a prediction I read this other day, what ſhould follow theſe Elipſes.

Edg. Doe you buſie your ſelfe with that?

Baſt. I promiſe, the effects he writes of, ſucceede unhappily.
When ſaw you my Father laſt?

Edg. The night gone by.

Baſt. Spake you with him?

Edg. I, two houres together.

Baſt. Parted you in good tearmes? Found you no diſpleaſure in him, by word, nor countenance?

Epg. None at all.

Baſt. Bethinke your ſelfe wherein you may have offended him: and at my entreaty forbeare his preſence, untill ſome little time hath qualified the heat of his diſpleaſure, which at this inſtant ſo rageth in him, that with the miſchiefe chiefe of your perſon, it would ſcarſely alay.

Edg. Some Villaine hath done me wrong.

Edm. Thats my feare, I pray you have a continent forbearance till the ſpeed of his rage goes ſlower : and as I ſay, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fitly bring you to heare .my· Lord ſpeake : pray ye goe, theres my key : if you doe ſtirre abroad, goe arm'd.

Edg. Arm'd, Brother ?

Edm. Brother, I adviſe you to the beſt, I am no honeſt man, if there be any good meaning toward you : I have told you what I have ſeene, and heard : But faintly. Nothing like the image, and horror of it, pray you away.

Edga. Shall I heare from you anon ? Exie.

Edm. I doe ſerve you in this buſineſſe :
A Credulous Father, and a Brother Noble,
Whoſe nature is ſo farre from doing harmes,
That he ſuſpects none : on whoſe fooliſh honeſty
My practiſes ride eaſie : I ſee the buſineſſe.
Let me, if not by birth, have lands by wit,
All with me's meete, that I can faſhion fit. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Gonerill, and Steward.

Gon. Did my father ſtrike my Gentleman for chiding of his foole ?

Stew. I Madam.

Gon. By day and night, he wrongs me, every howre
He flaſhes into one groſſe crime, or other,
That ſets us all at ods : Ile not endure it ;
His Knights grow riotous, and himſelfe upbraides us
On every trifle. When he returnes from hunting,
I will not ſpeake with him, ſay I am ſicke,
If you come ſlacke of former ſervices
You ſhall doe well, the fault of it Ile anſwer.

Stew. Hes comming Madam, I heare him.

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you pleaſe.
You and your Fellowes : I'de have it come to queſtion ;
If he diſtaſte it, let him to my Siſter,
Whoſe mind and mine I know in that are one,
Remember what I have ſaid.

Stew. Well Madam.

Gon. And let his Knights have colder lookes among you : what growes of it no matter, adviſe your fellowes ſo, Ile write ſtraight to my Siſter to hold my courſe: prepare for dinner.

Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Kent.

Kent. If but as well I other accents borrow,
That can my ſpeech defuſe, my good intent
May carry through it ſelfe to that full iſſue
For which I raiz'd my likeneſſe. Now baniſht Kent,
If thou canſt ſerve where thou doſt ſtand condemn'd,
So may it come, thy Maſter whom thou lov'ſt,
Shall find thee full of labours.

Hornes within. Enter Lear and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not ſtay a jot for dinner, goe get it ready : how now, what art thou ?

Kent. A man Sir.

Lear. What doſt thou profeſſe? What wouldſt thou with us ?

Kent. I doe profeſſe to be no leſſe then I ſeeme ; to ſerve him truely that will put me in truſt, to love him that is honeſt, to converſe with him that is wiſe and ſayes little, to feare judgement, to fight when I cannot chooſe, and to eate no fiſh.

Lear. What are thou ?

Kent. A very honeſt hearted Fellow, and as poore as the King.

Lea.. If thou beſt as poore for a ſubject, as he's for a King, thou art poore enough. What wouldſt thou ?

Kent. Service.

Lear. Whom wouldſt thou ſerve ?

Kent. You,

Lear. Do'ſt thou know me fellow ?

Kent. No Sir, but you have that in your countenance, which I would faine call Maſter.

Lear. Whats that ?

Kent. Authority.

Lear. What ſervices canſt thou doe ?

Kent. I can keepe honeſt counſailes, ride, run, marre a curious tale in telling it, and deliver a plaine meſſage bluntly : that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in, and the beſt of me, is Diligence.

Lear. How old art thou ?

Kent. Not ſo young Sir to love a woman for ſinging, nor ſo old to dote on her for any thing. I have yeares on my backe forty eight.

Lear. Follow me, that ſhalt ſerve me, if I like thee no worſe after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner ho, dinner, wheres my knave? my foole? goe you and call my foole hither. You you Sirrah, wheres my Daughter?

Enter Steward.

Stew. So pleaſe you—— Exit.

Lear. What ſayes the fellow there ? Call the Clotpole backe : wheres my Foole ? Ho, I thinke the worlds aſleepe, how now ? Wheres that Mungrell ?

Knigh. He ſaies my Lord, your Daughters is not well.

Lear. Why came not the ſlave backe to mee when I call'd him ?

Knigh, Sir, he anſwered me in the roundeſt manner, he would not.

Lear. He would not ?

Knigh. My Lord, I know not what the matter is, but to my judgement your highneſſe is not entertain'd with that Ceremonious affection as you were wont, theres a great abatement of kindneſſe appeares as well in the generall dependants, as in the Duke himſelfe alſo, and your Daughter.

Lear. Ha ? Saiſt thou ſo ?

Knigh. I beſeech you pardon me my Lord, if I bee miſtaken, for my duty cannot be ſilent, when I thinke your highneſſe wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remembreſt me of mine owne Concepception, I have perceived a moſt faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as mine owne jealous curioſity, then as a very pretence and purpoſe of unkindneſſe; I will looke further into't : but wheres my Foole ? I have not ſeene him this two dayes.

Knight. Since my young Ladies going into France

Sir, the foole hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that, I have noted it well, goe you and tell my Daughter, I would ſpeake with her. Goe you call hither my Foole; Oh you Sir, you, come you hither Sir, who am I Sir.

Enter Steward.

Stew. My Ladies Father.

Lear. My Ladies Father? my Lords knave, you whorſon dog, you ſlave, you curre.

Stew. I am none of theſe my Lord,
I beſeech your pardon.

Lear. Doe you bandy lookes with me, you Raſcall?

Stew. Ile not be ſtrucken my Lord.

Kent. Nor tript neither, you baſe Foot-ball player.

Lear. I thanke thee fellow.
Thou ſerv'ſt me, and Ile love thee.

Kent. Come ſir, ariſe, away, Ile teach you differences: away, away, if you will meaſure your lubbers length againe, tarry, but away, goe to, have you wiſedome, ſo.

Lear. Now my friendly knave I thanke thee, theres earneſt of thy ſervice.

Enter Foole.

Foole. Let me hire him too, heres my Coxcombe.

Lear. How now my pretty knave, how doſt thou?

Foole. Sirrah, you were beſt take my Coxcombe.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Foole. Why? for taking ones part thats out of favour; nay, and thou canſt not ſmile as the wind ſits, thou'lt catch cold ſhortly, there take my Coxcombe; why this fellow has baniſh'd two on's daughters, and did the third a bleſſing againſt his will; if thou follow him, thou muſt needes weare my Coxcomb. How now Nunckle? would I had two Coxcombes and two Daughters.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Fool. If I gave them all my living, Ild keepe my Coxcombe my ſelfe, theres mine, beg another of thy Daughters.

Lear. Take heed Sirrah, the whip.

Foole. Truths a dog muſt to kennell, he muſt bee whipt out, when the Lady Brach may ſtand by'th fire and ſtinke.

Lear. A peſtilent gall to me.

Fool. Sirha, Ile teach thee a ſpeech.

Lear. Doe.

Foole. Marke it Nuncle;
Have more then thou ſhoweſt,
Speake leſſe then thou knoweſt,
Lend leſſe then thou oweſt,
Ride more then thou goeſt,
Learne more then thou troweſt,
Set leſſe then thou throweſt:
Leave thy drinke and thy whore,
And keepe in a dore,
And thou ſhalt have more,
Then two tens to a ſcore.

Kent. This is nothing foole.

Foole. Then tis like the breath of an unfeed Lawyer, you gave me nothing for't, can you make no uſe of nothing Nuncle?

Lear. Why no Boy,
Nothing can be made out of nothing.

Fool. Prethee tell him, ſo much the rent of his land comes to, he will not beleeve a Foole.

Lear. A bitter Foole.

Foole. Doſt thou know the difference my Boy, betweene a bitter Foole, and a ſweet one.

Lear. No Lad; teach me.

Foole. Nunckle, give me an egge, and Ile give thee two Crownes.

Lear. What two Crownes ſhall they be?

Fool. Why after I have cut the egge ith'middle and eate up the meate, the two Crownes of the egge. when thou cloveſt thy Crowne ith'middle, and gav'ſt away both parts, thou boar'ſt thine Aſſe on thy backe o're the durt, thou hadſt little wit in thy bald crowne, when thou gav'ſt thy golden one away: if I ſpeake like my ſelfe in this, let him be whipt that firſt findes it ſo.
Fooles had nere leſſe grace in a yeere,
For wiſemen are growne foppiſh,
And know not how their wits to weare,
Their manners are ſo apiſh.

Lea. When were you wont to be ſo full of Songs ſirra?

Fool. I have uſed it Nunckle, ere ſince thou mad'ſt thy Daughters thy Mothers, for when thou gav'ſt them the rod, and putſt downe thine owne breeches, then they
For ſudaine joy did weepe,
And I for ſorrow ſung,
That ſuch a King ſhould play bo-peepe,
And goe the Foole among.
Prethy Nunckle keepe a Schoolemaſter that can teach thy Foole to lye, I would faine learne to lye.

Lear. And you lye ſirrah, we'll have you whipt.

Foole. I marvell what kin thou and thy daughters are, they'l have me whipt for ſpeaking true: thou'lt have me whipt for lying, and ſometimes I am whipt for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o'thing then a foole, and yet I would not be thee Nunnkle, thou haſt pared thy wit o'both ſides, and left nothing i'th'middle; heare comes one o'the parings.

Enter Generill.

Lear. How now Daughter? what makes that Frontlet on? You are too much of late ith'frowne.

Foole. Thou waſt a pretty fellow when thou hadſt no need to care for her frowning, now thou art an O without a figure, I am better then thou art now, I am a foole, thou art nothing. Yes forſooth I will hold my tongue, ſo your face bids me, though you ſay nothing.
Mum, mum, he that keepes nor cruſt, not crum,
Weary of all, ſhall want ſome. Thats a ſheal'd Peſcod.

Gon. Not onely Sir this, your all-lycenc'd Foole,
But other of your inſolent retinue
Doe hourely Carpe and Quarrell, breaking forth
In ranke, and not to be endured) riots Sir.
I had thought by making this well knowne unto you,
To have found a ſafe redreſſe, but now grow fearefull
By what your ſelfe too late have ſpoke and done,
That you protect this courſe, and put it on
By your allowance, which if you ſhould, the fault
Would not ſcape cenſure, nor the redreſſes ſleepe,
Which in the tender of a wholeſome weale,
Might in their working doe you that offence,
Which elſe were ſhame, that then neceſſity
Will call diſcreet proceeding.

Foole. For you know Nunckle, the Hedge-Sparrow fed the Cuckooe ſo long, hat it had its head bit off by it young, ſo out went the Candle, and we were left darkling.

Lear. Are you our Daughter? (dome

Gon. I would you would make uſe of your good wiſ-
(Whereof I know you are fraught) and put away
Theſe diſpoſitions, which of late tranſport you
From what you rightly are.

Foole. May not an Aſſe know, when the Cart drawes the Horſe?
Whoop Iugge I love thee.
Lear. Dos any heere know me?
This is not Lear:
Do's Lear walke thus? Speake thus? Where are his eyes?
Either his Notion weakens, his Diſcernings
Are Lethargied. Ha! Waking? Tis not ſo?
Who is it that can tell me who I am?
Foole. Lears ſhadow.
Lear. Your name, faire Gentlewoman?
Gon. This admiration Sir, is much oth'ſavour
Of other your new prankes. I doe beſeech you
To underſtand my purpoſes aright:
As you are Old, and Reverend, ſhould be Wiſe.
Heere doe you keepe a hundred Knights and Squires,
Men ſo diſorder'd, ſo deboſh'd, and bold,
That this our Court infected, with their manners,
Shewes like a riotous Inne; Epicuriſme and Luſt
Makes it more like a Taverne, or a Brothell,
Then a grac'd Pallace. The ſhame it ſelfe doth ſpeake
For inſtant remedy. Be then deſir'd
By her, that elſe will take the thing ſhe begges,
A little to diſquantity your Traine,
And the remainders that ſhall ſtill depend,
To be ſuch men as may beſort your Age,
Which know themſelves, and you.
Lear. Darkeneſſe, and Divels,
Saddle my horſes: call my Traine together.
Degenerate Baſtard, Ile not trouble thee;
Yet have I left a daughter.
Gon. You ſtrike my people, and your diſorder'd rable, make Servants of their Betters.

Enter Albany.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents:
Is it your will, ſpeake Sir? Prepare my Horſes.
Ingratitude! thou Marble-hearted Fiend,
More hideous when thou ſhew'ſt thee in a Child,]
Then the Sea-monſter.
Alb. Pray Sir be patient.
Lear. Deteſted Kite, thou lyeſt.
My Traine are men of choyce, and rareſt parts,
That all particulars of duty know,
And in the moſt exact regard, ſupport
The worſhips of their name. O moſt ſmall fault,
How ugly didſt thou in Cordelia ſhew?
Which like an Engine, wrencht my frame of Nature
From the fixt place: drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!
Beate at this gate that let thy Folly in,
And thy deere Iudgement out. Goe, goe, my people.
Alb. My Lord, I am guiltleſſe, as I am ignorant
Of what hath moved you.
Lear. It may be ſo, my Lord,
Heare Nature, heare deere Goddeſſe, heare:
Suſpend thy purpoſe, if thou didſt intend
To make this Creature fruitfull:
Into her Wombe convey ſterility,
Dry up in her the Organs of increaſe,
And from her derogate body, never ſpring
A Babe to honor her. If ſhe muſt teeme,
Create her child of Spleene, that it may live
And be a thwart diſnatur'd torment to her.
Let it ſtampe wrinkles in her brow of youth,
With cadent Teares fret Channels in her cheekes,
Turne all her Mothers paines, and benefits
To laughter, and contempt: That ſhe may feele,
How ſharper than a Serpents tooth it is,
To have a thankeleſſe Childe. Away, away. Exit.
Alb. Now Gods that we adore.
Whereof comes this?
Gon. Never afflict your ſelfe to know of it:
But let his diſpoſition have that ſcope
As dotage gives it.

Enter Lear.

Lear. What fifty of my followers at a clap?
Within a fortnight?
Alb. Whats the matter, Sir?
Lear. Ile tell thee:
Life and death, I am aſham'd
That thou haſt power to ſhake my manhood thus,
That theſe hot teares, which breake from me perforce
Should make thee worth them,
Blaſts and Fogges upon thee:
Th'untented woundings of a Fathers curſe
Pierce every ſenſe about thee. Old fond eyes,
Beweepe thee once againe, Ile plucke ye out,
And caſt you with the waters that you looſe
To temper Clay. Ha? Let it be ſo.
I have another daughter,
Who I am ſure is kinde and comfortable:
When ſhe ſhall heare this of thee, with her nailes
Shee'l flea thy Wolviſh viſage. Thou ſhalt finde,]
That Ile reſume the ſhape which thou doſt thinke
I have caſt off for ever.
Gon. Doe you marke that?
Alb. I cannot be ſo partiall Gonerill,
To the great love I beare you.
Gon. Pray you content. What Oſwald hoa?
You Sir, more Knave then Foole, after your Maſter.
Foole. Nunkle Lear, Nuncle Lear,
Tarry, take the Foole with thee:
A Fox, when one has caught her,
And ſuch a daughter,
Should ſure to the ſlaughter,
If my Cap would by a Halter,
So the Foole followes after. Exit.
Gon. This man hath had good counſell,
A hundred Knights?
Tis politike, and ſafe to let him keepe
At point a hundred Knights: yes, that on every dreame,
Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, diſlike,
He may enguard his dotage with their powres,
And hold our lives in mercy. Oſwald, I ſay.
Alb. Well, you may feare too farre.
Gon. Safer then truſt too farre;
Let me ſtill take away the harmes I feare,
Not feare ſtill to be taken. I know his heart,
What he hath utter'd, I have writ my ſiſter:
If ſhe ſuſtaine him, and his hundred Knights
When I have ſhew'd th'unfitneſſe.

Enter Steward.

How now Oſwald?
What have you writ that letter to my Siſter?
Stew. I Madam.
Gon. Take you ſome company, and away to horſe,
Informe her full of my particular feare,
And thereto adde ſuch reaſons of your owne,
As may compact it more. Get you gone,

And haſten your returne; no, no, my Lord,
This milky gentleneſſe, and courſe of yours
Though I condemne not, yet under pardon
You are much more at taske for want of wiſedome,
Then prais'd for harmefull mildneſſe.

Alb. How farre your eyes may pierce I cannot tell;
Striving to better, oft we marre whats well.

Gon. Nay then ——

Alb. Well, well, the'vent. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Lear, Kent, Gentleman, and Foole.

Lear. Goe you before to Gloſter with theſe Letters; acquaint my daughter no further with any thing you know, then comes from her demand out of the Letter, if your diligence be not ſpeedy, I ſhall be there afore you.

Kent. I will not ſleepe my Lord, till I have delivered your Letter. Exit.

Foole. If a mans braines were ins heeles, wert not in danger of kybes?

Lear. I boy.

Foole. Then I prethee be merry, thy wit ſhall not goe ſlip-ſhod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha.

Foole. Shalt ſee thy other Daughter will uſe thee kindly, for though ſhes as like this, as a Crabbes like an Apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. What canſt tell Boy?

Foole. She will taſte as like this as, a Crabbe do's to a Crab: thou canſt tell why ones noſe ſtands ith'middle on's face?

Lear. No.

Foole. Why to keepe ones eyes of either ſides noſe, that what a man cannot ſmell out, he may ſpy into.

Lear. I did her wrong.

Foole. Can'ſt tell how an Oyſter makes his ſhell?

Lear. No.

Foole. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a Snaile ha's a houſe.

Lear. Why?

Foole. Why to puts head in, not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his hornes without a caſe.

Lear. I will forget my Nature, ſo kind a Father? Be my horſes ready?

Foole. Thy Aſſes are gone about em; the reaſon why the ſeven Starres are no mo then ſeven, is a pretty reaſon.

Lear. Becauſe they are not eight.

Foole. Yes indeed, thou wouldſt make a good foole.

Lear. To tak't againe perforce? Monſter ingratitude!

Foole. If you wert my foole Nunckle, Il'd have thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Foole. Thou ſhouldſt not have bin old, till thou hadſt bin wiſe.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad ſweet heaven: keep me in temper, I would not be mad. How now, are the horſes ready?

Gent. Ready my Lord.

Lear. Come Boy.

Fool. She thats a Maid now, and laughs at my departure
Shall not be a Maid long, unleſſe things be cut ſhorter.
Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Baſtard, and Curan, ſeverally.

Baſt. Save thee Curan.

Cur. And you Sir, I have bin
With your Father, and given him notice
That the Duke of Cornwall, and Regan his Ducheſſe
Will be here with him this night.

Baſt. How comes that?

Cur. Nay I know not, you have heard of the newes abroad, I meane the whiſper'd ones, for they are yet but ear-kiſſing arguments.

Baſt. Not I: pray you what are they?

Cur. Have you heard of no likely Warres toward,
Twixt the Dukes of Cornwall, and Albany?

Baſt. Not a word.

Cur. You may doe then in time,
Fare you well Sir. Exit

Baſt. The Duke be here to night? the better beſt,
This weaves it ſelfe perforce into my buſineſſe,
My father hath ſet guard to take my brother,
And I have one thing of a queazy queſtion
Which I muſt act, briefeneſſe, and Fortune worke.

Enter Edgar.

Brother, a word, diſcend; brother I ſay,
My father watches; O Sir, flye this place,
Intelligence is given where you are hid;
You have now the good advantage of the night,
Have you not ſpoken gainſt the Duke of Cornwall?
Hes comming hither, now ith'night, ith'haſte,
And Regan with him, have you nothing ſaid
Vpon his party gainſt the Duke of Albany?
Adviſe your ſelfe.

Edg. I am ſure on't, not a word.

Baſt. I heare my father comming, pardon me:
In cunning, I muſt draw my Sword upon you:
Draw, ſeeme to defend your ſelfe,
Now quit you well.
Yeeld, come before my father, light hoa, here,
Flye Brother, Torches, ſo farewell,
Exit Edgar.
Some blood drawne on me would beget opinion
Of my more fierce endeavour. I have ſeene drunkards
Doe more then this in ſport; Father, father,
Stop, ſtop, no helpe?

Enter Gloſter, and Servants with Torches.

Glo. Now Edmund, wheres the villaine?

Baſt. Here ſtood he in the darke, his ſharpe Sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charmes, conjuring the Moone
To ſtand auſpicious Miſtris.

Glo. But where is he?

Baſt. Looke Sir, I bleed,

Glo. Where is the villaine, Edmund?

Baſt. Fled this way Sir, when by no meanes he could

Glo. Purſue him, ho: goe after. By no meanes, what?

Baſt. Perſwade me to the murther of your Lordſhip,

Gainſt

But that I told him the revenging Gods,
Gainſt Parricides did all the thunder bend,
Spoke with how manifold, and ſtrong a Bond
The Child was bound to'th'Father; Sir in fine,
Seeing how lothly oppoſite I ſtood
To his unnaturall purpoſe, in fell motion
With his prepared Sword, he charges home
My unprovided body, latch'd mine arme:
And when he ſaw my beſt alarum'd ſpirits
Bold in the quarrels right, rouz'd to th'encounter,
Or whether gaſted by the noyſe I made,
Full ſodainely he fled.

Gloſt. Let him flye farre:
Not in this Land ſhall he remaine uncaught
And found; diſpatch, the Noble Duke my Maſter,
My worthy Arch and Patron comes to night,
By his authority I will proclaime it,
That he which finds him ſhall deſerve our thankes,
Bringing the murderous Coward to the ſtake:
He that conceales him, death.

Baſt. When I diſſwaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to doe it, with curſt ſpeech
I threatned to diſcover him; he replied,
Thou unpoſſeſſing Baſtard, doſt thou thinke,
If I would ſtand againſt thee, would the repoſall
Of any truſt, vertue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faith'd? No, what ſhould I deny,
(As this I would, though thou didſt produce
My very Character) Ild turne it all
To thy ſuggeſtion, plot, and damned practiſe:
And thou muſt make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potentiall ſpirits
To make thee ſeeke it. Tucket within.

Glo. O ſtrange and faſtned Viliaine,
Would he deny his Letter, ſaid he?
Hearke, the Dukes trumpets, I know not where he comes
All Ports Ile barre, the villaine ſhall not ſcape,
The Duke muſt grant me that: beſides, his picture
I will ſend farre and neere, that all the kingdome
May have due note of him, and of my land,
(Loyall and naturall Boy) Ile worke the meanes
To make thee capable.

Enter Cornewall, Regan, and Attendants.

Corn. How now my Noble friend, ſince I came hither
(Which I can call but now) I have heard ſtrangeneſſe.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too ſhort
Which can purſue th'offender: how does my Lord?

Glo. O Madam, my old heart is crack'd, its crack'd.

Reg. What, did my Fathers Godſonne ſeeke your life?
He whom my father nam'd, your Edgar?

Glo. O Lady, Lady, ſhame would have it hid.

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous Knights
That tended upon my father?

Glo. I know not Madam, tis too bad, too bad.

Baſt. Yes Madam, he was of that conſort.

Reg. No marvaile then, though he were ill affected,
Tis they have put him on the old mans death,
To have th'expence and waſt of Revenues:
I have this preſent evening from my Siſter
Beene well inform'd of them, and with ſuch cautions,
That if they come to ſojourne at my houſe,
Ile not be there.

Cor. Nor I, aſſure thee Regan;
Edmund, I heare that you have ſhewne your Father
A Child-like Office.

Baſt. It was my duty Sir.

Glo. He did bewray his practiſe, and receiv'd
This hurt you ſee, ſtriving to apprehend him.

Cor. Is he purſued?

Glo. I my good Lord.

Cor. If he be taken, he ſhall never more
Be fear'd of doing harme, make your owne purpoſe,
How in my ſtrength you pleaſe: as for you Edmund,
Whoſe vertue and obedience doth this inſtant
So much commend itſelfe, you ſhall be ours,
Natures of ſuch deepe truſt, we ſhall much need:
You we firſt ſeize on.

Baſt. I ſhall ſerve you Sir truely, how ever elſe.

Glo. For him I thanke your Grace.

Cor. You know not why we came to viſit you?

Reg. Thus out of ſeaſon, thredding darke ey'd night,
Occaſions Noble Gloſter of ſome prize,
Wherein we muſt have uſe of your aduice.
Our Father he hath writ, ſo hath our Siſter,
Of differences, which I beſt thought it fit
To anſwer from our home: the ſeverall Meſſengers
From hence attend diſpatch, our good old friend,
Lay comforts to your boſome, and beſtow
Your needfull counſaile to our buſineſſes,
Which craves the inſtant uſe.

Glo. I ſerve you Madam,
Your Graces are right welcome.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Kent, and Steward ſeverally.

Stew. Good dawning to thee friend, art of this houſe?

Kent. I.

Stew. Where may we ſet our horſes?

Kent. I th'myre.

Stew. Prethee, if thou lov'ſt me, tell me.

Kent. I love thee not.

Stew. Why then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lipsbury Pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Stew. Why do'ſt thou uſe me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow I know thee.

Stew. What doſt thou know me for?

Kent. A Knave, a Raſcall, an eater of broken meates, a baſe, proud, ſhallow, beggerly, three-ſuited, hundred pound, filthy wooſted-ſtocking knave, a Lilly-livered, action-taking, whoreſon glaſſe-gazing ſuper-ſerviceable finicall Rogue, one Trunke-inheriting ſlave, one that wouldſt be a Baud in way of good ſervice, and art nothing but the compoſition of a Knave, Begger, Coward, Pandar, and the Sonne and Heire of a Mungrill Bitch, one whom I will beate into clamours whining, if thou deny'ſt the leaſt ſillable of thy addition.

Stew. Why, what a monſtrous fellow art thou, thus to raile on one, that is neither knowne of thee, nor knows thee?

Kent. What a brazen-fac'd Varlet art thou, to deny thou knoweſt me? Is it two dayes ſince I tript up thy heeles, and beate thee before the King? Draw you rogue, for though it be night, yet the Moone ſhines, Ile make a ſop oth'Mooneſhine of you, you whorſon Cullyenly Barbar-monger, draw.

Stew. Away, I have nothing to doe with thee.

Kent. Draw you Raſcall, you come with Letters againſt the King, and take Vanity the puppets part, againſt the Royalty of her father: draw you Rogue, or Ile ſo carbonado your ſhankes, draw you Raſcall, come your wayes.

Stew. Helpe, ho, murther, helpe.

Kent. Strike you ſlave: ſtand rogue, ſtand you neat ſlave, ſtrike.

Stew. Helpe hoa, murther, murther.

Enter Baſtard, Cornewall, Regan, Gloſter, Servant.

Baſt. How now, whats the matter? Part.

Kent. With you goodman boy, if you pleaſe, come, Ile fleſh ye, come on yong Maſter.

Glo. Weapons? Armes? whats the matter here?

Cor. Keepe peace upon your lives, he dyes that ſtrikes againe, what is the matter?

Reg. The Meſſengers from our Siſter, and the King?

Cor. What is your difference, ſpeake?

Stew. I am ſcarce in breath my Lord.

Kent. No Marvell, you have ſo beſtir'd your valour, you cowardly Raſcall, nature diſclaimes in thee: a Taylor made thee.

Cor. Thou art a ſtrange fellow, a Taylor make a man?

Kent. A Taylor Sir; a Stone-cutter, or a Painter, could not have made him ſo ill, though they had bin but two yeares oth'trade.

Cor. Speake yet, how grew your quarrell?

Stew. This ancient Ruffian Sir, whoſe life I have ſpar'd at ſute of his gray-beard.

Kent. Thou whoreſon Zed, thou unneceſſary letter, my Lord, if you will give me leave, I will tread this unboulted villaine into morter, and daube the wall of a Iakes with him. Spare my gray-beard, you wagtaile?

Cor. Peace ſirrah,
You beaſtly knave, know you no reverence?

Kent. Yes Sir, but anger hath a priviledge.

Cor. Why art thou angry?

Kent. That ſuch a ſlave as this ſhould weare a Sword,
Who weares no honeſty: ſuch ſmiling rogues as theſe,
Like Rats oft bite the holy cords a twaine,
Which art t'intrince, t'unlooſe: ſmooth every paſſion
That in the natures of their Lords rebell,
Being oile to fire, ſnow to the colder moodes,
Renege, affirme, and turne their Halcion beakes
With every gale, and vary of their Maſters,
Knowing naught (like dogges) but following:
A plague upon your Epilepticke viſage,
Smoile you my ſpeeches, as I were a foole?
Gooſe, if I had you upon Sarum Plaine,
I'ld drive ye cackling home to Camelot.

Corn. What art thou mad old Fellow?

Gloſt. How fell you out, ſay that?

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
Then I, and ſuch a knave.

Corn. Why do'ſt thou call him Knave?
What is his fault?

Kent. His countenance likes me not.

Cor. No more perchance do's mine, nor his, nor hers.

Kent. Sir, tis my occupation to be plaine,
I have ſeene better faces in my time,
Then ſtands on any ſhoulder that I ſee
Before me, at this inſtant.

Corn. This is ſome fellow,
Who having beene prais'd for bluntneſſe, doth affect
A ſaucy roughneſſe, and conſtraines the garb
Quite from his Nature. He cannot flatter, he,
An honeſt mind and plaine, he muſt ſpeake truth,
And they will take it ſo, if not, he's plaine.
Theſe kind of Knaves I know, which in this plainneſſe
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Then twenty ſilly-ducking obſervants,
That ſtretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good faith, in ſincere verity,
Vnder th'allowance of your great aſpect,
Whoſe influence like the wreath of radient fire
On flicking Phœbus front.

Corn. What mean'ſt by this?

Kent. To goe out of my dialect: which you diſcommend ſo much; I know Sir, I am no flatterer, he that beguild you in a plaine accent, was a plaine Knave, which for my part I will not be, though I ſhould win your diſpleaſure to entreat me too't.

Corn. What was th'offence you gave him?

Stew. I never gave him any:
It pleas'd the King his Maſter very late
To ſtrike at me upon his miſconſtruction,
When he compact, and flattering his diſpleaſure
Tript me behind: being downe, inſulted, rail'd,
And put upon him ſuch a deale of Man,
That worthied him, got praiſes of the King,
For him attempting, who was ſelfe-ſubdued,
And in the fleſhment of this dead exploit,
Drew on me here againe.

Kent. None of theſe Rogues, and Cowards
But Ajax is their foole.

Corn. Fetch forth the Stockes?
You ſtubborne ancient Knave, you reverent Bragart,
We'll teach you.

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learne:
Call not your Stockes for me, I ſerve the King.
On whoſe imployment I was ſent to you,
You ſhall doe ſmall reſpects, ſhew too bold malice
Againſt the Grace, and Perſon of my Maſter,
Stocking his Meſſenger.

Corn. Fetch forth the Stockes;
As I have life and honor, there ſhall he ſit till Noone.

Reg. Till noone? till night my Lord, and all night too.

Kent. Why Madam, if I were your Fathers dog,
You ſhould not uſe me ſo.

Reg. Sir, being his Knave, I will. Stockes brought out.

Cor. This is a fellow of the ſelfe ſame colour,
Our Siſter ſpeakes of. Come, bring away the Stockes.

Glo. Let me beſeech your Grace, not to doe ſo,
The King his Maſter, needs muſt take it ill
That he ſo ſlightly valued in his Meſſenger,
Should have him thus reſtrained.

Corn. Ile anſwer that.

Reg. My Siſter may receive it much more worſe,
To have her Gentleman abus'd, aſſaulted.

Corn. Come my Lord, away. Exit.

Glo. I am ſorry for thee friend, tis the Dukes pleaſure,
Whoſe diſpoſition all the world well knowes
Will not be rubb'd nor ſtopt, Ile entreat for thee.

Ken. Pray do not Sir, I have watch'd and travail'd hard,
Some time I ſhall ſleepe out, the reſt Ile whiſtle:
A good mans fortune may grow out at heeles:

Give you good morrow.
Glo. The Duke's too blame in this,
Twill be ill taken. Exit.
Kent. Good King, that muſt approve the common ſaw,
Thou out of heavens benediction com'ſt
To the warme Sun.
Approach thou Beacon to this under Globe,
That by thy comfortable Beames I may
Peruſe this Letter. Nothing almoſt ſees miracles
But miſery. I know tis from Cordelia,
Who hath moſt fortunately beene inform'd
Of my obſcured courſe. And ſhall find time
From this enormous State, ſeeking to give
Loſſes their remedies. All weary and o're-watch'd,
Take vantage heavy eyes, not to behold
This ſhamefull lodging. Fortune goodnight,
Smile once more, turne thy wheele.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard my ſelfe proclaim'd,
And by the happy hollow of a Tree,
Eſcap'd the hunt. No Port is free, no place
That guard, and moſt unuſall vigilance
Do's not attend my taking. Whiles I may ſcape
I will preſerve my ſelfe: and am bethought
To take the baſeſt, and moſt pooreſt ſhape
That ever penury in contempt of man,
Brought neere to beaſt: my face Ile grime with filth,
Blanket my loynes, elſe all my haires in knots,
And with preſented nakedneſſe out-face
The Windes, and perſecutions of the sky:
The Country gives me proofe, and preſident
Of Bedlam beggers, who with roaring voyces,
Strike in their numm'd and mortified Armes,
Pins, Wodden-prickes, Nayles, Sprigs of Roſemary:
And with this horrible object, from low Farmes,
Poore pelting Villages, Sheepes-Coates, and Milles,
Sometimes with Lunaticke bans, ſometimes with Praiers
Inforce their charity: poore Turlygod, poore Tom.
Thats ſomething yet: Edgar I nothing am, Exit.

Enter Lear, Foole, and Gentleman.

Lear. Tis ſtrange that they ſhould ſo depart from home,
And not ſend backe my Meſſengers.
Gen. As I learn'd,
The night before, there was no purpoſe in them
Of this remove.
Kent. Haile to thee Noble Maſter.
Lear. Ha? Mak'ſt thou this ſhame thy paſtime?
Kent. No my Lord.
Foole. Ha, ha, he weares Cruell Garters; horſes are tide by the heads, Dogges and Beares by'th'necke, Monkies by'th'loynes, and Men by'th'legs; when a man is overluſty at legs, then he weares wodden nether-ſtockes.
Lear. Whats he,
That hath ſo much thy place miſtooke
To ſet thee heere?
Kent. It is both he and ſhe,
Your Son, and Daughter,
Lear. No.
Kent. Yes.
Lear. No I ſay.
Kent. I ſay yea.
Lear. By Iupiter I ſweare no.
Kent. By Iuno, I ſweare I.
Lear. They durſt not do't:
They could not, would not do't: tis worſe then murther,
To doe upon reſpect ſuch violent outrage:
Reſolve me with all modeſt haſte, which way
Thou mightſt deſerve, or they impoſe this vſage,
Comming from us.
Kent. My Lord, when at their home
I did commend your highneſſe Letters to them,
Ere I was riſen from the place, that ſhewed
My duty kneeling, came there a reeking Poſte,
Stew'd in his haſte, halfe breathleſſe, panting forth
From Generill his Miſtris, ſalutation;
Deliver'd Letters ſpight of intermiſſion,
Which preſently they read; on thoſe contents
They ſummon'd up their meiney, ſtraight tooke horſe,
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leiſure of their anſwer, gave me cold lookes,
And meeting heere the other Meſſenger,
Whoſe welcome I perceiv'd had poiſon'd mine,
Being the very fellow which of late
Diſplaid ſo ſawcily againſt your highneſſe,
Having more man then wit about me, drew;
He rais'd the houſe, with loud and coward cryes,
Your Sonne and daughter found this treſpaſſe worth
The ſhame which heere it ſuffers. (way,
Foole. Winters not gone yet, if the wild Geeſe fly that Fathers that weare rags, doe make their Children blind,
But fathers that beare bags, ſhall ſee their children kind.
Fortune that arrant whore, nere turnes the key toth' poore
But for all this yͧ ſhalt have as many Dolors for thy deare
Daughters, as thou canſt tell in a yeare.
Lear. Oh how this Mother ſwels up toward my heart!
Hiſtorica paſſio, downe thou climing ſorrow,
Thy Element's below; where is this daughter?
Kent. With the Earle Sir, here within.
Lear. Follow me not, ſtay heere. Exit.
Gen. Made you no more offence,
But what you ſpeake of?
Kent. None;
How chance the King comes with ſo ſmall a number?
Foole. And thou hadſt beene ſet ith'Stockes for that queſtion, thoud'ſt well deſerv'd it.
Kent. Why foole?
Foole. We'll ſet thee to ſchoole to an Ant, to teach thee theres no labouring ith'winter. All that follow their noſes, are led by their eyes, but blind men; and theres not a noſe among twenty, but can ſmell him thats ſtinking; let goe thy hold, when a great wheele runs downe a hill, leſt it breake thy necke with following. But the great one that goes upward, let him draw thee after: when a wiſeman gives thee better counſell give me mine againe, I would have none but knaves follow it, ſince a foole gives it.
That Sir, which ſerves and ſeekes for gaine,
And followes but for forme;
Will packe, when it begins to raine,
And leave thee in the ſtorme,
But I will tarry, the foole will ſtay,
And let the wiſeman flye:
The knave turnes foole that runnes away,
The foole no knave perdy.

Enter Lear, and Glower.

Kent. Where learn'd you this foole;
Foole. Not ith'Stockes foole.

Lear. Deny to ſpeake with me?
They are ſicke, they are weary,
They have travail'd all the night? meere fetches,
The Images of revolt and flying off.
Fetch me a better anſwer.
Glo. My deere Lord,
You know the fiery quality of the Duke,
How unremoveable and fixt he is
In his owne courſe.
Lear. Vengeance, Plague, Death, Confuſion:
Fiery? What quality? Why Gloſter, Gloſter,
Il'd ſpeake with the Duke of Cornewall, and his wife.
Glo. Well, my good Lord, I have inform'd them ſo.
Lear. Inform'd them? Doſt thou underſtand me man?
Glo. I my good Lord.
Lear. The King would ſpeake with Cornewall,
The deere Father
Would with his Daughter ſpeake, commands, tends, ſer-
Are they inform'd of this? My breath and blood: (vice,
Fiery? The fiery Duke, tell the hot Duke that———
No, but not yet, may be he is not well,
Infirmity doth ſtill neglect all office,
Whereto our health is bound, we are not our ſelves,
When Nature being oppreſt, commands the mind
To ſuffer with the body; Ile forbeare,
And am fallen out with my more headier will,
To take the indiſpos'd and ſickly fit,
For the ſound man. Death on my ſtate: wherefore
Should he ſit here? This Act perſwades me,
That this remotion of the Duke and her
Is practiſe onely. Give me my ſervant forth;
Goe tell the Duke, and's wife, Il'd ſpeake with them:
Now, preſently: bid them come forth and heare me,
Or at their chamber doore Ile beat the Drum,
Till it cry ſleepe to death.
Glo. I would have all well betwixt you. Exit.
Lear. Oh me my heart! my riſing heart! but downe.

Foole. Cry to it Nuncle, as the Cockney did to the Eeles, when hee put 'em i'th'Paſte alive, ſhe knapt 'em o'th'Coxcombs with a ſticke, and cryed downe wantons, downe; 'twas her brother, that in pure kindneſſe to his horſe buttered his Hey.

Enter Cornewell, Regan, Gloſter, Servants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.
Corn. Haile to your Grace. Kent here ſet at liberty.
Reg. I am glad to ſee your Highneſſe.
Lear. Regan, I thinke you are. I know what reaſon,
I have to thinke ſo, if thou ſhould'ſt not be glad,
I would divorce me from thy Mothers Tombe,
Sepulchring an Adultereſſe. O are you free?
Some other time for that. Beloved Regan
Thy ſiſters naught: Oh Regan, ſhe hath tyed
Sharpe tooth'd unkindneſſe, like a vulture here;
I can ſcarce ſpeake to thee, thou'lt not beleeve
With how deprav'd a quality. Oh Regan.
Reg. I pray you Sir, take patience, I have hope
You leſſe know how to value her deſert,
Than ſhe to ſcant her duty.
Lear. Say? how is that?
Reg. I cannot thinke my ſiſter in the leaſt
Would faile her Obligation. If Sir perchance
She have reſtrained the Riots of your Followers,
'Tis on ſuch ground, and to ſuch wholeſome end,
As cleares her from all blame.
Lear. My curſes on her.
Reg. O Sir, you are old,
Nature in you ſtands on the very Verge
Of her confine: you ſhould be rul'd, and led
By ſome diſcretion, that diſcernes your ſtate
Better then you your ſelfe: therefore I pray you,
That to our Siſter, you doe make returne,
Say you have wrong'd her.
Lear. Aske her forgiveneſſe?
Doe you but marke how this becomes the houſe?
Deere daughter, I confeſſe that I am old;
Age is unneceſſary: on my knees I begge,
That you'll vouchſafe me Rayment, Bed, and Food.
Reg. Good Sir, no more: theſe are unſightly trickes:
Returne you to my Siſter.
Lear. Never Regan:
She hath abated me of halfe my Traine;
Look'd blacke upon me, ſtrooke me with her Tongue
Moſt Serpent-like, upon the very heart.
All the ſtor'd Vengeances of heaven, fall
On her ingratefull top: ſtrike her yong bones
You taking Ayres, with Lameneſſe.
Corn. Fye ſir, fie.
Lear. You nimble Lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her ſcornfull eyes: infect her Beauty,
You Fen-ſuck'd Fogges, drawne by the powerfull Sunne
To fall, and bliſter.
Reg. O the bleſt Gods!
So will you wiſh on me, when the raſh moode is on.
Lear. No Regan, thou ſhalt never have my curſe:
Thy tender-heſted Nature ſhall not give
Thee ore to harſhneſſe: Her eyes are fierce, but thine
Doe comfort, and not burne. 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleaſures, to cut off my Traine,
To bandy haſty words, to ſcant my ſizes,
And in concluſion, to oppoſe the bolt
Againſt my comming in. Thou better knowſt
The Offices of Nature, bond of Childhood,
Effects of Curteſie, dues of Gratitude:
Thy halfe o'th kingdome haſt thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.
Reg. Good Sir, to'th'purpoſe. Tucket within.
Lear. Who put my man ith'Stockes?

Enter Steward.

Corn. What Trumpets that?
Reg. I know't my Siſters: this approves her Letter,
That ſhe would ſoone be heere. Is your Lady come?
Lear. This is a Slave, whoſe eaſie borrowed pride
Dwels in the fickly grace of her he followes.
Out Varlet, from my ſight.
Corn. What meanes your Grace?

Enter Gonerill.

Lear. Who ſtockt my Servant? Regan, I have good hope
Thou didſt not know on't.
Who comes here? O heavens!
If you doe love old men; if your ſweet ſway
Allow Obedience: if you your ſelves are old,
Make it your cauſe: Send downe, and take my part.
Art not aſham'd to looke upon this Beard?
O Regan, will you take her by the hand?
Gon. Why not by th'hand Sir? How have I offended?
All's not offence that indiſcretion findes,
And dotage termes ſo.
Lear. O ſides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?
How came my man i'th'Stockes?
Corn. I ſet him there, Sir: but his owne Diſorders

Deſerv'd much leſſe advancement.
Lear. You? Did you?
Reg. I pray you Father being weake, ſeeme ſo.
If till the expiration of your Moneth
You will returne and ſojourne with my Siſter,
Diſmiſſing halfe your traine, come then to me,
I am now from home, and out of that proviſion
Which ſhall be needfull for your entertainement.
Lear. Returne to her? and fifty men diſmiſs'd?
No, rather I abjure all roofes, and chuſe,
To wage againſt the enmity oth'ayre,
To be a Comrade with the Wolfe, and Owle,
Neceſſities ſharpe pinch. Returne with her?
Why the hot-bloodied France, that dowerleſſe tooke
Our yongeſt borne, I could as well be brought
To knee his Throne, and Squire-like penſion beg,
To keepe baſe life a foote; returne with her?
Perſwade me rather to be ſlave and ſumpter
To this deteſted groome.
Gon. At your choyce Sir.
Lear. I prethee Daughter doe not make me mad,
I will not trouble thee my Child: farewell:
We'll no more meete, no more ſee one another,
But yet thou art my fleſh, my blood, my daughter,
Or rather a diſeaſe thats in my fleſh,
Which I muſt needs call mine. Thou art a Byle,
A plague ſore, or imboſſed Carbuncle
In my corrupted blood. But Ile not chide thee.
Let ſhame come when it will, I doe not call it,
I doe not bid the Thunder-bearer ſhoote,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Iove,
Mend when thou can'ſt, be better at thy leiſure,
I can be patient, I can ſtay with Regan,
I and my hundred Knights.
Reg. Not altogether ſo,
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome, give eare Sir to my Siſter,
For thoſe that mingle reaſon with you paſſion,
Muſt be content to thinke you old, and ſo,
But ſhe knowes what ſhe doe's.
Lear. Is this well ſpoken?
Reg. I dare avouch it Sir, what fifty Followers?
Is it not well? What ſhould you need of more?
Yea, or ſo many? Sith that both charge and danger,
Speake gainſt ſo great a number: How in one houſe
Should many people, under two commands
Hold amity? Tis hard, almoſt impoſſible.
Gon. Why might not you my Lord, receive attendance
From thoſe that ſhe calls Servants, or from mine?
Reg. Why not my Lord?
If then they chanc'd to ſlacke ye,
We could comptroll them; if you will come to me,
(For now I ſpye a danger) I entreat you
To bring but five and twenty, to no more
Will I give place or notice.
Lear. I gave you all.
Reg. And in good time you gave it.
Lear. Made you my Guardians, my Depoſitaries,
But kept a reſervation to be followed
With ſuch a number? What, muſt I come to you
With five and twenty? Regan, ſaid you ſo?
Reg. And ſpeak't againe my Lord, no more with me.
Lear. Thoſe wicked Creatures yet do looke wel favor'd
When others are more wicked, not being the worſt
Stands in ſome ranke of praiſe, Ile goe with thee,
Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,
And thou art twice her Love.
Gon. Heare me my Lord;
What need you five and twenty? Ten? Or five?
To follow in a houſe, where twice ſo many
Have a command to tend you?
Reg. What need one?
Lear. O reaſon not the need: our baſeſt Beggers
Are in the pooreſt thing ſuperfluous,
Allow not Nature, more then Nature needs:
Mans life is cheape as Beaſtes. Thou art a Lady;
If onely to goe warme were gorgeous,
Why Nature needs not what thou gorgeous wear'ſt,
Which ſcarcely keepes thee warme, but for true need,
You heavens, give me that patience, patience I need,
You ſee me here (you gods) a poore old man,
As full of griefe as age, wretched in both,
If it be you that ſtirres theſe Daughters hearts
Againſt their father, foole me not ſo much,
To beare it tamely: touch me with Noble anger,
And let not womens weapons, water drops,
Staine my mans cheekes. No you unnaturall Hags,
I will have ſuch revenges on you both,
That all the world ſhall——I will doe ſuch things,
What they are yet, I know not, but they ſhall be,
The terrors of the earth? you thinke Ile weepe,
No, Ile not weepe, I have full cauſe of weeping.
Storme and Tempeſt.
But this heart ſhal breake into a hundred thouſand flawes
Or ere I weepe. O foole, I ſhall goe mad. Exeunt.
Corn. Let us withdraw, twill be a Storme.
Reg. This houſe is little, the old man and's people,
Cannot be well beſtow'd.
Gon. Tis his owne blame hath put himſelfe from reſt,
And muſt needs taſte his folly.
Reg. For his particular, Ile receive him gladly,
Bnt not one follower.
Gon. So am I purpos'd,
Where is my Lord of Gloſter?
Enter Gloſter.
Corn. Followed the old man forth, he is return'd.
Glo. The King is in high rage.
Corn. Whether is he going?
Glo. He calls to horſe, but will I know not whether.
Corn. Tis beſt to give him way, he leads himſelfe.
Gon. My Lord, entreate him by no meanes to ſtay.
Glo. Alacke the night comes on, and the high windes
Doe ſorely ruffle, for many Miles about
Theres ſcarce a Buſh.
Reg. O Sir, to willfull men,
The injuries that they themſelves procure,
Muſt be their Schoole-Maſters: ſhut up your doores,
He is attended with a deſperate traine,
Aud what they may incenſe him to, being apt,
To have his eare abus'd, wiſedome bids feare.
Corn. Shut up your doores my Lord, tis a wil'd night,
My Regan counſels well: come out oth'ſtorme. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Storme ſtill. Enter Kent, and a Gentleman, ſeverally.

Kent. Who's there beſides foule weather?
Gen. One minded like the weather, moſt unquietly.

Kent. I know you: Wheres the King?
Gent. Coutending with the fretfull Elements.
Bids the winde blow the Earth into the Sea,
Or ſwell the curled Waters bove the Maine,
That things might change, or ceaſe.
Kent. But who is with him?
Gent. None but the foole, who labours to out-jeſt
His heart-ſtrooke injuries.
Kent. Sir, I doe know you,
And dare upon the warrant of my note
Commend a deere thing to you. There is diviſion
(Although as yet the face of it is cover'd
With mutuall cunning) twixt Albany, and Cornwall:
Who have, as who have not, that their great Starres
Thron'd and ſet high; Servants, who ſeeme no leſſe,
Which are to France the Spies and Speculations
Intelligent of our State. What hath bin ſeene,
Either in ſnuffes, and packings of the Dukes,
Or the hard Reine which both of them have borne
Againſt the old kind King; or ſomething deeper,
Whereof (perchance) theſe are but furniſhings.
Gent. I will talke further with you.
Kent. No, doe not:
For confirmation that I am much more
Then my out-wall; open this Purſe, and take
What it containes. If you ſhall ſee Cordelia,
(As feare not but you ſhall) ſhew her this Ring,
And ſhe will tell you who that fellow is
That yet you doe not know. Fye on this Storme,
I will goe ſeeke the King.
Gent. Give me your hand,
Have you no more to ſay?
Kent. Few words, but to effect more then all yet;
That when we have found the King, in which your paine
That way, Ile this: He that firſt lights on him,
Holla the other. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Storme ſtill. Enter Lear, and Foole.

Lear. Blow windes, and cracke your cheeks; Rage, blow
You Cataracts, and Hurricano's ſpout,
Till you have drench'd our Steeples, drowne the Cockes.
You Sulph'rous and Thought-executing fires,
Vaunt-curriors of Oake-cleaving Thunder-bolts,
Sindge my white head. And thou all-ſhaking Thunder,
Strike flat the thicke Rotundity o'th' world,
Cracke Natures moulds, all germaines ſpill at once
That makes ingratefull Man.

Foole. O Nunkle, Court holy-water in a dry houſe, is better then this Rain-water out o'doore. Good Nunkle, in, aske thy Daughters bleſſing, heeres a night pitties neither Wiſemen, nor Fooles.

Lear. Rumble thy belly full: ſpit Fire, ſpowt Raine;
Nor Raine, Winde, Thunder, Fire are my daughters,
I taxe not you, you Elements with unkindneſſe.
I never gave you Kingdome, call'd you Children;
You owe me no ſubſcription. Then let fall
Your horrible pleaſure. Heere I ſtand your Slave,
A poore, infirme, weake, and deſpis'd old man:
But yet I call you Servile Miniſters,
That will with two pernicious daughters joyne
Your high-engender'd Battailes, gainſt a head
So old, and white as this. O, ho! tis foule.
Foole. He that has a houſe to puts head in, has a good Head-peece:
The Codpiece that will houſe, before the head has any;
The Head, and he ſhall Lowſe: ſo Beggers marry many.
The man yͤ makes his Toe, what he his heart ſhould make,
Shall of a Corne cry woe, and turne his ſleepe to wake,

For there was never yet faire woman, but ſhe made mouthes in a glaſſe.

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the patterne of all patience.
I will ſay nothing.
Kent. Whos there?

Foole. Marry heres Grace, and a Codpiece, thats a Wiſeman, and a Foole.

Kent. Alas Sir are you here? things that love night,
Love not ſuch nights as theſe: the wrathfull Skies
Gallow the very wanderers of the darke
And make them keepe their Caves: Since I was man,
Such ſheets of fire, ſuch burſts of horrid Thunder,
Such groanes of roaring Winde, and Raine, I never Remember to have heard. Mans Nature cannot carry
Th'affliction, nor the feare.
Lear. Let the great gods
That keepe this dreadfull pudder ore our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble thou Wretch,
That haſt within thee undivulged Crimes
Vnwhipt of Iuſtice. Hide thee, thou Bloudy hand;
Thou Periur'd, and thou Simular of Vertue
That art Inceſtuous. Caytiffe, to peeces ſhake
That under covert, and convenient ſeeming
Has practis'd on mans life. Cloſe pent-up guilts,
Rive your concealing Continents, and cry
Theſe dreadfull Summoners grace. I am a man,
More ſinn'd againſt, then ſinning.
Kent. Alacke, bare-headed?
Gracious my Lord, hard by heere is a Hovell,
Some friendſhip will it lend you gainſt the Tempeſt:
Repoſe you there, while I to this hard houſe
(More harder then the ſtones whereof tis rais'd,
Which even but now, demanding after you,
Deny'd me to come in) returne, and force
Their ſcanted curteſie.
Lear. My wits begin to turne.
Come on my boy. How doſt my boy? Art cold?
I am cold my ſelfe. Where is this ſtraw, my fellow?
The Art of our Neceſſities is ſtrange,
And can make vilde things precious. Come, your hovell;
Poore Foole, and Knave, I have one part in my heart
Thats ſorry yet for thee.
Foole. He that has and a little-tyne wit,
    With heigh-ho, the Winde and the Raine,
    Muſt make content with his Fortunes fit,
    Though the Raine it raineth every day.
Lear. True Boy: Come bring us to this Hovell. Exit.
Foole. This is a brave night to coole a Curtizan:
Ile ſpeake a Propheſie ere I goe:
When Prieſts are more in word, then matter:
When Brewers marre their Malt with water;
When Nobles are their Taylors Tutors,
No Heretiques burn'd but wenches Sutors,
When every Caſe in Law is right:
No Squire in debt, nor no poore Knight:
When Slanders doe not live in Tongues;
Nor Cut-purſes come not to throngs;
When Vſurers tell their Gold i'th' field,

And Baudes, and whores, doe Churches build.
Then ſhall the Realme of Albion, come to great confuſion
Then comes the time, who lives to ſee't,
That going ſhalbe us'd with feet.
This prophecy Merlin ſhall make, for I live before his time. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Gloſter, and Edmund.

Glo. Alacke, alacke Edmund, I like not this unnaturall dealing; when I deſired their leave that I might pity him, they tooke from me the uſe of mine owne houſe, charg'd me on paine of perpetuall diſpleaſure, neither to ſpeake of him, entreat for him, or any way ſuſtaine him.

Baſt. Moſt ſavage and unnaturall.

Glo. Goe too; ſay you nothing. There is diviſion betweene the Dukes, and a worſe matter then that: I have received a Letter this night, tis dangerous to be ſpoken, I have lock'd the Letter in my Cloſſet, theſe injuries the King now beares, will be revenged home; there is part of a Power already footed, we muſt incline to the King, I will looke him, and privily relieve him; goe you and maintaine talke with the Duke, that my charity be not of him perceived; if he aske for me, I am ill, and gone to bed, if I dye for it, (as no leſſe is threaned me) the King my old Maſter muſt be relieved. There is ſtrange things toward Edmund, pray you be carefull. Exit.

Baſt. This Curteſie forbid thee, ſhall the Duke
Inſtantly know, and of that Letter too;
This ſeemes a faire deſerving, and muſt draw me
That which my father looſes: no leſſe then all,
The yonger riſes, when the old doth fall. Exit.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Foole.

Kent. Heere is the place my Lord, good my Lord enter,
The tirrany of the open night's too rough
For Nature to endure. Storme ſtill.

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my Lord enter heere.

Lear. Wilt breake my heart?

Kent. I had rather breake mine owne,
Good my Lord enter.

Lear. Thou thinkſt tis much that this contentious
Invades us to the skin ſo: tis to thee, (ſtorme
But where the greater malady is fixt,
The leſſer is ſcarce felt. Thou'dſt ſhun a Beare,
But if thy flight lay toward the roaring Sea,
Thou'dſt meet the Beare ith' mouth, when the minds free
The bodies delicate the tempeſt in my mind,
Doth from my ſences take all feeling elſe,
Save what beates there, Filliall ingratitude,
Is it not as this mouth ſhould teare this hand
For lifting food too't: But I will puniſh home;
No, I will weepe no more: in ſuch a night,
To ſhut me out? Poure on, I will endure:
In ſuch a night as this? O Regan, Generill,
Your old kind Father, whoſe franke heart gave all,
O that way madneſſe lyes, let me ſhun that:
No more of that.

Kent. Good my Lord enter here.

Lear. Prythee goe in thy ſelfe, ſeeke thine owne eaſe,
This tempeſt will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt me more, but Ile goe in,
In Boy, goe firſt. You houſeleſſe poverty, Exit.
Nay get thee in; Ile pray, and then Ile ſleepe.
Poore naked wretches, where ſo ere you are
That bide the pelting of this pittileſſe ſtorme,
How ſhall your houſe-leſſe heads, and unfed ſides,
Your lop'd, and window'd raggedneſſe defend you
From ſeaſons ſuch as theſe? O I have tane
Too little care of this: Take Phyſicke, Pompe,
Expoſe thy ſelfe to feele what wretches feele,
That thou maiſt ſhake the ſuperflux to them,
And ſhew the Heavens more juſt.

Enter Edgar, and Foole.

Edg. Fathom, and halfe, Fathom and halfe? poore Tom.

Foole. Come not in heere Nuncle, heres a ſpirit, helpe me, helpe me.

Kent. Give me thy hand, who's there?

Foole. A ſpirit, a ſpirit, he ſayes his name's poore Tom.

Ken. What art thou that doſt grumble there i'th ſtraw? Come forth.

Edg, Away, the foule Fiend followes me, through the ſharpe Hauthorne blow the winds. Humh, goe to thy bed and warme thee,

Lear. Didſt thou give all to thy Daughters? And art thou come to this?

Edg. Who gives any thing to poore Tom? Whom the foule Fiend hath led through Fire, & through Flame through Sword, and Whirle Poole, ore Bog, and Quagmire, that hath laid Knives under his Pillow, and Halters in his Pue, ſet Rate-bane by his Porredge; made him Proud of heart, to ride on a Bay trotting horſe, over foure archt Bridges, to courſe his own ſhadow for a Traitor, Bliſſe thy five Wits, Toms a cold. O do, de, do, de, do, de, bliſſe thee from Whirle-Winds, Starre-blaſting, and taking, doe poore Tom ſome charity, whom the foule fiend vexes. There could I have him now, and there, and there againe, and there.

Storme ſtill.

Lear. Has his Daughters brought him to this paſſe? Couldſt thou ſave nothing? Wouldſt thou give em all?

Foole. Nay, he reſerv'd a Blanket, elſe we had bin all ſham'd.

Lear. Now all the plagues that in the pendulous ayre
Hang fated ore mens faults, light on thy daughters.

Kent. He hath no Daughters Sir.

Lear. Death Traitor, nothing could have ſubdu'd
To ſuch a lowneſſe, but his unkind Daughters. (Nature
Is it the faſhion, that diſcarded Fathers,
Should have thus little mercy on their fleſh:
Iudicious puniſhment, twas this fleſh begot
Thoſe Pelicane Daughter.

Edg. Pillicock ſat on Pillicock hill, alow: alow, loo, loo.

Fool. This cold night will turne us all to fooles, and Madmen.

Edgar. Take heed oth' foule fiend, obey thy Parents, keepe thy word, juſtice, ſweare not, commit not, with mans ſworne Spouſe; ſet not thy Sweet-heart on proud array. Tom's a cold.

Lear. What haſt thou bin?

Edg. A Servingman? Proud in heart, and mind: that curl'd my haire, wore Gloves in my cap; ſerv'd the Luſt of my Miſtris heart, and did the act of darkeneſſe with her. Swore as many Oathes, as I ſpake words, and broke them in the ſweet face of heaven. One, that ſlept in the contriving of Luſt, and wak'd to doe it. Wine lov'd I deerely, Dice deerely; and in Woman, out-Paramour'd the Turke. Falſe of heart, light of care, bloody hand: Hog in ſloth, Foxe in ſtealth, Wolfe in greedineſſe, Dog in madneſſe, Lion in prey. Let not the creaking of ſhooes, Nor the ruſtling of Silkes, betray thy poore heart to woman. Keepe thy foote out of brothels, thy hand out of Plackets, thy pen from Lenders Bookes, and defye the foule fiend. Still through the Hauthorne blowes the cold wind: Sayes ſuum, mun, nonny, Dolphin my Boy, Boy Seſſey: let him trot by. Storme ſtill.

Lear. Thou wert better in a Grave, then to anſwer with thy uncover'd body, this extremity of the Skies. Is man no more then this? Conſider him well. Thou owſt the Worme no Silke: the Beaſt, no Hide: the Sheepe, no Wooll: the Cat, no perfume. Ha? Heres three ons are ſophiſticated. Thou art the thing it ſelfe, unaccomodated man, is no more but ſuch a poore, bare, forked Animall as thou art. Off, off you Lendings: Come, unbutton heere.

Enter Glouceſtar, with a Torch.

Fool. Prethee Nunckle be contented, tis a naughty night to ſwimme in. Now a little fire in a wilde field, were like an old Letchers heart, a ſmall ſparke, all the reſt on's body, cold: Looke, heere comes a walking fire.

Edga. This is the foule Flibbertigibbet; he begins at Curfew, and walkes at firſt Cocke: He gives the Web and the Pin, ſquints the eye, and makes the Hare-lippe; Mildewes the white Wheate, and hurts the poore Creature of earth.

Swithold footed thrice the old.
He met the Night-Mare, and her ninefold;
Bid her a-light, and her troth-plight,
And aroynt thee Witch, aroynt thee.

Kent. How fares your grace?

Lear. Whats he?

Kent. Whos there? What iſt you ſeeke?

Glou. What are you there? Your Names?

Edg. Poore Tom, that eates the ſwimming Frog, the Toad, the Tod-pole, the wall-Neut, and the water: that in the fury of his heart, when the foule fiend rages, eats Cow-dung for Sallets; ſwallowes the old Rat, and the ditch-Dogge: drinkes the green Mantle of the ſtanding Poole: who is whipt from Tything to Tything, and ſtockt, puniſh'd, and impriſon'd: who hath three Suites to his backe, ſixe ſhirts to his Body:

Horſe to ride, and weapon to weare;
But Mice, and Rats, and ſuch ſmall Deare,
Have bin Toms food, for ſeven long yeere:

Beware my follower. Peace Smulkin, peace thou fiend.

Glou. What, hath your Grace no better company?

Edg. The Prince of Darkeneſſe is a Gentleman. Modo hes calld, and Mahu.

Glou. Our fleſh and blood, my Lord, is growne ſo vild, that it doth hate what gets it,

Edg. Poore Toms a cold.

Glou. Goe in with me; my duty cannot ſuffer
T'obey in all your daughters hard commands:
Though their injunction be to barre my doores,
And let this Tyrannous night take hold upon you,
Yet have I ventured to come ſeeke you out,
And bring you where both fire, and food is ready.

Lear. Firſt let me talke with this Philoſopher,
What is the cauſe of Thunder?

Kent. Good my Lord take his offer,
Goe into th'houſe.

Lear. Ile talke a word with this ſame learned Theban:
What is your ſtudy?

Edg. How to prevent the fiend, and to kill Vermine.

Lear. Let me aske you one word in private.

Kent. Importune him once more to goe my Lord,
His wits begin t'unſettle.

Glou. Canſt thou blame him? Storme ſtill.
His Daughters ſeeke his death: Ah, that good Kent,
He ſaid it would be thus: poore baniſh'd man:
Thou ſayeſt the King growes mad, Ile tell thee friend
I am almoſt mad my ſelfe, I had a Sonne,
Now out-law'd from my blood: he ſought my life
But lately: very late: I lov'd him (friend)
No father his Sonne deerer: true to tell thee,
The griefe hath craz'd my wits. What a nights this?
I doe beſeech your grace.

Lear. O cry you mercy, Sir:
Noble Philoſopher, your company.

Edg. Toms a cold.

Glou. In fellow there, into th'Hovell; keep thee warme

Lear. Come, lets in all.

Kent. This way, my Lord.

Lear. With him;
I will keepe ſtill with my Philoſopher.

Kent. Good my Lord, ſooth him:
Let him take the fellow.

Glou. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirra, come on: goe along with us.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glou. No words, no words, huſh.

Edg. Child Rowland to the darke Tower came,
His word was ſtill, fie, foh, and fum
I ſmell the blood of a Brittiſh man. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Cornwall, and Edmund.

Corn. I will have my revenge, ere I depart his houſe.

Baſt. How my Lord, I may be cenſured, that Nature thus gives way to Loyalty, ſomething feares me to thinke of.

Cornw. I now perceive, it was not altogether your Brothers evill diſpoſition made him ſeeke his death: but a provoking merit ſet a worke by a reprovable badneſſe in himſelfe.

Baſt. How malicious is my fortune, that I muſt repent to be juſt? This is the Letter which he ſpoke of; which approves him an intelligent party to the advantages of France. O Heavens! that this Treaſon were not; or not I the detector.

Corn. Goe with me to the Dutcheſſe.

Baſt. If the matter of this Paper be certaine, you have mighty buſineſſe in hand.

Corn. True or falſe, it hath made thee Earle of Glouceſter: ſeeke out where thy father is, that he may bee ready for our apprehenſion.

Baſt. If I find him comforting the King, it will ſtuffe his ſuſpition more fully. I will perſever in my courſe of Loyalty, though the conflict be ſore betweene that and my blood.

Corn. I will lay truſt upon thee; and thou ſhalt finde a deere father in my Love. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Enter Kent, and Glouceſter.

Glou. Here is better then the open ayre, take it thankfully: I will peece out the comfort with what addition I can: I will not be long from you. Exit.

Kent. All the power of his wits, have given way to his impatience: the gods reward your kindneſſe.

Enter Lear, Edgar, and Foole.

Edga. Frateretto cals me, and tells me Nero is an Angler in the Lake of Darkneſſe: pray innocent, and beware the foule fiend.

Foole. Prethee Nunkle tell me, whether a madman be a Gentlemen, or a Yeoman.

Lear. A King, a King.

Foole. No, he's a Yeoman, that has a Gentleman to his Sonne: for hes a mad Yeoman that ſees his Sonne a Gentleman before him.

Lear. To have a thouſand with red burning ſpits
Come hizzing in upon'em.

Edga. Bleſſe thy five wits.

Kent. O pitty: Sir, where is the patience now
That you ſo oft have boaſted to retaine?

Edga. My teares begin to take his part ſo much,
They marre my counterfetting.

Lear. The little dogges, and all;
Trey, Blanch, and Sweet-heart: ſee, they barke at me,

Edga. Tom will throw his head at them: Avaunt you
Curres, be thy mouth or blacke or white:
Tooth that poyſons if it bite:
Maſtiffe, Grey-hound, Mongrill, Grim,
Hound or Spaniell, Brache, or Hym:
Or Bobtaile tight, or Troudle taile,
Tom will make him weepe and wale,
For with throwing thus my head;
Dogs leapt the hatch, and all are fled.
Do, de, de, de: ſeſe; Come, march to Wakes and Faires,
And Market Townes: poore Tom thy horne is dry. Exit.

Lear. Then let them Anatomize Regan: See what breeds about her heart. Is there any cauſe in Nature that make theſe hard-hearts. You ſir, I entertaine for one of my hundred; onely, I doe not like the faſhion of your garments. You will ſay they are Perſian; but let them be chang'd,

Enter Gloſter.

Kent. Now good my Lord, lye heere, and reſt awhile.

Lear. Make no noiſe, make no noyſe, draw the Curtaines: ſo, ſo, we'll goe to ſupper ith'morning.

Foole. And Ile goe to bed at noone.

Glou. Come hither friend;
Where is the King my Maſter?

Kent. Here Sir, but trouble him not, his wits are gone.

Glou. Good friend, I prethee take him in thy armes;
I have ore-heard a plot of death upon him:
There is a Litter ready, lay him in't,
And drive toward Dover friend, where thou ſhalt meete
Both welcome, and protection. Take up thy Maſter,
If thou ſhouldſt dally halfe an houre, his life
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in aſſured loſſe. Take up, take up,
And follow me, that will to ſome proviſion
Give thee quicke conduct. Come, come, away. Exeunt.

Scæna Septima.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gonerill, Baſtard, and Servants.

Corn. Poſte ſpeedily to my Lord your husband, ſhew him this Letter, the Army of France is landed: ſeeke out the Traitor Gloſter.

Reg. Hang him inſtantly.

Gon. Plucke out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my diſpleaſue. Edmund, keepe you our Siſter company: the revenges we are bound to take upon your Traitorous father, are not fit for your beholding. Adviſe the Duke where you are going, to a moſt feſtinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Our Poſtes ſhall be ſwift, and intelligent betwixt us. Farewell deere Siſter, farewell my Lord of Gloſter.

Enter Steward.

How now? Wheres the King?

Stew. My Lord of Gloſter hath convey'd him hence.
Some five or ſix and thirty of his Knights
Hot Queſtriſts after him, met him at gate,
Who, with ſome other of the Lords dependants,
Are gone with him toward Dover; where they boaſt
To have well armed friends.

Corn. Get horſes for your Miſtris.

Gon. Farewell ſweet Lord, and Siſter. Exit.

Corn. Edmund farewell: goe ſeeke the Traitor Gloſter,
Pinnion him like a Theefe, bring him before us:
Though well we may not paſſe upon his life
Without the forme of Iuſtice: yet our power
Shall doe a curt'ſie to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not comptroll.

Enter Glouceſter, and Servants.

Whos there? the Traitor?

Reg. Ingratefull Fox, tis he.

Corn. Binde faſt his corky armes.

Glou. What meanes your Graces?
Good my friends conſider you are my Gheſts:
Doe me no foule play, friends.

Corn. Binde him I ſay.

Reg. Hard, hard: O filthy Traitor.

Glou. Vnmercifull Lady, as you are, Ime none.

Corn. To this Chaire bind him,
Villaine, thou ſhalt finde.

Glou. By the kinde gods, tis moſt ignobly done
To plucke me by the Beard.

Reg. So white, and ſuch a Traitor?

Glou. Naughty Lady,
Theſe haires which thou doſt raviſh from my chin
Will quicken aud accuſe thee. I am your Hoſt,
With Robbers hands, my hoſpitable favours

You ſhould not ruffle thus. What will you doe
Corn. Come Sir.
What Letters had you late from France?
Reg. Be ſimple anſwer'd, for we know the truth.
Corn. And what confederacy have you with the Traitors, late footed in the Kingdome?
Reg. To whoſe hands
You have ſent the Lunaticke King: ſpeake.
Glou. I have a Letter gueſſingly ſet downe
Which came from one thats of a newtrall heart,
And not from one oppos'd.
Corn. Cunning.
Reg. And falſe.
Corn. Where haſt thou ſent the King?
Glou. To Dover.
Reg. Wherefore to Dover?
Was't thou not charg'd at perill.
Corn. Wherefore to Dover? Let him anſwer that.
Glou. I am tyed to th'Stake,
And I muſt ſtand the Courſe.
Reg. Wherefore to Dover?
Glou. Becauſe I would not ſee thy cruell Nailes
Plucke out his poore old eyes: nor thy fierce Siſter,
In his Annointed fleſh, ſticke boariſh phangs.
The Sea, with ſuch a ſtorme as his bare head,
In hell-blacke-night indur'd, would have buoy'd up
And quench'd the Stelled fires:
Yet poore old heart, he holpe the heavens to raine.
If Wolves had at thy Gate howl'd that ſterne time,
Thou ſhouldſt have ſaid, good Porter turne the Key:
All Cruels elſe ſubſcribe: but I ſhall ſee
The winged Vengeance overtake ſuch Children.
Corn. See't ſhalt thou never. Fellowes hold the Chaire,
Vpon theſe eyes of thine, Ile ſet my foote.
Glou. He that will thinke to live, till he be old,
Give me ſome helpe,——O cruell! O you gods.
Reg. One ſide will mocke another: Th'other too.
Corn. If you ſee vengeance.
Serv. Hold your hand, my Lord?
I have ſerv'd you ever ſince I was a Child:
But better ſervice have I never done you,
Then now to bid you hold.
Reg. How now, you dogge?
Ser. If you did weare a beard upon your chin,
Ild ſhake it on this quarrell. What doe you meane?
Corn. My Villaine?
Serv. Nay then come on, and take the chance of anger.
Reg. Give me thy Sword. A peſant ſtand up thus?
Killes him.
Ser. Oh I am ſlaine: my Lord, you have one eye left
To ſee ſome miſchiefe on him. Oh.
Corn. Leſt it ſee more, prevent it; Out vilde gelly:
Where is thy luſter now?
Glou. All darke and comfortleſſe?
Wheres my Sonne Edmund?
Edmund, enkindle all the ſparkes of Nature
To quit this horrid acte.
Reg. Out treacherous Villaine,
Thou call'ſt on him, that hates thee. It was he
That made the overture of thy Treaſons to us:
Who is too good to pitty thee.
Glou. O my follies! then Edgar was abus'd,
Kind gods, forgive me that, and proſper him.
Reg. Goe thruſt him out at gates, and let him ſmell
His way to Dover. Exit with Gloſter.
How is't my Lord? How looke you?
Corn. I have receiv'd a hurt: Follow me Lady;
Turne out that eyeleſſe Villaine: throw this Slave
Vpon the Dunghill: Regan, I bleed apace,
Vntimely comes this hurt. Give me your arme. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Edgar.
Edg. Yet better thus, and knowne to be contemn'd,
Then ſtill contemn'd and flatter'd, to be worſt:
The loweſt, and moſt deject thing of Fortune,
Stands ſtill in eſperance, lives not in feare:
The lamentable change is from the beſt,
The worſt returnes to laughter. Welcome then,
Thou unſubſtantiall ayre that I embrace:
The wretch that thou haſt blowne unto the worſt,
Owes nothing to thy blaſts.
Enter Glouſter, and an Oldman.
But who comes heere? My Father poorely led?
World, World, O World!
But that thy ſtrange mutations make us hate thee,
Life would not yeeld to age.
Oldm. O my good Lord, I have beene your Tenant,
And your Fathers Tenant, theſe foureſcore yeeres.
Glou. Away, get thee away: good friend be gone,
Thy comforts can doe me no good at all,
Thee they may hurt.
Oldm. You cannot ſee your way.
Glou. I have no way, and therefore want no eyes:
I ſtumbled when I ſaw. Full oft tis ſeene,
Our meanes ſecure us, and our meere defects
Prove our Commodities. Oh deere Sonne Edgar,
The food of thy abuſed fathers wrath:
Might I but live to ſee thee in my touch,
Ild ſay I had eyes againe.
Oldm. How now? whos there?
Edg. O gods! Who iſt can ſay I am at worſt?
I am worſe then ere I was.
Oldm. Tis poore mad Tom.
Edg. And worſe I may be yet: the worſt is not,
So long as we can ſay this is the worſt.
Oldm. Fellow, where goeſt?
Glou. Is it a Beggar-man?
Oldm. Madman, and beggar too.
Glou. He has ſome reaſon, elſe he could not beg.
Ith'laſt nights ſtorme, I ſuch a fellow ſaw;
Which made me thinke a Man, a Worme. My Sonne
Came then into my mind, and yet my mind
Was then ſcarſe Friends with him.
I have heard more ſince:
As Flies to wanton Boyes, are we to th'gods,
They kill us for their ſport.
Edg. How ſhould their be?
Bad is the Trade that muſt play to foole ſorrow,
Ang'ring it ſelfe, and others. Bleſſe thee Maſter.
Glou. Is that the naked fellow?
Oldm. I my Lord.
Glou. Get thee away: if for my ſake
Thou wilt ore-take us hence a mile or twaine
I'th'way toward Dover, doe it for ancient love,
And bring ſome covering for this naked Soule,
Which Ile intreate to leade me.
Oldm. Alacke ſir, he is mad.

Glou. Tis the times plague,
When Madmen leade the blinde:
Doe as I bid thee, or rather doe thy pleaſure:
Above the reſt, be gone.

Oldm. Ile bring him the Beſt Parrell that I have
Com on't, what will, Exit.

Glou. Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poore Tom's a cold. I cannot daub it further.

Glou. Come hither fellow.

Edg. And yet I muſt:
Bleſſe thy ſweet eyes, they bleed.

Glou. Know'ſt thou the way to Dover?

Edg. Both ſtyle, and gate, horſeway, and foot-path: poore Tom hath bin ſcarr'd out of his good wits. Bleſſe thee good mans ſonne, from the foule fiend. (plagues

Glou. Here take this purſe, thou whom the heav'ns
Have humbled to all ſtrokes: that I am wretched
Makes thee the happier: heavens deale ſo ſtill:
Let the ſuperfluous, and Luſt-dieted man,
That ſlaves your ordinance, that will not ſee
Becauſe he do's not feele, feele your power quickly:
So diſtribution ſhould undoe exceſſe,
And each man have enough. Doſt thou know Dover?

Edg. I Maſter.

Glou. There is a Cliffe, whoſe high and bending head
Lookes fearefully in the confined Deepe:
Bring me but to the very brimme of it,
And Ile repayre the miſery thou doſt beare
With ſomething rich about me: from that place,
I ſhall no leading neede.

Edg. Give me thy arme;
Poore Tom ſhall leade thee. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Gonerill, Baſtard, and Steward.

Gon. Welcome my Lord. I marvell our mild husband
Not met us on the way. Now, wheres your Maſter?

Stew. Madam within, but never man ſo chang'd:
I told him of the Army that was Landed:
He ſmil'd at it. I told him you were comming,
His anſwer was, the worſe. Of Gloſters Treachery,
And of the loyall Service of his Sonne
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me Sot,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong ſide out:
What moſt he ſhould diſlike, ſeemes pleaſant to him;
What like, offenſive.

Gon. Then ſhall you goe no further.
It is the Cowiſh terror of his ſpirit
That dares not undertake: heell not feele wrongs
Which tye him to an anſwer; our wiſhes on the way
May prove effects. Backe Edmund to my Brother,
Haſten his Muſters, and conduct his powers.
I muſt change names at home, and give the Diſtaffe
Into my Husbands hands. This truſty Servant
Shall paſſe betweene us: ere long you are like to heare
(If you dare venture in your owne behalfe)
A Miſtreſſes command. Weare this; ſpare ſpeech,
Decline your head. This kiſſe, if it durſt ſpeake,
Would ſtretch thy Spirits up into the ayre:
Conceive, and fare thee well.

Baſt, Yours in the rankes of death. Exit.

Gon. My moſt deere Gloſter.
Oh, the difference of man, and man,
To thee a Womans ſervices are due,
My foole uſurpes my body.

Stew. Madam, heere comes my Lord.

Enter Albany.

Gon. I have beene worth the whiſtle.

Alba. Oh Gonerill.
You are not worth the duſt which the rude winde
Blowes in your face.

Gon. Milke-Liver'd man,
That bear'ſt a cheeke for blowes, a head for wrongs,
Who haſt not in thy browes an eye-diſcerning,
Thine honor, from thy ſuffering.

Alba. See thy ſelfe divell:
Proper deformity ſeemes not in the fiend
So horrid as in woman.

Gon. Oh vaine foole.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Oh my good Lord, the Duke of Cornwalls dead,
Slaine by his Servant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloſter.

Alba. Gloſters eyes!

Meſſ. A Servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorſe,
Oppos'd againſt the act: bending his Sword
To his great Maſter, who, thereat enrag'd
Flew on him, and amongſt them fell'd him dead,
But not without that harmefull ſtroke, which ſince
Hath pluckt him after.

Alba. This ſhewes you are above
You Iuſtices, that theſe our nether crimes
So ſpeedily can venge. But (O poore Gloſter)
Loſt he his other eye?

Meſſ. Both, both, my Lord.
This Letter Madam, craves a ſpeedy anſwer:
Tis from your Siſter,

Gon. One way I like this well,
But being widdow, and my Gloſter with her,
May all the buildiug in my fancy plucke
Vpon my hatefull life. Another way
The Newes is not ſo tart. Ile read, and anſwer.

Alba. Where was his Sonne,
When they did take his eyes?

Meſſ. Come with my Lady hither.

Alba He is not heere.

Meſſ. No my good Lord, I met him backe againe.

Alba. Knowes he the wickedneſſe?

Meſſ. I my good Lord: twas he inform'd againſt him
And quit the houſe on purpoſe, that their puniſhment
Might have the freer courſe.

Al. Gloſter, I live
To thanke thee for the love thou ſhewdſt the King,
And to revenge thine eyes. Come hither friend,
Tell me what more thou knowſt. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Cordelia, Gentlemen, and Souldiours.

Cord. Alacke, tis he: why he was met even now
As mad as the vext Sea, ſiuging alowd,
Crown'd with ranke Fenitar, and furrow weeds,
With Hardokes, Hemlocke, Nettles, Cuckoo flowres,

Darnell, and all the idle weedes that grow
In our ſuſtaining Corne. A Centery ſend forth;
Search every Acre in the high-growne field,
And bring him to our eye. What can mans wiſedome
In the reſtoring his bereaved Senſe: he that helpes him,
Take all my outward worth.
Gent. There is meanes Madam:
Our foſter Nurſe of Nature, is repoſe,
The which he lackes: that to provoke in him
Are many Simples operative, whoſe power
Will cloſe the eye of Anguiſh.
Cord. All bleſt Secrets,
All you unpubliſh'd Vertues of the earth
Spring with my teares; be aydant, and remediate
In the goodmans deſires: ſeeke, ſeeke for him,
Leſt his ungovern'd rage, diſſolue the life
That wants the meanes to leade it.

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſ. Newes Madam,
The Brittiſh Powers are marching hitherward.
Cord. Tis knowne before. Our preparation ſtands
In expectation of them. O deere father,
It is thy buſineſſe that I go about: therefore great France
My mourning, and importun'd teares hath pittied:
No blowne Ambition doth our Armes incite,
But love, deere love, and our ag'd Fathers Rite:
Soone may I heare, and ſee him. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Regan, and Steward.

Reg. But are my Brothers Powers ſet forth?
Stew. I Madam,
Reg. Himſelfe in perſon there?
Stew. Madam with much adoe
Your Siſter is the better Souldier.
Reg. Lord Edmund ſpake not with your Lord at home;
Stew. No Madam.
Reg. What might import my Siſters Letter to him?
Stew. I know not, Lady.
Reg. Faith he is poaſted hence on ſerious matter:
It was great ignorance. Glouſters eyes being out
To let him live. Where he arrives, he moves
All hearts againſt us: Edmund, I thinke is gone
In pitty of his miſery, to diſpatch
His nighted life: Moreover to deſcry
The ſtrength oth'Enemy.
Stew. I muſt needs after him, Madam, with my Letter.
Reg. Our troopes ſet forth to morrow, ſtay with us:
The wayes are dangerous.
Stew. I may not Madam:
My Lady charg'd my duty in this buſineſſe.
Reg. Why ſhould ſhe write to Edmund?
Might not you tranſport her purpoſes by word? Belike,
Some things, I know not what. Ile love thee much
Let me unſeale the Letter.
Stew. Madam, I had rather———
Reg. I know your Lady do's not love her husband,
I am ſure of that: and at her late being here,
She gave ſtrange Iliads, and moſt ſpeaking lookes
To Noble Edmund. I know you are of her boſome.
Stew. I Madam?
Reg. I ſpeake in underſtanding: Y'are: I know't,
Therefore I doe adviſe you take this note:
My Lord is dead: Edmund, and I have talk'd,
And more convenient is he for my hand
Then for your Ladies: You may gather more:
If you doe find him, pray you give him this;
And when your Miſtris heares thus much from you,
I pray deſire her call her wiſedome to her.
So fare you well:
If you doe chance to heare of that blinde Traitor,
Preferment fals on him, that cuts him off.
Stew. Would I could meet him Madam, I ſhould ſhew
What party I doe follow.
Reg. Fare thee well. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Glouceſter, and Edgar.

Glou. When ſhall I come to th'top of that ſame hill?
Edg. You doe climbe up it now. Looke how we labour.
Glou. Me thinkes the ground is eeven.
Edg. Horrible ſteepe.
Hearke, doe you heare the Sea?
Glou. No truly.
Edg. Why then your other Senſes grow imperfect
By your eyes anguiſh,
Glou. So may it be indeed.
Me thinkes thy voyce is alter'd, and thou ſpeak'ſt
In better phraſe, and matter then thou didſt.
Edg. Y'are much deceiv'd: in nothing am I chang'd
But in my Garments.
Glou. Me thinkes y'are better ſpoken.
Edg. Come on Sir,
Heeres the place: ſtand ſtill: how fearefull
And dizy tis, to caſt ones eyes ſo low,
The Crowes and Choughes, that wing the midway ayre
Shew ſcarſe ſo groſſe as Beetles. Halfe way downe
Hangs one that gathers Sampire: dreadfull Trade:
Me thinkes he ſeemes no bigger then his head.
The Fiſhermen, that walk'd upon the beach
Appeare like Mice: and yond tall Anchoring Barke,
Diminiſh'd to her Cocke: her Cocke, a Buoy
Almoſt too ſmall for ſight. The murmuring Surge,
That on th'unnumbred idle Pebble chafes
Cannot be heard ſo high. Ile looke no more,
Leſt my braine turne, and the deficient ſight
Topple downe headlong.
Glou. Set me where you ſtand.
Edg. Give me your hand:
You are now within a foote of th'extreme Verge:
For all beneath the Moone would I not leape upright.
Glou. Let goe my hand:
Heere friends another purſe: in it, a Iewell
Well worth a poore mans taking. Fairies, and gods
Proſper it with thee Goe thou further off,
Bid me farewell, and let me heare thee going.
Edg. Now fare ye well, good Sir.
Glou. With all my heart.
Edg. Why I doe trifle thus with his deſpaire,
Is done to cure it.
Glou. O you mighty gods!
This world I doe renounce, and in your ſights

Shake patiently my great affliction off:
If I could beare it longer, and not fall
To quarrell with your great oppoſeleſſe willes,
My ſnuffe, and loathed part of Nature ſhould
Burne it ſelfe out. If Edgar live, O bleſſe him:
Now fellow, fare thee well.

Edg. Good Sir, farewell.
And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The Treaſure of life, when life it ſelfe
Yeelds to the Theft. Had he bin where he thought,
By this had thought bin paſt. Alive, or dead?
Hoa, you Sir: friend, here you Sir, ſpeake:
Thus might he paſſe indeed: yet he revives.
What arr you Sir?

Glou. Away, and let me dye.

Edg. Hadſt thou beene ought
But Gozemore, feathers and Ayre,
(So many fathome downe precipitating)
Thoud'it ſhiver'd like an Egge: but thou doſt breath:
Haſt heavy ſubſtance, bleedſt not, ſpeakſt, art ſound.
Ten Maſts at each, make not the altitude
Which thou haſt perpendicularly fell,
Thy lifes a Miracle. Speake yet againe.

Glou. But have I falne, or no?

Edg. From the dread Summet of this Chalky Bourne
Looke up a height, the ſhrill-gor'd Larke ſo farre
Cannot be ſeene, or heard: Doe but looke up.

Glou. Alacke, I have no eyes:
Is wretchedneſſe depriv'd that benefit
To end it ſelfe by death? Twas yet ſome comfort,
When miſery could beguile the Tyrants rage,
And fruſtrate his proud will.

Edg. Give me your arme.
Vp, so: How is't? Feele you your Legges? You ſtand.

Glou. Too well, too well.

Edg. This is above all ſtrangeneſſe,
Vpon the crowne oth' Cliffe. What thing was that
Which parted from you?

Glou. A poore unfortune Beggar.

Edg. As I ſtood here below, me thought his eyes
Were two full Moones: he had a thouſand Noſes,
Hornes wealk'd, and waved like the enraged Sea:
It was ſome fiend: Therefore thou happy father,
Thinke that the cleereſt gods, who make them honors
Of mens Impoſſibilities, have preſerved thee.

Glou. I doe remember now: henceforth Ile beare
Affliction, till it doe cry out it ſelfe.
Enough, enough, and dye. That thing you ſpeake of,
I tooke it for a man: often 'twould ſay
The fiend, the Fiend, he led me to that place.

Edg. Beare free and patient thoughts.

Enter Lear.

But who comes heere?
The ſafer ſenſe will ne're accommodate
His Maſter thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for crying. I am the King himſelfe.

Edg. O thou ſide-piercing ſight!

Lear. Natures above Art, in that reſpect. Theres your Preſſe-money. That fellow handles his bow, like a Crow-keeper: draw me a Cloathiers yard. Looke, looke, a Mouſe: peace, peace, this peece of toaſted Cheeſe will doo't. Theres my Gauntlet, Ile prove it on a Gyant. Bring up the browne Billes. O well flowne Bird: ith clout, ith' clout: Hewgh. Give the word.

Edg. Sweet Marioram.

Lear. Paſſe.

Glou. I know that voyce.

Lear. Ha! Generill with a white beard? They flatter'd me like a Dogge, and told me I had the white haires in my Beard, ere the blacke ones were there. To ſay I, and no, to every thing that I ſaid: I, and no too, was no good Divinity. When the raine came to wet me once, and wind to make me chatter: when the Thunder would not peace at my bidding, there I found em, there I ſmelt em out. Goe to, they are not men o'their words; they told me, I was every thing: Tis a Lye, I am not Agu-proofe.

Glou. The tricke of that voyce, I doe well remember:
Is't not the King?

Lear. I, every inch a King.
When I doe ſtare, ſee how the ſubject quakes.
I pardon that mans life. What was thy cauſe?
Adultery? thou ſhalt not dye: dye for Adultery?
No, the Wren goes too't, and the ſmall gilded Flye
Do's letcher in my ſight. Let Copulation thrive:
For Glouſters baſtard Son was kinder to his father,
Then my Daughters got 'tweene the lawfull ſheets.
Too't Luxury pell-mell, for I lacke Souldiers.
Behold yond ſimpring Dame, whoſe face betweene her Forkes preſages Snow; that minces Vertue, and dos ſhake the head to, heare of pleaſures name. The Fitchew, nor the ſoyled horſe goes too't with a more riotous appetite: downe from the waſte they are Centaures, though Women all above: but to the Girdle doe the gods inherit, beneath is all the fiends. Theres hell, theres darkeneſſe, there is the ſulphurous pit; burning, ſcalding, ſtench, conſumption: Fye, fie, fie; pah, pah: Give me a Ounce of Civet; good Apothecary ſweeten my imagination: Theres money for thee.

Glou. O let me kiſſe that hand.

Lear. Let me wipe it firſt,
It ſmelles of Mortality.

Glou. O ruin'd peece of Nature, this great world
Shall ſo weare out to naught.
Do'ſt thou know me?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough: doſt thou ſquiny at me? No, doe thy worſt blind Cupid, Ile not love. Reade thou this challenge, marke but the penning of it.

Glou. Were all thy Letters Sunnes, I could not ſee.

Edg. I would not take this from report,
It is, and my heart breakes at it.

Lear. Read.

Glou. What with the Caſe of eyes?

Lear, Oh ho, are you there with me? No eyes in your head, nor no mony in your purſe? Your eyes are in a heavy caſe, your purſe in a light, yet you ſee how this world goes.

Glou. I ſee it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad? A man may ſee how this world goes, with no eyes. Looke with thine eares: See how yond Iuſtice railes upon yond ſimple theefe. Hearke in thine eare: Change places, and handy-dandy, which is the Iuſtice, which is the theefe: Thou haſt ſeene a Farmers dogge barke at a Beggar?

Glou. I Sir.

Lear. And the Creature run from the Cur: there thou mightſt behold the great image of Authority, a Dogg's obey'd in Office. Thou, Raſcall Beadle, hold thy bloody hand: why doſt thou laſh that Whore? Strip thy owne backe, thou hotly luſts to uſe her in that kind, for which thou whipſt her. The Vſurer hangs the Cozener. Thorough tatter'd cloathes great Vices doe appeare: Robes, and furr'd gownes hide all. Place ſinnes with gold, and the ſtrong Lance of juſtice, hurtleſſe breakes: Arme it in ragges, a Pigmies ſtraw does pierce it. None does offend, none, I ſay none, Ile able em; take that of me my friend, who have the power to ſeale th'accuſers lips. Get thee glaſſe-eyes, and like a ſcurvy Politician, ſeeme to ſee the things thou doſt not. Now, now, now, now. Pull off my Bootes: harder, harder, ſo.

Edga. O matter, and impertinency mixt,
Reaſon in Madneſſe.
Lear. If thou wilt weepe my fortunes, take my eyes.
I know thee well enough, thy name is Gloſter:
Thou muſt be patient; we came crying hither:
Thou knowſt, the firſt time that we ſmell the Ayre
We wawle, and cry. I will preach to thee: Marke
Glou. Alacke, alacke the day.
Lear. When we are borne, we cry that we are come
To this great ſtage of fooles. This a good blocke:
It were a delicate ſtratagem to ſhooe
A Troope of horſe with felt: Ile put't in prooſe,
And when I have ſtolne upon theſe Sonnes in Lawes,
Then kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.
Enter a Gentleman.
Gent. Oh heere he is: lay hand upon him, Sir.
Your moſt deere Daughter——
Lear. No reſcue? What, a Priſoner? I am even
The Naturall Foole of fortune. Vſe me well,
You ſhall have ranſome. Let me have Surgeons,
I am cut to th'Braines.
Gent. You ſhall have any thing.
Lear. No Seconds? All my ſelfe?
Why, this would make a man, a man of Salt,
To uſe his eies for Garden water-pots. I will die bravely,
Like a ſmugge Bridegroome. What? I will be Ioviall:
Come, come, I am a King. Maſters, know you that?
Gent. You are a Royall one, and we obey you.
Lear. Then theres life in't. Come, and you get it,
You ſhall get it by running: Sa, ſa, ſa, ſa. Exit.
Gent. A ſight moſt pittifull in the meaneſt wretch,
Paſt ſpeaking of in a King. Thou haſt a Daughter
Who redeemes Nature from the generall curſe
Which twaine have brought her to.
Edg. Haile gentle Sir.
Gent. Sir, ſpeed you: whats your will?
Edg. Doe you heare ought (Sir) of a Battell toward.
Gent. Moſt ſure, and vulgar:
Every one heares that, which can diſtinguiſh ſound.
Edg. But by your favour:
How neeres the other Army?
Gent. Neere, and on ſpeedy foot: the maine diſcry
Stands on the hourely thought.
Edg. I thanke you Sir, thats all.
Gent. Though that the Queene on ſpeciall cauſe is here
Her Army is mov'd on. Exit.
Edg. I thanke you Sir.
Glou. You ever gentle Gods, take my breath from me,
Let not my worſer Spirit tempt me againe
To dye before you pleaſe.
Edg. Well pray you Father.
Glou. Now good ſir, what are you?
Edg A moſt poore man, made tame to Fortunes blowes
Who, by the Art of knowne, and feeling ſorrowes,
Am pregnant to good pitty. Give me your hand,
Ile leade you to ſome biding.
Glou. Hearty thankes:
The bounty, and the benizon of heaven
To boot, and boot.
Enter Steward.
Stew. A proclaim'd prize: moſt happy:
That eyeleſſe head of thine, was firſt fram'd fleſh
To raiſe my fortunes. Thou old, unhappy Traitor,
Briefely thy ſelfe remember: the Sword is out
That muſt deſtroy thee.
Glou. Now let thy friendly hand
Put ſtrength enough too't.
Stew. Wherefore, bold Pezant,
Darſt thou ſupport a publiſh'd Traitor? Hence,
Leſt that th'infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Let goe his arme.
Edg. Chill not let goe Zir,
Without vurther caſion.
Stew. Let goe Slave, or thou dy'ſt.

Edg. Good Gentleman goe your gate, and let poore volke paſſe: and 'chud ha'bin zwagged out of my life, twould not ha'bin zo long as tis, by a vortnight. Nay, come not neere th'old man: keepe out che vor'ye, or ice try whither your Coſtard, or my Ballow be the harder; chill be plaine with you.

Stew. Out Dunghill.

Edg. Chill picke your teeth Zir: come, no matter vor your foynes.

Stew. Slave thou haſt ſlaine me: villaine, take my purſe;
If ever thou wilt thrive, bury my body,
And give the Letters which thou findſt about me,
To Edmund Earle of Gloſter: ſeeke him out
Vpon the Engliſh party. Oh untimely death, death.
Edg. I know thee well. A ſerviceable Villaine,
As duteous to the vices of thy Miſtris,
As badneſſe would deſire.
Glou. What, is he dead?
Edg. Sit you downe Father: reſt you.
Lets ſee theſe Pockets; the Letters that he ſpeakes of
May be my friends: he's dead; I am onely ſorry
He had no other Deathſman. Let us ſee:
Leave gentle waxe, and manners: blame us not
To know our enemies mindes, we rip their hearts,
Their Papers are more lawfull.
Reads the Letter.

Let our reciprocall vowes be remembred. You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offer'd. There is nothing done. If hee returne the Conqueror, then am I the Priſoner, and his bed, my Goale, from the loathed warmth whereof, deliver me, and ſupply the place for your Labour.

Your (Wife, ſo I would ſay) affectionate Servant. Generill.

Of indinguiſh'd ſpace of Womans will,
A plot upon her vertuous husbands life,
And the exchange my brother: heere, in the ſands
Thee Ile rake up, the poſte unſanctified
Of murtherous Letchers: and in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper ſtrike the ſight
Of the death-practis'd Duke: for him tis well,
That of thy death, and buſineſſe, I can tell.
Glou. The King is mad:
How ſtiffe is my vilde ſenſe
That I ſtand up, and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge Sorrowes? Better I were diſtract,
So ſhould my thoughts be ſever'd from my griefes,
Drum afarre off.
And woes, by wrong imaginations looſe

The knowledge of themſelves.
Edg. Give me your hand:
Farre off me thinkes I heare the beaten Drumme,
Come father, Ile beſtow you with a friend. Exeunt.

Scæna Septima.

Enter Cordelia, Kent, and Gentleman.

Cor. O thou good Kent,
How ſhall I live and worke
To match thy goodneſſe?
My life will be too ſhort,
And every meaſure faile me.
Kent. To be acknowledg'd Madam is ore-pay'd,
All my reports goe with the modeſt truth,
Nor more, nor clipt, but ſo.
Cor. Be better ſuited,
Theſe weedes are memories of thoſe worſer houres:
I prethee put them off.
Kent. Pardon deere Madam,
Yet to be knowne ſhortens my made intent,
My boone I make it, that you know me not,
Till time, and I, thinke meet.
Cor. Then be't ſo my good Lord:
How dos the King?
Gent. Madam ſleepes ſtill.
Cor. O you kind Gods!
Cure this great breach in his abuſed Nature,
Th'untun'd and jarring ſenſes, O winde up,
Of this child-changed Father.
Gent. So pleaſe your Majeſty.
That we may wake the King, he hath ſlept long?
Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceede
I'th'ſway of your owne will: is he array'd?

Enter Lear in a chaire carried by Servants.

Gent. I Madam: in the heavineſſe of ſleepe,
We put freſh garments on him.
Be by good Madam when we doe awake him,
I doubt of his Tmperance,
Cor. O my deere father, reſtauration hang
Thy medicine on my lippes, and let this kiſſe
Repaire thoſe violent harmes, that my two Siſters
Have in thy Reverence made.
Kent. Kind and deere Princeſſe.
Cor. Had you not bin their father, theſe white flakes
Did challenge pitty of them. Was this a face
To be oppos'd againſt the jarring windes?
Mine Enemies dogge, though he had bit me,
Should have ſtood that night againſt my fire,
And was't thou faine (poore Father)
To hovell thee with Swine and Rogues forlorne,
In ſhort, and muſty ſtraw? Alacke, alacke,
Tis wonder that thy life and wits, at once
Had not concluded all. He wakes, ſpeake to him.
Gent. Madam doe you, tis fitteſt.
Cor. How does my Royall Lord?
How fares your Majeſty?
Lear. You doe me wrong to take me out oth'grave;
Thou art a Soule in bliſſe, but I am bound
Vpon a wheele of fire, that mine owne teares
Doe ſcald, like molten Lead.
Cor. Sir, doe you know me?
Lear. You are a ſpirit I know, where did you dye?
Cor. Still, ſtill, farre wide.
Gen. Hes ſcarſe awake,
Let him alone a while.
Lear. Where have I bin?
Where am I? faire day light?
I am mightily abus'd; I ſhould ev'n dye with pitty
To ſee another thus. I know not what to ſay:
I will not ſweare theſe are my hands: lets ſee,
I feele this pin pricke, would I were aſſur'd
Of my condition,
Cor. O looke upon me Sir,
And hold your hand in benediction o're me,
You muſt not kneele.
Lear. Pray doe not mocke me:
I am a very fooliſh fond old man,
Fourescore and upward,
Not an houre more, nor leſſe:
And to deale plainely,
I feare I am not in my perfect mind.
Me thinkes I ſhould know you, and know this man,
Yet I am doubtfull: for I am mainely ignorant
What place this is, and all the skill I have Remembers not theſe garments: nor I know not
Where I did lodge laſt night. Doe not laugh at me,
For (as I am a man) I thinke this Lady
To be my child Cordelia.
Cor. And ſo I am: I am.
Lear. Be your teares wet?
Yes faith: I pray weepe not.
If you have poyſon for mee, I will drinke it:
I know you doe not love me, for your Siſters
Have (as I doe remember) done me wrong.
You have ſome cauſe, they have not,
Cor. No cauſe, no cauſe.
Lear. Am I in France?
Kent. In your owne kingdome Sir,
Lear. Doe not abuſe me.
Gent. Be comforted good Madam, the great rage
You ſee is kill'd in him: deſire him to goe in,
Trouble him no more till further ſetling.
Cor. Wilt pleaſe you highneſſe walke?
Lear. You muſt beare with me:
Pray you now forget, and forgive,
I am old and fooliſh. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter with Drumme and Colours, Edmund, Regan, Gentlemen, and Souldiers.

Baſt. Know of the Duke if his laſt purpoſe hold,
Or whether ſince he is adviſ'd by ought
To change the courſe, hes full of alteration,
And ſelfe reproving, bring his conſtant pleaſure.
Reg. Our Siſters man is certainely miſcarried.
Baſt. Tis to be doubted Madam.
Reg. Now ſweet Lord,

You know the goodneſſe I intend upon you :
Tell me but truly, but then ſpeake the truth.
Doe you not love my Siſter ?
Baſt. In honour'd Love.
Reg. But have you never found my Brothers way,
To the fore-fended place ?
Baſt. No by mine honor, Madam.
Reg. I never ſhall endure her, deere my Lord,
Be not familiar with her.
Baſt. Feare not, ſhe and the Duke her husband.

Enter with Drum and Colours, Albany, Gonerill, Souldiers.

Alba. Our very loving Siſter, well be-met :
Sir, this I heard, the King is come to his Daughter
With others, whom the rigour of our State
Forc'd to cry out.
Regan. Why is this reaſond ?
Gone. Combine together gainſt the Enemy ;
For theſe domeſticke and particular broiles,
Are not the queſtion heere.
Alb. Lets then determine with th'ancient of warre
On our proceeding.
Reg. Siſter youle goe with us ?
Gon. No.
Reg. Tis moſt convenient, pray goe with us.
Gon. Oh, ho, I know the Riddle, I will goe.
Exeunt both the Armies.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. If ere your Grace had ſpeech with man ſo poore,
Heare me one word.
Alb. Ile overtake you, ſpeake.
Edg. Before you fight the Battaile, ope this Letter :
If you have victory, let the Trumpet ſound
For him that brought it : wretch though I ſeeme,
I can produce a Champion, that will prove
What is avouched there. If you miſcarry,
Your buſineſſe of the world hath ſo an end,
And machination ceaſes. Fortune loves you.
Alb. Stay till I have read the Letter.
Edg. I was forbid it :
When time ſhall ſerve, let but the Herald cry.
And Ile appeare againe. Exit.
Alb. Why fare thee well, I will o're-looke thy paper.

Enter Edmund.

Baſt. The Enemy's in view, draw up your powers,
Heere is the gueſſe of their true ſtrength and forces,
By diligent diſcovery, but your haſt
Is now urg'd on you.
Alb. We will greet the time. Exit.
Baſt. To both theſe Siſtsrs have I ſworne my love :
Each jealous of the other, as the ſtung
Are of the Adder. Which of them ſhall I take ?
Both ? One ? Or neither ? Neither can be enjoy'd
If both remaine alive : To take the Widdow,
Exaſperates, makes mad her Siſter Gonerill,
And hardly ſhall I carry out my ſide,
Her husband being alive. Now then, we'll uſe
His countenance for the Battaile, which being done,
Let her who would be rid of him, deviſe
His ſpeedy taking off. As for the mercy
Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia,
The Battaile done, and they within our power ;
Shall never ſee his pardon : for my ſtate,
Stands on me to defend, not to debate. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Alarum within. Enter with Drum and Colours, Lear, Cordelia, and Souldiers, over the Stage, and Exeunt.

Enter Edgar, and Gloſter.

Edg. Heere Father, take the ſhadow of this Tree
For your good hoaſt : pray that the right may thrive :
If ever I returne to you againe,
Ile bring you comfort.
Glr. Grace goe with you Sir. Exit.
Alarum and Retreat within.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Away old man, give me thy hand. away :
King Lear hath loſt, he and his Daughter tane,
Give me thy hand. Come on.
Glo. No further Sir, a man may rot even heere.
Edg. What in ill thoughts againe ?
Men muſt endure
Their going hence, even as their comming hither,
Ripeneſſe is all, come on.
Glo. And thats true too. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter in conqueſt with Drum and Colours, Edmund, Lear, and Cordelia, as priſoners, Souldiers, Captaine.

Baſt. Some Officers take them away : good guard,
Vntill their greater pleaſures firſt be knowne
That are to cenſure them.
Cor. We are not the firſt,
Who with beſt meaning have incurr'd the worſt :
For thee oppreſſed King I am caſt downe.
My ſelfe could elſe out-frowne falſe Fortunes frowne.
Shall we not ſee theſe Daughters, and theſe Siſters ?
Lear. No, no, no, no : come lets away to priſon :
We two alone will ſing like Birds ith'Cage :
When thou doſt aske me bleſſing, Ile kneele downe
And aske of thee forgiveneſſe : So we'll live,
And pray, and ſing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded Butterflies : and heare poore Rogues
Talke of Court newes, and we'll talkd with them too,
Who looſes, and who wins ; whos in, whos out :
And take upons the myſtery of things,
As if we were Gods ſpies : And we'll weare out
In a wall'd priſon, packes and ſects of great ones
That ebbe and flow by th'Moone.
Baſt, Take them away.
Lear, Vpon ſuch ſacrifices my Cordelia,
The gods themſelves throw incenſe.
Have I caught thee ?
He that parts us, ſhall bring a Brand from heaven,
And fire us hence, like Foxes : wipe thine eye,
The good yeeres ſhall devoure them, fleſh and fell,
Ere

Ere they ſhall make us weepe ?
Weele ſee e'm ſtarv'd firſt: come. Exit.
Baſt. Come hither Captaine, hearke.
Take thou this note, goe follow them to priſon,
One ſtep I have advanc'd thee, if thou doſt
As this inſtructs thee, thou doſt make thy way
To Noble Fortunes: know thou this, that men
Are as the time is; to be tender minded
Does not become a Sword, thy great imployment
Will not beare queſtion: either ſay thou'lt do't,
Or thrive by other meanes,
Capt. Ile dot my Lord.
Baſt. About it, and write happy, when th'haſt done,
Marke I ſay inſtantly, and carry it ſo
As I have ſet it downe. Exit Captaine.

Enter Albany, Generill, Regan, Souldiers.

Alba. Sir, you have ſhew'd to day your valiant ſtraine
And fortune led you well: you have the Captives
Who were the oppoſites of this dayes ſtrife:
I doe require them of you ſo to uſe them,
As we ſhall find their merits, and our ſafety
May equally determine.
Baſt. Sir, I thought it fit,
To ſend the old and miſerable King to ſome retention,
Whoſe age had Charmes in it, whoſe Title more,
To plucke the common boſome on his ſide,
And turne our impreſt Launces in our eyes
Which doe command them. With him I ſent the Queene
My reaſon all the ſame, and they are ready
To morrow, or at further ſpace, t'appeare
Where you ſhall hold your Seſſion.
Alb. Sir, by your patience.
I hold you but a ſubject of this Warre,
Not as a brother.
Reg. Thats as we liſt to grace him.
Methinkes our pleaſure might have bin demanded
Ere you had ſpoke ſo farre. He led our Powers,
Bore the Commiſſion of my place and perſon,
The which immediacy may well ſtand up,
And call it ſelfe your Brother.
Gon. Not ſo hot:
In his owne grace he doth exalt himſelfe,
More then in your addition.
Reg. In my rights,
By me inveſted, he compeeres the beſt.
Alb. That were the moſt, if he ſhould husband you.
Reg. Ieſters doe oft prove Prophets.
Gon. Holla, holla,
That eye that told you ſo, look'd but a ſquint.
Rega. Lady I am not well, elſe I ſhould anſwer
From a full flowing ſtomacke. Generall,
Take thou my ſouldiers, priſoners, patrimony,
Diſpoſe of them, of me, the walls are thine:
Witneſſe the world, that I create thee heere
My Lord, and Maſter.
Gon. Meane you to enjoy him ?
Alb. The let alone lies not in your good will.
Baſt. Nor in thine Lord.
Alb. Halfe-blooded fellow, yes.
Reg. Let the Drum ſtrike, and prove my title thine.
Alb. Stay yet, heare reaſon: Edmund, I arreſt thee
On capitall Treaſon; and in thy arreſt,
This guilded Serpent: for your claime faire Siſters,
I bare it in the intereſt of my wife,
'Tis ſhe is ſub-contracted to this Lord,
And I her husband contradict your Banes.
If you will marry, make your loves to me,
My Lady is beſpoke,
Gon, An enterlude.
Alb. Thou art armed Gloſter,
Let the Trumpet ſound:
If none appeare to prove upon thy perſon,
Thy heynous, manifeſt, and many Treaſons,
There is my pledge: Ile make it on thy heart
Ere I taſte bread, thou art in nothing leſſe
Then I have heere proclaim'd thee.
Reg. Sicke, O ſicke.
Gon. If not, Ile nere truſt medicine.
Baſt. Theres my exchange, what in the world he is
That names me Traitor, villaine-like he lyes,
Call by the Trumpet: he that dares approach;
On him, on you, who not, I will maintaine
My truth and honor firmely.

Enter a Herald.

Alb. A Herald, ho.
Truſt to thy ſingle vertue, for thy Souldiers
All levied in my name, have in my name
Tooke their diſcharge.
Regan. My ſickeneſſe growes upon me.
Albany. She is not well, convey her to my Tent,
Come hither Herald, let the Trumpet ſound,
And read out this. A Trumpet ſounds.

Herald reads.

IF any man of quality or degree within the liſts of the Army, will maintaine upon Edmund ſuppoſed Earle of Gloſter, that he is a manifold Traitor, let him appeare by the third ſound of the Trumpet: he is bold in his defence. 1 Trumpet.
Her. Againe. 2 Trumpet.
Her. Againe. 3 Trumpet.
Trumpet anſwers within.

Enter Edgar armed,

Alb. Aske him his purpoſes, why he appeares
Upon this Call o'th'Trumpet.
Her. What are you ?
Your name, your quality, and why you anſwer
This preſent Summons ?
Edg. Know my name is loſt
By Treaſons tooth: bare-gnawne, and Canker-bit,
Yet am I Noble as the Adverſary
I come to cope.
Alb. Which is that Adverſary ?
Edg. Whats he that ſpeakes for Edmund Earle of Gloſter ?
Baſt. Himſelfe, what ſaiſt thou to him ?
Edg. Draw thy Sword.
That if my ſpeech offend a Noble heart,
Thy arme may doe thee Iuſtice, heere is mine:
Behold it is my priviledge,
The priviledge of mine honours,
My oath, and my profeſſion. I proteſt,
Maugre thy ſtrength, place, youth, and eminence,
Deſpiſe thy victor-Sword, and fire new fortune,
Thy valor, and thy heart, thou art a Traitor:
Falſe to thy gods, thy brother, and thy father,
Conſpirant gainſt this high illuſtrious Prince,
And from th'extremeſt upward of thy head,
To the diſcent and duſt below thy foote,

A moſt Toad-ſpotted Traitor. Say thou no,
This Sword, this arme, and my beſt ſpirits are bent
To prove upon thy heart, whereto I ſpeake,
Thou lyeſt.
Baſt. In wiſedome I ſhould aske thy name,
But ſince thy out-ſide lookes ſo faire and Warlike,
And that thy tongue (ſome ſay) of breeding breathes,
What ſafe, and nicely I might well delay,
By rule of Knight-hood, I diſdaine and ſpurne:
Backe doe I toſſe theſe Treaſons to thy head,
With the hell-hated Lye, ore-whelme thy heart,
Which for they yet glance by, and ſcarcely bruiſe,
This Sword of mine ſhall give them inſtant way,
Where they ſhall reſt for ever. Trumpets ſpeake.
Alb. Save him, ſave him. Alarums. Fights.
Gon. This is practiſe Gloſter,
By th'law of Warre, thou waſt not bound to anſwer
An unknowne oppoſite: thou art not vanquiſh'd,
But cozend, and beguild.
Alb. Shut your mouth Dame,
Or with this paper ſhall I ſtop it: hold Sir,
Thou worſe then any name, reade thine owne evill:
No tearing Lady, I perceive you know it.
Gon. Say if I doe, the Lawes are mine not thine,
Who can araigne me for't? Exit.
Alb. Moſt monſtrous! O, knowſt thou this paper?
Baſt. Aske me not what I know.
Alb. Goe after her, ſhes deſperate, governe her.
Baſt. What you have charg'd me with,
That have I done,
And more, much more, the time will bring it out.
Tis paſt, and ſo am I: But what art thou
That haſt this fortune on me? If thou'rt Noble,
I doe forgive thee.
Edg. Lets exchange charity:
I am no leſſe in blood then thou art Edmund,
If more, the more th'haſt wrong'd me.
My name is Edgar and thy Fathers ſonne,
The gods are juſt, and of our pleaſant vices
Make inſtruments to plague us:
The darke and vitious place where thee he got,
Coſt him his eyes.
Baſt. Th'haſt ſpoken right, tis true,
The Wheele is come full circle, I am heere.
Alb. Me thought thy very gate did propheſie
A Royall Nobleneſſe: I muſt embrace thee,
Let ſorrow ſplit my heart, if ever I
Did hate thee, or thy father.
Edg. Worthy Prince I knowt.
Alb. Where have you hid your ſelfe?
How have you knowne the miſeries of your father?
Edg. By nurſing them my Lord. Liſt a briefe tale,
And when tis told, O that my heart would burſt.
The bloody proclamation to eſcape
That follow'd me ſo neere, (O our lives ſweetneſſe,
That we the paine of death would hourely dye,
Rather then dye at once) taught me to ſhift
Into a mad-mans ragges, t'aſſume a ſemblance
That very Dogges diſdain'd: and in this habit
Met I my father with his bleeding Rings,
Their precious Stones new loſt: became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, ſav'd him from diſpaire.
Never (O fault) reveal'd my ſelfe unto him,
Vntill ſome halfe houre paſt when I was arm'd,
Not ſure, though hoping of this good ſucceſſe,
I ask'd his bleſſing, and from firſt to laſt
Told him our pilgrimage. But his flawd heart
(Alacke too weake the conflict to ſupport)
Twixt two extremes of paſſion, joy and griefe,
Burſt ſmilingly.
Baſt. This ſpeech of yours hath mov'd me,
And ſhall perchance doe good, but ſpeake you on,
You looke as you had ſomething more to ſay.
Alb. If there be more, more wofull, hold it in,
For I am almoſt ready to diſſolve,
Hearing of this.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gen. Helpe, helpe; O helpe.
Edg. What kind of helpe?
Alb. Speake man.
Edg. What meanes this bloody Knife?
Gen. Tis hot, it ſmoakes, came even from the heart of——O ſhes dead.
Alb. Who dead? Speake man.
Gen. Your Lady Sir, your Lady; and her Siſter
By her is poyſon'd: ſhe confeſſes it.
Baſt. I was contracted to them both, all three
Now marry in an inſtant.
Edg. Here comes Kent.

Enter Kent.

Alb. Produce the bodies, be they alive or dead;
Gonerill and Regans bodies brought out.
This judgement of the heavens that makes us tremble.
Touches us not with pitty. O is this ſhe?
The time will not allow the complement
Which very manners urges.
Kent. I am come
To bid my King and Maſter aye good night,
Is he not here?
Alb. Great thing of us forgot,
Speake Edmund, wheres the King? and wheres Cordelia?
Seeſt thou this object Kent.
Kent. Alacke, why thus?
Baſt. Yet Edmund was belov'd:
The one the other poiſon'd for my ſake,
And after ſlew herſelfe.
Alb. Even ſo: cover their faces.
Baſt. I pant for life: ſome good I meane to doe
Deſpight of mine owne Nature. Quickly ſend,
(Be briefe in it) to th'Caſtle for my Writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:
Nay, ſend in time.
Alb. Run, run, O run.
Edg. To whom my Lord? Who has the Office?
Send thy token of repreeve.
Baſt. Well thought on, take my Sword,
Give it the Captaine.
Edg. Haſt thee for thy life.
Baſt. He hath Commiſſion from thy Wife and me,
To hang Cordelia in the priſon, and
To lay the blame upon her owne diſpaire,
That ſhe fore-did her ſelfe.
Alb. The gods defend her, beare him hence a while.

Enter Lear with Cordelia in his armes.

Lear. Howle, howle, howle: O your are men of ſtones,
Had I your tongues and eyes, Il'd uſe them ſo,
That heavens vault ſhould cracke: ſhes gone for ever.
I know when one is dead, and when one lives,
Shes dead as earth: Lend me a Looking-glaſſe,

If that her breath will miſt or ſtaine the ſtone,
Why then ſhe lives.
Kent. Is this the promis'd end?
Edg. Or image of that horror.
Alb. Fall and ceaſe.
Lear. This feather ſtirs, ſhe lives: if it be ſo,
It is a chance which doe's redeeme all ſorrowes
That ever I have felt.
Kent. O my good Maſter.
Lear. Prythee away.
Edg. Tis noble Kent your Friend.
Lear. A plague upon you murtherers, Traitors all,
I might have ſav'd her, now ſhe's gone for ever:
Cordelia, Cordelia, ſtay a little. Ha.
What is't thou ſaiſt? her voyce was ever ſoft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.
I kill'd the ſlave that was a hanging thee.
Gent. Tis true (my Lords) he did.
Lear. Did I not fellow?
I have ſeene the day, with my good biting Faulchion
I would have made him skip: I am old now,
And theſe ſame croſſes ſpoyle me. Who are you?
Mine eyes are o'thbeſt, Ile tell you ſtraight.
Kent. If Fortune brag of two, ſhe lov'd and hated,
One of them we behold.
Lear. This is a dull ſight, are you not Kent?
Kent. The ſame: your ſervant Kent,
Where is your ſervant Caius?
Lear. He's good fellow, I can tell you that,
Hee'l ſtrike and quickly too, he's dead and rotten.
Kent. No my good Lord, I am the very man.
Lear. Ile ſee that ſtraight.
Kent. That from your firſt of difference and decay,
Hane follow'd your ſad ſteps.
Lear. You are welcome hither.
Kent. Nor no man elſe:
All's cheereleſſe, darke, and deadly,
Your eldeſt daughters have fore-done themſelves,
And deſperately are dead.
Lear. I ſo I thinke.
Alb. He knowes not what he ſayes, and vaine is it
That we preſent us to him.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Edg. Very bootleſſe.
Meſ. Edmund is dead my Lord.
Alb. Thats but a trifle here:
You Lords and Noble friends know our intent,
What comfort to this great decay may come,
Shall be appli'd. For us we will reſigne,
During the life of this old Majeſty
To him our abſolute power, you to your rights,
With boot, and ſuch addition as your honours
Have more then merited. All Friends ſhall
Taſte the wages of their vertue, and all Foes
The cup of their deſervings: O ſee, ſee.
Lear. And my poore Foole is hang'd: No, no, no life?
Why ſhould a Dog, a Horſe, a Rat have life,
And thou no breath at all? Thou'it come no more,
Never, never, never, never, never.
Pray you undoe this Button. Thanke you Sir,
Doe you ſee this? Looke on her, looke on her lips,
Looke there, looke there. He dyes.
Edg. He faints, my Lord, my Lord.
Kent. Breake heart, I prythee breake.
Edg. Looke to my Lord.
Kent. Vex not his ghoſt, O let him paſſe, he hates him,
That would upon the wracke of this tough world
Stretch him out longer.
Edg. He is gone indeed.
Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd ſo long,
He but uſurpt his life.
Alb. Beare them from hence, our preſent buſineſſe
Is generall woe: Friends of my ſoule, you twaine,
Rule in this Realme, and the gor'd ſtate ſuſtaine.
Kent I have a journey ſir, ſhortly to goe,
My Maſter cals me, I muſt not ſay no. Dyes.
Edg. The waight of this ſad time we muſt obey,
Speake what we feele, not what we ought to ſay:
The oldeſt hath borne moſt, we that are yong,
Shall never ſee ſo much, nor live ſo long.
Exeunt with a dead march.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDY OF Othello, the Moore of Venice.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Rodorigo and Iago.

Rodorigo.

NEver tell me, I take it very unkindly
That thou (Iago) who haſt had my purſe, (this.
As if the ſtrings were thine, ſhould'ſt know of Iago. But you'l not heare me. If ever I did
Of ſuch a matter, abhorre me. (dreame
Rodo. Thou told'ſt me,
Thou didſt hold him in thy hate.
Iago. Deſpiſe me
If I doe not. Three great ones of the Citie,
(In perſonall ſuit to make me his Lievetenant)
Off-capt to him: and by the faith of man
I know my price, I am worth no woſe a place.
But he (as loving his owne pride, and purpoſes)
Evades them, with a Bumbaſt Circumſtance,
Horribly ſtuft with Epithites of warre,
Non-ſuites my Mediators. For certes, ſayes he,
I have already choſe my Officer. And what was he?
Forſooth, a great Arithmetician,
One Michael Caſſio, a Florentine,
(A Fellow almoſt damn'd in a faire wife)
That never ſet a Squadron in the Field,
Nor the diviſion of a battaile knowes
More than a Spinſter: Vnleſſe the Bookiſh Theoricke:
Wherein the Tongued Conſuls can propoſe
As Maſterly as he, Meere prattle (without practiſe)
Is all his Souldierſhip. But he (Sir) had th'election
And I (of whom his eyes had ſeene the proofe
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on others grounds
Chriſten'd, and Heathen) muſt be be-leed, and calm'd
By Debitor, and Creditor. This Counter-Caſter,
He (in good time) muſt his Lievtenant be,
And I (bleſſe the marke) his Mooreſhips Ancient.
Rod. By heaven, I rather would have been his hang-Iago. Why, there's no remedy, (man
Tis the curſe of Service;
Preferment goes by Letter, and affection,
And not by old gradation, where each ſecond
Stood heire to th'firſt. Now ſir, be Iudge your ſelfe,
Whether I in any juſt terme am Affirn'd
To love the Moore?
Rod. I would not follow him then.
Iago. O Sir content you.
I follow him to ſerve my turne upon him.
We cannot all be Maſters, nor all Maſters
Cannot be truely follow'd. You ſhall marke
Many a dutious and knee-crooking Knave;
That (doting on his owne obſequious bondage)
Weares out his time, much like his Maſters Aſſe,
For nought but Provender, & when he's old Caſheer'd.
Whip me ſuch honeſt Knaves. Others there are
Who trim'd in Formes, and viſages of duty,
Keepe yet their hearts attending on themſelves,
And throwing but ſhowes of ſervice on their Lords,
Doe well thrive by them.
And when they have lin'd their Coates
Doe themſelmes Homage.
Theſe Fellowes have ſome ſoule,
And ſuch a one doe I profeſſe my ſelſe. For (ſir)
It is as ſure as you are Rodorigo,
Were I the Moore, I would not be Iago:
In following him, I follow but my ſelfe.
Heaven is my Iudge, not I, for love and duty,
But ſeeming ſo, for my peculiar end:
For when my outward action doth demonſtrate
The native act, and figure of my heart
In complement externe, 'tis not long after
But I will weare my heart vpon my ſleeve
For Dawes to pecke at; I am not what I am.
Rod. What a fall Fortune do's the thicke-lips owe
If he can carry't thus?
Iago. Call up her father:
Rowſe him, make after him, poyſon his delight,
Proclaime him in the ſtreets. Incenſe her kinſemen,
And though he in a fertile Clymate dwell,
Plague him with Flyes: though that his joy be joy,
Yet throw ſuch chances of vexation on't,
As it may looſe ſome colour.
Rodo. Here is her fathers houſe, Ile call aloud.
Iago. Doe, with like timorous accent, and dire yell,
As when (by night and negligence) the fire
Is ſpied in populous Cities.
Rod. What hoa: Brabantio, Signior Brabantio, hoa.
Iago. Awake, what hoa, Brabantio: Theeves, theeves,
Looke to your houſe, your Daughter, and your Bags,
Theeves, theeves.
Bra. Above. What is the reaſon of this terrible
Summons? what is the matter there?
Rodo. Signior, is all your Familie within?
Iago. Are your doores lock'd?
Bra. Why? wherefore aske you this?
Iago. Sir, y'are robb'd, for ſhame put on your Gowne,

Your heart is burſt, you have loſt halfe your ſoule
Even now, now, very now an old blacke Ram
Is tupping your white Ewe. Ariſe, ariſe,
Awake the ſnorting Citizens with the Bell,
Or elſe the Divell will make a Grand-ſire of you.
Ariſe I ſay.

Bra. What, have you loſt your wits?

Rod. Moſt reverend Signior, do you know my voyce?

Bra. Not I: what are you?

Rod. My name is Rodorigo.

Bra. The worſer welcome:
I have charg'd thee not to haunt about my doores:
In honeſt plaineneſſe thou haſt heard me ſay,
My Daughter is not for thee. And now in madneſſe
(Being full of ſupper, and diſtempering draughts)
Vpon malicious knavery, doſt thou come
To ſtart my quiet.

Rod. Sir, Sir, Sir.

Bra. But thou muſt needs be ſure,
My ſpirits and my place have in their power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience good Sir.

Bra. What tell'ſt thou me of Robbing?
This is Venice: my houſe is not a Grange.

Rod. Moſt grave Brabantio,
In ſimple and pure ſoule, I come to you.

Iag. Sir, you are one of thoſe that will not ſerve God, if the Divell bid you. Becauſe we come to do you ſervice, and you thinke we are Ruffians, you'l have your Daughter cover'd with a Barbary horſe, you'l have your Nephewes neigh to you, you'le have Courſers for Cozens: and Gennets for Germans.

Bra. What prophane wretch art thou?

Iag. I am one Sir, that comes to tell you, your Daughter and the Moore, are making the Beaſt with two backs.

Bra. Thou are a Villaine.

Iago. You are a Senator.

Bra. This thou ſhalt anſwer. I kow thee Rodorigo.

Rod. Sir, I will anſwer any thing. But I beſeech you
If't be your pleaſure, and moſt wiſe conſent,
(As partly I find it is) that your faire Daughter,
At this odde Even and dull watch o'th'night
Tranſported with no worſe nor better guard,
But with a Knave of common hire, a Gundelier,
To the groſſe claſpes of a Laſcivious Moore:
If this be knowne to you, and your Allowance,
We then have done you bold and ſawcy wrongs.
But if you know not this, my manners tell me,
We haue your wrong rebuke. Doe not beleeve
That from the ſenſe of all Civilitie,
I thus would play and trifle with your Reverence.
Your daughter (if you have not given her leave)
I ſay againe, hath made a groſſe revolt,
Tying her Duty, Beauty, Wit, and Fortunes
In an extravagant, and wheeling Stranger,
Of here, and every where: ſtraight ſatisfie your ſelfe.
If ſhe be in your Chamber, or your houſe,
Let looſe on me the Iuſtice of the State
For thus deluding you.

Bra. Strike on the Tinder, hoa:
Give me a Taper: call up all my people,
This Accident is not unlike my dreame,
Beleefe of it oppreſſes me already.
Light, I ſay, light.

Iago. Farewell: for I muſt leave you.
It ſeemes not meet, nor wholſome to my place
To be producted, as if I ſtay, I ſhall,) Againſt the Moore. For I doe know the State,
(How ever this may gall him with ſome checke)
Cannot with ſafety caſt him. For he's imbark'd
With ſuch loud reaſon to the Cyprus warres,
(Which even now ſtands in Act) that for their ſoules
Another of his Fadome, they have none,
To lead their Buſineſſe. In which regard,
Though I doe hate him as I doe hell,
Yet, for neceſſity of preſent life,
I muſt ſhew out a Flag, and ſigne of Love,
(Which is indeed but ſigne) that you ſhal ſurely find him
Lead to the Sagitary the raiſed Search:
And there will I be with him. So farewell. Exit.

Enter Brabantio, with Servants and Torches.

Bra. It is too true an evill. Gone ſhe is,
And what's to come of my deſpiſed time,
Is naught but bitterneſſe. Now Rodorigo,
Where didſt thou ſee her? (Oh unhappy Girle)
With the Moore ſaiſt thou? (Who would be a Father?)
How didſt thou know twas ſhe? (Oh ſhe deceives me
Paſt thought:) what ſaid ſhe to you? Get moe Tapers:
Raiſe all my Kinred. Are they married thinke you?

Rod. Truely I thinke they are.

Bra. Oh heaven: how got ſhe out?
Oh treaſon of my blood.
Fathers, from hence truſt not your Daughters minds
By what you ſee them Act. Are there not charmes,
By which the propertie of Youth and Maidhood
May be abus'd? Have you not read Rodorigo,
Of ſome ſuch thing?

Rod. Yes ſir: I have indeed.

Bra. Call up my brother: oh would you had had her.
Some one way, ſome another. Doe you know
Where we may apprehend her, and the Moore?

Rod. I thinke I can diſcover him, if you pleaſe
To get good Guard, and goe along with me.

Bra. Pray you lead on. At every houſe Ile call,
(I may command at moſt) get Weapons (hoa)
And raiſe ſome ſpeciall Officers of might:
On good Rodorigo, I will deſerve your paines. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, Attendants, with Torches.

Iag. Though in the trade of warre I have ſlaine men,
Yet doe I hold it very ſtuffe o'th'conſcience
To doe no contriv'd murder: I lake iniquitie
Sometime to doe me ſervice. Nine, or ten times
I had thought to have yerk'd him here under the Ribbes.

Othel. Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay but he prated,
And ſpoke ſuch ſcurvy, and provoking termes
Againſt your honor, that with the little godlineſſe I have
I did full hard forbeare him. But I pray you ſir,
Are you faſt married? Be aſſur'd of this,
That the Magnifico is much belov'd,
And hath in his effect a voyce potentiall
As double as the Dukes: He will divorce you.
Or put upon you, what reſtraint or grievance,

The Law (with all his might, to enforce it on)
Will give him Cable.
Othe. Let him doe his ſpight;
My ſervices, which I have done the Signory
Shall out-tongue his complaints. Tis yet to know,
Which when I know, that boaſting is an honour,
I ſhall promulgate. I fetch my life and being,
From men of Royall Seige. And my demerites
May ſpeake (unbonnetted) to as proud a Fortune
As this that I have reach'd. For know Iago,
But that I love the gentle Deſdemona,
I would not my unhouſed free condition
Put into Circumſcription, and Confine,
For the Seas worth. But looke, what Lights come yond?

Enter Caſſio with Torches.

Iago. Thoſe are the raiſed father, and his friends:
You were beſt goe in.
Othel. Not I: I muſt be found.
My parts, my title, and my perfect ſoule
Shall manifeſtly me rightly. Is it they?
Iago. By Ianus, I thinke no.
Othel. The ſervants of the Dukes?
And my Lievtenant?
The goodneſſe of the night upon you (friends)
What is the Newes?
Caſſio. The Duke does greet you (Generall)
And he requires your haſte, Poſt-haſte appearance,
Even on the inſtant.
Othel. What is the matter, thinke you?
Caſſio. Something from Cyprus, as I may divine:
It is a buſineſſe of ſome heat. The Gallies
Have ſent a dozzen ſequent meſſengers
This very night, at one anothers heeles:
And many of the Conſuls (rais'd and met,)
Are at the Dukes already. You have been hotly call'd for,
When being not at your lodging to be found,
The Senate hath ſent about three ſeverall Queſts,
To ſearch you out.
Othel. Tis well I am found by you:
I will but ſpend a word here in the houſe,
And goe with you.
Caſſio. Ancient, what makes he here?
Iago. Faith, he to night hath boorded a Land Carrac,
If it prove lawfull prize, he's made for ever.
Caſſio. I doe not underſtand.
Iago. He's married.
Caſſio. To whom?
Iago. Marry to ——Come Captaine, will you goe?
Othel. Have with you.
Caſſio. Here comes another Troope to ſeeke for you:

Enter Brabantio, Rodorigo, with Officers and Torches.

Iago. It is Brabantio: Generall be advis'd,
He comes to bad intent.
Othel. Holla, ſtand there.
Rod. Signior, it is the Moore.
Bra. Downe with him, Theefe.
Iago. You Rodorigo? Come ſir, I am for you.
Othe. Keepe up your bright Swords, for the dew will ruſt them. Good Signior, you ſhall more command with yeares, than with your Weapons.
Bra. Oh thou foule theefe,
Where haſt thou ſtow'd my Daughter?
Damn'd as thou art, thou haſt enchaunted her
For Ile referre me to all things of ſenſe,
(If ſhe in chaines of Magicke were not bound)
Whether a Maide, ſo tender, faire, and happy,
So oppoſite to Marriage, that ſhe ſhunn'd
The wealthy curled Dearling of our Nation,
Would ever have (t'encurre a generall mocke)
Runne from her Guardage to the ſooty boſome,
Of ſuch a thing as thou: to feare, not to delight?
Iudge me the world, if tis not groſſe in ſenſe,
That thou haſt practis'd on her with foule Charmes,
Abus'd her delicate youth, with Drugs or Minerals,
That weakens motion. Ile have't diſputed on,
Tis probable, and palpable to thinking;
I therefore apprehend and doe attach thee,
For an abuſer of the world, a practiſer
Of Arts inhibited, and out of warrant;
Lay hold upon him, if he doe reſiſt
Suddue him at his perill.
Othe. Hold your hands,
Both you of my inclining, and the reſt,
Were it my Cue to fight, I ſhould have knowne it
Without a Prompter. Whither will you that I goe
To anſwer this your charge?
Bra. To priſon, till fit time
Of Law, and courſe of direct Seſſion
Call thee to anſwer.
Othe. What if I doe obey?
How may the Duke be therewith ſatisfied,
Whoſe Meſſengers are here about my ſide,
Vpon ſome preſent buſineſſe of the State,
To bring me to him.
Officer. Tis true moſt worthy Signior,
The Duke's in Councell, and your Noble ſelfe,
I am ſure is ſent for.
Bra. How? The Duke in Councell?
In this time of the nigh? bring him away;
Mine's not an idle cauſe. The Duke himſelfe,
Or any of my Brothers of the State,
Cannot but feele this wrong, as twere their owne:
For if ſuch Actions may have paſſage free,
Bond-ſlaves and Pagans ſhall our Stateſmen be. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Duke, Senators, and Officers.

Duke. There is no compoſition in this newes,
That gives them credit.
1 Sen. Indeed, they are diſproportioned;
My Letters ſay, a Hundred and ſeven Gallies.
Duke. And mine a Hundred forty.
2 Sen. And mine two Hundred:
But though they jumpe not on a juſt accompt,
(As in theſe Caſes where the ayme reports,
'Tis oft with difference) yet doe they all confirme
A Turkiſh Fleet, and bearing up to Cyprus,
Duke. Nay, it is poſſible enough to judgement:
I doe not ſo ſecure me in the errour,
But the maine Article I doe approve
In fearefull ſenſe.
Saylor within. What hoa, what hoa, what hoa.
Enter Saylor.

Officer. A Meſſenger from the Gallies.
Duke. Now ? What's the buſineſſe ?
Saylor. The Turkiſh preparation makes for Rhodes,
So was I bid report here to the State,
By Signior Angelo.
Duke. How ſay you by this change ?
1. Sen. This cannot be
By no aſſay of Reaſon. Tis a Pageant
To keepe us in falſe gaze, when we conſider
Th'importancy of Cyprus to the Turke :
And let our ſelves againe but underſtand,
That as it more concernes the Turke then Rhodes,
So may he with more facile queſtion beare it,
For that it ſtands not in ſuch warlike brace,
But altogether lackes th'abilities
That Rhodes is dreſs'd in. If we make thought of this,
We muſt not thinke the Turke is ſo unskilfull,
To leave that lateſt, which concernes him firſt,
Neglecting an attempt of eaſe, and gaine
To wake, and wage a danger profitleſſe.
Duke. Nay, in all confidence he's not for Rhodes.
Officer. Here is more Newes.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſſen. The Ottamites, Reveren'd, and Gracious,
Steering with due courſe toward the Ile of Rhodes,
Have there injoynted them with an after Fleet.
1 Sen. I, ſo I thought : how many, as you gueſſe ?
Meſſ. Of thirty Saile : and now they doe re-ſtem
Their backward courſe, bearing with franke appearance
Their purpoſes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
Your truſty and moſt valiant Servitour,
With his free duty, recommends you thus,
And prayes you to beleeve him.
Duke. Tis certaine then for Cyprus :
Marcus Luccicos is not he in Towne ?
1. Sen. He's now in Florence.
Duke. Write from us,
To him, Poſt, Poſt-haſte, diſpatch.
1. Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the Moore.

Enter Brabantio, Othello, Caſſio, Iago, Rodorigo, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we muſt ſtraight employ you,
Againſt the generall Enemy Ottoman.
I did not ſee you : welcome gentle Signior,
We lack't your Counſaile, and your helpe to night.
Bra. So did I yours : Good your Grace pardon me.
Neither my place, for ought I heard of buſineſſe
Hath rais'd me from my Bed ; nor doth the generall care
Take hold on me. For my particular griefe
Is of ſo flood-gate, and ore-bearing Nature,
That it ingluts, and ſwallowes other ſorrowes,
And it is ſtill it ſelfe.
Duke. Why ? Whats the matter ?
Bra. My Daughter : oh my Daughter !
Sen. Dead.
Bra. I, to me.
She is abus'd, ſtolne from me, and corrupted
By Spels and Medicines, bought of Mountebankes ;
For Nature ſo prepoſterouſly to erre,
(Being not deficient, blind, or lame of ſenſe,)
Sans witch-craft could not.
Duke. Who ere he be, that in this fowle proceeding
Hath thus beguil'd your Daughter of her ſelfe,
And you of her ; the bloody Booke of Law,
You ſhall your ſelfe read, in the bitter letter,
After your owne ſenſe : yea, though our proper ſonne
Stood in your Action.
Bra. Humbly I thanke your Grace,
Here is the man ; this Moore, whom now it ſeemes
Your ſpeciall Mandate, for the State affaires,
Hath hither brought.
All. We are very ſorry for't.
Duke. What in your owne part, can you ſay to this ?
Bra. Nothing, but this is ſo.
Othe. Moſt Potent, Grave, and Reverend Signiors,
My very Noble, and approv'd good Maſters ;
That I have tane away this old mans daughter,
It is moſt true : true I have married her ;
The very head, and front of my offending,
Hath this extent ; no more. Rude am I, in my ſpeech,
And little bleſs'd with the ſoft phraſe of Peace ;
For ſince theſe Armes of mine, had ſeven yeeres pith,
Till now, ſome nine Moones waſted, they have us'd
Their deereſt action, in the tented field :
And little of this great world can I ſpeake,
More than pertaines to Feats of Broyles, and Battaile,
And therefore little ſhall I grace my cauſe,
In ſpeaking for my ſelfe. Yet, (by your gracious patience)
I will a round un-varniſh'd Tale deliver,
Of my whole courſe of Love.
What Drugs, what Charmes,
What Conjuration, and what mighty Magicke,
(For ſuch proceeding I am charg'd withall)
I won his Daughter with.
Bra. A Maiden, never bold :
Of ſpirit ſo ſtill, and quiet, that her Motion
Bluſh'd at her ſelfe, and ſhe in ſpight of Nature,
Of yeares, of Countrey, credite, every thing
To fall in Love, with what ſhe fear'd to looke on ;
It is a judgement maim'd, and moſt imperfect.
That will confeſſe Perfection ſo could erre
Againſt all rules of Nature, and muſt be driven
To find out practiſes of cunning hell
Why this ſhould be. I therefore vouch againe,
That with ſome Mixtures powerfull ore the blood,
Or with ſome Dram (conjur'd to this effect)
He wrought upon her.
Duk. To vouch this, is no proofe,
Without more wider, and more over-Teſt
Then theſe thin habits, and poore likely-hoods
Of moderne ſeeming, doe preferre againſt him.
Sen. But Othello, ſpeake,
Did you, by indirect, and forced courſes
Subdue, and poyſon this yong Maids affections ?
Or came it by requeſt, and ſuch faire queſtion
As ſoule, to ſoule affordeth ?
Othel. I doe beſeech you,
Send for the Lady to the Sagitary,
And let her ſpeake of me before her Father ;
If you doe find me foule, in her report,
The truſt, the office, I doe hold of you,
Not onely take away, but let your ſentence
Even fall upon my life.
Duke. Fetch Deſdemona hither.
Othel. Ancient, conduct them ;
You beſt know the place.
And till ſhe come, as truely as to heaven,
I doe confeſſe the vices of my blood,
So juſtly to your Grave eares, Ile preſent

How I did thrive in this faire Ladies love,
And ſhe in mine.
Duke. Say it Othello.
Othe. Her father lov'd me,oft invited me:
Still queſtion'd me the ſtory of my life,
From yeare to yeare: the Battails,Sieges,Fortune,
That I have paſt.
I ran it through,even from my Boyiſh dayes,
To th'very moment that he bad me tell it.
Wherein I ſpoke of moſt diſaſtrous chances:
Of moving Accidents by Flood,and Field,
Of haire-breadth ſcapes i'th'imminent deadly breach;
Of being taken by the inſolent foe,
And ſold to ſlavery. Of my redemption thence,
And portance in my Travellers hiſtory.
Wherein of Antars vaſt,and Deſarts wilde,
Rough Quarries, Rocks,& Hils,whoſe heads touch heaven,
It was my hint to ſpeake. Such was my Proceſſe,
And of the Canibals that each others eate,
The Anthropophagi,and men whoſe heads
Grew beneath their ſhoulders. Theſe things to heare,
Would Deſdemona ſeriouſly incline:
But ſtill the houſe affaires would draw her hence:
Which ever as ſhe could with haſte diſpatch,
She'ld come againe,and with a greedy eare
Devoure up my diſcourſe. Which I obſerving,
Tooke once a pliant houre,and found good meanes
To draw from her a prayer of earneſt heart,
That I would all my Pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels ſhe had ſomething heard,
But not diſtinctively: I did conſent,
And often did beguile her of her teares,
When I did ſpeake of ſome diſtreſſefull ſtroke
That my youth ſuffer'd: My ſtory being done,
She gave me for my paines a world of kiſſes:
She ſwore in faith twas ſtrange,twas paſſing ſtrange,
'Twas pittifull: twas wondrous pittifull.
She wiſh'd ſhe had not heard it,yet ſhe wiſh'd
That heaven had made her ſuch a man.She thank'd me,
And bad me if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I ſhould but teach him how to tell my ſtory,
And that would wooe her. Vpon this hint I ſpake,
She lov'd me for the dangers I have paſt,
And I lov'd her,that ſhe did pitty them.
This onley is the witch-craft I have us'd.
Here comes the Lady: Let her witneſſe it.

Enter Deſdemona,Iago,Attendants.

Duke. I thinke this tale would win my Daughter too,
Good Brabantio,take up this mangled matter at the beſt:
Men doe their broken Weapons rather uſe,
Then their bare hands.
Bra. I pray you heare her ſpeake:
If ſhe confeſſe that ſhe was halfe the wooer,
Deſtruction on my head,if my bad blame
Light on the man. Come hither gentle Miſtris,
Doe you perceive in all his Noble company,
Where moſt you owe obedience?
Deſ. My Noble father,
I doe perceive here a divided duty.
To you I am bound for life,and education:
My life and education both doe learne me,
How to reſpect you. You are the Lord of duty,
I am hitherto your daughter. But here's my husband;
And ſo much duty,as my Mother ſhew'd
To you,preferring you before her father:
So much I challenge,that I may profeſſe
Due to the Moore my Lord.
Bra. God be with you: I have done.
Pleaſe it your Grace,on to the State affaires;
I had rather to adopt a child than get it.
Come hither Moore,
I here doe give thee that with all my heart,
Which but thou haſt already,with all my heart
I would keepe from thee. For your ſake (Iewell)
I am glad at ſoule,I have no other child;
For thy eſcape would teach me tyranny
To hang clogs on them. I have done my Lord.
Duke. Let me ſpeake like your ſelfe:
And lay a Sentence,
Which like a griſe,or ſtep may helpe theſe Lovers.
When remedies are paſt,the griefes are ended
By ſeeing the worſt,which late on hopes depended.
To mourne a miſchiefe that is paſt and gone,
Is the next way to draw new miſchiefe on.
What cannot be preſerv'd,when Fortune takes:
Patience,her Injury a mockery makes.
The robb'd that ſmiles,ſteals ſomthing from the Thiefe,
He robs himſelfe,that ſpends a bootleſſe griefe.
Bra. So let the Turke of Cyprus us beguile,
We loſe it not ſo long as we can ſmile:
He beares the ſentence well,that nothing beares,
But the free comfort which from thence he heares.
But he beares both the ſentence,and the ſorrow,
That to pay griefe,muſt of poore Patience borrow.
Theſe Sentences,to Sugar,or to Gall,
Being ſtrong on both ſides,are Equivocall.
But words are words,I never yet did heare:
That the bruiz'd heart was pierced through the eare.
I humbly beſeech you proceed to th'Affaires of State.

Duke. The Turke with a moſt mighty preparation makes for Cyprus; Othello,the Fortitude of the place is beſt knowne to you. And though we have there a Subſtitute of moſt allowed ſufficiency; yet opinion, a more Soveraigne Miſtris of Effects, throwes a more ſafe voyce on you: you muſt therefore be content to ſlubber the groſſe of your new Fortunes, with this more ſtubborne,and boyſterous expedition.

Othe. The Tyrant Cuſtome,moſt Grave Senators,
Hath made the flinty and Steele Coach of Warre
My thrice-driven bed of Downe. I doe agnize
A naturall and prompt Alacrity,
I find in hardneſſe: and doe undertake
This preſent warre againſt the Ottomites.
Moſt humbly therefore bending to your State,
I crave fit diſpoſition for my Wife,
Due reference of Place,and Exhibition,
With ſuch accomodation and beſort
As levels with her breeding.
Duke. Why,at her Fathers.
Bra. I will not have it ſo.
Othe. Nor I.
Deſ. Nor would I there reſide,
To put my father in impatient thoughts
By being in his eye. Moſt Gracious Duke,
To my unfolding,lend your proſperous eare,
And let me find a Character in your voyce
T'aſſiſt my ſimpleneſſe.
Duke. What would you Deſdemona?
Deſ. That I love the Moore,to live with him,
My downe-right violence,and ſtorme of Fortunes,

May trumpet to the world. My heart's ſubdu'd
Even to the very quality of my Lord;
I ſaw Othello's viſage in his minde,
And to his honours and his valiant parts,
Did I my ſoule and fortunes conſecrate.
So that (deere Lords) if I be left behind
A Moth of Peace, and he goe to the War,
The Rites for why I love him, are bereft me:
And I a heavy interim ſhall ſupport
By his deare abſence. Let me goe with him.

Othe. Let her have your voyce.
Vouch with me heaven, I therefore beg it not
To pleaſe the Palate of my Appetite:
Nor to comply with heat the yong effects
In my defunct, and proper ſatisfaction.
But to be free, and bounteous to her minde:
And heaven defend your good ſoules, that you thinke
I will your ſerious and great buſineſſe ſcant
When ſhe is with me. No, when light wing'd Toyes
Of feather'd Cupid, ſeele with wanton dulneſſe
My ſpeculative, and offic'd Inſtrument:
That my Diſports corrupt, and taint my buſineſſe:
Let Houſe-wives make a Skillet of my Helme,
And all indigne, and baſe adverſities,
Make head againſt my Eſtimation.

Duke. Be it as you ſhall privately determine,
Either for her ſtay, or going: th'Affaire cryes haſte:
And ſpeed muſt anſwer it.

Sen. You muſt away to night.

Othe. With all my heart.

Duke. At nine i'th'morning, here wee'l meet againe.
Othello, leave ſome Officer behind
And he ſhall our Commiſſion bring to you:
And ſuch things elſe of quality and reſpect
As doth import you.

Othe. So pleaſe your Grace, my Ancient,
A man he is of honeſty and truſt:
To his conveyance I aſſigne my wife.
With what elſe needfull, your good Grace ſhall thinke
To be ſent after me.

Duke. Let it be ſo:
Good night to every one. And Noble Signior,
If Vertue no delighted beauty lacke,
Your Son-in Law is farre more faire than blacke.

Sen. Adieu brave Moore, uſe Deſdemona well.

Bra. Looke to her (Moore) if thou haſt eyes to ſee:
She has deceiv'd her father, and may thee. Exit.

Othe My life upon her faith. Honeſt Iago,
My Deſdemona muſt I leave to thee:
I prythee let thy wife attend on her,
And bring them after in their beſt advantage.
Come Deſdemona, I have but an houre
Of Love, of worldly matter, and direction
To ſpeake with thee. We muſt obey the time. Exit.

Rod. Iago.

Iago. What ſaiſt thou noble heart?

Rod. What will I doe, thinkſt thou?

Iago. Why goe to bed and ſleepe.

Rod. I will incontinently drowne my ſelfe.

Iago. If thou doſt, I ſhall never love thee after. Why thou ſilly Gentleman?

Rod. It is ſillineſſe to live, when to live is torment: and then have we a preſcription to dye, when death is our Phyſitian.

Iago. Oh villanous: I have look'd upon the world for foure times ſeven yeares, and ſince I could diſtinguiſh betwixt a Benefit, and an injury, I never found man that knew how to love himſelfe. Ere I would ſay, I would drowne my ſelfe for the love of a Gynney Hen, I would change my humanity with a Baboone.

Rod. What ſhould I doe, I confeſſe it is my ſhame to be ſo fond, but it is not in my vertue to amend it.

Iago. Vertue? A figge, tis in our ſelves that wee are thus, or thus. Our Bodies are our Gardens, to the which, our Wils are Gardiners. So that if we will plant Nettels, or ſowe Lettice: Set Hyſope, and weede up Time: Supply it with one gender of Hearbes, or diſtract it with many: either have it ſterrill with idleneſſe, or manured with Induſtry, why the power and Corrigible authority of this lies in our Wils. If the braine of our lives had not one ſcale of Reaſon, to poyſe another of Senſuality, the blood, and baſeneſſe of our Natures would conduct us to moſt prepoſtrous Concluſions. But wee have reaſon to coole our raging Motions, or carnall Stings, or unbitted Luſts: whereof I take this, that you call Love, to be a Sect, or Seyen.

Rod. It cannot be.

Iago. It is meerely a Luſt of the Blood, and a permiſſion of the will. Come, be a man: drowne thy ſelfe? Drowne Cats, and blind Puppies. I have profeſt me thy Friend, and I confeſſe me knit to thy deſerving, with Cables of perdurable toughneſſe. I could never better ſteed thee than now. Put money in thy purſe: follow thou the Warres, defeat thy favour, with an uſurped Beard. I ſay, put money in thy purſe. It cannot be long that Deſdemona ſhould continue her love to the Moore. Put Money in thy purſe: nor he his to her. It was a violent Commencement in her, and thou ſhalt ſee an anſwerable Sequeſtration, put but money in thy purſe. Theſe Moores are changeable in their wils: fill thy purſe with money. The food that to him now is as luſhious as Locuſts, ſhall to him ſhortly bee as bitter as Coloquintida. Shee muſt change for youth: when ſhee is ſated with his body, ſhe will finde the errours of her choyce. Therefore put money in thy purſe. If thou wilt needs damne thy ſelfe, doe it a more delicate way then drowning. Make all the money thou canſt: If Sanctimony and a fraile vow, betwixt an erring Barbarian, and ſuper-ſubtle Venetian be not too hard for my wits, and all the Tribe of hell, thou ſhalt enjoy her: therefore make money: a pox of drowning thy ſelfe, it is cleane out of the way. Seeke thou rather to bee hang'd in compaſſing thy joy, then to bee drown'd, and goe without her.

Rod. Wilt thou be faſt to my hopes, if I depend on the iſſue?

Iago. Thou art ſure of me: Goe make money: I have told thee often, and I re-tell thee againe, and againe, I hate the Moore. My cauſe is hearted; thine hath no leſſe reaſon. Let us be conjunctive in our revenge, againſt him. If thou canſt Cuckold him, thou doſt thy ſelfe a pleaſure, me a ſport. There are many Events in the Wombe of Time, which will be delivered. Traverſe, goe, provide thy money. We will have more of this to morrow. Adieu.

Rod. Where ſhall we meet i'th morning?

Iago. At my lodging.

Rod. Ile be with thee betimes.

Iago. Goe to, farewell. Doe you here Rodorigo?

Rod. Ile ſell all my Land. Exit.

Iago. Thus doe I ever make my Foole, my purſe:
For I mine owne gain'd knowledge ſhould prophane
If I would time expend with ſuch a Swaine,

But for my Sport,and Profit : I hate the Moore,
And it is thought abroad,that twixt my ſheets
He ha's done my Office. I know not if't be true,
But I, for meere ſuſpition in that kinde,
Will doe,as if for Surety. He holds me well,
The better ſhall my purpoſe worke on him:
Caſſio's a proper man : Let me ſee now,
To get this place,and to plume up my will
In double Knavery. How ? how ? Let's ſee.
After ſome time,to abuſe Othello's eares,
That he is too familiar with his wife :
He hath a perſon,and a ſmooth diſpoſe
To be ſuſpected : fram'd to make women falſe.
The Moore is of a free,and open Nature,
That thinkes men honeſt,that but ſeeme to be ſo,
And will as tenderly be lead by'th'Noſe
As Aſſes are :
I have't : it is engendred : Hell,and Night,
Muſt bring this monſtrous Birth,to the worlds light.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Montano,and Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the Cape,can you diſcerne at Sea ?
1 Gen. Nothing at all,it is a high wrought Flood :
I cannot 'twixt the heaven and the Maine,
Deſcry a Sayle.
Mon. Me thinkes,the wind hath ſpoke aloud at Land,
A fuller blaſt ne're ſhooke our Battlements :
If it hath ruffiand ſo upon the Sea,
What ribbes of Oake,when Mountaines melt on them,
Can hold the Morties. What ſhall we heare of this ?
2 A Segregation of the Turkiſh Fleet :
For doe but ſtand upon the foaming Shoare,
The chidden Billow ſeemes to pelt the cloudes,
The wind-ſhak'd-Surge,with high & monſtrous Maine,
Seemes to caſt water on the burning Beare,
And quench the Guards of th'ever-fixed Pole :
I never did like moleſtation view
On the enchafed Flood.
Mon. If that the Turkiſh Fleet
Be not inſhelter'd,and embay'd,they are drown'd,
It is impoſſible to beare it out.

Enter a Gentleman.

3 Newes Laddes : our warres are done :
The deſperate Tempeſt hath ſo bang'd the Turkes,
That their deſignement halts. A Noble ſhip of Venice,
Hath ſeene a grievous wracke and ſufferance
On moſt part of their Fleet.
Mon. How ? Is this true ?
3 The Ship is here put in: A Veroneſſo, Michael Caſſio
Lieutenant to the warlike Moore, Othello,
Is come on Shore : the Moore himſelfe at Sea,
And is in full Commiſſion heere for Cyprus.
Mon. I am glad on't :
Tis a worthy Governor.
3 But this ſame Caſſio, though he ſpeake of comfort,
Touching the Turkiſh loſſe, yet he lookes ſadly,
And prayes the Moore be ſafe ; for they were parted
With fowle aud violent Tempeſt.
Mon. Pray heavens he be :
For I have ſerv'd him, and the man commands
Like a full Souldier. Lets to the Sea-ſide (hoa)
As well to ſee the Veſſell thats come in,
As to throw-out our eyes for brave Othello,
Even till we make the Maine, and th'Eriall blew,
And indiſtinct regard.
Gent. Come, lets doe ſo ;
For every Minute is expectancy
Of more Arrivancy.

Enter Caſſio.

Caſſi. Thankes you, the valiant of the warlike Iſle,
That ſo approove the Moore : Oh let the heavens
Give him defence againſt the Elements,
For I have loſt him on a dangerous Sea,
Mon. Is he well ſhip'd ?
Caſſi. His Barke is ſtoutly Timber'd, and his Pylot
Of very expert, and approv'd Allowance ;
Therefore my hope's (not ſurfetted to death)
Stand in bold Cure.
Within. A Saile,a Saile,a Saile.
Caſſio. What noyſe ?
Gent. The Towne is empty ; on the brow o'th'Sea
Stand rankes of People,and they cry a Sayle.
Caſſio. My hopes doe ſhape him for the Governour,
Gent They doe diſcharge their ſhot of courteſie,
Our friends,at leaſt.
Caſſio. I pray you ſir goe forth.
And give us truth who tis that is arriv'd.
Gent. I ſhall. Exit.
Mon. But good Lievtenant,is your Generall wiv'd?
Caſſio. Moſt fortunately : he hath atchiev'd a Maid
That paragons deſcription,and wilde Fame :
One that excels the quirkes of blazoning Pens,
And in th'eſſentiall Veſture of Creation,
Do's tire the Ingeniver.

Enter Gentleman.

How now ? Who has put in ?
Gent. Tis one Iago, Ancient to the Generall.
Caſſio. Ha's had moſt favourable,and happy ſpeed :
Tempeſts themſelves,high Seas,and howling winds,
The gutter'd Rockes,and Congregated Sands,
Traitors enſteep'd, to enclogge the guiltleſſe Keele,
As having ſenſe of Beauty,doe omit
Their mortall Natures,letting goe ſafely by
The divine Deſdimona.
Mon. What is ſhe ?
Caſſio. She that I ſpake of :
Our great Captaines Captaine,
Left in the conduct of the bold Iago,
Whoſe footing here anticipates our thoughts,
A Senights ſpeed. Great Iove, Othello guard,
And ſwell his Saile with thine owne powrefull breath,
That he may bleſſe this Bay with his tall Ship,
Make loves quicke pants in Deſdemonaes armes,
Give renew'd fire to our extincted Spirits.

Enter Deſdemona, Iago, Rodorigo, and Æmilia.

Oh behold,
The riches of the ſhip is come on Shore :
You men of Cyprus,let her have your knees.
Haile to thee Lady : and the grace of Heaven,
Before,behind thee,and on every hand
Enwheele thee round.
Deſ. I thanke you,valiant Caſſio,
What tydings can you tell me of my Lord ?

Caſ. He is not arriv'd, nor know I ought
But that he's well, and will be ſhortly heere.
Deſ. Oh, but I feare:
How loſt you company?
Caſ. The great contention of the Sea and Skies,
Parted our fellowſhip. But hearke, a Saile.
Within. A Saile, a Saile.
Gent. They give this greeting to the Cittadell:
This likewiſe is a friend.
Caſ. See for the Newes:
Good Ancient, you are welcome. Welcome Miſtris:
Let it not gall your patience (good Iago)
That I extend my Manners. Tis my Breeding,
That gives me this bold ſhew of Courteſie.
Iago. Sir, would ſhe give you ſo much of her lips,
As of her tongue ſhe oft beſtowes of me,
You would have enough.
Deſ. Alas: ſhe has no ſpeech.
Iago. Infaith too much:
I find it ſtill, when I have leave to ſleepe,
Marry before your Ladyſhip, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.
Æmil. You have little cauſe to ſay ſo.
Iago. Come on, come on: you are Pictures out of dores:
Bels in your Parlors: Wilde-Cats in your Kitchens:
Saints in your injuries: Divels being offended:
Players in your Huſwifery, and Huſwives in your beds.
Deſ. Oh, fie upon thee, ſlanderer.
Iago. Nay, it is true: or elſe I am a Turke,
You riſe to play, and goe to bed to worke.
Æmil. You ſhall not write my praiſe.
Iago. No, let me not.
Deſ. What would'ſt write of me, if thou ſhould'ſt praiſe me.
Iago. Oh, gentle Lady, doe not put me too't,
For I am nothing, if not Criticall.
Deſ. Come on, aſſay.
There's one gone to the Harbour?
Iag. I Madam.
Deſ. I am not merry: but I doe beguile
The thing I am, by ſeeming otherwiſe.
Come, how wouldſt thou praiſe me?

Iago. I am about it, but indeed my invention comes from my Pate, as Birdlime does from Freeze, it pluckes out Braines and all. But my Muſe labours, and thus ſhee is delivered.

If ſhe be faire, and wiſe; faireneſſe and wit,
The ones for uſe, the other uſeth it.
Deſ. Well prais'd:
How if ſhe be blacke and witty?
Iago. If ſhe be blacke, and thereto have a wit,
She'l find a white, that ſhall her blackneſſe fit.
Deſ. Worſe and worſe.
Æmil. How if faire and fooliſh.
Iago. She never yet was fooliſh that was faire,
For even her folly helpt her to an heire.

Deſd. Theſe are old fond Paradoxes, to make Fooles laugh i'th'Alehouſe. What miſerable praiſe haſt thou for her that's foule and fooliſh.

Iago. Theres none ſo foule and fooliſh thereunto,
But does foule prankes, which faire, and wiſe-ones doe.

Deſd. Oh heavy ignorance: thou praiſeſt the worſt beſt. But what praiſe couldſt thou beſtow on a deſerving woman indeed? One, that in the authority of her merit, did juſtly put on the vouch of very malice it ſelfe.

Iago. She that was ever faire, and never proud,
Had tongue at will, and yet was never loud:
Never lackt gold, and yet went never gay,
Fled from her wiſh, and yet ſaid now I may.
She that being angred, her revenge being nie,
Bad her wrong ſtay, and her diſpleaſure flie:
She that in wiſedome never was ſo fraile,
To change the Cods-head for the Salmons taile:
She that could thinke, and nev'r diſcloſe her mind,
See Suitors following, and not looke behind:
She was a Wight, (if ever ſuch Wights were)
Deſ. To doe what?
Iago. To ſuckle Fooles, and chronicle ſmall Beere.

Deſd. Oh moſt lame and impotent concluſion. Doe not learne of him Æmillia, though he be thy husband. How ſay you (Caſſio) is he not a moſt prophane, and liberall Counſailor?

Caſſio. He ſpeakes home (Madam) you may relliſh him more in the Souldier, than in Scholler.

Iago. He takes her by the palme: I, well ſaid, whiſper. With as little a web as this, will I enſnare as great a Fly as Caſſio. I, ſmile upon her, doe: I will gyve thee in thine owne Courtſhip. You ſay true, tis ſo indeed. If ſuch trickes as theſe ſtrip you out of your Lievtenantry, it had beene better you had not kiſs'd your three fingers ſo oft, which now againe you are moſt apt to play the Sir, in. Very good: well kiſs'd, and excellent Curtſie: tis ſo indeed. Yet againe, your fingers to your lippes? Would they were Cliſter-pipes for your ſake.
The Moore, I know his Trumpet.
Caſſio. Tis truely ſo.
Deſ. Lets meet him, and receive him.
Caſſio. Loe, where he comes.

Enter Othello and Attendants.

Oth. O, my faire Warriour.
Deſ. My deere Othello.
Oth. It gives me wonder, great as my content
To ſee you here before me.
Oh my ſoules joy:
If after every Tempeſt, come ſuch calmes,
May the windes blow, till they have waken'd death:
And let the labouring Barke climbe hils of Seas
Olympus high: and ducke againe as low,
As hel's from heaven. If it were now to dye,
Twere now to be moſt happy. For I feare,
My ſoule hath her content ſo abſolute,
That not another comfort like to this,
Succeeds in unknowne Fate.
Deſ. The heavens forbid
Bnt that our Loves
And Comforts ſhould encreaſe
Even as our dayes doe grow.
Othe. Amen to that (ſweet Powers)
I cannot ſpeake enough of this content,
It ſtoppes me here: it is too much of joy.
And this, and this the greateſt diſcords be
That ere our hearts ſhall make.

Iago. Oh you are well-tun'd now: But Ile ſet downe the Pegges that make this Muſicke, as honeſt as I am.

Othe. Come,let us to the Caſtle.
Newes (Friends) our warres are done:
The Turkes are drown'd.
How doe's my old acquaintance of this Iſle?
(Hony)you ſhall be well deſir'd in Cyprus,
I have found great love amongſt them. Oh my Sweet,
I prattle out of faſhion,and I doat
In mine owne comforts. I prythee,good Iago,
Goe to the Bay,and diſimbarke thy Coffers:
Bring thou the Maſter to the Cittadell,
He is a good one,and his worthineſſe
Doe's challenge much reſpect. Come Deſdemona,
Once more well met at Cyprus.

Exit Othello and Deſdemona.

Iago. Do you meet me preſently at the harbour. Come thither,if thou be'ſt valiant, (as they ſay baſe men being in love, have then a Nobility in their Natures,more than is native to them) liſt-me; the Lievtenant to night watches on the Court of Guard. Firſt, I muſt tell thee this: Deſdemona,is directly in love with him.

Rod. With him? Why, tis not poſſible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus: and let thy ſoule be inſtructed. Marke me with what violence ſhee lov'd the Moore,but for bragging, and telling her fantaſticall lies. To love him ſtill for prating, let not thy diſcreet heart thinke it. Her eye muſt be fed. And what delight ſhall ſhe have to looke on the Divell? When the blood is made dull with the Act of Sport, there ſhould be a game to enflame it, and to give ſatiety a freſh appetite. Lovelineſſe in favour,ſimpathy in yeares, Manners, and Beauties: all which the Moore is defective in. Now for want of theſe requir'd Conveniences, her delicate tenderneſſe will find it ſelfe abus'd,begin to heave the gorge, diſrelliſh and abhorre the Moore, very Nature will inſtruct her in it, and compell her to ſome ſecond choyce. Now ſir,this granted (as it is a moſt pregnant and vnforc'd poſition) who ſtands ſo eminent in the degree of this Fortune,as Caſſio doe's: a Knave very voluble: no further conſcionable,than in putting on the meere forme of Civill,and humane ſeeming, for the better compaſſe of his Salt, and moſt hidden looſe Affection? Why none, why none: A ſlippery,and ſubtle Knave,a finder of occaſion: that ha's an eye can ſtampe,and counterfeit Advantages, though true Advantage never preſent it ſelfe. A Divelliſh Knave: beſides, the Knave is handſome,yong: and hath all thoſe requiſites in him, that folly and greene mindes looke after. A peſtilent compleat Knave, and the woman hath found him already.

Rod. I cannot beleeve that in her, ſhe's full of moſt bleſs'd condition.

Iago. Bleſs'd figges-end. The Wine ſhee drinke is made of Grapes. If ſhe had beene bleſs'd, ſhee would never have lov'd the Moore: Bleſs'd pudding. Didſt thou not ſee her paddle with the palme of his hand? Didſt not marke that?

Rod. Yes,that I did: but that was but curteſie.

Iago. Leachery by this hand: an Index, and obſcure prologue to the Hiſtory of Luſt and foule Thoughts. They met ſo neere with their lippes, that their breathes embrac'd together. Villanous thoughts Rodorigo, when theſe mutabilities ſo marſhall the way, hard at hand comes the Maſter, and maine exerciſe, th'incorporate concluſion: Piſh. But ſir, be you rul'd by mee. I have brought you from Venice. Watch you to night: for the command, Ile lay't upon you. Caſſio knowes you not: Ile not be farre from you. Doe you find ſome occaſion to anger Caſſio, either by ſpeaking too loud, or tainting his diſcipline, or from what other courſe you pleaſe, which the time ſhall more favourably miniſter.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he's raſh, and very ſodaine in Choler: and happily may ſtrike at you,provoke him that he may: for even out of that will I cauſe theſe of Cyprus to Mutiny. Whoſe qualification ſhall come into no true taſte againe, but by the diſplanting of Caſſio. So ſhall you have a ſhorter journey to your deſires, by the meanes I ſhall then have to preferre them. And the impediment moſt profitably removed,without the which there were no expectation of our proſperity.

Rod. I will doe this,if you can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meet me by and by at the Cittadell. I muſt fetch his neceſſaries a ſhore. Farewell.

Rod. Adieu. Exit.

Iago. That Caſſio loves her,I doe well beleev't:
That ſhe loves him, tis apt,and of great credite.
The Moore (howbeit that I endure him not)
Is of a conſtant,loving,noble Nature,
And I dare thinke,he'le prove to Deſdemona,
A moſt deare husband. Now I doe love her too,
Not out of abſolute luſt,(though peradventure
I ſtand accountant for as great a ſinne)
But partly led to dyet my Revenge,
For that I doe ſuſpect the luſty Moore
Hath leapt into my ſeat. The thought whereof,
Doth (like a poyſonous Minerall) gnaw my Inwards:
And nothing can,or ſhall content my Soule
Till I am eeven'd with him,wife for wife.
Or failing ſo,yet that I put the Moore,
At leaſt into a Ielouzie ſo ſtrong,
That judgement cannot cure. Which thing to doe,
If this poore Traſh of Venice,whom I trace
For his quicke hunting,ſtand the putting on,
Ile have our Michael Caſſio on the hip,
Abuſe him to the Moore,in the right garbe
(For I feare Caſſio with my Night-Cap too)
Make the Moore thanke me,love me,and reward me,
For making him egregiouſly an Aſſe,
And practiſing upon his peace and quiet,
Even to madneſſe. Tis here: but yet confuſd,
Knaveries plaine face,is never ſeene,till us'd. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Othello's Herald with a Proclamation.

Herald. It is Othello's pleaſure, our Noble and Valiant Generall; That upon certaine Tydings now arriv'd, importing the meere perdition of the Turkiſh Fleet, every man put himſelfe into Triumph. Some to dance, ſome to make Bonfires, each man, to what Sport and Revels his addition leads him. For beſides theſe beneficiall Newes, it is the Celebration of his Nuptiall. So much was his pleaſure ſhould be proclaimed. All offices are open,and there is full liberty of Feaſting from this preſent houre of five, till the Bell have told eleven.

Bleſſe the Iſle of Cyprus, and our Noble Generall Othello.
Exit.

Enter Othello, Deſdemona, Caſſio and Attendants.

Othel. Good Michael, looke you to the Guard to night:
Lets teach our ſelves that honourable ſtop,
Not to out-ſport diſcretion.

Caſ. Iago hath direction what to doe.
But notwithſtanding with my perſonall eye
Will I looke to't.

Othe. Iago, is moſt honeſt:
Michael, goodnight. To morrow with your earlieſt,
Let me have ſpeech with you. Come my deare Love,
The purchaſe made, the fruits are to enſue,
That profit's yet to come tweene me, and you.
Goodnight. Exit.

Enter Iago.

Caſ. Welcome Iago; we muſt to the Watch.

Iago. Not this houre Lievtenant: 'tis not yet ten o'th Clocke. Our Generall caſt us thus early for the love of his Deſdemona: Whom, let us not therefore blame; he hath not yet made wanton the night with her: and ſhee is ſport for Iove.

Caſ. She's a moſt exquiſite Lady.

Iago. And Ile warrant her, full of Game.

Caſ. Indeed ſhee's a moſt freſh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye ſhe ha's?
Me thinkes it ſounds a parley to provocation.

Caſ. An inviting eye:
And yet me thinkes right modeſt.

Iago. And when ſhe ſpeakes,
Is it not an Alarum to Love?

Caſ. She is indeed perfection.

Iago. Well: happineſſe to their ſheets. Come Lievtenant, I have a ſtope of Wine, and here without are a brace of Cyprus Gallants, that would faine have a meaſure to the health of blacke Othello.

Caſ. Not to night, good Iago: I have very poore, and unhappy Braines for drinking. I could well wiſh courteſie would invent ſome other cuſtome of entertainement.

Iago. Oh, they are our Friends: but one Cup, Ile drinke for you.

Caſſio. I have drunke but one Cup to night, and that was craftily qualified too: and behold what innovation it makes here. I am infortunate in the infirmity, and dare not taske my weakeneſſe with any more.

Iago. What man? tis a night of Revels, the Gallants deſire it.

Caſ. Where are they?

Iago. Here, at the doore: I pray you call them in.

Caſ. Ile doo't, but it diſlikes me.

Iago. If I can faſten but one Cup upon him
With that which he hath drunke to night already,
He'l be as full of Qnarrell, and offence
As my yong Miſtris Dog,
Now my ſicke Foole Rodorigo,
Whom Love hath turn'd almoſt the wrong ſide out,
To Deſdemona hath to night Carrows'd,
Potations, pottle-deepe; and he's to watch.
Three elſe of Cyprus, Noble ſwelling ſpirits,
(That hold their honours in a wary diſtance,
The very Elements of this warlike Iſle)
Have I to night fluſter'd with flowing Cups,
And they Watch too.
Now 'mongſt this Flocke of Drunkards,
Am I to put our Caſſio in ſome Action
That may offend the Iſle. But here they come.

Enter Caſſio, Montano, and Gentlemen.

If conſequence doe but approve my dreame,
My Boat ſayles freely, both with wind and ſtreame.

Caſ. 'Fore heaven, they have given me a rowſe already.

Mon. Good faith a little one: not paſt a Pint, as I am a Souldier.

Iago. Some Wine hoa,
And let me the Cannakin clinke, clinke:
And let me the Cannakin clinke.
A Souldiers a man: Oh, mans life's but a ſpan,
Why then let a Souldier drinke.
Some Wine Boyes.

Caſ. 'Fore heaven: an excellent Song.

Iago. I learn'd it in England: where indeed they are moſt potent in Potting. Your Dane, your Germane, and your ſwag-belly'd Hollander, (drinke hoa) are nothing to your Engliſh.

Caſſio. Is your Engliſhman ſo exquiſite in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinkes you with facilitie, your Dane dead drunke. He ſweares not to overthrow your Almaine. He gives your Hollander a vomit, ere the next Pottle can be fill'd.

Caſ. To the health of our Generall.

Mon. I am for it Lievtenant: and Ile doe you Iuſtice.

Iago. Oh ſweet England.
King Stephen was and-a worthy Peere,
His Breeches coſt him but a Crowne,
He held them ſixepence all to deere,
With that he call'd the Taylor Lowne.
He was a Wight of high Renowne,
And thou art but of low degree:
Tis Pride that puls the Countrey downe,
And take thy awl'd Cloake about thee.
Some Wine hoa.

Caſſio. Why this is a more exquiſite ſong than the other.

Iago. Will you hear't againe?

Caſ. No: for I hold him to be unworthy of his place, that do's thoſe things. Well: heav'ns above all: and there be ſoules muſt be ſaved, and there be ſoules muſt not be ſaved.

Iago. Its true, good Lievtenant.

Caſ. For mine owne part, no offence to the Generall, nor any man of quality: I hope to be ſaved.

Iago. And ſo doe I too Lievtenant.

Caſſio. I: (but by your leave) not before me. The Lievtenant is to be ſaved before the Ancient. Lets have no more of this: lets to our affaires. Forgive us our ſinnes: Gentlemen lets looke to our buſineſſe. Doe not thinke Gentlemen, I am drunke: this is my Ancient, this is my right hand, and this is my left. I am not drunke now: I can ſtand well enough, and I ſpeake well enough.

Gent. Excellent well.

Caſ. Why very well then: you muſt not thinke then, that I am drunke.

Montan. To th'Platforme (Maſters) come, lets ſet the Watch.

Iago. You ſee this fellow that is gone before,
He is a Soldier, fit to ſtand by Caeſar,
And give direction. And doe but ſee his vice,
Tis to his vertue a juſt Equinox,

The one as long as th'other. Tis pitty of him:
I feare the truſt Othello puts him in,
On ſome odde time of his infirmity
Will ſhake this Iſland.
Mont. But is he often thus?
Iago. Tis evermore his prologue to his ſleepe,
He'le watch the Horologue a double Set,
If drinke rocke not his Cradle.
Mont. It were well
The Generall were put in mind of it:
Perhaps he ſees it not, or his good nature
Prizes the vertue that appeares in Caſſio,
And lookes not on his evils: is not this true?

Enter Rodorigo.

Iago. How now Rodorigo?
I pray you after the Lievtenant, goe.
Mont. And tis great pitty that the Noble Moore
Should hazzard ſuch a place, as his owne Second,
With one ingraft Infirmity,
It were an honeſt Action, to ſay ſo
To the Moore.
Iago. Not I, for this faire Iſland,
I doe love Caſſio well: and would doe much
To cure him of this evill. But harke, what noyſe?

Enter Caſſio purſuing Rodorigo.

Caſ. You Rogue: you Raſcall.
Mon. Whats the matter Lieutenant?
Caſ. A Knave teach me my duty? Ile beat the Knave into a Twiggen Bottle.
Rod. Beate me.
Caſ. Doſt thou prate, Rogue?
Mon. Nay, good Lievetenant:
I pray you ſir, hold your hand.
Caſ. Let me goe (ſir)
Or Ile know you ore the Mazzard.
Mon. Come, come: you're Drunke.
Caſſio. Drunke?
Iago. Away I ſay: goe out and cry a Mutiny.
Nay good Lieutenant. Alas Gentlemen:
Helpe hoa. Lieutenant. Sir Montano:
Helpe maſters. Here's a goodly Watch indeed.
Who's that which rings the Bell: Diablo, hoa:
The towne will riſe. Fie, fie Lieutenant,
You'l be ſham'd for ever.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Othe. What is the matter here?
Mon. I bleed ſtill, I am hurt, but not to th'death.
Othe. Hold for your lives.
Iag. Hold hoa: Lievtenant, Sir Montano, Gentlemen:
Have you forgot all place of ſenſe and dutie?
Hold. The Generall ſpeakes to you: hold for ſhame
Oth. Why how now hoa? From whence ariſeth this?
Are we turn'd Turkes? and to our ſelves doe that
Which heaven hath forbid the Ottamittes.
For Chriſtian ſhame, put by this barbarous brawle:
He that ſtirres next to carve for his owne rage,
Holds his ſoule light: He dies upon his Motion.
Silence that dreadfull Bell, it frights the Iſle,
From her propriety. What is the matter, Maſters.
Honeſt Iago, that lookes dead with grieving.
Speake: who began this? On thy love I charge thee?
Iago. I do not not know: Friends all, but now, even now
In Quarter, and in termes like Bride and Groome
Deveſting them for Bed: and then, but now:
(As if ſome Planet had unwitted men)
Swords out, and tilting one at others breaſts,
In oppoſition bloody. I cannot ſpeake
Any beginning to this peeviſh oddes.
And would in action glorious, I had loſt
Thoſe legges that brought me to a part of it.
Othe. How comes it (Michael) you are thus forgot?
Caſ. I pray you pardon me, I cannot ſpeake.
Othe. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be civill:
The gravitie and ſtilneſſe of your youth
The world hath noted. And your name is great
In mouthes of wiſeſt Cenſure. Whats the matter
That you unlace your reputation thus,
And ſpend your rich opinion, for the name
Of a night-brawler? Give me anſwer to it.
Mon. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger,
Your Officer Iago can informe you,
While I ſpare ſpeech which ſomething now offends me.
Of all that I doe know, nor know I ought
By me; thats ſaid, or done amiſſe this night,
Vnleſſe ſelfe-charity be ſometimes a vice,
And to defend our ſelves, it be a ſinne
When violence aſſayles us.
Othe. Now by heaven,
My blood begins my ſafer Guides to rule,
And paſſion (having my beſt judgement collied)
Aſſayes to leade the way. If I once ſtirre,
Or doe but lift this Arme, the beſt of you
Shall ſinke in my rebuke. Give me to know
How this foule Rout began: Who ſet it on,
And he that is approv'd in this offence,
Though he had twinn'd with me, both at a birth,
Shall looſe me. What in a towne of warre,
Yet wilde, the peoples hearts brim-full of feare,
To manage private, and domeſticke Quarrell?
In night, and on the Court and Guard of ſafetie?
Tis monſtrous: Iago, who begin't?
Mon. If partially Affin'd, or league in office,
Thou doſt deliver more, or leſſe than truth,
Thou art no Souldier.
Iago. Touch me not ſo neere,
I had rather have this tongue cut from my mouth,
Than it ſhould doe offence to Michael Caſſio.
Yet I perſwade my ſelfe, to ſpeake ſo the truth
Shall nothing wrong him. This it is Generall:
Montano and my ſelfe being in ſpeech,
There comes a Fellow, crying out for helpe,
And Caſſio following him with determin'd Sword,
To execute upon him. Sir, this Gentleman,
Steps into Caſſio, and intreats his pauſe:
My ſelfe, the crying fellow did purſue,
Leſt by his clamour (as it ſo fell out)
The Towne might fall in fright. He, (ſwift of foot)
Out-ran my purpoſe: and I return'd the rather
For that I heard the clinke and fall of ſwords,
And Caſſio high in oath: Which till to night
I nere might ſay before. When I came backe
(For this was briefe) I found them cloſe together
At blow, and thruſt, even as againe they were
When you your ſelfe did part them.
More of this matter cannot I report,
But men are men: the beſt ſometimes forget,
Though Caſſio did ſome little wrong to him,
As men in rage ſtrike thoſe that wiſh them beſt,
Yet ſurely Caſſio, I beleeve, receiv'd
From him that fled, ſome ſtrange indignity,
Which patience could not paſſe.

Othe. I know Iago
Thy honeſtie, and love doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Caſſio: Caſſio, I love thee,
But never more be Officer of mine.

Enter Deſdemona attended.

Looke if my gentle Love be not rais'd up:
Ile make thee an example.

Deſ. What is the matter (Deere?)

Othe. All's well, Sweeting:
Come away to bed. Sir for your hurts,
My ſelfe will be your Surgeon. Lead him off:
Iago, looke with care about the Towne,
And ſilence thoſe whom this vile brawle diſtracted.
Come Deſdemona, 'tis the Souldiers life,
To have their Balmy ſlumbers wak'd with ſtrife. Exit.

Iago. What are you hurt Lieutenant?

Caſ. I, paſt all Surgery.

Iago. Marry Heaven forbid.

Caſ. Reputation, Reputation, Reputation: Oh I have loſt my Reputation. I have loſt the immortall part of my ſelfe, and what remaines is beſtiall. My Reputation, Iago, my Reputation.

Iago. As I am an honeſt man I had thought you had received ſome bodily wound; there is more ſence in that then in Reputation. Reputation is an idle, and moſt falſe impoſition; oft got without merit, and loſt without deſerving. You have loſt no Reputation at all, unleſſe you repute your ſelfe ſuch a looſer. What man, there are more wayes to recover the Generall againe. You are but now caſt in his moode, (a puniſhment more in policie, then in malice) even ſo as one would beate his offencelesse dogge, to affright an Imperious Lyon. Sue to him againe and he's yours.

Caſ. I will rather ſue to bee deſpis'd, then to deceive ſo good a Commander, with ſo ſlight, ſo drunken, and ſo indiſcreet an Officer. Drunke? And ſpeake Parrat? And ſquabble? Swagger? Sweare? And diſcourſe Fuſtian with ones owne ſhaddow? Oh thou inviſible ſpirit of Wine, if thou haſt no name to be knowne by, let us call thee Divell.

Iago. What was hee that you follow'd with your Sword? What had he done to you?

Caſ. I know not.

Iago. Is't poſſible?

Caſ. I remember a maſſe of things, but nothing diſtinctly: a Quarrell, but nothing wherefore. Oh, that men ſhould put an Enemie in their mouthes, to ſteale away their Braines? that wee ſhould with joy pleaſance, revell and applauſe, transforme our ſelves into Beaſts.

Iago. Why? But you are now well enough: how came you thus recovered?

Caſ. It hath pleas'd the divell drunkenneſſe, to give place to the divell wrath, one unperfectneſſe ſhewes me another, to make me frankly deſpiſe my ſelfe.

Iago. Come, you are too ſevere a Moraller. As the Time, the Place, and the Condition of this Country ſtands I could hartily wiſh this had not befalne: but ſince it is, as it is, mend it for your owne good.

Caſ. I will aske him for my Place againe, hee ſhall tell me, I am a drunkard: had I as many mouthes as Hydra, ſuch an anſwer would ſtop them all. To bee now a ſenſible man, by and by a Foole, and preſently a Beaſt. Oh ſtrange! Every inordinate cup is unbleſs'd, and the Ingredient is a divell.

Iago. Come, come: good wine, is a good familiar Creature, if it be well us'd: exclaime no more againſt it. And good Lieutenant, I thinke, you thinke I love you.

Caſſio. I have well approved it, Sir, I drunke?

Iago. You, or any man living, may be drunke at a time man. I tell you what you ſhall do: Our Generals Wife, is now the Generall. I may ſay ſo, in this reſpect, for that he hath devoted, and given up himſelfe to the contemplation, marke: and devotement of her parts and Graces. Confeſſe your ſelfe freely to her: Importune her helpe to put you in your place againe. She is of ſo free, ſo kinde, ſo apt, ſo bleſſed a diſpoſition, ſhe holds it a vice in her goodneſſe, not to do more then ſhe is requeſted. This broken joynt betweene you, and her huſband, entreat her to ſplinter. And my Fortunes againſt any lay worth naming, this cracke of your love, ſhall grow ſtonger, then it was before.

Caſſio. You adviſe me well.

Iago. I proteſt in the ſinceritie of Love, and honeſt kindneſſe.

Caſſio I thinke it freely: and betimes in the morning, I will beſeech the vertuous Deſdemona to undertake for me: I am deſperate of my Fortunes if they check me.

Iago. You are in the right: good night Lieutenant, I muſt to the Watch.

Caſſio. Good night, honeſt Iago.

Exit Caſſio.

Iago. And what's he then,
That ſayes I play the Villaine?
When this advice is free I give, and honeſt,
Probal to thinking, and indeed the courſe
To win the Moore againe.
For 'tis moſt eaſie
Th' inclyning Deſdemona to ſubdue
In any honeſt Suite. She's fram'd as fruitefull
As the free Elements. And then for her
To win the Moore, were to renownce his Baptiſme,
All Seales, and Simbols of redeemed ſin:
His Soule is ſo enfetter'd to her Love,
That ſhe may make, unmake, doe what ſhe liſt:
Even as her appetite ſhall play the god,
With his weake Function. How am I then a Villaine,
To Counſell Caſſio to this paralell courſe,
Directly to his good? Divinitie of hell,
When divels will the blackeſt ſinnes put on,
They do ſuggeſt at firſt with heavenly ſhewes,
As I do now. For whiles this honeſt Foole
Plies Deſdemona, to repaire his Fortune,
And ſhe for him, pleades ſtrongly to the Moore,
Ile powre this peſtilence into his eare:
That ſhe repeales him, for her bodies Luſt,
And by how much ſhe ſtrives to do him good,
She ſhall undoe her Credite with the Moore.
So will I turne her vertue into pitch,
And out of her owne goodneſſe make the Net,
That ſhall en-maſh them all.
How now Rodorigo?

Enter Rodorigo.

Rodorigo. I doe follow heere in the Chace, not like a Hound that hunts, but one that filles up the Crie. My Mony is almoſt ſpent; I have beene to night exceedingly well Cudgell'd: And I thinke the iſſue will bee, I ſhall have ſo much experience for my paines ;

And ſo, with no money at all, and a little more Wit, returne againe to Veuice.

Iago. How poore are they that have not Patience ?
What wound did ever heale but by degrees ?
Thou know'ſt we worke by Wit, and not by witchcraft
And Wit depends on dilatory time :
Dos't not go well ? Caſſio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that ſmall hurt haſt caſheer'd Caſſio :
Though other things grow faire againſt the Sun,
Yet Fruites that bloſſome firſt, will firſt be ripe :
Content thy ſelfe, a-while. Introth 'tis Morning ;
Pleaſure, and Action, make the houres ſeeme ſhort.
Retire thee, go where thou art Billited :
Away, I ſay, thou ſhalt know more heereafter :
Nay get thee gone. Exit Rodorigo.
Two things are to be done :
My Wife muſt move for Caſſio to her Miſtris :
Ile ſet her on my ſelfe, a while, to draw the Moore apart,
And bring him jumpe, when he may Caſſio finde
Soliciting his wife : I, that's the way :
Dull not Device, by coldneſſe and delay. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter Caſſio, Muſitians, and Clowne.

Caſſio. Maſters, play heere, I will content your paines,
Something that's briefe : and bid, goodmorrow Generall.

Clo. Why Maſters, have your Inſtruments bin in Naples, that they ſpeake i'th' Noſe thus?

Muſ. How Sir ? how ?

Clo. Are theſe I pray you, winde Inſtruments ?

Muſ. I marry are they ſir.

Clo. Oh, thereby hangs a tale.

Muſ. Whereby hangs a tale, ſir ?

Clow. Marry ſir, by many a winde Inſtrument that I know. But Maſters, hee's money for you : and the Generall ſo likes your Muſick, that hee deſires you for loves ſake to make no noiſe with it.

Muſ. Well Sir, we will not.

Clo. If you have any Muſicke that may not bee heard, too't againe. But (as they ſay) to heare Muſicke, the Generall do's not greatly care.

Muſ. We have none ſuch, ſir.

Clow. Then put up your Pipes in your bagge, for Ile away. Go, vaniſh into ayre, away. Exit Muſ.

Caſſio. Doſt thou heare me, mine honeſt Friend ?

Clo. No, I heare not your honeſt Friend :
I heare you.

Caſſio. Prythee keepe up thy Quillets, ther's a poore peece of Gold for thee : if the Gentlewoman that attends the Generall be ſtirring, tell her, there's one Caſſio entreats her a little favour of Speech. Wilt thou do this ?

Clo. She is ſtirring ſir : if ſhe will ſtirre hither, I ſhall ſeeme to notifie unto her. Exit Clo.

Enter Iago.

In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You have not bin a-bed then ?

Caſſio. Why no : the day had broke before we parted.
I have made bold (Iago) to ſend in to your wife :
My ſuite to her is, that ſhe will to vertuous Deſdemona
Procure me ſome acceſſe.

Iago. Ile ſend her to you Preſently :
And Ile deviſe a meane to draw the Moore
Out of the way, that your converſe and buſineſſe
May be more free. Exit.

Caſſio. I humbly thanke you for't. I never knew
A Florentine more kinde, and honeſt.

Enter Æmilia.

Æmil. Goodmorrow (good Lieutenant) I am ſorrie
For your diſpleaſure : but all will ſure be well.
The Generall and his wife are talking of it,
And ſhe ſpeakes for you ſtoutly. The Moore replies,
That he you hurt is of great Fame in Cyprus,
And great Affinitie : and that in wholſome Wiſedome
He might not but refuſe you. But he proteſts he loves you
And needs no other Suitor, but his likings
To bring you in againe.

Caſſio. Yet I beſeech you,
If you thinke fit, or that it may be done,
Give me advantage of ſome briefe Diſcourſe
With Deſdemon alone.

Æmil. Pray come in :
I will beſtow you where you ſhall have time
To ſpeake your boſome freely.

Caſſio. I am much bound to you.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen.

Othe. Theſe Letters give (Iago) to the Pylot,
And by him do my duties to the Senate :
That done, I will be walking on the Workes,
Repaire there to me,

Iago. Well, my good Lord, Ile doo't.

Oth. This Fortification (Gentlemen) ſhall we ſee't ?

Gent. Weel waite upon your Lordſhip. Exeunt

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Deſdemona, Caſſio, and Æmilia.

Deſ. Be thou aſſur'd (good Caſſio) I will doe
All my abilities in thy behalfe.

Æmil. Good Madam doe
I warrant it greeves my Husband,
As if the cauſe were his.

Deſ. Oh that's an honeſt Fellow, Do not doubt Caſſio
But I will have my Lord, and you againe
As friendly as you were.

Caſſio. Bounteous Madam,
What ever ſhall become of Michael Caſſio,
He's never any thing but your true Servant.

Deſ. I know't : I thanke you : you do love my Lord :
You have knowne him long, and be you well aſſur'd
He ſhall in ſtrangeneſſe ſtand no farther off,
Then in a politique diſtance.

Caſſio. I, but Lady,
That policie may either laſt ſo long,
Or feede upon ſuch nice and wateriſh diet,
Or breede it ſelfe ſo out of Circumſtances,
That I being abſent, and my place ſupply'd.
My Generall will forget my Love, and Service.

Deſ. Doe not doubt that : before Æmilia here,

I give thee warrant of thy place. Aſſure thee,
If I doe vow a friendſhip, Ile perfome it
To the laſt Article. My Lord ſhall never reſt,
Ile watch him tame, and talke him out of patience;
His Bed ſhall ſeeme a Schoole, his Boord a Shrift,
Ile intermingle every thing he do's
With Caſſio's ſuite: Therefore be merry Caſſio,
For thy Solicitor ſhall rather dye,
Then give thy cauſe away.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Æmil. Madam, heere comes my Lord.
Caſſio. Madam, Ile take my leave.
Deſ. Why ſtay, and heare me ſpeake.
Caſſio. Madam, not now: I am very ill at eaſe,
Vnfit for mine owne purpoſes.
Deſ. Well, doe your diſcretion. Exit Caſſio.
Iago. Hah? I like not that.
Othe. What doſt thou ſay?
Iago. Nothing my Lord; or if—I know not what.
Othel. Was not that Caſſio parted from my wife?
Iago. Caſſio my Lord? No ſure, I cannot thinke it
That he would ſteale away ſo guilty-like,
Seeing your comming.
Oth. I do beleeve 'twas he.
Deſ. How now my Lord?
I have bin talking with a Suitor heere,
A man that languiſhes in your diſpleaſure.
Oth. Who is't you meane?
Deſ. Why your Lieutenant Caſſio. Good my Lord,
If I have any grace, or power to move you,
His preſent reconciliation take.
For if he be not one, that truely loves you,
That erres in Ignorance, and not in Cunning,
I have no judgement in an honeſt face.
I prythee call him backe.
Oth. Went he hence now?
Deſd. I ſooth; ſo humbled,
That he hath left part of his greefe with me
To ſuffer with him. Good Love, call him backe.
Othel. Not now (ſweet Deſdemon) ſome other time.
Deſ. But ſhall't be ſhortly?
Oth. The ſooner (Sweet) for you.
Deſ. Shal't be to night, at Supper?
Oth. No, not to night.
Deſ. To morrow Dinner then?
Oth. I ſhall not dine at home:
I meete the Captaines at the Cittadell.
Deſ. Why then to morrow night, on Tueſday morne,
On Tueſday noone, or night; on Wenſday Morne.
I praythee name the time, but let it not Exceed three dayes. Infaith hee's penitent:
And yet his Treſpaſſe, in our common reaſon
(Save that they ſay the warres muſt make example)
Out of her beſt, is not almoſt a fault
T'incurre a private checke. When ſhall he come?
Tell me Othello. I wonder in my Soule
What you would aske me, that I would deny,
Or ſtand ſo mam'ring on? What? Michael Caſſio,
That came a woing with you? and ſo many a time
(When I have ſpoke of you diſpraiſingly)
Hath tane your part, to have ſo much to doe
To bring him in? Truſt me, I could do much.
Oth. Prythee no more: Let him come when he will:
I will deny thee nothing.
Deſ. Why, this is not a Boone:
'Tis as I ſhould entreate you weare your Gloves,
Or feede on nouriſhing diſhes, or keepe you warme,
Or ſue to you, to doe a peculiar profit
To your owne perſon. Nay, when I have a ſuite
Wherein I meane to touch your Love indeed,
It ſhall be full of poize, and difficult waight,
And fearefull to be granted.
Oth. I will deny thee nothing.
Whereon, I do beſeech thee, grant me this,
To leave me but a little to my ſelfe.
Deſ. Shall I deny you? No: farewell my Lord.
Oth. Farewell my Deſdamona, Ile come to thee ſtrait.
Deſ. Æmilia come; be as your Fancies teach you:
What ere you be, I am obedient. Exit.
Oth. Excellent wretch: Perdition catch my Soule
But I do love thee: and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come againe.
Iago. My Noble Lord.
Oth. What doſt thou ſay, Iago?
Iago. Did Machael Caſſio
When you woo'd my Lady, know of your love?
Oth. He did, from firſt to laſt:
Why doſt thou aske?
Iago. But for a ſatiſfaction of my Thought,
No further harme.
Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?
Iago. I did not thinke he had bin acquainted with it.
Oth. O yes, and went betweene us very oft.
Iago. Indeed?
Oth. Indeed? I indeed. Diſcern'ſt thou ought in that?
Is he not honeſt?
Iago. Honeſt, my Lord?
Oth. Honeſt? I, Honeſt.
Iago. My Lord, for ought I know
Oth. What do'ſt thou thinke?
Iago. Thinke, my Lord?
Oth. Thinke, my Lord? Alas, thou eccos't me;
As if there were ſome Monſter in thy thought
Too hideous to be ſhewne. Thou doſt meane ſomthing:
I heard thee ſay even now, thou lik'ſt not that,
When Caſſio left my wife. What did'ſt not like?
And when I told thee, he was of my Counſaile,
Of my whole courſe of wooing; thou cried'ſt, Indeede?
And didd'ſt contract, and purſe thy brow together,
As if thou then hadſt ſhut up in thy braine
Some horrible conceite, if thou do'ſt love me
Shew me thy thought.
Iago. My Lord, you know I love you.
Oth. I thinke thou do'ſt:
For I know thou'rt full of Love, and honeſty,
And weigh'ſt thy words before thou giv'ſt them breath
Therefore theſe ſtops of thine, fright me the more:
For ſuch things in a falſe diſloyall Knave
Are trickes of Cuſtome: but in a man that's juſt,
They're cold dilations working from the heart,
That paſſion cannot rule.
Iago. For Michael Caſſio,
I dare be ſworne, I thinke that he is honeſt.
Oth. I thinke ſo too.
Iago. Men ſhould be what they ſeeme,
Or thoſe that bee not, would they might ſeeme none.
Oth. Certaine, men ſhould be what they ſeeme.
Iago. Why then I thinke Caſſio's an honeſt man.
Oth. Nay yet there's more in this?
I pray thee ſpeake to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou doſt ruminate, and give thy worſt of thoughts

The worſt of words.
Iago. Good my Lord pardon me.
Though I am bound to every Act of duty,
I am not bound to that: All Slaves are free:
Vtter my Thoughts? Why ſay, they are vild, and falſe?
As where's that Palace, whereinto foule things
Sometimes intrude not? Who ha's that breaſt ſo pure,
Wherein uncleanly Apprehenſions
Keepe Leetes, and Law-dayes, and in Seſſions ſit
With meditations Lawfull?
Othe. Thou do'ſt conſpire againſt thy Friend (Iago)
If thou but think'ſt him wrong'd, and mak'ſt his eare
A ſtranger to thy Thoughts.
Iago. I do beſeech you,
Though I perchance am vicious in my gueſſe
(As I confeſſe it is my Natures plague
To ſpy into Abuſes, and of my jealouſie
Shapes faults that are not) that your wiſedome
From one, that ſo imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice, nor build your ſelfe a trouble
Out of his ſcattering, and unſure obſervance:
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my Manhood, honeſty and Wiſedome,
To let you know my thoughts.
Othe. What doſt thou meane?
Iago. Good name in Man, and woman (deere my Lord)
Is the immediate Iewell of their Soules;
Who ſteales my purſe ſteales traſh:
Tis ſomething, nothing;
Twas mine, 'tis his, and has bin ſlave to thouſands:
But he that filches from me my good Name,
Robs me of that, which not enriches him,
And makes me poore indeed.
Othe. Ile know thy Thoughts.
Iago, You cannot, if my heart were in your hand,
Nor ſhall not, whil'ſt 'tis in my cuſtodie.
Othe. Ha?
Iago. Oh, beware my Lord, of jealouſie,
It is the greene-ey'd Monſter, which doth mocke
The meate it feeds on. That Cuckold lives in bliſſe,
Who certaine of his Fate, loves not his wronger:
But oh, what damned minutes tels he ore,
Who dotes, yet doubts: Suſpects, yet ſoundly loves?
Othe. O miſery.
Iago. Poore, and Content, is rich, and rich enough,
But riches fineleſſe, is as poore as Winter,
To him that ever feares he ſhall be poore:
Good Heaven, the Soules of all my Tribe defend
From jealouſie.
Othe. Why? why is this?
Think'ſt thou, I'ld make a Life of Iealouſie;
To follow ſtill the changes of the Moone
With freſh ſuſpitions? No: to be once in doubt,
Is to be reſolv'd: Exchange me for a Goat,
When I ſhall turne the buſineſſe of my Soule
To ſuch exufflicate, and blowed Surmiſes,
Matching the inference. 'Tis not to make me Iealious,
To ſay my wife is faire, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of ſpeech, Sings, Playes, and Dances:
Where Vertue is, theſe are moſt vertuous.
Nor from mine owne weake merites, will I draw
The ſmalleſt feare, or doubt of her revolt,
For ſhe had eyes, and choſe me. No Iago,
Ile ſee before I doubt; when I doubt, prove;
And on the proofe, there is no more but this,
Away at once with Love, or Iealouſie.
Ia. I am glad of this: for now I ſhall have reaſon
To ſhew the Love and Duty that I beare you
With franker ſpirit. Therefore (as I am bound)
Receive it from me. I ſpeake not yet of proofe:
Looke to your wife, obſerve her well with Caſſio,
Weare your eyes, thus: not Iealious, nor Secure:
I would not have your free, and Noble Nature,
Out of ſelfe-Bounty, be abus'd looke too't:
I know our Country diſpoſition well:
In Venice, they do let Heaven ſee the prankes
They dare not ſhew their Husbands.
Their beſt Conſcience,
Is not to leave't undone, but kept unknowne.
Oth. Doſt thou ſay ſo?
Iag. She did deceive her Father, marrying you,
And when ſhe ſeem'd to ſhake, and feare your lookes,
She lov'd them moſt.
Othe. And ſo ſhe did.
Iago. Why go to then:
Shee that ſo young could give out ſuch a Seeming
To ſeele her Fathers eyes up, cloſe as Oake,
He thought 'twas witchcraft.
But I am much too blame:
I humbly do beſeech you of your pardon
For too much loving you.
Othe. I am bound to to thee for ever.
Iago. I ſee this hath a little daſh'd your Spirits:
Othe. Not a jot, not a jot.
Iago. Truſt me I feare it has:
I hope you will conſider what is ſpoke
Comes from my Love.
But I do ſee y'are moov'd:
I am to pray you, not to ſtraine my ſpeech
To groſſer iſſues, nor to larger reach,
Then to Suſpition.
Oth. I will not.
Iago. Should you doe ſo (my Lord)
My ſpeech ſhould fall into ſuch vilde ſucceſſe,
Which my Thoughts aym'd not.
Caſſio's my worthy Friend:
My Lord, I ſee y'are mov'd:
Oth. No, not much mov'd:
I do not thinke but Deſdemona's honeſt.
Iago. Long live ſhe ſo;
And long live you to thinke ſo.
Oth. And yet how Nature erring from it ſelfe——
Iago. I, there's the point:
As (to be bold with you)
Not to affect many propoſed Matches
Of her owne Clime, Complexion and Degree,
Whereto we ſee in all things, Nature tends:
Foh, one may ſmell in ſuch, a will moſt ranke,
Foule diſproportions, Thoughts unnaturall.
But (pardon me) I do not in poſition
Diſtinctly ſpeake of her, though I may feare
Her will, recoyling to her better judgement,
May fall to match you with her Country formes,
And happily repent.
Oth. Farewell, farewell:
If more thou doſt perceive, let me know more:
Set on thy wife to obſerve.
Leave me Iago.
Iago. My Lord, I take my leave.
Othe. Why did I marry?
This honeſt Creature (doubtleſſe)
Sees, and knowes more, much more then he unfolds.

Iago. My Lord, I would I might intreat your Honor
To ſcan this thing no farther : Leave it to time,
Although 'tis fit that Caſſio have his place;
For ſure he filles it up with great Ability;
Yet if you pleaſe, to put him off a-while :
You ſhall by that perceive him, and his meanes :
Note if your Lady ſtraine his Entertainment
With any ſtrong, or vehement importunitie,
Much will be ſeene in that : In the meane time,
Let me be thought too buſie in my feares,
(As worthy cauſe I have to feare I am)
And hold her free, I do beſeech your Honor:
Oth. Feare not my government.
Iago. I once more take my leave.
Oth. This Fellow's of exceeding honeſty,
And knowes all Quantities with a learn'd Spirit
Of humane dealings. If I do prove her Haggard,
Though that her Ieſſes were my deere heart-ſtrings,
I'ld whiſtle her off, and let her downe the winde
To prey at Fortune. Haply, for I am blacke,
And have not thoſe ſoft parts of Converſation
That Chamberers have : Or for I am declin'd
Into the vale of yeares (yet that's not much)
She's gone. I am abus'd, and my releefe
Muſt be to loath her. Oh Curſe of Marriage!
That we can call theſe delicate Creatures ours,
And not their Appetites ? I had rather be a Toad,
And live upon the Vapour of a Dungeon,
Then keepe a corner in the thing I love
For others uſes. Yet 'tis the plague to Great-ones,
Prerogativ'd are they leſſe then the Baſe,
'Tis deſtiny unſhunnable, like death :
Even then, this forked plague is Fated to us,
When we do quicken. Looke where ſhe comes :

Enter Deſdemona and Æmilia.

If ſhe be falſe, Heaven mock'd it ſelfe :
Ile not beleeve't.
Deſ. How now, my deere Othello ?
Your dinner, and the generous Iſlanders
By you invited, do attend your preſeuce.
Oth. I am to blame.
Deſ. Why do you ſpeake ſo faintly ?
Are you not well ?
Oth. I have a paine upon my Forehead heere.
Deſ. Why that's with watching, 'twill away againe.
Let me but binde it hard, within this houre
It will be well.
Oth. Your Napkin is too little:
Let it alone : Come, Ile go in with you. Exeunt.
Deſ. I am very ſorry that you are not well.
Æmil. I am glad I have found this Napkin :
This was her firſt remembrance from the Moore,
My wayward Husband hath a hundred times
Woo'd me to ſteale it. But ſhe ſo loves the Token,
(For he conjur'd her, ſhe ſhould ever keepe it)
That ſhe reſerves it evermore about her,
To kiſſe, and talke to. Ile have the worke tane out,
And giv't Iago : what he will do with it
Heaven knowes, not I :
I nothing, but to pleaſe his Fantaſie.

Enter Iago.

Iago. How now ? What do you heere alone ?
Æmil. Do not you chide : I have a thing for you.
Iago. You have a thing for me ?
It is a common thing———
Æmil. Hah ?
Iago. To have a fooliſh wife.
Æmil. Oh, is that all ? What will you give me now
For that ſame Handkerchife.
Iago. What Handkerchiefe ?
Æmil. What Handkerchiefe ?
Why that the Moore firſt gave to Deſdemona,
That which ſo often you did bid me ſteale.
Iago. Haſt ſtolne it from her ?
Æmil. No : but ſhe let it drop by negligence,
And to th' advantage, I being heere, took't up :
Looke, heere 'tis.
Iago. A good wench, give it me.
Æmil. What will you do with't that you have bene ſo earneſt to have me filch it ?
Iago. Why, what is that to you ?
Æmil. If it be not for ſome purpoſe of import,
Giv't me againe. Poore Lady, ſhee'l run mad
When ſhe ſhall lacke it.
Iago. Be not acknowne on't :
I have uſe for it. Go, leave me. Exit Æmil.
I will in Caſſio's Lodging looſe this Napkin,
Aud let him finde it. Trifles light as ayre,
Are to the jealous, confirmations ſtrong,
As proofes of holy Writ. This may do ſomething.
The Moore already changes with my poyſons,
Dangerous conceites, are in their Natures poyſons,
Which at the firſt are ſcarſe found to diſtaſte :
But with a little act upon the blood,
Burne like the Mines of Sulphure. I did ſay ſo.

Enter Othello.

Looke where he comes : Not Poppy nor Mandragora,
Nor all the drowſie Syrrups of the world
Shall ever medicine thee to that ſweete ſleepe
Which thou owd'ſt yeſterday.
Oth. Ha, ha, falſe to mee ?
Iago. Why how now Generall ? No more of that.
Othe. Auant, be gone : Thou haſt ſet me on the Racke:
I ſweare 'tis better to be much abus'd,
Then but to know't a little.
Iago. How now, my Lord ?
Othe. What ſent had I, in her ſtolne houres of Luſt ?
I ſaw't not, thought it not : it harm'd not me :
I ſlept the next night well, fed well, was free, and merry.
I found not Caſſio's kiſſes on her Lippes :
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is ſtolne,
Let him not know't, and he's not robb'd at all.
Iago. I am ſorry to heare this ?
Oth. I had beene happy if the generall Campe,
Pyoners and all, had taſted her ſweet Body,
So I had nothing knowne. Oh now, for ever
Farewell the Tranquill minde ; farewell Content;
Farewell the plumed Troopes, and the bigge Warres,
That make Ambition, Vertue ! Oh farewell,
Farewell the neighing Steed, and the ſhrill Trumpe,
The Spirit-ſtirring Drum, th' Eare-piercing Fiſe,
The Royall Banner, and all Quality,
Pride, Pompe and Circumſtance of glorious Warre :
And O you mortall Engines, whoſe rude throates
Th' immortall Ioves dread Clamours counterfeit,
Farewell : Othello's Occupation's gone.
Iago. Is't poſſible my Lord ?
Oth. Villaine, be ſure thou prove my Love a Whore ;
Be ſure of it : Give me the Ocular proofe,

Or by the worth of mine eternall Soule,
Thou had'ſt bin better have bin borne a Dog
Then anſwere my wak'd wrath.
Iago. Is't come to this?
Oth. Make me to ſee't: or (at the leaſt) ſo prove it,
That the probation beare no Hindge, nor Loope,
To hang a doubt on: Or woe upon thy life.
Iago. My Noble Lord.
Oth. If thou do'ſt ſlander her, and torture me,
Never pray more: Abandon all remorſe
On Horrors head, Horrors accumulate,
Doe deeds to make Heaven weepe, all Earth amaz'd;
For nothing canſt thou to damnation adde,
Greater then that.
Iago. O Grace! O Heaven forgive me!
Are you a man? Have you a Soule? or Senſe?
God buy you: take mine Office. Oh wretched Foole,
That lov'ſt to make thine Honeſty, a Vice!
Oh monſtrous world! Take note, take note (O World)
To be direct and honeſt, is not ſafe.
I thanke you for this profit, and from hence
Ile love no friend, ſith love breeds ſuch offence.
Oth. Nay ſtay: thon ſhouldſt be honeſt.
Iago. I ſhould be wiſe, for honeſtie's a Foole,
And loſes that it workes for.
Oth. By the World,
I thinke my Wife be honeſt, and thinke ſhe is not:
I thinke that thou art juſt, and thinke thou art not:
Ile have ſome proofe. My name that was as freſh
As Dians Viſage, is now begrim'd and blacke
As mine owne face. If there be Cords or Knives,
Poyſon, or Fire, or ſuffocating ſtreames,
Ile not indure it. Would I were ſatisfied.
Iago. I ſee you are eaten up with paſſion:
I do repent me, that I put it to you.
You would be ſatisfied?
Oth. Would, Nay, and I will.
Iago. And may: but how? How ſatisfied, my Lord?
Would you the ſuper-viſion groſſely gape on?
Behold her topp'd?
Oth. Death, and damnation. Oh!
Iago. It were a tedious difficulty I thinke,
To bring to that proſpect: Damne them then,
If ever mortall eyes do ſee them boulſter
More then their owne. What then? How then?
What ſhall I ſay? Where's Satisfaction?
It is impoſſible you ſhould ſee this,
Were they as prime as Goates, as hot as Monkeyes,
As ſalt as Wolves in pride, and Fooles as groſſe
As Ignorance, made drunke. But yet, I ſay,
If imputation and ſtrong circumſtances,
Which leade directly to the doore of Truth,
Will give you ſatisfaction, you might have't.
Oth. Give me a living reaſon ſhe's diſloyall.
Iogo. I do not like the Office.
But ſith I am entred in this cauſe ſo farre
(Prick'd too't by fooliſh Honeſty, and Love)
I will go on. I lay with Caſſio lately,
And being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not ſleepe. There are a kinde of men,
So looſe of Soule, that in their ſleepes will mutter
Their Affayres: one of this kinde is Caſſio:
In ſleepe I heard him ſay, ſweet Deſdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our Loves,
And then (Sir) would he gripe, and wring my hand:
Cry, oh ſweet Creature: then kiſſe me hard,
As if he pluckt up kiſſes by the rootes,
That grew upon my lippes, laid his Leg ore my Thigh,
And ſigh, and kiſſe, and then cry curſed Fate,
That gave thee to the Moore.
Oth. O monſtrons! monſtrous!
Iago. Nay this was but his Dreame.
Oth. But this denoted a fore-gone concluſion,
Tis a ſhrew'd doubt, though it be but a Dreame.
Iago. And this may helpe to thicken other proofes,
That do demonſtrate thinly.
Oth. Ile teare her all to peeces.
Iago. Nay yet be wiſe; yet we ſee nothing done,
She may be honeſt yet: Tell me but this,
Have you not ſometimes ſeene a Handkerchiefe
Spotted with ſtrawberries, in your wives hand?
Oth. I gave her ſuch a one: 'twas my firſt gift
Iago. I know not that: but ſuch a Handkerchiefe
(I am ſure it was your wives) did I to day
See Caſſio wipe his Beard with.
Oth. If it be that.
Iago. If it be that, or any, if't was hers,
It ſpeakes againſt her with the other proofes.
Oth. O that the ſlave had forty thouſand lives:
One is too poore, too weake for my revenge.
Now do I ſee 'tis true. Looke heere Iago,
All my fond love thus do I blow to Heaven. Tis gone,
Ariſe blacke vengance, from the hollow hell,
Yeeld up (O Love) thy Crowne and hearted Throne
To tyrannous Hate. Swell boſome with thy fraught,
For 'tis of Aſpickes tongues.
Iago. Yet be content.
Oth. Oh blood, blood, blood.
Iago. Patience I ſay: your minde may change.
Oth. Never Iago. Like to the Ponticke Sea,
Whoſe Icie Current, and compulſive courſe,
Nev'r keepes retiring ebbe, but keepes due on
To the Proponticke, and the Helleſpont:
Even ſo my bloody thoughts, with violent pace
Shall nev'r looke backe, nev'r ebbe to humble Love,
Till that a capable and wide Revenge
Swallow them up. Now by yond Marble Heaven,
In the due reverence of a Sacred vow,
I heere engage my words——
Iago. Do not riſe yet:
Witneſſe you ever-burning Lights above,
You Elements, that clip us round about.
Witneſſe that heere Iago doth give up
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,
To wrong'd Othello's Service. Let him command,
And to obey ſhall be in me remorſe,
What bloody buſineſſe ever.
Oth. I greet thy love,
Not with vaine thankes, but with acceptance bounteous,
And will upon the inſtant put thee too't,
Within theſe three dayes let me heare thee ſay,
That Caſſio's not alive.
Iago. My friend is dead:
Tis done at your Requeſt.
But let her live.
Oth. Damne her lewde Minx:
O damne her, damne her.
Come go with me a-part, I will withdraw
To furniſh me with ſome ſwift meanes of death
For the faire Divell.
Now art thou my Lieutenant.
Iago. I am your owne for ever. Exeunt.

Scena

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Deſdemona, Æmilia, and Clowne.
Deſ. Do you know Sirrah, where Lieutenant Caſſio lyes?
Clow. I dare not ſay he lies any where.
Deſ. Why man?
Clo. He's a Soldier, and for mee to ſay a Souldier lyes, 'tis ſtabbing.
Deſ. Go to: where lodges he?
Clo. To tell you where he lodges, is to tell you where I lye.
Deſ. Can any thing be made of this?
Clo. I know not where he lodges, and for mee to deviſe a lodging, and ſay he lyes heere, or he lyes there, were to lye in mine owne throat.
Deſ. Can you enquire him out? and be edified by report?
Clo. I will Catechize the world for him, that is, make Queſtions, and by them anſwer.
Deſ. Seeke him, bid him come hither: tell him, I have moov'd my Lord on his behalfe, and hope all will be well.
Clo. To do this, is within the compaſſe of mans Wit, and therefore I will attempt the doing it. Exit Clo.
Deſ. Where ſhould I looſe the Handkerchiefe, Æmilia?
Æmil. I know not Madam.
Deſ. Beleeve me, I had rather have loſt my purſe
Full of Cruzadoes. And but my Noble Moore
Is true of minde, and made of no ſuch baſeneſſe,
As jealious Creatures are, it were enough
To put him to ill-thinking.
Æmil. Is he not jealious?
Deſ. Who he? I thinke the Sun where he was borne,
Drew all ſuch humors from him.
Æmilia. Looke where he comes.
Enter Othello.
Deſ. I will not leave him now, till Caſſio be Call'd to him. How is't with you, my Lord?
Oth. Well my good Lady. Oh hardnes to diſſemble!
How do you, Deſdemona?
Leſ. Well, my good Lord.
Oth. Give me your hand,
This hand is moyſt my Lady,
Deſ. It hath felt no age, nor knowne no ſorrow.
Oth. This argues fruitfulneſſe, and liberall heart:
Hot, hot, and moyſt. This hand of yours requires
A ſequeſter from Liberty: Faſting, and Prayer,
Much Caſtigation, Exerciſe devout,
For heere's a young and ſweating Divell heere
That commonly rebels: Tis a good hand,
A franke one.
Deſ. You may (indeed) ſay ſo:
For 'twas that hand that gave away my heart.
Oth. A liberall hand. The hearts of old, gave hands:
But our new Heraldry is hands, not hearts.
Deſ. I cannot ſpeake of this:
Come, now your promiſe.
Oth. What promiſe, Chucke?
Deſ. I have ſent to bid Caſſio come ſpeake with you.
Oth. I have a ſalt and ſorry Rhewme offends me:
Lend me thy handkerchiefe.
Deſ. Heere my Lord.
Oth. That which I gave you.
Deſ. I have it not about me.
Oth. Not?
Deſ. No indeed, my Lord.
Oth. That's a fault: That Handkerchiefe
Did an Ægyptian to my Mother give:
She was a Charmer, and could almoſt read
The thoughts of people. She told her, while ſhe kept it,
'Twould make her Amiable, ſubdue my Father
Intirely to her love: but if ſhe loſt it,
Or made a Guift of it, my Fathers eye
Should hold her loathed, and his Spirits ſhould hunt
After new Fancies. She dying gave it me,
And bid me (when my Fate would have me Wiv'd)
To give it her. I did ſo, and take heede on't,
Make it a Darling, like your precious eye:
To looſe't, or give't away, were ſuch perdition,
As nothing elſe could match.
Deſ. Is't poſſible?
Oth. Tis true, there's Magicke in the web of it:
A Sybill that had numbred in the world
The Sun to courſe two hundred compaſſes,
In her prophetick furie ſow'd the worke:
The Wormes were hallowed, that did breede the Silke,
And it was dyede in Mummey, which the Skilfull
Conſerv'd of Maidens hearts.
Deſ. Indeed? Is't true?
Oth. Moſt veritable, therefore looke too't well.
Deſ. Then would the Heaven, that I had never ſeene't.
Oth. Ha? wherefore?
Deſ. Why do you ſpeake ſo ſtartingly, and raſh?
Oth. Is't loſt? Is't gon? Speak, is't out o'th' way?
Deſ. Bleſſe us.
Oth. Say you?
Deſ. It is not loſt: but what and if it were?
Oth. How?
Deſ. I ſay it is not loſt.
Oth. Fetcht, let me ſee't.
Deſ. Why ſo I can: but I will not now:
This is a tricke to put me from my ſuite,
Pray you let Caſſio be receiv'd againe.
Oth. Fetch me the Handkerchiefe,
My minde miſ-gives.
Deſ. Come, come: you'l never meete a more ſufficient man.
Oth. The Handkerchiefe.
Deſ. A man that all his time
Hath founded his good Fortunes on your love;
Shar'd dangers with you.
Oth. The Handkerchiefe.
Deſ. Inſooth, you are too blame.
Oth. Away. Exit Othello.
Æmil. Is not this man jealious?
Deſ. I nev'r ſaw this before.
Sure, there's ſome wonder in this Handkerchiefe,
I am moſt unhappy in the loſſe of it.
Æmil. Tis not a yeare or two ſhewes us a man:
They are all but ſtomackes, and we all but Food,
They eate us hungerly, and when they are full
They belch us.
Enter Iago, and Caſſio.

Looke you, Caſſio and my Husband.
Iago. There is no other way: 'tis ſhe muſt doo't:
And loe the happineſſe: go, and importune her.

Deſ. How now (goud Caſſio) whrt's the newes with you?

Caſsio. Madam. my former ſuite. I do beſeech you,
That by your vertuous meanes, I may againe
Exiſt, and be a member of his love,
Whom I, with all the Office of my heart
Intirely honour, I would not be delayd.
If my offence, be of ſuch mortall kinde,
That not my Service paſt, nor preſent Sorrowes,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ranſome me into his love againe,
But to know ſo, muſt be my benefit:
So ſhall I cloath me in a forc'd content,
And ſhut my ſelfe up in ſome other courſe
To Fortunes Almes.

Deſ. Alas (thrice-gentle Caſſio)
My Advocation is not now in Tune;
My Lord, is not my Lord; nor ſhould I know him;
Were he in Favour, as in Humour alter'd.
So helpe me every ſpirit ſanctified,
As I have ſpoken for you all my beſt,
And ſtood within the blanke of his diſpleaſure
For my free ſpeech. You muſt awhile be patient:
What I can do, I will: and more I will
Then for my ſelfe I dare. Let that ſuffice you.

Iago. Is my Lord angry?

Æmil. He went hence but now:
And certainly in ſtrange unquietneſſe.

Iago. Can he be angry? I have ſeene the Cannon
When it hath blowne his Rankes into the Ayre,
And like the Divell from his very Arme
Puff't his owne Brother: And is he angry?
Something of moment then; I will go meet him,
There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry, Exit.

Deſ. I prythee do ſo. Something ſure of State,
Either from Venice, or ſome unhatch'd practiſe
Made demonſtrable heere in Cyprus, to him,
Hath pudled his cleare Spirit; and in ſuch caſes,
Mens Natures wrangle with inferiour things,
Though great ones are their object. 'Tis even ſo.
For let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other heathfull members, even to a ſenſe
Of paine. Nay, we muſt thinke men are not Gods,
Nor of them looke for ſuch obſervance
As fits the Bridall, Beſhrew me much, Æmilia,
I was (unhandſome Warrior, as I am)
Arraigning his unkindneſſe with my ſoule:
But now I finde, I had ſuborn'd the Witneſſe,
And he's Indited falſely.

Æmil. Pray heaven it be
State matters, as you thinke, and no Conception,
Nor no Iealious Toy, concerning you.

Deſ. Alas the day, I never gave him cauſe.

Æmil. But Iealious ſoules will not be anſwer'd ſo;
They are not ever jealous for the cauſe,
But jealious, for they're jealious. It is a Monſter
Begot upon it ſelfe, borne on it ſelfe.

Deſ. Heaven keepe the Monſter from Othell's mind.

Æmil. Lady, Amen.

Deſ. I will go ſeeke him. Caſſio, walke heere about:
If I do finde him fit, Ile move your ſuite,
And ſeeke to effect it to my uttermoſt Exit.

Caſ. I humbly thanke your Ladyſhip.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. 'Save you (Friend Caſſio.)

Caſſio. What make you from home?
How is't with you, my moſt faire Bianca?
Indeed (ſweet Love) I was comming to your houſe.

Bian. And I was going to your Lodging, Caſſio.
What? keepe a weeke away? Seaven dayes, and Nights?
Eight ſcore eight houres? And Loves abſent howers
More tedious then the Diall, eight ſcore times?
Oh wearie reck'ning.

Caſſio. Pardon me, Bianca:
I have this while with leaden thoughts beene preſt,
But I ſhall in a more continvate time
Strike off this ſcore of abſence. Sweet Bianca,
Take me this worke out.

Bianca. Oh Caſſio, whence came this?
This is ſome token from a newer Friend,
To the felt-Abſence: now I feele a Cauſe:
Is't come to this? Well, Well.

Caſsio. Go to, woman:
Throw your vilde gueſſes in the Divels teeth,
From whence you have them. You are jealious now.
That this is from ſome Miſtris, ſome remembrance;
No, in good troth Bianca.

Bian. Why, who's is it?

Caſſio. I know not neither:
I found it in my Chamber,
I like the worke well; Ere it be demanded
(As like enough it will) I would have it coppied:
Take it, and doo't, and leave me for this time.

Bian. Leave you? wherefore?

Caſſio. I do attend heere on the Generall,
And thinke it no addition nor my wiſh
To have him ſee me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Caſſio. Not that I love you not.

Bian. But that you do not love me,
I pray you bring me on the way a little,
And ſay, if I ſhall ſee you ſoone at night?

Caſſio. Tis but a little way that I can bring you,
For I attend heere, But Ile ſee you ſoone.

Bian. 'Tis very good: I muſt be circumſtanc'd.

Exeunt Omnes.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Iago. Will you thinke ſo?

Oth. Thinke ſo, Iago?

Iago. What to kiſſe in private?

Oth. An unauthoriz'd kiſſe?

Iago. Or to be naked with her Friends in bed,
An houre, or more, not meaning any harme?

Oth. Naked in bed (Iago) and not meane harme?
It is hypocriſie againſt the Divell:
They that meane vertuouſly, and yet do ſo,
The Divell their vertue tempts, and they tempt Heaven.

Iago. If they do nothing, 'tis a Veniall ſlip:
But if I give my wife a Handkerchiefe.

Othe. What then?

Iago. Why then 'tis hers (my Lord) and being hers,
She may (I thinke) beſtow't on any man,

Othe. She is Protectreſſe of her honor too:
May ſhe give that?

Iago. Her honor is an Eſſence that's not ſeene,
They have it very oft, that have it not.
But for the Handkerchiefe.

Othe. By heaven I would moſt gladly have forgot it:
Thou ſaidſt (oh, it comes ore my memory,
As doth the Raven o're the infectious houſe:
Boading to all) he had my Handkerchiefe.

Iago. I: what of that?

Oth. That's not ſo good now:

Iag. What if I had ſaid, I had ſeene him do you wrong?
Or heare him ſay (as Knaves be ſuch abroad,
Who having by their owne importunate ſuite,
Or voluntary dotage of ſome Miſtris,
Convinced or ſupply'd them cannot chuſe
But they muſt blab.)

Oth. Hath he ſaid any thing?

Iago. He hath (my Lord) but be yon well aſſur'd,
No more then he'le un-ſweare.

Oth. What hath he ſaid?

Iago. Why, that he did: I know not what he did.

Oth. What? What?

Iago. Lye.

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her? On her: what you will.

Oth. Lye with her? lye on her? We ſay lye on her, when they be-lye-her. Lye with her: that's full ſome: Handkerchiefe: Confeſſions: Handkerchiefe. To confeſſe, and be hang'd for his labour. Firſt, to be hang'd, and then to confeſſe: I tremble at it. Nature would not inveſt her ſelfe in ſuch ſhadowing paſſion, without ſome Inſtruction. It is not words that ſhakes me thus, (piſh) Noſes, Eares, and Lippes: is't poſſible. Confeſſe? Handkerchiefe? O divell. Falls in a Traunce.

Iago. Worke on,
My Medicine workes. Thus credulous Fooles are caught,
And many worthy, and chaſt Dames even thus.
(All guiltleſſe) meete reproach: what hoa? My Lord?
My Lord, I ſay Othello.

Enter Caſſio.

How now Caſſio?

Caſ. What's the matter?

Iago. My Lord is falne into an Epilepſie,
This is his ſecond Fit: he had one yeſterday.

Caſ. Rub him about the Temples.

Iago. The Lethargie muſt have his quyet courſe:
If not, he foames at mouth: and by and by
Breakes out to ſavage madneſſe. Looke, he ſtirres:
Do you withdraw your ſelfe a little while,
He will recover ſtraight: when hee is gone,
I would on great occaſion, ſpeake with you.
How is it Generall? Have you not hurt your hand?

Othe. Doſt thou mocke me?

Iago. I mocke you not, by Heaven:
Would you would beare your Fortune life a Man.

Oth. A Horned man's a Monſter and a Beaſt.

Iago. There's many a Beaſt then in a populous Citty,
And many a civill Monſter.

Oth. Did he confeſſe it?

Iago. Good Sir, be a man:
Thinke every bearded fellow that's but yoak'd
May draw with you. There's Millions uow alive,
That nightly lye in thoſe unproper beds,
Which they dare ſweare peculiar. Your cauſe is better.
Oh, 'tis the ſpight of hell, the Fiends Arch-mock,
To lip a wanton in a ſecure Cowch;
And to ſuppoſe her chaſt. No, let me know,
And knowing what I am, I know what ſhe ſhall be.

Oth. Oh, thou art wiſe: 'tis certaine.

Iago. Stand you a while apart,
Confine your ſelfe but in a patient Liſt,
Whil'ſt you were heere, o're-whelmed with your griefe
(A paſſion moſt reſultinng ſuch a man)
Caſſio came hither. I ſhifted him away,
And laid good ſcuſes on your Extaſie,
Bad him anon returne: and heere ſpeake with me,
The which he promis'd. Do but encave your ſelfe,
And marke the Fleeres, the Gybes and notable Scornes
That dwell in every Region of his face.
For I will make him tell the Tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is againe to cope your wife.
I ſay, but marke his geſture: marry Patience,
Or I ſhall ſay y'are all in all in Spleene,
And nothing of a man.

Oth. Do'ſt thou heare, Iago,
I will be found moſt cunning in my Patience:
But (do'ſt thou heare) moſt bloody.

aago. That's not amiſſe.
But yet keepe time in all: will you withdraw?
Now will I queſtion Caſſio of Bianca,
A Huſwife, that by ſelling her deſires
Buyes her ſelfe Bread, and Cloath. It is a Creature
That dotes on Caſſio, (as 'tis the Strumpets plague
To be-guile many, and be be-guil'd by one)
He, when he heares of her, cannot reſtraine
From the exceſſe of Laughter. Heere he comes.

Enter Caſſio.

As he ſhall ſmile, Othello ſhall go mad:
And his unbookiſh Ielouſie muſt conſerve,
Poore Caſſio's ſmiles, geſtures and light behaviours
Quite in the wrong. How do you Lieutenaut?

Caſ. The worſer, that you gave me the addition,
Whoſe want even killes me.

Iago. Ply Deſdemona well, and you are ſure on't:
Now, if this Sute lay in Biarca's dowre,
How quickely ſhould you ſpeed?

Caſ. Alas poore Caitiffe.

Oth. Looke how he laughes already.

Iago. I never knew woman love man ſo.

Caſ. Alas poore Rogue, I thinke indeed ſhe loves me,

Oth. Now he denies it faintly: and laughes it out,

Iago. Do you heare Caſſio?

Oth. Now he importunes him
To tell it o're: go to, well ſayd, well ſaid.

Iago. She gives it out, that you ſhall marry her.
Do you intend it?

Caſ. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. Do ye triumph Romaine? do you triumph?

Caſ. I marry. What? A cuſtomer; prythee beare
Some Charitie to my wit, do not thinke it
So unwholeſome. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. So, ſo, ſo, ſo: they laugh, that winnes.

Iago. Why the cry goes, that you marry her.

Caſ. Pry thee ſay true.

Iago. I am a very Villaine elſe.

Oth. Have yov ſcoar'd me; Well.

Caſ. This is the Monkeys owne giving out:
She is perſwaded I will marry her
Out of her owne love & flattery, not out of my promiſe.

Othe.

Oth. Iago becons me; now he begins the ſtory.

Caſsio. She was heere even now: ſhe haunts mee in every place. I was the other day talking on the Seabanke with certaine Venetians; and thither comes the Bauble, and falls me thus about my neck.

Oth. Crying oh deere Caſsio, as it were: his geſture imports it.

Caſsio. So hangs, and lolls, and weepes upon me:
So ſhakes, and pulls me. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. Now hee tells how ſhe pluckt him to my Chamber: oh, I ſee that noſe of yours, but now that dogge, I ſhall throw it to:

Caſsio, Well I muſt leave her company.

Iago. Before me: looke where ſhe comes.

Enter Bianca.

Caſ. 'Tis ſuch another Fitchew: marry a perfum'd one?
What do you meane by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the divell, and his dam haunt you: what did you meane by that ſame Handkerchiefe, you gave mee even now? I was a fine Foole to take it: I muſt take out the worke? A likely piece of worke, that you ſhould finde it in your Chamber, and know not who left it there. This is ſome Minxes token, and I muſt take out the worke? There, give it your Hobbey-horſe, whereſoever you had it, Ile take out no worke on't.

Caſsio. How now, my ſweete Bianca?
How now? How now?

Othe. By Heaven, that ſhould be my Handkerchiefe.

Bian. If you'le come to ſupper to night you may, if you will not, come when you are next prepar'd for. Exit

Iago. After her: after her.

Caſ. I muſt, ſhee'l rayle in the ſtreets elſe.

Iago. Will you ſup there?

Caſ. Yes, I intend ſo.

Iago. Well, I may chance to ſee you: for I would very faine ſpeake with you.

Caſ. Prythee come: will you?

Iago. Go to; ſay no more. Exit.

Oth. How ſhall I murther him, Iago.

Iago. Did you perceive how he laugh'd at his vice?

Oth. Oh, Iago.

Iago. And did you ſee the Handkerchife?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours by this hand: and to ſee how he prizes the fooliſh woman your wife: ſhe gave it him, and he hath giv'n it his whore.

Oth. I would have him nine yeeres a killing:
A fine woman, a faire woman, a ſweet woman?

Iago. Nay, you muſt forget that.

Oth. I, let her rot and periſh, and be damn'd to night, for ſhe ſhall not live. No, my heart is turn'd to ſtone: I ſtrike it, and it hurts my hand. Oh, the world hath not a ſweeter Creature: ſhe might lye by an Emperours ſide, and command him Taskes.

Iago. Nay that's not your way.

Othe. Hang her, I do but ſay what ſhe is: ſo delicate with her Needle: an admirable Muſitian. Oh, ſhe will ſing the Savageneſſe out of a Beare: of ſo high a plenteous wit, and invention?

Iag. She's the worſe for all this.

Oth. Oh, a thouſand, a thouſand times:
And then of ſo gentle a condition?

Iago. I too gentle.

Othe. Nay that's certaine:
But yet the pitty of it, Iago: oh Iago, the pitty of it Iago.

Iago. If you are ſo fond over her iniquitie: give her pattent to offend, for if it touch not you, it comes neere no body.

Oth. I will chop her into Meſſes: Cuckold me?

Iago. Oh, 'tis foule in her.

Oth. With mine Officer?

Iago. That's fouler.

Othe. Get me ſome poyſon, Iago, this night. Ile not expoſtulate with her: leſt her body and beautie unprovide my minde againe: this night Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poyſon, ſtrangle her in her bed,
Even the bed ſhe hath contaminated.

Othe. Good, good:
The juſtice of it pleaſes: very good.

Iago. And for Caſsio, let me be his undertaker:
You ſhall heare more by midnight.

Enter Lodovico, Deſdemona, and Attendants.

Othe Excellent good: What Trumpet is that ſame?

Iago. I warrant ſomething from Venice,
Tis Lodovico, this, comes from the Duke.
See, your wife's with him.

Lodo. Save you worthy Generall.

Othe, With all my heart Sir.

Lod. The Duke, and the Senators of Venice greet you.

Othe. I kiſſe the Inſtrument of their pleaſures.

Deſ. And what's the newes, good cozen Lodovico?

Iago. I am very glad to ſee you Signior:
Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thanke you: how dos Lieutenant Caſſio?

Iago. Lives Sir.

Deſ. Cozen there's falne betweene him and my Lord,
An unkind breach: but you ſhall make all well,

Othe. Are you ſure of that?

Deſ. My Lord?

Othe. This faile you not to do, as you will ——

Lod. He did not call: he's buſie in the paper,
Is there diviſion twixt my Lord and Caſsio?

Deſ. A moſt unhappy one: I would do much
T'attone them for the love I beare to Caſsio.

Oth. Fire, and brimeſtone.

Deſ. My Lord.

Oth. Are you wiſe?

Deſ. What is he angry?

Lod. May be the Letter mov'd him.
For as I thinke they do command him home,
Deputing Caſsio in his Governement.

Deſ. Truſt me, I am glad on't.

Othe. Indeed?

Deſ. My Lord?

Oth. I am glad to ſee you mad.

Deſ. Why, ſweet Othello?

Othe. Divell.

Deſ. I have not deſerv'd this,

Lod. My Lord, this would not be beleev'd in Venice,
Though I ſhould ſweare I ſaw't. Tis very much,
Make her amends: ſhe weepes.

Oth. Oh divell, divell:
If that the Earth could teeme with womans teares,
Each drop ſhe falls, would prove a Crocodile:
Out of my ſight.

Deſ. I will not ſtay to offend you:

Lad. Truely obedient Lady:
I do beſeech your Lordſhip call her backe.

Oth.

Othe. Miſtris.
Deſ. My Lord.
Othe. What would you with her, Sir?
Lod. Who I, my Lord?
Othe. I, you did wiſh, that I would make her turne:
Sir, ſhe can turne, and turne: and yet go on
And turne againe. And ſhe can weepe, Sir, weepe.
And ſhe's obedient: as you ſay obedient.
Very obedient: proceed you in your teares.
Concerning this Sir, (oh well-painted paſſion)
I am commanded home: get you away:
Ile ſend for you anon. Sir I obey the Mandate.
And will returne to Venice. Hence, auaunt:
Caſſio ſhall have my Place. And Sir, to night
I do entreat, that we may ſup together.
You are welcome Sir to Cyprus.
Goates, and Monkeys. Exit.
Lod. Is this the Noble Moore, whom our full Senate
Call all in all ſufficient? Is this the Nature
Whom Paſſion could not ſhake? Whoſe ſolid vertue
The ſhot of Accident, nor dart of Chance
Could neither graze, nor pierce?
Iago. He is much chang'd.
Lod. Are his wits ſafe? Is he not of light Braine?
Iago. He's that he is: I may not breath my cenſure.
What he might be: if what he might, he is not,
I would to heaven he were.
Lod. What, ſtrike his wife?
Iago. 'Faith that was not ſo well; yet would I knew
That ſtroake would prove the worſt.
Lod. Is it his uſe?
Or did the Letters, worke upon his blood,
And new create his fault?
Iago. Alas, alas:
It is not honeſty in me to ſpeake
What I have ſeene and knowne. You ſhall obſerve him,
And his owne courſes will denote him ſo,
That I may ſave my ſpeech: do but go after
And marke how he continues.
Lo. I am ſorry that I am deceiu'd in him. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Æmilia.

Othe. You have ſeene nothing then?
Æmil. Nor ever heard: nor ever did ſuſpect.
Othe. Yes, you have ſeene Caſſio, and ſhe together.
Æmil. But then I ſaw no harme: and then I heard,
Each ſyllable that breath made up betweene them.
Othe. What? Did they never whiſper?
Æmil. Never my Lord.
Othe. Nor ſend you out o'th' way?
Æmil. Never.
Othe. To fetch her Fan, her Gloves, her mask, nor nothing?
Æil. Never my Lord.
Othe. That's ſtrange.
Æmil. I durſt (my Lord) to wager, ſhe is honeſt:
Lay downe my Soule at ſtake: If you thinke other,
Remove your thought. It doth abuſe your boſome:
If any wretch have put this in your head,
Let Heaven requite it with the Serpents curſe,
For if ſhe be not honeſt, chaſte and true,
There's no man happy. The pureſt of their Wives
Is foule as Slander.
Othe. Bid her come hither: go. Exit Æmilia.
She ſaies enough: yet ſhe's a ſimple Baud
That cannot ſay as much. This is a ſubtle Whore:
A Cloſſet Locke and Key of Villanous Secrets,
And yet ſhe'le kneele, and pray: I have ſeene her do't.

Enter Deſdemona, and Æmilia.

Deſ. My Lord, what is your will?
Othe. Pray you Chucke come hither.
Deſ. What is your pleaſure?
Oth. Let me ſee your eyes: looke in my face.
Deſ. What horrible Fancie's this?
Oth. Some of your Function Miſtris:
Leave Procreants alone, and ſhut the doore:
Cough, or cry hem; if any body come:
Your Myſtery, your Myſtery; Nay diſpatch. Exit Æmi.
Deſ. Vpon my knee, what doth your ſpeech import?
I underſtand a Fury in your words.
Othe. Why? What art thou?
Deſ. Your wife my Lord: your true and loyall wife.
Othello. Come ſweare it: damne thy ſelfe, being like one of Heaven, the divells themſelves ſhould feare to ceaze thee. Therefore bee double damn'd: ſweare thou art honeſt.
Deſ. Heaven doth truely know it.
Othe. Heaven truely knowes, that thou art falſe as hell.
Deſ. To whom my Lord?
With whom? How am I falſe?
Othe. Ah Deſdemon, away, away, away.
Deſ. Alas the heavy day: why do you weepe?
Am I the motive of theſe teares my Lord?
If happely you my Father do ſuſpect,
An Inſtrument of this your calling backe,
Lay not your blame on me: if you have loſt him,
I have loſt him too.
Othe. Had it pleas'd Heaven,
To try me with Affliction, had they rain'd
All kind of Sores, and Shames on my bare-head:
Steep'd me in poverty to the very lippes.
Given to Captivitie, me and my utmoſt hopes.
I ſhould have found in ſome place of my Soule
A drop of patience. But alas, to make me
The fixed Figure for the time of Scorne,
To point his ſlow, and moving finger at.
Yet could I beare that too, well, very well:
But there where I have garnerd up my heart,
Where either I muſt live, or beare no life,
The Fountaine from the which my currant runnes,
Or elſe dries up: to be diſcarded thence,
Or keepe it as a Ceſterne, for foule Toades
To knot and gender in. Turne thy complexion there:
Patience, thou young and roſe-lipp'd Cherubin,
I heere looke grim as hell.
Deſ. I hope my Lord eſteemes me honeſt.
Othe. O I, as Sommer Flyes are in the Shambles,
That quicken even with blowing. Oh thou weed:
Who art ſo lovely faire, and ſmell'ſt ſo ſweete,
That the Sence askes at thee,
Would thou had'ſt never bin borne.
Deſ. Alas, what ignorant ſin have I commited?
Othe. Was this faire Paper? This moſt goodly Booke
Made to write Whore upon? What committed,

Committed? Oh, thou publicke Commoner,
I ſhould make very Forges of my cheekes,
That would to Cynders burne up Modeſtie,
Did I but ſpeake thy deedes. What committed?
Heaven ſtoppes the Noſe at it, and the Moone winks:
The baudy winde that kiſſes all it meetes,
Is huſh'd within the hollow Myne of Earth
And will not hear't. What commited?
Deſ. By Heaven you do me wrong.
Othe. Are not you a Strumpet?
Deſ. No, as I am a Chriſtian.
If to preſerve this veſſell for my Lord,
From any other foule unlawfull touch
Be not to be a Strumpet, I am none.
Othe. What, not a Whore?
Deſ. No, as I ſhall be ſav'd.
Othe. Is't poſſible?
Deſ. Oh Heaven forgive us.
Othe. I cry you mercy then.
I tooke you for that cunning Whore of Venice,
That married with Othello. You Miſtris,
Enter Æmilia.
That have the office oppoſite to Saint Peter,
And keepes the gate of hell. You, you: I you.
We have done our courſe: there's mony for your paines:
I pray you turne the key and keepe our counſaile. Exit.
Æmil. Alas, what do's this Gentleman conceive?
How do you Madam? how do you my good Lady?
Deſ. Faith, halfe a ſleepe.
Æmi. Good Madam,
What's the matter with my Lord?
Deſ. With whom?
Æmil. Why, with my Lord, Madam?
Deſ. Who is thy Lord?
Æmil. He that is yours, ſweet Lady.
Deſ. I have none: do not talke to me, Æmilia,
I cannot weepe: nor anſweres have I none,
But what ſhould go by water. Prythee to night,
Lay on my bed my wedding ſheetes, remember,
And call thy husband hither.
Æmil. Heere's a change indeed. Exit.
Deſ. 'Tis meete I ſhould be us'd ſo: very meete.
How have I bin behav'd, that he might ſticke
The small'ſt opinion on my leaſt miſuſe?

Enter Iago, and Æmilia.

Iago. What is your pleaſure Madam?
How iſt with you?
Deſ. I cannot tell: thoſe that doe teach your Babes
Doe it with gentle meanes, and eaſie taskes.
He might have chid me ſo: for in good faith
I am a Child to chiding.
Iago. What is the matter Lady?
Æmil. Alas (Iago) my Lord hath ſo bewhor'd her,
Throwne ſuch diſpight, and heavie termes upon her
That true hearts cannot beare it.
Deſ. Am I that name, Iago?
Iago. What name (faire Lady?)
Deſ. Such as ſhe ſaid my Lord did ſay I was.
Æmil. He call'd her whore: a Begger in his drinke:
Could not have laid ſuch termes upon his Callet.
Iago. Why did he ſo?
Deſ. I do not know: I am ſure I am none ſuch.
Iago. Do not weepe, do not weepe: alas the day.
Æmil. Hath ſhe forſooke ſo many Noble Matches?
Her Father? And her Country? And her Friends?
To be call'd Whore? Would it not make one weepe?
Deſ. It is my wretched Fortune.
Iago. Beſhrew him for't:
How comes this Tricke upon him?
Deſ. Nay, Heaven doth know.
Æmi. I will be hang'd, if ſome eternall Villaine,
Some buſie and inſinuating Rogue,
Some cogging, cozening Slave to get ſome Office,
Has not divis'd this Slander: I will be hang'd elſe.
Iago. Fie, there is no ſuch man: it is impoſſible.
Deſ. If any ſuch there be, Heaven pardon him.
Æmil. A halter pardon him:
And hell gnaw his bones.
Why ſhould he call her Whore?
Who keepes her company?
What Place? What Time?
What Forme? What liklyhood?
The Moore's abus'd by ſome moſt villanous Knave,
Some baſe notorious Knave, ſome ſcurvy Fellow.
Oh heavens, that ſuch companions thou'dſt unfold,
And put in every honeſt hand a whip
To laſh the Raſcall naked through the world,
Even from the Eaſt to th' Weſt.
Iago. Speake within doore.
Æmil. Oh fie upon them: ſome ſuch Squire he was
That turn'd your wit, the ſeamy-ſide without,
And made you to ſuſpect me with the Moore.
Iago. You are a Foole: go to.
Deſ. Alas Iago.
What ſhall I do to win my Lord againe?
Good Friend, go to him: for by this light of Heaven,
I know not how I loſt him. Heere I kneele:
If ere my will did treſpaſſe 'gainſt his Love,
Either in diſcourſe of thought, or actuall deed,
Or that mine Eyes, mine Eares, or any Sence
Delighted them: or any other Forme.
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
And ever will, (though he do ſhake me off
To beggerly divorcement) Love him deerely,
Comfort forſweare me. Vnkindneſſe may do much,
And his unkindneſſe may defeat my life,
But never taynt my Love. I cannot ſay Whore,
It do's abhore me now I ſpeake the word,
To doe the Act, that might the addition earne,
Not the worlds Maſſe of vanitie could make me.
Iago. I pray you be content: 'tis but his humour:
The buſineſſe of the State do's him offence.
Deſ. If 'twere no other.
Iago. It is but ſo, I warrant,
Hearke how theſe Inſtruments ſummon to ſupper:
The Meſſenger of Venice ſtaies the meate;
Go in, and weepe not: all things ſhall be well.
Exeunt Deſdemona and Æmilia.

Enter Rodorigo.

How now Rodorigo?
Rod. I do not finde
That thou deal'ſt juſtly with me.
Iago. What in the contrary?

Rodori. Every day thou doſts me with ſome device Iago and rather as it ſeemes to me now, keep'ſt from me all conveniencie, then ſuppliest me with the leaſt advantage of hope: I will indeed no longer endure it. Nor am I yet perſwaded to put up in peace, what already I have fooliſhly ſuffred.

Iago. Will you heare me Rodorigo?

Rodo. I have heard too much: and your words and Performances are no kin together.

Iago. You charge me moſt unjuſtly.

Rodo. With naught but truth: I have waſted my ſelfe out of my meanes. The Iewels you have had from me to deliver Deſdemona, would halfe have corrupted a Votariſt. You have told me ſhe hath receiv'd them, and return'd me expectations and comforts of ſodaine reſpect, and acquaintance, but I finde none.

Iago. Well, goe to: very well.

Rod. Very well, goe to: I cannot goe to, (man) nor tis not very well. Nay I thinke it is ſcurvy: and begin to find my ſelfe fopt in it.

Iago. Very well.

Rodo. I tell you, tis not very well: I will make my ſelfe knowne to Deſdemona. If ſhe will returne me my Iewels, I will give over my Suit, and repent my unlawfull ſolicitation. If not, aſſure your ſelfe, I will ſeeke ſatisfaction of you.

Iago. You have ſaid now.

Rod. I, and ſaid nothing but what I proteſt intendment of doing.

Iago. Why, now I ſee theres mettle in thee: and even from this inſtant doe build on thee a better opinion then ever before: give me thy hand Rodorigo. Thou haſt taken againſt me a moſt juſt exception: but yet I proteſt I have dealt moſt directly in thy Affaire.

Rod. It hath not appear'd.

Iago. I grant indeed it hath not appear'd: and your ſuſpition is not without wit and judgement. But Rodorigo, if thou haſt that in thee indeed, which I have greater reaſon to beleeve now then ever (I meane purpoſe, Courage, and Valour) this night ſhew it. If thou the next night following enjoy not Deſdemona, take me from this world with Treachery, and deviſe Engines for my life.

Rod. Well: what is it? Is it within reaſon and compaſſe?

Iago. Sir, there is eſpeciall Commiſſion come from Venice to depute Caſſio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? Why then Othello and Deſdemona returne againe to Venice.

Iago. Oh no: he goes into Mauritania and taketh away with him the faire Deſdemona, unleſſe his abode be lingred heere by ſome accident. Wherein none can be ſo determinate, as the removing of Caſſio.

Rod. How doe you meane removing him?

Iago. Why, by making him uncapable of Othello's place: knocking out his braines.

Rod. And that you would have me to doe.

Iago. I: if you dare doe your ſelfe a profit, and a right. He ſups to night with a Harlotry: and thither will I goe to him. He knowes not yet of his honorable fortune, if you will watch his going thence (which I will faſhion to fall out betweene twelve and one) you may take him at your pleaſure. I will be neere to ſecond your Attempt, and he ſhall fall betweene us. Come, ſtand not amaz'd at it, but goe along with me: I will ſhew you ſuch a neceſſity in his death, that you ſhall thinke your ſelfe bound to put it on him. It is now high ſupper time: and the night growes to waſt. About it.

Rod. I will heare further reaſon for this.

Iago. And you ſhall be ſatisfi'd.

Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Othello, Lodovico, Deſdemona, Æmilia, and Attendants.

Lod. I doe beſeech you Sir, trouble your ſelfe no further

Oth. Oh pardon me: twill doe me good to walke.

Lod. Madam, good night: I humbly thanke your Lady-

Deſ. Your honor is moſt welcome. (ſhip.

Oth. Will you walke Sir? Oh Deſdemona.

Deſ. My Lord.

Oth. Get you to bed on th'inſtant, I will be return'd forth with: diſmiſſe your Attendant there: look't bee done. Exit.

Deſ. I will my Lord.

Æmi. How goes it now? he lookes gentler then he did.

Deſ. He ſayes he will returne incontinent,
And hath commanded me to goe to bed,
And bid me to diſmiſſe you.

Æmil. Diſmiſſe me?

Deſ. It was his bidding: therefore good Æmilia,
Give me my nightly wearing, and adieu,
We muſt not now diſpleaſe him.

Æmil. I would you had never ſeene him.

Deſ. So would not I: my love doth ſo approve him,
That even his ſtubborneſſe, his checks, his frownes,
(Prethee un-pin me) have grace ond favour.

Æmi. I have laid thoſe Sheetes you bad me on the bed.

Deſ. Alls one: good Father, how fooliſh are our minds?
If I doe dye before thee, prethee ſhrowd me
In one of theſe ſame Sheetes.

Æmil. Come, come: you talke.

Deſ. My Mother had a Maid calld Barbara,
She was in love: and he ſhe lov'd prov'd mad,
And did forſake her. She had a Song of Willough,
An old thing twas: but it expreſs'd her Fortune.
And ſhe dy'd ſinging it. That Song to night,
Will not goe from my mind: I have much to doe,
But to goe hang my head all at one ſide
And ſing it like poore Barbara: prethee diſpatch,

Æmil. Shall I goe fetch your Night-gowne?

Deſ. No, un-pin me here,
This Lodovico is a proper man.

Æmil. A very handſome man.

Deſ. He ſpeakes well.

Æmil. I know a Lady in Venice would have walk'd barefoot to Paleſtine for a touch of his neither lip.

Deſ. The poore Soule ſat ſinging, by a Sicamour tree.
Sing all a greene Willough:
Her hand on her boſome, her head on her knee,
Sing Willough, Willough, Willough.
The freſh Streames ran by her, and murmur'd her moanes
Sing Willough, &c.
Her ſalt teares fell from her, and ſoftned the ſtones,
Sing Willough, &c. (Lady by theſe)
Willough, Willough. (Prethee high thee, hele come anon)
Sing all a greene Willough muſt be my Garland.
Let no body blame him, his ſcorne I approve.
(Nay thats not next. Hearke, who is't that knockes?

Æmil. Its the wind.

Deſ. I calld my Love falſe Love: but what ſaid he then?
Sing Willough, &c.
If I court mo women, you'le couch with mo men.

So get thee gone, good night: mine eyes doe itch:
Doth that boade weeping?
Æmil. Tis neither heere, nor there.
Deſ. I have heard it ſaid ſo, O theſe Men, theſe men!
Doſt thou in conſcience thinke (tell me Æmilia)
That there be women doe abuſe their husbands
In ſuch groſſe kind?
Æmil. There be ſome ſuch, no queſtion.
Deſ. Wouldſt thou doe ſuch a deed for all the world:
Æmil. Why, would not you?
Deſ. No, by this heavenly light.
Æmil. Nor I neither, by this heavenly light.
I might doo't as well ith'darke.
Deſ. Wouldſt thou doe ſuch a deed for all the world?
Æmil. The worlds a huge thing:
It is a great price, for a ſmall vice.
Deſ. Introth I thinke thou would'ſt not.

Æmil. Introth I thinke I ſhould, and undoo't when I had done. Marry, I would not doe ſuch a thing for a joynt Ring, nor for meaſures of Lawne, nor for Gownes, Petticoats, nor Caps, nor any petty exhibition. But for all the whole world: why, who would not make her husband a Cuckold, to make him a Monarch? I ſhould venture Purgatory for't.

Deſ. Beſhrew me, if I would doe ſuch a wrong
For the whole world.

Æmil. Why, the wrong, is but a wrong ith'world; and having the world for your labour, tis a wrong in your owne world, and you might quickly make it right.

Deſ I doe not thinke there is any ſuch woman.

Æmil. Yes, a dozen: and as many toth'vantage, as would ſtore the world they plaid for.
But I doe thinke it is their husbands faults
If Wives doe fall: (Say, that they ſlacke their duties,
And powre our Treaſures into forraigne laps;
Or elſe breake out in peeviſh Iealouſies,
Throwing reſtraint upon us: Or ſay they ſtrike us,
Or ſcant our former having in deſpight)
Why we have galles: and though we have ſome Grace,
Yet have we ſome Revenge. Let husbands know,
Their wives have ſenſe like them: They ſee, and ſmell,
And have their Palats both for ſweet, and ſowre,
As husbands have. What is it that they doe
When they change us for others? Is it Sport?
I thinke it is: and doth Affection breed it?
I thinke it doth. Iſt frailty that thus erres?
It is ſo too. And have not we affections?
Deſires for Sport? and frailty, as men have?
Then let them uſe us well: elſe let them know,
The illes we doe, their illes inſtruct us to.
Deſ. Good night, good night:
Heaven me ſuch uſes ſend,
Not to picke bad, from bad; but by bad, mend. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Iago, and Rodorigo.

Iago. Heere, ſtand behind this Barke,
Straight will he come:
Weare thy good Rapier bare, and put it home:
Quicke, quicke, feare nothing; Ile be at thy Elbow,
It makes us, or it marres us, thinke on that,
And fixe moſt firme thy Reſolution.
Rod. Be neere at hand, I may miſcarry in't.
Iago. Heere, at thy hand: Behold, and take thy ſtand.
Rod. I have no great devotion to the deed,
And yet he hath given me ſatisfying Reaſons:
Tis but a man gone. Forth my Sword: he dyes.
Iago. I have rub'd this yong Quat almoſt to the ſenſe,
And he growes angry. Now, whether he kill Caſſio,
Or Caſſio him, or each doe kill the other,
Every way makes my gaine. Live Rodorigo,
He calles me to a reſtitution large
Of gold, and Iewels, that I bob'd from him,
As gifts to Deſdemona.
It muſt not be: if Caſſio doe remaine,
He hath a dayly beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly: and beſides, the Moore
May unfold me to him: there ſtand I in much perill:
No, he muſt dye. But ſo, I heare him comming.

Enter Caſſio.

Rod. I know his gate, tis he: Villaine thou dyeſt.
Caſ. That thruſt had beene mine enemy indeed,
But that my Coate is better then thou knowſt:
I will make proofe of thine.
Rod. Oh, I am ſlaine.
Caſ. I am maym'd for ever:
Helpe hoa: Murther, murther.

Enter Othello.

Oth. The voyce of Caſſio, Iago keepes his word.
Rod. O Villaine that I am.
Oth. It is even ſo.
Caſ. Oh helpe hoa: Light, a Surgeon.
Oth. Tis he: O brave Iago, honeſt, and juſt,
That haſt ſuch Noble ſenſe of thy friends wrong,
Thou teacheſt me. Minion, your deere lyes dead,
And your unbleſt Fate highes: Strumpet I come:
For off my heart, thoſe Charmes thine Eyes, are blotted.
Thy Bed luſt-ſtain'd, ſhall with Luſts blood be ſpotted.
Exit Othello.

Enter Lodovico and Gratiano.

Caſ. What hoa? no Watch? No paſſage?
Murther, Murther.
Gra. Tis ſome miſchance, the voyce is very direfull.
Caſ. Oh helpe.
Lodo. Hearke.
Rod. Oh wretched Villaine.
Lod. Two or three groane. Tis heavy night;
Theſe may be counterfets: Lets thinkt unſafe
To come into the cry, without more helpe.
Rod. Nobody come: then ſhall I bleed to death.

Enter Iago.

Lod. Hearke.

Gra. Heres one comes in his ſhirt, with Light, and Weapons.

Iago. Whos there?
Whoſe noyſe is this that cryes out murther?
Lodo. We doe not know.
Iago. Doe not you heare a cry?
Caſ. Heere, heere: for heaven ſake helpe me.
Iago. Whats the matter?
Gra. This is Othello's Ancient, as I take it.
Lodo. The ſame indeed, a very valiant Fellow.
Iago. What are you heere, that cry ſo greevouſly?
Caſ. Iago? Oh I am ſpoyl'd, undone by Villaines:
Give me ſome helpe.
Iago. O me, Lieutenant!
What Villaines have done this?
Caſ. I thinke that one of them is heereabout,

And cannot make away.
Iago. Oh treacherous Villaines:
What are you there? Come in, and give ſome helpe.
Rod. O helpe me there.
Caſſi. Thats one of them.
Iago. Oh murd'rous Slave! O Villaine!
Rod. O damn'd Iago! O inhumane Dogge!
Iago. Kill men ith'darke?
Where be theſe bloody Theeves?
How ſilent is this Towne? Hoa, murther, murther.
What may you be? Are you of good, or evill?
Lod. As you ſhall prove us, praiſe us.
Iago. Signior Lodovico.
Lod He Sir.
Iago. I cry you mercy: heres Caſſio hurt by Villaines.
Gra. Caſſio?
Iago. How iſt brother?
Caſſi. My Legge is cut in two.
Iago. Marry heaven forbid:
Light Gentlemen, ile bind it with my ſhirt.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. What is the matter hoa? Who iſt that cryd?
Iago. Who iſt that cry'd?
Bian. Oh my deere Caſſio,
My ſweet Caſſio: Oh Caſſio, Caſſio, Caſſio.
Iago. O noatble Strumpet. Caſſio, may you ſuſpect
Who they ſhould be, that have thus mangled you?
Caſſi. No.
Gra. I am ſorry to find you thus;
I have beene to ſeeke you.
Iago. Lend me a Garter. So:——Oh for a Chaire
To beare him eaſily hence.
Bian. Alas he faints. Oh Caſſio, Caſſio, Caſſio.
Iago. Gentlemen all, I doe ſuſpect this Traſh
To be a party in this injurie.
Patience a while, good Caſſio. Come, come;
Lend me a Light: know we this face, or no?
Alas my friend, and my deere Countryman
Roderigo? No: Yes ſure: Yea, tis Roderigo.
Gra. What, of Venice?
Iago. Even he Sir: Did you know him?
Gra. Know him? I.
Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry your gentle pardon:
Theſe bloody accidents muſt excuſe my Manners,
That ſo neglected you.
Gra. I am glad to ſee you.
Iago. How doe you Caſſio? Oh, a Chaire, a Chaire.
Gra. Roderigo?
Iago. He, he, tis he:
Oh thats well ſaid, the Chaire.
Some good man beare him carefully from hence,
Ile fetch the Generalls Surgeon. For you Miſtris,
Save you your labour. He that lyes ſlaine heere (Caſſio)
Was my deere friend. What malice was betweene you?
Caſſi. None in the world: nor doe I know the man?
Iago. What looke you pale? Oh beare him out oth'Ayre.
Stay you good Gentlemen. Looke you pale, Miſtris?
Doe you perceive the gaſtneſſe of her eye?
Nay, if you ſtare, we ſhall heare more anon.
Behold her well: I pray you looke upon her:
Doe you ſee Gentlemen? Nay, guiltineſſe will ſpeake
Though tongues were out of uſe.
Æmil. Alas, what is the matter?
What is the matter, husband?
Iago. Caſſio hath heere bin ſet on in the darke
By Roderigo, and Fellowes that are ſcap'd:
Hes almoſt ſlaine, and Roderigo quite dead.
Æmil. Alas good Gentleman: alas good Caſſio.
Iago. This is the fruits of whoring. Prethee Æmilia,
Goe know of Caſſio where he ſupt to night.
What doe you ſhake at that?
Bian. He ſupt at my houſe, but I therefore ſhake not.
Iago. O did he ſo? I charge you goe with me.
Æmil. Oh fie upon thee Strumpet.
Bian. I am no Strumpet, but of life as honeſt,
As you that thus abuſe me.
Æmil. As I? Fye upon thee.
Iago. Kind Gentlemen:
Lets goe ſee poore Caſſio dreſt.
Come Miſtris, you muſt tels another Tale.
Æmilia, run you to the Cittadell,
And tell my Lord and Lady, what hath happ'd:
Will you goe on afore? This is the night
That either makes me, or foredoes me quight. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Deſdemona in her bed.

Oth. It is the Cauſe, it is the Cauſe (my ſoule)
Let me not name it to you, you chaſte Starres,
It is the Cauſe. Yet Ile not ſhed her blood,
Nor ſcarre that whiter skin of hers, then Snow,
And ſmooth as Monumentall Alablaſter:
Yet ſhe muſt dye, elſe ſhell betray more men:
Put out the Light, and then put out the Light:
If I quench thee, thou flaming Miniſter,
I can againe thy former light reſtore,
Should I repent me. But once put out thy Light,
Thou cunningſt Patterne of excelling Nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heate
That can thy Light re-Lume.
When I have pluck'd thy Roſe,
I cannot give it vitall growth againe,
It needes muſt wither. Ile ſmell thee on the Tree:
Oh Balmy breath, that doſt almoſt perſwade
Iuſtice to breake her Sword. One more, one more;
Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,
And love thee after. One more, and thats the laſt.
So ſweet, was ne're ſo fatall. I muſt weepe,
But they are cruell Teares: This ſorrows heavenly,
It ſtrikes, where it doth love. She wakes.
Deſ. Who's there? Othello?
Oth. I Deſdemona.
Deſ. Will you come to bed, my Lord?
Oth. Have you pray'd to night, Deſdemon?
Deſ. I my Lord.
Oth. If you bethinke your ſelfe of any Crime
Vnreconcil'd as yet to heaven, and Grace,
Solicite for it ſtraight.
Deſ. Alacke, my Lord,
What may you meane by that?
Oth. Well, doe it, and be briefe, I will walke by?
I would not kill thy unprepared Spirit,
No, (Heavens fore-fend) I would not kill thy ſoule.
Deſ. Talke you of killing?
Oth. I, I doe.
Deſ. Then Heaven have mercy on mee.

Oth. Amen, with all my heart.
Deſ. If you ſay ſo, I hope you will not kill me.
Oth. Humh.
Deſ. And yet I feare you: for you're fatall then
When your eyes rowle ſo.
Why I ſhould feare, I know not,
Since guiltineſſe I know not: But yet I feele I feare,
Oth. Thinke on thy ſinnes,
Deſ. They are love I beare to you.
Oth. I, and for that thou dy'ſt.
Deſ. That deaths unaturall, that kils for loving.
Alas, why gnaw you ſo your nether-lip?
Some bloody paſſion ſhakes your very frame:
Theſe are portents: but yet I hope, I hope,
They doe not point on me.
Oth. Peace, and be ſtill.
Deſ. I will ſo: Whats the matter?
Oth. That Handkerchiefe
Which I ſo lov'd, and gave thee, thou gau'ſt to Caſſio.
Deſ. No by my life, and ſoule: ſend for the man,
And aske him.
Oth. Sweet ſoule, take heed, take heed of Perjury,
Thou art on thy death-bed.
Deſ. I, but not yet to dye.
Oth. Preſently.
Therefore confeſſe thee freely of thy ſinne:
For to deny each Article with Oath,
Cannot remove, nor choake the ſtrong Conception
That I doe grone withall. Thou art to dye.
Deſ. Oh heaven have mercy on me.
Oth. I ſay, Amen.
Deſ. And have you mercy too. I never did
Offend you in my life: never lov'd Caſſio,
But with ſuch generall warranty of heaven,
As I might love. I never gave him Token.
Oth. By heaven I ſaw my Handkerchiefe ins hand.
O periur'd woman, thou doſt ſtone my heart,
And makeſt me call, what I intend to doe
A Murther, which I thought a Sacrifice.
I ſaw the Handkerchife.
Deſ. He found it then:
I never gave it him: Send for him hither:
Let him confeſſe a truth.
Oth. He hath confeſt:
Deſ. What my Lord?
Oth. That he hath vs'd thee.
Deſ. How? unlawfully?
Oth. I.
Deſ. He will not ſay ſo.
Oth. No: his mouth is ſtopp'd:
Honeſt Iago hath tane order fort.
Deſ. Oh, my feare interprets. What is he dead?
Oth. Had all his haires bin lives, my great Revenge
Had ſtomacke for them all.
Deſ. Alas, he is betray'd, and I undone.
Oth. Out Strumpet: weep'ſt thou for him to my face?
Deſ. O banish me, my Lord, but kill me not.
Oth. Downe Strumpet.
Deſ. Kill me to morrow, let me live to night.
Oth. Nay, if you ſtrive.
Deſ. But halfe an houre.
Oth. Being done, there is no pawſe.
Deſ. But while I ſay one prayer.
Oth. It is too late, Smothers her.
Æmilia at the doore.
Æmil. My Lord, my Lord? What hoa?
My Lord, my Lord.
Oth. What noiſe is this? Not dead? not yet quite dead
I that am cruell, am yet mercifull,
I would not have thee linger in thy paine?
So, ſo.
Æmil. within. What hoa? my Lord, my Lord?
Oth. Whos there?
Æmil. Oh good my Lord, I would ſpeake a word with you.
Oth. Yes: tis Æmilia: by and by. Shes dead.
Tis like ſhe comes to ſpeake of Caſſios death:
The noiſe was high. Hah, no more mooving?
Still as the Grave. Shall ſhe come in? Wert good?
I thinke ſhe ſtirres againe. No, whats beſt to doe?
If ſhe come in, ſhell ſure ſpeake to my wife:
My wife, my wife: what wife? I have no wife.
Oh inſupportable! Oh heavy houre!
Me thinkes, it ſhould be now a huge Eclipſe
Of Sunne, and Moone: and that th'affrighted Globe
Did yawne at Alteration.
Æmil. I doe beſeech you
That I may ſpeake with you. Oh good my Lord.
Oth. I had forgot thee: oh come in Æmilia.
Soft, by and by, let me the Curtaines draw.
Where art thou? Whats the matter with thee now?
Enter Æmilia.
Æmil. Oh my good Lord, yonders foule Murthers done.
Oth. What? now?
Æmil. But now, my Lord,
Oth. It is the very error of the Moone,
She comes more neerer Earth then ſhe was wont,
And makes men mad.
Æmil. Caſſio, my Lord, hath killd
A young Venetian, calld Rodorigo.
Oth. Rodorigo killd? and Caſſio killd?
Æmil. No, Caſſio is not killd.
Oth. Not Caſſio killd? Then Murthers out of tune,
And ſweet Revenge growes harſh.
Deſ. O falſely, falſely murder'd.
Æmil. Alas! what cry is that?
Oth. That? What?
Æmil. Out, and alas, that was my Ladies voyce,
Helpe, helpe hoa, helpe, Oh Ladie ſpeake againe,
Sweet Deſdemona, oh ſweet Miſtris, ſpeake.
Deſ. A guiltleſſe death I dye.
Æmil. Oh who hath done this deed?
Deſ. No body: I my ſelfe, farewell:
Commend me to my kind Lord: oh farewell.
Oth. Why how ſhould ſhe be murdred?
Æmil. Alas: who knowes?
Oth. You heare her ſay her ſelfe, it was not I.
Æmil. She ſaid ſo: I muſt needs report the truth.
Oth. Shes like a Lyar gone to burning hell,
Twas I that killd her.
Æmil. Oh the more Angell ſhe, and you the blacker Divell.
Oth. She turn'd to folly: and ſhe was a whore.
Æmil. Thou doſt bely her, and thou art a divell.
Oth. She was falſe as water.
Æmil. Thou art raſh as fire, to ſay
That ſhe was falſe. Oh ſhe was heavenly true.
Oth. Caſſio did top her: Aske thy husband elſe.
O, I were damn'd beneath all depth in hell:
But that I did proceed upon juſt grounds
To this extremity. Thy husband knew it all.

Æmil. My husband?
Oth. Thy husband.
Æmil. That ſhe was falſe to Wedlocke;
Oth. I, with Caſſio: had ſhe bin true,
If heaven would make me ſuch another world,
Of one entyre and perfect Chryſolite,
Ild not have ſold her for it.
Æmil. My husband?
Oth. I, twas he that told me on her firſt,
An honeſt man he is, and hates the ſlime
That ſtickes on filthy deeds.
Æmil. My husband?
Oth. What needs this iterance, Woman?
I ſay, thy husband.
Æmil. Oh Miſtris,
Vilany hath made mockes with love:
My husband ſay ſhe was falſe?
Oth. He, woman;
I ſay thy husband: Doſt underſtand the word?
My friend, thy husband; honeſt, honeſt Iago.
Æmil. If he ſay ſo, may his pernicious Soule
Rot halfe a graine a day: he lyes to'th'heart,
She was too fond of her moſt filthy Bargaine.
Oth. Hah?
Æmil. Doe thy worſt:
This deede of thine is no more worthy heaven,
Then thou waſt worthy her.
Oth. Peace, you were beſt.
Æmil. Thou haſt not halfe that power to doe me
As I have to be hurt. Oh gull, oh dolt, (harme
As ignorant as durt: thou haſt done a deed
(I care not for thy Sword) Ile make thee knowne,
Though I loſt twenty lives, Helpe, helpe, hoa, helpe:
The Moore hath kill'd my Miſtris. Murther, murther.

Enter Montano, Gratiano, and Iago.

Mon. What is the matter? How now generall?
Æmil. Oh, are you come, Iago: you have done well,
That men muſt lay their Murthers on your necke.
Gra. What is the matter?
Æmil. Diſprove this Villaine, if thou be'ſt a man,
He ſayes, thou toldſt him that his wife was falſe:
I know thou didſt not: thou'rt not ſuch a Villaine.
Speake, for my heart is full.
Iago. I told him what I thought,
And told no more
Then what he found himſelfe was apt, and true.
Æmil. But did you ever tell him,
She was falſe?
Iago. I did.
Æmil. You told a Lye, an odious damned Lye:
Vpon my ſoule, a Lye; a wicked Lye.
Shee falſe with Caſſio?
Did you ſay with Caſſio?
Iago. With Caſſio, Miſtris,
Goe to, charme your tongue.
Æmil. I will not charme my Tongue;
I am bound to ſpeake,
My Miſtris heere lyes murthered in her bed.
All. Oh heavens, forefend.
Æmil. And your reports have ſet the Murder on.
Oth. Nay ſtare not Maſters,
It is true indeed.
Gra. Tis a ſtrange Truth.
Mont. O monſtrous Act.
Æmil. Villany, villany, villany:
I thinke upont, I thinke: I ſmel't: O Villany:
I thought ſo then: Ile kill my ſelfe for griefe,
O villany! villany!
Iago. What, are you mad?
I charge you get you home.
Æmil. Good Gentlemen, let me have leave to ſpeake:
Tis proper I obey him; but not now:
Perchance Iago, I will nere goe home.
Oth. Oh, oh, oh.
Æmil. Nay, lay thee downe and roare:
For thou haſt killd the ſweeteſt innocent,
That ere did lift up eye.
Oth. Oh ſhe was fowle!
I ſcarſe did know you Vnkle, there lies your Neece,
Whoſe breath (indeed) theſe hands have newly ſtopp'd:
I know this acte ſhewes horrible and grim.
Gra. Poore Deſdemon:
I am glad thy father's dead,
Thy Match was mortall to him; and pure griefe
Shore his old thred in twaine. Did he live now,
This ſight would make him doe a deſperate turne:
Yea, curſe his better Angell from his ſide,
And fall to Reprobance.
Oth. Tis pittifull; but yet Iago knowes,
That ſhe with Caſſio hath the act of ſhame
A thouſand times committed. Caſſio confeſt it,
And ſhe did gratifie his amorous workes
With that Recognizance and pledge of Love
Which I firſt gave her: I ſaw it in his hand:
It was a Handkerchiefe, an Antique Token
My father gave my Mother.
Æmil. Oh heaven! oh heavenly Powers!
Iago. Come, hold your peace.
Æmil. Twill out, twill out. I peace?
No, I will ſpeake as liberall as the North;
Let heaven, and Men, and divels, let them all,
All, all, cry ſhame againſt me, yet Ile ſpeake.
Iago. Be wiſe and get you home.
Æmil. I will not.
Gra. Fye, your Sword upon a Woman.
Æmil. Oh thou dull Moore,
That Handkerchiefe thou ſpeak'ſt of
I found by Fortune, and did give my husband:
For often, with a ſolemne earneſtneſſe,
(More then indeed belong'd to ſuch a Trifle)
He begg'd of me, to ſteale't.
Iago. Villanous Whore.
Æmil. She give it Caſſio? No, alas I found it,
And I did giv't my husband.
Iago. Filth, thou lyeſt.
Æmil. By heaven I doe not, I doe not Gentlemen:
Oh murd'rous Coxcombe, what ſhould ſuch a foole
Doe with ſo good a wife?
Oth. Are there no ſtones in heaven,
But what ſerves for the Thunder?
Precious Villaine.
Gra. The woman falles:
Sure he hath killd his Wife.
Æmil. I, I; oh lay me by my Miſtris ſide.
Gra. Hes gone, but his wifes kill'd.
Mont. Tis a notorious Villaine: take you this weapon
Which I have recover'd from the Moore:
Come guard the doore without, let him not paſſe,
But kill him rather. Ile after that ſame villaine,
For tis a damned Slave. Exit.

Oth. I am not valiant neither:
But every Puny whipſter gets my Sword.
But why ſhould honor out-live honeſty?
Let it goe all.
Æmil. What did thy Song boad Lady?
Hearke, canſt thou heare me? I will play the Swan,
And dye in Muſicke: Willough, Willough, Willough.
Moore, ſhe was chaſte: She lov'd thee, cruell Moore:
So come my ſoule to bliſſe, as I ſpeake true:
So ſpeaking as I thinke, alas, I dye.
Oth. I have another weapon in this Chamber,
It was a Sword of Spaine, the Ice brookes temper:
Oh heere it is: Vnkle I muſt come forth.
Gra. If thou attempt it, it will coſt thee deere;
Thou haſt no weapon, and perforce muſt ſuffer.
Oth. Looke in upon me then, and ſpeake with me,
Or naked as I am I will aſſault thee.
Gra. What is the matter?
Oth. Behold, I have a weapon:
A better never did it ſelfe ſuſtaine
Vpon a Souldiers Thigh. I have ſeene the day,
That with this little Arme, and this good Sword,
I have made my way through more impediments
Then twenty times your ſtop. But (oh vaine boaſt)
Who can controll his fate? 'Tis not ſo now.
Be not affraid, though you doe ſee me weapon'd:
Heere is my journies end, heere is my but
And very Sea-marke of my utmoſt Saile.
Doe you goe backe diſmaid? 'Tis a loſt feare:
Man but a Ruſh againſt Othello's breſt,
And he retires. Where ſhould Othello goe?
Now: how doſt thou looke now? oh ill-Starr'd wench,
Pale as thy Smocke: when we ſhall meete at compt,
This looke of thine will hurle my ſoule from Heaven,
And fiends will ſnatch at it. Cold, cold, my Girle?
Even like thy Chaſtity. O curſed, curſed Slave!
Whip me ye Divels,
From the poſſeſſion of this heavenly ſight:
Blow me about in windes, roaſt me in Sulphure,
Waſh me in ſteepe-downe gulfes of Liquid fire.
Oh Deſdemon! dead Deſdemon: dead. dead. Oh, oh!

Enter Lodovico, Caſſio, Montano, and Iago, with Officers.

Lod. Where is this raſh, and moſt unfortunate man?
Oth. Thats he that was Othello: heere I am.
Lod. Where is that Viper?
Bring the Villaine forth.
Oth. I looke downe towards his feet; but thats a fable,
If that thou beeſt a divell, I cannot kill thee.
Lod. Wrench his Sword from him.
Iago. I bleed Sir, but not kill'd.
Oth. I am not ſorry neither, Il'd have thee live:
For in my ſenſe, 'tis happineſſe to dye.
Lod. Oh thou Othello, that was once ſo good,
Falne in the practſe of a curſed Slave,
What ſhall be ſaid to thee.
Oth. Why any thing:
An honorable Murderer, if you will:
For nought I did in hate, but all in Honor.
Lod. This wretch hath part confeſt his Villany:
Did you and he conſent in Caſſio's death.
Oth. I.
Caſ. Deere Generall, I never gave you cauſe.
Oth. I doe beleve it, and I aske your pardon:
Will you, I pray, demand that demy-Divell,
Why he hath thus enſnar'd my ſoule and body.
Iag. Demand me nothing: what you know, you know:
From this time forth, I never will ſpeake word.
Lod. What? not to pray?
Gra. Torments will ope your lips.
Oth. Well, thou doſt beſt.
Lod. Sir,
You ſhall underſtand what hath befalne,
(Which, as I thinke, you know not) heere is a Letter
Found in the pocket of the ſlaine Roderigo,
And heere another, the one of them imports
The death of Caſſio, to be undertooke
By Roderigo.
Oth. O Villaine!
Caſſi. Moſt heatheniſh, and moſt groſſe.
Lod. Now, heeres another diſcontented paper
Found in his pocket too: and this it ſeemes
Roderigo meant t'have ſent this damned villaine:
But that (belike) Iago in the interim
Came in, and ſatisfi'd him.
Oth. Oh thou pernitious Caitiffe;
How came you (Caſſio) by that Handkerchiefe
That was my wives?
Caſſi. I found it in my Chamber:
And he himſelfe confeſt it but even now,
That there he dropt it for a ſpeciall purpoſe,
Which wrought to his deſire.
Oth. O foole, foole, foole!
Caſſi. There is beſides, in Roderigos Letter,
How he upbraides Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the Watch: whereon it came
That I was caſt: and even but now he ſpake
(After long ſeeming dead) Iago hurt him,
Iago ſet him on.
Lod. You muſt forſake this roome, and goe with us:
Your Power, and your command is taken off,
And Caſſio rules in Cyprus. For this Slave,
If there be any cunning Cruelty,
That can torment him much, and hold him long,
It ſhall be his. You ſhall cloſe Priſoner reſt,
Till that the Nature of your fault be knowne
To the Venetian State. Come, bring away.
Oth. Soft you; a word or two before you goe:
I have done the State ſome ſervice, and they know't:
No more of that. I pray you in your Letters,
When you ſhall theſe unlucky deeds relate,
Speake of me, as I am. Nothing extenuate,
Nor ſet downe ought in malice.
Then muſt you ſpeake,
Of one that lov'd not wiſely, but too well:
Of one, not eaſily Iealious, but being wrought,
Perplexed in the extreame: Of one, whoſe hand
(Like the baſe Indian) threw a Pearle away
Richer then all his Tribe: Of one, whoſe ſubdu'd Eyes,
Albeit unuſed to the melting moode,
Drop teares as faſt as the Arabian Trees
Their Medicinable gumme. Set you downe this:
And ſay beſides, that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant, and a Turbond-Turke
Beate a Venetian, and traduc'd the State,
I tooke by th'throat the circumciſed Dogge,
And ſmote him, thus.
Lod. Oh bloody period.
Gra. All that is ſpoke is marr'd.
Oth. I kiſt thee, ere I kill'd thee: No way but this,
Killing my ſelfe, to dye upon a kiſſe. Dyes.

Caſſio.

Caſſi. This did I feare, but thought he had no weapon:
For he was great of heart.
Lod. Oh Spartan Dogge:
More fell then Anguiſh, Hunger, or the Sea:
Looke on the Tragicke Loading of this bed:
This is thy worke:
The Object poyſons ſight,
Let it be hid. Gratiano, keepe the houſe,
And ſeize upon the Fortunes of the Moore,
For they ſucceede on you. To you, Lord Governor,
Remaines the Cenſure of this helliſh villaine:
The time, the place, the torture, oh inforce it:
My ſelfe will ſtraight aboord, and to the State,
This heavy Act, with heavy heart relate. Exeunt.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDY OF
Anthony, and Cleopatra.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Demetrius, and Philo.

Philo.

Nay, but this dotage of our Generall
Ore-flowes the meaſure: thoſe his goodly eyes
That o're the files and Muſters of the Warre,
Have glow'd like plated Mars:
Now bend, now turne
The Office and Devotion of their view
Vpon a Tawny Front. His Captaines heart,
Which in the ſcuffles of great fights hath burſt
The Buckles on his breſt, reneages all temper,
And is become the Bellowes and the Fan
To coole a Gypſies Luſt.

Enter Anthony, Cleopatra, her Ladies, the Traine, with Eunuchs fanning her.

Looke where they come:
Take but good note, and you ſhall ſee in him
The triple Pillar of the world transform'd
Into a Strumpets Foole. Behold and ſee.

Cleo. If it be Love indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. Theres beggery in the love that can be reckon'd

Cleo. Ile ſet a bourne how farre to be belov'd.

Ant. Then muſt thou needes find out new heaven, new Earth.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Newes (my good Lord) from Rome.

Ant. Rate me, the ſumme.

Cleo. Nay heare them Anthony.
Fulvia perchance is angry: Or who knowes,
If the ſcarſe-bearded Cæſar have not ſent
His powerfull Mandate to you. Doe this, or this;
Take in that Kingdome, and infranchiſe that:
Perform't, or elſe we damne thee,

Ant. How, my Love?

Cleo. Perchance? Nay, and moſt like;
You muſt not ſtay heere longer, your diſmiſſion
Is come from Cæſar, therefore heare it Anthony.
Wheres Fulvias Proceſſe? (Cæſars I would ſay) both?
Call in the Meſſengers: As I am Egypts Queene,
Thou bluſheſt Anthony, and that blood of thine
Is Cæſars homager: elſe ſo thy cheeke payes ſhame,
When ſhrill-tongu'd Fulvia ſcolds. The Meſſengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt, and the wide Arch
Of the raing'd Empire fall: Heere is my ſpace,
Kingdomes are clay: Our dungy earth alike
Feeds Beaſt as Man; the Nobleneſſe of life
Is to doe thus: when ſuch a mutuall paire,
And ſuch a twaine can doo't, in which I bind,
On paine of puniſhment, the world to weete
We ſtand up Peereleſſe.

Cleo. Excellent falſhood:
Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?
Ile ſeeme the Foole I am not. Anthony will be himſelfe,

Ant. But ſtirr'd by Cleopatra.
Now for the love of love, and her ſoft houres,
Lets not confound the time with Conference harſh;
Theres not a minute of our lives ſhould ſtretch
Without ſome pleaſure now. What ſport to night?

Cleo. Heare the Ambaſſadors.

Ant. Fye wrangling Queene:
Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weepe: whoſe every paſſion fully ſtrives
To make it ſelfe (in Thee) faire, and admir'd.
No Meſſenger but thine, and all alone, to night
We'll wander through the ſtreets, and note
The qualities of people. Come my Queene,
Laſt night you did deſire it. Speake not to us.

Exeunt with the Traine

Dem. Is Cæſar with Anthonius priz'd ſo ſlight?

Philo. Sir ſometimes when he is not Anthony,
He comes too ſhort of that great Property
Which ſtill ſhould goe with Anthony.

Dem. I am full ſorry, that he approves the common Lyar, who thus ſpeakes of him at Rome:but I will hope of better deeds to morrow. Reſt you happy. Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus, Lamprius, a Southſayer, Rannius, Lucillius, Charmian, Iras, Mardian the Eunuch, and Alexas.

Char. L. Alexas, ſweet Alexas, moſt any thing Alexas, almoſt moſt abſolute Alexas, wheres the Soothſayer that you prais'd ſo to'th'Queene? Oh that I knew this Husband, which you ſay, muſt change his hornes with Garlands.

Alex. Soothſayer.

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the Man? Is't you ſir that know things?

Sooth. In Natures infinite booke of Secrecy, a little I can read.

Alex. Shew him your hand.

Enob. Bring in the Banket quickly: Wine enough, Cleopatras health to drinke.

Char. Good ſir, give me good Fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but forſee.

Char. Pray then, foreſee me one.

Sooth. You ſhall be yet farre fairer then you are.

Char. He meanes in fleſh.

Iras. No, you ſhall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid.

Alex. Vex not his preſcience, be attentiue.

Char. Huſh.

Sooth. You ſhall be more beloving, then beloved.

Char. I had rather heate my Liver with drinking.

Alex. Nay, heare him.

Char. Good now ſome excellent Fortune. Let mee be married to three Kings in a forenoone, and Widdow them all: Let me have a Child at fifty, to whom Herod of Iewry may doe Homage. Finde me to marry me with Octavius Cæſar, and companion me with my Miſtris.

Sooth. You ſhall out-live the Lady whom you ſerve.

Char. Oh excellent, I love long life better then Figs.

Sooth. You have ſeene and proved a fairer former fortune, then that which is to approach.

Char. Then belike my Children ſhall have no names: Prethee how many Boyes and Wenches muſt I have.

Sooth. If every of your wiſhes had a wombe, and foretell every wiſh, a Million.

Char. Out Foole, I forgive thee for a Witch.

Alex. You thinke none but your ſheets are privy to your wiſhes.

Char. Nay come, tell Iras hers.

Alex. We'll know all our Fortunes.

Enob. Mine, and moſt of our Fortunes to night, ſhall be drunke to bed.

Iras. Theres a Palme preſages Chaſtity, if nothing elſe.

Char. E'ne as the ore-flowing Nylus preſageth Famine.

Iras. Goe you wild Bedfellow, you cannot Soothſay.

Char. Nay, if an oyly Palme be not a fruitfull Prognoſtication, I cannot ſcratch mine eare. Prethee tell her but a worky day Fortune.

Sooth. Your Fortunes are alike.

Iras. But how, but how, give me particulars.

Sooth. I have ſaid.

Iras. Am I not an inch of Fortune better than ſhe?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of Fortune better than I: where would you chooſe it.

Iras. Not in my husbands Noſe.

Char. Our worſer thoughts heavens mend.

Alexas. Come, his Fortune, his Fortune. Oh let him marry a woman that cannot go, ſweet Iſis, I beſeech thee, and let her dye too, and give him a worſe, and let worſe follow worſe, till the worſt of all follow him laughing to his grave, fifty-fold a Cuckold. Good Iſis heare me this Prayer, though thou deny me a matter of more waight: good Iſis I beſeech thee.

Char. Amen, deere Goddeſſe, heare that prayer of the people. For, as it is a heart-breaking to ſee a handſome man looſe-wiv'd, ſo it is a deadly ſorrow, to behold a foule Knave uncuckolded: Therefore deare Iſis keepe decorum, and Fortune him accordingly.

Char. Amen.

Alex. Loe now, if it lay in their hands to make me a Cuckold, they would make themſelves Whores, but they'ld doo't.

Enter Cleopatra.

Eno. Huſh, here comes Anthony.

Char. Not he, the Queene.

Cleo. Saw you my Lord?

Enob. No Lady.

Cleo. Was he not here?

Char. No Madame.

Cleo. He was diſpos'd to mirth, but on the ſodaine
A Roman thought hath ſtrooke him.
Enobarbus?

Enob. Madam.

Cle. Seeke him, and bring him hither: where's Alexas?

Alex. Here at your ſervice.
My Lord approaches.

Enter Anthony with a Meſſenger.

Cleo. We will not looke upon him:
Goe with us. Exeunt.

Meſſen. Fulvia thy Wife,
Firſt came into the Field.

Ant. Againſt my Brother Lucius.

Meſſ. I, but ſoone that Warre had end,
And the times ſtate
Made friends of them, joynting their force 'gainſt Cæſar.
Whoſe better iſſue in the warre from Italy,
Vpon the firſt encounter drave them.

Ant. Well, what worſt.

Meſſ. The nature of bad newes infects the Teller.

Ant. When it concernes the Foole or Coward: On.
Things that are paſt, are done, with me. Tis thus,
Who tels me true, though in his Tale lye death,
I heare him as he flatter'd.

Meſ. Labienus (this is ſtiffe-newes)
Hath with his Parthian Force
Extended Aſia: from Euphrates his conquering
Banner ſhooke, from Syria to Lydia,
And to Ionia, whilſt——

Ant. Anthony thou wouldſt ſay.

Meſ. Oh my Lord.

Ant. Speake to me home,
Mince not the generall tongue, name
Cleopatra as ſhe is call'd in Rome:
Raile thou in Fulvia's phraſe, and taunt my faults
With ſuch full Licenſe, as both Truth and Malice
Have power to utter. Oh then we bring forth weeds,
When our quicke windes lye ſtill, and our illes told us
Is as our earing: fare thee well awhile.

Meſ. At your Noble pleaſure. Exit Meſſenger.

Enter another Meſſenger.

Ant. From Scicion how the newes? Speake there.

1 Meſ. The man from Scicion,
Is there ſuch an one?

2. Meſ. He ſtayes upon your will.

Ant. Let him appeare:
Theſe ſtrong Egyptian Fetters I muſt breake,
Or looſe my ſelfe in dotage.

Enter another Meſſenger with a Letter.

What are you?

3 Meſ. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where dyed ſhe.

Meſ. In Scicion, her length of ſickneſſe,
With what elſe more ſerious,
Importeth thee to know, this beares,

Ant. Forebeare me
Theres a great Spirit gone, thus did I deſire it:
What our contempts doe often hurle from us,

We wiſh it oursagaine. The preſent pleaſure,
By revolution lowring, does become
The oppoſite of it ſelfe : ſhe's good being gon,
The hand could plucke her backe, that ſhov'd her on.
I muſt from this Queene breake off,
Ten thouſand harmes, more than the illes I know
My idleneſſe doth hatch.

Enter Enobarbus.

How now Enobarbus.

Eno. Whats your pleaſure, Sir?

Anth. I muſt with haſte from hence,

Eno. Why then we kill all our Women. We ſee how mortall an unkindneſſe is to them, if they ſuffer our departure death's the word.

Ant. I muſt be gone.

Eno. Vnder a compelling an occaſion, let women dye. It were pitty to caſt them away for nothing, though betweene them and a great cauſe, they ſhould be eſteemed nothing. Cleopatra catching but the leaſt noyſe of this, dyes inſtantly : I have ſeene her, dye twenty times upon farre poorer moment: I do think there is mettle in death, which commits ſome loving acte upon her, ſhe hath ſuch a celerity in dying,

Ant. She is cunning paſt mans thought.

Eno. Alacke ſir no, her paſſions are made of nothing but the fineſt part of pure love. We cannot call her winds and waters, ſighes and teares : They are greater ſtormes and Tempeſts then Almanackes can report. This cannot be cunning in her; if it be, ſhe makes a ſhowre of Raine as well as Iove.

Ant. Would I had never ſeene her.

Eno. Oh ſir, you had then left unſeene a wonderfull peece of worke, which not to have beene bleſt withall, would have diſcredited your Travaile.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir,

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why ſir, give the gods a thankefull Sacrifice : when it pleaſeth their Deities to take the wife of a man from him, it ſhewes to man the Tailors of the earth: comforting therein, that when old Robes are worne out, there are members to make now. If there were no more Women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the caſe to be lamented : This griefe is crown'd with Conſolation, your old Smocke brings fourth a new Petticoate, and indeed the teares live in an Onion, that ſhould water this ſorrow.

Ant. The buſineſſe ſhe hath broached in the State,
Cannot endure my abſence.

Eno. And the buſineſſe you have broach'd heere cannot be without you, eſpecially that of Cleopatras, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more like Anſwers:
Let our Officers
Have notice what we purpoſe. I ſhall breake
The cauſe of our Expedience to the Queene,
And get her love to part. For not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more vrgent touches
Doe ſtrongly ſpeake to us : but the Letters too
Of many our contriving friends in Rome,
Petition us at home. Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cæſar, and commands
The Empire of the Sea. Our ſlippery people,
Whoſe Love is never link'd to the deſerver,
Till his deſerts are paſt, begin to throw
Pompey the great, and all his Dignities
Vpon his Sonne, who high in Name and Power,
Higher then both in blood and life, ſtands up
For the maine Souldier. Whoſe quality going on,
The ſides oth'world may danger. Much is breeding,
Which like the Courſers heire, hath yet but life,
And not a Serpents poyſon. Say our pleaſure,
To ſuch whoſe places under us, require
Our quicke remove from hence.

Eno. I ſhall doot. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Alexas, and Iras.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not ſee him ſince.

Cleo. See where he is,
Whoſe with him, what he does:
I did not ſend you. If you finde him ſad,
Say I am dauncing: if in Myrth, report
That I am ſodaine ſicke. Quickly, and returne.

Char. Madam, me thinkes if you did love him deerely
You doe not hold the method, to enforce
The like from him.

Cleo. What ſhould I doe I doe not?

Ch. In each thing give him way, croſſe him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teacheſt like a foole : the way to loſe him.

Char. Tempt him not ſo too farre. I wiſh forbeare,
In time we hate that which we often feare.

Enter Anthony.

But heere comes Anthony.

Cleo. I am ſicke, and ſullen.

Ant. I am ſorry to give breathing to my purpoſe.

Cleo. Helpe me away deere Charmian, I ſhall fall;
It cannot be thus long, the ſides of Nature
Will not ſuſtaine it.

Ant. Now my deereſt Queene.

Cleo. Pray you ſtand farther from me,

Ant. Whats the matter?

Cleo. I know by that ſame eye theres ſome g[illegible]d newes
What ſayes the married woman you may goe [illegible]
Would ſhe had never given you leave to come,
Let her not ſay tis I that keepe you heere,
I have no power upon you : Hers you are.

Ant. The gods beſt know.

Cleo. Oh never was there Queene
So mightily betrayed : yet at the firſt
I ſaw the Treaſons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Why ſhould I thinke you can be mine, and true
(Though you ſwearing ſhake the Throaned gods)
Who have beene falſe to Fulvia?
Riotous madneſſe,
To be entangled with thoſe mouth-made vowes,
Which breake themſelves in ſwearing.

Ant. Moſt ſweet Queene.

Cleo. Nay pray you ſeeke no colour for your going,
But bid farewell, and goe:
When you ſued ſtaying,
Then was the time for words: No going then,
Eternity was in our Lippes, and Eyes.
Bliſſe in our browes bent: none our parts ſo poore,
But was a race of heaven. They are ſo ſtill,
Or thou the greateſt Souldier of the world,
Art turn'd the greater Lyar.

Ant. How now Lady?

Cleo. I would I had thy inches, thou ſhould'ſt know
There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Heare me Queene:
The ſtrong neceſſity of Time, commands
Our Services a while: but my full heart
Remaines in uſe with you. Our Italy,
Shines o're with civill Swords; Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approches to the Port of Rome,
Equality of two Domeſticke powers,
Breed ſcrupulous faction: The hated grow ne to ſtrength
Are newly growne to Love; The condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his Fathers honour, creepes apace
Into the hearts of ſuch, as have not thrived
Vpon the preſent ſtate, whoſe numbers threaten,
And quietneſſe growne ſicke of reſt, would purge
By any deſperate change: My more particular,
And that which moſt with you ſhould ſafe my going,
Is Fulvias death.

Cle. Though age from folly could not give me freedom
It does from childiſhneſſe. Can Fulvia dye?

Ant. Shee's dead my Queene,
Looke here, and at thy Soveraigne leyſure reade
The Garboyles ſhe awak'd: at the laſt, beſt,
See when, and where ſhe dyed.

Cleo. O moſt falſe love!
Where be the ſacred Viols thou ſhoul'dſt fill
With ſorrowfull water? Now I ſee, I ſee,
In Fulvias death, how mine receiv'd ſhall be.

Ant. Quarrell no more, but be prepar'd to know
The purpoſes I beare: which are, or ceaſe,
As you ſhall give th'advice. By the fire
That quickens Nylus ſlime, I goe from hence
Thy Souldier, Servant, making Peace or Warre,
As thou affectſt.

Cleo. Cut my Lace, Charmian come,
But let it be, I am quickly ill, and well,
So Anthony loves.

Ant. My precious Queene forbeare,
And give true evidence to his Love, which ſtands
An honourable Triall.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I prythee turne aſide, and weepe for her,
Then bid adiew to me, and ſay the teares
Belong to Egypt. Good now, play one Scene
Of excellent diſſembling, and let it looke
Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'l heat my blood no more?

Cleo. You can doe better yet; but this is meetly.

Ant. Now by my Sword.

Cleo. And Target. Still he mends.
But this is not the beſt. Looke prythee Charmian,
How this Herculean Roman does become
The carriag[illegible]f his chafe.

Ant. Ile leave you Lady.

Cleo. Courteous Lord, one word:
Sir, you and I muſt part, but that's not it:
Sir, you and I have lov'd, but there's not it:
That you know well, ſomething it is I would:
Oh, my oblivion is a very Anthony.
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your Royalty
Holds Idleneſſe your ſubject, I ſhould take you
For Idleneſſe it ſelfe.

Cleo. 'Tis ſweating labour,
To beare ſuch Idleneſſe ſo neare the heart
As Cleopatra this. But Sir, forgive me,
Since my becommings kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you. Your Honor calls you hence.
Therefore be deafe to my unpittied Folly,
And all the Gods go with you. Vpon your Sword
Sit Law rell'd victory, and ſmooth ſucceſſe
Be ſtrew'd before your feete.

Ant. Let us go.
Come: Our ſeparation ſo abides and flies,
That thou reſiding heere, goeſt yet with me,
And I hence fleeting, heere remaine with thee.
Away. Exeunt.

Enter Octavius reading a Letter, Lepidus,
and their Traine.

Caſ. You may ſee Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It is not Caſars Naturall vice, to hate
One great Competitor. From Alexandria
This is the newes: he fiſhes, drinkes, and waſtes
The Lampes of night in revells: Is not more manlike
Then Cleopatra: nor the Queene of Ptolomy
More Womanly then he. Hardly gave audience
Or did vouchſafe to thinke he had Partners. You
Shall finde there a man, who is th'abſtract of all faults;
That all men follow.

Lep. I muſt not thinke
There are, evils enow to darken all his goodneſſe,
His faults in him, ſeeme as the Spots of heaven,
More fiery by nights Blackneſſe; Hereditary.
Rather then purchaſte: what he cannot change,
Then what he chooſes.

Caſ. You are too indulgent. Lets graunt it is
Amiſſe to tumble on the bed of Ptolomy,
To give a Kingdome for a Mirth, to ſit
And keepe the turne of Tipling with a Slave,
To reele the ſtreets at noone, and ſtand the Buffet
With knaves that ſmell of ſweate: Say this becomes him
(As his compoſure muſt be rare indeed, Whom theſe things cannot blemiſh) yet muſt Anthony
No way excuſe his foyles, when we doe beare
So great waight in his Lightneſſe. If he filld
His vacancy with his Voluptuouſneſſe,
Full ſurfets, and the drineſſe of his bones,
Call on him for't. But to confound ſuch time,
That drummes him from his ſport, and ſpeakes as lowd
As his owne State, and ours, tis to be chid:
As we rate Boyes, who being mature in knowledge,
Pawne their experience to their preſent pleaſure,
And ſo rebell to judgement.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Lep. Heeres more newes.

Meſ. Thy biddings have beene done, and every houre
Moſt Noble Caſar, ſhalt thou have report
How tis abroad. Pompey is ſtrong at Sea,
And it appeares, he is belov'd of thoſe
That only have feard Caſar: to the Ports
The diſcontents repaire, and mens reports
Give him much wrong'd.

Caſ. I ſhould have knowne no leſſe,
It hath bin taught us from the primall ſtate,
That he which is, was wiſht, untill he were:
And the ebb'd man,
Ne're lov'd, till ne're worth love,
Comes fear'd, by being lack'd. This common body
Like to a Vagobond Flagge upon the Streame,
Goes too, and backe, lacking the varrying tyde

To rot it ſelfe with motion.
Meſ. Cæſar I bring thee word,
Menacrates and Menas famous Pyrates
Makes the Sea ſerve them, which they eare and wound
With keeles of every kind. Many hot inrodes
They make in Italy, the borders Maritime
Lacke blood to thinke on't, and fleſh youth revolt,
No Veſſell can peepe forth, but tis as ſoone
Taken as ſeene: for Pompeyes name ſtrikes more
Then could his Warre reſiſted.
Cæſar. Anthony,
Leave thy laſcivious Vaſſailes. When thou once
Wert beaten from Medena, where thou ſlewſt
Hirſius, and Panſa Conſuls, at thy heele
Did famine follow, whom thou foughtſt againſt,
(Though daintily brought up) with patience more
Then Savages could ſuffer. Thou didſt drinke
The ſtale of horſes, and the gilded Puddle
Which Beaſts would cough at. Thy pallat then did daine
The rougheſt Berry, on the rudeſt Hedge.
Yea, like the Stagge, when Snow the Paſture ſheets,
The barkes of Trees thou browſedſt. On the Alpes,
It is reported thou didſt eate ſtrange fleſh,
Which ſome did dye to looke on: And all this
(It wounds thine honor that I ſpeake it now)
Was borne ſo like a Souldiour, that thy cheeke
So much as lank'd not.
Lep. Tis pitty of him.
Cæſ. Let his ſhames quickely
Drive him to Rome, tis time we twaine
Did ſhew our ſelves ith' Field, and to that end
Aſſemble we immediate counſell, Pompey
Thrives in our Idleneſſe.
Lep. To morrow Cæſar,
I ſhall be furniſht to informe you rightly
Both what by Sea and Land I can be able
To front this preſent time. (well.
Cæſ. Till which encounter, it is my buſineſſe too. Fare-
Lep. Farewell my Lord, what you ſhall know meane
Of ſtirres abroad, I ſhall beſeech you Sir (time
To let me be partaker.
Cæſ. Doubt not ſir, I knew it for my bond. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmain, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. Charmian.
Char. Madam.
Cleo. Ha, ha, give me to drinke Mandragoras.
Char. Why Madam?
Cleo. That I might ſleepe out this great gap of time:
My Anthony is away.
Char. You thinke of him too much.
Cleo. O tis Treaſon.
Char. Madam, I truſt not ſo.
Cleo. Thou, Eunuch Mardian?
Mar. Whats your highneſſe pleaſure?
Cleo. Not now to heare thee ſing. I take no pleaſure
In ought an Eunuch has: Tis well for thee,
That being unſeminaried, thy freer thoughts
May not flye forth of Egypt, Haſt thou Affections?
Mar. Yes gracious Madam.
Cleo. Indeed?
Mar. Not indeed Madam, for I can doe nothing
But what indeed is honeſt to be done:
Yet have I fierce Affections, and thinke
What Venus did with Mars.
Cleo. Oh Charmian;
Where thinkſt thou he is now? Stands he, or ſits he?
Or does he walke? Or is he on his Horſe?
Oh happy horſe to beare the weight of Anthony!
Doe bravely horſe, for wot'ſt thou whom thou moov'ſt,
The demy Atlas of this Earth, the Arme
And Burgonet of man. Hes ſpeaking now,
Or murmuring, wheres my Serpent of old Nyle,
(For ſo he calls me:) Now I feed my ſelfe
With moſt delicious poyſon. Thinke on me
That am with Phebus amorous pinches blacke,
And wrinkled deepe in time. Broad-fronted Cæſar,
When thou waſt heere above the ground, I was
A morſell for a Monarke; and great Pompey
Would ſtand and make his eyes grow in my brow,
There would he anchor his Aſpect, and dye
With looking on his life.

Enter Alexas from Cæſar.

Alex. Soveraigne of Egypt, haile.
Cleo. How much unlike art thou Marke Anthony?
Yet comming from him, that great Med'cine hath
With his Tinct gilded thee.
How goes it with my brave Marke Anthony?
Alex. Laſt thing he did (deere Queene)
He kiſt the laſt of many doubled kiſſes,
This Orient Pearle. His ſpeech ſtickes in my heart.
Cleo. Mine eare muſt plucke it thence.
Alex. Good friend, quoth he:
Say the firme Roman to great Egypt ſends
This treaſure of an Oyſter: at whoſe foote
To mend the petty preſent, I will peece
Her opulent Throne, with Kingdomes. All the Eaſt,
(Say thou) ſhall call her Miſtris. So he nodded,
And ſoberly did mount an Arme-gaunt Steed,
Who neigh'd ſo hye, that what I would have ſpoke,
Was beaſtly dumbe by him.
Cleo. What was he ſad, or merry?
Ale. Like to the time oth' yeare, betweene the extremes
Of hot and cold, he was nor ſad nor merry.
Cleo. Oh well divided diſpoſition: Note him:
Note him good Charmian, tis the man; but note him.
He was not ſad, for he would ſhine on thoſe
That make their lookes by his. He was not merry,
Which ſeem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay
In Egypt with his joy, but betweene both.
Oh heavenly mingle! Bee'ſt thou ſad, or merry,
The violence of either thee becomes,.
So do's it no man elſe. Metſt thou my Poſts?
Alex. I Madam, twenty ſeverall Meſſengers.
Why doe you ſend ſo thicke?
Cleo, Who's borne that day, when I forget to ſend to Anthony, ſhall dye a Begger. Inke and paper Charmian. Welcome my good Alexas. Did I Charmian, ever love Cæſar ſo?
Char. Oh that brave Cæſar.
Cleo. Be choak'd with ſuch another Emphaſis,
Say the brave Anthony.
Char. The valiant Cæſar.
Cleo. By Iſis, I will give thee bloody teeth,
If thou with Cæſar Paragon againe
My man of men.
Char. By your moſt gracious pardon,
I ſing but after you.
Cleo. My Sallad dayes,
When I was greene in judgement, cold in blood,
To ſay, as I ſaid then. But come, away,
Get me Inke and Paper,

he ſhall have every day ſeverall greeting, or Ile unpeople Ægypt. Exeunt.

Enter Pompey, Menecrates, and Menas in warlike manner.

Pom. If the great gods be juſt, they ſhall aſſiſt
The deeds of juſteſt men.
Mene. Know worthy Pompey, that which they do delay, they not deny.
Pom. Whiles we are ſutors to their Throne; decayes the thing we ſue for.
Mene. We ignorant of our ſelves.
Begge often our owne harmes, which the wiſe Powers
Deny us for our good: ſo finde we profit
By looſing of our Prayers.
Pom. I ſhall do well:
The People love me, and the Sea is mine;
My powers are Creſſent, and my Auguring hope
Sayes it will come to'th' full. Marke Anthony
In Ægypt ſits at dinner, and will make
No warres without doores. Cæſar gets money where
He looſes hearts: Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd: but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him.
Mene. Cæſar and Lepidus are in the field,
A mighty ſtrength they carry.
Pom. Where have you this? Tis falſe.
Mene. From Silvius Sir.
Pom. He dreames: I know they are in Rome together
Looking for Antony: but all the charmes of Love,
Salt Cleopatra ſoften thy wand lip,
Let witchcraft joyne with beauty, Luſt with both,
Tye up the Libertine in a field of Feaſts,
Keepe his Braine fuming. Epicurean Cookes,
Sharpen with cloyleſſe ſawce his Appetite,
That ſleepe and feeding may prorogue his Honour,
Even till a Lethied dulneſſe———

Enter Varrius.

How now Varrius?
Var. This is moſt certaine, that I ſhall deliver:
Marke Anthony is every houre in Rome
Expected. Since he went from Ægypt, 'tis
A ſpace for farther travaile,
Pom. I could have given leſſe matter
A better eare. Menas, I did not thinke
This amorous Surfetter would have donn'd his Helme
For ſuch a petty Warre: His Souldierſhip
Is twice the other twaine: But let us reare
The higher our Opinion, that our ſtirring
Can from the lap of Ægypts Widdow, plucke
The neere Luſt-wearied Anthony.
Mene. I cannot hope,
Cæſar and Anthony ſhall well greet together;
His Wife that's dead, did treſpaſſes to Cæſar,
His Brother warr'd upon him, although I thinke
Not mov'd by Anthony.
Pom. I know not Menas,
How leſſer Enmities may give way to greater,
Were't not that we ſtand up againſt them all:
'Twer pregnant they ſhould ſquare betweene themſelves,
For they have entertained cauſe enough
To draw their ſwords: but how the feare of us
May Ciment their diviſions, and binde up
The petty difference, we yet not know:
Bee't as our Gods will have't; it onely ſtands
Our lives upon, to uſe our ſtrongeſt hands,
Come Menas. Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus.

Lep. Good Enobarbus, 'tis a worthy deed,
And ſhall become you well, to intreat your Captaine
To ſoft and gentle ſpeech.
Enob. I ſhall intreat him
To anſwere like himſelfe: if Cæſar move him,
Let Anthony looke over Cæſars head,
And ſpeake as lowd as Mars. By Iupiter,
Were I the wearer of Anthonio's Beard,
I would not ſhave't to day.
Lep. Tis not a time for private ſtomacking.
Eno. Every time ſerves for the matter that is then borne in't.
Lep. But ſmall to greater matters muſt give way.
Enop. Not if the ſmall come firſt.
Lep. Your ſpeech is paſſion: but pray you ſtirre
No Embers up. Heere comes the Noble Anthony.

Enter Anthony and Ventidius.

Eno. And yonder Cæſar.

Enter Cæſar, Mecenas, and Agrippa.

Ant. If we compoſe well heere, to Parthia:
Hearke Ventidius.
Cæſar. I do not know Mecenas, aske Agrippa.
Lep. Noble Friends
That which combin'd us was moſt great, and let not
A leaner action rend us. What's amiſſe,
May it be gently heard. When we debate
Our triviall difference lowd, we do commit
Murther in healing wounds. Then Noble Partners,
The rather for I earneſtly beſeech,
Touch you the ſowreſt points with ſweeteſt tearmes,
Nor curſtneſſe grow to'th' matter.
Ant. Tis ſpoken well:
Were we before our Armes and to fight,
I ſhould do thus. Flouriſh.
Cæſ. Welcome to Rome.
Ant. Thanke you.
Cæſ. Sit.
Ant. Sit ſir.
Cæſ. Nay then.
Ant. I learne you take things ill, which are not ſo:
Or being, concerne yon not.
Cæſ. I muſt be laught at, if or for nothing, or a little,
Should ſay my ſelfe offended, and with you
Chiefely i'th' world. More laught at, that I ſhould
Once name you derogately: when to ſound your name
It not concern'd me.
Ant. My being in Egypt Cæſar, what was't to you?
Cæſ. No more then my reſiding heere at Rome
Might be to you in Ægypt: yet if you there
Did practiſe on my ſtate, your being in Ægypt
Might be my queſtion.
Ant. How intend you, practis'd?
Cæſ. You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent,
By what did heere befall me. Your Wife and Brother
Made warres upon me, and their conteſtation
Was Theame for you, you were the word of warre.
Ant. You do miſtake your buſineſſe, my brother never Did urge me in his Act: I did inquire it,
And have my learning from ſome true reports
That drew their ſwords with you, did he not rather
Diſcredit my authority with yours,
And make the warres alike againſt my ſtomacke,
Having alike your cauſe: Of this, my Letters
Before did ſatisfie you. If you patch a quarrell,
As matter whole you have to take it with,

It muſt not be with this.

Cæſ. You praiſe your ſelfe, by laying defects of judgement to me: but you patcht up your excuſes.

Anth. Not ſo, not ſo:
I know you could not lacke, I am certaine on't,
Very neceſſity of this thought, that I
Your partner in the cauſe 'gainſt which he fought,
Could not with gracefull eyes attend thoſe Warres
Which fronted mine owne peace. As for my wife,
I would you had her Spirit, in ſuch another,
The third oth' world is yours, which with a Snaffle,
You may pace eaſie, but not ſuch a wife.

Enobar. Would we had all ſuch wives, that the men might go to Warres with the women.

Anth. So much uncurbable, her Garboiles (Cæſar)
Made out of her impatience: which not wanted
Shrodeneſſe of policie to: I greeving grant,
Did you too much diſquiet, for that you muſt,
But ſay I could not helpe it.

Cæſar. I wrote to you, when rioting in Alexandria you
Did pocket up my Letters: and with taunts
Did gibe my Miſſive out of audience.

Ant. Sir, he fell upon me, ere admitted, then:
Three Kings I had newly feaſted, and did want
Of what I was i'th' morning: but next day
I told him of my ſelfe, which was as much
As to have askt him pardon. Let this Fellow
Be nothing of our ſtrife: if we contend
Out of our queſtion wipe him.

Cæſar. You have broken the Article of your oath, which you ſhall never have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft Cæſar.

Ant. No Lepidus, let him ſpeake,
The Honour is Sacred which he talkes on now,
Suppoſing that I lackt it: but on Cæſar,
The Article of my oath.

Cæſar. To lend me Armes, and aide when I requir'd them, the which you both denied.

Anth. Neglected rather.
And then when poyſoned houres had bound me up
From mine owne knowledge, as neerly as I may,
Ile play the penitent to you. But mine honeſty,
Shall not make poore my greatneſſe, nor my power
Worke without it. Truth is, that Fulvia,
To have me out of Egypt, made Warres heere,
For which my ſelfe, the ignorant motive, doe
So farre aske pardon, as befits mine Honour
To ſtoope in ſuch a caſe.

Lep. Tis Nobly ſpoken.

Mece. If it might pleaſe you, to enforce no further
The griefes betweene ye: to forget them quite,
Were to remember, that the preſent neede,
Speakes to attone you.

Lep. Worthy ſpoken Mecenas.

Enobar. Or if you borrow one anothers Love for the inſtant, you may when you heare no more words of Pompey returne it againe: you ſhall have time to wrangle in, when you have nothing elſe to doe.

Anth. Thou art a Souldier, onely ſpeake no more.

Enob. That trueth ſhould be ſilent, I had almoſt forgot.

Anth. You wrong this preſence, therefore ſpeake no more.

Enob. Go to then: your Conſiderate ſtone.

Cæſar. I doe not much diſlike the matter but
The manner of his ſpeech: for't cannot be,
We ſhall remaine in friendſhip, our conditions
So differing in their acts. Yet if I knew,
What Hoope ſhould hold us ſtaunch from edge to edge
Ath' world: I would purſue it.

Agri. Give me leave Cæſar.

Cæſ. Speake Agrippa.

Agri. Thou haſt a Siſter by thy Mothers ſide, admir'd Octavia? Great Marke Anthony is now a widdower.

Cæſ. Say not, ſay Agrippa; if Cleopatra heard you, your proofe were well deſerved of raſhneſſe.

Anth. I am not marryed Cæſar: let me heere Agrippa further ſpeake.

Agri. To hold you in perpetuall amitie,
To make you Brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an un-ſlipping knot, take Anthony,
Octavia to his wife: whoſe beauty claimes
No worſe a husband then the beſt of men;
Whoſe vertue, and whoſe generall graces, ſpeake
That which none elſe can utter. By this marriage,
All little Ielouſies which now ſeeme great,
And all great feares, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing. Truth's would be tales,
Where now halfe tales be truth's: her love to both,
Would each to other, and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have ſpoke,
For 'tis a ſtudied, not a preſent thought,
By duty ruminated.

Anth. Will Cæſar ſpeake?

Cæſar. Not till he heares how Anthony is toucht,
With what is ſpoke already.

Anth. What power is in Agrippa,
If I would ſay Agrippa, be it ſo,
To make this good?

Cæſar. The power of Cæſar,
And his power, unto Octavia.

Anth. Mao I never
(To this good purpoſe, that ſo fairely ſhewes)
Dreame of impediment: let me have thy hand
Further this act of Grace: and from this houre,
The heart of Brothers governe in our Loves,
And ſway our great Deſignes.

Cæſ. There's my hand:
A Siſter I bequeath you, whome no Brother
Did ever love ſo deerely. Let her live
To joyne our kingdomes, and our hearts, and never Flie off our Loves againe.

Lepi. Happily, Amen.

Ant. I did not thinke to draw my Sword againſt Pompey
For he hath laid ſtrange courteſies, and great
Of late upon me. I muſt thanke him onely,
Leſt my remembrance, ſuffer ill report:
At heele of that, defie him.

Lepi. Time cals upon's,
Of us muſt Pompey preſently be ſought,
Or elſe he ſeekes out us.

Anth. Where lies he?

Cæſ. About the Mount-Meſena.

Anth. What is his ſtrength by land?

Cæſ. Great, and encreaſing:
But by Sea he is an abſolute Maſter.

Anth. So is the Fame,
Would we had ſpoke together. Haſt we for it,
Yet ere we put our ſelves in Armes, diſpatch we
The buſineſſe we have talkt of.

Cæſ. With moſt gladneſſe,
And do invite you to my Siſters view,

Whither ſtraight Ile lead you.

Anth. Let us Lepidus not lacke your company.

Lep. Nobld Anthony, not ſickeneſſe ſhould detaine me.

Exeunt omnes.

Manent Enobarbus, Agrippa, Mecenas.

Mec. Welcome from Ægypt Sir.

Eno. Halfe the heart of Cæſar, worthy Mecenas. My honourable Friend Agrippa.

Agri. Good Enobarbus.

Mece. We have cauſe to be glad, that matters are ſo well digeſted: you ſtayd well by't in Egypt.

Enob. I Sir, we did ſleepe day out of countenaunce: and made the night light with drinking.

Mece. Eight Wilde-Boars roſted whole at a breakfaſt: and but twelve perſons there. Is this true?

Evor. This was but as a Flye by an Eagle: we had much more monſtrous matter of Feaſt, which worthily deſerved noting.

Mecenas. She's a moſt triumphant Lady, if report be ſquare to her.

Enab., When ſhe firſt met Marke Anthony, ſhe purſt up his heart upon the river of Cydnus.

Agri. There ſhe appear'd indeed: or my reporter deviſ'd well for her:

Eno. I will tell you,
The Barge ſhe ſat in, like a burniſht Throne
Burnt on the water: the Poope was beaten Gold,
Purple the Sailes: and ſo perfumed that
The Windes were Love-ſicke.
With them the Oares were Silver,
Which to the tune of Flutes kept ſtroke and made
The water which they beate, to follow faſter:
As amorous of their ſtrokes. For her owne perſon,
It beggerd all deſcription, ſhe did lye
In her Pavillion, cloth of Gold, of Tiſſue,
O're-picturing that Venus, where we ſee
The fancie out-worke Nature. On each ſide her,
Stood pretty Dimpled Boyes, like ſmiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd Fannes whoſe winde did ſeeme,
To glove the delicate cheekes which they did coole,
And what they undid did.

Agrip. Oh rare for Anthony.

Eno. Her Gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many Mer-maides tended her i'th' eyes,
And made their bends adornings. At the Helme.
A ſeeming Mer-maide ſteeres: The Silken Tackles
Swell with the touches of thoſe Flower-ſoft hands,
That yarely frame the office. From the Barge
A ſtrange inviſible perfume hits the ſenſe
Of the adiacent Wharfes. The Cittie caſt
Her people out upon her: and Anthony
Enthron'd i'th' Market-place, did ſit alone,
Whiſling to 'th' ayre: which but for vacancie,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in Nature.

Agrip. Rare Egyptian.

Eno. Vpon her landing, Anthony ſent to her,
Invited her to Supper: ſhe replyed,
It ſhould be better, he became her gueſt:
Which ſhe entreated, our Courteous Anthony,
Whom nere the word of no woman heard ſpeake,
Being barber'd ten times o're, goes to the Feaſt;
And for his ordinary, paies his heart,
For what his eyes eate onely.

Agri. Royall Wench:
She made great Cæſar lay his Sword to bed,
He ploughed her, and ſhe cropt.

Eno. I ſaw her once
Hop forty Paces through the publicke ſtreete,
And having loſt her breath, ſhe ſpoke, and panted,
That ſhe did make defect, perfection,
And breathleſſe power breath forth.

Mece. Now Anthony, muſt leave her utterly.

Eno. Never he will not:
Age cannot wither her, nor cuſtome ſteale
Her infinite variety: other women cloy
The appeties they feede, but ſhe makes hungry,
Where moſt ſhe ſatisfies. For vildeſt things
Become themſelves in her, that the holy Prieſts
Bleſſe her, when ſhe is Riggiſh.

Mece. If Beauty, Wiſedome, Modeſty, can ſettle
The heart of Anthony: Octavia is
A bleſſed Lottery to him.

Agrip. Let us go. Good Enobarbus, make your ſelfe my gueſt, whilſt you abide heere.

Eno. Humbly Sir I thanke you. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, Cæſar, Octavia betweene them.

Anth. The world, and my great office, will
Somtimes divide me from your boſome.

Octa. All which time, before the Gods my knee ſhall bowe my prayers to them for you.

Anth. Goodnight Sir. My Octavia
Read not my blemiſhes in the worlds report:
I have not kept my ſquare, but that to come
Shall all be done by th' Rule: good night deere Lady:

Octa. Good night Sir.

Cæſar. Goodnight. Exit.

Enter Southſayer.

Anth. Now ſirrah: you do wiſh your ſelfe in Egypt?

Sooth. Would I had never come from thence, nor you thither.

Aut. If you can, your reaſon?

Sooth. I ſee it in my motion: have it not in my tongue,
But yet hie you to Egypt againe.

Antho. Say to me, whoſe Fortunes ſhall riſe higher,
Cæſars or mine?

Soot. Cæſars, Therefore (oh Anthony) ſtay not by his ſide
Thy Dæmon (that's thy ſpirit which keepes thee) is Noble, Couragious, high unmatchable,
Whare Cæſars is not. But neere him thy Angell
Becomes a feare: as being o're-powr'd, and therefore
Make ſpace enough betweene you.

Anth. Speake this no more.

Sooth. To none but thee no more, but when to thee,
If thou doſt play with him at any game,
Thou art ſure to looſe: And of that Naturall lucke.
He beates thee 'gainſt the oddes. Thy Luſter thickens,
When he ſhines by: I ſay againe, thy ſpirit
Is all affraid to governe thee neere him:
But he alway is Noble.

Anth. Get thee gone:
Say to Ventidius I would ſpeake with him. Exit.
He ſhall to Parthia, be it art or hap,
He hath ſpoken true. The very Dice obey him,
And in our ſports my better cunning faints,
Vnder his chance, if we draw lots, he ſpeeds,
His Cocks do winne the Battaile, ſtill of mine,
When it is all to naught: and his Quailes ever
Beate mine (in hoopt) at odd's. I will to Egypt:

And though I make this marriage for my peace,
I'th' Eaſt my pleaſure lies. Oh come Ventidius.

Enter Ventidius.

You muſt to Parthia, your commiſſions ready:
Follow me and receive't. Exeunt.

Enter Lepidus, Mecenas and Agrippa.

Lepidus. Trouble your ſelfe no farther: pray you haſten your generals after.

Agr. Sir, Marke Anthony will e'ne but kiſſe Octavia, and weele follow.

Lepi. Till I ſhall ſee you in your Souldiers dreſſe,
Which will become you both: Farewell,

Mece. We ſhall, as I conceive the journey, be at the Mount before you Lepidus.

Lepi. Your way is ſhorter, my purpoſes do draw me much about, you'le win two dayes upon me.

Both. Sir, good ſucceſſe.

Lepi. Farewell. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me ſome Muſicke: Muſicke, moody foode of us that trade in love.

Omnes. The Muſicke, hoa.

Enter Mardian the Eunuch.

Clo. Let it alone, let's to Billiards: come Charmian.

Char. My arme is ſore, beſt play with Mardian.

Cleopa. As well a woman with an Eunuch plaide, as with a woman. Come you'le play with me Sir?

Mardi. As well as I can Madam.

Cleo. And when good will is ſhewed,
Though't come too ſhort
The Actor may pleade pardon. Ile none now,
Give me mine Angle, weele to'th' River, there
My Muſicke playing farre off. I will betray
Tawny fine fiſhes, my bended hooke ſhall pierce
Their ſlimie jawes: and as I draw them up,
Ile thinke them every one an Anthony,
And ſay, ah ha; y'are caught.

Char. Twas merry when you wager'd on your Angling, when your diver did hang a ſalt fiſh on his hooke which he with fervencie drew up,

Cleo. That time? Oh times:
I laught him out of patience: and that night
I laught him into patience, and next morne,
Ere the ninth houre, I drunke him to his bed:
Then put my Tires and Mantels on him, whilſt
I wore his Sword Philippan. Oh from Italie,

Enter a Meſſenger.

Ramme thou thy fruitfull tidings in mine eares,
That long time have bin barren.

Meſ. Madam, Madam.

Cleo. Anthony's dead,
If thou ſay ſo Villaine, thou kil'ſt thy Miſtris:
But well and free, if thou ſo yeild him.
There is Gold and heere
My bleweſt vaines to kiſſe: a hand that Kings
Have lipt, and trembled kiſſing.

Meſ. Firſt Madam, he is well.

Cleo. Why there's more Gold.
But ſirrah marke, we uſe
To ſay, the dead are well: bring me to that,
The Gold I give thee, will I melt and powre
Downe thy ill uttering throate.

Meſ. Good Madam heare me.

Cleo. Well, go to I will:
But there's no goodneſſe in thy face, if Anthony
Be free and healthfull; ſo tart a favour
To trumpet ſuch good tidings. If not well,
Thou ſhouldſt come like a Furie crown'd with Snakes,
Not like a formall man.

Meſ. Wilt pleaſe you heare me?

Cleo. I have a mind to ſtrike thee ere thou ſpeake'ſt,
Yet if thou ſay Anthony lives, 'tis well,
Or friends with Cæſar, or not Captaine to him,
Ile ſet thee in a ſhower of Gold, and haile
Rich Pearles upon the.

Meſ. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well ſayd.

Meſ. And Friends with Cæſar.

Cleo. Th'art an honeſt man.

Meſ. Cæſar, and he, are greater Friends then ever.

Cleo. Marke thee a Forune from me.

Meſ. But yet Madam.

Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does alay
The good precedence, fie upon but yet,
But yet is as a Iaylor to bring foorth
Some monſtrous Malefactor. Prythee Friend,
Powre out the packe of matter to mine eare,
The good and bad together: he's friends with Cæſar,
In ſtate of health thou ſaiſt, and thou ſaieſt, free.

Meſ. Free Madam! no: I made no ſuch report,
He's bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turne?

Meſ. For the beſt turne i'th' bed.

Cleo. I am pale Charmian.

Meſ. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The moſt infectious Peſtilence upon thee.

Strikes him downe.

Meſ. Good Madam patience.

Cleo. What ſay you? Strikes him.
Hence horrible Villaine, or Ile ſpurne thine eyes
Like balls before me: Ile unhaire thy head:

She hales him up and downe.

Thou ſhalt be whipt with Wyer, and ſtew'd in brine,
Smarting in lingring pickle.

Meſ. Gratious Madam,
I that do bring the newes, made not the match.

Cleo. Say 'tis not ſo, a Province I will give thee,
And make thy Fortunes proud: the blow thou had'ſt
Shall make thy peace, for moving me to rage,
And I will boot thee with what guift beſide
Thy modeſty can begge.

Meſ. He's married Madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou haſt liv'd too long. Draw a knife.

Meſ. Nay then Ile runne:
What meane you Madam, I have made no fault. Exit.

Char. Good Madam keepe your ſelfe within your ſelfe,
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some Innoceuts ſcape not the thunderbolt:
Melt Egypt into Nyle; and kindled creatures
Turne all to Serpents. Call the ſlave againe,
Though I am mad, I will not byte him: Call?

Char. He is afeard to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him,
Theſe hands do lacke Nobility, that they ſtrike
A meaner then my ſelfe: ſince I my ſelfe
Have given my ſelfe the cauſe. Come hither Sir.

Enter the Meſſenger againe.

Though it be honeſt, it is never good
To bring bad newes: give to a gratious Meſſage

An hoſt of tongues, but let it tydings tell
Tſtemrelves when they be felt.
Meſ. I have done my duty.
Cleo. Is he married ?
I cannot hate thee worſer then I do,
If thou againe ſay yes.
Meſ. He's married Madam.
Cleo. The gods confound thee,
Doſt thou hold there ſtill ?
Meſ. Should I lye Madam ?
Cleo. Oh, I would thou didſt :
So halfe my Egypt were ſubmerg'd and made
A Ceſterne for ſcal'd Snakes. Go get thee hence,
Had'ſt thou Narciſſus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldſt appeare moſt ugly: He is married?
Meſ. I crave your highneſſe pardon.
Cleo. He is married ?
Meſ. Take no offence, that I would not offend you;
To puniſh me for what you make me doe,
Seemes much unequall: he's married to Octavia.
Cleo. Oh that his fault ſhould make a knave of thee,
That art not what thou art ſure of. Get thee hence,
The Merchandize which thou haſt brought from Rome
Are all to deere for me :
Lye they upon thy hand, and be undone by em.
Char. Good your highneſſe patience.
Cleo. In praying Anthony, I have diſprais'd Cæſar.
Char. Many times Madam.
Cleo. I am paid for't now : lead me from hence,
I faint, oh Iras, Charmian : tis no matter.
Go to the fellow, good Alexas bid him
Report the feature of Octavia : her yeares,
Her inclination, let him not leave out
The colour of her haire. Bring me word quickly.
Let him for ever goe, let him not Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
The other wayes a Mars. Bid you Alexas
Bring me word, how tall ſhe is : pitty me Charmian,
But do not ſpeake to me. Lead me to my Chamber.
Exeunt.

Enter Pompey, at one doore with Drum and Trumpet : at another Cæſar, Lepidus. Anthony, Enobarbus, Mecenas, Agrippa, Menas with Souldiers Marching.

Pom. Your Hoſtages I have, ſo have you mine :
And we ſhall talke before we fight.
Cæſar. Moſt meete that firſt we come to words,
And therefore have we
Our written purpoſes before us ſent,
Which if thou haſt conſidered, let us know,
If't will tye up thy diſcontented Sword
And carry backe to Sicily much tall youth,
That elſe much periſh heere.
Pom. To you all three,
The Senators alone of this great world,
Chiefe Factors for the Gods. I do not know,
Wherefore my Father ſhould revengers want,
Having a Sonne and Friends, ſince Iulius Cæſar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghoſted,
There ſaw you labouring for him. What was't
That mov'd pale Caſſius to conſpire? And what
Mad the all-honor'd, honeſt Romane Brutus,
With the arm'd reſt, Courtiers of beautious freedome,
To drench the Capitoll, but that they would
Have one man but a man, and that is it
Hath made me rigge my Navie. At whoſe burthen,
The anger'd Ocean fomes, with which I meant
To ſcourge th'ingratitude, that deſpightfull Rome
Caſt on my Noble Father.
Cæſar. Take your time.
Ant. Thou cauſt not feare us Pompey with thy ſailes,
Weele ſpeake with thee at Sea. At land thou know'ſt
How much we do o're-count thee.
Pom. At Land indeed
Thou doſt orecount me of my fathers houſe:
But ſince the Cookoo buildes not for himſelfe,
Remaine in't as thou maiſt,
Lepi. Be pleas'd to tell us;
(For this is from the preſent now you talke)
The offers we have ſent you,
Cæſar. There's the point.
Ant. Which do not be entreated to,
But waigh what it is worth embrac'd.
Cæſar. And what may follow to try a larger Fortune.
Pom. You have made me offer
Of Sicily, Sardiniar: and I muſt
Rid all the Sea of Pirats. Then, to ſend
Meaſures of Wheate to Rome : this greed upon,
To part with unhackt edges, and beare backe
Our Targes undinted.
Omnes. That's our offer.
Pom. Know then I came before you heere,
A man prepar'd
To take this offer. But Marke Anthony,
Put me to ſome impatience : though I looſe
The praiſe of it by telling. You muſt know
When Cæſar and your Brother were at blowes,
Your Mother came to Sicily, and did finde
Her welcome friendly.
Ant. I have heard it Pompey,
And am well ſtudied for a liberall thankes,
Which I do owe you.
Pom. Let me have your hand :
I did not thinke Sir, to have met you heere,
Ant. The beds i'th' Eaſt are ſoft, and thankes to you,
That call'd me timelier then my purpoſe hither:
For I have gained by't.
Cæſar. Since I ſaw you laſt, ther's a change upon you.
Pom. Well, I know not,
What counts harſh Fortune caſt's upon my face,
But in my boſome ſhall ſhe never come,
To make my heart a vaſſaile.
Lep. Well met heere.
Pom. I hope ſo Lepidus, thus we are agreed :
I crave our compoſition may be written
And ſeal'd betweene us,
Cæſar. That's the next to doe.
Pom. Weele feaſt each other, ere we part, and lett's
Draw lots who ſhall begin.
Anth. That will I Pompey.
Pompey. No Anthony take the lot : but firſt or laſt, your fine Egyptian cookerie ſhall have the fame, I have heard that Iulius Cæſar, grew fat with feaſting there.
Anth. You have heard much.
Pom. I have faire meaning Sir.
Ant. And faire words to them.
Pom. Then ſo much have I heard.
And I have heard Apollodorus carried——
Eno. No more that : he did ſo.
Pom. What I pray you ?
Eno. A certaine Queene to Cæſar in a Materice.
Pom. I know thee now, how far'ſt thou Souldier?
Eno. Well, and well am like to doe, for I perceive

Foure Feaſts are toward.

Pom. Let me ſhake thy hand,
I never hated thee: I have ſeene thee fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour.

Enob. Sir, I never lov'd you much, but I ha' prais'd ye,
When you have well deſerv'd ten times as much,
As I have ſaid you did.

Pom. Injoy thy plainneſſe,
It nothing ill becomes thee:
Aboord my Gally, I invite you all.
Will you leade Lords?

All. Shew's the way, ſir.

Pom. Come. Exeunt. Manent Enob & Menas

Men. Thy Father Pompey would ne're have made this Treaty. You, and I have knowne ſir.

Enob. At Sea, I thinke.

Men. We have Sir.

Enob. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by Land.

Enob. I will praiſe any man that will praiſe me, thogh it cannot be denied what I have done by Land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Euob. Yes ſome-thing you can deny for your owne ſafety: you have bin a good Theefe by Sea.

Men. And you by Land.

Enob. There I deny my Land ſervice: but give me your hand Menas, if our eyes had authority, here they might take two Theeves kiſſing

Men. All mens faces are true, whatſoere their hands are.

Enob. But there is never a faire Woman, ha's a true Face

Men. No ſlander, they ſteale hearts.

Enob. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am ſorry it is turn'd to a Drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his Fortune.

Enob. If he doe, ſure he cannot weep't backe againe.

Men. Y'have ſaid Sir, we look'd not for Marke Anthony heere, pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Enob. Caſars Siſter is call'd Octavia.

Men. True Sir, ſhe was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Enob. But ſhe is now the wife of Marcus Anthonius

Men. Pray y'e Sir.

Enob. Tis true.

Men. Then is Cæſar and he, for ever knit together

Enob. If I were bound to Divine of this unity, I wold not Propheſie ſo.

Men. I thinke the policy of that purpoſe, made more in the Marriage then the Love of the parties.

Enob. I thinke ſo too. But you ſhall finde the band that ſeemes to tye their friendſhip together, will bee the very ſtranger of their Amity: Octauia is of a holy, cold, and ſtill converſation.

Men. Who would not have his wife ſo?

Eno. Not hee that hmſelfe is not ſo: which is Marke Anthony: he will to his Egyptian diſh againe: then ſhall the ſighes of Octavia blow the fire up in Cæſar, and (as I ſaid before) that which is the ſtrength of their Amity, ſhall prove the immediate Author of their variance. Anthony will uſe his affection where it is. Hee married but his occaſion heere.

Men. And thus it may be. Come Sir, will you aboord? I have a health for you.

Enob. I ſhall take it ſir: we have us'd our Throats in Egypt.

Men. Come, let's away. Exeunt.

Muſicke playes.

Enter two or three Servants with a Banket.

1 Heere they'l be man: ſome o' their Plants are ill rooted already, the leaſt wind i'th' world will blow them downe.

2 Lepidus is high colourd.

1 They have made him drinke Almes drinke.

2 As they pinch one another by the diſpoſition he cries out no more; reconciles them to his entreatie, and himſelfe to'th' drinke.

1 But it raiſes the greater warre betweene him and his diſcretion.

2 Why this it is to have a name in great mens Fellowſhip: I had as live have a Reede that will doe me no ſervice, as a Partizan I could not heave.

1 To be call'd into a huge Sphere, and not to bee ſeene to move in't, are the holes where eyes ſhould bee, which pittiſly diſaſter the cheekes.

A Sennet ſounded.

Enter Cæſar, Anthony, Pompey, Lepidus, Agrippa, Mecenas Enobarbus, Menas, with other Captaines.

Ant. Thus do they Sir: they take the flow o'th' Nyle
By certaine ſcale, i'th' Pyramid: they know
By'th' height, the lowneſſe, or the meane: If dearth
Or Foizon follow. The higher Nilus ſwels,
The more it promiſes as it ebbes, the Seedſman
Vpon the ſlime and Ooze ſcatters his graine,
And ſhortly comes to Harveſt.

Lep. Y'have ſtrange Serpents there;

Anth. I Lepidus.

Lep. Your Serpent of Egypt, is bred now of your mud by the operation of the Sun: ſo is your Crocodile.

Ant. They are ſo.

Pom. Sir, and ſome Wine: A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not ſo well as I ſhould be:
But Ile ne're out.

Enob. Not till you have ſlept: I feare me you'l bee in till then.

Lep. Nay certainly, I have heard the Ptolomies Pyramiſis are very goodly things: without contradiction have heard that.

Menas. Pompey, a word.

Pomp. Say in mine eare, what is't.

Mens Forſake thy ſeate I do beſeech thee Captaine,
And heare me ſpeake a word.

Pom. Forbeare me till anon. Whiſpers in's Eare.
This Wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o'thing is your Crocodile?

Ant. It is ſhap'd ſir like it ſelfe, and it is as broad as it hath bredth; It is juſt ſo high as it is, and mooves with it owne organs. It lives by that which nouriſheth it, and the Elements once out of it, it Tranſmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of it owne colour too.

Lep. Tis a ſtrange Serpent.

Ant. Tis ſo, and the teares of it are wet.

Cæſ. Will this deſcription ſatisfie him?

Ant. With the Health that Pompey gives him, elſe hee is a very Epicure.

Pomp. Go hang ſir, hang: tell me of that? Away:
Do as I bid you. Where's the Cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the ſake of Merit thou wilt heare me, Riſe from thy ſtoole.

Pom. I thinke th'art mad: the matter?

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy Fortunes.

Pom. Thou haſt ſerv'd me with much faith: what's elſe to ſay? Be jolly Lords.

Anth. Theſe Quicke-ſands Lepidus,
Keepe off them, for you ſinke.

Men. Wilt thou be Lord of all the world?

Pom. What ſaiſt thou?

Men. Wilt thou be Lord of the whole world?
That's twice.

Pom. How ſhould that be?

Men. But entertaine it, and though thou thinke mee poore, I am the man will give thee all the world.

Pom. Haſt thou drunke well.

Men. No Pompey, I have kept me from the cup,
Thou art if thou dar'ſt be, the earthly Iove:
What ere the Ocean pales, or skie inclippes,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha't.

Pom. Shew me which way?

Men. Theſe three world-ſharers, theſe Competitors
Are in thy veſſell. Let me cut the Cable,
And when we are put off, fall to their throates:
All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou ſhouldſt have done,
And not have ſpoke on't. In me tis villanie,
In thee, 't had bin good ſervice: thou muſt know,
Tis not my profit that does lead mine Honour:
Mine Honour is, Repent that ere thy tongue,
Hath ſo betraide thine act. Being done unknowne,
I ſhould have found it afterwards well done·
But muſt condemne it now: deſiſt, and drinke.

Men. For this Ile never follow
Thy paul'd Fortunes more,
Who ſeekes and will not take, when once tis offerd,
Shall never finde it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus.

Ant. Beare him a ſhore,
Ile pledge it for him Pompey,

Eno. Heere's to thee Menas.

Men. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Eno. There's a ſtrang Fellow Menas.

Men. Why?

Eno. A beares the third part of the world man: ſeeſt not?

Men. The third part, then he is drunk: would it were all, that it might go on wheeles.

Eno. Drinke thou: encreaſe the Reeles.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian Feaſt.

Ant. It ripens towards it: ſtrike the Veſſelles hoa.
Heere's to Cæſar.

Cæſar. I could well forbear't, its monſtrous labour when I waſh my braine, and it growes fouler.

Ant. Be a Child o'th' time.

Cæſar. Poſſeſſe it, Ile make anſwer: but I had rather faſt from all, foure dayes, then drinke ſo much in one.

Enob. Ha my brave Emperor, ſhall we daunce now the Egyptian Bachanals, and celebrate our drinke?

Pom. Lets ha't good Souldier.

Ant. Come, let's all take hands,
Till that the conquering Wine hath ſteept our ſenſe,
In ſoft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands:
Make battery to our eares with the loud Muſicke,
The while, Ile place you, then the Boy ſhall ſing.
The holding every man ſhall beate as loud.
As his ſtrong ſides can volly.

Muſicke Playes. Enobarbus places them hand in hand.

The Song.

Come thou Monarch of the Vine,
Plumpie Bacchus with pinke eyne:
In thy Fattes our Cares be drown'd.
With thy Grapes our haires be Crown'd.
Cup us till the world go round,
Cup us till the world go round.

Cæſ. What would you more?
Pompey goodnight. Good Brother
Let me requeſt you of our graver buſineſſe
Frownes at this levitie. Gentle Lords let's part,
You ſee we have burnt our cheeke. Strong Enobarbe
Is weaker then the Wine, and mine owne tongue
Spleets what it ſpeakes: the wilde diſguiſe hath almoſt
Antickt us all. What needs more words? goodnight.
Good Anthony your hand.

Pom. Ile try you on the ſhore.

Anth. And ſhall Sir, gives your hand.

Pom. Oh Anthony, you have my Fathers houſe.
But what, we are Friends?
Come downe into the Boate.

Eno. Take heed you fall not Menas; Ile not on ſhore,
No to my Cabin: theſe Drummes,
Theſe Trumpets, Flutes: what
Let Neptune heare, we bid aloud farewell
To theſe great Fellowes. Sound and be hang'd, ſound out.

Sound a Floriſh with Drummes.

Enob. Hoo ſaies a there's my Cap.

Men. Hoa, Noble Captaine, come. Exeunt.

Enter Ventidius as it were in a triumph, the dead body of Pacorus borne before him.

Ven. Now darting Parthia art thou ſtroke and now
Pleas'd Fortune does of Marcus Craſſus death
Make me revenger. Beare the Kings Sonnes body,
Before our Army, thy Pacorus Orades,
Payes this for Marcus Craſſus.

Romane. Noble Ventidius,
Whilſt yet with Parthian blood thy Sword is warme,
The Fugitive Parthians follow. Spurne through Media,
Meſapotamia, and the ſhelters, whither
The routed flie. So thy grand Captaine Anthony
Shall ſet thee on triumphant Chariots, and Put Garlands on thy head.

Ven. Oh Sillius, Sillius,
I have done enough. A lower palce, note well
May make too great an act. For learne this Sillius,
Better to leave undone, then by our deed
Acquire too high a Fame, when him we ſerue'ſaway.
Cæſar and Anthony, have ever wonne
More in their officer, then perſon. Soſſius
One of my place in Syria, his Lieutenant,
For quicke accumulation of renowne,
Which he atchiv'd by th' minute, loſt his favour.
Who does i'th' Warres more then his Captaine can,
Becomes his Captaines Captaine: and Ambition
(The Souldiers vertue) rather makes choiſe of loſſe
Then gaine, which darkens him.
I could doe more to doe Anthonius good,
But 'twould offend him. And in his offence,

Should my performance periſh.
Rom. Thou haſt Ventidius that, without the which a Souldier and his Sword grants ſcarce diſtinction: thou wilt write to Anthony.
Ven. Ile humbly ſignifie what in his name,
That magicall word of Warre wee have effected,
How with his Banners, and his well paid rankes,
The nere-yet beaten Horſe of Parthia,
We have jaded out o'th' Field.
Rom. Where is he now?
Ven. He purpoſeth to Athens, whither with what haſt
The waight we muſt convay with's, will permit:
We ſhall appeare before him. On there, paſſe along.
Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa at one doore, Enobarbus at another.
Agri. What are the Brothers parted?
Eno. They have diſpatcht with Pompey, he is gone,
The other three are Sealing. Octavia weepes
To part from Rome: Cæſar is ſad, and Lepidus
Since Pompey's feaſt, as Menas ſayes, is troubled
With the Greene-Sickneſſe.
Agri. Tis a Noble Lepidus.
Eno. A very fine one: oh, how he loves Cæſar.
Agri. Nay but how deerely he adores Mark Anthony.
Eno. Cæſar? why he's the Iupiter of men.
Ant. What's Anthony, the God of Iupiter?
Eno. Spake you of Cæſar? Oh! the non-pareill?
Agri. Oh Anthony, oh thou Arabian Bird!
Eno. Would you praiſe Cæſar, ſay Cæſar, go no further
Agr. Indeed he plied them both with excellent praiſes.
Eno. But he loves Cæſar beſt, yet he loves Anthony:
Hoo, Hearts, Tongues, Figure,
Scribes, Bards, Poets, cannot
Thinke, ſpeake, caſt, write, ſing, number: hoo.
His love to Anthony. But as for Cæſar,
Kneele downe, kneele downe, and wonder.
Agrip. Both he loves.
Eno. They are his Shards, and he their Beetle, ſo:
This is to horſe: Adieu, Noble Agrippa.
Agri. Good Fortune worthy Souldier, and farewell.

Enter Cæſar, Anthony, Lepidus, and Octavi.
Antho, No farther Sir.
Cæſar. You take from me a great part of my ſelfe:
Vſe me well in't. Siſter, prove ſuch a wife
As my thoughts make thee, and as my fartheſt Band
Shall paſſe on thy approofe: moſt Noble Anthony,
Let not the peece of Vertue which is ſet
Betwixt us, as the Cyment of our love
To keepe it builded, be the Ramme to batter
The Fortune of it: for better might we
Have lov'd without this meane, if on both parts
This be not cheriſht.
Ant. Make me not offended, in your diſtruſt.
Cæſar. I have ſaid.
Ant. You ſhall not finde,
Though you be therein curious, the leaſt cauſe
For what you ſeeme to feare, ſo the gods keepe you,
And make the hearts of Romanes ſerve your ends:
We will heere part.
Cæſar. Farewell my deereſt Siſter, fare thee well,
The Elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy ſpirits all of comfort: fare thee well.
Octa. My Noble Brother.
Anth. The Aprill's in her eyes, it is Loves ſpring,
And theſe the ſhowers to bring it on: be cheerfull.
Octa. Sir, looke well to my Husbands houſe: and —
Cæſar. What Octavia.
Octa. Ile tell you in your eare.
Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can
Her heart informe her tongue.
The Swannes downe feather
That ſtands upon the Swell at full of Tide:
And neither way inclines.
Eno. Will Cæſar weepe?
Agr. He ha's a cloud in's face.
Eno. He were the worſe for that were he a Horſe, ſo is he being a man.
Agri, Why Enobarbus:
When Anthony found Iulius Cæſar dead,
He cryed almoſt to roaring: And he wept,
When at Philippi he found Brutus ſlaine.
Eno. That year indeed, he was troubled with a rheume,
What willingly he did confound, he wail'd,
Beleev't till I weepe too.
Cæſar. No ſweet Octavia,
You ſhall heare from me ſtill: the time ſhall not
Out-go my thinking on you.
Ant. Come Sir, come,
Ile wraſtle with you in my ſtrength of love:
Looke heere I have you: thus I let you go,
And give you to the gods.
Cæſ. Adieu, be happy.
Lep. Let all the number of the Starres give light
To thy faire way.
Cæſar. Farewell, farewell. Kiſſes Octavia.
Ant: Farewell. Trumpets ſound. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.
Cleo. Where is the Fellow?
Alex. Halfe afeard to come.
Cleo. Go to, go to: Come hither Sir.
Enter the Meſſenger as before.
Alex. Good Majeſtie, Herod of Iury dare not looke upon you, but when you are well pleas'd.
Cleo. That Herods head, Ile have: but how? When Anthony is gone, through whom I might command it;
Come thou neere.
Meſ. Moſt gracious Majeſty.
Cleo. Did'ſt thou behold Octavia?
Meſ. I, dread Queene.
Cleo. Where?
Meſ. Madam in Rome, I lookt her in the face: and ſaw her led betweene her Brother, and Marke Anthony.
Cleo. Is ſhe as tall as me?
Meſ. She is not Madam.
Cleo. Didſt heare her ſpeake?
Is ſhe ſhrill tongu'd or low?
Meſ. Madam, I heard her ſpeake, ſhe is low voic'd.
Cleo. That's not ſo good: he cannot like her long.
Char. Like her? Oh Iſis: tis impoſſible.
Cleo. I thinke ſo Charmian: dull of tongue, & dwarfiſh
What Majeſty is in her gate, remember
If ere thou look'ſt on Majeſtie.
Meſ. She creepes: her motion, & her ſtation are as one:
She ſhewes a body, rather then a life,
A Statue, then a Breather.
Cleo. Is this certaine?
Meſ. Or I have no obſervance.
Cha. Three in Egypt cannot make better note,
Cleo. He's very knowing, I do perceiv't,
There's nothing in her yet.

The Fellow ha's good judgement.
Char. Excellent.
Cleo. Gueſſe at her yeares, I prythee.
Meſ. Madam, ſhe was a widdow.
Cleo. Widdow? Charmian, hearke.
Meſ. And I do thinke ſhe's thirtie.
Cle. Bear'ſt thou her face in mind? is't long or round?
Meſ. Round, even to faultineſſe.
Cle. For the moſt part too, they are fooliſh that are ſo. Her haire what colour?
Meſ. Browne Madam: and her forehead
As low as ſhe would wiſh it,
Cleo. There's Gold for thee,
Thou muſt not take my former ſharpeneſſe ill,
I will employ thee backe againe: I finde thee
Moſt fit for buſineſſe. Go, make thee ready,
Our Letters are prepar'd.
Char. A proper man.
Cleo. Indeed he is ſo: I repent me much
That ſo I harried him. Why me think's by him,
This Creature's no ſuch thing.
Char. Nothing Madam.
Cle. The man hath ſeene ſome Majeſty, and ſhould know.
Char. Hath he ſeene Majeſtie? Iſis elſe defend: and ſerving you ſo long.
Cleo I have one thing more to aske him yet good Charmian: but tis no matter, thou ſhalt bring him to me where I will write; all may be well enough.
Char. I warrant you Madam. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay Octauia, not onely that,
That were excuſable, that and thouſands more
Of ſemblable import, but he hath wag'd
New Warres 'gainſt Pompey, Made his will, and read it,
To publike eare, ſpoke ſcantly of me,
When perforce he could not
But pay me tearmes of Honour: cold and ſickly
He vented then moſt narrow meaſure: lent me,
When the beſt hint was given him: he had look't,
Or did it from his teeth.
Octavi. Oh my good Lord,
Beleeve not all, or if you muſt beleeve,
Stomacke not all. A more unhappy Lady,
If this diviſion chance, ne're ſtood betweene
Praying for both parts:
The good Gods will mocke me preſently,
When I ſhall pray: oh bleſſe my Lord and husband,
Vndo that prayer: by crying out as loud,
Oh bleſſe my Brother. Husband winne, winne Brother,
Prayes, and diſtroyes the prayer, no midway
Twixt theſe extreames at all.
Ant. Gentle Octavia,
Let your beſt love draw to that point which ſeekes
Beſt to preſerve it: if I looſe mine Honour,
I looſe my ſelfe: better I were not yours
Then yours ſo branchleſſe. But as you requeſted,
Your ſelfe ſhall go between's, the meane time Lady,
Ile raiſe the preparation of a Warre
Shall ſtaine your Brother, make your ſooneſt haſt
So your deſires are yours.
Octa. Thankes to my Lord,
The Iove of Power make me moſt weake, moſt weake,
Your reconciler: Warres twixt you twaine would be,
As if the world ſhould cleave, and that ſlaine men
Should ſoader up the Rift.
Anth. When it appeares to you where this begins,
Turne your diſpleaſure that way, for our faults
Can never be ſo equall, that your love
Can equally moove with them. Provide your going,
Chooſe your owne companie, and command what coſt
Your heart has mind to. Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus, and Eros.

Eno. How now friend Eros?
Eros. There's ſtrange Newes come Sir.
Eno. What man?
Ero. Cæſar & Lepidus have made Warre upon Pompey.
Eno. This is old, what is the ſucceſſe?
Eros. Cæſar having made uſe of him in the warres 'gainſt Pompey: preſently denied him rivalitie, would not let him partake in the glory of action, and not reſting here, accuſes him of Letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey. Vpon his owne appeale ſeizes him, ſo the poore third is up, till death enlarge his Confine.
Eno. Then would thou hadſt a paire of Chaps no more, and throw betweene them all the food thou haſt, they'le grinde the other. Where's Anthony?
Eros. He's walking in the garden thus, and ſpurnes
The ruſh that lies before him. Cries Foole Lepidus,
And threats the throate of that his Officer,
That murdred Pompey.
Eno, Our great Navies rig'd.
Eros. For Italy and Cæſar, more Domitius,
My Lord deſires you preſently: my Newes
I might have told heareafter.
Eno. Twill be naught, but let it be: bring me to Anthony.
Eros, Come Sir. Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa, Mecenas, and Cæſar

Caſ. Contemning Rome he ha's done all this, & more
In Alexandria: heeres the manner of it:
Ith Market-place on a Tribunall ſilverd
Cleopatra and himſelfe in Chaires of Gold
Were publikely enthrond: at the feet ſat
Cæſarion whom they call my father Sonne,
And all the unlawfull iſſue, that their luſt
Since then hath made betweene them. Vnto her,
He gave the ſtabliſhment of Egypt, made her
Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia, abſolute Queene.
Mece This is the publike eye?
Cæſar. Ith common ſhew place where they exerciſe,
His Sonnes hither proclaimed the King of Kings,
Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia
He gave to Alexander. To Ptolomy he aſſign'd,
Syria, Silicia, and Phœnicia: ſhe
In th'abiliments of the Goddeſſe Iſis
That day appeard, and oft before gave audience,
As tis reported, ſo.
Mece. Let Rome be thus inform'd.
Agri. Who queazie with his inſolence already,
Will their good thoughts call from him.
Cæſar. The people knowes it,
And have now receivd his accuſations.
Agri. Whom does he accuſe?
Cæſar. Cæſar, and that having in Sicily
Sextus Pompeius ſpoild, we had not rated him
His part o'th Iſle. Then does he ſay, he lent me
Some ſhipping unreſtord. Laſtly he frets
That Lepidus of the Triumvirate, ſhould be depos'd,
And being that, we detaine all his Revenue.
Agri. Sir, this ſhould be anſwerd.
Cæſar. Tis done already, and his Meſſenger gone:
I have told him Lepidus was growne too cruell,

That his high Authority abus'd,
And did deſerve his chance for what I have conquer'd,
I grant him part: but then in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd Kingdomes, I demand the like
Mec. Hee'l never yeeld to that.
Cæſ. Nor muſt not then be yeelded to in this.

Enter Octavia with her Traine.

Octa. Haile Cæſar, and my L. haile moſt deere Cæſar.
Cæſar. That ever I ſhould call thee Caſt-away.
Octa. You have not call'd me ſo, nor have you cauſe.
Cæſ. Why haſt thou ſtolne upon me thus? you came not Like Cæſars Siſter, The wife of Anthony)
Should have an Army for an Vſher, and
The neighes of horſe to tell of her approach,
Long ere ſhe did appeare; The trees by'th' way
Should have borne men, and expectation fainted
Longing for what it had not. Nay, the duſt
Should have aſcended to the Roofe of Heaven,
Rais'd by your populous Troopes: But you are come
A Market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The oſtentation of our love; which left unſhewne,
Is often left unlov'd: we ſhould have met you
By Sea, and Land, ſupplying every Stage
With an augmented greeting.
Octa. Good my Lord,
To come thus was I not conſtrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My Lord Marke Anthony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for Warre, acquainted
My greeving eare withall: whereon I begg'd
His pardon for returne.
Cæſ. Which ſoone he granted,
Being an abſtract 'tweene his Luſt, and him,
Octa. Do not ſay ſo, my Lord.
Cæſ. I have eyes upon him.
And his affaires come to me on the wind: where is he now?
Octa. My Lord, in Athens.
Cæſ. No my moſt wronged Siſter, Cleopatra
Hath nodded him to her. He hath given his Empire
Vp to a Whore, who now are levying
The Kings o'th' earth for Warre. He hath aſſembled,
Bochus the King of Lybia, Archilaus
Of Cappadocia, Philadelphos King
Of Paphlagonia: the Thracian King Adullas,
King Manchus of Arabia, King of Pont,
Herod of Iewry, Mitridates King
Of Comageat, Polemen and Amintas.
The King of Mede, and Lycaonia,
With a more larger Liſt of Scepters.
Octa. Aye me moſt wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two Friends,
That doe afflict each other. (breaking forth
Cæſ. Welcom hither, your letters did with-holde our Till we perceiv'd both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger: cheere your heart.
Be you not troubled with the time which drives
O're your content, theſe ſtrong neceſſities,
But let determin'd things to deſtinie
Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome:
Nothing more deere to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the marke of thought: and the high Gods
To doe you Iuſtice, make his Miniſters
Of us, and thoſe that love you. Beſt of comfort,
And ever welcome to us. Agrip. Welcome Lady.
Mec. Welcome deere Madam,
Each heart in Rome does love and pitty you,
Onely th'adulterous Anthony, moſt large
In his abhominations, turnes you off,
And gives his potent Regiment to a Trull
That noyſes it againſt us.
Octa. Is it ſo ſir?
Cæſ. Moſt certaine: Siſter welcome; pray you
Be ever knowne to patience. My deer'ſt Siſter. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.

Cleo. I will be even with thee: doubt it not.
Eno. But why, why, why?
Cleo. Thou haſt foreſpoke my being in theſe warres,
And ſay'ſt it is not fit.
Eno. Well: is it, is it?
Cleo. If not, denounc'd againſt us, why ſhould not we be there in perſon.
Eno. Well, I could reply: if wee ſhould ſerve with Horſe and Mares together, the Horſe were meerely loſt: the Mares would beare a Soldiour and his Horſe.
Cleo. What is't you ſay?
Eno, Your preſent needs muſt puzle Anthony,
Take from his heart, take from his Braine, from's time,
What ſhould not then be ſpar'd. He is already
Traduc'd for Levity, and 'tis ſaid in Rome,
That Photinus an Eunuch, and your Maides
Mannage this warre.
Cleo. Sinke Rome, and their tongues rot
That ſpeake againſt us. A Charge we beare i'th' Warre,
And as the preſident of my Kingdome will
Appeare there for a man. Speake not againſt it,
I will not ſtay behinde.

Enter Anthony and Camidius.

Eno. Nay I have done, here comes the Emperor.
Ant. Is it not ſtrange Camidius,
That from Tarentum, and Brunduſium,
He could ſo quickely cut the Ionian Sea,
And take in Toryne. You have heard on't (Sweet?)
Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd
Then by the negligent.
Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becom'd the beſt of men
To taunt at ſlackneſſe. Camidius, we,
Will fight with him by Sea
Cleo. By Sea, what elſe?
Cam. Why will my Lord do ſo?
Ant. For that he dares us to't
Eno. So hath my Lord, dar'd him to ſingle fight,
Cam. I, and to wage this Battell at Pharſalia,
Where Cæſar fought with Pompey. But theſe offers
Which ſerve not for his vantage, he ſhakes off,
And ſo ſhould you.
Enob. Your Shippes are not well mann'd,
Your Marriners are Muliters, Reapers, people
Ingroſt by ſwift Impreſſe. In Cæſars Fleete,
Are thoſe, that often have 'gainſt Pompey fought,
Their ſhippes are yare, yours heavy: no diſgrace
Shall fall you for refuſing him at Sea,
Being prepar'd for Land.
Ant. By Sea, by Sea.
Eno. Moſt worthy Sir, you therein throw away
The abſolute Soldierſhip you have by Land
Diſtract your Armie, which doth moſt conſiſt
Of Warre-markt-footemen, leave unexecuted
Your owne renowned knowledge, quite forgoe
The way which promiſes aſſurance, and
Give up your ſelfe meerly to chance and hazard,
From firme Security.
Ant. Ile fight at Sea.

Cleo. I have ſixty Sailes, Cæſar none better.
Ant. Our over-plus of ſhipping will we burne,
And with the reſt full mann'd, from th' heart of Actium
Beate th' approaching Cæſar. But if we faile,
We then can doo't at Land. Enter a Meſſenger.
Thy buſineſſe?
Meſ. The newes is true, my Lord, he is diſcried,
Cæſar ha's taken Toryne.
Ant. Can he be there in perſon? 'Tis impoſſible
Strange, that his power ſhould be ſo, Camidius,
Our nineteenes Legions thou ſhalt hold by Land,
And our twelve thouſand Horſe. Wee'l to our Ship,
Away my Thetis.

Enter a Souldiour.

How now worthy Souldier?
Soul. Oh Noble Emperor, do not fight by Sea,
Truſt not to rotten plankes: Do you miſdoubt
This Sword, and theſe my Wounds; let th' Egyptians
And the Phœnicians go a ducking: we
Have us'd to conquer ſtanding on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.
Ant. Well, well, away. Exeunt Ant. Cleo. & Enob.
Soul. By Hercules I thinke I am i'th' light.
Cam. Souldier thou art: but the whole action growes
Not in the power on't: ſo our Leaders leade
And we are Womens men.
Soul. You keepe by Land the Legions and the Horſe whole, do you not?
Ven. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Iuſtius,
Publicola, and Celius, are for Sea:
But we keepe whole by Land. This ſpeede of Cæſars
Carries beyond beleefe.
Soul. While he was yet in Rome
His power went out in ſuch diſtractions,
As beguilde all Spies.
Cam. Who's his Lieutenat, heare you?
Soul. They ſay, one Towrus.
Cam. Well, I know the man.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. The Emperor cals Camidius.
Cam. With Newes the time's with Labour,
And throwes forth each minute, ſome. Exeunt.

Enter Cæſar with his Army, marching.

Caſ. Towrus?
Tow. My Lord.
Caſ. Strike not by Land.
Keepe whole, provoke not Battaile
Till we have done at Sea. Do not exceede
The Preſcript of this Scroule: Our fortune lyes
Vpon this iumpe. Exit.

Enter Anthony, and Enobarbus.

Ant. Set we our Squadrons on yond ſide o'th' Hill,
In eye of Cæſars battaile, from which place
We may the number of the Ships behold,
And ſo proceed accordingly. Exit.

Camidius Marching with his Land Army one way over the ſtage, and Towrus the Lieutenant of Cæſar other way:
After their going in, is heard the noiſe of a Sea fight.
Alarum. Enter Enobarbus and Scarus.

Eno. Naught, naught, all naught, I can behold no longer:
Thantoniad, tbe Ægyptian Admirall,
With all their ſixty flye, and turne the Rudder:
To ſee't, mine eyes are blaſted.

Enter Scarus.

Scar. Gods, & Goddeſſes, all the whole ſynod of them!
Eno. What's thy paſſion.
Scar. The greater Cantle of the world is loſt
With very ignorance. we have kiſt away
Kingdomes, and Provinces.
Eno. How appeares the fight?
Scar. On our ſide like the Token'd Peſtilence,
Where death is ſure. You ribaudred Nagge of Egypt,
(Whom Leproſie o're) i'th' midſt o'th' fight,
When vantage like a paire of Twinnes appear'd
Both of the ſame, or rather ours the elder;
(The Breeze upon her) like a Cow in Iune,
Hoiſts Sailes, and flyes.
Eno. That I beheld:
Mine eyes did ſicken at the ſight, and could not
Indure a further view.
Scar. She once being looſt,
The Noble ruine of her Magicke, Anthony,
Claps on his Sea-wing, and (like a doting Mallard)
Leaving the Fight in heighth, flyes after her:
I never ſaw an action of ſuch ſhame;
Experience, Man-hood, Honor ne're before,
Did violate ſo it ſelfe.
Enob. Alacke, alacke,

Enter Camidius.

Cam. Our Fortune on the Sea is out of breath,
And ſinkes moſt lamentably. Had our Generall
Bin what he knew himſelfe, it had gone well:
Oh hee ha's given example for our flight,
Moſt groſſely by his owne.
Enob. I, are you thereabouts? Why then goodnight indeede.
Cam. Toward Peloponneſus are they fled.
Scar. Tis eaſie toot,
And there I will attend what further comes.
Camid. To Cæſar will I render
My Legions and my horſe, ſixe Kings already
Shew me the way of yeelding.
Eno. Ile yet follow
The wounded chance of Anthony, though my reaſon
Sits in the winde againſt me.

Enter Anthony with Attendants.

Ant. Hearke, the Land bids me tread no more upon't,
It is aſham'd to beare me. Friends, come hither,
I am ſo lated in the world, that I
Have loſt my way for ever. I have a ſhippe,
Laden with Gold, take that, divide it: flye,
And make your peace with Cæſar.
Omnes. Fly? Not we.
Ant. I have fled my ſelfe, and have inſtructed cowards
To runne, and ſhew their ſhoulders. Friends be gone,
I have my ſelfe, reſolv'd upon a courſe,
Which has no neede of you. Be gone,
My Treaſure's in the Harbour. Take it: Oh,
I follow'd that I bluſh to looke upon,
My very haires do mutiny: for the white
Reprove the browne for raſhneſſe, and they them
For feare, and doting. Friends be gone, you ſhall
Have Letters from me to ſome Friends, that will Sweepe your way for you. Pray you looke not ſad.
Nor make replyes of loathneſſe, take the hint
Which my diſpaire proclaimes. Let them be left
Which leaves it ſelfe, to Sea-ſide ſtraight way;
I will poſſeſſe you of that ſhip aud Treaſure.

Leave me, I pray a little : pray you now,
Nay do ſo: for indeede I have loſt command,
Therefore I pray you, Ile ſee you by and by. Sits downe.

Enter Cleopatra led by Charmian and Eros.

Eros. Nay gentle Madam, to him, comfort him.
Iras. Do moſt deere Queene.
Char. Doe, why, what elſe ?
Cleo. Let me ſit downe : Oh Iuno.
Ant. No, no, no, no, no.
Eros. See you heere, Sir ?
Ant. Oh fie, fie, fie.
Char. Madam.
Iras. Madam, oh good Empreſſe.
Eros. Sir, ſir.
Ant. Yes my Lord, yes ; he at Philippi kept
His ſword e'ne like a dancer, while I ſtrooke
The leane and wrinkled Caſſius, and 'twas I
That the mad Brutus ended : he alone
Dealt on Lieutenantry, and no practiſe had
In the brave ſquares of Warre : yet now : no matter,
Cleo. Ah ſtand by.
Eros. The Queene my Lord, the Queene.
Iras. Go to him, Madam, ſpeake to him,
Hee is unqualited with very ſhame.
Cleo. Well then, ſuſtaine me : Oh.
Eros. Moſt Noble Sir ariſe, the Queene approaches,
Her head's declin'd, and death will ſeize her, but
Your comfort makes the reſcue.
Ant. I have offended Reputation ;
A moſt unnoble ſwerving.
Eros. Sir, the Queene.
Ant. Oh whither haſt thou led me Ægypt, ſee
How I convey my ſhame, out of thine eyes,
By looking backe what I have left behinde
Stroy'd in diſhonor.
Cleo. Oh my Lord, my Lord;
Forgive my fearfull ſayles, I little thought
You would have followed.
Ant. Ægypt, thou knew'ſt too well,
My heart was to thy Rudder tyed by 'th' ſtrings,
And thou ſhould'ſt ſtowe me after. O're my ſpirit
The full ſupremacie thou knew'ſt, and that
Thy becke, might from the bidding of the Gods
Command me.
Cleo. Oh my pardon.
Ant. Now I muſt
To the young man ſend humble Treaties, dodge
And palter in the ſhifts of lownes, who
With halfe the bulke o'th' world plaid as I pleas'd,
Making, and marring Fortunes. You did know
How much you were my Conqueror, and that
My ſword, made weake by my affection, would
Obey it on all cauſe.
Cleo. Pardon, pardon.
Ant. Fall not a teare I ſay, one of them rates
All that is wonne and loſt : Give me a kiſſe,
Even this repayes.
We ſent our Schoole-maſter, is a come backe ?
Love I am full of Lead : ſome Wine
Within there, and our Viands : Fortune knowes,
We ſcorne her moſt, when moſt ſhe offers blows. Exeunt

Enter Cæſar, Agrippa, and Dollabella, with others.

Cæſ. Let him appeare that's come from Anthony.
Know you him.
Dolla. Cæſar, tis his Schoolemaſter,
An argument that he is pluckt, when hither
He ſends ſo poore a Pinnion of his Wing,
Which had ſuperfluous Kings for Meſſengers,
Not many Moones gone by.

Enter Ambaſſador from Anthony.

Cæſar. Approach, and ſpeake,
Amb. Such as I am I come from Anthony :
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the Morne-dew on the Mertle leafe
To his grand Sea.
Cæſ. Bee't ſo, declare thine office.
Amb. Lord of his Fortunes he ſalutes thee, and Requires to live in Ægypt, which not granted
He Leſſens his requeſts, and to thee ſues
To let him breath betweene the Heavens and Earth
A private man in Athens : this for him.
Next, Cleopatra does confeſſe thy greatneſſe:
Submits her to thy might, and of thee craves
The Circle of the Ptolomies for her heyres,
Now hazarded to thy Gace.
Cæſ. For Anthony,
I have no eares to his requeſt. The Queene,
Of Audience, nor Deſire ſhall faile, ſo ſhe
From Ægypt drive her all-diſgraced Friend,
Or take his life there. This if ſhe performe,
She ſhall not ſue unheard. So to them both.
Amb. Fortune purſue thee.
Cæſ: Bring him through the Bands :
To try thy Eloquence, now 'tis time, diſpatch,
From Anthony winne Cleopatra, promiſe
And in our Name, when ſhe requires, adde more
From thine invention, offers. Women are not
In their beſt Fortunes ſtrong ; but want will periure
The ne're touch'd Veſtall. Try thy cunning Thidias,
Make thine owne Edict for thy paines, which we
Will anſwer as a Law.
Thid. Cæſar, I go.
Cæſ. Obſerve how Anthony becomes his flaw,
And what thou thinkeſt his very Action ſpeakes
In every power that mooves.
Thid. Cæſar, I ſhall. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, & Iras.

Cleo. What ſhall we do, Enobarbus ?
Eno. Thinke, and dye.
Cleo. Is Anthony, or we in fault for this ?
Eno. Anthony onely, that would make his will
Lord of his Reaſon. What though you fled,
From that great face of Warre, whoſe ſeverall ranges
Frighted each other ? Why ſhould he follow ?
The itch of his Affection ſhould not then
Have nickt his Captain-ſhip, at ſuch a point,
When halfe to halfe the world oppos'd, he being
The meered queſtion ? Tis a ſhame no leſſe
Then was his loſſe, to courſe your flying Flagges,
And leave his Navy gazing.
Cleo. Prythee peace.

Enter the Ambaſſador, with Anthony.

Ant. Is this his anſwer. Amb. I my Lord.
Ant. The Queene ſhall then have courteſie,
So ſhe will yeeld us up.
Am. He ſayes ſo.
Antho. Let her know't. To the Boy Cæſar ſend this grizled head, and he will fill thy wiſhes to the brimme,
With Principalities.
Cleo. That head my Lord ?

Ant. To him againe,tell him he weares the Roſe
Of youth upon him: from which,the world ſhould note
Something particular: His Coyne,Ships,Legions,
May be a Cowards,whoſe Miniſters would prevaile
Vnder the ſervice of a childe,as ſoone
As i'th'Command of Cæſar. I dare him therefore
To Lay his gay compariſons a-part
And anſwer me declin'd,ſword againſt ſword,
Our ſelves alone; Ile write it,Follow me.
Eno. Yes,like enough: hye-battell'd Cæſar will Vnſtate his happineſſe,and be Stag'd to th'ſhew
Againſt a Sworder. I ſee mens judgements are
A parcell of their Fortunes,and things outward
Doe draw the inward quality after them
To ſuffer all alike,that he ſhould dreame,
Knowing all meaſures,the full Cæſar will
Anſwer his emptineſſe; Cæſar thou haſt ſubdude
His judgement too.
Enter a Servant.
Ser. A Meſſenger from Cæſar.
Cleo. What no more Ceremony? See my Women,
Againſt the blowne Roſe may they ſtop their noſe,
That kneel'd unto the Buds. Admit him ſir.
Enob. Mine honeſty,and I,begin to ſquare,
The Loyalty well held to Fooles,does make
Our Faith meere Folly: yet he that can endure
To follow with Allegeance a falne Lord,
Does conquer him that did his Maſter conquer,
And earnes a place i'th'Story.
Enter Thidias.
Cleo. Cæſars will.
Thid. Heare it apart.
Cleo. None but friends: ſay boldly.
Thid. So haply are they friends to Anthony.
Enob. He needs as many (ſir) as Cæſar has.
Or needs not us. If Cæſar pleaſe,our Maſter
Will leape to be his friend: For as you know,
Whoſe he is,we are, and that is Cæſars.
Thid. So. Thus then thou moſt renown'd,Cæſar intreats
Not to conſider in what caſe thou ſtandſt
Further than he is Cæſar.
Cleo. Goe on,right Royall.
Thid. He knowes that you embrace not Anthony
As you did love,bnt as you feared him.
Cleo. Oh.
Thid. The ſcarres upon your honour therefore he Does pitty,as conſtrained blemiſhes,
Not as deſerved.
Cleo. He is a god,
And knowes what is moſt right. Mine honour
Was not yeelded,but conquer'd meerely.
Enob. To be ſure of that,I will aske Anthony.
Sir,ſir,thou art ſo leaky
That we muſt leave thee thy ſinking,for Thy deareſt quit thee. Exit.Enob.
Thid. Shall I ſay to Cæſar,
What you require of him: for he partly begges
To be deſir'd to give. It much would pleaſe him,
That of his fortunes you ſhould make a ſtaffe
To leane upon. But it would warme his ſpirits
To heare from me you had left Anthony,
And put your ſelfe under his ſhrowd, the vniverſall
Cleo. What's your name?
Thid. My name is Thidias.
Cleo. Moſt kinde Meſſenger, (Landlord.
Say to great Cæſar this in diſputation,
I kiſſe his conqu'ring hand: Tell him,I am prompt
To lay my Crowne at's feet,and there to kneele.
Tell him from his all-obeying breath,I heare
The doome of Egypt.
Thid. Tis your nobleſt courſe:
Wiſedome and Fortune combatting together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may ſhake it. Give me grace to lay
My duty on your hand.
Cleo. Your Cæſars Father oft,
(When he hath mus'd of taking kingdomes in)
Beſtow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kiſſes.
Enter Anthony and Enobarbus.
Ant. Favours? By Iove that thunders. What art thou (Fellow?
Thid. One that but performes
The bidding of the fulleſt man,and worthieſt
To have command obeyde.
Enob. You will be whipt.
Ant. Approch there:ah you Kite. Now gods & divels,
Authority melts from me of late. When I cride hoa,
Like Boyes unto a muſſe,Kings would ſtart forth,
And cry your will. Have you no eares?
I am Anthony yet. Take hence this Iacke and whip him.
Enter a Servant.
Enob. Tis better playing with a Lyons whelpe,
Than with an old one dying.
Ant. Moone and Starres,
Whip him: wert twenty of the greateſt Tributaries
That doe acknowledge *Cæſar,*ſhould I finde them
So ſawcy with the hand of ſhe here,whats her name
Since ſhe was Cleopatra? Whip him Fellowes,
Till like a Boy you ſee him crindge his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Take him hence.
Thid. Marke Anthony.
Ant. Tugge him away: being whipt,
Bring him againe,the Iacke of Cæſars ſhall
Beare us an arrant to him. Exeunt with Thidias.
You were halfe blaſted ere I knew you: Ha?
Have I my pillow left unpreſt in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawfull Race,
And by a Iem of Women,to be abuſde
By one that lookes on Feeders?
Cleo. Good my Lord.
An. You have beene a boggeler ever,
But when we in our viciouſneſſe grew hard
(Oh miſery ont) the wiſe gods ſeele our eyes
In our owne filth,drop our cleere judgements,make us
Adore our errours,laugh ats while we ſtrut
To our confuſion.
Cleo. Oh,iſt come to this?
Ant. I found you as a Morſell,cold upon
Dead Cæſars Trencher: Nay,you were a Fragment
Of *Cneius Pompeyes,*beſides what hotter houres
Vnregiſtred in vulgar Fame,you have
Luxuriouſly pickt out. For I am ſure,
Though you can gueſſe what Temperance ſhould be,
You know not what it is.
Cleo. Wherefore is this?
Ant. To let a Fellow that will take rewards,
And ſay,God quit you,be familiar with
My play-fellow,your hand; this Kingly Seale,
And plighter of high hearts. O that I were
Vpon the Hill of Baſan,to out-roare
The horned Heard,for I have Savage cauſe,
And to proclaime it civilly,were like

A halter'd necke, which does the Hangman thanke,
For being yare about him. Is he whipt?
Enter a Servant with Thidias.
Ser. Soundly my Lord.
Ant. Cryed he? and begg'd a Pardon?
Ser. He did aske favour.
Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent
Thou waſt not made his daughter, and be thou ſorry
To follow Cæſar in his triumph, ſince
Thou haſt been whipt. For following him, henceforth
The white hand of a Lady Feaver thee,
Shake to looke on't. Get thee backe to Cæſar,
Tell him thy entertainment: looke thou ſay
He makes me angry with him. For he ſeemes
Proud and diſdainfull, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. He makes me angry,
And at this time moſt eaſie tis to doot:
When my good ſtarres, that were my former guides
Have empty left their Orbes, and ſhot their Fires
Into the Abiſme of Hell. If he miſlike,
My ſpeech, and what is done, tell him he has Hiparchus, my enfranched Bondman, whom
He may at pleaſure whip, or hang, or torture,
As he ſhall like to quit me. Vrge it thou:
Hence with thy ſtripes, be gone. Exit Thid.
Cleo. Have you done yet?
Ant. Alacke our Terene Moone is now Eclipſt.
And it portends alone the fall of Anthony.
Cleo. I muſt ſtay his time?
Ant. To flatter Cæſar, would you mingle eyes
With one that tyes his poynts.
Cleo. Not know me yet?
Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?
Cleo. Ah (Deere) if I be ſo,
From my cold heart, let heaven ingender haile,
And poyſon it in the ſourſe, and the firſt ſtone
Drop in my necke: as it determines ſo
Diſſolve my life, the next Cæſarian ſmile,
Till by degrees the memory of my wombe,
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the diſcandering of this pelletted ſtorme,
Lye graveleſſe, till the Flies and Gnats of Nyle
Have buried them for prey.
Ant. I am ſatisfied:
Cæſar ſets downe in Alexandria, where
I will oppoſe his Fate. Our force by land,
Hath nobly held, and ſever'd Navy too
Have knit againe, and Fleet, threatning moſt Sea-like.
Where haſt thou beene my heart? Doſt thou heare Lady?
If from the field I ſhall returne once more
To kiſſe theſe lips, I will appeare in blood,
I, and my Sword, will earne my Chronicle,
Theres hope in't yet.
Cleo. Thats my brave Lord.
Ant. I will be trebble-ſinewed, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciouſly: for when mine houres
Were nice and lucky, men did ranſome lives
Of me for jeſts: but now, Ile ſet my teeth,
And ſend to darkneſſe all that ſtop me. Come,
Lets have one other gawdy night: Call to me
All my ſad Captaines, fill our Bowles once more:
Lets mocke the midnight Bell.
Cleo. It is my Birth-day,
I had thought t'have held it poore. But ſince my Lord
Is Anthony againe, I will be Cleopatra.
Ant. We will yet doe well.
Cleo. Call all his Noble Captaines to my Lord,
Ant. Doe ſo, wee'l ſpeake to them,
And to night Ile force
The Wine peepe through their ſkarres.
Come on (my Queene)
Theres ſap in't yet. The next time I doe fight
Ile make death love me: for I will contend
Even with his peſtilent Sythe. Exeunt.
Enob. Now he'l out-ſtare the Lightning, to be furious
Is to be frighted out of feare, and in that moode
The Dove will pecke the Eſtridge; and I ſee ſtill
A diminution in our Captaines braine,
Reſtores his heart; when valour prayes in reaſon,
It eates the Sword it fights with: I will ſeeke
Some way to leave him. Exeunt.

Enter Cæſar, Agrippa, and Mecenas with his Army,
Cæſar reading a Letter.

Cæſ. He cals me Boy, and chides as he had power
To beat me out of Egypt. My Meſſenger
He hath whipt with Rods, dares me to perſonall Combat.
Cæſar to Anthony: let the old Ruffian know,
I have many other wayes to dye: meane time
Laugh at this Challenge.
Mece. Cæſar muſt thinke,
When one ſo great begins to rage, he's hunted
Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now
Make boot of his diſtraction: Never anger
Made good guard for it ſelfe.
Cæſ. Let our beſt heads know,
That to morrow, the laſt of many Battailes
We meane to fight. Within our Files there are,
Of thoſe that ſerv'd Marke Anthony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it done,
And feaſt the Army, we have ſtore to doo't,
And they have earn'd the waſte. Poore Anthony. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian,
Iras, Alexas, with others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitian?
Enob. No?
Ant. Why ſhould he not?
Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better fortune,
He is twenty men to one.
Ant. To morrow Souldier,
By Sea and Land Ile fight: or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood,
Shall make it live againe. Woo't thou fight well.
Enob. Ile ſtrike, and cry, take all.
Ant. Well ſaid, come on:
Call forth my houſhold ſervants, lets to night
Enter three or foure Servitours.
Be bounteous at our Meale. Give me thy hand,
Thou haſt been rightly honeſt, ſo haſt thou,
Thou, and thou, and thou: you have ſerv'd me well,
And Kings have beene your fellowes.
Cleo. What meanes this?
En. Tis one of thoſe odde tricks which ſorrow ſhoots
Out of the mind.
Ant. And thou art honeſt too:
I wiſh I could be made ſo many men,
And all of you clapt up together, in
An Anthony: that I might doe you ſervice,
So good as you have done.

Omnes. The gods forbid.
Ant. Well, my good Fellowes, wait on me to night:
Scant not my Cups, and make as much of me
As when mine Empire was your Fellow too,
And ſuffered my command.
Cleo. What does he meane?
Eno. To make his Followers weepe.
Ant. Tend me to night;
May be it is the period of your duty,
Haply you ſhall not ſee me more, or if,
A mangled ſhadow. Perchance to morrow,
You'l ſerve another Maſter. I looke on you,
As one that takes his leave. Mine honeſt Friends,
I turne you not away, but like a Maſter
Married to your good ſervice, ſtay till death:
Tend me to night two houres, I aske no more,
And the gods yeeld you for't.
Enob. What meane you (ſir)
To give them this diſcomfort? Looke, you weepe,
And I an Aſſe, am Onion-ey'd; for ſhame,
Transforme us not to women.
Ant. Ho, ho, ho:
Now the Witch take me, if I meant it thus.
Grace grow where thoſe drops fall (my hearty Friends)
You take me a too dolorous a ſenſe,
For I ſpake to you for your comfort, did deſire you
To burne this night with Torches: know (my hearts)
I hope well of to morrow, and will lead you,
Where rather Ile expect victorious life,
Then death, and Honour. Lets to Supper, come,
And drowne conſideration. Exeunt.

Enter a company of Souldiers.

1 Sol. Brother, good night: to morrow is the day.
2 Sol. It will determine one way: Fare you well.
Heard you of nothing ſtrange about the ſtreets.
1 Nothing: what newes?
2 Belike tis but a Rumour, good night to you.
1 Well ſir, good night.
They meet with other Souldiers.
2 Souldiers have carefull Watch.
1 And you: Goodnight, goodnight.
They place themſelves in every corner of the Stage.
2 Here we, and if to morrow
Our Navy thrive, I have an abſolute hope
Our Landmen will ſtand up.
1 Tis a brave Army, and full of purpoſe.
Muſicke of the Hoboyes is under the Stage.
2 Peace, what noyſe?
1 Liſt, liſt.
2 Hearke.
1 Muſicke i'th'Ayre.
3 Vnder the earth.
It ſignes well, does it not?
3 No.
1 Peace I ſay: What ſhould this meane?
2 Tis the god Hercules, whom Anthony loved,
Now leaves him.
1 Walke, lets ſee if other Watchmen
Doe heare what we doe?
2 How now Maſters? Speake together.
Omnes. How now? how now? doe you heare this?
1 I, is't not ſtrange?
3 Doe you heare Maſters? Doe you heare?
1 Follow the noyſe ſo farre as we have quarter.
Lets ſee how it will give off.
Omnes. Content: Tis ſtrange. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, and Cleopatra, with others.

Ant. Eros, mine Armour Eros.
Cleo. Sleepe a little.
Ant. No my Chucke, Eros, come mine Armour Eros.
Enter Eros.
Come good Fellow, put thine Iron on,
If Fortune be not ours to day, it is
Becauſe we brave her. Come.
Cleo. Nay, Ile helpe too, Anthony.
Whats this for? Ah, let be, let be, thou art
The Armourer of my heart: Falſe, falſe: This, this,
Sooth-law Ile helpe: Thus it muſt be.
Ant. Well, well, we ſhall thrive now.
Seeſt thou my good Fellow. Goe, put on thy defences.
Eros. Briefly ſir.
Cleo. Is not this buckled well?
Ant. Rarely, rarely:
He that unbuckles this, till we doe pleaſe
To doft for our repoſe, ſhall heare a ſtorme.
Thou fumbleſt Eros, and my Queenes a Squire
More tight at this: Diſpatch. O Love,
That thou couldſt ſee my warres to day, and knew'ſt
The Royall Occupation, thou ſhouldſt ſee
A workeman in't.
Enter an armed Souldier.
Good morrow to thee, welcome,
Thou lookſt like him that knowes a warlike charge:
To buſineſſe that we love, we riſe betime,
And goe too't with delight.
Soul. A thouſand Sir, early though't be, have on their Rivetted trim, and at the Port expect you. Showt.
Trumpets flouriſh.
Enter Captaines and Souldiers.
Alex. The Morne is faire: Good morrow Generall.
All. Good morrow Generall.
Ant. Tis well blowne Lad.
This morning, like the ſpirit of a youth
That meanes to be of note, begins betimes.
So, ſo: Come give me that, what ere becomes of me,
Fare thee well Dame, what ere become of mee,
This is a Souldiers kiſſe: rebukeable,
And worthy ſhamefull checke it were, to ſtand
On more Mechanicke Complement, Ile leave thee.
Now like a man of Steele, you that will fight,
Follow me cloſe, Ile bring you too't: Adieu. Exeunt.
Char. Pleaſe you retyre to your Chamber?
Cleo. Lead me:
He goes forth gallantly: that he and Cæſar might Determine this great Warre in ſingle fight;
Then Anthony; but now. Well on. Exeunt.

Trumpet ſound. Enter Anthony and Eros.

Eros. The Gods make this a happy day to Anthony.
Ant. Would thou, and thoſe thy ſcarres had once prevaild,
To make me fight at Land.
Eros. Hadſt thou done ſo,
The Kings that have revolted, and the Souldier
That has this morning left thee, would have ſtill
Followed thy heeles.
Ant. Who's gone this morning?
Eros. Who? one ever neere thee, call for Enobarbus,

He ſhall not heare thee, or from Cæſars Campe,
Say I am none of thine.
Ant. What ſayeſt thou?
Sold. Sir he is with Cæſar.
Eros. Sir, his Cheſts and Treaſure he has not with him.
Ant. Is he gone?
Sol. Moſt certaine.
Ant. Goe Eros, ſend his Treaſure after, doe it,
Detaine no jot I charge thee: write to him,
(I will ſubſcribe) gentle adieus, and greetings:
Say, that I wiſh he never find more cauſe
To change a Maſter. Oh my fortunes have Corrupted honeſt men. Diſpatch Eros. Exit.

Enter Agrippa, Cæſar, with Enobarbus, and Dollabella.

Cæſ. Goe forth Agrippa, and begin the fight:
Our will is Anthony be tooke alive:
Make it ſo knowne.
Agrip. Cæſar, I ſhall.
Cæſ. The time of univerſall peace is neere,
Prove this a proſp'rous day, the three nook'd world
Shall beare the Olive freely.
Enter a Meſſenger.
Meſ. Anthony is come into the field.
Cæſ. Goe charge Agrippa,
Plant thoſe that have revolted in the Van,
That Anthony may ſeeme to ſpend his Fury
Vpon himſelfe. Exeunt.
Enob. Alexas did revolt, and went to Iewry on Affaires of Anthony: there did diſſwade
Great Herod to 'incline himſelfe to Cæſar,
And leave his Maſter Anthony. For this paines,
Cæſar hath hang'd him: Camidius and the reſt
That fell away, have entertaiment, but
No honorable truſt: I have done ill,
Of which I doe accuſe my ſelfe ſo ſorely,
That I will joy no more.
Enter a Soldier of Cæſars.
Sol. Enobarbus, Anthony
Hath after thee ſent all thy Treaſure, with
His Bounty over-plus. The Meſſenger
Came on my guard, and at thy Tent is now
Vnloading of his Mules.
Eno. I give it you.
Sol. Mocke not Enobarbus,
I tell you true: Beſt you ſaf t the bringer
Out of the haoſt, I muſt attend mine Office,
Or would have done't my ſelfe. Your Emperor
Continues ſtill a Iove. Exit.
Enob. I am alone the Villaine of the earth,
And feele I am ſo moſt. Oh Anthony,
Thou Mine of bounty, how wouldſt thou have payed
My better ſervice, when my turpitude
Thou doſt ſo Crowne with Gold. This blowes my heart
If ſwift thought breake it not: a ſwifted meane
Shall out-ſtrike thought, but thought will doo't. I feele
I fight againſt thee: No I will goe ſeeke
Some Ditch, where to dye: the foulſt beſt fits
My latter part of life. Exit.
Alarum, Drummes and Trumpets.
Enter Agrippa.
Agrip. Retire, we have engag'd our ſelves too farre:
Cæſar himſelfe has worke, and our oppreſſion
Exceeds what we expected. Exit.

Alarums.
Enter Anthony, and Scarus wounded.
Scar. O my brave Emperor, this is fought indeed,
Had we done ſo at firſt, we had droven them home
With clowts about their head. Farre off.
Ant. Thou bleedſt apace.
Scar. I had a wound heere that was like a T,
But now tis made an H.
Ant. They doe retyre.
Scar. We'll beat em into Bench-holes, I have yet
Roome for ſix ſcotches more.
Enter Eros.
Eros. They are beaten Sir, and our advantage ſerves
For a faire victory.
Scar. Let us ſcore their backes,
And ſnatch em up, as we take Hares behind,
Tis ſport to maul a Runner.
Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy ſprightly comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.
Scar. Ile halt after. Exeunt.

Alarum. Enter Anthony againe in a March.
Scarus, with other.

Ant. We have beate him to his Campe: Runne one
Before, and let the Queen know of our gueſts: to morrow
Before the Sun ſhall ſees, we'll ſpill the blood
That has to day eſcap'd. I thanke you all,
For doughty handed are you, and have fought
Not as you ſerv'd the Cauſe, but as't had beene
Each mans like mine: you have ſhewne all Hectors,
Enter the Citty, clip your Wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats, whilſt they with joyfull teares
Waſh the congealement from your wounds, and kiſſe
The honour'd-gaſhes whole.
Enter Cleopatra.
Give me thy hand,
To this great Faiery, Ile commend thy acts,
Make her thankes bleſſe thee. Oh thou day o'th'world,
Chaine mine arm'd necke, leape thou, Attyre and all
Through proofe of Harneſſe to my part, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.
Cleo. Lord of Lords,
Oh infinite Vertue, comm'ſt thou ſmiling from
The worlds great ſnare uncaught.
Ant. My Nightingale,
We have beate them to their Beds.
What Gyrle, though gray
Do ſomething mingle with our yonger browne, yet ha we
A braine that nouriſhes our Nerves, and can
Get gole for gole of youth. Behold this man,
Commend unto his Lippes thy ſavouring hand,
Kiſſe it my Warriour: He hath fought to day,
As if a god in hate of Mankind, had
Deſtroyed in ſuch a ſhape.
Cleo. Ile give thee friend
An Armour all of gold: it was a Kings.
Ant. He has deſerv'd it, were it Carbunkled
Like holy Phœbus Carre. Give me thy hand,
Through Alexandria make a jolly March,
Beare our hackt Targets, like the men that owe them.
Had our great Palace the capacity
To Campe this hoaſt, we all would ſup together,
And drinke Carowſes to the next dayes Fate

Which promiſes Royall perill. Trumpeters
With brazen dinne blaſt you the Citties eare,
Make mingle with our ratling Tabourines,
That heaven and earth may ſtrike their ſounds together,
Applauding our approach. Exeunt.

Enter a Centery, and his Company, Enobarbus followes.

Cent. If we be not reliev'd within this houre,
We muſt returne to'th' Court of Guard: the night
Is ſhiny, and they ſay, we ſhall embattaile
By'th'ſecond houre ith'Morne.
1 Watch. This laſt day was a ſhrew'd one to's
Enob. Oh beare me witneſſe night.
2 What man is this?
1 Stand cloſe, and liſt him.
Enob. Be witneſſe to me (O thou bleſſed Moone)
When men revolted ſhall upon Record
Beare hatefull memory: poore Enobarbus did
Before thy face repent.
Cent. Enobarbus?
2 Peace: hearke further.
Enob. Oh Soveraigne Miſtris of true Melancholly,
The poyſonous dampe of night diſpunge upon me,
That life, a very Rebell to my will,
May hang no longer on me. Throw my heart
Againſt the flint and hardneſſe of my fault,
Which being dryed with griefe, will breake to powder,
And finiſh all foule thoughts. Oh Anthony,
Nobler then my revolt is infamous,
Forgive me in thine owne particular,
But let the world ranke me in Regiſter
A Maſter leaver, and a fugitive:
Oh Anthony! Oh Anthony!
1 Lets ſpeake to him.
Cent. Lets heare him, for the things he ſpeakes
May concerne Cæſar.
2 Lets doe ſo, but he ſleepes.
Cent. Swoonds rather, for ſo bad a Prayer as his
Was never yet for ſleepe.
1 Goe we to him.
2 Awake ſir, awake, ſpeake to us.
1 Heare you ſir?
Cent. The hand of death hath raught him.
Drummes afarre off.
Hearke how the Drummes demurely wake the ſleepers:
Let us beare him to'th' Court of Guard: he is of note:
Our houre is fully out.
2 Come on then, he may recover yet. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, and Scarus, with their Army.

Ant. Their preparation is to day by Sea,
We pleaſe them not by Land.
Scar. For both, my Lord.
Ant. I would they'ld fight ith'Fire, or ith'Ayre,
Wee'ld fight there too. But this it is, our Foote
Vpon the hilles adjoyning to the Citty
Shall ſtay with us. Order for Sea is given,
They have put forth the haven:
Where their appointment we may beſt diſcover,
And looke on their endevour. Exeunt.

Enter Cæſar, and his Army.

Cæſ. But being charg'd, we will be ſtill by Land,
Which as I tak't we ſhall, for his beſt force
Is forth to Man his Gallies. To the Vales,
And hold our beſt advantage. Exeunt.

Alarum afarre off, as at a Sea-fight.

Enter Anthony, and Scarus.

Ant. Yet they are not joyn'd:
Where yond Pine does ſtand, I ſhall diſcover all.
Ile bring thee word ſtraight, how tis like to goe. Exit.
Scar. Swallowes have built
In Cleopatra's Sailes their neſts. The Auguries
Say, they know not, they cannot tell, looke grimly,
And dare not ſpeake their knowledge. Anthony,
Is valiant, and dejected, and by ſtarts
His fretted Fortunes give him hope and feare
Of what he has, and has not.

Enter Anthony.

Ant. All is loſt:
This fowle Egyptian hath betrayed me:
My fleete hath yeelded to the Foe, and yonder,
They caſt their Caps up, and Carowſe together
Like friends long loſt. Triple-turn'd Whore, tis thou
Haſt ſold me to this Novice, and my heart
Makes onely Warres on thee. Bid them all flye:
For when I am reveng'd upon my Charme,
I have done all. Bid them all flye, be gone.
Oh Sunne, thy upriſe ſhall I ſee no more,
Fortune, and Anthony part heere, even heere
Doe we ſhake hands? All come to this? The hearts
That pannelled me at heels, to whom I gave
Their wiſhes, doe diſ-Candy, melt their ſweets
On bloſſoming Cæſar: and this Pine is barkt,
That over-topd them all. Betray'd I am.
Oh this falſe Soule of Egypt! this grave Charme,
Whoſe eye beck'd forth my Wars, and cal'd them home:
Whoſe boſome was my Crownet, my chiefe end,
Like a right Gypſie, hath at faſt and looſe
Beguild me, to the very heart of loſſe.
What Eros, Eros?

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou Spell! Avaunt.
Cleo. Why is my Lord enrag'd againſt his Love?
Ant. Vaniſh, or I ſhall give thee thy deſerving,
And blemiſh Cæſars Triumph. Let him take thee,
And hoiſt thee up to th'ſhouting Plebeians,
Follow his Chariot, like the greateſt ſpot
Of all thy Sex. Moſt Monſter-like be ſhewne
For poor'ſt Diminutives, for Dolts, and let Patient Octavia, plough thy viſage up
With her prepared nailes. Exit Cleopatra.
Tis well th'art gone,
If it be well to live. But better twere
Thou fellſt into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many. Eros, hoa?
The ſhirt of Neſſus is upon me, teach me
Alcides, thou mine Anceſtor, thy rage.
Let me lodge Licas on the hornes oth'Moone,
And with thoſe hands that graſpt the heavieſt Club,
Subdue my worthieſt ſelfe: the Witch ſhall dye,
To the young Roman Boy ſhe hath ſold me, and I fall
Vnder this plot: ſhe dyes for't. Eros hoa? Exit.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, Mardian.

Cleo. Helpe me my woman: Oh he is more mad
Then Telamon for his Shield, the Boare of Theſſaly
Was never ſo imboſt.
Char. To th'Monument, there locke your ſelfe,
And ſend him word you are dead:

The ſouleand Body rive not more in parting,
Then greatneſſe going off.
Cleo. To'th'Monument:
Mardian, goe tell him I have ſlaine my ſelfe:
Say, that the laſt I ſpoke was Anthony,
And word it (prethee) pitteouſly. Hence Mardian,
And bring me how he takes my death to th'Monument.
Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, and Eros.

Anth. Eros, thou yet beholdſt me?
Eros. I Noble Lord.
Ant. Sometime we ſee a clowd thats Dragoniſh,
A vapour ſometime, like a Beare, or Lyon,
A toward Cittadell, a pendant Rocke,
A forked Mountaine, or blew Promontory
With Trees upon't, that nodde unto the world,
And mocke our eyes with Ayre.
Thou haſt ſeene theſe ſignes,
They are blacke Veſpers Pageants.
Eros. I my Lord.
Ant. That which is now a horſe, even with a thought the Racke diſlimes, and makes it indiſtinct
As water is in water.
Eros. It does my Lord.
Ant. My good Knave Eros, now thy Captaine is Even ſuch a body: heere I am Anthony,
Yet cannot hold this viſible ſhape (my Knave)
I made theſe warres for Egypt, and the Queene,
Whoſe heart I thought I had, for ſhe had mine:
Which whilſt it was mine, had annext unto't
A Million moe, (now loſt:) ſhe Eros has
Packt Cards with Caeſars, and falſe plaid my Glory
Vnto an Enemies triumph.
Nay, weepe not gentle Eros, there is left us
Our ſelves to end our ſelves.

Enter Mardian.

Oh thy vilde Lady, ſhe has rob'd me of my Sword.
Mar. No Anthony,
My Miſtris lov'd thee, and her Fortunes mingled
With thine intirely.
Ant. Hence ſawcy Eunuch peace, ſhe hath betraid me
And ſhall dye the death.
Mar. Death of one perſon, can be paide but once,
And that ſhe has diſcharg'd. What thou wouldſt doe
Is done unto thy hand: the laſt ſhe ſpake
Was Anthony, moſt Noble Anthony:
Then in the middſt a tearing grone did breake
The name of Anthony: it was divided
Betweene her heart, and lips: ſhe tendred life
Thy name ſo buried in her.
Ant. Dead then?
Mar. Dead.
Ant. Vnarme Eros, the long dayes taske is done,
And we muſt ſleepe: that thou departſt hence ſafe
Does pay thy labour richly: goe. Exit Mardian.
Oh, plucke off,
The ſeven-fold ſhield of Ajax cannot keepe
The battery from my heart. Oh cleave my ſides.
Heart, once be ſtronger then thy Continent,
Cracke thy fraile Caſe. Apace Eros, apace:
No more a Souldier: bruiſed peeces goe,
You have bin Nobly borne. From me awhile. Exit Eros.
I will ore-take thee Cleopatra, and
Weepe for my pardon. So it muſt be, for now
All length is Torture: ſince the Torch is out,
Lye downe and ſtray no farther. Now all labour
Marres what it does: yea, very force entangles
It ſelfe with ſtrength: Seale then and all is done.
Eros? I come my Queene. Eros? Stay for me,
Where Soules doe couch on Flowers, we'll hand in hand,
And with our ſprightly Port make the Ghoſtes gaze:
Dido, and her Æneas ſhall want Troopes,
And all the haunt be ours. Come Eros, Eros.

Enter Eros.

Eros. What would my Lord?
Ant. Since Cleopatra dyed,
I have liv'd in ſuch diſhonor, that the gods
Deteſt my baſeneſſe. I, that with my Sword,
Quarter'd the World, and ore greene Neptunes backe
With Ships, made Citties; condemne my ſelfe, to lacke
The Courage of a Woman, leſſe Noble minde
Then ſhe which by her death, our Caeſar telles
I am Conqueror of my ſelfe. Thou art ſworne Eros,
That when the exigent ſhould come, which now
Is come indeed: When I ſhould ſee behind me
Th'inevitable proſecution of diſgrace and horror,
That on my command, thou then wouldſt kill me.
Doo't, the time is come: thou ſtrikſt not me,
Tis Caeſar thou defeat'ſt. Put colour in my cheeke.
Eros. The gods with-hold me,
Shall I doe that which all the Parthian Darts,
(Though Enemy) loſt ayme, and could not.
Ant. Eros,
Wouldſt thou be window'd in great Rome, and ſee
Thy Maſter thus with pleacht Armes, bending downe
His corrigible necke, his face ſubdu'de
To penetrative ſhame; whilſt the wheeld ſeate
Of fortunate Caeſar drawne before him, branded
His baſeneſſe that enſued.
Eros. I would not ſee't.
Ant. Come then: for with a wound I muſt be cur'd.
Draw that thy honeſt Sword which thou haſt worne
Moſt uſefull for thy Country.
Eros. Oh ſir, pardon me.
Ant. When I did make thee free, ſworſt thou not then
To doe this when I bad thee? Doe it at once,
Or thy precedent Services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Draw, and come.
Eros. Turne from me then that Noble countenance,
Wherein the worſhip of the whole world lyes.
Ant. Loe thee.
Eros. My ſword is drawne.
Ant. Then let it doe at once
The thing why thou haſt drawne it.
Eros. My deere Maſter,
My Captaine, and my Emperor. Let me ſay
Before I ſtrike this bloody ſtroke, farewell.
Ant. Tis ſaid man, and farewell.
Eros. Farewell great Chiefe. Shall I ſtrike now?
Ant. Now Eros. Killes himſelfe.
Eros. Why there then:
Thus I doe eſcape the ſorrow of Anthonies death.
Ant. Thrice-Nobler then my ſelfe,
Thou teacheſt me: Oh valiant Eros, what
I ſhould, and thou couldſt not, my Queene and Eros
Have by their brave inſtruction got upon me
A Nobleneſſe in Record. But I will be
A Bride-groome in my death, and run into't
As to a Lovers bed. Come then, and Eros,
Thy Maſter dyes thy Scholler: to doe thus
I learnt of thee. How, not dead? not dead?
The Guard, how? oh diſpatch me.

Enter a Guard.

1 Guard. Whats the noiſe ?

Ant. I have done my worke ill friends :
Oh make an end of what I have begun.

2 The Starre is falne.

1 And time is at his Period.

All. Alas, and woe.

Ant. Let him that loves me, ſtrike me dead.

1 Not I.

2 Not I.

3 Nor any one. [Exeunt.

Decre. Thy death and fortunes bid thy followers flye
This ſword but ſhewne to Cæſar with this tydings,
Shall enter me with him.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. Wheres Anthony ?

Decre. There Diomed there.

Diom. Lives he : wilt thou not anſwer man ?

Ant. Art thou there Diomed ?
Draw thy ſword, and give me,
Sufficing ſtrokes for death.

Dio. Moſt abſolute Lord :
My Miſtris Cleopatra ſent me to thee.

Ant. When did ſhee ſend thee ?

Diom. Now my Lord.

Ant. Where is ſhe ? (feare

Diom. Lockt in her Monument: ſhe had a Propheſying
Of what hath come to paſſe : for when ſhe ſaw
(Which never ſhall be found) you did ſuſpect
She had diſpos'd with Cæſar, and that your rage
Would not be purg'd, ſhe ſent you word ſhe was dead :
But fearing ſince how it might worke, hath ſent
Me to proclaine the truth, and I am come
I dread, too late.

Ant. Too late good Diomed: call my Guard I prethee.

Dio. What hoa : the Emperors Guard.
The Guard, what hoa ? Come, your Lord calles.

Enter 4 or 5 of the Guard of Anthony.

Ant. Beare me good Friends were Cleopatra bides,
Tis the laſt ſeevice that I ſhall command you.

1 Woe, woe are we ſir you may not live to weare
All your true Followers out.

All. Moſt heavy day.

Ant. Nay good my fellowes, doe not pleaſe ſharp fate
To grace it with your ſorrowes. Bid that welcome
Which comes to puniſh us, and we puniſh it
Seeming to beare it lightly. Take me up,
I have led you oft, carry me now good friends,
And have my thankes for all. Exeunt bearing Anthony.

Enter Cleopatra, and her Maides aloft, with Charmian, and Iras.

Cleo. Oh Charmian, I will never goe from hence.

Char. Be comforted deere Madam.

Cleo. No, I will not :
All ſtrange and terrible events are welcome,
But comforts we deſpiſe; our ſize of ſorrow
Proportion'd to our cauſe, muſt be as great
As that which makes it.

Enter Diomed.

How now ? is he dead ?

Diom. His deaths upon him, but not dead.
Looke out oth' other ſide your Monument,
His Guard have brought him hither.

Enter Anthony, and the Guard.

Cleo. Oh Sunne,
Burne the great Sphere thou mou'ſt in, darkling ſtand
The varrying ſhore oth' world. O Antony, Antony, Antony
Helpe Charmian, helpe Iras helpe : helpe friends
Below, lets draw him hither.

Ant. Peace,
Not Cæſars Valour hath orethrowne Anthony,
But Anthonie, hath Triumpht on it ſelfe.

Cleo. So it ſhould be,
That none but Anthony ſhould conquer Anthony,
But woe tis ſo.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying : onely
I heere importune death a-while, untill
Of many thouſand kiſſes the poore laſt
I lay upon thy lippes.

Cleo. I dare not Deere,
Deere my Lord pardon : I dare not,
Leſt I be taken : not th'Imperious ſhew
Of the full-fortun'd Cæſar, ever ſhall
Be brooch'd with me, if Knife, Drugges, Serpents have
Edge, ſting, or operation, I am ſafe :
Your Wife Octavia, with her modeſt eyes,
And ſtill concluſion, ſhall acquire no honor
Demuring upon me : but, come, come Anthony,
Helpe me my women, we muſt draw thee up :
Aſſiſt good friends.

Ant. Oh quicke, or I am gone,

Cleo, Heeres ſport indeed :
How heavy weighes my Lord ?
Our ſtrength is all gone into heavineſſe,
That makes the waight. Had I great Iuno's power,
The ſtrong wing'd Mercury ſhould fetch thee up,
And ſet thee by Ioves ſide. Yet come a little,
Wiſhers were ever Fooles. Oh come, come, come.

They heave Anthony aloft to Cleopatra.

And welcome, welcome. Dye when thou haſt liv'd,
Quicken with kiſſing : had my lippes that power,
Thus would I weare them out.

All. A heavy ſight.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying.
Give me ſome Wine, and let me ſpeake a little.

Cleo. No, let me ſpeake, and let me rayle ſo hye,
That the falſe Huſwife Fortune, breake her Wheele,
Provok'd by my offence.

Ant, One word (ſweet Queene)
Of Cæſar ſeeke your honor, with your ſafety. Oh.

Cleo. They doe not goe together.

Ant. Gentle heare me,
None about Cæſar truſt, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My Reſolution, and my hands, Ile truſt,
None about Cæſar.

Ant. The miſerable change now at my end,
Lament nor ſorrow at : but pleaſe your thoughts
In feeding them with thoſe my former Fortunes
Wherein I lived. The greateſt Prince oth world,
The Nobleſt : and doe now not baſely dye,
Not Cowardly put off my Helmet to
My Countryman. A Roman, by a Roman
Valiantly vanquiſh'd. Now my ſpirit is going,
I can no more.

Cleo. Nobleſt of men, woo't dye ?
Haſt thou no care of me, ſhall I abide
In this dull world, which in thy abſence is
No better then a Stye ? Oh ſee my women :
The Crowne oth earth doth melt. My Lord ?
Oh wither'd is the Garland of the Warre,

The Souldiers pole is falne : young Boyes and Gyrles
Are levell now with men : The oddes is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkeable
Beneath the viſiting Moone.
Char. Oh quitneſſe, Lady.
Iras. Shes dead too, our Soveraigne.
Char. Lady.
Iras. Madam.
Char. Oh Madam, Madam, Madam.
Iras. Royall Egypt : Empreſſe.
Char. Peace, peace, Iras.
Cleo. No more but in a Woman, and commanded
By ſuch poore paſſion, as the Maid that Milkes,
And does the meaneſt chares. It were for me,
To throw my Scepter at the injurious gods,
To tell them that this World did equall theirs,
Till they had ſtolne our Iewell. Alls but naught :
Patience is ſottiſh, and impatience does
Become a Dogge thats mad : then is it ſinne,
To ruſh into the ſecret houſe of death,
Ere death dare come to us? How doe you Women ?
What, what good cheere ? Why how now Charmian ?
My Noble Gyrles ? Ah women, women ! Looke
Our Lampe is ſpent, its out. Good ſirs, take heart,
Wee'll bury him : And then, whats brave, what Noble,
Lets doo't after the high Roman faſhion,
And make death proud to take us. Come, away,
This caſe of that huge Spirit now is cold.
Ah women, women ! Come, we have no friend
But Reſolution, and the brieſeſt end.
Exeunt, bearing of Anthonies body.

Enter Cæſar, Agrippa, Dollabella, Menas, with his Counſell of Warre.

Cæſar. Goe to him Dolabella, bid him yeeld,
Being ſo fruſtrate, tell him,
He mockes the pawſes that he makes.
Dol. Cæſar, I ſhall.
Enter Decretas with the ſword of Anthony.
Cæſ. Wherefore is that ? and what art thou that dar'ſt
Appeare thus to us ?
Dec. I am call'd Decretas,
Marke Anthony I ſerv'd, who beſt was worthy
Beſt to be ſerv'd : whilſt he ſtood up, and ſpoke
He was my Maſter, and I wore my life
To ſpend upon his haters. If thou pleaſe
To take me to thee, as I as was to him,
Ile be to Cæſar:if thou pleaſeſt not,I yeild thee up my life.
Cæſa. What iſt thou ſayſt ?
Dec. I ſay (Oh Cæſar) Anthony is dead.
Cæſa. The breaking of ſo great a thing, ſhould make
A greater cracke. The round World
Should have ſhooke Lyons into civill ſtreets,
And Cittizens to their dennes. The death of Anthony
Is not a ſingle doome, in the name lay
A moity of the world.
Dec. He is dead Cæſar,
Not by a publike miniſter of Iuſtice,
Nor by a hyred Knife, but that ſelfe-hand
Which writ his honor in the Acts it did,
Hath with the Courage which the heart did lend it,
Splitted the heart. This is his Sword,
I robb'd his wound of it : behold it ſtaind
With his moſt Noble blood.
Cæſ. Looke you ſad friends,
The gods rebuke me, but it is a Tydings
To waſh the eyes of Kings.
Dol. And ſtrange it is,
That Nature muſt compell us to lament
Our moſt perſiſted deeds.
Mec. His taints and honors, way equall with him.
Dola. A Rarer ſpirit never
Did ſteere humanity : but you gods will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cæſar is touch'd.
Mec. When ſuch a ſpacious Mirrors ſet before him,
He needes muſt ſee himſelfe.
Cæſ. Oh Anthony,
I have followed thee to this, but we doe launch
Diſeaſes in our Bodies. I muſt perforce
Have ſhewne to thee ſuch a declining day,
Or looke on thine : we could not ſtall together,
In the whole world. But yet let me lament
With teares as Soveraigne as the blood of hearts,
That thou my brother, my Competitor,
In top of all deſigne ; my Mate in Empire,
Friend and Companion in the front of Warre,
The Arme of mine owne Body, and the heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle ; that our Starres
Vnreconciliable, ſhould divide our equalneſſe to this.
Heare me good friends,
But I will tell you at ſome meeter Seaſon,
The buſineſſe of this man lookes out of him,
Wee'll heare him what he ſayes.
Enter an Ægyptian..
Whence are you?
Ægyp. A poore Egyptian yet, the Queene my Miſtris
Confin'd in all, ſhe has her Monument
Of thy intents, deſires, inſtruction,
That ſhe preparedly may frame her ſelfe
To th' way ſhees forc'd to.
Cæſ. Bid her have good heart,
She ſoone ſhall know of us, by ſome of ours,
How honorable, and how kindly We
Determine for her. For Cæſar cannot leave to be ungentle
Ægyp. So the gods preſerve thee. Exit.
Cæſ. Come hither Proculeius, Goe and ſay
We purpoſe her no ſhame : give her what comforts
The quality of her paſſion ſhall require ;
Leſt in her greatneſſe, by ſome mortall ſtroke
She doe defeate us. For her life in Rome,
Would be eternall in our Triumph : goe,
And with your ſpeedieſt bring us what ſhe ſayes,
And how yon find of her.
Pro. Cæſar I ſhall. Exit Proculeius.
Cæſ. Gallus, goe you along : wheres Dolabella, to ſecond Proculeius ?
All. Dolabella.
Cæſ. Let him alone : for I remember now
H[illegible] imployd : he ſhall in time be ready.
Goe with me to my Tent, where you ſhall ſee
How hardly I was drawne into this Warre,
How calme and gentle I proceeded ſtill
In all my Writings. Goe with me, and ſee
What I can ſhew in this. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. My deſolation does begin to make
A better life : Tis paltry to be Cæſar :
Not being fortune, hes but fortunes knave,
A miniſter of her will : and it is great

To doe that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which ſhackles accidents, and bolts up change;
Which ſleepes, and never pallats more the dung,
The beggers Nurſe, and Cæſars.

Enter Proculeius.

Pro. Cæſar ſends greeting to the Queene of Egypt,
And bids thee ſtudy on what faire demands
Thou mean'ſt to have him grant thee.
Cleo. Whats thy name?
Pro. May name is Proculeius.
Cleo. Anthony
Did tell me of you, bad me truſt you, but
I doe not greatly care to be deceiv'd
That have no vſe for truſting. If your Maſter
Would have a Queene his begger, you muſt tell him,
That Majeſty to keepe decorum, muſt
No leſſe begge then a Kingdome: if he pleaſe
To give me conquer'd Egypt for my Sonne,
He gives me ſo much of mine owne, as I
Will kneele to him with thankes.
Pro. Be of good cheere:
Y'are falne into a Princely hand, feare nothing,
Make your full reference freely to my Lord,
Who is ſo full of Grace, that it flowes over
On all that neede. Let me report to him
Your ſweet dependancy, and you ſhall find
A Conqueror that will pray in ayde for kindneſſe,
Where he for grace is kneel'd too.
Cleo. Pray you tell him,
I am his Fortunes Vaſſall, and I ſend him
The greatneſſe he has got. I hourely learne
A Doctrine of Obedience, and would gladly
Looke him ith'Face.
Pro. This Ile report (deere Lady)
Have comfort, for I know your plight is pittied
Of him that caus'd it.
Char. You ſee how eaſily ſhe may be ſurpriz'd:
Guard her till Cæſar come.
Iras. Royall Queene.
Char. Oh Cleopatra, thou art taken Queene.
Cleo. Quicke, quicke, good hands.
Pro. Hold worthy Lady, hold:
Doe not your ſelfe ſuch wrong, who are in this
Reliev'd, but not betraid,
Cleo. What of death too that rids our dogs of languiſh?
Pro. Cleopatra, doe not abuſe my Maſters bounty, by
Th'undoing of your ſelfe: Let the world ſee
His Nobleneſſe well acted, which your death
Will never let come forth.
Cleo. Where art thou death?
Come hither come; Come, come, and take a Queene
Worth many Babes and Beggers.
Pro. Oh temperance Lady.
Cleo. Sir, I will eate no meate, Ile not drinke ſir,
If idle talke will once be neceſſary
Ile not ſleepe neither. This mortall houſe ile ruine,
Doe Cæſar what he can. Know ſir, that I
Will not waite pinnion'd at your Maſters Court,
Nor once be chaſtic'd with the ſober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoyſt me up,
And ſhew me to the ſhowting Varlotry
Of cenſuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt,
Be gentle grave unto me, rather on Nylus mudde
Lay me ſtarke-nak'd, and let the water-Flies
Blow me into abhorring; rather make
My Countries hygh pyramides my Gibbet,
And hang me up in Chaines,
Pro. You doe extend
Theſe thoughts of horror further then you ſhall
Find cauſe in Cæſar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou haſt done, thy Maſter Cæſar knowes,
And he hath ſent for thee: as for the Queene,
Ile take her to my Guard.
Pro. So Dolabella,
It ſhall content me beſt: be gentle to her,
To Cæſar I will ſpeake, what you ſhall pleaſe,
If youll imploy me to him. Exit Proculeius.
Cleo. Say, I would dye.
Dol. Moſt Noble Empreſſe, you have heard of me.
Cleo. I cannot tell.
Dol. Aſſuredly you know me.
Cleo. No matter ſir, what I have heard or knowne:
You laugh when Boyes or Women tell their Dreames,
Iſt not your tricke?
Dol. I underſtand not, Madam.
Cleo. I dreampt there was an Emperor Anthony.
Oh ſuch another ſleepe, that I might ſee
But ſuch another man.
Dol. If it might pleaſe ye.
Cleo. His face was as the heavens, and therein ſtucke
A Sunne and Moone, which kept their courſe, and lighted
The little o'th'earth.
Dol. Moſt Soveraigne Creature.
Cleo. His legges beſtrid the Ocean, his rear'd arme
Creſted the world: his voyce was propertied
As all the tuned Spheres, and that to friends:
But when he meant to quaile, and ſhake the Orbe,
He was as ratling Thunder. For his bounty,
There was no winter in't. An Anthony it was,
That grew the more by reaping: his delights
Were Dolphin-like, they ſhew'd his backe above
The Element they liv'd in; In his Livery
Walk'd Crownes and Crownets: Realmes and Iſlands
As plates dropt from his pocket.
Dol. Cleopatra.
Cleo. Thinke you there was, or might be ſuch a man
As this I dreampt of?
Dol. Gentle Madam, no.
Cleo. You Lye up to the hearing of the gods:
But if there be, nor ever were one ſuch
Its paſt the ſize of dreaming: Nature wants ſtuffe
To vye ſtrange formes with fancy, yet t'imagine
An Anthony were Natures peece, gainſt Fancy,
Condemning ſhadowes quite.
Dol. Heare me, good Madam:
Your loſſe is as your ſelfe, great; and you beare it
As anſwering to the waight, would I might never
Ore-take purſu'de ſucceſſe: but I doe feele
By the rebound of yours, a griefe that ſuites
My very heart at roote.
Cleo. I thanke you ſir:
Know you what Cæſar meanes to doe with me?
Dol. I am loath to tell you what, I would you knew.
Cleo. Nay pray you ſir.
Dol. Though he be honorable.
Cleo. He'll leade me then in Triumph.
Dol. Madam he will, I knowt.

Enter Proculeius, Cæſar, Gallus, Mecenas,
and others of his Traine.

All. Make way there, Cæſar.

Cæſar?

Cæſ. Which is the Queene of Egypt.
Dol. It is the Emperor Madam. Cleo. kneeles.
Cæſ. Ariſe, you ſhall not kneele:
I pray you riſe, riſe Egypt.
Cleo. Sir, the gods will have it thus,
My Maſter and my Lord I much obey,
Cæſ. Take to you no hard thoughts,
The Record of what injuries you did us,
Though written in our fleſh, we ſhall remember
As things but done by chance.
Cleo. Sole Sir oth'world,
I cannot project mine owne cauſe ſo well
To make it cleare, but doe confeſſe I have Beene laden with like frailties, which before
Have often ſham'd our Sex.
Cæſ. Cleopatra know,
We will extenuate rather then inforce:
If you apply your ſelfe to our intents,
Which towards you are moſt gentle, you ſhall finde
A benefit in this change, but if you ſeeke
To lay on me a Cruelty, by taking
Anthonies courſe, you ſhall bereave you ſelfe
Of my good purpoſes, and put your children
To that deſtruction which Ile guard them from,
If thereon you relye. Ile take my leave.
Cleo. And may through all the world: tis yours, and we your Scutcheons, and your ſignes of Conqueſt ſhall
Hang in what place you pleaſe. Here my good Lord.
Cæſ. You ſhall adviſe me in all for Cleopatra.
Cleo. This is the briefe: of Mony, Plate, and Iewels
I am poſſeſt of, tis exactly valewed,
Not petty things admitted. Wheres Seleucus?
Seleu. Heere Madam.
Cleo. This is my Treaſurer, let him ſpeake (my Lord)
Vpon his perill, that I have reſerv'd
To my ſelfe nothing. Speake the truth Seleucus.
Selev. Madam I had rather ſeele my lippes,
Then to my perill ſpeake that which is not.
Cleo. What have I kept backe?
Seleu. Enough to purchaſe what you have made known
Cæſ. Nay bluſh not Cleopatra, I approve
Your Wiſedome in the deed.
Cleo. See Cæſar: Oh behold,
How pompe is followed: Mine will now be yours,
And ſhould we ſhift eſtates, yours would be mine,
The ingratitude of this Seleucus, does
Even make me wilde. Oh Slave, of no more truſt
Then love thats hyr'd? What goeſt thou backe, thou ſhalt
Goe backe I warrant thee: but Ile catch thine eyes
Though they had wings. Slave, ſoule-leſſe, Villaine, Dog,
O rarely baſe!
Cæſ. Good Queene, let us intreat you.
Cleo. O Cæſar, what a wounding ſhame is this,
That thou vouchſafing heere to viſit me,
Doing the honor of thy Lordlineſſe
To one ſo meeke, that mine owne Servant ſhould
Parcell the ſumme of my diſgraces, by Addition of his Envy! Say (good Cæſar)
That I ſome Lady-trifles have reſerv'd,
Immoment toyes, things of ſuch Dignity
As we greet moderne friends withall, and ſay
Some Nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation, muſt I be unfolded
With one that I have bred: the gods! it ſmites me
Beneath the fall I have. Prethee goe hence,
Or I ſhall ſhew the Cynders of my ſpirits
Through th'Aſhes of my chance: Wer't thou a man,
Thou wouldſt have mercy on me.
Cæſa. Forbeare Seleucus.
Cleo. Be it knowne, that we the greateſt are miſ-thought
For things that others doe: and when we fall,
We anſwer others merits, in our name
Are therefore to be pittied.
Cæſ. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reſerv'd, nor what acknowledg'd
Put we ith'Roll of Conqueſt: ſtill be't yours,
Beſtow it at your pleaſure, and beleeve
Cæſar's no Merchant, to make prize with you
Of things that Merchants ſold. Therefore be cheer'd,
Make not your thoughts your priſons: No deere Queen,
For we intend ſo to diſpoſe you, as
Your ſelfe ſhall give us counſell: Feede, and ſleepe:
Our care and pitty is ſo much upon you,
That we remaine your friend, and ſo adieu.
Cleo. My Maſter, and my Lord.
Cæſ. Not ſo: Adieu.
Exeunt Cæſar, and his Traine.
Cleo. He words me Gyrles, he words me,
That I ſhould not be Noble to my ſelfe.
But hearke thee Charmian.
Iras. Finiſh good Lady, the bright day is done,
And we are for the darke.
Cleo. Hye thee againe.
I have ſpoke already, and it is provided,
Goe put it to the haſte.
Char. Madam, I will.
Enter Dolabella.
Dol. Wheres the Queene?
Char. Behold ſir.
Cleo. Dolabella.
Dol. Madam, as thereto ſworne, by your command
(Which my love makes Religion to obey)
I tell you this: Cæſar through Syria
Intends his journey, and within three dayes,
You with your Children will he ſend before,
Make your beſt uſe of this. I have perform'd
Your pleaſure, and my promiſe.
Cleo. Dolabella, I ſhall remaine your debter.
Dol. I your Servant:
Adieu good Queene, I muſt attend on Cæſar, Exit.
Cleo. Farewell, and thankes.
Now Iras, what think'ſt thou?
Thou, an Egyptian Puppet ſhalt be ſhewne
In Rome aſwell as I: Mechanicke Slaves
With greazy Aprons, Rules, and Hammers ſhall
Vplift us to the view. In their thicke breathes,
Ranke of groſſe dyet, ſhall we be enclowded,
And forc'd to drinke their vapour.
Iras. The gods forbid.
Cleo. Nay, tis moſt certaine Iras: ſawcy Lictors
Will catch at us like Strumpets, and ſcald Rimers
Ballad us out a Tune. The quicke Comedians
Extemporally will ſtage us, and preſent
Our Alexandria Revels: Anthony
Shall be brought drunken forth, and I ſhall ſee
Some ſpeaking-Cleopatra-Boy my greatneſſe
I'th'poſture of a Whore.
Iras. O the good gods!
Cleo. Nay thats certaine.
Iras. Ile never ſee't; for I am ſure my Nailes
Are ſtronger then mine eyes.

Cleo. Why thats the way to foole their preparation,
And conquer their moſt abſurd intents.

Enter Charmian.

Now Charmian.
Shew me my Women like a Queene: Goe fetch
My beſt Attyres. I am againe for Cidrus
To meet Marke Anthony. Sirra Iras, goe
(Now Noble Charmian, wee'l diſpatch indeed,)
And when thou haſt done this chare, Ile give thee leave
To play till Doomeſday: bring our Crowne, and all.

A noyſe within.

Wherefore's this noyſe?

Enter a Guardſman.

Guardſ. Here is a rurall Fellow,
That will not be deny'd your Highneſſe preſence,
He brings you Figges.

Cleo. Let him come in. Exit Guardſman.
How poore an Inſtrument
May doe a Noble deed: he brings me liberty:
My Reſolution's plac'd, and I have nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foot
I am Marble conſtant: now the fleeting Moone
No Planet is of mine.

Enter Guardſman and Clowne.

Guardſ. This is the Man.

Cleo. Avoyd and leave him. Exit Guardſman.
Haſt thou the pretty worme of Nylus there,
That kils and paines not?

Clow. Truely I have him: but I would not be the partie that ſhould deſire you to touch him, for his byting is immortall: thoſe that doe dye of it, doe ſeldome or never recover.

Cleo. Remember'ſt thou any that have dyed ont?

Clo. Very many men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer than yeſterday, a very honeſt woman, but ſomething given to lye, as a woman ſhould not doe, but in the way of honeſty, how ſhe dyed of the byting of it, what paine ſhe felt: Truely, ſhe makes a very good report o'th' worme: but he that will beleeve all that they ſay, ſhall never be ſaved by halfe that they doe: but this is moſt fallible, the Worme's an odde Worme.

Cleo. Get thee hence, farewell.

Clow. I wiſh you all joy of the Worme.

Cleo. Farewell.

Clow. You muſt thinke this (looke you) that the Worme will doe his kinde.

Cleo. I, I, farewell.

Cleo. Looke you, the Worme is not to be truſted, but in the keeping of wiſe people: for indeed, there is no goodneſſe in the Worme.

Cleo. Take no care, it ſhall be heeded.

Cleo. Very good: give it nothing I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eate me?

Cleo. You muſt not thinke I am ſo ſimple, but I know the divell himſelfe will not eate a woman: I know, that a woman is a diſh for the gods, if the divell dreſſe her not. But truely, theſe ſame whorſon Divels doe the gods great harme in their women: for in every ten that they make, the divels marre five.

Cleo. Well, get the gone, farewell.

Cleo. Yes forſooth, I wiſh you joy o'th' worme. Exit.

Cleo. Give me my Robe, put on my Crowne, I have Immortall longings in me. Now no more
The juyce of Egypts Grape ſhall moyſt this lip.
Yare, yare, good Iras quicke: me thinkes I heare
Anthony call: I ſee him rowſe himſefe
To praiſe my Noble Act I heare him mocke
The lucke of Cæſar, which the gods give men
To excuſe their after wrath. Husband, I come:
Now to that name, my courage prove my Title.
I am Fire, and Ayre; my other Elements
I give to baſer life. So, have you done?
Come then, and take the laſt warmth of my lippes.
Farewell kinde Charmian, Iras, long farewell.
Have I the Aſpicke in my lips? Doſt fall?
If thou, and Nature can ſo gently part;
The ſtroke of death is as a Lovers pinch,
Which hurts, and is deſir'd. Doſt thou lie ſtill?
If thus thou vaniſheſt, thou tell'ſt the world,
It is not worth leave taking.

Char. Diſſolve thicke Cloud, & Raine, that I may ſay,
The gods themſelves doe weepe.

Cleo. This proves me baſe:
If ſhe proves the curled Anthony,
Hee'l make demand of her, and ſpend that kiſſe
Which is my heaven to have. Come thou mortall wretch,
With thy ſharpe teeth this knot intrinſicate,
Of life at once untie: Poore venemous Foole,
Be angry and diſpatch. Oh couldſt thou ſpeake,
That I might heare thee call great Cæſar Aſſe, unpolicied.

Char. Oh Eaſterne ſtarre.

Cleo. Peace, peace:
Doſt thou not ſee my Baby at my breaſt,
That ſuckes the Nurſe aſleepe.

Char. O breake! O breake!

Cleo. As ſweet as Balme, as ſoft as Ayre, as gentle.
O Anthony! Nay I will take thee too.
What ſhould I ſtay—— Dyes.

Char. In this wilde world? So fare thee well:
Now boaſt thee Death, in thy poſſeſſion lies
A Laſſe unparalell'd. Downy Windowes cloze,
And golden Phœbus never be beheld
Of eyes againe ſo Royall: your Crownes away,
Ile mend it, and then play——

Enter the Guard ruſtling in, and Dolabella.

1 Guard. Wheres the Queene?

Char. Speake ſoftly, wake her not.

1 Cæſar hath ſent.

Char. Too ſlow a Meſſenger.
Oh come apace, diſpatch, I partly feele thee.

1 Approach hoa,
All's not well: Cæſars beguilde.

2 Theres Dolabella ſent from Cæſar: call him.

1 What worke is here Charmian?
Is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a Princeſſe
Deſcended of ſo many Royall Kings.
Ah Souldier. Charmian dyes.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it here?

2 Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cæſar, thy thoughts
Touch their effects in this: thy ſelfe art comming
To ſee perform'd the dreaded Act which thou
So ſought'ſt to hinder.

Enter Cæſar and all his Traine, marching.

All. A way there, a way for Cæſar.

Dol. Oh Sir, you are two ſure an Augurer:
That you did feare, is done.
Cæſar. Braveſt at the laſt,
She levell'd at our purpoſes, and being Royall
Tooke her owne way: the manner of their deaths,
I doe not ſee them bleed.
Dol. Who was laſt with them?
1 Guard. A ſimple countryman, that brought her Figs:
This was his Basket.
Cæſ. Poyſon'd then.
1 Guard. Oh Cæſar:
This Charmian liv'd but now, ſhe ſtood and ſpake:
I found her trimming up the Diadem;
On her dead Miſtris, tremblingly ſhe ſtood,
And on the ſodaine dropt.
Cæſar. Oh noble weakeneſſe:
If they had ſwallow'd poyſon, twould appeare.
By externall ſwelling: but ſhe lookes like ſleepe,
As ſhe would catch another Anthony
In her ſtrong toyle of Grace.
Dol. Here on her breſt,
There is a vent of blood, and ſomething blowne,
The like is on her Arme.
1 Guard. This an Aſpects traile
And theſe Fig-leaves have ſlime upon them ſuch
As th'Aſpicke leaves upon the Caves of Nyle.
Cæſ. Moſt probable
That ſo ſhe dyed: for her Phyſitian tels me
She hath purſu'd Concluſions infinite
Of eaſie wayes to dye. Take up her bed,
And beare her Women from the Monument,
She ſhall be buried by her Anthony.
No Grave upon the earth ſhall clip in it
A paire ſo famous: high events as theſe
Strike thoſe that make them: and their ſtory is
No leſſe in pitty, than his glory which Brought them to be lamented. Our Army ſhall
In ſolemne ſhew, attend this Funerall,
And then to Rome. Come Dolabella, ſee
High Order, in this great Solemnity. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDY OF CYMBELINE.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1 Gent.

YOu doe not meet a man but frownes.
Our bloods no more obey the heavens
Then our Courtiers:
Still ſeeme as do's the Kings.

2 Gent. But whats the matter?

1 His daughter, and the heire of's kingdome (whom
He purpos'd to his wives ſole ſonne, a Widdow
That late he married) hath referr'd her ſelfe
Vnto a poore, but worthy Gentleman. Shes wedded,
Her Husband baniſh'd; ſhe impriſon'd, all
Is outward ſorrow, though I thinke the King
Be touch'd at very heart.

2 None but the King?

1 He that hath loſt her too: ſo is the Queene,
That moſt deſir'd the Match. But not a Courtier,
Although they weare their faces to the bent
Of the Kings lookes, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they ſcowle at.

2 And wy ſo?

1 He that hath miſs'd the Princeſſe, is a thing
Too bad, for bad report: and he that hath her,
(I meane, that married her, alacke good man,
And therefore baniſh'd) is a Creature, ſuch,
As to ſeeke through the Regions of the earth
For one, he like; there would be ſomething failing
In him, that ſhould compare. I doe not thinke,
So faire an Outward, and ſuch ſtuffe within
Endowes a man, but hee.

2 You ſpeake him farre.

1 I doe extend him (Sir) which himſelfe,
Cruſh him together, rather then vnfold
His meaſure dully.

2 Whats his name and Birth?

1 I cannot delue him to the roote: his father
Was call'd Sicillius, who did joyne his honor
Againſt the Romanes, with Caſſibelan,
But had his Titles by Tenantius, whom
He ſerv'd with Glory and admir'd Succeſſe:
So gain'd the Sur-addition, Leonatus.
And had (beſides this Gentleman in queſtion)
Two other Sonnes, who in the Warres o'th' time
Dy'de with their Swords in hand. For which their father
Then old, and fond of iſſue, tooke ſuch ſorrow
That he quit Being; and his gentle Lady
Bigge of this Gentleman (our Theame) deceaſt
As he was borne. The King he takes the Babe
To his protection, calls him Poſthumus Leonatus,
Breedes him, and makes him of his Bed-chamber,
Puts to him all the Learnings that his time
Could make him the receiver of, which he tooke
As we doe ayre, faſt as twas miniſtred,
And in's Spring, became a Harveſt: Liv'd in Court
(Which rare it is to doe) moſt prais'd, moſt lov'd,
A ſample to the yongeſt: to th' more Mature,
A glaſſe that feated them: and to the graver,
A child that guided Dotards. To his Miſtris,
(For whom he now is baniſh'd) her owne price
Proclaimes how ſhe eſteem'd him; and his Vertue
By her election may be truly read, what kind of man he is.

2 I honor him, even out of your report.
But pray you tell me, is ſhe ſole child to'th' King?

1 His onely child?
He had two Sonnes (if this be worth your hearing, Marke it) the eldeſt of them, at three yeeres old
I'th' ſwathing cloathes, the other from their Nurſery
Were ſtolne, and to this houre, no gheſſe in knowledge
Which way they went.

2 How long is this agoe?

1 Some twenty yeeres.

2 That a Kings Children ſhould be ſo convey'd,
So ſlackely guarded, and the ſearch ſo ſlow
That could not trace them.

1 Howſoere, tis ſtrange,
Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at:
Yet is it true Sir.

2 I doe well beleeve you,

1 We muſt forbear. Heere comes the Gentleman,
The Queene, and Princeſſe.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter the Queene, Poſthumus, and Imogen.

Que. No, be aſſur'd you ſhall not find me (Daughter)
After the ſlander of moſt Step-Mothers,
Evill-ey'd unto you. You're my Priſoner, but
Your Gaolor ſhall deliver you the keyes

That locke up your reſtraint. For you Poſthumus,
So ſoone as I can win th'offended King,
I will be knowne your Advocate: marry yet
The fire of Rage is in him, and twere good
You lean'd unto his Sentence, with what patience
Your wiſedome may informe you.
Poſt. Pleaſe your Highneſſe,
I will from hence to day.
Que. You know the perill:
Ile fetch a turne about the Garden, pittying
The pangs of barr'd Affections, though the King
Hath charg'd you ſhould not ſpeake together. Exit.
Imo. O diſſembling Curteſie! How fine this Tyrant
Can tickle where ſhe wounds? My deereſt Husband,
I ſomething feare my fathers wrath, but nothing
(Alwayes reſerv'd my holy duty) what
His rage can doe on me. You muſt be gone,
And I ſhall heere abide the hourely ſhot
Of angry eyes: not comforted to live,
But that there is this Iewell in the world,
That I may ſee againe.
Poſt. My Queene, my Miſtris:
O Lady, weepe no more, leſt I give cauſe
To be ſuſpected of more tenderneſſe
Then doth become a man. I will remaine
The loyall'ſt husband, that did ere plight troth.
My reſidence in Rome, at one Filorio's,
Who, to my Father was a friend, to me
Knowne but by Letter; thither write (my Queene)
And with mine eyes, Ile drinke the words you ſend,
Though Inke be made of Gall.

Enter Queene.

Que. Be briefe, I pray you:
If the King come, I ſhall incurre, I know not
How much of his diſpleaſure: yet Ile move him
To walke this way: I never doe him wrong,
But he do's buy my injuries, to be friendes:
Payes deere for my offences.
Poſt. Should we be taking leave
As long a terme as yet we have to live,
The loathneſſe to depart, would grow: Adieu.
Imo. Nay, ſtay a little:
Were you but riding forth to ayre your ſelfe,
Such parting were too petty. Looke heere (Love)
This Diamond was my Mothers; take it (Heart)
But keepe it till you wooe another Wife,
When Imogen is dead.
Poſt. How, how? Another?
You gentle gods, give me but this I have,
And ſeare up my embracements from a next,
With bonds of death. Remaine, remaine thou heere,
While ſenſe can keepe it on: And ſweeteſt, faireſt,
As I (my poore ſelfe) did exchange for you
To your ſo infinite loſſe: ſo in our trifles
I ſtill winne of you. For my ſake weare this,
It is a Manacle of Love, Ile place it
Vpon this fayreſt Priſoner.
Imo. O the Gods!
When ſhall we ſee againe?

Enter Cymbeline, and Lords.

Poſt. Alacke, the King.
Cym. Thou baſeſt thing, avoyd hence, from my ſight:
If after this command thou fraught the Court
With thy unworthineſſe, thou dyeſt. Away,
Thou'rt poyſon to my blood.
Poſt. The gods protect you,
And bleſſe the good Remainders of the Court:
I am gone. Exit.
Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death
More ſharpe then this is.
Cym. O diſloyall thing,
That ſhouldſt repayre my youth, thou heap'ſt
A yeares age on me.
Imo. I beſeech you Sir,
Harme not your ſelfe with your vexation,
I am ſenſeleſſe of your Wrath; a Touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all feares.
Cym. Paſt Grace? Obedience?
Imo. Paſt hope, and in diſpaire, that way paſt Grace.
Cym. That mightſt have had
The ſole Sonne of my Queene.
Imo. O bleſſed, that I might not: I choſe an Eagle,
And did avoyd a Puttocke.
Cym. Thou took'ſt a Begger, wouldſt have made my Throne, a Seate for baſeneſſe.
Imo. No, I rather added a luſtre to it.
Cym. O thou vilde one!
Imo. Sir,
It is your fault that I have lov'd Poſthumus:
You bred him as my Play-fellow, and he is
A man, worth any woman: Over-buyes me
Almoſt the ſumme he payes.
Cym. What? art thou mad?
Imo. Almoſt Sir: heaven reſtore me: would I were
A Neat-heards Daughter, and my Leonatus
Our Neighbour-Shepheards Sonne.

Enter Queene.

Cym. Thou fooliſh thing;
They were againe together: you have done
Not after our command. Away with her,
And pen her up.
Que. Beſeech your patience: Peace
Deere Lady daughter, peace. Sweet Soveraigne,
Leave us to our ſelves, and make your ſelfe ſome comfort
Out of your beſt advice.
Cym. Nay let her languiſh
A drop of blood a day, and being aged
Dye of this Folly. Exit.

Enter Piſanio.

Que. Fye, you muſt give way:
Heere is your Servant. How now Sir? What newes?
Piſ. My Lord your Sonne, drew on my Maſter.
Que. Hah?
No harme I truſt is done?
Piſa. There might have beene,
But that my Maſter rather plaid, then fought,
And had no helpe of Anger: they were parted
By Gentlemen, at hand.
Que. I am very glad on't.
Imo. Your Son's my fathers friend, he takes his part
To draw upon an Exile. O brave Sir,
I would they were in Affricke both together,
My ſelfe by with a Needle, that I might pricke
The goer backe. Why came you from your Maſter?
Piſa. On his command: he would not ſuffer me
To bring him to the haven: left theſe Notes
Of what commands I ſhould be ſubject to,
When't pleas'd you to employ me.
Que. This hath beene
Your faithfull Servant: I dare lay mine honour
He will remaine ſo.
Piſa. I humbly thanke your highneſſe.

Que. Pray walke a-while.
Imo. About ſome halfe houre hence,
Pray you ſpeake with me;
You ſhall (at leaſt) goe ſee my Lord aboord.
For this time leave me. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Clotten, and two Lords.

1 Sir, I would adviſe you to ſhift a Shirt; the Violence of Action hath made you reeke as a Sacrifice: where ayre comes out, ayre comes in: Theres none abroad ſo wholeſome as that you vent.

Clot. If my Shirt were bloody, then to ſhift it.
Have I hurt him?

2 No faith: not ſo much as his patience.

1 Hurt him? His bodie's a paſſable Carkaſſe if he be not hurt. It is a through-fare for Steele if it be not hurt.

2 His Steele was in debt, it went oth'Backe-ſide the Towne.

Clot. The Villaine would not ſtand me.]

2 No, but he fled forward ſtill, toward your face.

1 Stand you? you have Land enough of your owne:
But he added to your having, gave you ſome ground.

2 As many Inches, as you have Oceans (Puppies.)

Clot. I would they had not come betweene us.

2 So would I, till you had meaſur'd how long a foole you were upon the ground.

Clot. And that ſhe ſhould love this fellow, and refuſe me.

2 If it be a ſin to make a true election, ſhe is damn'd.

1 Sir, as I told you alwayes: her Beauty and her Braine goe not together. Shees a good ſigne, but I have ſeene ſmall reflection of her wit.

2 She ſhines not upon Fooles, leſt the reflection
Should hurt her.

Clot. Come, Ile to my Chamber: would there had beene ſome hurt done.

2 I wiſh not ſo, unleſſe it had bin the fall of an Aſſe, which is no great hurt.

Clot. You'll goe with us?

1 Ile attend your Lordſhip.

Clot. Nay come, lets goe together.

2 Well my Lord. Exeunt

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Imogen, and Piſanio.

Imo. I would thou grew'ſt unto the ſhores oth'haven,
And queſtioned'ſt every Saile: if he ſhould write,
And I not have it, 'twere a Paper loſt
As offer'd mercy is: What was the laſt
That he ſpake to thee?
Piſa. It was his Queene, his Queene.
Imo. Then wav'd his Handkerchiefe?
Piſa. And kiſt it, Madam.
Imo. Senſeleſſe Linnen, happier therein then I:
And that was all?
Piſo. No Madam: for ſo long
As he could make me with his eye, or eare,
Diſtinguiſh him from others, he did keepe
The Decke, with Glove, or Hat, or Handkerchiſe,
Still waving, as the fits and ſtirres of's mind
Could beſt expreſſe how ſlow his Soule ſayl'd on,
How ſwift his Ship.
Imo. Thou ſhouldſt have made him
As little as a Crow, or leſſe, ere left
To after-eye him.
Piſa. Madam, ſo I did.
Imo. I would have broke mine eye-ſtrings;
Crack'd them, but to looke upon him, till the diminution
Of ſpace, had pointed him ſharpe as my Needle:
Nay, followed him, till he had melted from
The ſmallneſſe of a Gnat, to ayre: and then
Have turn'd mine eye, and wept. But good Piſanio,
When ſhall we heare from him.
Piſa. Be aſſur'd Madam,
With his next vantage.
Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Moſt pretty things to ſay: Ere I could tell him
How I would thinke on him at certaine houres,
Such thoughts, and ſuch: Or I could make him ſweare,
The Shees of Italy ſhould not betray
Mine Intereſt, and his Honor: or have charg'd him
At the ſixt houre of Morne, at Noone, at Midnight,
T'encounter me with Oriſons, for then
I am in heaven for him: Or ere I could,
Give him that parting kiſſe, which I had ſet
Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And like the Tyrannous breathing of the North,
Shakes all our buddes from growing.

Enter a Lady.

Lad. The Queene (Madam)
Deſires your highneſſe Company.
Imo. Thoſe things I bid you doe, get them diſpatch'd,
I will attend the Queene.
Piſa. Madam, I ſhall. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Philario, Iachimo, a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard.

Iach. Beleeve it Sir, I have ſeene him in Britaine; he was then of a Creſſent note, expected to prove ſo worthy, as ſince he hath beene allowed the name of. But I could then have look'd on him, without the helpe of Admiration, though the Catalogue of his endowments had bin tabled by his ſide, and I to peruſe him by Items.

Phil. You ſpeake of him when he was leſſe furniſh'd, then now he is, with that which makes him both without, and within.

French. I have ſeene him France: we had very many there, could behold the Sunne, with as firme eyes as he.

Iach. This matter of marrying his King Daughter, wherein he muſt be weighed rather by her valew, then his owne, words him (I doubt not) a great deale from the matter.

French. And then his baniſhment.

Iach. I, and the approbation of thoſe that weepe this lamentable divorce under her colours, are wonderfully to extend him, be it but to fortifie here judgement, which elſe an eaſie battery might lay flat, for taking a Begger without leſſe quality. But how comes it, he is to ſojourne with you? How creepes acquaintance?

Phil. His father and I were Souldiers together, to whom I have bin often bound for no leſſe then my life.

Enter Poſthumus.

Heere comes the Britaine. Let him be ſo entertained amongſt you, as ſuites with Gentlemen of your knowing, to a ſtranger of his quality. I beſeech you all be better knowne to this Gentleman, whom I commend to you, as a Noble Friend of mine. How Worthy he is, I will leave to appeare hereafter, rather then ſtory him in his owne hearing.

Fren. Sir, we have knowne together in Orleance.

Poſt. Since when I have bin debtor to you for courteſies, which I will be ever to pay, and yet pay ſtill.

Fren. Sir, you ore-rate my poore kindneſſe, I was glad I did attone my Countryman and you; it had beene pitty you ſhould have beene put together, with ſo mortall a purpoſe, as then each bore, upon importance of ſo ſlight and triviall a nature.

Poſt. By your pardon Sir, I was then a young Traveller, rather ſhunn'd to goe even with what I heard, then in my every action to be guided by others experiences: but upon my mended judgement (if I offend to ſay it is mended) my Quarrell was not altogether ſlight.

French. Faith yes, to bee put to the arbitrement of Swords, and by ſuch two, that would by all likelyhood have confounded one the other, or have falne both.

Iach. Can we with manners, aske what was the difference?

Fren. Safely, I thinke, 'twas a contention in publicke, which may (without contradiction) ſuffer the report. It was much like an argument that fell out laſt night, where earch of us fell in praiſe of our Country-Miſtreſſes. This Gentleman, at that time vouching (and upon warrant of bloody affirmation) his to be more Faire, Vertuous, Wiſe, Chaſte, Conſtant, Qualified, and leſſe attemptible then any, the rareſt of our Ladies in France.

Iach. That Lady is not now living: or this Gentlemans opinion by this worne out.

Poſt. She holds her Vertue ſtill, and I my mind.

Iach. You muſt not ſo farre preferre her, fore ours of Italy.

Poſt. Being ſo farre provok'd as I was in France: I would abate her nothing, though I profeſſe my ſelfe her Adorer, not her friend.

Iach. As faire, and as good: a kind of hand in hand compariſon, had beene ſomething too faire, and too good for any Lady in Britany: if ſhe went before others. I have ſeene as that Diamond of yours out-luſters many I have beheld. I could not beleeve ſhe excelled many: but I have not ſeene the moſt pretious Diamond that is, nor you the Lady.

Poſt. I prais'd her, as I rated her: ſo doe I my Stone.

Iach. What doe you eſteeme it at?

Poſt. More then the world enjoyes.

Iach. Either your unparagon'd Miſtris is dead, or ſhes out-priz'd by a trifle.

Poſt. You are miſtaken: the one may be ſold or given, or if there were wealth enough for the purchaſes, or merite for the gift. The other is not a thing for ſale, and onely the gift of the gods.

Iach. Which the gods have given you?

Poſt. Which by their Graces I will keepe.

Iach. You may weare her in title yours: but you know ſtrange Fowle light upon neighbouring Ponds. Your Ring may be ſtolne too, ſo your brace of unprizeable Eſtimations, the one is but fraile, and the other Caſuall. A cunning Thiefe, or a (that way) accompliſh'd Courtier, would hazzard the winning both of firſt and laſt.

Poſt. Your Italy, containes none ſo accompliſh'd a Courtier to convince the honour of my Miſtris: if in the holding or loſſe of that, you terme her fraile, I doe nothing doubt you have ſtore of Theeues, notwithſtanding I feare not my Ring.

Phil. Let us leave heere Gentlemen.

Poſt. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy Signior I thanke him, makes no ſtranger of me, we are familiar at firſt.

Iach. With five times ſo much converſation, I ſhould get gronnd of your faire Miſtris; make her goe backe, even to the yeilding, had I admittance, and opportunity to friend.

Poſt. No, no.

Iach. I dare thereupon pawne the moyty of my Eſtate, to your Ring, which in my opinion ore-values it ſomething: but I make my wager rather againſt your Confidence, then her Reputation. And to barre your offence heerein to, I durſt attempt it againſt any Lady in the world.

Poſt. You are a great deale abus'd in too bold a perſwaſion, and I doubt not you ſuſtaine what y'are worthy of, by your Attempt.

Iach. Whats that?

Poſt. A Repulſe though your Attempt (as you call it) deſerve more; a puniſhment too.

Phi. Gentlemen, enough of this, it came in too ſodainely, let it dye as it was borne, and I pray you be better acquainted.

Iach. Would I had put my Eſtate, and my Neighbors on th'approbation of what I have ſpoke.

Poſt. What Lady would you chuſe to aſſaile?

Iach. Yours, whom in conſtancy you thinke ſtands ſo ſafe. I will lay you ten thouſands Duckets to your Ring, that commend me to the Court where your Lady is, with no more advantage then the opportunity of a ſecond conference, and I will bring from thence, that honor of hers, which you imagine ſo reſerv'd.

Poſthumus. I will wage againſt your Gold, Gold to it: My Ring I hold deere as my finger, tis part of it.

Iach. You are a friend, and therein the wiſer: if you buy Ladies fleſh at a Million a Dram, you cannot preſerve it from tainting; but I ſee you have ſome Religion in you, that you feare.

Poſt. This is but a cuſtome in your tongue: you beare a graver purpoſe I hope.

Iach. I am the Maſter of my ſpeeches, and would undergoe whats ſpoken, I ſweare.

Poſthu. Will you? I ſhall but lend my Diamond till your returne: let there be Covenants drawne between's. My Miſtris exceedes in goodneſſe, the hugeneſſe of your unworthy thinking. I dare you to this match: heres my Ring.

Phil. I will have it no lay.

Iach. By the gods it is one: if I bring you no ſufficient teſtimony that I have enjoy'd the deereſt bodily part of your Miſtris: my ten thouſand Duckets are yours ſo is your Diamond too : if I come off, and leave her in ſuch honor as you have truſt in : She your Iewell, this your Iewell, and my Gold are yours : provided I have your commendation, for my more entertainment.

Poſt. I embrace theſe Conditions, let us have Articles betwixt us : onely thus farre you ſhall anſwer, if you make your voyage upon her, and give me directly to underſtand, you have prevayl'd, I am no further your Enemy, ſhe is not worth our debate. If ſhe remaine unſeduc'd, you not making it appeare otherwiſe : for your ill opinion, and th'aſſault you have made to her chaſtity, you ſhall anſwer me with your Sword.

Iach. Your hand, a Covenant : we will have theſe things ſet downe by lawfull Counſell, and ſtraight away for Britaine, leſt the Bargain ſhould catch cold, and ſterve : I will fetch my Gold, and have our two Wagers recorded.

Poſt. Agreed.

French. Will this hold, thinke you.

Phil. Signior Iachimo will not from it.
Pray let us follow em. Exeunt.

Scæna Sexta.

Enter Queene, Ladies, and Cornelius.

Quee. Whiles yet the dewe's on ground
Gather thoſe Flowers,
Make haſte. Who has the note of them ?
Lad. I Madam.
Que. Diſpatch. Exeunt Ladies.
Now Maſter Doctor, have you brought thoſe drugges :
Cor. Pleaſeth your highneſſe, I : here they are, Madam:
But I beſeech your Grace, without offence
(My Conſcience bids me aske) wherefore you have Commanded of me theſe moſt poyſonous Compounds,
Which are the moovers of a languiſhing death :
But though ſlow, deadly.
Que. I wonder, Doctor,
Thou ask'ſt me ſuch a Queſtion; have I not beene
Thy Pupill long ? haſt thou not learn'd me how
To make Perfumes ? Diſtill ? Preſerve ? Yea ſo,
That our great King himſelfe doth woe me oft
For my Confections ? having thus farre proceeded,
(Vnleſſe thou think'ſt me divelliſh) iſt not meete
That I did amplifie my judgement in
Other Concluſions ? I will try the forces
Of theſe thy Compounds, on ſuch Creatures as
We count not worth the hanging (but none humane)
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their Act, and by them gather
Their ſeverall vertues, and effects.
Corn. Your highneſſe
Shall from this practiſe, but make hard your heart :
Beſides, the ſeeing theſe effects will be
Both noyſome and infectious.
Quee. O content thee.

Enter Piſanio.

Heere comes a flattering Raſcall, upon him
Will I firſt worke : Hes for his Maſter,
And enemy to my Sonne. How now Piſanio ?
Doctor, your ſervice for this time is ended,
Take your owne way.
Cor. I doe ſuſpect you, Madam,
But you ſhall doe no harme.
Que. Hearke thee a word.
Cor. I doe not like her. She doth thinke ſhe has Strange ling'ring poyſons : I doe know her ſpirit,
And will not truſt one of her malice, with
A drugge of ſuch damn'd Nature: Thoſe ſhe has,
Will ſtupifie and dull the Senſe a while,
Which firſt (perchance) ſhe'll prove on Cats and Dogs,
Then afterward up higher : but there is
No danger in what ſhew of death it makes,
More then the locking up the Spirits a time,
To be more freſh, reviving. She is fool'd
With a moſt falſe effect : and I the truer,
So to be falſe with her.
Que. No further ſervice, Doctor,
Vntill I ſend for thee.
Cor. I humbly take my leave. Exit.
Que. Weepes ſhe ſtill (ſaiſt thou ?)
Doſt thou thinke in time
She will not quench, and let inſtructions enter
Where Folly now poſſeſſes ? Doe thou worke :
When thou ſhalt bring me word ſhe loves my Sonne,
Ile tell thee on the inſtant, thou art then
As great as is thy Maſter : Greater, for
His Fortunes all lye ſpeechleſſe, and his name
Is at laſt gaſpe. Returne he cannot, nor Continue where he is : To ſhift his being,
Is to exchange one miſery with another,
And every day that comes, comes to decay
A dayes worke in him. What ſhalt thou expect
To be depender on a thing that leanes ?
Who cannot be new built, nor has no friends
So much, as but to prop him ? Thou tak'ſt up
Thou knowſt not what : But take it for thy labour,
It is a thing I make, which hath the King
Five times redeem'd from death. I doe not know
What is more Cordiall. Nay I prethee take it,
It is an earneſt of a farther good
That I meane to thee. Tell thy Miſtris how
The caſe ſtands with her : doo't, as from thy ſelfe :
Thinke what a chance thou changeſt on, but thinke
Thou haſt thy Miſtris ſtill, too boote, my Sonne,
Who ſhall take notice of thee. Ile move the King
To any ſhape of thy Preferment, ſuch
As thou'lt deſire : and then my ſelfe, I chiefely,
That ſet thee on to this deſert, am bound
To loade thy merit richly. Call my women. Exit Piſanio
Thinke on my words. A ſlye, and conſtant knave,
Not to be ſhak'd : the Agent for his Maſter,
And the Remembrancer of her, to hold
The hand faſt to her Lord. I have given him that,
Which if he take, ſhall quite unpeople her
Of Leidgers for her Sweet : and which ſhe after,
Except ſhe bend her humor, ſhall be aſſur'd
To taſte of too.

Enter Piſanio, and Ladies.

So, ſo : Well done, well done :
The Violets, Cowſlippes, and the Prime-Roſes
Beare to my Cloſſet : Fare thee well, Piſanio,
Thinke on my words. Exit Queene, and Ladies.
Piſa. And ſhall doe :
But when to my good Lord, I prove untrue,
Ile choake my ſelfe : theres all Ile doe for you. Exit.

Scæna Septima.

Enter Imogen alone.

Imo. A Father cruell, and a Stepdame falſe,
A fooliſh Suitor to a Wedded Lady,
That hath her Husband baniſh'd : O, that Husband,
My ſupreame Crowne of griefe, and thoſe repeated
Vexations of it. Had I bin Theefe-ſtolne,
As my two Brothers, happy : but moſt miſerable
Is the deſire thats glorious. Bleſſed be thoſe
How meane ſo ere, that have their honeſt wills,
Which ſeaſons comfort. Who may this be? Fye.

Enter Piſanio, and Iachimo.

Piſa. Madam, a Noble Gentleman of Rome,
Comes from my Lord with Letters.
Iach. Change you, Madam !
The Worthy Leonatus is in ſafety,
And greets your Highneſſe deerely.
Imo. Thankes good Sir,
You're kindly welcome.
Iach. All of her, that is out of doore, moſt rich :
If ſhe be furniſh'd with a mind ſo rare,
She is alone th'Arabian-Bird ; and I
Have loſt the wager. Boldneſſe be my Friend :
Arme me Audacity from head to foote,
Or like the Parthian I ſhall flying fight,
Rather directly flye.

Imogen reads.

He is one of the Nobleſt note, to whoſe kindneſſes I am moſt infinitely tyed. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your truſt. Leonatus.

So farre I reade aloud.
But even the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by'th'reſt, and take it thankefully.
You are as welcome (worthy Sir) as I
Have words to bid you, and ſhall finde it ſo
In all that I can doe.
Iach. Thankes faireſt Lady :
What are men mad? Hath Nature given them eyes
To ſee this valuted Arch, and the rich Crop
Of Sea, and Land, which can diſtinguiſh twixt
The firy Orbes above, and the twinn'd Stones
Vpon the number'd Beach, and can we not
Partition make with Spectales ſo pretious
Twixt faire, and foule?
Imo. What makes your admiration?
Iach. It cannot be ith'eye : for Apes, and Monkeyes
Twixt two ſuch Shes, would chatter this way, and Contemne with mowes the other. Nor ith judgement :
For Idiots in this caſe of favour, would
Be wiſely definit : Nor ith Appetite.
Sluttery to ſuch neate Excellence, oppos'd
Should make deſire vomit emptineſſe,
Not ſo allur'd to feed.
Imo. What is the matter trow?
Iach. The Cloyed will :
That ſatiate yet unſatisfi'd deſire, that Tub
Both fill'd and running : Ravening firſt the Lambe,
Longs after for the Garbage.
Imo. What, deere Sir,
Thus rap's you? Are you well?
Iach. Thankes Madam, well : Beſeech you Sir,
Deſire my Mans abode, where I did leave him :
Hes ſtrange and peeviſh.
Piſa. I was going Sir,
To give him welcome.
Imo. Continues well my Lord?
His health beſeech you?
Iach. Well, Madam.
Imo. Is he diſpos'd to mirth? I hope he is.
Iach. Exceeding pleaſant : none a ſtranger there,
So merry, and ſo gameſome : he is calld
The Britaine Reveller.
Imo. When he was heere
He did incline to ſadneſſe, and oft times
Not knowing why.
Iach. I never ſaw him ſad.
There is a Frenchman his Companion, one
An eminent Monſieur, that it ſeemes much loves
A Gallian-Girle at home. He furnaces
The thicke ſides from him ; whiles the iolly Britaine,
(Your Lord I meane) laughes froms free lungs : cries oh,
Can my ſides hold, to thinke that man who knowes
By Hiſtory, Report, or his owne proofe
What woman is, yea what ſhe cannot chooſe
But muſt be : wills free houres languiſh,
For aſſured bondage?
Imo. Will my Lord ſay ſo?
Iach. I Madam, with his eyes in flood with laughter,
It is a Recreation to be by
And heare him mocke the Frenchman :
But heav'ns know ſome men are much too blame.
Imo. Not he I hope.
Iach. Not he :
But yet heavens bounty towards him, might
Be us'd more thankfully. In himſelfe tis much ;
In you which I account his beyond all Talents.
Whilſt I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pitty too.
Imo. What doe you pitty Sir?
Iach. Two Creatures heartily.
Imo. Am I one Sir?
You looke on me : what wracke diſcerne you in me
Deſerves your pitty?
Iach. Lamentable : what
To hide me from the radiant Sun, and ſolace
Ith'Dungeon by a Snuffe?
Imo. I pray you Sir,
Deliver with more openneſſe your anſweres
To my demands. Why doe you pitty me?
Iach. That others doe
(I was about to ſay) enjoy your——but
It is an office of the gods to venge it,
Not mine to ſpeake on't.
Imo. You doe ſeeme to know
Something of me, or what concernes me ; pray you
Since doubting things goe ill, often hurts more
Then to be ſure they doe. For Certainties
Either are paſt remedies ; or timely knowing,
The remedy then borne. Diſcover to me
What both you ſpur and ſtop.
Iach. Had I this cheeke
To bathe my lips upon : this hand, whoſe touch,
(Whoſe every touch) would force the feelers ſoule
To th'oath of Loyalty. This object, which Takes priſoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it onely heere, ſhould I (damnd then)

Slaver with lippes as common as the ſtaires
That mount the Capitoll: Ioyne gripes, with hands
Made hard with hourely falſhood (falſhood as
With labour:) then by peeping in an eye
Baſe and illuſtrious as the ſmoaky light
Thats fed with ſtinking Tallow: it were fit
That all the plagues of hell ſhould at one time
Encounter ſuch revolt.

Imo. My Lord, I feare
Has forgot Brittaine.

Iach. And himſelfe, not I
Inclin'd to this intelligence, pronounce
The Beggery of his change: but tis your Graces
That from my muteſt Conſcience, to my tongue,
Charmes this report out.

Imo. Let me heare no more.

Iach. O deereſt Soule: your Cauſe doth ſtrike my heart
With pitty, that doth make me ſicke. A Lady
So faire, and faſten'd to an Empery
Would make the greatſt King double, to be partner'd
With Tomboyes hyr'd, with that ſelfe-exhibition
Which your owne Coffers yeeld: with diſeas'd ventures
That play with all infirmities for Gold,
Which rottenneſſe can lend Nature. Such boyl'd ſtuffe
As well might poyſon Poyſon. Be reveng'd,
Or ſhe that bore you, was no Queene, and you
Recoyle from your great Stocke.

Imo. Reveng'd:
How ſhould I be reveng'd? if this be true,
(As I have ſuch a heart, that both mine eares Muſt not in haſte abuſe) if it be true,
How ſhould I be reveng'd?

Iach. Should he make me
Live like Diana's Prieſt, betwixt cold ſheets;
Whiles he is valting variable Rampes
In your deſpight, upon your purſe: revenge it.
I dedicate my ſelfe to your ſweet pleaſure,
More Noble then that runnagate to your bed,
And will continue faſt to your Affection,
Still cloſe, as ſure.

Imo. What hoa, Piſanio?

Iach. Let me my ſervice tender on your lippes.

Imo. Away, I doe condemne mine eares, that have
So long attended thee. If thou wert honourable
Thou wouldſt have told this tale for Vertue, not
For ſuch an end thou ſeek'ſt, as baſe, as ſtrange:
Thou wrongſt a Gentleman, who is as farre
From thy report, as thou from honor: and
Solicitſt heere a Lady, that diſdaines
Thee, and the Divell alike. What hoa, Piſanio?
The King my father ſhall be made acquainted
Of thy Aſſault: if he ſhall thinke it fit,
A ſawcy Stranger in his Court, to Mart
As in a Romiſh Stew, and to expound
His beaſtly minde to us; he hath a Court
He little cares for, and a Daughter, whom
He not reſpects at all. What hoa, Piſanio?

Iach. O happy Leonatus I may ſay,
The credit that thy Lady hath of thee
Deſerves thy truſt, and thy moſt perfect goodneſſe
Her aſſur'd credit. Bleſſed liue you long,
A Lady to the worthieſt Sir, that ever
Country call'd his; and you his Miſtris, onely
For the moſt worthieſt fit. Give me your pardon.
I have ſpoke this to know if your Affiance
Were deepely rooted, and ſhall make your Lord,
That which he is, new ore; and he is one
The trueſt manner'd: ſuch a holy Witch,
That he enchants Societies into him:
Halfe all mens hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.

Iach. He ſits mongſt men, like a deſcended god:
He hath a kinde of honor ſets him off,
More then a mortall ſeeming. Be not angry
(Moſt mighty Princeſſe) that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a falſe report, which hath
Honour'd with confirmation your great Iudgement,
In the election of a Sir, ſo rare.
Which you know, cannot erre. The love I beare him,
Made me to fan you thus, but the gods made you
(Vnlike all others) chaffeleſſe. Pray your pardon.

Imo. Alls well Sir:
Take my powre ith' Court for yours.

Iach. My humble thankes: I had almoſt forgot
T'intreat your Grace, but in a ſmall requeſt,
And yet of moment too, for it concernes,
Your Lord, my ſelfe, and other Noble friends
Are partners in the buſineſſe.

Imo. Pray what iſt?

Iach. Some dozen Romanes of us, and your Lord
(The beſt feather of our wing) have mingled ſummes
To buy a Preſent for the Emperor:
Which I (the factor for the reſt) have done
In France: tis Plate of rare device, and Iewels
Of rich, and exquiſite forme, their valewes great,
And I am ſomething curious, being ſtrange,
To have them in ſafe ſtowage: May it pleaſe you
To take them in protection.

Imo. Willingly:
And pawne mine honor for their ſafty, ſince
My Lord hath intereſt in them, I will kepe them
In my Bed chamber:

Iach. They are in a Trunke
Attended by my men: I will make bold
To ſend them to you, onely for this night:
I muſt aboord to morrow,

Imo. O no, no.

Iach. Yes I beſeech: or I ſhall ſhort my word:
By length'ning my returne. From Gallia,
I croſt the Seas on purpoſe, and on promiſe
To ſee your Grace.

Imo. I thanke you for your paines:
But not away to morrow.

Iach. O I muſt Madam.
Therefore I ſhall beſeech you, if you pleaſe
To greet your Lord with writing, doo't to night,
I have out-ſtood my time, which is materiall
To'th' tender of our Preſent.

Imo. I will write:
Send your Trunke to me, it ſhall ſafe be kept,
And truely yeelded you: you're very welcome. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Clotten, and the two Lords.

Clot. Was there ever man had ſuch lucke? when I kiſt the Iacke upon an up-caſt, to be hit away? I had a hundred pound on't; and then a whorſon Iacke-an-Apes, muſt take me up for ſwearing, as if I borrowed mine oathes of him, and might not ſpend them at my pleaſure.

1 What got he by that? you have broke his pate with your Bowle.

2 If his wit had bin like him that broke it: it would have run all out.

Clot. When a Gentleman is diſpos'd to ſweare: it is not for any ſtanders by to curtall his oathes. Ha?

2 No my Lord; nor crop the eares of them.

Clot. Whorſon dog: I give him ſatisfaction? would he had bin one of my Ranke.

2 To have ſmell'd like a Foole.

Clot. I am not vext more at any thing in th'earth: a pox on't. I had rather not be ſo Noble as I am: they dare not fight with me, becauſe of the Queene my Mother: every Iacke-Slave hath his belly full of fighting, and I muſt goe up and downe like a Cocke, that no body can match.

2 You are Cocke and Capon too, and you crow Cocke, with your combe on.

Clot. Sayeſt thou?

2 It is not fit you Lordſhip ſhould undertake every Companion, that you give offence to.

Clot. No, I know that: but it is fit I ſhould commit offence to my inferiors.

2 I, it is fit for your Lordſhip onely.

Clot. Why ſo I ſay.

1 Did you heare of a Stranger thats come to Court to night?

Clot. A Stranger, and I not know on't?

2 Hes a ſtrange fellow himſelfe, and knowes it not.

1 Theres an Italian come, and tis though one of Leonatus friendes.

Clot. Leonatus? A baniſht Raſcall; and he's another, whatſoever he be. Who told you of this Stranger?

1 One of your Lordſhips Pages.

Clot. Is it fit I went to looke upon him? Is there no derogation in't?

2 You cannot derogate my Lord.

Clot. Not eaſily I thinke.

2 You are a Foole granted, therefore your Iſſues being fooliſh doe not derogate.

Clot. Come, Ile goe ſee this Italian: what I have loſt to day at Bowles, Ile winne to night of him. Come: go.

2 Ile attend your Lordſhip. Exit.

That ſuch a crafty Divell as is his Mother
Should yeild the world this Aſſe: a woman, that
Beares all downe with her Braine, and this her Sonne,
Cannot take two from twenty for his heart,
And leave eighteene. Alas poore Princeſſe,
Thou divine Imogen, what thou endur'ſt,
Betwixt a Father by thy Step-dame govern'd,
A Mother hourely coyning plots: A Wooer,
More hatefull then the foule expulſion is
Of thy deere husband, Then that horrid Act
Of the divorce, he'ld make the heavens hold firme
The walls of thy deere honor. Keepe unſhak'd
That Temple thy faire mind, that thou maiſt ſtand
T'enjoy thy baniſh'd Lord: and this great Land. Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Imogen, in her Bed, and a Lady.

Imo. Whos there? My woman: Helene?

La. Pleaſe you Madam.

Imo. What houre is it?

Lad. Almoſt midnight, Madam.

Imo. I have read three houres then:
Mine eyes are weake,
Fold downe the leaſe where I have left: to bed.
Take not away the Taper, leave it burning:
And if thou canſt awake by foure o'th'clocke,
I prethee call me: Sleepe hath ſeiz'd me wholly.
To your protection I commend me, gods,
From Fayries, and the Tempters of the night,
Guard me beſeech yee. Sleepes.

Iachimo from the Trunke.

Iach. The Crickets ſing, and mans ore-labor'd ſenſe
Repaires it ſelfe by reſt: Our Tarquine thus
Did ſoftly preſſe the Ruſhes, ere he waken'd
The Chaſtity he wounded. Cytherea,
How bravely thou becomſt thy Bed; freſh Lilly,
And whiter then the Sheets: that I might touch,
But kiſſe, one kiſſe. Rubies unparagon'd,
How deerely they do't: Tis her breathing that
Perfumes the Chamber thus: the flame oth'Taper
Bowes toward her, and would under-peepe her lids.
To ſee th'incloſed Lights, now Canopied
Vnder the windowes, White and Azure lac'd
With Blew of heavens owne tinct. But my deſigne.
To note the Chamber, I will write all downe,
Such, and ſuch pictures: There the window, ſuch
Th'adornement of her Bed; the Arras, Figures,
Why ſuch, and ſuch: and the Contents oth'Story.
Ah, but ſo ſhe naturall notes about her Body,
Above ten thouſand meaner Moveables
Would teſtifie, t'enrich mine Inventory.
O ſleepe, thou Ape of death, lye dull upon her,
And be her Senſe but as a Monument,
Thus in a Chappell lying. Come off, come off;
As ſlippery as the Gordian-knot was hard.
Tis mine, and this will witneſſe outwardly,
As ſtrongly as the Conſcience do's within:
To th'madding of her Lord. On her left breſt
A mole Cinque-ſpotted: Like the Crimſon drops
I'th bottome of a Cowſlippe. Heeres a Voucher,
Stronger then ever Law could make: this Secret
Will force him thinke I have pick'd the locke, and t'ane
The treaſure of her honor. No more: to what end?
Why ſhould I write this downe, thats riveted,
Screw'd to my memory. She hath bin reading late,
The Tale of Tereus, heere the leaſes turn'd downe
Where Philomele gave up. I have enough,
To th Truncke againe, and ſhut the ſpring of it.
Swift, ſwift, you Dragons of the night, that dawning
May beare the Ravens eye: I lodge in feare,
Though this a heavenly Angell: hell is heere.
Clocke ſtrikes.
One, two, three: time, time. Exit.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Clotten, and Lords.

1 Your Lordſhip is the moſt patient man in loſſe, the moſt coldeſt that turn'd up Ace.

Clot. It would make any man cold to looſe.

1 But not every man patient after the noble temper of your Lordſhip; You are moſt hot, and furious when you winne.

Winning will put any man into courage: if I could get this fooliſh Imogen, I ſhould have Gold enough: its almoſt morning, is't not?

1 Day, my Lord,

Clot. I would this Muſicke would come: I am adviſed to give her Muſicke a mornings, they ſay it will penetrate.

Enter Muſitians.

Come on, tune: if you can penetrate here with your fingering, ſo: we'll try with tongue too: if none will doe, let her remaine: but Ile never give o're. Firſt, a very excellent good conceited thing; after a wonderfull ſweet aire, with admirable rich words to it, and then let her conſider.

Song.

Hearke, hearke, the Larke at Heavens gate ſings,
and Phœbus gins ariſe,
His Steeds to water at thoſe Springs
on chalic'd Flowers that lyes:
And winking Mary-buds begin to ope their Golden eyes
With every thing that pretty is, my Lady ſweet ariſe:
Ariſe, ariſe.

So, get you gone: if this penetrate, I will conſider your Muſicke the better: if it do not, it is a voyce in her eares which Horſe-haires, and Calves-guts, nor the voyce of unpaved Eunuch to boot, can never amend.

Enter Cymbeline, and Queene.

2 Heere comes the King.

Clot. I am glad I was up ſo late, for thats the reaſon I was up ſo earely: he cannot chooſe but take this Service I have done, fatherly. Good morrow to your Majeſty, and to my gracious Mother.

Cym. Attend you here the doore of our ſtern daughter
Will ſhe not forth?

Clot. I have aſſail'd her with Muſickes, but ſhe vouchſafes no notice.

Cym. The Exile of her Minion is too new,
She hath not yet forgot him, ſome more time
Muſt weare the print of his remembrance ou't,
And then ſhe's yours.

Que. You are moſt bound to'th'King,
Who lets goe by no vantages, that may
Preferre you to his daughter: Frame your ſelfe
To orderly ſolicits, and be friended
With aptneſſe of the ſeaſon: make denials
Encreaſe your Services: ſo ſeeme, as if
You were inſpir'd to doe thoſe duties which
You tender to her: that you in all obey her,
Save when command to your diſmiſſion tends,
And therein you are ſenſeleſſe.

Clot. Senſeleſſe? Not ſo.

Meſ. So like you (Sir) Ambaſſadors fr from Rome;
The one is Caius Lucius.

Cym. A worthy Fellow,
Albeit he comes on angry purpoſe now;
But that's no fault of his: we muſt receive him
According to the honor of his Sender,
And towards himſelfe, his goodneſſe fore-ſpent on us
We muſt extend our notice: Our deere Sonne,
When you have given good morning to your Miſtris,
Attend the Queene, and us, we ſhall have need
T'employ you towards this Romane.
Come our Queene. Exeunt.

Clot. If ſhe be up, Ile ſpeake with her: if not,
Let her lye ſtill, and dreame: by your leave hoa,
I know her women are about her: what
If I doe line one of their hands, tis gold
Which buyes admittance (oft it doth) yea and makes
Diana's Rangers falſe themſelves, yeeld up
Their Deere to'th'ſtand o'th Stealer: and tis gold
Which makes the True-man kill'd, and ſaves the Theefe:
Nay, ſometime hangs both Theefe, and True-man: what
Can it not doe, and undoo? I will make
One of her women Lawyer to me, for
I yet not underſtand the caſe my ſelfe.
By your leave. Knockes.

Enter a Lady.

Lad. Who's there that knockes?

Clot. A Gentleman.

Lad. No more.

Clot. Yes, and a Gentlewomans Sonne.

Lad. Thats more
Then ſome whoſe Taylors are as deere as yours,
Can juſtly boaſt of: whats your Lordſhips pleaſure?

Clot. Your Ladies perſon, is ſhe ready?

Lad. I, to keepe her Chamber.

Clot. There is gold for you,
Sell me your good report.

Lad. How my good name? or to report of you
What I ſhall thinke is good. The Princeſſe.

Enter Imogen.

Clot. Good morrow faireſt, Siſter your ſweet hand.

Imo. Good morrow Sir, you lay out too much paines
For purchaſing but trouble: the thankes I give,
Is telling you that I am poore of thankes,
And ſcarſe can ſpare them.

Clot. Still I ſweare I love you.

Imo. If you but ſaid ſo, twere as deepe with me:
If you ſweare ſtill, your recompence is ſtill
That I regard it not.

Clot. This is no anſwer.

Imo. But that you ſhall not ſay, I yeeld being ſilent,
I would not ſpeake. I pray you ſpare me, faith
I ſhall unfold equall diſcourteſie
To your beſt kindneſſe: one of your great knowing
Should learne (being taught) forbearance.

Clot. To leave you in your madneſſe, twere my ſinne,
I will not.

Imo. Fooles are not mad folkes.

Clot. Doe you call me foole?

Imo. As I am mad I doe:
If you'll be patient, Ile no more be mad,
That cures us both. I am much ſorry (Sir)
You put me to forget a Ladies manners
By being ſo verball: and learne now, for all,
That I which know my heart, doe heere pronounce
By th'very truth of it, I care not for you,
And am ſo neere the lacke of Charity
To accuſe my ſelfe, I hate you: which I had rather
You felt, then make't my boaſt.

Clot. You ſinne againſt
Obedience, which you owe your father, for
The Contract you pretend with that baſe Wretch,
One, bred of Almes, and foſter'd with cold diſhes,
With ſcraps oth'Court: It is no Contract, none;
And though it be allowed in meaner parties
(Yet who then he more meane) to knit their ſoules
(On whom there is no more dependancy
But Brats and Beggery) in ſelfe-figur'd knot,
Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement, by

The conſequence oth' Crowne, and muſt not foyle
The precious note of it; with a baſe Slave,
A Hilding for a Livory, a Squires Cloth,
A Pantler; not ſo eminent.
Imo. Prophane Fellow:
Wert thou the Sonne of Iupiter, and no more,
But what thou art beſides: thou wer't too baſe,
To be his Groome: thou wer't dignified enough
Even to the point of Envy, If twere made
Comparative for your Vertues, to be ſtil'd
The under Hangman of his Kingdome; and hated
For being prefer'd ſo well.
Clot. The South-Fog rot him.
Imo. He never can meete more miſchance, then come
To be but nam'd of thee. His meaneſt Garment
That ever hath but clipt his body, is dearer
In my reſpect, then all the haires above thee,
Were they all made ſuch men: How now Piſanio?
Enter Piſanio.
Clot. His Garment? Now the divell.
Imo. To Dorothy my woman hye thee preſently.
Clot. His Garment?
Imo. I am ſprighted with a Foole,
Frighted, and angred worſe: Goe bid my woman
Search for a Iewell, that too caſually
Hath left mine Arme: it was thy Maſters. Shrew me
If I would loſe it for a Revenew,
Of any Kings in Europe. I doe thinke,
I ſaw't this morning: Confident I am.
Laſt night twas on mine Arme: I kiſs'd it,
I hope it be not gone, to tell my Lord
That I kiſſe aught but him.
Piſa. Twill not be loſt.
Imo. I hope ſo: goe and ſearch.
Clot. You have abus'd me:
His meaneſt Garment?
Imo. I, I ſaid ſo Sir,
If you will make't an Action, call witneſſe to't.
Clot. I will enforme your Father.
Imo. Your Mother too:
Shes my good Lady; and will conceive, I hope
But the worſt of me. So I leave your Sir,
To th' worſt of diſcontent. Exit.
Clot. Ile be reveng'd:
His meaneſt Garment? Well. Exit.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Poſthumus, and Philario.

Poſt. Feare it not Sir: I would I were ſo ſure
To winne the King, as I am bold, her honour
Will remaine hers.
Phil. What meanes doe you make to him?
Poſt. Not any: but abide the change of Time,
Quake in the preſent winters ſtate, and wiſh
That warmer dayes would come: In theſe fear'd hopes
I barely gratifie your love; they fayling
I muſt dye much your debtor.
Phil. Your very goodneſſe, and your company,
Ore payes all I can doe. By this your King,
Hath heard of Great Auguſtus: Caius Lucius,
Will do's Commiſſion throughly. And I thinke
Hee'le grant the Tribute: ſend th' Arrerages,
Or looke upon our Romanes, whoſe remembrance
Is yet freſh in their griefe.
Poſt. I doe beleeve
(Statiſt though I am none, nor like to be)
That this will prove a Warre; and you ſhall heare
The Legion now in Gallia, ſooner landed
In our not-fearing-Britaine, then have tydings
Of any penny Tribute paid. Our Countrymen
Are men more order'd then when Iulius Cæſar
Smil'd at their lacke of skill, but found their courage
Worthy his frowning at. Their diſcipline,
(Now mingled with their courages) will make knowne
To their Approvers, they are People, ſuch
That mend upon the world. Enter Iachimo.
Phil. See Iachimo.
Poſt. The ſwifteſt harts, have poſted you by land;
And Windes of all the Corners kiſs'd your Sailes.
To make your veſſell nimble.
Phil. Welcome Sir.
Poſt. I hope the briefeneſſe of your anſwer, made
The ſpeedineſſe of your returne.
Iach. Your Lady,
Is one of the feyreſt that I have look'd upon
Poſt. And therewithall the beſt, or let her beauty
Looke thorough a Caſement to allure falſe hearts,
And be falſe with them.
Iach. Heere are Letters for you.
Poſt. Their tenure good I truſt.
Iach. T is very like.
Poſt. Was Caius Lucius in the Britaine Court,
When you were there?
Iach. He was expected then,
But not approach'd.
Poſt. All is well yet,
Sparkles this Stone as it was wont, or is't not Too dull for your good wearing?
Iach. If I have loſt it,
I ſhould have loſt the worth of it in Gold,
Ile make a journey twice as farre, t'enjoy
A ſecond night of ſuch ſweet ſhortneſſe, which
Was mine in Britaine, for the Ring is wonne.
Poſt. The Stones too hard to come by.
Iach. Not a whit,
Your Lady being ſo eaſie.
Poſt. Make not Sir,
Your loſſe, your Sport: I hope you know that we
Muſt not continue friends.
Iach. Good Sir, we muſt
If you keepe Covenant: had I not brought
The knowledge of your Miſtris home, I grant
We were to queſtion farther; but I now
Profeſſe my ſelfe the winner of her honor,
Together with your Ring; and not the wronger
Of her, or you, having proceeded but
By both your willes,
Poſt. If you can mak't apparant
That you have taſted her in Bed; my hand,
And Ring is yours. If not, the foule opinion
You had of her pure honor: gaines, or looſes,
Your Sword, or mine, or Maſterleſſe leave both
To who ſhall finde them.
Iach. Sir, my Circumſtances
Being ſo nere the truth, as I will make them,
Muſt firſt induce you to beleeve: whoſe ſtrength
I will confirme with oath, which I doubt not

You'll give me leave to ſpare, when you ſhall finde
You neede it not.
Poſt. Proceed.
Iach. Firſt, her Bed-chamber
(Where I confeſſe I ſlept not, but profeſſe
Had that was well worth watching) it was hang'd
With Tapiſtry of Silke, and Silver, the Story
Proud Cleopatra, when ſhe met her Roman,
And Cidnus ſwell'd above the Bankes, or for
The preſſe of Boates, or Pride: A peece of Worke
So bravely done, ſo rich, that it did ſtrive
In Workemanſhip, and Value, which I wonder'd
Could be ſo rarely, and exactly wrought
Since the true life on't was———
Poſt. This is true:
And this you might have heard of heere, by me,
Or by ſome other.
Iach. More particulars
Muſt juſtifie my knowledge.
Poſt. So they muſt,
Or doe your Honour injury.
Iach. The Chimney
Is South the Chamber, and the Chimney-peece
Chaſte Dian, bathing: never ſaw I figures
So likely to report themſelves; the Cutter
Was as another Nature dumbe, out-went her,
Motion, and Breath left out.
Poſt. This is a thing
Which you might from Relation likewiſe reape,
Being, as it is, much ſpoke of.
Iach. The Roofe o'th'Chamber,
With golden Cherubins is fretted. Her Andirons
(I had forgot them) were two winking Cupids
Of Silver, each on one foote ſtanding, nicely
Depending on their Brands.
Poſt. This is her honor:
Let it be granted you have ſeene all this (and praiſe
Be given to your remembrance) the deſcription
Of what is in her Chamber, nothing ſaves
The wager you have laid.
Iach. Then if you can
Be pale, I begge but leave to ayre this Iewell: See,
And now tis up againe: it muſt be married
To that your Diamond, Ile keepe them.
Poſt. Iove———
Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her?
Iach. Sir (I thanke her) that
She ſtrint it from her Arme: I ſee her yet
Her pretty Action, did out-ſell her guiſt,
And yet enrich'd it too: ſhe gave it me,
And ſaid, ſhe priz'd it once.
Poſt. May be, ſhe pluck'd it off
To ſend it me
Iach. She writes ſo to you? doth ſhe?
Poſt. O no, no, no, tis true. Heere, take this too,
It is a Baſiliske unto mine eye,
Killes me to looke on't: Let there be no Honor,
Where there is beauty: Truth, where ſemblance: Love,
Where theres another man. The Vowes of Women,
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Then they are to their Vertues, which is nothiug:
O, above meaſure falſe.
Phil. Have patience Sir,
And take your Ring againe, tis not yet wonne;
It may be probable ſhe loſt it: or
Who knowes if one of her women, being corrupted
Hath ſtolne it from her.
Poſt. Very true,
And ſo I hope he came by't: backe my Ring,
Render to me ſome corporall ſigne about her
More evident then this: for this wat ſtole.
Iach. By Iupiter, I had it from her Arme.
Poſt. Hearke you, he ſweares: by Iupiter he ſweares.
Tis true, nay keepe the Ring; tis true: I am ſure
She would not looſe it: her Attendants are
All ſworne, and honorable: they induc'd to ſteale it?
And by a Stranger? No, he hath enjoy'd her,
The Cogniſance of her incontinency
Is this: ſhe hath bought the name of Whore, thus deerely
There, take thy hyre, and all the fiends of hell
Divide themſelves betweene you.
Phil. Sir, be patient:
This is not ſtrong enough to be beleev'd
Of one perſwaded well of.
Poſt. Never talke on't:
She hath bin colted by him.
Iach. If you ſeeke
For further ſatisfying; under her Breaſt
(Worthy her preſſing) lyes a Mole, right proud
Of that moſt delicate Lodging. By my life
I kiſt it, and it gave me preſent hunger
To feede againe, though full. You doe remember
This ſtaine upon her?
Poſt. I, and it doth confirme
Another ſtaine, as bigge as Hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.
Iach. Will you heare more?
Poſt. Spare your Arithmeticke,
Never count the Turnes: Once, and a Million.
Iach. Ile be ſworne.
Poſt. No ſwearing:
If you will ſweare you have not done't, you lye,
And I will kill thee if thou doſt deny
Thou'ſt made me Cuckold.
Iach. Ile deny nothing.
Poſt. O that I had her heere, to teare her Limb-meale;
I will goe there and doo't, ith'Court, before
Her father. Ile doe ſomething. Exit.
Phil. Quite beſides.
The goverment of Patience. You have wonne:
Lets follow him, and pervert the preſent wrath
He hath againſt himſelfe.
Iach. With all my heart. Exeunt.

Enter Poſthumus.

Poſt. Is there no way for Men to be, but Women
Muſt be halfe-workers? We are all Baſtards,
And that moſt venerable man, which I
Dih call my father, was, I know not where
When I was ſtampt. Some Coyner with his Tooles
Made me a counterfeit: yet my Mother ſeem'd
The Dian of that time: ſo doth my Wife
The Non-pareill of this. Oh Vengeance, Vengeance!
Me of my lawfull pleaſure ſhe reſtrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance: did it with
A pudency ſo Roſie, the ſweet view on't
Might well have warm'd old Saturne;
That I thought her
As Chaſte, as un-Sunn'd Snow. Oh, all the divels!
This yellow Iachimo in an houre, was't not?

Or leſſe; at firſt? Perchance he ſpoke not, but Like a full Acorn'd Boare, a Iarmen on,
Cry'de oh, and mounted, found no oppoſition
But what he look'd for, ſhould oppoſe, and ſhe
Should from encounter guard. Could I find out
The Womans part in me, for theres no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirme
It is the Womans part: be it Lying, note it,
The womans: Flattering, hers: deceiving, hers:
Luſt, and ranke thoughts, hers, hers: Revenges hers:
Ambitions, Covetings, change of Prides, Diſdaine,
Nice-longing, Slanders, Mutability:
All faults that may be named, nay, that Hell knowes,
Why hers, in part, or all: but rather all. For even to Vice
They are not conſtant, but are changing ſtill;
One Vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not halfe ſo old as that. Ile write againſt them,
Deteſt them, curſe them: yet tis greater Skill
In a true Hate, to pray they have their will:
The very Divels cannot plague them better.

Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scæna Prima.

Enter in State, Cymbeline, Queene, Clotten, and Lords at one doore, and at another, Caius, Lucius, and Attendants.

Cym. Now ſay, what would Auguſtus Cæſar with us?
Luc. When Iulius Cæſar (whoſe remembrance yet
Lives in mens eyes, and will to Eares and Tongues
Be Theame, and hearing ever (was in this Britaine,
And Conquer'd it, Caſſibelan thine Vnkle
(Famous in Cæſars prayſes, no whit leſſe
Then in his Feats deſerving it) for him,
And his Succeſſion, granted Rome a Tribute,
Yeerely three thouſand pounds; which (by thee) lately
Is left untender'd.
Que. And to kill the mervaile,
Shall be ſo ever.
Clot. There be many Cæſars,
Ere ſuch another Iulius: Britaine's a world
By it ſelfe, and we will nothing pay
For wearing our owne Noſes.
Quee. That opportunity
Which then they had to take from's, to reſume
We have againe. Remember Sir, my Liege,
The Kings your Anceſtors, together with
The Naturall bravery of your Iſle, which ſtands
As Neptunes Parke, ribb'd, and pal'd in
With Oakes unskaleable, and roaring Waters,
With Sands that will not beare your Enemies Boates
But ſucke them up to'th' Top-maſt. A kind of Conqueſt
Cæſars made heere, but made not heere his bragge
Of Came, and Saw, and Overcome: with ſhame
(The firſt that ever touch'd him) he was carried
From off our Coaſt, twice beaten? and his Shipping
(Poore ignorant Baubles) on our terrible Seas
Like Egge-ſhels, mov'd upon their Surges crack'd
As eaſily gainſt our Rockes. For joy whereof,
The fam'd Caſſibelan, who was once at point
(Oh giglet Fortune) to maſter Cæſars Sword,
Made Luds-Towne with rejoycing-Fires bright,
And Brittaines ſtrut with Courage.

Clot. Come, theres no more Tribute to be paid? our Kingdome is ſtronger then it was at that time: and (as I ſaid) there is no more ſuch Cæſars, other of them may have crook'd Noſes, but to owe ſuch ſtraite Armes, none.

Cym. Son, let your Mother end.

Clot. We have yet many among us, can gripe as hard as Caſſibelan, I doe not ſay I am one: but I have a hand. Why Tribute? Why ſhould we pay Tribute? If Cæſar can hide the Sun from us with a Blanket, or put the Moone in his pocket, we will pay him Tribute for light: elſe Sir, no more Tribute, pray you now.

Cym. You muſt know,
Till the injurious Romans, did extort
This Tribute from us, we were free. Cæſars Ambition,
Which ſwell'd ſo much, that it did almoſt ſtretch
The ſides o'th'World, againſt all colour heere,
Did put the yoake upon's: which to ſhake off
Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon
Our ſelves to be, we doe. Say then to Cæſar,
Our Anceſtor was that Mulmutius, which
Ordain'd our Lawes, whoſe uſe the Sword of Cæſar
Hath too much mangled: whoſe repayre, and franchiſe,
Shall (by the power we hold) be our good deed,
Tho Rome be therfore angry. Mulmutius made our lawes
Who was the firſt of Britaine, which did put
His browes within a golden Crowne, and call'd
Himſelfe a King.
Luc. I am ſorry Cymbeline,
That I am to pronounce Auguſtus Cæſar
(Cæſar, that hath more Kings his Servants, then Thy ſelfe Domeſticke Officers) thine Enemy?
Receive it from me then. Warre, and Confuſion
In Cæſar's name pronounce I'gainſt thee: Looke
For fury, not to be reſiſted. Thus defide,
I thanke thee for my ſelfe.
Cym. Thou art welcome Caius,
Thy Cæſar Knighted me; my youth I ſpent
Much under him: of him, I gather'd Honour,
Which he, to ſeeke of me againe, perforce,
Behooves me keepe at utterance. I am perfect,
That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for
Their Liberties are now in Armes: a Preſident
Which not to reade, would ſhew the Britaines cold:
So Cæſar ſhall not find them.
Luc. Let proofe ſpeake.

Clot. His Majeſty biddes you welcome. Make paſtime with us a day, or two, or longer: if you ſeeke us afterwards in other tearmes, you ſhall finde us in our Salt-water-Girdle: if you beate us out of it, it is yours: if you fall in the adventure, our Crowes ſhall fare the better for you: and theres an end.

Luc. So ſir.
Cym. I know your Maſters pleaſure, and he mine:
All the Remaine, is welcome.

Exeunt.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Piſania reading of a Letter.

Piſ. How? of Adultery? Wherefore write you not
What Monſters her accuſe? Leonatus:
Oh Maſter, what a ſtrange infection

Is falne into thy eare? What falſe Italian,
(As poyſonous tongu'd, as handed) hath prevail'd
On thy too ready hearing? Diſloyall? No.
She's puniſh'd for her Truth; and undergoes
More Goddeſſe-like, then Wife-like; ſuch Aſſaults
As would take in ſome Vertue. Oh my Maſter,
Thy mind to her, is now as lowe, as were
Thy Fortunes. How? That I ſhould murther her,
Vpon the Love, and Truth, and Vowes; which I
Have made to thy command? I her? Her blood?
If it be ſo, to doe good ſervice, never
Let me be counted ſerviceable. How looke I,
That I ſhould ſeeme to lacke humanitie,
So much as this Fact comes to? Doo't: The Letter.
That I have ſent her, by her owne command,
Shall give thee opportunitie. Oh damn'd paper,
Blacke as the Inke that's on thee: ſenſeleſſe bauble,
Art thou a Fœdarie for this act; and look'ſt
So virgin-like without? Loe here ſhe comes.

Enter Imogen.

I am ignorant in what I am commanded.
Imo. How now Piſanio?
Piſ. Madam, heere is a Letter from my Lord.
Imo. Who! thy Lord? That is my Lord Leonatus?
Oh, learn'd indeed were that Aſtronomer
That knew the Starres, as I his Characters,
Heel'd lay the Future open. You good Gods,
Let what is heere contain'd, relliſh of Love,
Of my Lords health: of his content: yet not
That we two are a ſunder, let that grieve him;
Some griefes are medcinable, that is one of them,
For it doth phyſicke Love, of his content,
All but in that. Good Wax, thy leave: bleſt be
You Bees that make theſe Lockes of counſaile. Lovers,
And men in dangerous Bondes pray not alike.
Though Forfeytours you caſt in priſon, yet
You claſpe young Cupids Tables: good Newes Gods.

IVſtice, and your Fathers wrath (ſhould hee take mee in his Dominion) could not be ſo cruell to me, as you, (oh the deereſt of Creatures) would even renew me with your eyes. Take notice that I am in Cambria at Milford-Haven: what your owne Love, will out of this adviſe you, follow. So he wiſhes you all happineſſe, that remanies loyall to his Vow, and your encreaſing in Love. Leonatus Poſthumus.

Oh for a Horſe with wings: Hear'ſt thou Piſanio?
He is at Milford-Haven: Read, and tell me
How farre tis thither. If one of meane affaires
May plod it in a weeke, why may not I
Glide thither in a day? Then true Piſanio.
Who long'ſt like me, to ſee thy Lord; who long'ſt
(Oh let me bate) but not like me: yet long'ſt
But in a fainter kinde. Oh not like me:
For mine's beyond, beyond: ſay, and ſpeake thicke (Loves Counſailor ſhould fill the bores of hearing, To'th' ſmothering of the Senſe) how farre it is
To this ſame bleſſed Milford. And by'th' way
Tell me how Wales was made ſo happy, as T'inherite ſuch a Haven. But firſt of all,
How we may ſteale from hence: and for the gap
That we ſhall make in Time, from our hence-going,
And our returne, to excuſe: but firſt, how get hence.
Why ſhould excuſe be borne or ere begot?
Weele talke of that heereafter. Prythee ſpeake,
How many ſcore of Miles may we well ride
Twixt houre, and houre?
Piſ. One ſcore twixt Sun, and Sun,
Madam's enough for you: and too much too.
Imo. Why, one that rode to's Execution Man,
Could never go ſo ſlow: I have heard of Riding wagers,
Where Horſes have bin nimbler then the Sands
That run i'th' Clocks behalfe. But this is Foolrie,
Go, bid my Woman faigne a Sickneſſe, ſay
She'le home to her Father, and provide me preſently
A Riding Suit: No coſtlier then would fit
A Franklins Huſwife.
Piſ. Madam, you're beſt conſider.
Imo. I ſee before me (Man) nor heere, nor heere,
Nor what enſues but have a Fog in them
That I cannot looke through. Away, I prythee,
Do as I bid thee: There's no more to ſay:
Acceſſible is none but Milford way. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. A goodly day, not to keepe houſe with ſuch,
Whoſe Roofe's as low as ours: Sleepe Boyes, this gate
Inſtructs you how t'adore the Heavens; and bowes you
To a mornings holy office. The Gates of Monarches
Are Arch'd ſo high, that Giants may jet through
And keepe their impious Turbands on, without
Good morrow to the Sun. Haile thou faire Heaven,
We houſe i'th' Rocke, yet uſe thee not ſo hardly
As prouder livers do.
Guid. Haile Heaven.
Arvir. Haile Heaven.
Bela. Now for our Mountaine ſport, up to yond hill
Your legges are young: Ile tread theſe Flats. Conſider,
When you above perceive me like a Crow,
That it is Place, which leſſen's and ſets off
And you may then revolve what Tales I have told you,
Of Courts of Princes; of the Trickes in Warre.
This ſervice, is not Service; ſo being done,
But being ſo allowed. To apprehend thus,
Drawes us a profit from all things we ſee:
And often to our comfort, ſhall we finde
The ſharded-Beetle, in a ſafer hold
Then is the full-wing'd Eagle. Oh this life,
Is Nobler, then attending for a checke:
Richer, then doing nothidg for a Babe:
Prouder, then ruſtling in unpayd-for Silke:
Such gaine the Cap of him, that makes him fine,
Yet keepes his Booke uncroſs'd, no life to ours.
Gui. Out of your proofe you ſpeak: we poore unfledg'd
Have never wing'd from view o'th' neſt; nor know not
What Ayre's from home. Hap'ly this life is beſt,
(If quiet life be beſt) ſweeter to you
That have a ſharper knowne. Well correſponding
With your ſtiffe Age; but unto us, it is
A Cell of Ignorance: travailing abed,
A Priſon or a Debtor, that not dares
To ſtride a limit.
Arvi. What ſhould we ſpeake of
When we are old as you? When we ſhall heare
The Raine and winde beate darke December? How
In this our pinching Cave, ſhall we diſcourſe

The freezing houres away? We have ſeene nothing:
We are beaſtly; ſubtle as the Fox for prey,
Like warlike as the Wolfe, for what we eate:
Our Valour is to chace what flyes: Our Cage
We make a Quire, as doth the priſon'd Bird,
And ſing our Bondage freely.
Bel. How you ſpeake?
Did you but know the Citties Vſuries,
And felt them knowingly: the Art o'th' Court,
As hard to leave, as keepe: whoſe top to climbe
Is certaine falling: or ſo ſlipp'ry, that
The feare's as bad as falling. The toyle o'th' Warre,
A paine that onely ſeemes to ſeeke our danger
I'th' name of Fame, and Honour, which dyes i'th' ſearch,
And hath as oft a ſland'rous Epitaph,
As Record of faire Act. Nay, many times
Doth ill deſerve by doing well: what's worſe
Muſt curt'ſie at the Cenſure. Oh Boyes, this Storie
The world may reade in me: My bodie's mark'd
With Roman Swords; and my report, was once
Firſt, with the beſt of Note. Cymbeline lov'd me,
And when a Souldier was the Theame, my name
Was not farre off: then was I as a Tree
Whoſe boughes did bend with fruit. But in one night,
A Storme, or Robbery (call it what you will)
Shooke downe my mellow hangings: nay my Leaves,
And left me bare to weather.
Gui. Vncertaine favour.
Bel. My fault being nothing (as I have told you oft)
But that two Villaines, whoſe falſe Oathes prevail'd
Before my perfect Honor, ſwore to Cymbeline,
I was Confederate with the Romanes: ſo
Followed my Baniſhment, and this twenty yeeres,
This Rocke, and theſe Demeſnes, have bene my World,
Where I have liv'd at honeſt freedome, payed
More pious debts to Heaven, then in all
The fore-end of my time. But, up to'th' Mountaines,
This is not Hunters Language; he that ſtrikes
The Veniſon firſt, ſhall be the Lord o'th' Feaſt,
To him the other two ſhall miniſter,
And we will feare no poyſon, which attends
In place of greater State:
Ile meete you in the Valleyes. Exeunt.
How hard it is to hide the ſparkes of Nature?
Theſe Boyes know little they are Sonnes to'th' King,
Nor Cymbeline dreames that they are alive.
They thinke they are mine,
And though train'd up thus meanely
I'th' Cave, whereon the Bow their thoughts do hit,
The Roofes of Palaces, and Nature prompts them
In ſimple and low things, to Prince it, much
Beyond the tricke of others. This Paladour,
The heyre of Cymbeline and Britaine, whom
The King his Father call'd Guiderius. Iove,
When on my three-foot ſtoole I ſit, and tell
The warlike feats I have done, his ſpirits flye out
Into my ſtory: ſay thus mine Enemie fell,
And thus I ſet my foote on's necke, even then
The Princely blood flowes in his Checke, he ſweats,
Straines his young Nerves, and puts himſelfe in poſture
That acts my words. The younger Brother Cadwall,
Once Arviragus, in as like a figure
Strikes life into my ſpeech, and ſhewes much more
His owne conceyuing. Hearke, the Game is rows'd,
Oh Cymbeline, Heaven and my Conſcience knowes
Thou did'ſt unjuſtly baniſh me: whereon
At three, and two yeeres old, I ſtole theſe Babes,
Thinking to barre thee of Succeſſion, as
Thou refts me of my Lands. Euriphile,
Thou was't their Nurſe, they took thee for their mother
And every day do honor to her grave:
My ſelfe Belarius, that am Morgan call'd
They take for Naturall Father. The Game is up. Exit.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Piſanio and Imogen.

Imo. Thou told'ſt me when we came fró horſe, the place
Was neere at hand: Ne're long'd my Mother ſo
To ſeeme firſt, as I have now: Piſanio, Man:
Where is Poſthumus? What is in thy mind
That makes thee ſtare thus? Wherefore breakes that ſigh
From th'inward of thee? One, but painted thus
Would be interpreted a thing preplex'd
Beyond ſelfe-explication. Put thy ſelfe
Into a haviour of leſſe feare, ere wildneſſe
Vanquiſh my ſtayder Senſes. What's the matter?
Why tender'ſt thou that Paper to me, with
A looke untender? If't be Summer Newes
Smile too't before: if Winterly, thou need'ſt
But keepe that count'nance ſtill. My Husbands hand?
That Drug-damn'd Italy, hath out-craftied him,
And hee's at ſome hard point. Speake man, thy Tongue
May take off ſome extremitie, which to reade
Would be even mortall to me.
Piſ. Pleaſe you reade,
And you ſhall finde me (wretched man) a thing
The moſt diſdain'd of Fortune.

Imogen reades.

THy Miſtris (Piſanio) hath playde the Strumpet in my Bed: the Teſtimonies whereof, lyes bleeding in me. I ſpeak not out of weake Surmiſes, but from proofe as ſtrong as my griefe, and as certaine as I expect my Revenge. That part, thou (Piſanio) muſt acte for me, if thy faith be not tainted with the breach of hers; let thine owne hands take away her life: I ſhall give thee opportunity at Milford Haven. She hath my Letter for the purpoſe; where, if thou feare to ſtrike, and to make mee certaine it is done, thou art the Pander to her diſhonour, and equally to me diſloyall.

Piſ. What ſhall I need to draw my Sword, the Paper
Hath cut her throat already? No, tis ſlander,
Whoſe edge is ſharper then the Sword, whoſe tongue
Out-venomes all the Wormes of Nyle, whoſe breath
Rides on the poſting windes, and doth belye
All corners of the World. Kings, Queenes, and States,
Maides, Matrons, nay the Secrets of the Grave
This viperous ſlander enters. What cheere Madam?
Imo. Falſe to his Bed? What is it to be falſe?
To lye in watch there, and to thinke on him?
To weepe twixt clock and clock? If ſleep charge Nature,
To breake it with a fearefull dreame of him,
And cry my ſelfe awake? That's falſe to's bed? Is it?
Piſa. Alas good Lady.
Imo. I falſe? Thy Conſcience witneſſe: Iachimo,
Thou didd'ſt accuſe him of Incontinencie,
Thou then look'dſt like a Villaine: now, me thinkes

Thy favours good enough. Some Iay of Italy
(Whoſe mother was her painting) hath betraid him:
Poore I am ſtale, a Garment out of faſhion,
And for I am richer then to hang by th' walles,
I muſt be ript: To peeces with me: Oh!
Mens Vowes are womens Traitors. All good ſeeming
By thy revolt (oh Husband) ſhall be thought
Put on for Villainy; not borne where't growes,
But worne a baite for Ladies.

Piſa. Good Madam, heare me.

Imo. True honeſt men being heard, like falſe Æneas,
Were in his time thought falſe: and Synons weeping
Did ſcandall many a holy teare: tooky pitty
From moſt true wretchednſſee. So thou, Poſthumus
Wilt lay the leven to all proper men;
Goodly, and gallant, ſhall be falſe and periur'd
From thy great faile: Come Fellow, be thou honeſt,
Do thou thy Maſters bidding. When thou ſeeſt him,
A little witneſſe my obedience. Looke
I draw the Sword my ſelfe, take it and hit
The innocent Manſion of my Love (my Heart:)
Feare not, tis empty of all things, but Griefe:
Thy Maſter is not there, who was indeede
The riches of it. Do his bidding, ſtrike,
Thou mayſt be valiant in a better cauſe;
But now thou ſeem'ſt a Coward.

Piſ. Hence vile Inſtrument,
Thou ſhalt not damne my hand.

Imo. Why, I muſt dye:
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No Servant of thy Maſters. Againſt Selfe-ſlaughter,
There is a prohibition ſo Divine,
That cravens my weake hand: Come, heere's my heart:
So mething's a-foot: Soft, ſoft, wee'l no defence,
Obedient as the Scabbard. What is heere,
The Scriptures of the Loyall Leonatus,
All turn'd to Hereſie? Away, away
Corrupters of my Faith, you ſhall no more
Be Stomachers to my heart: thus may poore Fooles
Beleeve falſe Teachers: Though thoſe that are betraid
Do feele the Treaſon ſharpely, yet the Traitor
Stands in worſe caſe of woe. And thou Poſthumus,
That didd'ſt ſet up my diſobedience 'gainſt the King
My Father, and makes me put into contempt the ſuites
Of Princely Fellowes, ſhalt hereafter finde
It is no act of common paſſage, but
A ſtraine of Rareneſſe: and I greeve my ſelfe,
To thinke, when thou ſhalt be diſedg'd by her,
That now thou tyreſt on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Prythee diſpatch,
The Lambe entreats the Butcher. Wher's thy knife?
Thou art to ſlow to do thy Maſters bidding
When I deſire it too.

Piſ. Oh gracious Lady:
Since I receiv'd command to do this buſineſſe,
I have not ſlept one winke.

Imo. Doo't, and to bed then.

Piſ. Ile wake mine eye-balles firſt.

Imo. Wherefore then
Didd'ſt undertake it? Why haſt thou abus'd
So many Miles, with a pretence? This place?
Mine Action? and thine owne? Our Horſes labour?
The time inviting thee? The perturb'd Court
For my being abſent; whereunto I never
Purpoſe returne. Why haſt thou gone ſo farre
To be un-bent? when thou haſt tane thy ſtand,
Th' elected Deere before thee?

Piſ. But to win time
To looſe ſo bad employment, in the which
I have conſider'd of a courſe: good Lady
Heare me with patence.

Imo. Talke thy Tongue weary, ſpeake:
I have heard I am a Strumpet, and mine eare
Therein falſe ſtrooke, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent, to bottome that. But ſpeake.

Piſ. Then Madam,
I thought you would not backe againe.

Imo. Moſt like,
Bringing me heere to kill me.

Piſ. Not ſo neither:
But if I were as wiſe, as honeſt, then
My purpoſe would prove well: it cannot be,
But that my Maſter is abus'd. Some Villaine,
I, and ſingular in his Art, hath done you both
This curſed injurie.

Imo. Some Roman Curtezan?

Piſ. No, on my life:
Ile give but notice you are dead, and ſend him
Some bloody ſigne of it. For tis commanded
I ſhould do ſo: you ſhall be miſt at Court,
And that will well confirme it.

Imo. Why good Fellow,
What ſhall I do the while? Where bide? How live?
Or in my life, what comfort, when I am
Dead to my Husband?

Piſ. If you'l backe to'th' Court.

Imo. No Court, no Father: nor no more adoe
With that harſh, noble, ſimple nothing;
That Clotten, whoſe Love-ſuite hath bene to me
As fearefull as a Siege.

Piſ. If not at Court,
Then not in Britaine muſt you bide.

Imo. Where then?
Hath Britaine all the Sunne that ſhines? Day? Night?
Are they not but in Britaine? I'th' worlds Volume
Our Britaine ſeemes as of it, but not in't:
In a great Poole a Swannes-neſt; prythee thinke
There's livers out of Britaine.

Piſ. I am moſt glad
You thinke of other Place: Th' Ambaſſador,
Lucius the Romane comes to Milford-Haven
To morrow. Now, if you could weare a minde
Darke, as your Fortune is, and but diſguiſe
That which t'appeare it ſelfe, muſt not yet be,
But by ſelfe-danger, you ſhould tread a courſe
Pretty, and full of view: yea, happily, neere
The reſidence of Poſthumus; ſo nie (at laſt)
That though his Actions were not viſible, yet
Report ſhould render him hourely to your eare,
As truely as he mooves.

Imo. Oh for ſuch meanes,
Though perill to my modeſtie, not death on't
I would adventure.

Piſ. Well then, heere's the point:
You muſt forget to be a Woman: change
Command, into obedience. Feare and Niceneſſe
(The Handmaides of all Women, or more truely
Woman it pretty ſelfe) into a waggiſh courage,
Ready in gybes, quicke-anſwer'd, ſawcie, and
As quarrellous as the Weazell: Nay, you muſt
Forget that rareſt Treaſure of your Cheeke,
Expoſing it (but oh the harder heart,

Alacke no remedy) to the greedy touch
Of common-kiſſing Titan: and forgot
Your labourſome and dainty Trimmes, wherein
You made great Iuno angry.

Imo. Nay be breefe:
I ſee into thy end, and am almoſt
A man already.

Piſ. Firſt, make your ſelfe but like one,
Fore-thinking this. I have already fit
(Tis in my Cloake-bagge) Doublet, Hat, Hoſe, all
That anſwer to them: Would you in their ſerving,
(And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of ſuch a ſeaſon) 'fore Noble Lucius
Preſent your ſelfe, deſire his ſervice: tell him
Wherein you're happy; which will make him know,
If that his head have eare in Muſicke, doubtleſſe
With joy he will embrace you: for hee's Honourable,
And doubling that, moſt holy. Your meanes abroad;
You have me rich, and I will never faile
Beginning, nor ſupplyment.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The Gods will diet me with. Prythee away,
There's more to be conſider'd: but wee'l even
All that good time will give us. This attempt,
I am Souldier too, and will abide it with
A Princes Courage. Away, I prythee.

Piſ. Well Madam, we muſt take a ſhort farewell,
Leſt being miſt, I be ſuſpected of
Your carriage from the Court. My Noble Miſtris,
Heere is a boxe, I had it from the Queene,
What's in't is precious: If you are ſicke at Sea,
Or Stomacke-qualm'd at Land, a Dramme of this
Will drive away diſtemper. To ſome ſhade,
And fit you to your Manhood: may the Gods
Direct you to the beſt.

Imo. Amen: I thanke thee. Exeunt.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline, Queene, Cloten, Lucius,
and Lords.

Cym. Thus farre, and ſo farewell.

Luc. Thankes, Royall Sir:
My Emperor hath wrote, I muſt from hence,
And am right ſorry, that I muſt report ye
My Maſters Enemy.

Cym. Our Subjects (Sir)
Will not endure his yoake; and for our ſelfe
To ſhew leſſe Soveraignty then they, muſt needs
Appeare un-Kinglike.

Luc. So Sir: I deſire of you
A Conduct over Land, to Milford-Haven.
Madam, all joy befall your Grace, and you.

Cym. My Lords, you are appointed for that Office:
The due of Honour, in no point omit:
So farewell Noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my Lord.

Clot. Receive it friendly: but from this time forth
I weare it as your Enemy.

Luc. Sir, the Event
Is yet to name the winner. Fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my Lords
Till he have croſt Severn. Happines. Exit Lucius, &c.

Qu. He goes hence frowning: but it honours us
That we have given him cauſe.

Clot. Tis all the better,
Your Valiant Britaines have their wiſhes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the Emperor
How it goes heere. It fits us therefore ripely
Our Chariots, and our Horſemen be in readineſſe:
The Powers that he already hath in Gallia
Will ſoone be drawne to head, from whence he moves
His warre for Britaine.

Qu. Tis not ſleepy buſineſſe,
But muſt be look'd to ſpeedily, and ſtrongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it ſhould be thus
Hath made us forward. But my gentle Queene,
Where is our Daughter? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to us hath tender'd
The duty of the day. She lookes as like
A thing more made of malice, then of duty,
We have noted it. Call her before us, for
We have beene too light in ſufferance.

Qu. Royall Sir,
Since the exile of Poſthumus, moſt retyr'd
Hath her life bin: the Cure whereof my Lord,
Tis time muſt doe. Beſeech your Majeſty,
Forbeare ſharpe ſpeeches to her. Shee's a Lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are ſtrokes,
And ſtrokes death to her.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Cym. Where is ſhe Sir? How
Can her contempt be anſwer'd?

Meſ. Pleaſe you Sir,
Her Chambers are all lock'd, and there's no anſwer
That will be given to'th' lowd of noiſe, we make,

Qu. My Lord, when laſt I went to viſit her,
She pray'd me to excuſe her keeping cloſe,
Whereto conſtraind by her infirmitie,
She ſhould that duty leave unpaide to you
Which daily ſhe was bound to proffer: this
She wiſh'd me to make knowne: but our great Court
Made me too blame in memory.

Cym. Her doores lock'd?
Not ſeene of late? Grant Heavens, that which I
Feare, prove falſe. Exit.

Qu. Sonne, I ſay, follow the King.

Clot. That man of her's, Piſanio, her old Servant
I have not ſeene theſe two dayes. Exit.

Qu. Go, looke after:
Piſanio, thon that ſtand'ſt ſo for Poſthumus
He hath a Drugge of mine: I pray, his abſence
Proceed by ſwallowing that. For he beleeves
It is a thing moſt precious. But for her,
Where is ſhe gone? Haply diſpaire hath ſeiz'd her:
Or wing'd with fervour of her love, ſhe's flowne
To her deſired Poſthumus: gone ſhe is,
To death, or to diſhonor, and my end
Can make good vſe of either. Shee beeing downe,
I haue the placing of the Brittiſh Crowne.

Enter Cloten.

How now my Sonne?

Clot. 'Tis certaine ſhe is fled:
Go in and cheere the King, he rages, none
Dare come about him.

Qu. All the better: may
This night fore-ſtall him of the comming day. Exit Qu.

Clo. I loue and hate her: for ſhe's Faire and Royall,
And that ſhe hath all courtly parts more exquiſite

Then Lady, Ladies, Woman, from every one
The beſt ſhe hath, and ſhe of all compounded
Out-ſelles them all. I love her therefore, but Diſdaining me, and throwing Favours on
The low Poſthumus, ſlanders ſo her judgement,
That what's elſe rare, is choak'd: and in that point
I wil conclude to hate her, nay indeede,
To be reveng'd upon her. For, when Fooles ſhall——

Enter Piſanio.

Who is heere? What, are you packing ſirrah?
Come hither: Ah you precious Pander, Villaine,
Where is thy Lady? In a word, or elſe
Thou art ſtraightway with the Fiends.
Piſ. Oh, good my Lord.
Clo. Where is thy Lady? Or, by Iupiter,
I will not aske againe. Cloſe Villaine,
Ile have this ſectet from thy heart, or rip
Thy heart to finde it. Is ſhe with Poſthumus?
From whoſe ſo many waights of baſeneſſe, cannot
A dram of worth be drawne.
Piſ. Alas, my Lord,
How can ſhe be with him? When was ſhe miſs'd?
He is in Rome.
Clot. Where is ſhe Sir? Come neerer:
No farther halting: ſatisfie me home,
What is become of her:
Piſ. Oh, my all-worthy Lord.
Clo. All-worthy Villaine,
Diſcover where thy Miſtris is, at once,
At the next word: no more of worthy Lord:
Speake, or thy ſilence on the inſtant, is
Thy condemnation and thy death
Piſ. Then ſir:
This Paper is the hiſtory of my knowledge
Touching her flight.
Clo. Let's ſeet; I will purſue her
Even to Auguſtus Throne.
Piſ. Or this, or periſh.
She's farre enough, and what he learnes by this,
May prove his travell, not her danger.
Clo. Humh.
Piſ. Ile write to my Lord ſhe is dead: Oh Imogen,
Safe mayſt thou wander, ſafe returne agen.
Clot. Sirra, is this Letter true?
Piſ. Sir, as I thinke

Clot. It is Poſthumus hand, I know't. Sirrah, if thou would'ſt not be a Villaine, but do me true ſervice: undergo thoſe Imployments wherein I ſhould have cauſe to uſe thee with a ſerious induſtry, that is, what villainy ſoere I bid thee doe to performe it, directly and truely, I would thinke thee an honeſt man: thou ſhould'ſt neither want my meanes for thy releefe, nor my voyce for thy preferment,

Piſ. Well, my good Lord.

Clot. Wilt thou ſerve mee? For ſince patiently and conſtantly thou haſt ſtucke to the bare Fortune of that Begger Poſthumus; thou canſt not in the courſe of gratitude, but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou ſerve mee?

Piſ. Sir I will,

Clo. Give me thy hand, heere's my purſe. Haſt any of thy late Maſters Garments in thy poſſeſſion?

Piſan. I have (my Lord) at my Lodging, the ſame Suite he wore, when he tooke leave of my Ladie and Miſtreſſe.

Clo. The firſt ſervice thou doſt mee, fetch that Suite hither, let it be thy firſt ſervice, go.

Piſ. I ſhall my Lord. Exeunt,

Clo. Meet thee at Milford-Haven: (I forgot to aske him one thing, Ile remember't anon:) even there, thou villaine Poſthumus will I kill thee. I would theſe Garments were come. She ſaid upon a time (the bitterneſſe of it, I now belch from my heart) that ſhe held the very Garment of Poſthumus, in more reſpect, then my Noble and naturall perſon; together with the adornement of my Qualities. With that Suite upon my backe will I raviſh her: firſt kill him, and in her eyes: there ſhall ſhe ſee my valour, which will then be a torment to her contempt. He on the Ground, my ſpeech of inſultment ended on his dead bodie, and when my luſt hath dined (which, as I ſay, to vex her, I will execute in the Cloathes that ſhe ſo prais'd:) to the Court Ile knock her backe, foot her home againe. She hath diſpis'd mee rejoycingly, and Ile be merry in my Revenge.

Enter Piſanio.

Be thoſe the Garments?
Piſ. I, my Noble Lord.
Clo. How long is't ſince ſhe went to Milford-Haven?
Piſ. She can ſcarſe be there yet,

Clo. Bring this Apparrell to my Chamber, that is the ſecond thing that I have commanded thee. The third is, that thou wilt be a voluntary Mute to my deſigne. Be but dutious, and true preferment ſhall tender it ſelfe to thee. My Revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it. Come and be true. Exit.

Piſ. Thou bid'ſt me to my loſſe: for true to thee,
Were to prove falſe, which I will never be
To him that is moſt true. To Milford go,
And finde not her, whom thou purſueſt. Flow, flow
You Heavenly bleſſings on her: This Fooles ſpeede
Be croſt with ſlowneſſe; Labour be his meede. Exit.

Scæna Sexta.

Enter Imogen alone.

Ima. I ſee a mans life is a tedious one,
I have tyr'd my ſelfe: and for two nights together
Have made the gound my bed. I ſhould be ſicke,
But that my reſolution helpes me: Milford,
When from the Mountaine top Piſanio ſhew'd thee,
Thou was't within a kenne. Oh Iove, I thinke
Foundations flye the wretched: ſuch I meane,
Where they ſhould be releev'd. Two beggers told me,
I could not miſſe my way. Will poore Folkes lye
That have afflictions on them, knowing tis
A puniſhment, or Triall? Yes; no wonder,
When Rich-ones ſcarſe tell true. To lapſe in fulneſſe
Is ſorer, then to lye for Neede: and Falſhood
Is worſe in Kings, then Beggers, My deere Lord,
Thou art one o'th falſe Ones: now I thinke on thee,
My hunger's gone; but even before, I was
At point to ſinke, for Food. But what is this?
Heere is a path to't: tis ſome ſavage hold:
I were beſt not call; I dare not call: yet Famine
Ere cleane it o're-throw Nature, make it valiant.
Plentie and peace breedes Cowards, Hardneſſe ever
Of Hardineſſe is Mother. Hoa? who's heere?
If any thing that's civill, ſpeake; if ſavage,

Take, or lend. Hoa? No anſwer? Then Ile enter,
Beſt draw my Sword; and if mine Eenemy
But feare the Sword like me, heell ſcarſely looke on't.
Such a Foe, good Heavens. Exit.

Scæna Septima.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. You Polidore have prov'd beſt Woodman, and
Are Maſter of the feaſt: Cadwall, and I
Will play the Cooke, and Servant, tis our match:
The ſweat of induſtry would dry, and dye
But for the end it workes to. Come, our ſtomackes
Will make whats homely, ſavoury; Wearineſſe
Can ſnore upon the Flint, when reſty Sloth
Findes the Downe-pillow hard. Now peace be heere,
Poore houſe, that keepſt thy ſelfe.
Gui. I am throughly weary.
Arvi. I am weake with toyle, yet ſtrong in appetite.
Gui. There is cold meat ith'Cave, we'll brouz on that
Whilſt what we have killd, be Cook'd.
Bel. Stay, come not in:
But that it eates our victualles, I ſhould thinke
Heere were a Faiery.
Gui. Whats the matter, Sir?
Bel. By Iupiter an Angell: or if not,
An earthly Paragon. Behold Divineneſſe
No elder then a Boy.

Enter Imogen.

Imo. Good maſter harme me not:
Before I enter'd heere, I call'd, and thought
To have begg'd, or bought, what I have took: good troth
I have ſtolne nought, nor would not, though I had found
Gold ſtrew'd i'th' Floore. Heere's money for my Meate,
I would have left it on the Boord, ſo ſoone
As I had made my Meale: and parted
With Pray'rs for the Provider.
Gui. Money? Youth.
Arvi. All gold and Silver rather turne doe durt,
As tis no better reckon'd, but of thoſe
Who worſhip durty gods.
Imo. I ſee your angry:
Know, if you kill me for my fault, I ſhould
Have dyed, had I not made it.
Bel. Whether bound?
Imo. To Milford-haven.
Bel. Whats your name?
Imo. Fidele Sir; I have a Kinſman, who
Is bound for Italy: he embark'd at Milford,
To whom being going, almoſt ſpent with hunger,
I am falne in this offence.
Bel. Prethee (faire youth)
Thinke us no Churles: nor meaſure our good mindes
By this rude place we live in. Well encouuter'd,
Tis almoſt night, you ſhall have better cheere
Ere you depart; and thankes to ſtay, and eate it:
Boyes, bid him welcome.
Gui. Were you a woman, youth,
I ſhould wooe hard, but be your Groome in honeſty:
I bid for you, as I doe buy.
Arvi. Ile make't my comfort
He is a man, Ile love him as my Brother:
And ſuch a welcome as Ild give to him
(After long abſence) ſuch is yours. Moſt welcome:
Be ſprightly, for you fall mongſt friends.
Imo. Mongſt friends.
If Brothers: would it had bin ſo, that they
Had bin my fathers Sonnes, then had my prize
Bin leſſe, and ſo more equall ballaſting
To thee Poſthumus.
Bel. He wrings at ſome diſtreſſe.
Gui. Would I could free't.
Arvi. Or I, what ere it be,
What paine it coſt, what danger: gods!
Bel. Hearke Boyes.
Imo. Great men
That had a Court no bigger then this Cave,
That did attend themſelves, and had the vertue
Which their owne Conſcience ſeal'd them: laying by
That nothing-guift of differing Multitudes
Could not out-peece theſe twaine. Pardon me gods,
Ild change my ſexe to be Companion with them,
Since Leonatus falſe.
Bel. It ſhall be ſo:
Boyes we'll goe dreſſe our Hunt. Faire you come in;
Diſcourſe is heavy, faſting: when we have ſupp'd
Weell mannerly demand thee of thy Story.
So farre as thou wilt ſpeake it.
Gui. Pray draw neere.
Arvi. The Night to th'Owle,
And Morne to th'Larke leſſe welcome.
Imo. Thankes Sir.
Arvi. I pray draw neere. Exeunt.

Scæna Octava.

Enter two Roman Senators, and Tribunes.

1. Sen. This is the tenor of the Emperors Writ;
That ſince the common men are now in Action
Gainſt the Pannonians, and Dalmatians,
And that the Legions now in Gallia, are
Full weake to undertake our Warres againſt
The falne-off Britaines, that we doe incite
The Gentry to this buſineſſe. He creates
Lucius Pro-Conſull: and to you the Tribunes
For this immediate Levy, he commands
His abſolute Commiſſion. Long live Cæſar.
Tri. Is Lucius Generall of the Forces?
2 Sen. I.
Tri. Remaining now in Gallia?
1 Sen. With thoſe Legions
Which I have ſpoke of, whereunto your levy
Muſt be ſuppliant: the words of your Commiſſion
Will tye you to the Numbers and the time
Of their diſpatch.
Tri. We will diſcharge our duty. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Clotten alone.

Clot. I am neere to th' place where they ſhould meet, if Piſanio have mapp'd it truely. How fit his Garments ſerve me? Why ſhould his Miſtris who was made by him that made the Taylor, not be fit too? The rather (ſaving reverence of the Word) for tis ſaid a Womans fitneſſe comes by fits: therein I muſt play the Workeman, I dare ſpeake it to my ſelfe, for it is not Vainglory for a man, and his Glaſſe, to confer in his owne Chamber; I meane, the Lines of my body are as well drawne as his; no leſſe young, more ſtrong, not beneath him in Fortunes, beyond him in the advantage of the time, above him in Birth, alike converſant in generall ſervices, and more remarkeable in ſingle oppoſitions; yet this imperſeverant Thing loves him in my deſpight. What Mortality is? Poſthumus, thy head (which now is growing upon thy ſhoulders) ſhall within this houre be off, thy Miſtris inforced, thy Garments cut to peeces before thy face: and all this done, ſpurne her home to her Father, who may (happily) be a little angry for my ſo rough vſage: but my Mother having power of his teſtineſſe, ſhall turne all into my commendations. My horſe is tyed up ſafe, out Sword, and to a ſore purpoſe: Fortune put them into my hand: This is the very deſcription of their meeting place and the fellow dares not deceive me. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, and Imogen from the Cave.

Bel. You are not well: Remaine heere in the Cave,
We'll come to you after hunting.
Arvi. Brother, ſtay here:
Are we not brothers?
Imo. So man and man ſhould be,
But Clay and Clay, differs in dignity,
Whoſe duſt is both alike. I am very ſicke,
Gui. Goe you to hunting, Ile abide with him.
Imo. So ſicke I am not, yet I am not well:
But not ſo Citizen a wanton, as
To ſeeme to dye, ere ſicke: So pleaſe you, leave me,
Sticke to your Iournall courſe: the breach of Cuſtome,
Is breach of all. I am ill, but your being by me
Cannot amend me. Society, is no comfort
To one not ſociable: I am not very ſicke.
Since I can reaſon of it: pray you truſt me heere,
Ile rob none but my ſelfe, and let me dye
Stealing ſo poorely.
Gui. I love thee: I have ſpoke it,
How much the quantity, the waight as much,
As I doe love my father.
Bel. What? how? how?
Arvi. If it be ſinne to ſay ſo (Sir) I yoake me
In my good Brothers fault: I know not why
I love this youth, and I have heard you ſay,
Loves reaſons without reaſon. The beere at doore,
And a demand who iſt ſhall dye, Ild ſay
My father, not this youth.
Bel. Oh noble ſtraine!
O worthineſſe of Nature, breed of greatneſſe!
"Cowards father Cowards, and Baſe things Syre Bace:
"Nature hath Meale, and Bran; Contempt, and Grace.
Ime not their father, yet who this ſhould be,
Doth myracle it ſelfe, lov'd before me.
Tis the ninth houre oth Morne.
Arvi. Brother, farewell.
Imo. I wiſh ye ſport.
Arvi. You health. ——So pleaſe you Sir.
Imo. Theſe are kind Creatures.
Gods, what lyes I have heard:
Our Courtiers ſay, alls ſavage, but at Court:
Experience, oh thou diſprov'ſt Report.
Th'emperious Seas breed Monſters; for the Diſh,
Poore Tributary Rivers, as ſweet fiſh:
I am ſicke ſtill, heart-ſicke: Piſanio,
Ile now taſte of thy Drugge.
Gui. I could not ſtirre him:
He ſaid he was gentle, but unfortunate;
Diſhoneſtly afflicted, but yet honeſt.
Arvi. Thus did he anſwer me: yet ſaid heereafter,
I might know more.
Bel. To th'field, to th'field:
We'll leave you for this time, goe in, and reſt.
Arvi. We'll not be long away.
Bel. Pray be not ſicke,
For you muſt be our huſwife.
Imo. Well, or ill,
I am bound to you. Exit.
Bel. And ſhalt be ever.
This youth, how ere diſtreſt, appeares he hath had Good Anceſtors.
Arvi. How Angell-like he ſings?
Gui. But his neate Cookery?
Arvi. He cut our Rootes in Characters,
And ſawc't our Brothes, as Iuno had bin ſicke,
And he her Dieter.
Arvi. Nobly he yoakes
A ſmiling, with a ſigh: as if the ſighe
Was that it was, for not being ſuch a Smile:
The Smile, mocking the Sigh, that it would flye,
From ſo divine a Temple, to commix
With windes, that Saylors raile at.
Gui. I doe note,
That griefe and patience rooted in them both,
Mingle their ſpurres together.
Arvi. Grow patient,
And let the ſtinking- Elder (Griefe) untwine
His periſhing roote, with the encreaſing Vine.
Bel. It is great morning. Come away: Who's there?
Enter Clotten.
Clot. I cannot finde thoſe Runagates, that Villaine
Hath mock'd me. I am faint.
Bel. Thoſe Runnagates?
Meanes he not us? I partly know him, tis
Clotten, the Sonne oth' Queene. I feare ſome Ambuſh:
I ſaw him not theſe many yeares, and yet
I know tis he: we are held as Out-lawes; hence.
Gui. He is but one: you, and my brother ſearch
What Companies are neere: pray you away,
Let me alone with him.
Clot. Soft, what are you
That flye me thus? Sonne villaine-Mountainers?
I have heard of ſuch. What Slave art thou?
Gui. A thing.
More ſlaviſh did I ne're, then anſwering
A Slave without a knocke.
Clot. Thou art a Robber,
A Law-breaker, a Villaine: yeeld thee Theefe.
Gui. To whom? to thee? What art thou? Have not I
An arme as bigge as thine? a heart, as bigge:
Thy words I grant are bigger: for I weare not
My Dagger in my mouth. Say what thou art:

Why I ſhould yeeld to thee?
Clot. Thou Villaine baſe,
Know'ſt me not by my Cloathes?
Gui. No, nor thy Taylor, Raſcall,
Who is thy Grandfather: He made thoſe cloathes,
Which (as it ſeemes) make thee.
Clo. Thou precious Varlet:
My Taylor made them not.
Gui. Hence then, and thanke
The man that gave them thee. Thou art ſome Foole,
I am loath to beat thee.
Clot. Thou injurious Theefe,
Heare but my name, and tremble.
Gui. What's thy name?
Clo. Cloten, thou Villaine.
Gui. Cloten, thou double Villaine be thy name,
I cannot tremble at it, were it Toad, or Adder, Spider,
Twould move me ſooner.
Clot. To thy further feare,
Nay, to thy meere Confuſion, thou ſhalt know
I am Sonne to'th' Queene.
Gui. I am ſorry for't: not ſeeming
So worthy as thy Birth.
Clot. Art not afeard?
Gui. Thoſe that I reverence, thoſe I feare: the Wiſe:
At Fooles I laugh: not feare them.
Clot. Dye the death:
When I have ſlaine thee with my proper hand,
Ile follow thoſe that even now fled hence:
And on the Gates of Luds-Towne ſet your heads:
Yeeld Ruſticke Mountaineer. Fight and Exeunt.
Enter Belarius and Arviragus.
Bel. No Companie's abroad?
Arvi. None in the world: you did miſtake him ſure.
Bel. I cannot tell: Long is it ſince I ſaw him,
But Time hath nothing blurr'd thoſe lines of Favour
Which then he wore: the ſnatches in his voyce,
And burſt of ſpeaking were as his: I am abſolute
Twas very Cloten.
Arvi. In this place we left them;
I wiſh my Brother make good time with him,
You ſay he is ſo fell.
Bel. Being ſcarſe made up,
I meane to man; he had not apprehenſion
Of roaring terrors: For defect of judgement
Is oft the cauſe of Feare.
Enter Guiderius.
But ſee thy Brother.
Gui. This Cloten was a Foole, an empty purſe,
There was no money in't: Not Hercules
Could have knock'd out his Braines, for he had none:
Yet I not doing this, the Foole had borne
My head, as I do his.
Bel. What haſt thou done?
Gui. I am perfect what; cut off one Clotens head,
Sonne to the Queene (after his owne report)
Who call'd me Traitor, Mountaineer, and ſwore
With his owne ſingle hand heel'd take us in,
Diſplace our heads, where (thanks the gods) they grow
And ſet them on Luds-Towne.
Bel. We are all undone.
Gui. Why, worthy Father, what have we to looſe,
But that he ſwore to take, our Lives? the Law
Protects not us, then why ſhould we be tender,
To let an arrogant peece of fleſh threat us?
Play Iudge, and Executioner, all himſelfe?
For we do feare no Law. What company
Diſcover you abroad?
Bel. No ſingle ſoule
Can we ſet eye on: but in all ſafe reaſon
He muſt have ſome Attendants. Though his Honor
Was nothing but mutation, I, and that
From one bad thing to worſe: Not Frenzie,
Not abſolute madneſſe could ſo farre have rav'd
To bring him heere alone although perhaps
It may be heard at Court, that ſuch as we
Cave heere, hunt heere, are Out-lawes, and in time
May make ſome ſtronger head, the which he hearing,
(As it is like him) might breake out, and ſweare
Heel'd fetch us in, yet is't not probable
To come alone, either he ſo undertaking,
Or they ſo ſuffering: then on good ground we feare,
If we do feare this body hath a taile
More perillous then the head.
Arvi. Let Ord'nance
Come as the Gods fore-ſay it: howſoere,
My Brother hath done well.
Bel. I had no minde
To hunt this day: The Boy Fideles ſickneſſe
Did make my way long forth.
Gui. With his owne Sword,
Which he did wave againſt my throat, I have tane
His head from him: Ile throw't into the Creeke
Behinde our Rocke, and let it to the Sea,
And tell the Fiſhes, hee's the Queenes Sonne, Cloten,
That's all I reake. Exit.
Bel. I feare twill be reveng'd:
Would (Polidore) thou had'ſt not done't: though valour
Becomes thee well enough.
Arvi. Would I had done't:
So the Revenge alone purſu'de me: Polidore
I love thee brotherly, but envy much
Thou haſt robb'd me of this deed: I would Revenges
That poſſible ſtrength might meet, wold ſeeke us through
And put us to our anſwer.
Bel. Well, tis done:
Wee'l hunt no more to day, nor ſeeke for danger
Where there's no profit. I prythee to our Rocke,
You and Fidele play the Cookes: Ile ſtay
Till haſty Polidore returne, and bring him
To dinner preſently.
Arvi. Pore ſicke Fidele.
Ile willingly to him, to gaine his colour,
Il'd let a pariſh of ſuch Clotens blood,
And praiſe my ſelfe for charity. Exit.
Bel. Oh thou Goddeſſe,
Thou divine Nature; thy ſelfe thou blazon'ſt
In theſe two Princely Boyes: they are as gentle
As Zephires blowing below the Violet,
Not wagging his ſweet head; and yet, as rough
(Their Royall blood enchaf'd) as the rud'ſt winde,
That by the top doth take the Mountaine Pine,
And make him ſtoope to th'Vaile. Tis wonder
That an inviſible inſtinct ſhould frame them
To Royalty unlearn'd, Honor untaught,
Civility not ſeene from other: valour
That wildly growes in them: but yeelds a crop
As if it had beene ſow'd: yet ſtill it's ſtrange
What Clotens being heere to us portends,
Or what his death will bring us.
Enter Guiderius.
Gui. Where's my Brother?

I have ſent Clotens Clot-pole downe the ſtreame;
In Embaſſie to his Mother; his Bodie's hoaſtage
For his returne. Solemn Muſicke.
Bel. My ingenuous Inſtrument,
(Hearke Polidore) it ſounds: but what occaſion
Hath Cadwal now to give it motion? Hearke.
Gui. Is he at home?
Bel. He went hence even now.
Gui. What does he meane?
Since death of my dear'ſt Mother
It did not ſpeake before. All ſolemne things
Should anſwer ſolemne Accidents. The matter?
Triumphes for nothing, and lamenting Toyes,
Is jollity for Apes, and greefe for Boyes.
Is Cadwall mad?
Enter Arviragus, with Imogen dead, bearing her in his Armes.
Bel. Looke, heere he comes,
And brings the dire occaſion in his Armes,
Of what we blame him for.
Arvi. The Bird is dead
That we have made ſo much on. I had rather
Have skipt from ſixteene yeares of Age, to ſixty:
To have turn'd my leaping time into a Crutch,
Then have ſeene this.
Gui. Oh ſweeteſt, faireſt Lilly:
My Brother weares thee not the one halfe ſo well,
As when thou grew'ſt thy ſelfe.
Bel. Oh melancholly,
Who ever yet could ſound thy bottome? Finde
The Ooze, to ſhew that Coaſt thy ſluggiſh care
Might eaſileſt harbour in. Thou bleſſed thing.
Iove knowes what man thou might'ſt have made: but I,
Thou dyed'ſt a moſt rare Boy, of Melancolly.
How found you him?
Arvi. Starke, as you ſee:
Thus ſmiling as ſome Fly had tickled ſlumber,
Not as deaths dart being laugh'd at: his right Checke
Repoſing on a Cuſhion.
Gui. Where?
Arvi. O'th' floore:
His armes thus leagu'd, I thought he ſlept, and put
My clowted Brogues from off my feet, wyoſe rudeneſſe
Anſwer'd my ſteps too lowd.
Gui. Why he but ſleepes:
If he be gone, hee'l make his Grave a Bed:
With Female Faeries will his Tombe be haunted,
And Wormes will not come to thee.
Arvi. With fayreſt Flowers
Whil'ſt Sommer laſts, and I live heere, Fidele,
Ile ſweeten thy ſad grave: thou ſhalt not lacke
The Flower that's like thy face. Pale-Primroſe, nor
The azur'd Hare-bell, like thy Veines: no nor
The leafe of Eglantine, whom not to ſlander.
Out-ſweetned not thy breath: the Raddocke would
With Charitable bill (Oh bill ſore ſhaming
Thoſe rich-left-heyres, that let their Fathers lye
Without a Monument) bring thee all this,
Yea, and furr'd Moſſe beſides. When Flowres are none
To winter-ground thy Coarſe——
Gui. Prythee have done,
And do not play in Wench-like words with that
Which is ſo ſerious. Let us bury him,
And not protract with admiration, what
Is now due debt. To'th' grave.
Arvi. Say, where ſhall's lay him?
Gui. By good Euriphile, our Mother.
Arvi. Bee't ſo:
And let us (Polidore) though now our voyces
Have got the manniſh cracke, ſing him to'th' ground
As once to our Mother: uſe like note, and words,
Save that Euriphile, muſt be Fidele.
Gui. Cadwall,
I cannot ſing: Ile weepe, and word it with thee;
For Notes of ſorrow, out of tune, are worſe
Then Prieſts, and Vanes that lye.
Arvi. Wee'l ſpeake it then.
Bel. Great greefes I ſee med'cine the leſſe, For Cloten
Is quite forgot. He was a Queenes Sonne, Boyes,
And though he came our Enemy, remember
He was paid for that: though meane, and mighty rotting
Together have one duſt, yet Reverence
(That Angell of the world) doth make diſtinction
Of place 'twixt high and low. Our Foe was Princely,
And though you tooke his life, as being our Foe,
Yet bury him, as a Prince.
Gui. Pray thee fetch him hither,
Therſites body is as good as Ajax,
When neyther are are alive.
Arvi. If you'l go fetch him,
Wee'l ſay our Song the whil'ſt: Brother begin.
Gui. Nay Cadwall, we muſt lay his head to th' Eaſt,
My Father hath a reaſon for't.
Arvi. Tis true.
Gui. Come on then, and remove him.
Arvi. So, begin.

SONG.

Guid. Feare no more the heate o'th' Sun,
Nor the furious Winters rages,
Thou thy worldly taske haſt done,
Home art gon, and tane thy wages.
Golden Lads, and Girles all muſt,
As Chimney-Sweepers come to duſt.
Arvi. Feare no more the frowne o'th' Great,
Thou art paſt the Tirants ſtroake,
Care no more to cloath and eate,
To thee the Reede is as the Oake:
The Scepter, Learning, Phiſicke muſt,
All follow this and come to duſt.
Guid. Feare no more the Lightning flaſh.
Arvi. Nor th' all-dreaded Thunderſtone.
Gui. Feare no ſlander, Cenſure raſh.
Arvi. Thou haſt finiſh'd Ioy and mone.
Both. All Lovers young, all Lovers muſt,
Conſigne to thee and come to duſt.
Guid. No Exorciſer harme thee,
Arvi. Nor no witch-craft charme thee.
Guid. Ghoſt unlaid forbeare thee.
Arvi. Nothing ill come neere thee.
Both. Quiet conſummation have,
And renowned be thy grave.
Enter Belarius with the body of Cloten.
Gui. We have done our obſequies:
Come lay him downe.
Bel. Heere's a few Flowres, but about midnight more:
The hearbes that have on them cold dew o'th' night
Are ſtrewings fit'ſt for Graues: upon their Faces.
You were as Flowres, now wither'd: even ſo
These Herbelets ſhall, which we upon you ſtrew.
Come on away, apart upon our knees:
The ground that gave them firſt, ha's them againe:
Their pleaſures here are paſt, ſo are their paine. Exeunt.

Imogen awakes.
Yes Sir, to Milford-Haven, which is the way?
I thanke you: by yond buſh? pray how farre thither?
'Ods pittikins: can it be ſixe mile yet?
I have gone all night: 'Faith, Ile lye downe, and ſleepe.
But ſoft: no Bedfellow? Oh Gods, and Goddeſſes!
Theſe Flowers are like the pleaſures of the World;
This bloody man the care on't. I hope I dreame:
For ſo I thought I was a Cave-keeper,
And Cooke to honeſt Creatures. But tis not ſo:
Twas but a bolt of nothing, ſhot at nothing,
Which the Braine makes of Fumes. Our very eyes,
Are ſometimes like our Iudgements, blinde. Good faith
I tremble ſtill with feare: but if there be
Yet left in heaven, as ſmall a drop of pitty
As a Wrens eye; fear'd Gods, a part of it.
The Dreame's heere ſtill: even when I wake it is Without me, as within me: not imagin'd, felt.
A headleſſe man? The Garments of Poſthumus?
I know the ſhape of's Legge: this is his Hand:
His Foote Mercuriall: his martiall Thigh
The brawnes of Hercules: but his Iouiall face——
Murther in heaven? How? 'tis gone. Piſanio,
All Curſes madded Hecuba gave the Greekes,
And mine to boot, be darted on thee: thou
Conſpir'd with that Irregulous divell Cloten,
Hath heere cut off my Lord. To write, and read,
Be henceforth treacherous. Damn'd Piſanio
Hath with his forged Letters (damn'd Piſanio)
From this moſt braveſt veſſell of the world
Strooke the maine top! Oh Poſthumus, alas,
Where is thy head? where's that? Aye me! wher's that
Piſanio might have kill'd thee at the heart,
And left this head on. How ſhould this be, Piſanio?
Tis he, and Cloten. Malice, and Lucre in them
Have laid this Woe heere. Oh tis pregnant, pregnant!
The Drugge he gave me, which he ſaid was precious
And Cordiall to me, have I not found it
Murd'rous to'th' Senſes? That confirmes it home:
This is Piſanio's deede, and Cloten: Oh!
Give colour to my pale cheeke with thy blood,
That we the horrider may ſeeme to thoſe
Which chace to finde us. Oh, my Lord! my Lord!

Enter Lucius, Captaines, and a Soothſayer.

Cap. To them, the Legions garriſon'd in Gallia
After your will, have croſt the Sea, attending
You heere at Milford-Haven, with you Shippes:
They are in readineſſe.
Luc. But what from Rome?
Cap. The Senate hath ſtirr'd up the Confiners,
And Gentlemen of Italy, moſt willing Spirits,
That promiſe Noble Service: and they come
Vnder the Conduct of bold Iachimo,
Syenna's Brother.
Luc. When expect you them?
Cap. With the next benefit o'th' winde.
Luc. This forwardneſſe
Makes our hopes faire. Command our preſent numbers
Be muſtered, bid the Captaines looke too't. Now Sir,
What have you dream'd of late of this warres purpoſe.
Sooth. Laſt night the very Gods ſhew'd me a viſion
(I feaſt, and pray'd for their Intelligence) thus:
I ſaw Ioves Bird, the Roman Eagle wing'd
From the ſpungy South, to this part of the Weſt,
There vaniſh'd in the Sun-beames, which portends
(Vnleſſe my Sinnes abuſe my Divination)
Succeſſe to th' Roman hoaſt.
Luc. Dreame often ſo,
And never falſe. Soft hoa, what trunke is heere?
Without his top? The ruine ſpeakes, that ſometime
It was a worthy building. How? a Page?
Or dead, or ſleeping on him? But dead rather:
For Nature doth abhore to make his bed
With the defunct, or ſleepe upon the dead.
Let's ſee the Boyes face.
Cap. Hee's alive my Lord.
Luc. Hee'l then inſtruct us of his body: Young one,
Informe us of thy Fortunes, for it ſeemes
They crave to be demanded: who is this Thou mak'ſt thy bloody Pillow? Or who was he
That (otherwiſe then noble Nature did)
Hath alter'd that good picture? What's thy intereſt
In this ſad wracke? How cam't? Who is't?
What art thou?
Imo. I am nothing: or if not,
Nothing to be were better: This was my Maſter,
A very valiant Britaine, and a good,
That here by Mountainers lyes ſlaine: Alas,
There are no more ſuch Maſters: I may wander
From Eaſt to Occident, cry out for Service,
Try many, all good: ſerve truly: never
Finde ſuch another Maſter.
Luc. 'Lacke, good youth:
Thou mov'ſt no leſſe with thy complaining, then
Thy Maſter in bleeding: ſay his name, good Friend.
Imo. Richard du Champ: If I doe lye, and doe
No harme by it, though the Gods heare, I hope
They'l pardon it. Say you Sir?
Luc. Thy name?
Imo. Fidele Sir.
Luc. Thou doo'ſt approve thy ſelfe the very ſame:
Thy name well fits thy Faith; thy Faith, thy Name:
Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not ſay
Thou ſhalt be ſo well maſter'd, but be ſure
No leſſe belou'd The Romane Emperors Letters
Sent by a Conſull to me, ſhould no ſooner
Then thine owne worth preferre thee: Go with me.
Imo. Ile follow Sir. But firſt, an't pleaſe the Gods,
Ile hide my Maſter from the flyes as deepe
As theſe poore Pickaxes can digge: and when
With wild wood-leaves & weeds, I ha' ſtrew'd his grave
And on it ſaid a Century of prayers,
(Such as I can) twice o're, Ile weepe, and ſighe,
And leaving ſo his ſervice, follow you,
So pleaſe you entertaine me.
Luc. I good youth,
And rather Father thee, then Maſter thee: My Friends,
The Boy hath taught us manly duties: Let us
Find out the pretttieſt Dazied-Plot we can,
And make him with our Pikes and Partizans
A Grave: Come, Arme him: Boy he is preferr'd
By thee, to us, and he ſhall be interr'd
As Souldiers can. Be cheerefull wipe thine eyes,
Some falles are meanes the happier to ariſe. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Cymbeline, Lords, and Piſanio.

Cym. Againe: and bring me word how tis with her,
A Feavour with the abſence of her Sonne;

A madneſſe, of which her life's in danger: Heavens,
How deeply you at once do touch me. Imogen,
The great part of my comfort, gone: My Queene
Vpon a deſperate bed, and in a time
When fearefull Warres point at me: Her Sonne gone,
So needfull for his preſent? It ſtrikes me, me, paſt
The hope of comfort. But for thee, Fellow,
Who needs muſt know of her departure, and
Doſt ſeeme ſo ignorant, wee'l enforce it from thee
By a ſharpe Torture.

Piſ. Sir my life is yours,
I humbly ſet it at your will: But for my Miſtris,
I nothing know where ſhe remaines: why gone,
Nor when ſhe purpoſes returne. Beſeech your Highnes,
Hold me your loyall Servant.

Lord. Good my Liege,
The day that ſhe was miſſing, he was heere;
I dare be bound hee's true, and ſhall performe
All parts of his ſubjection loyally. For Cloten,
There wants no diligence in ſeeking him,
And will no doubt be found.

Cym. The time is troubleſome:
Wee'l ſlip you for a ſeaſon, but with jelouſie
Do's yet depend.

Lord. So pleaſe your Majeſty,
The Romane Leg ions all from Gallia drawne,
Are landed on your Coaſt, with ſupply
Of Romane Gentlemen, by the Senate ſent.

Cym. Now for the Counſaile of my Son and Queene,
I am amaz'd with matter.

Lord. Good my Liege,
Your preparation can affront no leſſe (ready:
Then what you heare of. Come more, for more you're
The want is, but to put theſe powers in motion,
That long to move.

Cym. I thanke you: lets withdraw
And meete the Time, as it ſeekes us, We feare not
What can from Italy annoy us, but
We greeve at chances heere. Away. Exeunt.

Piſ. I heard no Letter from my Maſter, ſince
I wrote him Imogen was ſlaine. Tis ſtrange:
Nor heare I from my Miſtris, who did promiſe
To yeeld me often tydings. Neither know I
What is betide to Cloton, but remaine
Perplext in all. The Heavens ſtill muſt worke:
Wherein I am falſe, I am honeſt: not trne, to be true.
Theſe preſent warres ſhall finde I love my Country,
Even to the note o'th' King, or Ile fall in them:
All other doubts, by time let them be cleer'd,
Fortune brings in ſome Boats, that are not ſteer'd. Exit

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, & Arviragus.

Gui. The noyſe is round ubout us.

Bel. Let us from it.

Arvi. What pleaſure Sir, finde we in life, to locke it
From Action, and Adventure?.

Gui. Nay, what hope
Have we in hiding us? This way the Romaines
Muſt, or for Britaines ſlay us or receive us
For barbarous and unnaturall Revolts
During their uſe, and ſlay us after.

Bel. Sonnes,
Wee'l higher to the Mountaines, there ſecure us
To the Kings party there's no going: newneſſe
Of Clotens death (we being not knowne, not muſter'd Among the Bands) may drive us to a render
Where we have liv'd; and ſo extort froms that
Which we have done, whoſe anſwer would be death
Drawne on his Torture.

Gui. This is (Sir) a doubt in ſuch a time, nothing becomming you,
Nor ſatisfying us.

Arvi. It is not likely,
That when they heare their Roman horſes neigh,
Behold their quarter'd Fires; have both their eyes
And eares ſo cloyd importantly as now,
That they will waſte their time upon our note,
To know from whence we are.

Bel. Oh, I am knowne
Of many in the Army: Many yeeres
(Though Cloten then but young) you ſee, not wore him
From my remembrance. And beſides, the King
Hath not deſerv'd my Service, nor your Loves,
Who finde in my Exile, the want of Breeding;
The certainty of this hard life, aye hopeleſſe
To have the courteſie your Cradle promis'd,
But to be ſtill hot Summers Tanlings, and
The ſhrinking Slaves of Winter.

Gui. Then be ſo,
Betrer to ceaſe to be. Pray Sir, to'th Army:
I, and my Brother are not knowne; your ſelfe
So out of thought, and thereto ſo ore-growne,
Cannot be queſtiond.

Arui. By this Sunne that ſhines
Ile thither: what thing is it, that I never
Did ſee man dye, ſcarſe ever look'd on blood,
But that of Coward Hares, hot Goats, and Veniſon?
Never beſtrid a Horſe ſave one, that had
A Rider like my ſelfe, who ne're wore Rowell,
Nor Iron on his heele? I am aſham'd
To looke upon the holy Sunne, to have
The benefit of his bleſt Beames, remaining
So long a poore unknowne.

Gui. By heavens Ile go,
If you will bleſſe me Sir, and give me leave,
Ile take the better care: but but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me, by
The hands of Romanes.

Arui. So ſay I, Amen.

Bel. No reaſon I (ſince of your lives you ſet
So ſlight a valuation) ſhould reſerue
My crack'd one to more care. Have with you Boyes:
If in your Country warres you chance to dye,
That is my Bed too (Lads) and there Ile lye.
Lead, lead; the time ſeemes long, their blood thinks ſcorn
Till it flye out, and ſhew them Princes borne. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scæna Prima.

Enter Poſthumus alone.

Poſt. Yea bloody cloth, Ile keep thee: for I am wiſht
Thou ſhouldſt be colour'd thus. You married ones,
If each of you ſhould take this courſe, how many
Muſt murther Wives much better then themſelves

For wrying but a little? Oh Piſanio,
Every good Servant do's not all Commands:
No Bond, but to doe juſt ones. Gods, if you
Should have tane vengeance on my faults, I never
Had liv'd to put on this: ſo had you ſaved
The noble Imogen to repent, and ſtrooke
Me (wretch) more worth your Vengeance. But alacke,
You ſnatch from hence for little faults; that's love
To have them fall no more: you ſome permit
To ſecond illes with illes, each Elder worſe,
And make them dread it, to the doers thrift
But Imogen is your owne, do your beſt willes,
And make me bleſt to obey. I am brought hither
Among th' Italian Gentry, and to fight
Againſt my Ladies Kingdome: Tis enough
That (Britaine) I have kill'd thy Miſtris: Peace,
Ile give no wound to thee: therefore good Heavens,
Heare patiently my purpoſe. Ile diſrobe me
Of theſe Italian weedes, and ſuite my ſelfe
As do's a Britaine Pezant: ſo Ile fight
Againſt the part I come with: ſo Ile dye
For thee (O Imogen) even for whom my life
Is every breath, a death: and thus unknowne,
Pittied, nor hated, to the face of perill
My ſelfe Ile dedicate. Let me make men know
More valour in me, then my habits ſhow.
Gods, put the ſtrength o'th' Leonati in me:
To ſhame the guize o'th' world, I will begin,
The faſhion leſſe without, and more within. Exit.

Scæna Secunda.

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, and the Romane Army at one doore: and the Britaine Army at another: Leonatus Poſthumus following like a poore Souldier. They march over, and goe out. Then enter againe in Skirmiſh Iachimo and Poſthumus: he vanquiſheth and diſarmeth Iachimo, and then leaves him.

Iac. The heavineſſe and guilt within my boſome,
Takes off my manhood: I have belyed a Lady,
The Princeſſe of this Country; and the ayre on't
Revengingly enfeebles me, or could this Carle,
A very drudge of Natures, have ſubdu'de me
In my profeſſion? Knighthoods, and Honors borne
(As I weare mine) are titles but of ſcorne.
If that thy Gentry (Britaine) go before
This Lowt, as he exceeds our Lords, the oddes
Is, that we ſcarſe are men, and you are Gods. Exit.

The Battaile continues, the Britaines flye, Cymbeline is taken: Then enter to his reſcue, Bellarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. Stand, ſtand, we have the advantage of the ground,
The Lane is guarded: Nothing rowts us, but
The villany of our feares.
Gui. Arvi. Stand, ſtand and fight.

Enter Poſthumus, and ſeconds the Britaines. They reſcue Cymbeline, and Exeunt.

Then enter Lucius, Iachimo, and Imogen.

Luc. Away boy from the Troopes, and ſave thy ſelfe:
For friends kill friends, and the diſorder's ſuch
As warre were hood-wink'd.
Iac. Tis their freſh ſupplies.
Luc. It is a day turn'd ſtrangely: or betimes
Let's re-inforce, or fly. Exeunt.

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Poſthumus, and a Britaine Lord.

Lor. Cam'ſt thou from where they made the ſtand?
Poſt. I did.
Though you it ſeemes come from the Fliers?
Lo. I did.
Poſt. No blame be to you Sir, for all was loſt,
But that the Heavens fought: the King himſelfe
Of his wings deſtitute, the Army broken,
And but the backes of Britaines ſeene; all flying
Through a ſtraight Lane, the Enemy full-hearted,
Lolling the Tongue with ſlaught'ring: having worke
More plentifull, then Tooles to doo't: ſtroke downe
Some mortally, ſome ſlightly touch'd, ſome falling
Meerely through feare, that the ſtrait paſſe was damm'd
With deadmen, hurt behinde, and Cowards living
To dye with length'ned ſhame.
Lo. Where was this Lane?
Poſt. Cloſe by the battell, ditch'd, & wall'd with turph,
Which gave advantage to an ancient Soldiour
(An honeſt one I warrant) who deſeru'd
So long a breeding, as his white beard came to,
In doing this for's Country. Athwart the Lane,
He, with two ſtriplings (Lads more like to run
The Country baſe, then to commit ſuch ſlaughter,
With faces fit for Maskes, or rather fayrer
Then thoſe for preſervation cas'd, or ſhame)
Made good the paſſage, cryed to thoſe that fled,
Our Britaines hearts dye flying, not our men,
To darkeneſſe fleete ſoules that flye backwards; ſtand,
Or we are Romanes, and will give you that
Like beaſts, which you ſhun beaſtly, and may ſave
But to looke backe in frowne: Stand, ſtand. Theſe three,
Three thouſand confident, in act as many:
For three performers are the File, when all
The reſt do nothing. With this word ſtand, ſtand,
Accommodated by the Place; more Charming
With their owne Nobleneſſe, which could have turn'd
A Diſtaffe, to a Lance, guilded pale lookes;
Part ſhame, part ſpirit renew'd, that ſome turn'd coward
But by example (Oh a ſinne in Warre,
Damn'd in the firſt beginners) gan to looke
The way that they did, and to grin like Lyons
Vpon the Pikes o'th' Hunters. Then beganne
A ſtop i'th' Chaſer; a Retyre: Anon
A Rowt, confuſion thicke: forthwith they flye
Chickens, the way which they ſtopt Eagles: Slaves
The ſtrides the Victors made: and now our Cowards
Like Fragments in hard Voyages became
The life o'th' need: having found the backe doore open
Of the unguarded hearts: heavens, how they wound,
Some ſlaine before, ſome dying; ſome their Friends
Ore-borne i'th' former wave, ten chac'd by one,
Are now each one the ſlaughter-man of twenty:
Thoſe that would dye, or ere reſiſt, are growne
The mortall bugs o'th' Field.

Lord. This was ſtrange chance:
A narrow Lane, an old man, and two Boyes.
Poſt. Nay, doe not wonder at it: you are made
Rather to wonder at the things you heare,
Then to worke any. Will you Rime upon't,
And vent it for a Mock'ry? here is one:
"Two Boyes, an Oldman (twice a Boy) a Lane,
"Preſerv'd the Britaines, was the Romanes bane.
Lord. Nay, be not angry Sir.
Poſt. Lacke, to what end?
Who dares not ſtand his Foe, ile be his friend:
For if he'll doe, as he is made to doe,
I know he'll quickly flye my friendſhip too.
You have put me into Rime.
Lord. Farewell, you're angry. Exit.
Poſt. Still going? This is a Lord: Oh Noble miſery
To be ith' field, and aske what newes of me:
To day, how many would have given their honors
To have ſav'd their Carkaſſes? Tooke heele to doo't,
And yet dyed too. I, in mine owne woe charm'd,
Could not find death, where I did heare him groane,
Nor feele him where he ſtrooke. Being an ugly Monſter
Tis ſtrange he hides him in freſh Cups, ſoft Beds,
Sweet words; or hath moe miniſters then we
That draw his knives i'th' War. Well I will finde him:
For being now a Favourer to the Britaine,
No more a Britaine, I have reſum'd againe
The part I came in. Fight I will no more,
But yeeld me to the verieſt Hind, that ſhall
Once touch my ſhoulder. Great the ſlaughter is Heere made by'th' Romane; great the anſwer be Britaines muſt take. For me, my Ranſomes death,
On eyther ſide I come to ſpend my breath;
Which neither heere Ile keepe, nor beare agen,
But end it by ſome meanes for Imogen.
Enter two Captaines, and Souldiers.
1 Great Iupiter be prais'd, Lucius is taken,
Tis thought the old man, and his ſonnes, were Angels.
2 There was a fourth man, in a ſilly habit,
That gave th' Affront with them.
1 So tis reported:
But none of em can be found. Stand, who's there?
Poſt. A Roman,
Who had not now beene drooping heere, if Seconds
Had anſwer'd him.
2 Lay hands on him: a Dogge,
A legge of Rome ſhall not returne to tell
What Crowes have peckt them here, he brags his ſervice
As if he were of note: bring him to th' King.
Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Piſanio, and Romane Captives. The Captaines preſent Poſthumus to Cymbeline, who delivers him over to a Gaoler.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter Poſthumus, and Gaoler.
Gao. You ſhall not now be ſtolne,
You have lockes upon you:
So graze, as you finde Paſture.
2 Gao. I, or a ſtomacke.
Poſt. Moſt welcome bondage: for thou art a way
(I thinke) to liberty: yet am I better
Then one thats ſicke o'th' Gowt, ſince he had rather Groane ſo in perpetuity, then be cur'd
By th' ſure Phyſitian, Death; who is the key
T'unbarre theſe Lockes. My conſcience, thou art fetter'd
More then my ſhanks, and wriſts: you good gods give me
The penitent inſtrument to picke that Bolt,
Then free for ever. Iſt enough I am ſorry?
So Children temporall fathers doe appeaſe;
Gods are more full of mercy. Muſt I repent,
I cannot doe it better then in Gyves,
Deſir'd, more then conſtrain'd, to ſatisfie
If of my freedome tis the maine part, take
No ſtricter render of me, then my All.
I know you are more clement then vild men,
Who of their broken Debtors take a third,
A ſixt, a tenth, letting them thrive againe
On their abatement; thats not my deſire.
For Imogens deere life, take mine, and though
Tis not ſo deere, yet tis a life; you coyn'd it,
Tweene man, and man, they waigh not every ſtampe:
Though light, take Peeces for the figures ſake,
(You rather) mine being yours: and ſo great Powres,
If you will take this Audit, take this life,
And cancell thoſe cold Bonds. Oh Imogen,
Ile ſpeake to thee in ſilence.

Solemne Muſicke. Enter (as in an Apparition) Sicillius Leonatus, Father to Poſthumus, an old man, attyred like a warriour, leading in his hand an ancient Matron (his wife, and Mother to Poſthumus) with Muſicke before them. Then after other Muſicke, followes the two young Leonati (Brothers to Poſthumus) with wounds as they dyed in the warres. They circle Poſthumus round as he lyes ſleeping.

Sicil. No more thou Thunder-Maſter
ſhew thy ſpight, on Mortall flyes:
With Mars fall out, with Iuno chide, that thy Adulteries
Rates, and Revenges.
Hath my poore Boy done ought but well,
whoſe face I never ſaw:
I dy'de whilſt in the Wombe he ſtaide,
attending Natures Law.
Whoſe Father then (as men report, thou Orphanes Father art)
Thou ſhouldſt have bin, and ſheelded him,
from this earth-vexing ſmart.
Moth. Lucina lent not me her ayde,
but tooke me in my Throwes,
That from me was Poſthumus ript,
came crying mongſt his Foes.
A thing of pitty.
Sici. Great Nature like his Anceſtry,
moulded the ſtuffe ſo faire:
That he diſerv'd the praiſe o'th' World,
as great Sicilius heyre.
1 Bro. When once he was mature for man,
in Britaine where was he
That could ſtand up his parallell?
or fruitfull object be?
In eye of Imogen, that beſt
could deeme his dignity.
Moth. With Marriage wherefore was he mockt to be exil'd, and throwne
From Leonati Seate, and caſt
from her his deereſt one:
Sweet Imogen?
Sici. Why did you ſuffer Iachimo, ſlight thing of Italy,

To taint his nobler hart and braine, with needleſſe jelouſie
And to become the geeke and ſcorne oth'others villany?
2 Bro. For this, from ſtiller Seats we came,
our Parents, and us twaine,
That ſtriking in our Countries cauſe,
fell bravely, and were ſlaine,
Our Fealty, and Tenantius right, with honor to maintaine,
1 Bro. Like hardiment Poſthumus hath to Cymbeline perform'd:
(journ'd
Then Iupiter, thou King of gods, why haſt thou thus ad-
The Graces for her Merits due, being all to dolors turn'd?
Sici. Thy Chriſtall window ope; looke out
no longer exerciſe
Vpon a valiant Race, thy harſh, and potent injuries:
Moth. Since (Iupiter) our Son is good,
take off his miſeries.
Sicil. Peepe through thy Marble Manſion, helpe, or we poore Ghoſts will cry
To'th'ſhining Synod of the reſt, againſt thy Deity,
Bro. Helpe (Iupiter) or we appeale, and from thy juſtice flye.

Iupiter deſcends in Thunder and Lightning, ſitting upon an Eagle: he throwes a Thunder-bolt. The Ghoſts fall on their knees.

Iup. No more you petty Spirits of Region low
Offend our hearing: huſh. How dare you Ghoſtes
Accuſe the Thunderer, whoſe Bolt (you know)
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling Coaſts.
Poore ſhadowes of Elizium, hence, and reſt
Vpon your never-withering bankes of Flowres.
Be not with mortall accidents oppreſt,
No care of yours it is, you know tis ours.
Whom beſt I love, I croſſe: to make my guift
The more delay'd, delighted. Be content,
Your low-laid Sonne, our godhead will uplift:
His comforts thrive, his Trialls well are ſpent:
Our Ioviall Starre reign'd at his Birth, and in
Our Temple was he married: Riſe, and fade,
He ſhall be Lord of Lady Imogen,
And happier much by his Affliction made
This Tablet lay upon his breſt, wherein
Our pleaſure, his full Fortune, doth confine,
And ſo away: no farther with your dinne
Expreſſe Impatience, leſt you ſtirre up mine:
Mount Eagle, to my Palace Chriſtalline. Aſcends.
Sicil. He came in Thunder, his Celeſtiall breath
Was ſulphurous to ſmell: the holy Eagle
Stoop'd, as to foote us: his Aſcenſion is
More ſweet then our bleſt fields: his Royall Bird
Prunes the immortall wing, and cloyes his Beake,
As when his god is pleas'd.
All. Thankes Iupiter.
Sici. The Marble Pavement clozes, he is enter'd
His radiant Roofe: Away, and to be bleſt
Let us with care performe his great beheſt. Vaniſh.
Poſt. Sleepe, thou haſt bin a Grandſire, and begot
A Father to me: and thou haſt created
A Mother, and two brothers. But (oh ſcorne)
Gone, they went hence ſo ſoone as they were borne;
And ſo I am awake. Poore Wretches, that depend
On Greatneſſe, Favour; Dreame as I have done,
Wake, and find nothing. But (alas) I ſwerve:
Many Dreame not to find, neither deſerve,
And yet are ſteep'd in Favours; ſo am I
That have this Golden chance, and know not why:
What Fayeries haunt this ground? a booke? Oh rare one,
Be not, as is our fangled world, a Garment
Nobler then that it covers. Let thy effects
So follow, to be moſt unlike our Courtiers,
As good, as promiſe.

Reades.

VVHen as a Lyons whelpe, ſhall to himſelfe unknown without ſeeking find, and be embrac'd by a peece of tender Ayre: And when from a ſtately Cedar ſhall be lopt branches, which being dead many yeeres, ſhall after revive, be joynted to the old Stocke, and freſhly grow, then ſhall Poſthumus end his miſeries, Britaine be fortunate, and flouriſh in Peace and Plenty.

Tis ſtill a Dreame: or elſe ſuch ſtuffe as Madmen
Tongue, and braine not: either both, or nothing,
Or ſenſeleſſe ſpeaking, or a ſpeaking ſuch
As ſenſe cannot untye. Be what it is,
The Action of my life is like it, which Ile keepe
If but for ſimpathy.

Enter Gaoler.

Gao. Come Sir, are you ready for death?

Poſt. Over-roaſted rather: ready long agoe.

Gao. Hanging is the word, Sir, if you be ready for that, you are well Cook'd.

Poſt. So if I prove a good repaſt to the Spectators, the diſh payes the ſhot.

Gao. A heavy reckoning for you Sir: but the comfort is you ſhall be called to no more payments, feare no more Taverne Bils, which are often the ſadneſſe of parting, as the procuring of mirth: you come in faint for want of meate, depart reeling with too much drinke: ſorry that you have payed too much, and ſorry that you are payed too much: Purſe and Braine, both empty: the braine the heavier, for being too light; the Purſe too light, being drawne of heavineſſe. Oh, of this contradiction you ſhall now be quit: Oh the charity of a penny Cord, it ſummes up thouſands in a trice: you have no true Debitor, and Creditor but it: of whats paſt, is, and to come, the diſcharge; your necke (Sir) is Pen, Booke, and Counters: ſo the Acquitance followes.

Poſt. I am merrier to dye, then thou art to live.

Gao. Indeed Sir, he that ſleepes, feeles not the Tooth-Ache: but a man that were to ſleepe your ſleepe, and a Hangman to helpe him to bed, I thinke he would change places with his Officer: for looke you Sir, you know not which way you ſhall goe

Poſt. Yes indeed doe I, fellow.

Gao. Your death has eyes ins head then: I have not ſeene him ſo pictur'd: you muſt either be directed by ſome that take upon them to know, or to take upon your ſelfe that which I am ſure you doe not know: or lump the after-enquiry on your owne perill: and how you ſhall ſpeed in your journies end, I thinke you'll never returne to tell one.

Poſt. I tell thee, Fellow, there are none want eyes, to direct them the way I am going, but ſuch as winke, and will not uſe them.

Gao. What an infinite mocke is this, that a man ſhould have the beſt uſe of eyes, to ſee the way of blindneſſe: I am ſure hanging's the way of winking.

Enter a Meſſenger.

Meſ. Knocke off his Manacles, bring your Priſoner to the King.

Poſt. Thou bringſt good newes, I am calld to be made free.

Gao. Ile be hang'd then.

Poſt. Thou ſhalt be then freer then a Gaoler; no bolts for the dead. Exeunt.

Gao. Vnleſſe a man would marry a Gallowes, and beget yong Gibbets, I never ſaw one ſo prone: yet on my Conſcience, there are verier Knaves deſire to live, for all he be a Roman; and there be ſome of them too that dye againſt their willes: ſo ſhould I, if I were one. I would we were all of one minde, and one minde good: O there were deſolation of Gaolers and Galowſes: I ſpeake againſt my preſent profit, but my wiſh hath a preferment int. Exit.

Scæna Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline, Bellarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Piſanio, and Lords.

Cym. Stand by my ſide you, whom the Gods have made
Preſervers of my Throne: woe is my heart,
That the poore Souldier that ſo richly fought,
Whoſe ragges, ſham'd gilded Armes, whoſe naked breſt
Stept before Targes of proofe, cannot be found:
He ſhall be happy that can finde him, if
Our Grace can make him ſo.

Bel. I never ſaw
Such Noble fury in ſo poore a Thing;
Such precious deeds, in one that promiſt nought
But beggery, and poore lookes.

Cym. No tydings of him?

Piſa. He hath bin ſearch'd among the dead, and living,
But no trace of him.

Cym. To my griefe, I am
The heyre of his Reward, which I will adde
To you (the Liver, heart, and Braine of Britaine)
By whom (I grant) ſhe lives. Tis now the time
To aske of whence you are. Report it.

Bel. Sir,
In Cambria are we borne, and Gentlemen:
Further to boaſt, were neither true, nor modeſt,
Vnleſſe I adde, we are honeſt.

Cym. Bow your knees:
Ariſe my Knights oth'Battell, I create you
Companions to our perſon, and will fit you
With Dignities becomming your eſtates.

Enter Cornelius and Ladies.

There's buſineſſe in theſe faces: why ſo ſadly
Greet your our Victory? you looke like Romanes,
And not oth'Court of Britaine.

Corn. Hayle great King,
To ſowre your happineſſe, I muſt report
The Queene is dead.

Cym. Whom worſe then a Phyſitian
Would this report become; but I conſider,
By Med'cine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will ſeize the Doctor too. How ended ſhe?

Cor. With horror, madly dying, like her life,
Which (being cruell to the world) concluded
Moſt cruell to her ſelfe. What ſhe confeſt,
I will report, ſo pleaſe you. Theſe her Women
Can trip me, if I erre, who with wet cheekes
Were preſent when ſhe finiſh'd.

Cym. Prethee ſay.

Corn. Firſt, ſhe confeſt ſhe never lov'd you: onely
Affected Greatneſſe got by you: not you:
Married your Royalty, was wife to your place:
Abhorr'd your perſon.

Cym. She alone knew this:
And but ſhe ſpoke it dying, I would not
Beleeve her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Corn. Your daughter, whom ſhe bore in hand to love
With ſuch integrity, ſhe did confeſſe
Was as a Scorpion to her ſight, whoſe life
(But that her flight prevented it) ſhe had
Tane off by poyſon.

Cym. O moſt delicate fiend!
Who is't can reade a Woman? is there more?

Corn. More Sir, and worſe. She did confeſſe ſhe had
For you a mortall Minerall, which being tooke,
Should by the minute feede on life, and lingring,
By inches waſte you. In which time, ſhe purpos'd
By watching, weeping, tendance, kiſſing, to
Orecome you with her ſhew: yes and in time
(When ſhe had fitted you with her craft, to worke
Her Sonne into th'adoption of the Crowne:
But fayling of her end by his ſtrange abſence,
Grew ſhameleſſe deſperate, open'd (in deſpight
Of heaven, and Men) her purpoſes: repented
The evils ſhe hatch'd, were not effected: ſo
Diſpayring, dyed.

Cym. Heard you all this, her Women?

Lad. We did, ſo pleaſe your highneſſe.

Cym. Mine eyes
Were not in fault, for ſhe was beautifull:
Mine eares that heare her flattery, nor my heart.
That thought her like her ſeeming. It had beene vicious
To have miſtruſted her: yet (Oh my Daughter)
That it was folly in me, thou mayſt ſay,
And prove it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all.

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, and other Roman priſoners, Leonatus behind, and Imogen.

Thou comm'ſt not Caius now for Tribute, that
The Britaines have rac'd out, though with the loſſe
Of many a bold one: whoſe Kinſmen have made ſuite
That their good ſoules may be appeas'd, with ſlaughter
Of you their Captives, which our ſelfe have granted,
So thinke of your eſtate.

Luc. Conſider ſir, the chance of Warre, the day
Was yours by accident: had it gone with us,
We ſhould not when the blood was cool, have threatned
Our Priſoners with the Sword. But ſince the gods
Will have it thus, that nothing but our lives
May be call'd ranſome, let it come: ſufficeth,
A Roman, with a Romans heart can ſuffer:
Auguſtus lives to thinke on't: and ſo much
For my peculiar care. This one thing onely
I will entreate, my Boy (a Britaine borne)
Let him be ranſom'd: Never Maſter had
A Page ſo kinde, ſo duteous, diligent,
So tender over his occaſions, true,
So feate, ſo Nurſe-like: let his vertue joyne
With my requeſt, which Ile make bold, your highneſſe
Cannot deny: he hath done no Britaine harme,
Though he have ſerv'd a Roman. Save him (Sir)
And ſpare no blood beſide.

Cym. I have ſurely ſeene him:
His favour is familiar to me: Boy,
Thou haſt look'd thy ſelfe into my grace,
And art mine owne. I know not why, wherefore,
To ſay, live boy: nere thanke thy Maſter, live;
And aske of Cymbeline what Boone thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty, and thy ſtate, Ile give it:

Yea, though thou doe demand a Priſoner,
The Nobleſt tane.
Imo. I humbly thanke your Highneſſe.
Luc. I doe not bid thee begge my life, good Lad,
And yet I know thou wilt.
Imo. No, no, alacke,
Theres other worke in hand: I ſee a thing
Bitter to me, as death: your life, good Maſter,
Muſt ſhuffle for it ſelfe.
Luc. The Boy diſdaines me,
He leaves me, ſcornes me: briefely dye their joyes,
That place them on the truth of Gyrles, and Boyes.
Why ſtands he ſo perplex?
Cym. What wouldſt thou Boy?
I love thee more, and more: thinke more and more
Whats beſt to aske. Knowſt him thou look'ſt on? ſpeake
Wilt have him live? Is he thy Kin? thy friend?
Imo. He is a Romane, no more kin to me,
Then I to your highneſſe, who being borne your vaſſaile
Am ſomething neerer.
Cym. Wherefore ey'ſt him ſo?
Imo. Ile tell you (Sir) in private, if you pleaſe
To give me hearing.
Cym. I, with all my heart,
And lend my beſt attention. Whats thy name?
Imo. Fidele Sir.
Cym. Thou'rt my good youth, my Page,
Ile be thy Maſter: walke with me: ſpeake freely.
Bel. Is not this Boy reviu'd from death?
Arvi. One ſand another
Not more reſembles that ſweet Roſie Lad:
Who dyed, and was Fidele: what thinke you?
Gui. The ſame dead thing alive.
Bel. Peace, peace, ſee further; he eyes us not, forbeare,
Creatures may be alike: were't he, I am ſure
He would have ſpoke to us.
Gui. But we ſee him dead.
Bel. Be ſilent: lets ſee further.
Piſa. It is my Miſtris:
Since ſhe is living, let the time run on,
To good, or bad.
Cym. Come, ſtand thou by our ſide.
Make thy demand alowd. Sir, ſtep you forth,
Give anſwer to this boy, and doe it freely,
Or by our Greatneſſe, and the grace of it
(Which is our honor) bitter torture ſhall
Winnow the truth from falſhood. One ſpeake to him.
Imo. My boone is, that this Gentleman may tender
Of whom he had this Ring.
Poſt. Whats that to him?
Cym. That Diamond upon your finger, ſay
How came it yours?
Iach. Thou'lt torture me to leave unſpoken, that
Which to be ſpoke, wou'd torture thee.
Cym. How? me?
Iach. I am glad to be conſtrain'd to vtter that
Which torments me to conceale. By Villany
I got this Ring: twas Leonatus Iewell,
Whom thou didſt baniſh: and which more may greeve (thee,
As it doth me: a Nobler Sir nere liv'd
Twixt sky and ground. Wilt thou heare more my Lord?
Cym. All that belongs to this.
Iach. That Paragon, thy daughter,
For whom my heart drops blood, and my falſe ſpirits
Quaile to remember. Give me leave, I faint.
Cym. My Daught? what of her? Renew thy ſtrenth
I had rather thou ſhouldſt live, while Nature will,
Then dye ere I heare more: ſtrive man, and ſpeake.
Iach. Vpon a time, unhappy was the clocke
That ſtrooke the houre: it was in Rome, accurſt
The Manſion where: twas at a feaſt, oh would
Our Viands had bin poyſon'd (or at leaſt
Thoſe which I heav'd to head:) the good Poſthumus,
(What ſhould I ſay? he was too good to be
Where ill men were, and was the beſt of all
Among'ſt the rarſt of good ones) ſitting ſadly,
Hearing us praiſe our Loves of Italy
For beauty, that made barren the ſwell'd boaſt
Of him that beſt could ſpeake: for Feature, laming
The Shrine of Venus, or ſtraight-pight Minerva,
Poſtures, beyond briefe Nature. For Condition,
A ſhop of all the qualities, that man
Loves woman for, beſides that hooke of Wiving,
Faireneſſe, which ſtrikes the eye.
Cym. I ſtand on fire. Come to the matter.
Iach. All too ſoone I ſhall,
Vnleſſe thou wouldſt greeve quickly. This Poſthumus,
Moſt like a Noble Lord, in love, and one
That had a Royall Lover, tooke his hint,
And (not diſpraiſing whom we prais'd, therein
He was as calme as vertue) he began
His Miſtris picture, which by his tongue, being made,
And then a mind put int, either our bragges
Were crak'd of Kitchin-Trulles, or his deſcription
Prov'd us unſpeaking ſottes.
Cym. Nay, nay, to'th'purpoſe.
Iach. Your daughters Chaſtity, (there it begins)
He ſpake of her, as Dian had hot dreames,
And ſhe alone were cold: Whereat, I wretch
Made ſcruple of his praiſe, and wag'd with him
Peeces of gold, gainſt this, which then he wore
Vpon his honor'd finger) to attaine
In ſuite the place of's bed, and winne this Ring
By hers, and mine Adultury: he (true Knight)
No leſſer of her honor confident
Then I did truly finde her, ſtakes this Ring,
And would ſo, had it beene a Carbuncle
Of Phœbus Wheele; and might ſo ſafely, had it
Bin all the worth of's Carre. Away to Britaine
Poſte I in this deſigne: Well may you (Sir)
Remember me at Court, where I was taught
Of your chaſte Daughter, the wide difference
Twixt Amorous, and Villanous. Being thus quench'd
Of hope, not longing; mine Italian braine,
Gan in your duller Britaine operate
Moſt vildly: for my vantage excellent.
And to be briefe, my practiſe ſo prevayl'd
That I returnd with ſimular proofe enough,
To make the Noble Leonatus mad,
By wounding his beleife in her Renowne,
With Tokens thus, and thus; averring notes
Of Chamber hanging, Pictures this her Bracelet
(Oh cunning how I got it) nay ſome markes
Of ſecret on her perſon, that he could not
But thinke her bond of Chaſtity quite crackd,
I having tane the forfeyt. Whereupon,
Me thinkes I ſee him now.
Poſt. I, ſo thou doſt,
Italian fiend. Aye me, moſt credulous foole,
Egregious murtherer, Theefe, any thing
Thats due to all the Villaines paſt, in being
To come. Oh give me Cord, or knife, or poyſon,

Some upright Iuſticer. Thou King, ſend out
For Torturers ingenious: it is I
That all th'abhorred things oth'earth amend
By being worſe then they. I am Poſthumus,
That kill'd thy Daughter: Villaine-like, I lye,
That caus'd a leſſer villaine then my ſelfe,
A ſacrilegious Theefe to doo't. The Temple
Of Vertue was ſhe: yea, and ſhe her ſelfe.
Spet, and throw ſtones, caſt myre upon me, ſet
The dogges oth'ſtreet to bay me: every villaine
Be calld Poſthumus Leonatus, and
Be villany leſſe then twas. Oh Imogen!
My Queene, my life, my wife: oh Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen.
Imo. Peace my Lord, heare, heare.
Poſt. Shalls have a play of this?
Thou ſcornfull Page, there lye thy part,
Piſa. Oh Gentleman, helpe,
Mine and your Miſtris: Oh my Lord Poſthumus,
You ne're killd Imogen till now: helpe, helpe,
Mine honor'd Lady.
Cym. Does the world goe round?
Poſt. How comes theſe ſtaggers on me?
Piſa. Wake my Miſtais.
Cym. If this be ſo, the gods doe meane to ſtrike me
To death, with mortall joy.
Piſa. How fares my Miſtris.
Imo. Oh get thee from my ſight,
Thou gavſt me poyſon: dangerous Fellow hence,
Breath not where Princes are.
Cym. The tune of Imogen.
Piſa. Lady, the gods throw ſtones of ſulphure on me, if
That box I gave you, was not thought by me
A precious thing, I had it from the Queene.
Cym. New matter ſtill.
Imo. It poyſon'd me.
Corn. Oh gods!
I left out one thing which the Queene confeſt,
Which muſt approve thee honeſt. If Piſanio
Have (ſaid ſhe) given his Miſtris that Confection
Which I gave him for Cordiall, ſhe is ſerv'd,
As I would ſerve a Rat.
Cym. Whats this, Cornelius?
Corn. The Queene (Sir) very oft importun'd me
To temper poyſons for her, ſtill pretending
The ſatisfaction of her knowledge, onely
In killing Creatures vilde, as Cats and Dogges
Of no eſteeme, I dreading, that her purpoſe
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certaine ſtuffe, which being tane, would ſeize
The preſent power of life, but in ſhort time,
All Offices of Nature, ſhould againe
Doe their due Functions. Have you tane of it?
Imo. Moſt like I did, for I was dead.
Bel. My Boyes, there was our error.
Gui. This is ſure Fidele.
Imo. Why did you throw your wedded Lady fro you?
Thinke that you are upon a Rocke, and now
Throw me againe.
Poſt. Hang there like fruite, my ſoule,
Till the Tree dye.
Cym. How now, my fleſh? My child?
What, mak'ſt thou me a dullard in this Act?
Wilt thou not ſpeake to me?
Imo. Your bleſſing Sir.
Bel. Though you did love this youth, I blame ye not,
You had a motive for't.
Cym. My teares that fall
Prove holy-water on thee; Imogen,
Thy Mothers dead.
Imo. I am ſorry for't my Lord.
Cym. Oh, ſhe was naught; and long of her it was
That we meet heere ſo ſtrangely: but her Sonne
Is gone, we know not how, nor where.
Piſa. My Lord,
Now feare is from me, Ile ſpeake troth. Lord Clotten
Vpon my Ladies miſſing, came to me
With his Sword drawne, foam'd at the mouth, and ſwore
If I diſcover'd not which way ſhe was gone,
It was my inſtant death. By accident,
I had a feigned Letter of my Maſters
Then in my pocket, which directed him
To ſeeke her on the Mountaines neere to Milford,
Where in a frenzy, in my Maſters Garments
(Which he inforc'd from me) away he poſtes
With unchaſte purpoſe, and with oath to violate
My Ladies honor, what became of him,
I further know not.
Gui. Let me end the Story: I ſlew him there.
Cym. Marry, the gods forefend.
I would not thy good deeds, ſhould from my lips
Plucke a hard ſentence: Prethee valiant youth
Deny't againe.
Guil. I have ſpoke it, and I did it.
Cym. He was a Prince.
Gui. A moſt incivill one. The wrongs he did me
Were nothing Prince-like; for he did provoke me
With Language that would make me ſpurne the Sea,
If it could ſo roare to me. I cut off's head,
And am right glad he is not ſtanding here
To tell this tale of mine.
Cym. I am ſory for thee:
By thine owne tongue thou art condemn'd, and muſt
Endure our Law: Thou'rt dead.
Imo. That headleſſe man I thought had bin my Lord
Cym. Bind the Offender,
And take him from our preſence.
Bel. Stay, Sir King.
This man is better then the man he ſlew,
As well deſcended as thy ſelfe, and hath
More of thee merited, then a Band of Clotens
Had ever ſcarre for. Let his Armes alone,
They were not borne for bondage.
Cym. Why old Souldier:
Wilt thou undoe the worth thou art unpayd for
By taſting of onr wrath? how of deſcent
As good as we?
Arvi. In that he ſpake too farre.
Cym. And thou ſhalt dye for't.
Bel. We will dye all three,
But I will prove that two on's are as good
As I have given out him. My Sonnes, I muſt
For mine owne part, unfold a dangerous ſpeech,
Though haply well for you.
Arvi. Your dangers ours.
Guid. And our good his.
Bel. Have at it then, by leave
Thou hadſt (great King) a Subject, who
Was call'd Belarius.
Cym. What of him? he is a baniſh'd Traitor.
Bel. He it is, that hath
Aſſum'd this age: indeed a baniſh'd man,

I know not how, a Traitor.
Cym. Take him hence,
The whole world ſhall not ſave him.
Bel. Not too hot;
Firſt pay me for the Nurſing of thy Sonnes,
And let it be confiſcate all, ſo ſoone
As I have receiv'd it.
Cym. Nurſing of my Sonnes?
Bel. I am too blunt, and ſawcy: heeres my knee:
Ere I ariſe, I will preferre my Sonnes,
Then ſpare not the old Father. Mighty Sir,
Theſe two young Gentlemen that call me father,
And thinke they are my Sonnes, are none of mine,
They are the yſſue of your Loynes, my Liege,
And blood of your begetting.
Cym. How? my iſſue.
Bel. So ſure as you, your fathers: I (old Morgan)
Am that Belarius, whom you ſometime baniſh'd:
Your pleaſure was my neere offence, my puniſhment
It ſelfe, and all my Treaſon that I ſuffer'd,
Was all the harme I did. Theſe gentle Princes
(For ſuch, and ſo they are) theſe twenty yeeres
Have I train'd up; thoſe Arts they have, as I
Could put into them. My breeding was (Sir)
As your Highneſſe knowes, Their Nurſe Euriphile
(Whom for the Theft I wedded) ſtole theſe Children
Vpon my Baniſhment: I moov'd her too't,
Having receiv'd the puniſhment before
For that which I did then. Beaten for Loyalty,
Excited me to Treaſon. Their deere loſſe,
The more of you twas felt, the more it ſhap'd
Vnto my end of ſtealing them. But gracious Sir,
Heere are your Sonnes againe: and I muſt looſe
Two of the ſweetſt Companions in the World.
The bendiction of theſe covering heavens
Fall on their heads like dew, for they are worthy
To in-lay heaven with Starres.
Cym. Thou weepſt, and ſpeakſt:
The Service that you three have done, is more
Vnlike, then this thou tellſt. I loſt my children,
If theſe be they, I know not how to wiſh
A payre of worthier Sonnes.
Bel. Be pleas'd a while:
This Gentleman, whom I call Polidore,
Moſt worthy Prince, as yours, is true Guiderius:
This Gentleman, my Cadwall, Arviragus.
Your yonger Princely Son, he Sir, was lapt
In a moſt curious Mantle, wrought by th'hand
Of his Queene Mother, which for more probation
I can with eaſe produce.
Cym. Guiderius had
Vpon his necke a Mole, a ſanguine Starre,
It was a marke of wonder.
Bel. This is he,
Who hath upon him ſtill that naturall ſtampe:
It was wiſe Natures end, in the donation
To be his evidence now.
Cym. Oh, what am I
A Mother to the byrth of three? Nere Mother
Rejoyc'd deliverance more; Bleſt, pray you be,
That after this ſtrange ſtarting from your Orbes,
You may reigne in them now: Oh Imogen,
Thou haſt loſt by this a Kingdome.
Imo No, my Lord:
I have got two Worlds by't. Oh my gentle Brothers,
Have we thus met? Oh never ſay heereafter
But I am trueſt ſpeaker. You calld me Brother
When I was but your Siſter: I you Brother,
When we were ſo indeed.
Cym. Did you ere meete?
Arvi. I my good Lord.
Gui. And at firſt meeting lov'd,
Continu'd ſo, untill we thought he dyed.
Corn. By the Queenes Dramme ſhe ſwallow'd.
Cym. O rare inſtinct!
When ſhall I heare all through? This fierce abridgement,
Hath to it Circumſtantiall branches, which
Dſtinction ſhould be rich in. Where? how liv'd you?
And when came you to ſerve our Romane Captive?
How parted with your Brother? How firſt met them?
Why fled you from the Court? And whether theſe?
And your three motives to the Battaile? with
I know not how much more ſhould be demanded,
And all the other by-dependances
From chance to chance? But nor the time, nor place
Will ſerve our long Interrogatories. See,
Poſthumus Anchors upon Imogen;
And ſhe (like harmeleſſe Lightning) throwes her eye
On him: her brothers, Me: her Maſter hitting
Each object with a Ioy: the Counter-change
Is ſeverally in all. Lets quite this gronnd,
And ſmoake the Temple with our Sacrifices.
Thou art my Brother, ſo we'll hold thee ever.
Imo. You are my Mother too, and did releeve me:
To ſee this gracious ſeaſon.
Cym. All ore-joy'd
Save theſe in bonds, let them be joyfull too,
For they ſhall taſte our Comfort.
Imo. My good Maſter, I will yet doe you ſervice.
Luc. Happy be you.
Cym. The forlorne Souldier, that ſo Nobly fought
He would have well becom'd this place, and grac'd
The thankings of a King.
Poſt. I am Sir
The ſouldier that did company theſe three
In poore beſeeming: twas a fitment for
The purpoſe I then follow'd. That I was he,
Speake Iachimo, I had you downe, and might
Have made your finiſh.
Iach. I am downe againe:
But now my heavy Conſcience ſinkes my knee,
As then your force did. Take that life, beſeech you,
Which I ſo often owe: but your Ring firſt,
And heere the Bracelet of the trueſt Princeſſe
That ever ſwore her faith.
Poſt. Kneele not to me:
The powre that I have on you, is to ſpare you:
The malice towards you, to forgive you. Live
And deale with others better.
Cym. Nobly doom'd:
We'll learne our Freeneſſe of a Sonne-in-Law:
Pardons the word to all.
Arvi. You holpe us Sir,
As you did meane indeed to be our Brother,
Ioy'd are we, that you are.
Poſt. Your Servant, Princes. Good my Lord of Rome
Call forth your Sooth-ſayer: As I ſlept, me thought
Great Iupiter upon his Eagle back'd
Appear'd to me, with other ſprightly ſhewes
Of mine owne Kindred. When I wak'd, I found
This Labell on my boſome; whoſe containing
Is ſo from ſenſe in hardneſſe, that I can

Make no Collection of it. Let him ſhew
His skill in the conſtruction.
Luc. Philarmonus.
Sooth. Heere, my good Lord.
Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Reades.

WHen as a Lyons whelpe, ſhall to himſelfe unknown without ſeeking find, and be embrac'd by a peece of tender Ayre: and when from a ſtately Cedar ſhall be lopt branches, which being dead many yeares, ſhall after revive, be joynted to the old Stocke, and freſhly grow, then ſhall Poſthumus end his miſeries, Britaine be fortunate, and flouriſh in Peace and Plenty.

Thou Leonatus art the Lyons Whelpe,
The fit and apt Conſtruction of thy name
Being Leonatus, doth import ſo much:
The peece of tender Ayre, thy vertuous daughter,
Which we call Mollis Aer, and Mollis Aer
We terme it Mulier: which Mulier I divine
Is this moſt conſtant Wife, who even now
Anſwering the Letter of the Oracle,
Vnknowne to you unſought, were clipt about
With this moſt tender Aire.
Cym. This hath ſome ſeeming.
Sooth. The lofty Cedar, Royall Cymbeline
Perſonates thee: And thy lopt Branches, point
Thy two Sonnes forth: who by Belarius ſtolne
For many yeares thought dead, are now reviv'd
To the Majeſticke Cedar joyn'd; whoſe iſſue
Promiſes Britaine, Peace and Plenty.
Cym. Well,
My Peace we will begin: And Caius Lucius,
Although the Victor, we ſubmit to Cæſar,
And to the Romane Empire; promiſing
To pay our wonted Tribute, from the which
We were diſſwaded by our wicked Queene,
Whom heavens in juſtice both on her, and hers,
Have laid moſt heavy hand.
Sooth. The fingers of the Powres above, doe tune
The harmony of this Peace: the Viſion
Which I made knowne to Lucius ere the ſtroke
Of yet this ſcarſe-cold-Battaile, at this inſtant
Is full accompliſh'd. For the Romane Eagle
From South to Weſt, on wing ſoaring aloft
Leſſen'd her ſelfe, and in the Beames oth'Sun
So vaniſh'd; which fore-ſhew'd our Princely Eagle
Th'Imperiall Cæſar, ſhould againe unite
His favour, with the Radiant Cymbeline,
Which ſhines here in the Weſt.
Cym. Laud we the gods,
And let our crooked Smoakes climbe to their Noſtrils
From our bleſt Altars. Publiſh we this peace
To all our Subjects. Set we forward: let
A Roman, and a Brittiſh Enſigne wave
Friendly together; ſo through Luds-Towne martch,
And in the Temple of great Iupiter
Our Peace we'll ratifie: Seale it with feaſts.
Set on there: Never was a Warre did ceaſe
(Ere bloody hands were waſh'd) with ſuch a Peace.
Exeunt.

FINIS.
